c "Every one knows that Jerusalem is situated in the tribe of Benjamin. As for Tekoa, we see every day with our own eyes that it is a little town upon a hill about twelve (Roman) miles from Jerusalem. Between these is another village, called in the Heb. and Syr. tongues, Beth-acharma, which also is placed upon a hill."—S. Jerome.

serve foreign masters. (21) "The prophet speaks to all bystanders who will share in his sorrow and zeal for reformation."—Camb. Bib. (22) sand... decree, Job xxxviii. 10, 11; Ps. civ. 9. (23) heart, or disposition, will. (24) fear, in the religious sense of "worship," giveth rain, etc., comp. Ps. cxlvii. 8; Mat. v. 45; Ac. xiv. 17. Early rain between Oct. and Dec.: the latter rain in March and April. reserveth, etc., lit. "He keepeth for us the weeks—the statutes of harvest," i. e. the weeks which are the appointed conditions of harvest. weeks... harvest, the seven weeks intervening bet. the Passover and Pentecost, dating fr. the 16th day of Nisan.

Indifference (vs. 21).—I. What God has done to produce pious consideration. 1. He has given powers of mind adapted to it; 2. He has given us the means to answer to these powers; 3. His Holy Spirit to strive, convince, etc. II. The indifference men often exhibit. 1. Of some it is total, without any concern; 2. Of others considerate only of the externals of religion; 3. Of some only to the intellectual parts of truth; 4. Of others only occasional. III. The consequences of this difference. 1. It is extremely foolish; 2. Detrimental to the soul; 3. Specially offensive to God; 4. Must end in the soul's ruin.—Burns.

25—28. (25) these things, i. e. the benefits already mentioned in preceding verse, comp. ch. iii. 3, xii. 4.—Pul. Com. 26) lay wait, or "pry as fowlers lie in wait." (27) cage, or basket coop full of birds that have been caught. full of deceit, i. e. of treasures acquired by fraud. (28) fat, De. xxxii. 15. overpass, surpass in wickedness even the wicked. yet they prosper, R. V., "that they may prosper," i. e. the orphans.

National delinquency (vs. 25).—Notice the chief of our national sins. 1. Ungodliness; 2. Immorality; 3. General indifference to the truth. Apply:—(1) Lay it to heart personally; (2) Pray for your country.—J. J. Cart.

29—31. (29) not visit, vs. 9. (30) wonderful, better, "terrible," (31) by their means, according to the guidance and directions of these false prophets. love to have it so, prefer the license wh. such false teachings give.^b Mi. ii. 11.

"What will ye do in the end?" (vs. 31).—I. There is an end to every evil course—a termination, and a result which God fore-knows as a certain termination, and as an inevitable result, if an evil course be persisted in and persevered in. II. The end is not far distant; it draws nigh. III. The proximate end of some things is already realized, and the end of other things is beginning to appear. IV. Some of our fellows are, under our eye, realizing the proximate end of many of their evil ways; while others, by looking to the end, have forsaken their evil ways. Appeal to different characters, as the hypocrite, the neglecter of salvation, to the criminal, etc.—S. Martin.

CHAPTER THE SIXTH.

1—5. (1) of Benjamin, a name for Jerusalem, as being situated within the limits of this tribe. Jeremiah was himself a Benjamite. Tekoa, 11 m. S. of Jerusalem. The south was the only road open to those who would escape. Beth-haccerem, Ne. iii. 14. (2) comely, R. V., "The comely and delicate one, the daughter of Zion, will I cut off." (3) shepherds, etc., the consuming Babylonians, who should feed upon this pasture. (4) Prepare, literally "sanctify," i. e. make the necessary sacrifices that preface war. at noon, the usual resting time; but, in their eagerness, the Chaldeans would advance even at noon. Woe, etc. evening however finds them still on the march. (5) go by night, i. e. the soldiers clamor for a night assault.

Note on vs. 1.—Fire signals.—Fire signs are used as a telegraph in some parts of the South Seas. A native of Tanna, in giving me the news one morning, said, "There will be a party over from the island of Anéiteum today or tomorrow." "How do you know?" "Because we saw a great bonfire rising there last night." The natives of heathen islands are also in the habit of kindling fires, as a smoke signal, to attract the notice of a vessel which may be off their shore. Sometimes when we are wondering whether there are any natives among the dense bush which we see from the ship, up goes a column of smoke, and removes all doubt.—Turner. Note on vs. 2.—A passage of D'Arvieux shows the attention usually paid by the great men of the East to the complexion of their wives, as well as the great tanning power of the sun in Palestine. "The princesses, and the other Arab ladies, whom they showed me from a private place of the tent, appeared to me beautiful and well shaped; one may judge by these, and by what they told me of them, that the rest are no less so; they are very fair, because they are always kept from the sun." It is on this account, without doubt, that the Prophet Jeremiah, when he would describe a comely woman, describes her by the character of one that dwelleth at home. The delicate, and those that are solicitous to preserve their beauty, go very little abroad: it seems it was so anciently, and therefore the Prophet uses a term to express a woman of beauty, which would not be very applicable to many modern fine ladies.—Harmer.

6—8. (6) cast a mound, lit. "pours a mound" or bank. The fig. of pouring has reference to the emptying of the baskets of earth wh. were brought to make the mound.* (7) grief, etc., of those suffering by reason of the wickedness wh. calls for these judgments. (8) instructed, or learn the lessons of thy chastisement. my soul, or I Myself: "lest My mind and affection be utterly alienated from thee."

A solemn admonition (vs. 8).—I. The benefits of instruction in national danger. II. The destructive consequences of this instruction being sent in vain. Apply—1. To the man who rests in the mere external observances of a public fast; 2. To those who are desirous of instruction.—R. Cecil.

God's withdrawment from man.—Think of God sending a famine upon the soul, of minds pining and dying because Divine messages have been withdrawn! We know what the effect would be if God were to withdraw the dew, or to trouble the air with a plague, or to avert the beams of the Sun; the garden would be a desert, the fruitful field a sandy plain, the wind a bearer of death, summer a stormy night, and life itself a cruel variation of death: so penetrating, so boundless is the influence of God in nature. Is it conceivable that the withdrawment of God's influence would be less disastrous upon the spirit of man?—Joseph Parker.

9—12. Here begins a second section, extending to vs. 15. (9) turn back, or go over the vineyard again to be quite sure no stray grapes are left.* Addressed to the leader of the attack upon the land. into the basket, R. V. margin. "Upon the shoots." (10) ear is uncircumcised, not dedicated to God, ch. vii. 26; Ac. vii. 51. "Closed against the precepts of God by carnality." reproach, they turn it into ridicule. (11) weary with holding in, and must utter my denunciations, wh. shall reach all classes, young, middle-aged, and old. I will pour it out, "pour it out" (imperative). This command is addressed by the prophet to himself, rather than by God to the prophet. The declaration is made without distinction of age, because the approaching punishment includes all alike.—Camb. Bib. full of days, i. e. who have lived to the full term and period of human life. (12) houses . . others, De. xxviii. 30.

13—17. (13) to covetousness, or gaining gains,* the acquisition of exorbitant or unjust gains. falsely, or fraudulently. (14) daughter . . people, omit "daughter of." slightly, only making a surface-healing, without reaching the deep cause. saying, Peace, this would be the hope based on Josiah's reforms.* (15) Were they ashamed, the passage means that the people were too hardened to feel ashamed of their acts. (16) A fourth section begins here extending to vs. 21. old paths, the neglected and despised ways of allegiance to Jehovah, and obedience to His will.* (17) watchmen, the Prophets. the sound of the trumpet, the mode of announcing the approach of danger. (Compare ver. 1; Amos iii. 6.) As sentinels are posted on the walls of a city to warn the inhabitants of the enemy's approach, so have the true prophets of the nation warned them of the consequences of their ways."

"It was usual with the Persians, Grecians, and Romans, to signify in the night by signs of fire, and by burning torches, either the approach of an enemy, or succor from friends. The former was done by shaking and moving their torches; the latter by holding them still."—Burder.

a Comp. 2. Sa. xx. 15; Isa. xxxvii. 33; Je. xxxii. 24, xxxiii. 4; Eze. xvii. 17. "Opportunities are the golden spots of time, like the pearl in the oyster-shell, of much more value than the shell that contains it. There is much time in a short opportunity."—Flavel. If you commit one sin, it is like the melting of the lower glacier upon the Alps, the others must follow in time."—Spurgeon.

a Comp. Is. vii. 6, xxiv. 18. "How wretched a spectacle is a garden into which cloven-footed beasts have entered! That which yesterday was fragrant, and shone all over with crowded beauty, is to-day rooted, despoiled, trampled, and utterly devoured. Such to me is the Bible, when the pragmatic prophecy-monger and the swinish utilitarian have toothed its fruits and crunched its blossoms."—Beecher.

a Is. lvi. 11; Je. viii. 10.

b "They have used only lenitives, as if a surgeon should slightly skin over a sore that festers underneath."—Lowth.

c "Your country was once prosperous and blessed. Try to learn what were the paths trodden in those days by your ancestors. Discover what the good path was wh. led them to happiness." — Spk. Com.

^d Is. i. 11, lxvi. 8; Am. v. 21; Mi. vi. 6.

"Although every old way may not be good, the good way is certainly old; if, therefore, the traveler finds and follows the way that is both old and good, he is safe—he shall without fail reach his home at last, and find rest for his soul." — Kitto.

• Ex. xxx. 23.

^d "When God says He lays stumbling-blocks in men's way, we must remember that it is by the general action of His moral law, by which wilful sin in one point reacts upon the whole moral nature." — Spk. Com.

^b Is. xlv. 13.

"When a person is hungry, or weary, or when he hears bad news, it is said, 'His hands have become weak,'

^c His hands have turned cold." — Roberts.

The old paths (vs. 16.—The figure: travelers and their guides. I. The denomination, "old paths." 1. Because ordained from eternity; 2. Because herein all the saints have walked; 3. Because tried. II. The description, "good way." A way is good—1. When safe; 2. When direct; 3. When frequented; 4. When pleasant; 5. When firm and passable. III. The directions, "stand, etc." 1. They who seek this path should be cautious in their observations; 2. They must be earnest in their inquiries; 3. They should be prompt in entering thereon. IV. The destination, "rest." 1. On the journey, contentment, satisfaction, etc.; 2. Afterwards eternal repose.—Stems and Twigs.

18—20. (18) congregation, or general assembly of mankind. (19) O earth, the appeal being even to nature to listen to God's charge against His people. (20) To what purpose,^a or what is the value of any external ceremonies, when the heart is not in them? Sheba, a part of Arabia Felix, famous for its spices. sweet cane,^e Is. xliii. 24. Necessary ingredients of the incense and anointing oil of the Temple. burnt offerings, which should testify to an entire devotion to My service.

Note on vs. 20.—The sweet-smelling reed grows in the deserts of Arabia. It is gathered near Jumbo, a port town of Arabia Petræa, from whence it is brought into Egypt. Pliny says it is common to India and Syria. It is likely the sweet cane of Jeremiah, who calls it prime, or excellent, and associates it with incense from Sheba. "To what purpose cometh there to me incense from Sheba, and the sweet cane from a far country?" And, in allusion to the same plant, Isaiah complains in the name of Jehovah, "Thou hast bought Me no sweet cane with money." In the Book of Exodus it is called "sweet calamus," and is said to come "from a far country," which agrees with the declaration of ancient writers, that the best is brought from India.—Paxton.

21—25. (21) stumblingblocks, in the way of the progress of this nation God shall place such an obstacle as shall cause it to fall.^a Old and young—all shall be overthrown. (22) Here begins the fourth section in this chapter. sides . . earth, or remotest regions of the earth.^b (23) cruel, inhuman, as they proved to be. voice roareth, Is. xvii. 12, 13. horses, ch. iv. 13. (24) fame, "the prophet identifies himself (comp., for the same phenomenon, ch. iv. 19—21; x. 19, 20) with his people, and expresses the general feeling of anxiety and pain. The phraseology of the closing lines reminds us of Isa. xliii. 7, 8."—Pul. Com. hands . . feeble, so that we cannot hold our weapons. (25) every side, there is danger all around.

Dufflas war prayer.—According to the Delhi Gazette, the Dufflas are in an uncomfortable state of mind about our approaching expedition into their country. A big-sounding war prayer has been drawn up by the local pope, who has enjoined all true Dufflas to repeat it twice a day. Among other things they are to pray: "Let their coasts be ruled by us! Let the demons of their forts be given to those of ours! Let the soul of him who is the chief cause of this quarrel be bound by that of our friend and chief, whom he has injured! Let the properties of their country be received by us! Let their warriors be seized by us; for which reason make strong all our warriors, that they may bind the spirits of all their able men for us to destroy them! Give us such help that they may not stand or hold, and that they be rendered insane and made to tremble! Come, our principal god, who art great, and powerful, and old, and whose words are always obeyed, destroy all our enemies, with all they possess, even that which is upon their backs! Let owls scream on their houses! Let all venomous reptiles scramble up the posts of their houses, and frighten them with terrific noises! Let fierce dogs, wild elephants, and ferocious tigers terrify them, so that they scratch each other's faces and tear their own hair! Let the rainbow drink up the water of their wells, and tanks, and rivers! Let a powerful tempest sweep them away! Come, spirits of our warriors, of our ancestors, seize the spirits of our enemies! Come, spirits of our great-grandmothers, with the demons of this powerful country, by whom we are governed, and whose eyes, and ears, and nostrils are ever open towards us!"

26-30. (26) gird, etc., as ch. iii. 25.^a wallow . . ashes, the sign of wildness of grief. only son, Am. viii. 10; Zec. xii. 10. (27) a fortress, "compare i. 18. Jeremiah is promised that he shall receive protection while carrying out the duty which so exasperates the people against him." (28) brass and iron, i. e. base metal, "their impudence resembles brass, and their obstinacy may be compared to iron,"—Lowth. (29) burned, R. V., "blow fiercely." But these metals will not be refined even in intense fires of chastisement.^a (30) Reprobate, or refuse; only dross, with no basis of good metal.

Reprobate silver.—This then is the end: the Lord^b hath rejected them. The smelter is God's prophet, the bellows, the breath of inspiration; the flux, his earnestness in preaching; but in vain does the fervor of prophecy essay to melt the hearts of the people. They are so utterly corrupt, that no particle even of pure metal can be found in them. All the refiner's art is in vain. They have rejected all God's gifts and motives for their repentance and therefore Jehovah has rejected them, as an alloy too utterly adulterate, to repay the refiner's toil.—Speaker's Com. The Church.—Men seem to think, "Only let me get into the church that has apostolicity, and catholicity, and orthodoxy!" . . . An organized institution I believe in; but the New Testament idea of a Church was a moral society of those who had a common faith, hope and love. That Church which is most positive about its apostolicity, that thinks there is no other Church but itself in the world, is a mere crustaceous, not a Spiritual Church. And that Church which has the most altars, the most vestments, the most externalities, the most things that appeal to the lower nature of men, which has the most physical embodiment, and therefore occupies the largest space in men's sight, is farthest from the true Spiritual Church.—Beecher.

CHAPTER THE SEVENTH.

The four chapters vii.-x. are plainly a finished whole; the circumstances of the discourse are given in chap. xxvi. Date: early in the reign of Jehoiakim: 605 B. C. 1-4. (1) word, a new prophecy. (2) gate, either the principal gate on the east side of the temple; or the gate of the court of Israel. (3) Amend . . doings, Zec. i. 6, ways or habits, doings or separate actions. (4) lying words, such as deceive. temple^a . . these, the repetition emphasises their "fanatical confidence in the inviolability of the temple."—Exp. Bib. Perhaps the constant iteration of pagan worship was also in mind. As if the repetition had a worth of its own.

5-7. (5) thoroughly, sincerely, and heartily. "The true palladium of Judah would be the faithful performance of Jehovah's moral laws, especially those referring to the conduct of the rulers. Observe the stress which all the prophets lay on the virtues of civil life."—Pul Com. (6) oppress not, etc., comp. ch. v. 28; De. xiv. 29, xxiv. 19-21. (7) dwell, permanently and securely. ever and ever, from eternity to eternity: "the strongest formula by which perpetuity of duration is expressed in Hebrew."^a Thoroughness.—A proud Indian chief became deeply convicted of sin, and, trembling under a sense of guilt, sought the missionary, and proffered his belt of wampum to be freed from his anguish of fear. "No," said the missionary, "Christ cannot accept such a sacrifice." The Indian departed, but soon returned offering his rifle and the skins he had taken in hunting. "No," was the reply, "Christ cannot accept such a sacrifice." Again the Indian went away, but with a troubled conscience once more returned, and offered his wigwam, wife, child, everything, for peace and pardon. "No," was still the reply, "Christ cannot accept such a sacrifice." The chief seemed oppressed with surprise for a moment; then, lifting up tearful eyes to heaven, he feelingly cried out, "Here, Lord, take poor Indian too!"—Dictionary of Illustrations.

^c Mi. i. 10.

^a Pr. xvii. 3; Isa. i. 25; Zec. xiii. 9; Mal. iii. 2, 3; 1 Pe. i. 7.

"If slander be a snake, it is a winged one—it flies as well as creeps."—Douglas Jerrold.

"Where it concerns himself, who's angry at a slander makes it true."—Ben Jonson.

^a The Jews supposed that because the temple was dedicated to Jehovah, He, as their tutelary God, would effectually protect it, and all who came to worship in it."—Henderson.

"It is much easier to give oneself to a church or a sect than to God."—Toplady.

"Lais broke her looking-glass because it showed the wrinkles on her face. Many men are angry with them that tell them their faults, when they should be angry only with the faults that are told them."—Venning.

^a Je. xxv. 5; Ne. ix. 6; Ps. xc. 2.

"With God there is no free man but his servant, though in the galleys; no slave but the sinner, though in a palace; none rich, but he that possesseth God, even in rags; none happy but he whom the world pities. Let me be free, rich, happy, to God." —Bp. Hall.

b "The Prophet does not charge them with the transgression of the ritual ordinances of Moses, but with the breach of the weightier matter of the law." —Lowth.

c "At Silo, where once was the tabernacle and ark of the Lord, there can scarcely be pointed out the foundation of an altar." —S. Jerome.

d "When people are given up to judicial hardness of heart, intercessory prayer for them is unavailing." —Fausset.

"Comfort, like the golden sun, dispels the sullen shade with her sweet influence, and cheers the melancholy house of care." —Rowe.

"God's promises are with a condition, which is as an oar in a boat or stern of a ship, and turns the promise another way." —Trapp.

a "Prob. very similar to those offered at Athens to Artemis in the middle of the month Munychion. These were round like the full moon, and covered with lights, and finally were burnt in her honor, forming with the added libation the symbol of a eucharist." —Spk. Com.

b Ro. viii. 20—22.

"Act! for inaction are wisdom and glory; fame, immortality, —

8—11. (8) lying words, such were the assurances of the false prophets. (9) steal, etc., comp. these sins and vices with the signs of amendment God looks for, vss. 5, 6. (10) delivered, R. V., "We are delivered; that ye may do," etc. We are free to do all these things, because we have gone through the prescribed ceremonials of the temple." (11) den of robbers, a place of retreat in the intervals between acts of violence. This verse is alluded to (in connexion with Is. lvi. 7) in Matt. xxi. 13, and the parallel passages (Mark xi. 17 and Luke xix. 46). "You make My house a place of sanctuary and protection to malefactors."

Sacrilege.—The Spirit of God will not have holy things profaned. Belshazzar converted the consecrated vessels of the temple into instruments of luxury and intemperance. Herod polluted the sepulchres of saints by a sacrilegious search for treasures, presumed to be hidden there, and God made fire to rise out of the earth and consume the searchers. Antiochus ransacked the temples of the Lord. Heliodorus emptied the treasuries of their consecrated monies. Pompey defiled the Sabbath and the Sanctuary. Crassus robbed the house of God of 10,000 talents. But inquire unto the event of these insolences, and we shall find that true then of which later ages give many examples, that ruin is the child of sacrilege, that mischief setteth a period to the lives and designs of profane men.—Bp. Reynolds.

12—16. (12) Shiloh,^c in the tribe of Ephraim, and north of Bethel. Jos. xviii. 1; 1 Ga. iv. 3; Ps. lxxviii. 60. at the first, before the tabernacle was removed to Zion, or the temple built. (13) rising up early, a fig. for doing a thing earnestly. "Speaking zealously and earnestly." called, etc., Pr. i. 24; Is. lxxv. 12, lxxvi. 4.^d (14) as I have done, i. e. I will utterly destroy it. "The reference is not to the tabernacle, the sacred Tent of the Wanderings, which was first set up at Nob (1 Sam. xxi. 22) and then removed to Gibeon (2 Chron. i. 3), but obviously to a building more or less like the temple, though less magnificent. The place and its sanctuary had doubtless been ruined in the great catastrophe, when the kingdom of Samaria fell before the power of Assyria (721 B. C.)."—Exp. Bib. (15) your brethren, the ten tribes, who had already come under Divine judgments. (16) pray not, spoken to Jeremiah.^d cry, offering prayer aloud.

Intercessory Prayer.—Luther had boundless confidence in the power and prevalency of prayer. "At the time the Diet of Nuremburg was held," says Tholuck, "Luther was earnestly praying in his own dwelling; and at the very hour when the edict granting free toleration to all Protestants was issued, he ran out of his house, crying out, 'We have gained the victory! Do you understand that?' On another occasion Melancthon was sinking into death through severe illness, and Luther entered his chamber. 'We cannot spare you yet!' was Luther's exclamation to his dying friend; and then he threw himself upon his knees in wrestling prayer. Then, seizing Melancthon's hand, he said, 'Be of good courage, Philip, thou shalt not die!' After his recovery, Melancthon wrote to Camerarius, 'If Luther had not come to me, I should certainly have died. He recalled me from the gates of the grave.'"

More things are wrought by prayer

Than this world dreams of. Wherefore, let thy voice

Rise like a fountain for me, night and day.

—Tennyson.

17—20. The reason why it is too late for prayer to avail. (17) what they do, in carrying out their worship of the most impure of all the heathen deities. (18) children, etc., all taking some part in the degrading service. cakes,^a made of honey, fine flour, etc., in a round flat shape, to resemble the disc of the moon, to whom they were offered. queen of heaven, the moon.^b Ashtoreth, the wife of Baal, the sun-god. (19) confusion . . . faces? Is it me they vex? Is it not themselves rather? And upon themselves they bring this shame. (20) poured out, ch. iv. 25, 26, ix. 10, xii. 4. As constantly in Isaiah, nature shares in man's redemption, so here in man's punishment.^b

Suffering of backsliders.—I believe that if the mental sufferings of such backsliders could be written and faithfully published, they would astound you, and be a more horrible story to read than all the torments of the Inquisition. What racks a man is stretched upon who has been unfaithful to his covenant with God! What fires have burned within the souls of those men who have been untrue to Christ and his cause! What dungeons, what grim and dark prisons underground, have saints of God lain in who have gone aside into by-path meadows instead of keeping to the King's highway! He who sins must smart, especially if he be a child of God, for the Lord hath said of his people, "You only have I known of all the people of the earth, therefore I will punish you for your iniquities." Whoever may go unchastised, a child of God never shall.—Spurgeon.

21—24. (21) burnt offerings,^c multiply your various sacrifices! what matters it. (22) spake not, etc., "If ye think to serve God by a multitude of sacrifices ye do greatly err. Jehovah did indeed allow your fathers to offer Him sacrifices, but He gave no special direction concerning them."—Cheyne.^d (23) Obeys, etc., De. vi. 3. (24) imagination, "stubbornness." went backward, like headstrong oxen.

Sacrifices.—Christ never despised sacrifice, but relatively He undervalued it. The idea of sacrifice among the Jews had taken precedence of humanity, justice and right. (Matt. v. 23, 24). What does it mean but this, Do not think that sacrifice to God is the highest religious duty. Sacrifice depends for its value, on preceding moral qualities. A principle is higher than the ordinance which you take to exhibit that principle. The life of religion in the soul is first in importance: the instruments by which you develop that life are of secondary consideration.—Beecher. Obedience.—Some persons would make religion to consist of little else than a self-denying course of the practise of virtue and obedience. They make it a kind of house of correction work. But no! I love the service of my God; like the bird I fly on the wings of obedience to his holy will.—Chalmers.

25—28. (25) sent unto you, vs. 13. God had never failed to let them know His will through inspired messengers. (26) hardened . . neck, ch. xvi. 12. (28) receiveth correction, R. V. "instruction." truth, in the sense of fidelity. from their mouth, which only makes false professions.

God providing for the wants of his people.—It is no aimless, helpless anxiety that fills his breast. The most practical measures of help and direction are devised and carried into execution. Prophets, the plenipotentiaries of Divine grace, are sent in immediate response to the needs and demands of men. No age of the world or the Church but has its thick succession. Heaven is in continual activity on behalf of sinners. The choicest spiritual gifts are ceaselessly rained upon the earth. The most devoted servants of God are raised up and sent. Truth in quick evolution anticipates the spiritual necessities of those who would seek God. There is no flagging, no cessation, from Adam's fall to the uplifting of the second Adam. And onward from that Divine spectacle, in which was displayed the "fulness of the Godhead bodily," events hurry to the culminating glories of Pentecost and the marriage supper of the Lamb.—Pul. Com.

29—31. "The scene of their wickedness shall be also that of their punishment." (29—34.) (29) Cut . . hair, a sign of mourning.^a It is commanded in anticipation of the desolation of Jerusalem. generation . . wrath, that is but the subject of His judgments. "This sinful generation, who have so highly provoked His anger." (30) in the house, etc., this must refer to the times of Manasseh.^b (31) high places, here prob. meaning "altars." Tophet, 2 Ki. xxiii. 10. burn, etc., Le xx. 2—5.

Nature of repentance.—Repentance, as explained by John's ministry, is a conviction of the fact of sin, but a sharp and painful conviction. A conviction that never produced humility, never sighed, never wept, never "wept apart," and never sought solitude for the purpose of prayer and reflection, is not that which is an element of true repentance. It is a serious and painful apprehension of danger. Hence John asked the Pharisees and Sadducees that came to his baptism, "Who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?" Repentance is an humble confession of sin. The people confessed generally to John; for it was impossible for these are its crown. Wouldst thou illumine the tablets of story? Build on achievements thy doom of renown."—Anon.

^c "The Prophet tells the Jews that they may, if they please, eat the flesh of their burnt-offerings, as well as of their peace-offerings, for God will accept neither of them from their hands."—Lowth. Is. i. 11; Je. vi. 20; Am. v. 21.

^a Ex. xix. 5, 6. Le. xi. 45.

"He that hides a dark soul and foul thoughts Benighted walks under the mid-day sun; Himself is his own dungeon."—Milton.

"To be left alone, and face to face with my own crime, had been just retribution."—Longfellow.

^a Je. xlvii. 5, xlviii. 37.

^b 2 Ki. xxi. 3—5.

"The redeeming power of the blood of Christ is greater than the condemning power of sin. This excellency it hath from the dignity of His person (for it is called the blood of God, Acts xx. 28), which makes His obedience and sufferings give more glory to God than our suffering in hell would have done. Isaiah xlii. 21; Rom. v. 17."—Mather.

^a Je. xvi. 9.

"Punishment is the recoil of crime; and the strength of the back-stroke is in proportion to the original blow."
—French.

"Reference is made to the joyous processions in which the bride and bridegroom are led through the streets, accompanied by bands of singers and musicians."
—Henderson.

"A sleep without dreams, after a rough day

Of toil, is what we covet most; and yet

How clay shrinks back from more quiescent clay!"
—Byron.

"Death! to the happy thou art terrible,
But how the wretched love to think of thee!

O thou true comforter, the friend of all Who have no friend beside!"
—Southey.

"The Prophet, beginning with the heart, describes their worship in the various stages of its development, and then contrasts its fulness with the miserable reward that ensues." — Hitzig.

him to enter into the particulars of each case; but to God they confessed their sins in detail. Repentance is fruitful. Under its influence the churl becomes liberal; the unjust becomes righteous; and those who had formerly been careless of their spiritual interests wait upon God in the use of every means of grace. Repentance is despairing, but hopeful. The people who were awakened under John's ministry felt that in themselves there was no help; and he taught the whole of them to wait for Christ the Saviour.—R. Watson.

32—34. (32) valley of slaughter, bec. the enemies coming upon Jerusalem would make so great a slaughter of the people there. till there be no place, rather "for want of place" elsewhere. (33) carcasses, dead bodies cast out, wh. none should bury. So many dead. So few survivors. Comp. Deut. xxviii. 26. (34) cease, etc., silence shall fall upon the utterly desolated and deserted city.^a Silence of sorrow.—It was the custom in the East, even in modern times, to conduct the bride and bridegroom through the streets, with the loudest demonstrations of joy. Rauwolf found this custom also prevalent in Aleppo. "When a Turkish woman is going to be married, and the bridegroom is conducted to her house, their relations and friends, who are invited to the wedding, as they go along through the streets cry with such a loud voice, which they gradually raise as they advance, that they can be heard from one street to the other." When the Prophet paints a period of public distress, he says among other things, "The voice of the bride and the bridegroom shall no longer be heard." Thus, in Persia, no marriages are celebrated during Lent (the month of Ramadan), and the solemnities of mourning in memory of Hossein; because everything must then be still and mournful.—Rosenmuller.

CHAPTER THE EIGHTH.

1—3. (1) At that time, when the city shall be taken. bring . . bones, ransacking even the very tombs, with contempt and malice, not for spoil, as the Jews did not so bury their dead. (2) spread, etc., or toss them out. loved . . served . . walked . . worshipped, "there is great force in the piled up verbs by wh. their worship of the heavenly bodies is described."—Spk. Com. The point is, that these gods prove utterly unable to prevent such desecration. "They are unconcerned spectators of the indignity offered to their former worshippers." (3) residue, or survivors of the great calamity. evil family, ch. i. 15.

Graves disturbed and dead molested.—It was "a hatred carried beyond the grave, a hatred which is a sort of impotent grasping at eternal vengeance, hatred which, having no power to work any real vengeance, has no object but to show its hatred."—Pusey. He (David) was buried by his son Solomon in Jerusalem, with great magnificence, and with all the other funeral pomp which kings used to be buried with; moreover he had great and immense wealth buried with him, the vastness of which may be easily conjectured by what I now say: for 1300 years afterwards, Hyrcanus, the high priest, when he was besieged by Antiochus, and was desirous of giving him money to get him to raise the siege, and draw off his army, and having no other method of compassing the money, opened one room of David's sepulchre and took out 3,000 talents, and gave part of that sum to Antiochus, and by this means caused the siege to be raised. Nay, after him, and that many years, Herod, the king, opened another room, and took away a great deal of money.—Josephus.

"In the second part of this great discourse (viii. 4—ix. 1) we have a fine development of thoughts which have already been advanced in the opening piece, after the usual manner of Jeremiah. The first half is mainly concerned with the sins of the nation (vss. 4—13), the second with a despairing lament over the punishment (14—ix. 1)."—Exp. Bib.

4—7. (4) Shall they fall, etc., R. V., "Shall men fall . . shall one turn away," etc. not arise, or try to get up again. turn away, i. e. wander fr. his path. return, or try to find his path again. (5) perpetual back- sliding, keeping on wandering further and further, with no attempts to return." (6) as the horse, at full speed, that cannot be checked." (7) stork, Is. i. 3. A migratory bird. turtle, a kind of dove, Cant. ii. 12. crane . . swallow, Is. xxxviii. 14. judgment, R. V., "ordinance," the birds obey their law—but man does not obey.

Human rejection of Divine love (vs. 6).—I. God's love. II. Man's rejection of it. 1. The wrong words; 2. The impenitence; 3. The recklessness; 4. Stupidity.—H. Bonar.

Here we are like birds of passage.—It is stated in the history of England that when the first missionary who arrived at Kent presented himself before the king, to solicit permission to preach the Gospel in his dominions, after long deliberation, when a negative was about to be put upon his application, an aged councillor, with his head silvered over with grey hairs, rose, and by the following speech obtained the permission which was requested. "Here we are," said the orator, "like birds of passage; we know not whence we come, or whither we are going; if this man can tell us, for God's sake let him speak." I say, if there are six hundred millions of our fellow-creatures who, like birds of passage, know not whence they came, nor whither they are going, for God's sake let us send them the Gospel, which will tell them whence they came, and which is able to make them wise unto salvation.—Philip.

8—12. (8) law . . with us, fr. this it appears that copies of the law multiplied. Lo, certainly, etc. R. V. "But behold the false pen of the scribes hath wrought falsely," in so explaining the Law as to assure men that they may sin with impunity." scribes, or copyists, "we gather that the Law must have existed in writing before the class of scribes could have grown up, and therefore the modern view that the 'Books of Moses' were a late fabrication may be disproved even from this verse alone."—Camb. Bib. (9) wise, they who think themselves wise. rejected . . Lord, by persisting in false interpretations of the Word. (10—12) wives, etc., comp. ch. vi. 12—15.

Difficulties and dangers of infidelity (vs. 9).—The text includes three classes of men who do not believe the Scriptures. I. Sceptics, those who profess to be in uncertainty. 1. When sincere they must be miserable; 2. Wretched; 3. Continual mental conflict must be torment. II. Atheists. III. Deists.—Bennett.

13—17. (13) surely, R. V., "utterly." consume them, by the destructive power of the Chaldeans. shall be, better "there are," "it is the actual condition of things which the prophet describes. Elsewhere Judah is compared to a vine with bad grapes (ch. ii. 21); here the vine does not even pretend to bear fruit. Another figure is that of a barren fig tree (comp. Matt. xxi. 19)."—Pul. Com. (14) Why . . still? this is the way the people will feel when the time comes. water of gall, poison, De. xxix. 18. (15) health, or rest. (16) his horses, those of the on-coming enemy. Dan, ch. iv. 15. strong ones, chargers. (17) cockatrices, R. V. "basilisks," types of dangerous enemies.

Despair may follow a Confident hope.—The Jews had looked for peace and for a time of health. Yet came none. Hope may be very bright and yet very delusive. The splendor of the sunrise contains little promise that the day will close without storms. Subjective confidence is no guarantee of objective truth. Things are not the more true because we believe them very firmly. We may feel safe and be in danger. A peaceful death is no security for a joyful resurrection. It is little that a man has overcome the fear of death; the important question is whether he has removed the ground for that fear. The faith that saves is not confidence in our own security, but submissive and obedient trust in Christ.—Pul. Com. Serpents.—Few animals excite more horror on their first appearance than these common enemies, both of man and beast. The possibility of some being made subject to certain incantations or charms is remarkable, and is often referred to in Scripture. The Hindoos, or at least the serpent-charmers, pretend to handle all sorts of snakes with impunity, to make them come and go at pleasure, and, in short, to have a cabalistic authority over the whole race. The cobra is the only serpent used for display by jugglers. When caught, it is held at arm's a "An expostulation, implying that men are seldom so far gone in wickedness as not to be touched with some remorse for their evil doings, and make some general resolutions of amendment; whereas this people are guilty of one perpetual apostasy, as if they could deceive God by their hypocritical pretences, without making any steps towards a reformation."—Lowth.

Je. vii. 24.

b "A double metaphor: first, the determined persistence of the people in sin is compared to the blind fury which at the sound of the trumpet seizes upon the war-horse; and then its impetuous rush into the battle is likened to the overflowing of a torrent (the word rushing is lit. overflowing), wh. nothing can stop in its destructive course."—Spk. Com.

"Soon may this woe-worn spirit seek the bourne Where, lulled to slumber, grief forgets to mourn."

—Campbell.

c Ezr. vii. 6; Ne. viii. 9, 13.

"So farewell, hope, and with hope farewell fear, Farewell remorse; all good to me is lost Evil be thou my good."

—Milton.

"No soul is desolate as long as there is a human being for whom it can feel trust and reverence."

—George Eliot.

"The vintage and harvest are frequently em-played figuratively as images of complete destruction; but here the terms are to be taken in their literal application."—Henderson.

Je. ix. 15, xxiii. 15.

"Serpent charmers in the East entice serpents by music, and by a particular pressure on the neck render them incapable of darting."—Fausset.

a "Summer is the fruit-gathering, which follows the corn-harvest.... Despair seized the people when they saw opportunities for their deliverance again and again pass by, till God seemed utterly to have forgotten them."—Spk. Com.

b "In an old version this word is translated treacle."—H. Macmillan.

c "Jeremiah implies that the fault lay wholly in the patients themselves, who refused to submit to the prescriptions."—Lowth.

Some one once asked a venerable minister of the Gospel this question:—"What is the hardest (meaning the most dreadful) text in the Bible?" The minister referred to a text, saying, "I know of no harder text than this, and yet there is nothing about damnation or hell in it." The words which he repeated were these:—"The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved."—Jeremiah viii. 20. Certainly there are in the Bible no words more fearful length by the tail, and as often as it attempts to strike, it is beaten off. It is then seized by the head, thrown on the ground, and its fangs knocked out with a hammer; after which its poison bag is squeezed dry. By these means the cobra is rendered harmless, though it may be easily excited, and made to raise itself in answer to the sounds of music (Ps. lviii. 4, 5). The basilisk is frequently mentioned in Scripture, but no description is given further than that it cannot be charmed. The Greek text calls it basilisc, and the Hebrew tsepha, while the English improperly renders it cockatrice, a fabulous animal that never existed. The eggs of the basilisk are referred to in Isa. lix. 5: hence it would appear to be a snake, and not a viper, as the latter brings forth its young alive.—Bib. Treas.

18—22. (18) comfort myself, R. V., "Oh that I could comfort myself," etc., find some ground of consolation, faint in me, it misgives me. (19) Behold, etc., "Hark! a cry of my people from distant lands: Is Jehovah not in Zion," etc.—Lange. Jer. anticipates the complaints of the captive Jews. (20) summer, vintage, ingathering of fruits. "As when the harvest was bad, there remained yet hopes from the yield of grapes, figs, olives, etc., and till these hopes had failed to be realized, men did not despair; so the people had lost one chance after another, and were now without any hope. It is the people who speak here, and use what is obviously a proverbial saying."—Camb. Bib.^a (21) black, in mourning. (22) balm,^b Ge. xxxvii. 25. Gilead, ch. xlvii. 11; this district was famous for balm, turpentine, and similar healing gums; therefore physicians and surgeons resorted thither.^c

The day of grace (vs. 20).—I. A short time, and therefore requires diligence: the King's business requires haste. II. A limited time, as summer days are longer than winter days. III. A varying time: rainbow of mercy seen only in the day of grace.—G. S. Bowes.—The harvest past.—I. Every person who still remains in sin may, at the close of the year, usefully adopt this lamentation. II. A season in which religion prevails is also eminently a time of harvest, and such as lose this season may well adopt the lamentation of the text. III. Another situation to which this melancholy reflection is peculiarly applicable is that of a dying sinner.—T. Dwight.

Opportunity lost.—One of the most ingenious tortures of the Hohenstaufen family, in the height of their despotic control, was that of a cell, which, at the prisoner's first entrance, presented an air of comfort and ease; so that it was not till he had been a few days confined that he observed the dimensions of his chamber beginning to contract. But the discovery once made, the fact became more appalling every day. Slowly but terribly, the sides drew closer and the unhappy victim was crushed to death. What an emblem does this suggest of the sinner's contracting day of grace! Oh, what would the poor victim in such a cell have given to see the door open, and hear a voice, "Escape for thy life!" Would that sinners would escape as eagerly by the door of grace!—Bowes.

The balm of life.—"Alexander the Great was dying of a wound, which did not seem very dangerous at first, but it baffled his physicians, and was rapidly becoming mortal. One night, however, it is said he dreamed that some one had brought him a peculiar-looking plant, which, when applied to the festering sore, had cleansed and closed it. In the morning, when he awoke, he described the plant; and the historian informs us that it was sought for and found, and when applied to the wound, the fiery pain subsided, and he was speedily healed. Now your soul has received a deadly hurt; it has been stung by the old serpent, the devil. The wound gets worse. There is a tender plant which is able to heal you; it is the Balm of Gilead. They used to wound the balsam tree, in order to obtain its healing essence; and so for our transgressions the Saviour was wounded, and 'by His stripes ye are healed.'"—J. Hamilton.—Poison and antidote.—There is a tree called the manchineel, which grows in the West Indies; its appearance is very attractive, and the wood of it peculiarly beautiful; it bears a kind of apple, resembling the golden pippin. This fruit looks very tempting, and smells very fragrant; but to eat of it is instant death; and its sap or juice is so poisonous, that if a few drops of it fall on the skin it, raises blisters, and occasions great pain. The Indians dip their arrows in the juice, that they may poison their enemies when they wound them. Providence hath so appointed it that one of these trees is never found, but near it there also grows a white wood, or a fig tree, the juice of either of which, if applied in time, is a remedy for the diseases produced by the manchaneel. Sin, like this poisonous apple, looks pleasant to the eye, and men desire it,—eat of it, and die. But there is a remedy at hand; it is the precious blood of the Son of God, which soothes the troubled conscience, and cleanses it from all sin.

"Not balm, new bleeding from the wounded tree,
Nor bless'd Arabia with his spicy grove,
Such fragrance yields."

The balm of Gilead is a small evergreen; at five feet from the ground it branches out something like an old hawthorn; bark is smooth, shining, of a whitish grey color, with brown blotches; leaves are of a bright green, foliage is scanty and rugged. The greatest quantity of balsam flows from the wounded bark; but there are three kinds procured by art; best is the opobalsam, expressed from the green berry; second, from the ripe nut or berry; the last is obtained by bruising and boiling the young wood.—Scripture Herbal.

CHAPTER THE NINTH.

1—3. (1) In the Hebrew this verse closes chap. viii. fountain, or reservoir, fr. wh. tears might freely flow. slain, in the great coming calamity. (2) lodging place, or caravanserai,^a a place offering only shelter for the traveler. No resident host, no food provided, no company. There he would escape the sights and sounds that now appall him. assembly, or gang. (3) like their bow, or just as soldiers before battle bend their bows, so they prepare to shoot out lying words, like arrows.^a not valiant, etc. R. V., "and they are grown strong in the land, but not for truth."

Religious consolation (vs. 1).—I. Religion affords ample solace to the afflicted. 1. The poor; 2. The bereaved; 3. The sick. II. The Gospel bestows healing on the patient. III. Religion affords solid comfort to those mourning over their own corruptions. 1. The Word of God teaches them that the painful consciousness of their own imperfections has ever been a characteristic of the most eminent saints; 2. And assures every believer of a final triumph over his corruptions.—Pulpit Studies.

A lodge in the wilderness.—People in the East, on their journeys to other towns or countries, are obliged to travel through the most lonely wilds. On this account the native sovereigns, or opulent men, erect what are called "rest-houses," or choultries, where the travelers or pilgrims reside for the night. "In the wilderness," too, devotees and ascetics live retired from men: there, either for life, or for a short period, they perform their austerities, and live in cynical contempt of the rest of mankind. When a father is angry with his family, he often exclaims, "If I had but a shade in the wilderness, then should I be happy. I will become a pilgrim and leave you." Nor is this mere empty declamation to alarm his family; for numbers in every town and village thus leave their homes and are never heard of more. There are, however, many who remain absent for a few months or years, and then return. Under these circumstances, it is no wonder, when a father or husband threatens his family to retire to the katu, that is, "wilderness," that they become greatly alarmed. But men who have been reduced in their circumstances become so mortified, that they also retire from their homes, and all their future days wander about as pilgrims. "Alas! alas! I will retire to the jungle, and live with wild beasts!" says the broken-hearted widow.—Roberts.

than these. What can be more dreadful than the wail of a lost soul?

"Has a man lost a good situation, it is said, 'His harvest is past.' Is a person amassing much money, it is said, 'He is gathering in his harvest.' " — Roberts.

"Many do with opportunities as children do at the seashore; they fill their little hands with sand, and then let the grains fall through one by one till all are gone." — T. Jones.

"The balm of the soul is prayer, saith the Chaldee paraphrast; is repentance, saith Jerome; is Christ applied by faith, say we. Sanguis medicus est curatio phreneticus." — Trapp.

^a "This lodge generally consists of a large square building, enclosing a court open above, round the sides of which are small arches, and within each of these is a dark cell or dormitory, without furniture or accommodation of any kind." — Henderson.

Is. xxii. 4; La. ii. 11, iii. 48.

"Need we wonder if the Infinite exceeds our weak, narrow minds? Would you measure God and His mysteries by your vision? Would He be infinite if you could measure Him and fathom His depths?"—Fénélon.

"Don't say, 'Lord, this is the way?' but 'Lord, is this the way?' Don't show Him the way you want to take; stand still till He bids you go forward. Your work is coming to meet you just as truly as you are going to meet it."—J. M. D. Conklin.

^a Ge. xxv. 26, xxvii. 36; Ho. xii. 3.

^b "The arrow shot out" may be trans. "murderous arrow."

^c "Layeth his ambush."—Henderson.

"Each of the negroes took from his quiver a handful of arrows and putting two between his teeth, and one in his bow, waved to us with his hand to keep at a distance."—Mungo Park.

"The devil hath not, in all his quiver's choice, An arrow for the heart like a sweet voice."—Byron.

^a "The wilderness sometimes signifies the plain or champaign country, and is opposed to the mountains."—Lowth.

^b Ps. lxiv. 19; Is. xiii. 22, xxxiv. 18; Je. li. 87.

"Northern mythology tells of the Migdard serpent, whom Odin feared would bring much trouble to the gods. He caused it to be brought to him, when he hurled it into the deep ocean. But the monster grew to such enormous size, that it could hold its tail in its mouth, thus encircling the whole earth. So extensive is that depravity which follows the serpent's trail from Eden."

Oh for a lodge in some vast wilderness,
Some boundless contiguity of shade,
Where rumor of oppression and deceit,
Of unsuccessful or successful war,
Might never reach me more! My ear is pained,
My soul is sick with every day's report
Of wrong and outrage with which earth is filled.
There is no flesh in man's obdurate heart,
It does not feel for man; the natural bond
Of brotherhood is severed as the flax
That falls asunder at the touch of fire.

—Cowper.

4—8. (4) Take ye heed, "the mutual distrust, which had already in the time of Hezekiah broken up families and divided the nearest friends, and made a man's worst enemies those of his own household, had now reached the highest degree of intensity; 'Every man had to take heed of his neighbor and suspect his brother.'"—Camb. Bib. supplant, as Jacob did." (5) weary themselves, through making such efforts. (6) Thine habitation, addressed to the people, continuation of the warning of vs. 4. Through deceit, etc., i. e. as a result of their unfaithfulness to one another they have come to deny Me. (7) melt them, in refining fires of national calamity. how, etc., i. e. how otherwise. (8) an arrow shot out. R. V. "a deadly arrow." ^b Vs. 3. his wait, R. V. "in his heart he layeth wait for him."

Slander.—"Against slander there is no defence. Hell cannot boast so foul a fiend, nor men deplore so foul a foe. It stabs with a smile. It is a pestilence walking in darkness, spreading contagion far and wide, which the most wary traveler cannot avoid. It is the heart-searching dagger of the assassin. It is the poisoned arrow whose wound is incurable. It is as fatal as the sting of the most deadly asp; murder is its employment, innocence its prey, and ruin its sport."—Gray's "Topics."

"Slander, the foulest whelp of sin! The man
In whom this spirit entered was undone;
His tongue was set on fire of hell; his heart
Was black as death; his legs were faint with haste
To propagate the lie his soul had framed;
His pillow was the peace of families
Destroyed, the sigh of innocence reproached, Broken friendships, and the strife of brotherhoods."

—Pollok.

9—11. (9) not visit, ch. v. 9, 29. (10) "On the mountains let me raise a weeping and wailing and on the pastures of the desert a lamentation."—Lange. habitations, R. V. "pastures." ^a burned up, through lack of cultivation, marg. desolate. (11) Jerusalem, the city, as well as the country, was to be overwhelmed. dragons, R. V. "jackals."

Cause of threatenings.—Love so yearns to rescue those it loves. The rope may cut and wound the hands of the drowning sailor to whom we have thrown it, but we do not mind that if thereby he be drawn safe to shore. The knife of the surgeon may cut deep and cause fearful pain, but if it saves the imperilled life we are thankful notwithstanding. So God sends forth these stern, rough, and terrible threatenings, that souls under the spell of sin may be awakened, alarmed, made to tremble, and to "seek the Lord while he may be found."—Pul. Com.

12—16. (12) wise man, able to trace the connection bet. suffering and sin. for what the, R. V. "wherefore is the land perished," etc., a new question. (13) Lord saith, speaking Himself bec. the wise men failed. set before them, made plainly and publicly known to them. (14) imagination, R. V. "stubbornness." Baalim, ch. ii. 8 23. fathers taught, this has been going on for generations. (15) wormwood, De. xxix. 18. water of gall, ch. viii. 14. (16) scatter them, Le. xxvi. 33.

An interpreter wanted (vs. 12).—When men are at a loss, or there is radical difference of opinion, it is evident that some authority is required to decide the question. The world and its canons are by the nature of the problem ruled out of court. And the apostate is too blinded with his own sin and too callous through repeated acts and prolonged habits of wrong-doing to be trusted in the matter. At this juncture the advantage of revelation and of the prophetic office appears. So far as God is concerned, the seer speaks with the authority of direct inspiration; so far as the culprit is concerned, he occupies a representative position, and as one of those implicated, yet himself innocent, acts as general conscience. This is God's way—to raise a testimony and extract a confession from the heart of the transgressor himself, or from the midst of those upon whom his judgments fall. And the same end is accomplished now through the Spirit and the Word. The saint becomes the mouth-piece of the Saviour, and the world is convinced of "sin, of righteousness, and of judgment."—Pul. Com.

17—22. (17) mourning women, who attended funerals to help the wailing, cunning, or skilled in wailing. (18) make haste, the calamity is near at hand. for us, who mourn over Jerusalem as spiritually dead. (19) cast us out, R. V. "because they have cast down our dwellings." 2 Ki. xxv. 9. (20) hear, etc., even the younger women must join the wailing, for the number of dead would be so great. (21) "Death works in a twofold manner, viz.—within and without. In the shape of famine and sickness he steals in at the windows as a thief (compare Joel ii. 9) and the greatest houses are not exempted from his visit: he also cuts off the young and vigorous in the open (Compare Zech. viii. 5)." (22) handful, forgotten by the reaper. Neglect of the dead, who lie about in confusion, is the meaning.

Death (vs. 21).—Death as an enemy is—I. Cruel. 1. Strikes at the dearest objects of our affections; 2. Robs us of our most useful men; 3. Drags us from the dearest things of the heart; 4. Reduces our bodies to the dust. II. He is unrelenting. III. He is subtle. IV. He is irresistible. V. He is ubiquitous. VI. He is conquerable. Christ has conquered death—I. In His own resurrection; 2. In His power upon the minds of His disciples.—Thomas.

Mourning at the grave.—I have noticed every morning since coming to Sidon, that women come forth very early to visit the graves. They move about under the trees and among the tombs in the grey dawn, wrapped up from head to foot in their white sheets, and looking for all the world like veritable ghosts. Sometimes I hear the voice of prayer; some weep and sob, while others sing or chant in a low, monotonous tone. In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred this public manifestation is the work of that arch-tyrant, custom, and nothing more. . . . Some of these mourners have tents pitched above the graves which require to be wept over. These, however, afford but slight protection against the pitiless storm and piercing wind. The great majority have no cover, and the mourners go home to nurse rheumatisms, burn in fevers, or go blind with ophthalmia. The real weeping is in the houses. And when you further know that many of these mourners and chanters are hired, and weep, howl, beat their breast, and tear their hair, according to contract, your compassion will fail fast, take another direction, and sigh for the victims of folly and fashion.—Thompson. Joy in death.—I congratulate you and myself that life is passing fast away. What a superlatively grand and consoling idea is that of death! Without this radiant idea, this delightful morning star, indicating that the luminary of eternity is going to rise, life would, to my view, darken into midnight melancholy. Oh, the expectation of living here and living thus always would be indeed a prospect of overwhelming despair. But thanks be to that fatal decree that dooms us to die! thanks to that Gospel which opens the vision of an endless life! and thanks, above all, to that Saviour Friend who has promised to conduct all the faithful through the Sacred trance of death into Scenes of Paradise and everlasting delight.

—John Foster.

Death.—

"The glories of our blood and state
Are shadows, not substantial things;
There is no armor against fate;

"No large growth in holiness was ever gained by one who did not take time to be often and long alone with God."—Austin Phelps.

"A cruel Roman emperor wished that all Rome had but one neck, that he might kill it with one blow. God hath in his infinite grace gathered up all our humanity into one, even in Christ, so that, as sin had destroyed all by one stroke (Rom. v.), the grace of God in Christ might save all by the one righteousness of the One." — Pul. Com.

"Those whose business it was to attend funerals, and by their skilled wailings aid the real mourners in giving vent to their grief. Hired mourners are still employed in Egypt." — Spk. Com.

2 Chr. xxxv. 25; Ec. xii. 5; Am. 7. 16; Mat. ix. 23; Mk. v. 38.

"What disarrays like death? It defaces the fascination of the beautiful. It breaks the lamp of the wise. It withers the strength of the mighty. It snatches the store of the rich. Kings are stripped of trapping, trophy, treasure: 'their glory shall not descend after them.'"

R. W. Hamilton. "When God would educate a man He compels him to learn bitter lessons. He sends him to school to the necessities rather than to the graces, that by knowing all suffering, he may also know the eternal consolation." — Celia Burleigh.

"It has been well said that no man ever sank under the burden of the day. It is when tomorrow's burden is added to the burden of today that the weight is more than a man can bear. God begs you to leave the future to Him, and mind the present."—Geo. Macdonald.

"There are times when God asks nothing of his children except silence, patience, and tears."—Charles S. Robinson.

a "Wisdom here is political sagacity. Might is military prowess."—Fausset.

b "Because the Jews valued themselves so much on their circumcision, God tells them, when He sends His judgments abroad in the world, they shall find no more favor than those who are not circumcised."—Lowth.

a "The Heb., living, as they are supposed to do, in the midst of idolaters, were more or less exposed to their seductive influence. The Chaldeans specially employed their arts for the purpose of working on the superstitious fears of mankind."—Henderson.

b Is. xlv. 10, 11.

c "Like one of those stiff, elegant pillars, something like a palm tree, which may be seen in Oriental architecture, and to wh., with their Death lays his icy hand on kings.

Sceptre and crown
Must tumble down,
And in the dust be equal made
With the poor crooked scythe and spade.

"Some men with swords may reap the field,
And plant fresh laurels where they kill;
But their strong nerves at last must yield;
They tame but one another still:
Early or late,
They stoop to fate,
And must give up their murmuring breath,
When they, pale captives, creep to death.

"The garlands wither on your brow:
Then boast no more your mighty deeds!
Upon Death's purple altar now See where the victor-victim bleeds!
Your heads must come To the cold tomb:
Only the actions of the just Smell sweet and blossom in the dust." —Shirley.

23—26. (23) wise . . mighty . . rich, the three classes that might expect to defend and preserve themselves and their city in times of national distress. (24) understandeth and knoweth, "the former refers to the intellect, the latter to the emotions, the heart."—Camb. Bib. 1 Cor. i. 31; 2 Cor. x. 17. The true knowledge of God leads to obedience of His will. (25) punish, Heb. visit upon, circumcised, etc., R. V., "circumcised in their uncircumcision," i. e., consecrated outwardly while inwardly defiled." (26) Egypt, etc., comp. list in ch. xxv. corners, R. V., "and all that have the corners of their hair polled." A peculiarity of certain Arabs (Le. xix. 27).

The glory of man (vs. 23).—I. The glory forbidden. 1. In wisdom; 2. In might; 3. In riches. II. The glory enjoined. 1. The knowledge that there is a God; 2. The knowledge of God as the moral Governor of the universe; 3. The knowledge of God as the God of redemption.—G. Brooks.

A man's three friends.—I read of a man who had a suit, and when his case was to be heard, he applied himself to three friends to see what they would do. One answered he would bring him as far on his journey as he could; the second promised to go with him to his journey's end; the third engaged to go with him before the judge and speak for him, nor leave him till his cause was determined. These three are a man's riches, his friends, and his graces. His riches may not very long stay with him; his friends can go with him to the grave, but there must leave him; but his graces will go with him before God, never forsake him, but accompany him to the grave and to glory.—Brooks.

CHAPTER THE TENTH.

1—5. (2) signs of heaven, eclipses, comets, etc., which heathen peoples greatly fear.^a (3) customs, established institutions. one cutteth, R. V. marg., "it is but a tree which one cutteth." (4) deck, etc., covering the wooden body with platings of gold and silver.^b with nails, to secure it from falling down. (5) upright, R. V., "they are like a palm tree, of turned work, and speak not." as the palm tree,^c a pillar resembling a palm tree. These idols are stiff and lifeless as such. Others render "like pillars in a garden of cucumbers," in which sense the Hebrew word is found in Is. i. 8. That this was the sense in which the Jews themselves understood it at the time when the book of Baruch was written appears from the verse (Baruch vi. 70) evidently based on this, "as a scarecrow in a garden of cucumbers."—Camb. Bib. do evil, Is. xli. 23.

Hearing the Word of the Lord (vs. 1).—I. What is the Word of the Lord? His Law and Gospel. II. What is implied in hearing the Word of God? 1. That we attend His ordinances; 2. That we observe what we hear; 3. That we understand what we observe; 4. That we believe what we understand; 5. That we remember what we believe; 6. That we practise what we remember; 7. That we continue in what we practise. III. Why should we hear? 1. Because God has commanded it; 2. Because it is for our great interest, it being the means of repentance, faith, light, comfort, and leads to eternal happiness. IV. How worthy of reproof are they—1. Who do not come to hear; 2. Who do not hear when they are come; 3. Who do not mind what they hear if they do come; 4. Who do not understand what they give attention to; 5. Who will not believe what they understand; 6. Who will not practise what they believe. V. Exhortation. 1. Hear God's Word with reverence; 2. Caution; 3. Attention; 4. Intention.—W. Stevens.

"Signs of heaven."—Heathenism in all ages has been a prolific system of doubt and dismay to its millions of votaries. It has laid prostrate, or warped aside, the finest intellects; and made created and lifeless objects the controllers of human hope and fear, rather than the great Creator. How lamentable that it was necessary for this holy patriot and prophet to warn the Jews from following the practices of the idolaters! and how vividly correct at this day are his descriptions of that soul-destroying system! Should a supposed malignant begin to rule in any given month, multitudes are in a state of terrible agitation, and, with the priests at their head, are devising a thousand plans to avert its direful potency. Though their astronomers can calculate with tolerable accuracy the time when an eclipse will occur, yet this will not serve in the least to pacify the vast tribes of the East. During its continuance they are all in a state of complete consternation; they abstain from their food and usual occupations, and yield themselves up to all the foolish impositions and absurd fantasies of their wily priests.—Roberts.

6—10. (6) like . . thee, Ps. lxxxvi. 8, 10. (7) King of nations, i. e. all nations." (8) brutish,^b "The original meaning of the idolatrous religions had begun, probably, to fade, and the worship of Bel and Nebo had become (as the worship of the Egyptian gods became at a later period) increasingly formal and ritualistic."—Pul. Com. stock, etc., R. V., "the instruction of idols, it is but a stock." The teaching is wooden like the teacher. (9) Tarshish,^c port on Spanish coast. Uphaz, Da. x. 5.^d blue and purple, expensive, as dyed with the valuable murex, or shell-fish. (10) true God, lit. a God who is truth; who is a real God, not a sham figure.

The true and living God (vs. 10).—I. The Lord is the true God. This is proved—1. By His Word; 2. His dealings; 3. His purposes; 4. His manifestations. II. The Lord is the living God, hence we should seek our spiritual life from Him. III. He is the everlasting King, hence we should inquire into and submit to His laws.—Pulpit Studies.

Folly of idolatry and power of the Gospel.—It was related at a public meeting that several missionaries once landed in India, who, anxious to lose no time in proclaiming the glad tidings of salvation, stopped at the first large village on their route, and, taking their stand under the shade of some large trees while the natives collected round them, they began to preach unto them Jesus. There was profound attention for more than an hour, when first one voice was raised and then another. "Jesus is the true God," "Jesus is the true God," they cried. "Come with us, and pull down our temples, and throw our gods down the hills." Then they led the way, and soon bore their wretched idol, which, though it had legs, could not walk, to the brow of a neighboring hill, where they contemptuously flung it over. But the words of the text may be applied to other idols besides those of heathen nations. It is a fact, and a sight to be met with any day in Madras and other large Eastern cities. A set of bearers are hired one day to bear on their shoulders a hideous idol, ornamented with gold and gems; and the next, the same set of men carry arms and legs close to their sides, and their legs and feet mere unshaped blocks, they might well be compared." — Spk. Com.

Hab. ii. 19; 1 Cor. xii. 2.

"Superstition is the poetry of practical life. Hence, a poet is none the worse for being superstitious." — Goethe.

^a Re. xy. 4.

^b Is. xli. 29; Ha. ii. 18; Zec. x. 2.

^c Ge. x. 4.

^d Poss. the Paz of Job xxviii. 17, "Jewels of Paz."

"All things in the natural world symbolize God yet none of them speak of Him but in broken and imperfect words. High above all he sits sublimer than mountains, grander than storms, sweeter than blossoms and tender fruits, nobler than Lords, truer than parents, more loving than lovers. His feet tread the lowest places of the earth, but his head is above all glory, and everywhere He is supreme." — Beecher.

"Wonderful alchemy of God's grace it is which transmutes tribulation into triumph, turns waters of Marah into a healthful fountain, enables one to gather grapes of thorns and figs of thistles, causes the rose to bloom through a whole winter of trials, and helps the soul to regard afflictions as promises, not threatenings."

"Liberal minds are open to conviction. Liberal doctrines are capable of improvement. There are proselytes from atheism, but none from superstition."—Junius.

a Job. xxviii. 25, 26.

"No man is born wise; but wisdom and virtue require a tutor, though we can easily learn to be vicious without a master"—Seneca.

"An Arab, when one day asked, 'How do you know there is a God?' turned indignantly upon the questioner, and replied, 'How do I know whether a man or a camel passed my tent last night?' His own footprints in creation and providence testify of Him."

b Comp. De. xxxii. 9; Ps. lxxiv. 2.

"Any opinion which tends to keep out of sight the living and loving God, whether it be to substitute for Him an idol, or any occult agency, or a formal creed, can be nothing better than the portentous shadow projected from the slavish darkness of an ignorant heart."—Hallam.

forth in state the Virgin Mary. One form of idolatry is perhaps a little more refined than another; but how truly may it be said of them all, "They that make them are like unto them; so is every one that trusteth in them!"—Bib. Treas. God's name.—A Jew entered a Persian temple, and saw there the sacred fire. He said to the priest, "How do you worship fire?" "Not the fire: it is to us an emblem of the sun and of his animating light," said the priest. The Israelite continued, "You dazzle the eye of the body, but darken that of the mind; in presenting the terrestrial light, you take away the celestial." The Persian asked, "How do you name the Supreme Being?" "We call him Jehovah Adonai; that is, the Lord who was, who is, and shall be." "Your word is great and glorious, but it is terrible," said the Persian. A Christian approaching said, "We call him Abba Father." Then the Persian and the Jew regarded each other with surprise and said, "Your word is the nearest and the highest; but who gives you courage to call the Eternal thus?" "The Father Himself," said the Christian, who then expounded to them the plan of redemption.—Krummacher. Christ, the true God.—Two gentlemen were once disputing on the divinity of Christ; one of them who argued against it said, "If it were true, certainly it would have been expressed in more clear and unequivocal terms." "Well," said the other, "admitting that you believed it, were you authorized to teach it, and allowed to use your own language, how would you express the doctrine to make it indubitable?" "I would say," replied he, "that Jesus Christ is the true God." "You are very happy," replied the other, "in the choice of your words, for you have happened to hit upon the very words of inspiration; for John, speaking of the Son, says 'This is the true God, and eternal life.'"—Wilson.

11—13. (11) The verse appears in Chaldee instead of Hebrew. The object is either (a) that the Jews might thus have put into their mouths the very words in which they should while in exile address their Chaldee conquerors, which is somewhat improbable; or (b) because it is a proverb and thus given in the language of the common people (Aramaic).—Camb. Bib. made . . earth, this is the exclusive claim of Jehovah. (12) He hath made, Ge. i. 6. (13) multitude, R. V., "tumult," etc., the forces of nature are under His guidance. waters, etc., comp. the account of the creation."

Gods of the heathen.—An Indian chief, having sent for Hiacoomes, a converted native, with the view of receiving religious instruction from him, after some conversation, the chief asked him how many gods the English worshiped. Hiacoomes answered, "One and no more." On which the chief reckoned up about thirty-seven principal gods which he had. "And shall I," said he, "throw away all these thirty-seven for the sake of one only?" "What do you yourself think?" said Hiacoomes; "for my part, I have thrown away all these, and many more, some years ago, and yet I am preserved, as you see, to this day." "You speak true," said the chief, "and therefore I will throw away all my gods too, and serve that one God with you." Hiacoomes proceeded more fully to instruct him, and the rest of the company with him; and the chief having promised to worship the true God, and serve Him only, was as good as his word, for he carried himself as a true servant of God, all the days of his life after.—Whitcross.

14—16. (14) R. V., "Every man is become brutish and is without knowledge; every goldsmith is put to shame by his graven image." It is the object of his creation, how can it deliver him? (15) work of errors, or deluded notions. (16) portion of Jacob, a term for Jehovah. rod . . inheritance, "an expression taken from the first division of the land of Canaan, when the inheritance of each tribe and family was meted out with a line or a rod."—Lowth.

Idol-worship debasing.—The gods of Greece and Rome had at least human features, and were modelled after the likeness of men; but among the millions of the gods of India affecting the character of their worshipers, there is not one which represents a virtue, not one which is not a monster of iniquity. Brahma is acknowledged by the Hindoos themselves as too bad to be worshiped. Their God, Shiva, is distinguished for his revenge and malignity; Krishna bears a character of a notorious licentious profligate; Juggernaut is represented by an old idol without legs and arms, because the legs and arms of the god were cut off by a sentence of the gods for his incurable iniquity. What but impurity and cruelty can be the result of a religion which has such patterns in its gods?—Dict. of Illus.

17, 18. This passage (17—22) connects itself immediately with ch. ix., where the invasion of Judah and the dispersion of its inhabitants have been foretold. Here, after describing dramatically the departure of the latter into exile, the prophet reports a distinct revelation of the same fact. The Jewish people is then introduced, lamenting her sad fate, but expressing resignation.—Pul. Com. (17) thy wares, i. e. the few necessary things that time permits you to collect ere you are hurried into captivity. O inhabitant, etc., R. V., "O thou that abidest in the siege," i. e. in a besieged city. (18) sling out, indicating the suddenness and force of the desolation impending. at this once, R. V., "at this time." may find, or feel intensely.

Shun delays.—

Shun delays, they breed remorse;
Take thy time while time is lent thee:
Creeping snails have weakest force;
Fly their fault, lest thou repent thee.
Good is best when sooner wrought,
Ling'ring labors come to naught.

Hoist up sail while gale doth last,— Tide and wind stay no man's pleasure!
Seek not time when time is past—
Sober speed is wisdom's leisure;
After-wits are dearly bought:
Let thy fore-wit guide thy thought.

Time wears all his locks before—
Take thou hold upon his forehead:
When he flees, he turns no more,
And behind his scalp is naked.
Works adjourn'd have many stays;
Long demurs breed new delays.

—Southwell.

19—22. (19) Woe is me, this is the cry of the Prophet, representing the stricken nation. a grief, R. V., "my grief"—my own burden. (20) tabernacle, poetical for dwellings. none to stretch, i. e. the men are all swept away. (21) pastors, the temporal rulers. (22) R. V., "the voice of a rumour, behold it cometh, and a great commotion," etc.^b dragons, R. V., "jackals."

Jeremiah has been likened to several characters in profane history—to Cassandra, the Trojan prophetess, whose fate it was never to be believed, though prophesying nothing but the truth; to Phocion, the rival of Demosthenes in the last generation of Athenian greatness, who maintained the unpopular but sound doctrine that, if Athens were to escape worse evils, she must submit peaceably to the growing power of Macedon; to Dante, whose native state, Florence, was in relation to France and the Empire as Palestine was to Egypt and Babylon, while the poet like the prophet could only protest without effect against the thickening ills.—Camb. Bib. Jeremiah, in the age in which he lived, might be compared to a Puritan living in the age of the Stuarts, or a Huguenot living in the age of the Medici, or a Savonarola living in the age of Pope Alexander VI.

23—25. (23) way . . himself, Pr. xvi. 1, xx. 24. Jeremiah's prayer in prospect of the national calamity. to direct his steps, "to ensure success. The same word occurs Ps. xxxvii. 23 ("The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord"), and its sense there seems to determine that in which it occurs here. All prosperity, as well as the converse, comes from God."—Camb. Bib. (24) with judgment, better, in measure; ch.

^a Is. xxii. 18.

"Ignorance seldom vaults into knowledge, but passes into it through an intermediate state of obscurity, even as night into day through twilight." — Coleridge.

"To me to live is Christ." All other kinds of life will at last be found to have been only a living death.

"There is as much difference between the sufferings of the saints and those of the ungodly as between the bandages where-with the tender surgeon binds his patients and the cords with which an executioner pinions a condemned malefactor."—Arrow-smith.

^b Je. vi. 22, ix. 11.

"God is not a crutch coming in to help your lameness, unnecessary to you if you had all your strength. He is the breath in your lungs. The stronger you are, the more thoroughly you are yourself, the more you need of it, the more you need Him." — Phillips Brooks.

a "Since I (my nation) must be corrected, I do not deprecate all chastisement, but pray only for moderation in it, and that the full tide of Thy fury may be poured out on the heathen invaders for their cruelty towards Thy people."—Fausset.

"We must follow, not force Providence."—Shakespeare.

"Put thou thy trust in God, In duty's path go on; Fix on His Word thy steadfast eye, So shall thy work be done."—Luther.

b "What they were specially to communicate was of that portion of the book of the law, which had been found in the temple in Josiah's time."—Henderson.

"The Prophet puts the people in mind of the renewal of the covenant lately made in the time of Josiah."—Lightfoot.

"What was Christ doing in the carpenter's shop? Practising. Though perfect, we read that he learned obedience, and grew in wisdom and in favor with God."—Drummond.

a "2 Ki. xxiii. 15, 20. Prob. Jeremiah accompanied Josiah in his progress through the land, everywhere reading from the newly found book."—Nägelsbach.

b "They made some steps towards reformation in the time of Josiah, but now they have agreed or con-xlvi. 28. bring . . nothing, marg. diminish me. (25) Pour, etc., Ps. lxxix. 6, 7.^a

The way of man not in himself (vs. 23).—I. Let us consider the conviction here expressed in its sources: "I know," says he. 1. The nature of our condition; 2. The limitation of our powers; 3. History; 4. Experience; 5. Scripture. II. Consider its uses. 1. It should produce gratitude; 2. Submission; 3. Check presumption; 4. Induce one to repair to God in earnest prayer. III. Let us glance at the encouragements of this conviction. God is—I. Able; 2. Willing; 3. Engaged to direct our steps.—W. Fay.

Verse 25.—A person of great quality was pleased to lodge a night in my house. I durst not invite him to my family prayer; and therefore, for that time, omitted it; thereby making a breach in a good custom, and giving Satan advantage to assault it. Yea, the loosening of such a link might have endangered the scattering of the chain. Bold bashfulness, which durst offend God whilst it did fear man. Hereafter, whosoever cometh within the doors shall be requested to come within the discipline of my house; if accepting my homely diet, he will not refuse my home devotion; and sitting by my table, will be entreated to kneel down by it.—T. Fuller.

CHAPTER THE ELEVENTH.

Chaps. xi., xii. form a connected prophecy, either as having been uttered at one definite time in the prophet's life, or as embodying the substance of his teaching during a particular epoch of his ministry.—Camb. Bib. 1—5. (2) covenant, see 2 Ki. xxiii. 3.^b This allusion to the law book discovered in Josiah's 18th year gives the date of the section, about that time.—Driver. (3) Cursed, etc., De. xxvii. 26; Ga. iii. 10. (4) Obey, etc., Le. xxvi. 3, 12. (5) oath, De. vii. 12, 13.

God, our rest. The soul whose God the Lord is, reposes on him. The storms of life may rage, its tempests beat, but "firm and unmoved are they who rest their souls on God." Everything may appear to be slipping away from a man, and he may seem to be like one gliding down a steep, smooth slope, ever faster and faster to the precipice over which he will be hurled into destruction, unable to grasp any friendly rock or branch, or to find foothold anywhere—and men's circumstances are like that sometimes; but they to whom this word, "I will be your God," is fulfilled, do find foothold in God and can stay themselves upon him. Hence, when heart and flesh fail, God is the Strength of their heart and their Portion forevermore.—Pul. Com. Result of disobedience.—Travelers along the Rhine or over the mountains of Switzerland know to their cost how often the most glorious scenery the world contains is completely hidden from their view by the uprising of some wretched mist, wrapping in cold, dark, impenetrable fog all that upon which their eyes would have so delightedly rested. They want to gaze upon all that loveliness; they have come for that very purpose; but they cannot for those thick clouds. And oh, what a beautiful vision is the face of God! How good it is to gaze upon Him, and to behold the shining of His countenance! And this we should do were it not for those mists with which disobedience to God's will ever blots out all that otherwise we should so delightedly see.—Pul. Com.

6—10. (6) Proclaim, "he was to take an itinerating mission in Judah to set forth the principles of Deuteronomy and exhort men to live accordingly."—Driver. (7) earnestly protested . . rising early, the sign of earnestness of purpose. (8) imagination, R. V., "stubbornness." will bring, better, have brought: a fact constantly illustrated in their history that disobedience always brought calamity. (9, 10) a conspiracy,^b possibly this may mean that there were actual measures taken in secret against Josiah on account of his reforms. At any rate the expression denotes a considerable amount of agreement in the pursuance of idolatry, and in all probability further points to a secrecy of combination.—Camb. B.

11—14. (11) will bring, better, am about to bring. not hearken, bec. the time for judgment has fully come." (12) cry . . gods, ch. ii. 28; De. xxxii. 37, 38. (13) shameful thing, Heb. bôsheth, shame; the name of contempt for Baal. "The verse has been taken to imply that altars, such as are here mentioned, were actually set up in most if not all of the streets of Jerusalem, and hence it has been said that this portion of the prophecy cannot be as early as the reign of Josiah. The verse however need mean no more than that a strong though secret opposition existed to the reforming work of that king and that the worship of Baal was practised, though not openly, in all parts of the country and city.—Camb. Bib. (14) pray not, ch. vii. 16."

Breaking covenant with Jehovah meant making a covenant with other gods; it was impossible to do the one thing without the other. And that is as true now, under totally different conditions, as it was in the land of Judah, twenty-four centuries ago. If you have broken faith with God in Christ, it is because you have entered into an agreement with another; it is because you have foolishly taken the tempter at his word, and accepted his conditions, and surrendered to his proposals, and preferred his promises to the promises of God. It is because, against all reason, against conscience, against the Holy Spirit, against the witness of God's Word, against the witness of His Saints and Confessors in all ages, you have believed that a Being less than the Eternal God could ensure your weal and make you happy. And now your heart is no longer at unity in itself, and your allegiance is no longer single and undivided.—Exp. Bib.

15—17. (15) my beloved, i. e. Judah. lewdness, better "hypocrisy." holy flesh, sacrifices, wh. were unacceptable bec. of their immorality and hypocrisy. The Sept. renders the whole vs., "How has my beloved wrought abomination in my house? Shall vows and holy flesh remove from thee thy wickedness, or by these shalt thou escape?" i. e. Shall promises or sacrifices profit thee? (16) green olive, comp. Ps. lli. 8. kindled, etc., fig. of the desolation wrought by the Chaldean army. (17) planted thee, and so hath all rights in thee. against themselves, the sinner's sin is always to his own hurt.

Sin within us.—The unforgiven sins are not away in keeping somewhere, to be let loose upon us when we die. They are here within us now. Today brings the resurrection of their past—tomorrow of today. And the powers of sin, to the exact strength that we have developed them, nearing their dreadful culmination with every breath we draw, are here, within us, now. The souls of some men are already honeycombed through and through with eternal consequences of neglect, so that taking the natural and rational view of their case just now, it is simply inconceivable that there is any escape just now. What a fearful thing it is to fall into the hands of the living God! A fearful thing even if, as the philosopher tells us, "The hands of the living God are the laws of nature."—Drummond.

18—20. (18) given me knowledge, i. e. of the evil designs that were being plotted against the Prophet himself.^a (19) like a lamb, R. V., "a gentle lamb that is led to the slaughter." tree . . fruit, fig. for Jeremiah and his prophecies. (20) triest the reins, etc., 1 Sa. xvi. 7, etc. thy vengeance, in sense of righteous judgment.

Murderers in ambush.—Between the priesthood and the prophets there had hitherto been more or less of a conflict; but now that conflict was exchanged for a fatal union. "A wonderful and horrible thing was committed in the land: the prophets prophesied falsely, and the priests bore rule by their means;" and he (Jeremiah) who by each of his callings [Stanley regards Jeremiah as having been a priest before he was called to become a prophet] was naturally led to sympathise with both, was the doomed antagonist of both—victim of one of the strongest passions, the hatred of priests against a priest who attacks his own order,—the hatred of prophets against a prophet who ventures to have a voice and a will of his own. His own village of Anathoth, occupied by members of the sacred tribe, was for him a nest of conspirators against his life. Of spired together to return back to their former idolatries." — Lowth.

^a Ps. xviii. 41; Pr. i. 28; Is. i. 15; Mi. iii. 4.

"The erection of altars to Baal in every street of Jerusalem, betokens a public establishment of idolatry, such as actually took place in the reign of Manasseh." — Spk. Com.

^b Je. xiv. 11, 12.

"The carnal mind, the mind which will not correspond with God, — this is not moral only, but spiritual death. And sin, that which separates from God, which disobeys God, which can not in that state correspond with God,—this is hell." — Drummond.

^c Ro. xi. 17.

"He that offers in sacrifice a multitude of bulls and of goats, and imagines by this to conciliate the favor of God, is grossly mistaken, and has no solid understanding; for he that would sacrifice with success ought to be chaste and charitable. God, who is near thee, perpetually beholds thy actions." — From The Greek.

^d "Jeremiah here digresses from his main subject, in order to take special notice of the attempt wh. had been plotted upon his life by his own townsmen. It would appear that he had not entertained the slightest suspicion of their intention, and that he must have remained ignorant of it, if it had not been immediately revealed to him by the Omniscient Searcher of hearts." — Henderson.

a "This was the usage the Prophets commonly met with from those who became their enemies, because they told them those truths they had no mind to hear." — Lowth.

b Fr. Ezr. ii. 23, Ne. vii. 27, it appears that 128 men of Anathoth returned from exile.

"I venerate the man whose heart is warm, Whose hands are pure, whose doctrines and whose life, Coincident, exhibit lucid proof That he is honest in the sacred cause." — Cowper.

c "However difficult Jeremiah found it to reconcile the apparent discrepancies of the Div. government, he still held fast his conviction of the rectitude of the character of Jehovah." — Henderson.

d Job xxi. 7-17; Ps. xxxvii. 1-35, lxxiii. 8, 5, 7, xcii. 7; Hab. i. 13.

e Ps. vii. 9.

a "If he could not bear with the ill-usage of his acquaintance and neighbors at Anathoth, how would he be able to undergo the hardships he must expect to meet with from the great men at Jerusalem, who would unanimously set themselves against him?" — Lowth.

him first in the Sacred history was the saying literally fulfilled, "A prophet hath no honor in his own birthplace." — Stanley.

21-23. (21) Prophesy not, trying thus to frighten God's Prophet with their threats." (22) young men, "those of the legal age for military service." famine, in the time of the siege. (23) no remnant, this need not include the whole of Anathoth, but may refer only to the families of the actual conspirators against Jeremiah's life." even the year, "in the year." "The time referred to is that of the siege and capture of Jerusalem. Anathoth, as lying in the neighborhood of the besieging armies, would be exposed to the horrors of war even to a greater extent than the capital city." — Camb. Bib.

Spiritual atavism; or, the sins of the fathers. There are punishments and consequences of ancestral sin which reach even to descendants of remote generations. In modern times the laws of heredity have been scientifically investigated, and startling results brought to light. Tendency can be traced from parent to child in gradually deepening lines and more confirmed manifestations. Spirit as well as body acknowledges this law, and, whether in health or disease, its operation is now placed beyond all dispute. But another law or modification of this law is perceived working alongside of it, namely, the law of atavism, in which not the general tendency towards improvement or degeneration is observed, but an apparently arbitrary and capricious recurrence of ancestral peculiarities that had long disappeared from the race. Of this nature seems to have been the present sin of Israel. It was not in the line of continuous succession, but a recurrent phase after intervals of normal and religious life. Thus it showed that the power of evil had only been "scotched," not killed; and that it was ready on the slightest provocation to assert itself in the rank-est forms. How much that is mysterious in the conduct of individuals can be traced to the influence of such a principle! The two selves of every man represent influences that have been at work in his progenitors from remotest time. — Pul. Com.

CHAPTER THE TWELFTH.

1-4. (1) Righteous art thou, the general acknowledgment of God's justice and holiness. yet, etc., R. V., "yet would I reason the cause with thee" comp. Job ix. 2: xxi; xxiv. Wherefore . . prosper? the great question of the times of the later monarchy.^a happy, R. V., "at ease." (2) mouth, i. e. in their professions. reins, regarded as the seat of the affections." (3) tried mine heart, so as to prove my sincerity. pull . . out, Heb. tear them out. (4) see . . end, his predictions are delusions; say the ungodly, we shall live longer than he.

Prosperity of the wicked. Satan with ease put fallacies upon us by his golden baits, and then he leads us and leaves us in a fool's paradise. The world hath by the glistening of her pomp and preferment slain millions; as the serpent Scytale, which, when she cannot overtake the fleeting passengers, doth with her beautiful colors astonish and amaze them, so that they have no power to pass away till she have stung them to death. Adversity hath slain her thousands, but prosperity her ten thousand. — Brooks.

5, 6. God replies to Jeremiah in these verses. He intimates to him by means of two proverbial expressions that he must brace himself to endure even worse things than any that he has as yet been called upon to face. The attacks of the men of Anathoth may have galled him, but the treachery set on foot against him includes men of his own family, and so is yet more wounding and bitter than he supposes. He must not therefore think of being impatient at anything that he may hitherto have been called upon to undergo, but feel that he has need of all his resolution to meet the trouble which shall presently be disclosed. — Camb. B. (5) run, etc., this is a proverbial saying, and intimates that further and higher indignities awaited the Prophet in Jerusalem.^a land of peace, R. V., "and though in a land of peace thou art secure, yet how wilt thou do in the pride of Jordan?" "The pride of Jordan means the thickets on its banks, which were notorious as the haunts of lions (ch. xlix. 19; l. 44; Zech. xi. 3). Lions' bones have been found by Dr. Roth in the gravel of the Jordan."—Pul. Com. (6) brethren, ch. ix. 4. a multitude, R. V., "cried aloud."

Gradations of trial (vs. 5).—Apply the text.—1. To those who are discouraged in the service of God by trifling difficulties; 2. To those who have succumbed to feeble temptations; 3. To such as have desponded at the presence of slight afflictions; 4. To the large class who have failed to gain spiritual profit under favorable providences.

Verse 5.—The strength which is barely sufficient for the cares and toils of a quiet home life will fail utterly if a man has to contend with lions in the wild thickets of the lonely Jordan valley. If health breaks down before the soft breezes of summer, how will it stand before the frost and fog of winter? If the young man falls into vicious habits while under the protection of his father's home, what will become of him when he goes out into the world? If the prospect of sickness and earthly sorrow fill one with hopeless distress, how will he pass through the valley of the shadow of death? how will he endure death itself? These questions should not make us despondent, but should drive us through self-diffidence to seek the help of God. Failure in small things will be good for us if it teaches us a wholesome lesson on our own weakness, and so inclines us to turn to a higher source of safety. Then we shall find that God's strength is made perfect in our weakness (2 Cor. xii. 9).—Pul. Com.

7—9. (7) mine house, i. e. the nation, not simply the temple.—Camb. Bib. Hos. viii. 1; Heb. iii. 6; 1 Tim. iii. 15. dearly beloved, ch. xi. 15. hand, Heb. the palm, here especially with its power to squeeze and crush. (8) as a lion, a savage beast of prey, roaring against Me.^b hated it, treated it as if I hated it. comp. Mal. i. 3. (9) speckled bird, one differing in plumage from the others, which the other birds peck to death. come to, etc., R. V., "bring them to devour."

The speckled bird.—A great preacher relates the following incident.—He says, "I had during my early ministry to preach one evening at a neighboring village, to which I had to walk. After reading and meditating all day, I could not meet with the right text. Do what I would, no response came from the sacred oracle, no light flashed from the Urim and Thummim. I prayed, I meditated, I turned from one verse to another; but the mind would not take hold, or I was, as John Bunyan would say, 'much tumbled up and down in my thoughts.' Just then I walked to the window and looked out. On the other side of the narrow street in which I lived I saw a poor, solitary canary bird upon the slates, surrounded by a crowd of sparrows, who were all pecking at it as if they would tear it to pieces. At that moment the verse came into my mind, 'Mine heritage is unto me as a speckled bird; the birds round about are against her.' I walked off with the greatest possible composure, considered the passage during my long and lonely walk, and preached upon the peculiar people and the persecutions of their enemies, with freedom and ease to myself, and I believe with comfort to my rustic audience. The text was sent to me, and if the ravens did not bring it, certainly the sparrows did."

10—13. (10) pastors, as previously, rulers; here the reference is to the Chaldean generals. trodden . . . foot, comp. Is. v. 1, doing ruinous injury to the young shoots. pleasant portion, comp. ch. xi. 16. (11) it mourneth, waileth in its utter desolation; the very land seeming to cry for inhabitants. (12) no flesh, etc., none of this sinful nation shall enjoy prosperity. (13) shall reap, R. V., "have reaped," etc., evidently a proverb, meaning, as the words that follow it shew. They have used their best endeavors to obtain pleasure, the object of their desire, and have been rewarded with the very opposite of that harvest which they sought.—Camb. Bib. to pain, the extreme labor of their idol service. they . . . ashamed, R. V., "ye shall be ashamed of your fruits."

Note on vs. 10.—Besides successive invasions by foreign nations, and the systematic spoliation exercised by a despotic government, other causes have conspired to perpetuate the desolation of Judæa, and to ren-

"Great occasions do not make heroes or cowards; they simply unveil them to the eyes of men. Silently and imperceptibly, as we wake or sleep, we grow and wax strong, we grow and wax weak; and at last some crisis shows us what we have become."—Canon Westcott.

^b "My people have blasphemed Me and My laws, just like a wild beast, that opens its mouth against every one that withstands it."—Lowth.

"There is a danger in the midst of ordinary human relations that Jehovah shall be considered simply as an addition to our obligations, instead of being the supreme and all-modifying influence of our life. In proportion to the severity of the experience will be the consolations to be received."—Pul. Com.

"Thorns, of course, could not be reaped unless thorns were planted, but no one would deliberately plant thorns. But the heart of man, rich, deep, inexhaustible ground as it is, has come under a curse of which Gen. iii. 18 is but a shadowy suggestion. Men shrink from the toil and suffering needful to uproot the false and the injurious, and still more difficult do they find the watchfulness and determination which would prevent thorns from getting hold at all; and yet it is perfectly certain that thorns, allowed to continue, will in time destroy anything like abiding fruit from the good seed."

—Pul. Com.

"The heavier the the cannon, with the more difficulty are they drawn; but when arrived, they recompense the slowness of their march by the fierceness of their battery. The longer the stone is in falling, the more it will bruise and grind to powder. There is a great treasure of wrath laid laid up by the abuse of patience."—Char-nock.

* "During the thirteen years that the Bab. besieged Tyre, Nebuchadnezzar, after subduing Cæla-Syria, brought Ammon, Moab, etc., and finally Egypt, into subjection."—Fausset.

† "The embracing of the true religion is represented as consisting in an avowal, with all the solemnity of an oath, that Jehovah alone was God."—Henderson.

der abortive the substance that is in it. Among these has chiefly to be numbered its being literally trodden under foot by many "pastors." Volney devotes a chapter, fifty pages in length, to a description, as he entitles it, "Of the Pastoral, or Wandering Tribes of Syria," chiefly of the Bedouin Arabs, by whom especially Judæa is incessantly traversed. "The pachalics of Aleppo and Damascus may be computed to contain about thirty thousand wandering Turkmen (Turcomans). All their property consists in cattle." In the same pachalics, the number of the Kurds "exceed twenty thousand tents and huts," or an equal number of armed men. "The Kurds are almost everywhere looked upon as robbers. Like the Turkmen, these Kurds are pastors and wanderers. A third wandering people in Syria are the Bedouin Arabs." "It often happens that even individuals turn robbers, in order to withdraw themselves from the laws, or from tyranny, unite and form a little camp, which maintain themselves by arms, and, increasing, become new hordes and new tribes. It is evident that agriculture must be very precarious in such a country, and that, under a government like that of the Turks, it is safer to lead a wandering life than to choose a settled habitation, and rely for subsistence on agriculture." "The Turkmen, the Kurds, and the Bedouins, have no fixed habitations, but keep perpetually wandering with their tents and herds, in limited districts, of which they look upon themselves as the proprietors. The Arabs spread over the whole frontier of Syria, and even the plains of Palestine." Thus, contrary to their natural inclination, the peasants are often forced to abandon a settled life, and pastoral tribes in great numbers, and without fixed habitations, divide the country, as it were, by mutual consent, and apportion it in limited districts among themselves by an assumed right of property, and the Arabs, subdivided also into different tribes, spread over the plains of Palestine, "wandering perpetually," as if on very purpose to tread it down. What could be more unlikely or unnatural in such a land! yet what more strikingly and strictly true! or how else could the effect of the vision have been seen! "Many pastors have destroyed my vineyard; they have trodden my portion under foot."—Keith.

14—17. (14) evil neighbours, the nations in the vicinity of Judah, who doubtless took evil advantage of the times of her weakness and peril.^a Syrians, Edomites, Moabites, Ammonites, and Philistines. pluck . . Judah, by its removal into captivity. (15) return, etc., or I will again have compassion. These neighbors shared, in measure, with Judah in the restoration. (16) ways . . people, who then shall have wholly given up their idolatry. The Lord, or Jehovah,^b as they taught, R. V., "even as they taught." (17) not obey, Is. lx. 12.

Sinful companions to be abandoned by the Christian.—Sometimes great sinners must abandon their companions. For frequently there are sins which in their very nature are so wrapped up in companionship that no man can be safe who does not break with companions as well as with courses. It is not as a general rule. I do not say that a young man, violating no canons of morality, dwelling in a virtuous home, and only with his companions worldly and sinful by the higher sentiments misappropriated, ought, when he becomes a Christian, to abandon those companions. On the contrary, he ought to be a better companion than he ever was before. But if you have been in lust's companionship, if you have been in the fiery strifes and toils of the passions, then the fire burning in your companions will not easily be slaked in you. There must be something more than a simple and barren attempt to turn away from sin. You must break with your companions.—C. H. Spurgeon.

CHAPTER THE THIRTEENTH.

We may subdivide this chapter as follows: (i) a symbolical action, or acted parable, with its moral and application (vss. 1-11); (ii) a parabolic saying and its interpretation, which leads up to a pathetic appeal for penitence (vss. 12-17); (iii) a message to the sovereigns (vss. 18, 19); and

(iv) a closing apostrophe to Jerusalem—the gay and guilty capital, so soon to be made desolate for her abounding sins (vss. 20-27).—Exp. Bib. 1-5. (1) unto me, in vision. Some think this symbolical act was literally done by Jeremiah.^a put . . water, i. e. to wash it. Let it be in its dirty state,^a representing the “deep-grained pollution of the people.” (4) Euphrates, Heb. Phrath: corrupted form of name of a place near Anathoth, still known by the name Farah. It was not by the river Euphrates but in this rocky retreat, near Michmash, that Jeremiah hid the girdle.—Cheyne. hole, or cleft. Typical of the Jewish captivity.

Note on vs. 4.—The girdle of the Orientals is sometimes made of silver or gold, or embroidered silk, or highly dyed muslin. Its uses are, to keep the lower garments fast to the loins, to strengthen the body, and to command respect. Chiefs have numerous folds of muslin round that part, and they march along with great pomp, thus enlarged in their size. That, therefore, which was of so much use, and which indicated the dignity of the wearer, was to be marred, typifying the degradation of the Jews in their approaching captivity. The Hindoos have a custom of burying certain articles by the side of a tank or river, in order to inflict or prefigure evil in reference to certain obnoxious individuals who are thus placed under the ban. Thus eggs, human hair, thread, a ball of saffron, or a little of the earth on which the devoted person has had his feet, are buried in the situations alluded to.—Roberts.

6-11. (6) after many days, typical of the 70 yrs. of captivity. (7) marred, soiled, polluted as the people would become. (9) the pride, i. e. the temporal grandeur. The Jews returned fr. Bab. as a very feeble folk. (10) evil people, as being self-willed. The expression limits the application of this symbol. imagination, R. V., “stubbornness,” chap. iii. 17. (11) cleave unto me,^b the girdle is the closest cleaving part of a man's dress.

Contempt of God's mercies (vs. 11).—I. The honor which God has designed for His people; the primary use of the girdle is to bind up the garments around the loins, but a girdle is also of use for ornament. II. The way in which this honor is contemned by the Jews. What can be a more just description of ourselves? Address—1. In the way of appeal; 2. In a way of encouragement.—C. Simeon.

Reasons for humility.—Remember what thou wert before thy birth—nothing; what thou wert for many years after—weakness; what in all thy life—a great sinner; what in all thy excellencies—a mere debtor to God, to thy parents, to the earth, and to all creatures. Upon these or the like meditations, if we dwell, we shall see nothing more reasonable than to be humble, and nothing more foolish than to be proud.—Bp. Taylor.

12-14. (12) bottle . . wine, “under this figure is described the intoxication through which the people shall be rendered helpless to resist the foreign foe, while they quarrel one with another. It was no doubt in part owing to factious strife as well as to national idolatry that the overthrow came. The figure of filling a person with wine in the sense of bringing upon him Divine punishment for perverseness and headstrong continuance in sin is found also chap. xxv. 15; Ps. lx. 3; Is. li. 17, while for Israel under the figure of a bottle or jar compare chap. xviii. 1-6.—Camb. Bib. certainly know, “we understand that,” they say: failing utterly to perceive his meaning. (14) dash them, as drunken men tumble one against another.”

The drunkard's thralldom.—The writer of the pamphlet entitled “The Confessions of a Drunkard,” says, “Of my condition there is no hope that I should ever change; the waters have gone over me; but out of the black depths, could I be heard, I would cry aloud to all those who have set a foot in that perilous flood. Could the youth to whom the flavor of his first wine is as delicious as the opening scenes of life, or the entering upon some newly-discovered paradise, look into my desolation, and be made to understand what a dreary thing it is when a man shall feel himself going down a precipice with open eyes and a passive will,—to see his destruction, and have no power to stop it, and yet to ^a “The world the Proph. moved in was not the sensible, but the spiritual world. Inward acts were, however, when it was possible and proper, materialized by outward performance, but not always and necessarily so.” —Fausset.

^a “Jeremiah was to wear it constantly, though full of the effects of perspiration, and never to wash it.” —Maurer.

^a “To that condition the Jews had been reduced by the corrupting idolatries of the heathen. They had disqualified themselves for acting as witnesses for Jehovah as the only true God, and like a cast-away girdle, they were to be humbled and rejected.” —Henderson.

^b Ex. xix. 5, 6; De. iv. 7; Ps. cxxxv. 4.

^c “As wine intoxicates so God's wrath and judgments shall reduce them to that state of helpless distraction that they shall rush on their own ruin.” —Fausset. Eze. v. 10; Mat. x. 21.

“Those boughs and branches of trees which are most richly laden with fruit bend downwards and hang low-est.” —Gill.

“Lowliness is the base of every virtue:

And he who goes the lowest builds the safest.

May God keep all his pity for the proud!”

—Bailey.

^a "The metaphor is taken from the dangers to which travelers are exposed who, in a dark and stormy night, cross mountain regions, where they are liable at every step to stumble against some projecting angle of a rock, and so be precipitated into the abyss below."—Henderson.

^e 2 Ki. xxiv. 8—15.

"The Heb. kings generally married women who were not of royal race, but were subjects; they had also many wives. Hence the position of a Queen Consort was an inferior one, but that of a Queen Mother was one of considerable influence."—Wordsworth.

^a "When Ahaz made himself tributary to the king of Assyria, he taught the Assyrs. how they might become masters and conquerors over his own country, whenever they pleased."

—Lowth.

"When at first from virtue's path we stray, How shrinks the feeble heart with sad dismay! More bold at length, by powerful habit led, Careless and scared the dreary wild we tread; Behold the gaping gulf of sin with scorn, And plunging deep to endless death are borne."

—J. Scott.

feel it all the way emanating from himself; to perceive all goodness emptied out of him, and yet not able to forget a time when it was otherwise; to bear about the piteous spectacle of his own ruin;—could he see my fevered eye, feverish with the last night's drinking, and feverishly looking forward for this night's repetition of the folly; could he feel the body of death out of which I cry hourly, with feebleness and feebleness outcry, to be delivered, it were enough to make him dash the sparkling beverage to the earth in all the pride of its mantling temptation."

15—18. (15) not proud, to reject the teaching, though given in humiliating forms. (16) Give glory, Hebrew idiom for "confess your sins." Jos. vii. 19. darkness, Is. viii. 22; ix. 2. dark mountains, where traveling is perilous.^a gross darkness, De xxviii. 29. (17) weep in secret, indicating that he would, in sorrow, retire from pleading any longer with them. (18) "From this verse it is generally inferred that this prophecy belongs to the reign of Jehoiachin whose mother is also mentioned in xxii. 26; xxix. 3 and probably exercised unusual influence."—Driver. king, Jehoiachin, or Jeconiah. queen, R. V., "queen-mother."^b Principalities, R. V., head-tires."

Pride (vs. 15).—I. Different kinds of pride. 1. Race pride—pride in ancestors; 2. Place pride—pride in outward appearance; 3. Place pride—pride in social position; 4. Grace pride—pride in godliness. II. The warning. Be not proud.—I. Because we have nothing to be proud of; 2. Because it is abhorrent to God; 3. Because it is unlike Christ; 4. Because it is ruinous. Apply:—(1) Some are very proud; (2) Some occasionally; (3) Some are bravely struggling against pride.—J. Bolton.

Note on vs. 18.—The margin has instead of "principalities," "head tires." This again alludes to the threatened judgments which were to befall the people and their rulers. Of a proud man who treats another with contempt it is said, "Ah! his turban will soon fall." "Yes, imperious upstart! thy head-dress will soon come down." Jehoiakim and his queen-mother were to have their "head tires" brought down; they were to be humbled on account of their sins.—Roberts.

Humility.—

On bended knees, replete with godly grief,
See where the mourner kneels to seek relief,
No "God I thank Thee!" freezes on his tongue
For works of merit that to him belong;
Deep in his soul conviction's ploughshare rings,
And to the surface his corruption brings;
He loathes himself, in lowest dust he lies,
And, all-abased, "Unclean, unclean!" he cries.
From his full heart pours forth the gushing plea,
"God of the lost, be merciful to me!"
The light of life descends in heavenly rays,
And angels shout and sing, "Behold, he prays!"

—W. Holmes.

19—22. (19) cities . . south, i. e. of the Negeb, or southern district of Judah. shut up, because ruins block all entrances and the land is deserted of any to clear the way. (20) flock, fig. for the cities grouped round Jerusalem. They are suddenly and wholly swept away by the enemy. (21) he shall punish, etc., R. V., "he shall set thy friends over thee as head, seeing thou thyself hast instructed them against thee;" i. e. the Egyptians and Babylonians.^a (22) Wherefore, etc., ch. v. xvi. 10. made bare, R. V., "suffer violence," from tramping into captivity over the rough roads.

God's retributive justice (vs. 21).—I. Let us endeavor to establish the doctrine that retributive justice belongs to God. II. This will lead us to assail your hope of impunity from it. 1. The first foundation of the sinner's hope is derivable from God's delay; 2. Prosperity; 3. The mercy of God. III. We proceed to answer the question. 1. Wilt thou say, I do not deserve the condemnation? 2. Or, I was not warned? 3. Or, There was no way of escape?—W. Jay.

23, 24. (23) Ethiopian, the African negro, whose skin is nearly black.^a accustomed, practised, so that evil has become the settled habit. (24) stubble, left from the threshing. wind . . wilderness, the east wind which blew strong from the Arabian desert.

The alarming power of sin (vs. 23).—The long-continued impenitence of men augments the difficulties in the way of their salvation. I. The habits of men are strengthened and confirmed by indulgence. II. The influence of this world, as men advance in life, usually becomes more perplexing, and a greater hindrance to their conversion. III. As years increase, men become less interested in the subject of religion, and more obdurate and averse to any alteration in their moral character. IV. The thought of multiplied and long-continued transgression is very apt to discourage all attempts at repentance. V. There is awful reason to apprehend that God will leave men of this description to perish in their sins. Apply—(1) To the aged; (2) Those in middle life; (3) To the young.—G. Spring.

Washing the Ethiopian.—Then the shepherds led the pilgrims to a place where they saw one Fool, and one Want-wit washing an Ethiopian, with an intention to make him white; but the more they washed him the blacker he was. Then they asked the shepherds what this should mean. So they told them saying, "Thus it is with the vile person: all means used to get such an one a good name, shall in conclusion, tend but to make him more abominable. Thus it was with the Pharisees, and so shall it be with all hypocrites."—Bunyan.

The Christian sects in Syria appear to consider a true case of Druze conversion to Christianity as out of the question. "The wolf's whelps," they say, "are not tamed." The conversion of many sinners appears equally impossible, and yet how many such triumphs of grace are recorded as that which John Newton described in himself: "I was a wild beast on the coast of Africa once, but the Lord Jesus caught me, and tamed me, and now people come to see me as they would go to look at the lions in the tower."—Beecher.

Power of early habits.—In North America a tribe of Indians attacked a white settlement and murdered the few inhabitants. A woman of the tribe, however, carried away a very young infant and reared it as her own. The child grew up with the Indian children, different in complexion, but like them in everything else. To scalp the greatest possible number of enemies was, in his view, the most glorious and happy thing in the world. While he was still a youth, he was seen by some white traders, and by them conducted back to civilized life. He showed great relish for his new life, and especially a strong desire for knowledge, and a sense of reverence, which took the direction of religion, so that he desired to become a clergyman. He went through his college course with credit, and was ordained. He filled his functions well, and appeared happy and satisfied. After a few years he went to serve in a settlement somewhere near the seat of war which was then going on between Britain and the United States; and before long there was fighting not far off. I am not sure whether he was aware that there were Indians in the field (the British having some tribes of Indians for allies), but he went forth in his usual dress, black coat and neat white shirt and neckcloth. When he returned he was met by a gentleman of his acquaintance, who was immediately struck by an extraordinary change in the expression of his face, and the fire of his eye, and the flush on his cheek; and also by his unusually shy and hurried manner. After asking news of the battle, the gentleman observed, "But you are wounded!—No; not wounded? Why, there is blood upon the bosom of your shirt!" The young man crossed his hands firmly, though hurriedly, upon his breast; and his friend, supposing that he wished to conceal a wound which ought to be looked to, pulled open his shirt, and saw—what made the young man let fall his hands in despair. From between his shirt and his breast the gentleman took out—a bloody scalp! "I could not help it," said the poor victim of early habits, in an agonized voice. He turned and ran, too swiftly to be overtaken; betook himself to the Indians, and never more appeared among the whites."—Miss Martineau.

Pr. xxvii. 22; Is. i. 5; Mat. xix. 24.

"Said Diogenes when he had reproved an ill man to no purpose, 'Æthiopem albio ut casidum redham:' I do but wash a blackamoor. And the like said, Nazianzen concerning Julian the Apostate. It is said that the negroes paint the devil white, as being a color contrary to their own, and which they less well affect."—Trapp.

"Bad habits are very easily formed, but when once formed they they are like the course of a mighty river. Some of the oldest rivers in the world have the same place in the map, and the same windings on the face of the earth which they first cut for themselves; and that way they have continued to follow through the succession of generations."—J. A. Wallace.

"If it were possible for those who have been for ages in hell to return to the earth (and not to be regenerated), I firmly believe that, notwithstanding all they have suffered for sin, they would still love it, and return to the practice of it."—John Ryland.

25—27. (25) of thy measures, R. V., "measured unto thee." (27)

^a Comp. Je. ii. 20, 23, 24, iii. 2, 6.

"Ill habits gather by unseen degrees, As brooks make rivers, rivers run to seas."—Dryden.

^b 2 Sa. xv. 30, xix. 4.

^c "These creatures are very sharp-sighted; and travelers in the desert frequently avail themselves of their appearance, knowing that there must be herbage and water in the vicinity."—Henderson.

^d "Asses, in defect of water, can continue long by drawing in the air; as Aristotle likewise testified of the goats of Cephalonia, that they drink not for divers days together, but instead thereof gape and suck in the fresh air."—Trapp.

^b 2 Chr. xxxiii. 7, 8.

No man ever yet asked to be, as the days pass by, more and more noble and sweet and pure and heavenly-minded no man ever yet prayed that the evil spirits of hatred and pride and passion and worldliness might be cast out of his soul—without his petition being granted, and granted to the letter.—F. W. Farrar.

The Lord knows how to make stepping-stones for us of our defects even; it is what he lets them be for.—Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney.

abominations, the shameless ceremonies and orgies of heathen and idolatrous religion." when . . . be? marg. "after when yet?" "Thou wilt not be made clean after how long a time yet?"

Power of habit.—"Habitual evils change not on a sudden. But many days must pass, and many sorrows; Conscious remorse and anguish must be felt, To curb desire, to break the stubborn will and work a second nature in the soul, ere virtue can resume the place she lost."—Rowe.

CHAPTER THE FOURTEENTH.

The immediate occasion of this chapter was a drought in which the prophet saw Jehovah's anger.—Driver.

1-6. (1) dearth, R. V., "drought," ch. xvii. 8. (2) gates, put for the people who congregate in the gates. black . . . ground, R. V., they sit in black upon the ground." Comp. viii. 18; Ps. cxxxvii. 1, etc. (3) sent, R. V., "send"—present tense in all these verses. little ones, or common ones, servants. pits, cisterns for preserving the rainfall. covered their heads, the sign of uttermost distress.^b (4) chapt, cracked with the dryness. (5) forsook it, bec. finding herself unable to feed it.^c (6) snuffed,^d R. V., "they pant for air like jackals," oppressed with heat and thirst.

Note on vs. 4.—The description that Sir J. Chardin gives us of the state of these countries, with respect to the cracking of the earth, before the autumnal rains fell, is so lively a comment on Jer. xiv. 4, that I beg leave to introduce it here as a distinct observation. The lands of the East, he says, which the great dryness there causes to crack, are the ground of this figure, which is certainly extremely beautiful; for these dry lands have chinks too deep for a person to see to the bottom of; this may be observed in the Indies more than anywhere, a little before the rains fall, and wherever the lands are rich and hard. The Prophet's speaking of ploughmen shows that he is speaking of the autumnal state of those countries; and if the cracks are so deep from the common dryness of their summers, what must they be when the rains are withheld beyond their usual time, which is the case Jeremiah is referring to? This refers to a drought which was to take place in Judah. At such times, in the East, the ground is "chapt;" large fissures meet your eye in every direction, and the husbandmen are then ashamed and put to confusion: they know not what to do; to plough the land under such circumstances is of no use, and therefore they are obliged to wait till it shall rain. Thus, should the rains be later than usual, the people are daily looking for them, and after one night's fall, the farmers may be seen in every direction working in their fields with the greatest glee, in the full hope of soon casting in the seed.

7-9. (7) do thou, R. V., work thou." for thy name's sake, "either (i) in accordance with the name, under which Thou hast revealed Thyself, The Lord God, merciful and gracious; etc. (Exod. xxxiv. 6); or (ii) for Thy honor, that the heathen may behold Thy might and faithfulness. This latter seems the more usual sense of the phrase, for which see Ps. lxxix. 9, cvi. 8; Is. xlviii. 9; Ezek. xx. 9, 14, 22; and for the thought Josh. vii. 7-9."—Camb. Bib. (8) hope of Israel, whose future rests on the Divine promise and covenant. stranger, R. V., sojourner, transient,^b who concerns himself but little with the affairs of the land. turneth aside, or stretcheth out his tent. (9) astonied, astonished, and so losing presence of mind.

A prayer for all seasons (vs. 9).—I. Here is a prayer for all seasons. I. Times of joy; 2. of adversity; 3. of labor; 4. Of perplexity, etc. II. Here is a prayer for all saints. I. All need to pray thus; 2. All must pray thus; 3. All will pray thus. III. Here is a prayer always answered. I. For it is according to His will; 2. For it honors His name.—Stems and Twigs.

God's withdrawal from his people.—"I know, as night and shadow are good for flowers, and moonlight and dews are better than continual sun, so is Christ's absence of special use, and it hath some nourishing virtue in it, and giveth sap to humility, and putteth an edge on hunger, and furnishes a fair occasion for faith to put forth her hand and lay hold on what she seeth not."—Rutherford.—"God sometimes hides Himself that we may cling the closer to Him and hang the faster upon Him. By withdrawing from His people, He prevents His people withdrawing from Him; and so by an affliction He prevents sin; for God to withdraw from me is but my affliction, but for me to withdraw from God, that is my sin; and, therefore, it were better for me that God should withdraw from me a thousand times than that I should once withdraw from God." (Heb. x. 38, 39).—Brooks.

10—12. God's reply to Jeremiah's prayer. (10) loved to wander, not merely, they do wander, but they love it; and persistently choose the evil way. (11) Pray not, ch. vii. 16. (12) oblation, Heb. minchah, a meat-offering.

True fasting.—

Is this a fast—to keep The larder lean, and clean
From fat of veals and sheep?
Is it to quit the dish
Of flesh, yet still to fill
The platter high with fish?
Is it to fast an hour,
Or ragged go, or show
A downcast look and sour?

No! 'tis a fast to dole
Thy sheaf of wheat, and meat Unto the hungry soul.
It is to fast from strife,
From old debate, and hate—
To circumcise thy life
To show a heart grief-rent;
To starve thy sin—not bin—
And that's to keep thy Lent.

—Herrick.

13—16. (13) Ah, Lord God, ch. i. 6. assured peace, lasting, settled peace. (14) lies, their statements can only deceive. divination, De. xviii. 10. thing of nought, Heb. elil, a diminutive of el, (God), signifies a small idol made of the more precious metals.—Spk. Com. See ch. xxiii. 21. (15) Therefore, etc., ch. v. 12, 13. (16) none to bury, Ps. lxxix. 3. The people should not have let themselves be deceived by the prophets. Therefore the people shall be punished for their sin.

Faithless minister.—

Most guilty, villainous, dishonest man!
Wolf in the clothing of the gentle lamb!
Dark traitor in Messiah's holy camp!
Leper in saintly garb! assassin masked
In virtue's robe! vile hypocrite accursed!
I strive in vain to set his evil forth!
The words that should sufficiently accuse
And execrate such reprobate, had need Come glowing from the lips of eldest hell.
Among the saddest in the den of woe,
Thou saw'st him saddest, 'mong the damned now damned.

—Pollok.

17—22. (17) Let, etc., ch. xiii. 17; La. i. 16, ii. 18. virgin daughter, as never having been previously subdued by any foreign prince. (18) go about into, etc., R. V., "go about in the land and have no knowledge," i. e. know not what to do. (20) have sinned, Jeremiah makes himself one with the people and confesses the national sin. (21) disgrace, or show as if Thou didst lightly esteem. throne . . . glory, fig. for the temple, as "It appears from this vs. that the people had again engaged in the external service of Jehovah, in the hope that this would avert His anger, but as they were not really weaned fr. idolatry, it is declared to be in vain."—Henderson.

Pr. i. 28, xxviii. 9; Is. i. 15, lviii. 3.

"We may be persuaded that nothing has power to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. The mischief is that we reject the protections of that love and all other benefits flowing from it."

—Pul. Com.

"We judge ourselves by what we feel capable of doing, while others judge us by what we have already done."

—Longfellow.

"Our hope is not hung upon such an untwisted thread as 'I imagine so,' or, 'it is likely,' but the cable, the strong rope of our fastened anchor, is the oath and promise of Him who is eternal verity: our salvation is fastened with God's own hand and Christ's own strength to the strong stake of God's unchangeable nature."—Rutherford.

earthly dwelling of God. (22) vanities, or idols. thou he, who alone canst send the plentiful rain.

How to plead with God (vss. 20, 21).—We propose—I. To explain this prayer of the Prophet; his acknowledgments are plain and easy to be understood; his pleas require some explanation. II. To point out some important lessons contained in it. 1. The true nature of a sinner's humiliation; 2. The proper grounds of a sinner's encouragement. Apply:—(1) Have you ever pleaded with God in this manner? (2) Have you ever pleaded thus with God in vain?—C. Simeon.

Contrition necessary.—Take the cold iron and attempt to weld it, if you can, into a certain shape. How fruitless the effort! Lay it on the anvil, seize the blacksmith's hammer with all your might, let blow after blow fall on it, and you shall have done nothing; but put it in the fire, let it be softened and made malleable, then lay it on the anvil, and each stroke shall have a mighty effect, so that you may mold it into any shape you may desire. So take your heart, not cold as it is, but put it into the furnace; let it be molten, and after that it can be fashioned into the image of Jesus Christ.—Spurgeon.

CHAPTER THE FIFTEENTH.

1-4. (1) Moses and Samuel, the most persuasive and successful of all the previous intercessors.^a Comp. Eze. xiv. 14. cast . . sight, or send them away: it is too late for any answer of peace. (2) Such . . death, etc., i. e. each to the various form of Divine judgment under wh. they must come. (3) kinds, or classes of calamity. (4) removed, etc., R. V. "tossed to and fro among all the kingdoms," etc. De. xxviii. 25. Manasseh, 2 Ki. xxi. 3.

Note on vs. 3.—An Oriental enemy, as in former ages, cuts down the trees of the country which he invades, destroys the villages, and burns all the corn and provender which he cannot carry off: the surrounding plain, deprived of its verdure, is covered with putrid carcases and burning ashes; the hot wind wafting its fœtid odors, and dispersing the ashes among the tents, renders his encampment extremely disagreeable. During the night the hyenas, jackals, and wild beasts of various kinds, allured by the scent, prowl over the field with a horrid noise; and as soon as the morning dawns, a multitude of vultures, kites, and birds of prey, are seen asserting their claim to a share of the dead. Such was the scene which Forbes contemplated on the plains of Hindostan; "and it was to me," says that writer, "a scene replete with horrid novelty, realising the Prophet's denunciation: 'I will appoint over them four kinds, saith the Lord; the sword to slay, and the dogs to tear, and the fowls of the heaven, and the beasts of the earth, to devour and destroy.'" —Paxton.

5-9. (5) ask . . doest? or make inquiry for thy welfare.^a (6) gone backward, ch. vii. 24. weary with repenting, "In language adapted to the understanding of men God is spoken of as repenting, either as here, when punishment long delayed is at last to be inflicted (compare Gen. vi. 6); or when threatened evil has been averted by timely reformation, e.g. Jon. iii. 10."—Camp Bib. (7) will fan, R. V., "have fanned," denoting not mere defeat, but dispersion. will bereave . . destroy, R. V., "have bereaved . . destroyed." (8) widows . . sea, a strong poetical fig. . . young men, the word means, picked warriors. caused . . city, R. V., "caused anguish and terrors to fall upon her suddenly." (9) sun . . day, Am. viii. 9. "Fortune deserts her at the very height of her prosperity."—Fausset.

Early Death.—"What is this voice to us?" says Bonar of the early death of M'Cheyne. "Only this much we can clearly see, that nothing was more fitted to leave his character and example impressed on our remembrance for ever than his early death. There might be envy while he lived; there is none now. There might have been some of the youthful attractiveness of his graces lost had he lived many years; this cannot be impaired now. It seems as if the Lord had struck the flower from ^a Ex. xxxii. 11—14; Nu. xiv. 13—20; 1 Sa. vii. 9, xii. 28; Ps. xcix. 6.

"If by prayer Incessant I could hope to change the will

Of Him who all things can, I would not cease

To weary Him with my assiduous cries.

But prayer against His absolute decree

No more avails than breath against the wind,

Blows stifling back on him that breathes it forth:

Therefore to His great bidding I submit."

—Milton.

^a "Thy sins render thee unworthy of pity, and everybody that sees the calamities brought upon thee will own them to be just." —Lowth.

vs. 9. R. Hall, vs. 1.

"Be assured that life is best Which finds us least afraid to die."

—Eliza Cook.

the stem ere any of the colors had lost their bright hues or any leaf its fragrance."

10—14. "The prophet vents his grief at the fate which (through the message he bears) obliges him to encounter the hatred of all men."—Driver. (10) strife . . contention, called to reprove publicly the licentiousness of the times. lent on usury, fig. way of saying that he had no causes of personal quarrel. (11) verily it shall, etc., R. V. "Verily I will strengthen thee for good." (12) iron, R. V. "can one break iron, even iron from the north and brass?" The connection of thought in vss. 11-13 is, an evil time is approaching, a time in wh. the Jews will inevitably be vanquished by a superior foe and the land made a spoil. northern iron, fig. for Chaldeans. steel, should be brass. (13) Thy substance, not Jer.'s, but that of Judæa. without price, as if it were all of no value. (14) fire, etc., De. xxxii. 22.

Dr. Arnold (of Rugby).—We listened, as all boys in their better moods will listen (ay, and men too, for the matter of that), to a man who we felt to be, with all his heart and soul and strength, striving against whatever was mean and unmanly and unrighteous in our little world. It was not the cold clear voice of one giving advice and warning from serene heights to those who were struggling and sinning below, but the warm living voice of one who was fighting for us, and by our sides, and calling on us to help him and ourselves, and one another. And so, wearily, little by little, but surely and steadily on the whole, was brought home to the young boy, for the first time, the meaning of his life; that it was no fool's or sluggard's paradise into which he had wandered by chance, but a battle-field ordained from of old, where there are no spectators, but the youngest must take his side, and the stakes are the life and death. And he who roused this consciousness in them, showed them at the same time, by every word he spoke in the pulpit, and by his whole daily life, how that battle was to be fought; and stood there before them their fellow-soldier and the captain of their band. The true sort of captain, too, for a boy's army, one who had no misgivings and gave no uncertain word of command, and, let who would yield or make truce, would fight the fight out (so every boy felt) to the last gasp and the last drop of blood. Other sides of his character might take hold of and influence boys here and there, but it was this thoroughness and undaunted courage which more than anything else won his way to the hearts of the great mass of those on whom he left his mark, and made them believe first in him, and then in his Master.—Hughes.

Savonarola, the great Italian reformer (died 1498), while yet the ruling mind in Florence and in possession of full popularity, foresaw the troubles in which he, like the Old Testament prophet, would be involved by his fearless condemnation of vice, and in the midst of one of his striking sermons thus addressed the Almighty, "O Lord, whither hast thou led me? From my desire to save souls for Thee, I can no longer return to my rest. Why hast Thou made me 'a man of strife, and a man of contention to the whole earth?'"—W. R. Clark's Savonarola.

15—18. (15) remember me, "this verse is connected in sense with vs. 10. The Lord's reply to Jeremiah's lament in that verse fails to satisfy him, inasmuch as coupled with it have been mentioned again the coming afflictions of his countrymen, while at the same time his own present condition remains unaltered."—Camb. Bib. (16) eat them, Eze. iii. 3; Re. x. 9. (17) Mockers, i. e. "laughers," in their festivities. because of thy hand, i. e., because of his ordination to the sacred calling. (18) pain perpetual, figs. for his exceeding grief in his hopeless mission. liar, R. V. "as a deceitful brook," whose waters fail in time of need.

Soul-feeding (vs. 16.—I. The grandest discovery, "Thy words were found." 1. Explain the universe; 2. They reveal Himself; 3. They reveal His redemptive provisions. II. The richest repast. 1. They satisfy the cravings of hunger; 2. They invigorate the soul. III. The sublimest delights.—Thomas.

Henry Martyn.—"What do I not owe to the Lord," writes Henry Martyn, "for permitting me to take a part in the translation of His Word? Never did I see such wonders, and Wisdom, and love, in the ^b Comp. Job iii. 1; Je. xx. 15. Je. xl. 4.

"This law is the magistracy of a man's life. It is not the pilot directing the vessel; it is the vessel abandoned to the force of the current, the influence of the tides, and the control of the winds."—Joseph Johnson.

"After you have been kind, after Love has stolen forth into the world and done its beautiful work, go back into the shade again and say nothing about it. Love hides even from itself. Love waives even self-satisfaction." — Drummond.

"I need not be missed if my life has been bearing

(As its summer and autumn moved silently on),

Its flower and its fruit, I shall still be remembered—

Yes, but remembered by what I have done."

"What is the limit of our prayer? This: 'Not my will but Thine be done!' Is that a limit? Why, that is glorious liberty! Not my will but Thine,—not a little will but a great will,—not my thought but Thine,—not my love but Thine. Is it a limit? It is the lark rising from its field-nest with the boundless liberty of the firmament. Truly we do not limit ourselves when we exchange the creature for the Creator." — Joseph Parker.

"Faithful ministers," says Henry, "are God's mouth to us, and we are to hear God speaking to us by them."

"God does not always frown, lest we should be cast into despair; He does not always smile, lest we should be careless and presume."—Owen.

"So thine own soul commend thee in thy ways, Faint not, nor swerve from thine accepted aim, Most diffident when men most loudly praise, And unabashed beneath their harshest blame."

"The joy of the wicked is but for a moment; that of the righteous is everlasting. The wicked rejoice; but their joy is simply like letting off fireworks,—they blaze away, and seem to put the modest little stars to shame. But it is all for a little while: they are over in a moment, while the quiet stars are shining still."

—T. Jones.

"A good man's prayers Will from the deepest dungeon climb to heaven's height, And bring a blessing down."

—Joanna Baillie.

blessed book, as since I have been obliged to study every expression; and it is a delightful reflection that death cannot deprive us of the pleasure of studying its mysteries." Appropriating God's Word. Have you an ear to hear Gospel truth as the voice of the Infinite God addressed to your own soul? The Dutch farmers at the Cape, at no very distant period, considered the Hottentots around them to be little better than beasts, quite incapable of anything beyond mere eating, drinking, stealing and lying. After our missionaries had labored among the natives for a time, one of them was found reading the Bible by the roadside. The Dutchman inquired of him, "What book are you reading?" "The Bible." "The Bible! Why, that book was never intended for you." "Indeed it was," said the black man, "for I see my name here." "Your name! where?" cried the farmer. "Show it to me." "There," said the Hottentot, putting his finger on the word 'sinners.' That's my name; I am a sinner, and Jesus Christ came to save me." It were well, indeed, if men would but read the Bible, saying, "In this volume the great God condescends to speak to me."—Spurgeon.

19—21. (19) return, God replies, that His happiness and success depend upon his giving up this mistaken tone of mistrust and despair.—Driver, bring thee again, "give thee a settled place," i. e. quiet and safety.—Cheyne. precious . . vile, "cause the precious metal to come forth from the dross."—Spk. Com. He is to cleanse his own heart from the unworthy suspicions as to God's faithfulness, which though mixed with better thoughts he had just shewn to be there entertained."—Camb. Bib. (20) brassen wall, ch. i. 18, vi. 27. (21) the terrible, those even who act towards thee with violence.

Waters that fail (vs. 18).—Heb. "Waters that are not to be trusted," i. e. such as are delusive, such as disappoint expectation. That which Mr. Harmer proposes simply as a query, may be stated as a very probable suggestion, viz. that in these words the Prophet alludes to the phenomenon of the mirage, so frequently mentioned by Eastern travelers. "There is," says Chardin, "a vapor or splendor, in the plains of the desert, formed by the repercussion of the rays from the sand, that appears like a vast lake. Travelers afflicted with thirst are drawn on by such appearances, but coming near find themselves mistaken; it seems to draw back as they advance, or quite vanishes." "To the south-east, at a distance of four or five miles, we noticed on the yellow sands two black masses, but whether they were the bodies of dead camels, the temporary hair-tents of wandering Bedouins, or any other objects, magnified by the refraction which is so strongly produced in the horizon of the desert, we had no means of ascertaining. With the exception of these masses, all the eastern range of vision presented only one unbroken waste of sand, till its visible horizon ended in the illusive appearance of a lake, thus formed by the heat of a midday sun on a nitrous soil, giving to the parched desert the semblance of water, and reflecting its scanty shrubs upon the view, like a line of extensive forests; but in no direction was either a natural hill, a mountain, or other interruption to the level line of the plain, to be seen."—Buckingham.

Evil shall not prevail.—In the dark ages the enemy thought he had destroyed the Church, but life came into the monk in his cell, and Luther shook the world. The Church in England fell into a deadly slumber in the day of Whitfield and Wesley; but she was not dead, and therefore a time of awakening came. The flame burned low, but the heavenly fire still lingered among the ashes, and only needed the Holy Spirit to blow upon it, and cause a hallowed conflagration. Six young men in Oxford were found guilty of meeting to pray: their offense was contagious, and soon there sprang up hundreds glorying in the same blessed crime. Earnest servants of the living God were forthcoming, and no man knew whence they came; like the buds and blossoms which come forth at the bidding of spring, a people made willing in the day of God's power came forward at once. Seeing that there is life in the Church of God, you can never calculate what will happen within its bounds to-morrow; for life is an unaccountable thing, and scorns the laws which bind the formal and inanimate.—Spurgeon.

CHAPTER THE SIXTEENTH.

1-4. (2) not . . wife, marriage was regarded as a duty by the Jews, and the blessings of the Mosaic law rested upon fruitfulness.^a In commanding Jer. not to take a wife God intimated that during the impending calamities it would be impossible to bring up families: they would only increase the anxieties of siege and famine times. this place, the land of Judæa. (3) mothers . . fathers, who are so deeply affected when calamities come upon their children. (4) grievous deaths, "refers to the pestilence which always ensued upon the scarcity and vile quality of food, and the confinement of multitudes within the narrow bounds of a besieged city."—Exp. Bib. lamented, with the usual wailings for the dead.

The prophet forbidden to marry.—The reasons were probably that, by his abstaining from marriage, he might more powerfully confirm his words as to the coming calamities. It would show his own belief in what he had foretold when it was seen that he would not make for himself a home under such circumstances. It would leave him more free for the arduous duty which he had to discharge. It would save him great sorrow when the evil days should come. And so now there are special cases in which God's will seems to be that a man should not marry. The missionary exposed to daily peril of climate, pestilence, savage heathendom; or any to whom it is evident that by their marriage more evil than good will result;—then, just as we may be called upon to do without many other great earthly advantages, so we may be called upon to deny ourselves this. And there may be physical conditions forbidding marriage. No man has a right to transmit to others hereditary disease, whether of body or mind. And there are spiritual hindrances. A man ought to marry only "in the Lord." But all these exceptions are rare; God's general rule is that men should marry.—Pul. Com.

5-8. (5) house of mourning, forecasting the time when deaths would be so many that the usual customs would not be observed.^a (6) cut themselves, etc., Ec. xix. 28; De. xiv. 1. This was a heathen custom. wh. it seems the Jews had adopted with their idolatry.^b make . . bald, shave a bare patch on the front of the head.^c (7) tear themselves, R. V. "break bread for them," the reference is to the custom that the friends of those who were in mourning should urge them to eat. See 2 Sam. iii. 35, xii. 16, 17. Bread also was distributed to mourners and to the poor at funerals, "Pour out thy bread on the burial of the just," Tobit iv. 14. Compare Is. lviii. 7 (where the Heb. is the same "to deal thy bread" etc.)—Camb. Bib. cup of consolation, it was the custom to provide food and drink for mourners. (8) house of feasting, vs. 5.

Verses 5-8.—Acting as prophet, that is, as one whose public actions were symbolical of a Divine intent, Jeremiah is henceforth to stand aloof, on occasions when natural feeling would suggest participation in the outward life of his friends and acquaintance. He is to quell the inward stirrings of affection and sympathy, and to abstain from playing his part in those demonstrative lamentations over the dead, which the immemorial custom and sentiment of his country regarded as obligatory; and this, in order to signify unmistakably that what thus appeared to be the state of his own feelings, was really the aspect under which God would shortly appear to a nation perishing in its guilt. "Enter not into the house of mourning . . . for I have taken away My friendship from this people, the lovingkindness and the compassion." In like manner, the prophet is forbidden to enter as guest "the house of feasting." He is not to be seen at the marriage-feast,—that occasion of highest rejoicing, the very type and example of innocent and holy mirth; to testify by his abstinence that the day of judgment was swiftly approaching, which would desolate all homes, and silence for evermore all sounds of joy and gladness in the ruined city.—Expos. Bib.

9-13. (9) voice, etc., all private and public seasons of rejoicing.^d in ^a De. xxviii. 4.

"One who has known in storms to sail I have on board;
Above the raging of the gale I hear my Lord.
He holds me when the billows smite, I shall not fall.
If sharp, 'tis short; if long, 'tis light;
He tempers all.
Safe to the land, safe to the land,—
The end is this;
And then with him go hand in hand Far into bliss."
—Dean Alford.

^a "God here anticipates the fulfilment of Jeremiah's prophecies, and tells him how to demean himself when they should have been accomplished."—Wordsworth.

^b "Among the Greeks the custom of tearing, cutting off, or shaving the hair, was at least as common as among the Jews. Sometimes the hair was cast upon the funeral pile, and on other occasions it was laid upon the grave."—Kitto.

^c Amos 8:10; Mi. 1:16.

^d Je. vii. 34, xxv. 10; Eze. xxvi. 13.

^a De. xxix. 24; 1 Ki. ix. 8, 9.

^e "There among idolaters you may indulge your evil propensities to the full; you may practise your idolatries without intermission." — Rosenmüller.

"A man to be a soul-winner must have holiness of character. The Eternal will never use dirty tools, the thrice-holy Jehovah will select only holy instruments of His work." — Spurgeon.

^f "The sufferings of Judah in the Babylonish captivity will be so great, that the deliverance from them will be more joyous than even their exodus from Egypt." — Wordsworth.

"A man who would have God's guidance must be willing to make spiritual things his main business." — H. C. Mabie.

"As the needle of the compass which points to it tells him which way he sails; thus the heart that is touched with the loadstone of Divine love tells the soul that its course is heavenward, towards the haven of eternal rest." — Leighton.

your days, caution against assuming that the threatened penalty would be reserved for their posterity. (10) Wherefore, etc., ch. v. 19, xiii. 22.^d (12) worse, etc., ch. vii. 26; 1 Ki. xiv. 9. imagination, R. V., "stubbornness." (13) there, in the captive land ye may do your own will. The sentence is ironical.^o not . . favor, "since I will not grant you grace." — Exp. Bib.

Conscience is starved by neglect of that seeking of God's grace which is its nutriment and strength. And it is stunned by repeated acts of sin. Men can and do nibble, if we may so speak, at conscience, and gradually rid themselves of it. The clamor of sin drowns the still, small voice, and its protests, perpetually unheeded, are at last withdrawn. So that at length men find themselves able to do evil and think nothing of it; the little rift that sin first made has widened and widened until the whole torrent of waters bursts through, for the faithful dyke that held them back has been gradually destroyed, and so now the whole nature of the man is overwhelmed, submerged beneath the deluge of sin. And, what is most sad, the man feels, no more than do the sunken cities and towns that lie at the bottom of the Zuyder Zee, the rush of the waves that for centuries have rolled over them. — Pul. Com.

Salutariness of mourning. —

How wretched is the man who never mourn'd.
I dive for precious pearl in sorrow's stream:
Not so the thoughtless man that only grieves,
Takes all the torment, and rejects the gain (Inestimable gain), and gives heaven leave To make him but more wretched, not more wise.

—V. Young.

14, 15. (14) Therefore, or "yet surely." days come, ch. xxiii. 7, 8.^f (15) land of the north, the usual appellation of Chaldæa wh. was north to Judæa.

Gratitude should be proportionate to favors. This is often not the case, because the best things are least appreciated. Their merits are not superficial nor discernible at first. The spiritual blessings are the highest; yet to unspiritual men they are the least valued. Thus the chief elements of the Messianic promises of restoration were spiritual, and therefore not so acceptable to the mass of the people as the material blessings promised to the Jews in the first possession of the "land flowing with milk and honey." We are too ready to complain of the present and regret the lost past, ungratefully selecting the troubles of our own time for notice and ignoring its bright features, while we forget the hardships of the past and remember only its last pleasant features, like the Jews, who forgot the rigors of the slavery from which they had escaped, but remembered with regret the flesh-pots of Egypt (Exod. xvi. 3). The Bible favors no sentimental regrets for "the good old times;" it teaches us that God's goodness is increasingly manifest. — Pul. Com.

God's guidance. — One of our poets, speaking of our birth, beautifully says, "Every soul leaves port under sealed orders. We cannot know whither we are going or what we are to do till the time comes for breaking the seal. But I can tell you something more beautiful than this. Every regenerated soul sets out on its voyage with an invisible Captain on board, who knows the nature of our sealed orders from the outset, and who will shape our entire voyage accordingly if we will only let him." — A. J. Gordon. Three epochs of confidence. — People have generally three epochs in their confidence in man. In the first they believe him to be everything that is good, and they are lavish with their friendship and confidence. In the next, they have had experience, which has smitten down their confidence, and they then have to be careful not to mistrust every one, and to put the worst construction upon everything. Later in life, they learn that the greater number of men have much more good in them than bad, and that, even when there is cause to blame, there is more reason to pity than condemn; and then a spirit of confidence again awakens within them. — Miss Bremer. Christian confidence. — A soldier lay dying in the hospital, in terrible agony. A visitor asked him, "What Church are you of?" "Of the Church of Christ," he replied. "I mean of what persuasion are you?" "Persuasion," said the dying man, as his eyes looked heavenward, beaming with love to the Savior, "I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate me from the love of God which is in Christ."

16—18. (16) fishers . . hunters,^a reference in these figures is to the coming judgments, by the Chaldeans, who would hunt out the people from their hiding-places, and accomplish a general destruction.^b (17) eyes . . ways, Job xxxiv. 21; Pr. v. 21. The judgment is one decided on after complete inquiry and perfect knowledge. (18) first, i. e. before accomplishing the return promised in vs. 15. double, i. e. in proportion to God's usual severity in punishing men's sins. "Because their sin was two-fold."—Camb. Bib. carcasses, so in contempt the offering of animals in their idol sacrifices is called.^c or "the idols themselves, which defiled those who worshipped them."—Pul. Com.

Divine comfort.—When a man walketh in the sun, if his face be towards it, he hath nothing before him but bright shining light and comfortable heat; but let him once turn his back to the sun, what hath he before him, but a shadow? And what is a shadow, but the privation of light, and heat of the sun? Yea, it is but to behold his own shadow, defrauding himself of the other. Thus there is no true wisdom, no true happiness, no real comfort but in beholding the countenance of God; look from that and we lose these blessings; and what shall we gain? a shadow, an empty image; instead of a substantial, to gain an empty image of ourselves, and lose the solid image of God. Yet this is the common folly of the world; men prefer this shadow before that substance, whereas there is not the least appearance of any true comfort but in God only.—Spencer.

19—21. (19) fortress, or place of defence. Gentiles, R. V. "Nations," i. e. a crowd of peoples, hitherto ignorant of the true God, shall hasten to the scene of Jehovah's great interposition; they have been convinced by Israel's unlooked-for restoration of the unique divinity of Jehovah."—Pul. Com.^a (20) make gods, an inconceivable absurdity in the very statement.^b (21) this once, i. e. in this overwhelming judgment.^c The Lord, R. V., "Jehovah," the covenant name of God.

Worldly comforts.—The comforts of this world are but like the treasures of snow; do but take a handful of snow, and crush it in your hands, it will melt away presently; but if you let it lie on the ground, it will continue for some time; and so it is with the things of this world; if you take the comforts of this life in your hands, and lay them too near your hearts in affection and love to them, they will quickly melt and vanish away from you; but if you leave them in their proper place, and do not set an inordinate affection upon them, they will continue the longer with you; as if you should line a garment with linen, it would do very well, but if you line it with pitch or glue, that will stick fast to the body, and in all likelihood soil both garment and the man that wears it; so when the world is glued to our hearts, it spoils the comforts of all the mercies that we enjoy; and so it may be said that the otherwise lawful use of them is abused, when they are either used too affectionately in making gods of them, or being too eagerly bent in the gaining of them.—T. Brooks.

CHAPTER THE SEVENTEETH.

1—4. (1) pen of iron, Job xix. 24. An iron chisel or stylus suitable for cutting inscriptions on stones; or engraving on metal. point, lit., "finger nail."^a Such a pen made indelible marks, and so did the sin of Judah. altars, plural. God's altar was one, Baal's altars were many. Possibly the names of the idols to whose service the altar was devoted were put upon the horns. (2) children, whose lives might be sacrificed in the Moloch rites. Or indicating that the children are trained up in

^a Am. iv. 2; Hab. i. 15.

^b "Lit. understood, the fishers are the main armies who, in the towns and fortresses, capture the people in crowds as in a net, while the hunters are the light-armed troops, who pursue the fugitives over the whole country, and drive them out of their hiding-places with as eager pleasure as hunters track out their game."—Spk. Com.

^c Some think the reference is to the offering of human beings, or of unclean animals.

^a "The result of God's judgments on the Jews will be that both the Jews when restored, and the Gentiles who have witnessed those judgments, shall renounce idolatry for the worship of Jehovah."—Fausset.

^b Je. ii. 11.

^c "The 'hand' and 'might' wh. they were to know and feel, were the severe afflictions to be suffered during the captivity, and which they required to experience only once more in order to be effectually weaned from idolatry."—Henderson.

^a "On Assyrian contract-tablets witnesses who were too poor to possess a seal impressed a nail-mark. From these nail-marks the word translated point has been derived."—Bib. Things, etc.

* Is. xi. 9, lvi. 7, lvii. 13.

"Queen Mary when she died, told those about her that the loss of Calais had so impressed her, that its image would be found indelibly engraven on her heart."

"That was a beautiful tribute of Napoleon to the supremacy of mind over physical force in the long trial. 'Do you know, Fontanes,' he said, 'what I admire most in the world? It is the powerlessness of force to found anything. There are only two powers in the world—the sabre and the pen; and in the end the former is always conquered by the latter.'"—Anon.

* De. xxix. 23; Ps. cvii. 34; Zep. ii. 9.

b "The pious man who makes God his confidence is truly happy, whatever may be the outward circumstances in which he may be placed."—Henderson.

"Trust in yourself, and you are doomed to disappointment; trust in your friends, and they will die and leave you; trust in money and you may have it taken from you; trust in reputation and some slanderous the fathers' bad example. groves, R. V., "Asherim," the asherak was a wooden post, a kind of fetic, esteemed divine and worshipped with rites similar to those of Baal-worship. Earliest mention is Ex. xxxiv. 13. Comp. also Judges iii. 7. See Moore on Judges, Int. Com. (3) mountain .. field,^a fig. for Zion. Field means "open country," the whole country of Judæa. high places, 1 Sa. ix. 12. for sin, or because of thy sin. (4) even thyself, the original probably means, "through thine own fault."—Camb. Bib. discontinue, cease to possess.

Indelible records of sin.—The great stone book of Nature reveals many records of the past. In the red sandstone there are found, in some places, marks which are clearly the impressions of showers of rain, and these so perfect that it can even be detected in which direction the shower inclined, and from what quarter it proceeded; and this, ages ago. Even so sin leaves its track behind it, and God keeps a faithful record of all our sins.—Bib. Treas. If you cut a gash in a man's head, you may heal it; but you can never rub out, nor wash out, nor cut out the scar. It may witness against you in his corpse; still it may be covered by the coffin or hidden in the grave; but then it is not till decomposition shall take place that it shall entirely disappear. But if you smite a soul, the scar remains; no coffin or grave shall hide it; no revolution, not even the upturning of the physical universe, shall obliterate it; no fire, not even the eternal fires shall burn it out.—Thomson. The record of sin.—It is written on the memory. Men who have forsaken the scenes of their evil deeds cannot shake off the clinging burden of the memory of them. The criminal is haunted by his crimes. They people his dreams with horrors; they overshadow his waking hours with gloom. Even when sin is put out of mind it is probably buried in the secret chamber of memory, to be ultimately brought to the light of consciousness. The experience of those who have been recovered from drowning and from delirium suggests the idea that forgotten memories can be revived, and that probably the whole of the soul's experience is indelibly written upon the memory. No other recording-angel may be wanted. The soul carries its own indictment in the record it bears of its own conduct.—Pul. Com. Inflictions—the effect of evil.—Great effects always have great and appropriate causes; and great causes, left to operate freely, will produce great and proper effects. Every human heart holds within it enough to make indescribable misery; and unless that greater cause which God offers to put in certain operation comes in with its counteracting force, we may be sure that indescribable misery will be produced. Wherefore let us pray that more and more we may have eyes to see and perceive, ears to hear and understand.—Pul. Com.

5—8. "The beautiful strophes (5—13) are not obviously connected with the preceding text. They wear a look of self-completeness, which suggests that here and in many other places Jeremiah has left us, not whole discourses, written down substantially in the form in which they were delivered, but rather his more finished fragments; pieces which being more rhythmical in form, and more striking in thought, had imprinted themselves more deeply upon his memory."—Exp. Bib. (5) trusteth in man, as Judah was then trusting in Egypt and Assyria. flesh, contrasted with God. arm, of reliance. (6) heath, Heb. 'ar'ar, wh. is both a "juniper" and a "destitute man." Here a dry bush, or bare tree.—Ewald, Umbreit, etc. salt land, in Heb. saltiness is a sign of barrenness. (7) Blessed, etc., Ps. ii. 12, xxxiv. 8, cxv. 1. (8) tree, etc., Ps. i. 3. river, or watercourse. see, R. V., "fear." careful, or anxious.^b

The curse and the blessing (vss. 5—8).—I. The curse. 1. The person against whom it is denounced, the self-reliant, self-confident, etc.; 2. The language in which it is expressed implies that the person shall be unprosperous, useless, worthless, etc. II. The blessing. 1. The person to whom it is promised: he recognises God; 2. The language in which it is expressed. Apply:—On whom dost thou trust?—G. Brooks. Difference between trusting man and God (vss. 5—8).—Man not independent; must have a support; often selects a wrong one. I. The folly and evil of trusting in man. 1. Such trust is idolatrous in principle; 2. Grovelling in its aim; 3. Unreasonable in its foundation; 4. Destructive in its issue. II. The wisdom and benefit of trusting in the Lord. 1. It is pious in principle; 2. Elevated in its aim; 3. Rational in its foundation; 4. Glorious in its issue. Apply:—(1) A mistake to suppose the rich and gay happy, and the poor and pious miserable; (2) An unreserved confidence in God can alone secure our happiness and the Divine favor.—Delta in 400 Sks.

9—11. (9) deceitful, i. e. self-deluding. We may never trust it.^a wicked, R. V., "sick." (10) search, etc., thoroughly, fr. God none of its secrets are hidden.^b give, in righteous judgments. (11) sitteth on eggs, etc., R. V., "that gathereth young which she hath not brought forth;" the partridge calls the young of other birds under her wings, but they forsake her when they hear the cry of the true parent. The application is plain. Riches unlawfully gotten are as precarious and shortlived a possession as the young that have not been hatched by the bird that would pass for their parent.

The deceitfulness of the heart (vs. 9).—I. Men impose on themselves in respect of their own character; 2. In regard to their attachments; 3. In regard to their power in resisting temptation; 4. In regard to their promises of reformation and amendment. Apply:—(1) The danger of losing the soul; (2) You have a heart which is not to be trusted; (3) Wake from all delusions to the reality of your condition.—Albert Barnes. The human heart (vs. 9).—I. Its deceitfulness. 1. It misrepresents the nature of things; 2. It conceals the tendency of things; 3. It practices imposition on itself. II. Its wickedness. It is so—1. Universally; 2. Unsearchably; 3. Incurably. Learn—(1) Our need of regeneration; (2) The claims of the Saviour; (3) The duty of self-examination.—G. Brooks.

A New Year's petition.—

O that my eyes might closed be
To what becomes me not to see!
That deafness might possess my ear
To what concerns me not to hear!
That truth my tongue might always tie
From ever speaking foolishly!
That no vain thought might ever rest
Or 'e conceived in my breast!
That by each word, each deed, each thought,
Glory may to my God be brought!
But what are wishes? Lord, my eye
On Thee is fixed, to Thee I cry:
O purge out all my dross, my sin,
Make me more white than snow within.
Wash, Lord, and purify my heart,
And make it clean in every part;
And when 'tis clean, Lord, keep it so,
For that is more than I can do.

—Thomas Ellwood.

12—14. (12) Render, "Thou throne of glory, a height from the beginning, thou place of our sanctuary, thou hope of Israel, Jehovah." The temple is called "the throne of thy glory" in ch. xiv. 21; "height" is a common synonym for heaven (Ps. vii. 8, Hebrew; Isa. lvii. 15, Hebrew), but is also applied to Mount Zion (Ezek. xvii. 23; xx. 40), which is also in Isa. lx. 13 called, "the place of my sanctuary."—Pul. Com. throne,^c the first reference is to the Temple as Jehovah's earthly dwelling-place, then the Prophet's thought rises to Jehovah Himself. (13) hope of Israel, on whose word alone Israel can safely hope. forsake thee, Ps. lxxiii. 27; Is. i. 28. written . . earth, or dust, where names are soon rubbed out. Contrasted with in the rock, where names may abide.^d fountain . . waters, ch. ii. 13. (14) thou . . praise, i. e. Thou only. The expression of simple and entire trust in God.

A prayer for salvation (vs. 14).—1. These words express a deep concern about salvation, and an earnest desire to obtain it; 2. A firm persuasion that God alone can save; 3. A heartfelt application to God for tongue may blast it; but trust in God, and you are never to be confounded in time or eternity."—D. L. Moody.

^a "There is no sure reliance to be placed in the feelings of the heart, nor in the dictates of conscience, unless the conscience be informed and regulated by the will and Word of God."—Wordsworth.

^b 1 Sa. xvi. 7; Ps. vii. 9, cxxxix. 1, 23.

"I am more afraid of my own heart than of the Pope and all his cardinals. I have within me the great pope—self."—Luther.

"All our actions take Their hues from the complexion of the heart, As landscapes their variety of light."

—Bacon

^c The "throne of glory" is equivalent to Him who is enthroned in glory.

^d "What is written in the earth may be easily effaced, as contrasted with what is written in a book, or engraved in the rock."—Henderson.

"The glory of God and the happiness of man are blended together by the Hand that united soul and body in one man, light and heat in one sun, holiness and happiness in one heaven; and what God has joined together let not man put asunder."

"What you demand is here, or at Ulubra." You traverse the world in search of happiness, which is within the reach of every man: a contented mind confers it on all."—Horace.

"When a teacher confines himself to the praise of the Cross, and lets all other matters of praise go which might adorn a theologian of these times, and adheres immovably to this: 'I am determined not to know anything among you save Jesus Christ and Him crucified'—amid all the shame of His Cross, he is victorious over the rest."—Zinzen-dorf.

a "I have not forced myself forward to follow thee as a shepherd."—Umbreit.

"It is not so much by the symmetry of what we attain in this life that we are to be made happy, as by the enlivening hope of what we shall reach in the world to come. While a man is stringing a harp, he tries the strings, not for music, but for construction. When it is finished it shall be played for melodies. God is fashioning the human heart for future joy. He only sounds a string here and there to see how far His work has progressed."—H. W. Beecher.

"With eyes turned upward, whence her help descends, Hope waits expecting till the tempest ends."—Holmes.

salvation through the medium of prayer; 4. An unwavering confidence that the salvation which God bestows in answer to prayer will be a salvation suited to the wants of fallen man.—G. Brooks.

Salvation.—There is a natural principle in man, lowering him, deadening him, pulling him down by inches to the mere animal plane, blinding reason, searing conscience, paralyzing will. This is the active destroying principle, or Sin. Now, to counteract this, God has discovered to us another principle, which will stop this drifting process in the soul and make it drift the other way. This is the active saving principle, or Salvation. If a man finds the first of these powers furiously at work within him, dragging his whole life downward to destruction, there is only one way to escape his fate—to take resolute hold of the upward power, and be borne by it to the opposite pole.—Drummond.

The splendor of salvation.—Mark well the splendor of this idea of salvation. It is not merely final "safety," to be forgiven sin, to evade the curse. It is not, vaguely, "to get to heaven." It is to be conformed to the Image of the Son. It is for these poor elements to attain to the Supreme Beauty. The organizing Life being Eternal, so must this Beauty be immortal. Its progress toward the Immaculate is already guaranteed. And more than all, there is here fulfilled the sublimest of all prophecies; not Beauty alone, but Unity is secured by the type—Unity of man and man, God and man, God and Christ and man, till "all shall be one."—Drummond.

15—18. (15) "This verse shews that the time is before the capture of Jerusalem at the end of Jehoiakim's reign. If that event had occurred, the people would not, as here, challenge the prophet to point out a fulfilment of his prophecies of woe."—Camb. Bib. Where, etc., Is. v. 19. The questions of the sceptic and the scoffer. (16) not hastened, i. e. had not eagerly withdrawn from following the will of God, as a shepherd. desired . . day, no wish to be a prophet of evil, bec. I had any vindictive feelings. the woeful day, i. e. the overthrow of Jerusalem. was right before thee, R. V., "was before thy face." The insertion of the word right is misleading. What Jeremiah really says is that his words were not his own, but were all spoken as in God's sight and in compliance with His will. (17) terror, or cause of dismay; i. e. by not fulfilling the threatenings Thou dost bid me deliver. hope, R. V., "refuge." (18) confounded, etc., Ps. xxxv. 4, xl. 14. double, twofold punishment for their twofold sin, in apostasy as a nation, and hostility to Jeremiah.—Camb. Bib. ch. xvi. 18.

Prophecies.—attributed to God.—It is a natural course to hold a man responsible for all that comes from his lips. The prophet could not escape this responsibility. It was not his to complain that his auditors challenged him as the constructor of these unpalatable speeches. If they looked to him, he in turn did the wise thing, the only thing that could be done—he looked to God. He was able to do this because he had been faithful. He had not garbled or mutilated his message to make it more tolerable. He understood perfectly well what, nevertheless, many fail to understand, that truth depends, not on what men are able to understand, but on what God clearly reveals. The prophet was in no manner of doubt as to the authority by which he spoke. Looking back and reviewing his utterances, he was perfectly sure that he had not confused his own thoughts with the commanded words of Jehovah. If what God reveals for us to speak, we speak; and if what he reveals for us to believe and act upon, we do believe and act upon; then with the utmost confidence we can go to him for support and defence. What could Jeremiah have done in his extremity if he had not been conscious of his fidelity as a prophet of God?—Pul. Com.

19—23. A prophecy on the reward of obedience to the Law (vss. 19—27). (19) gate, wh. one is not certain. Evidently the one through which there was the most traffic. (20) kings, prob. including all the officials. (21) Take heed, on this point be very watchful. burden . . day, it appears that the inhabitants both of town and country habitually broke the fourth commandment by engaging in traffic on the Sabbath. The latter brought in their produce for sale in Jerusalem, while the former would bring from their houses commodities to be offered in exchange. Comp. Neh. xiii. 15—22.—Camb. Bib. (22) hallow, etc., Ex. xx. 8, etc. (23) neck stiff, the sign of rebellious opposition and wilfulness."

Religious observance of the Sabbath.—The importance of the religious observance of the Sabbath is seldom sufficiently estimated. The violation of this duty by the young is one of the most decided marks of incipient moral degeneracy. Religious restraint is fast losing its hold upon that young man who, having been educated in the fear of God, begins to spend the Sabbath in idleness or in amusement. And so also of communities. The desecration of the Sabbath is one of those evident indications of that criminal recklessness, that insane love of pleasure, and that subjection to the government of appetite and passion, which forebodes that the "beginning of the end" of social happiness, and of true national prosperity, has arrived. Hence we see how imperative is the duty of parents, and of legislators, on this subject. The head of every family is obliged, by the command of God, not only to honor this day himself, but to use all the means in his power to secure the observance of it by all those committed to his charge. He is thus not only promoting his own, but his children's happiness; for nothing is a more sure antagonist force to all the allurements of vice, as nothing tends more strongly to fix in the minds of the young a conviction of the existence and attributes of God, than the solemn keeping of this day. And hence, also, legislators are false to their trust, who, either by the enactment of laws, or by their example, diminish, in the least degree, in the minds of a people, the reverence due to that day which God has set apart for Himself.—Wayland.

24—27. (24) diligently, with anxious carefulness and thought seeking fully to obey. (25) kings, etc., glory, fame, power, prosperity are promised. remain for ever, or permanently continue the centre of the covenant kingdom. (26) shall come, as at the great festivals. sacrifices of praise, i. e. sacrifices wh. should be sincere expressions of pious and grateful feeling. (27) fire, etc., La. iv. 11.^b "The scene of their sin should be the scene of their punishment."

No work on Sunday.—The late William H. Smith began his business career by folding newspapers and addressing bundles. When he died he was the head of the house of W. H. Smith & Son, the largest "news" agents in Great Britain, and had been member of Parliament, Financial Secretary to the Treasury, First Lord of the Admiralty, and the Conservative leader of the House of Commons. He was a religious man, not only at church and in the family, but in his business. It was a rule in W. H. Smith & Son's business that no work should be done on Sunday. Only once is there recorded an exception to this rule. In September, 1854, shortly after the battle of Alma, the despatches containing the names of the killed and wounded arrived late on Saturday night. To put a speedy end to the doubts, fears and hopes of hundreds of distracted families, the employes were called upon to sacrifice their Sunday rest in order that the "extras" might be distributed in London and the provinces. Several years later W. H. Smith & Son received a "command" to supply a member of the royal family with newspapers. Among other journals on the list was the Observer, published on Sunday morning. The command was obeyed, but it was explained that as Sunday work was contrary to the rules of the firm, the Observer could not be supplied.

Types and uses of the Sabbath.—

Hail to the day which He, who made the heaven,
Earth, and their armies, sanctified and blest,
Perpetual memory of the Maker's rest!
Hail to the day when He, by whom was given
New life to man, the tomb asunder riven, Arose! That day His Church doth still confess,
At once Creation's and Redemption's feast,
Sign of a world called forth, a world forgiven.
Welcome that day, the day of holy peace,
The Lord's own day! to man's Creator owed,

^a "As the Sabbath was instituted as a sign or token of God's covenant with His people, the Jews profaning the Sabbath was in effect renouncing their share in the covenant."—Lowth.

"Bright Sabbath morning, on the moor, where all is still save praise."—Bailey.

"The Sundaes of man's life, Thredded together on Time's string,
Make bracelets to adorn the wife
Of the eternal, glorious King.
On Sunday heaven's gates stand open;
Blessings are plentiful and rife,
More plentiful than hope."—Herbert.

^b "In the siege the gates of Jerusalem and its palaces were actually burned with fire. Ne. ii. 13, 17."—Wordsworth.

"The green oasis where, after the week-days' journey, the pilgrim halts for refreshment and repose; where he rests beneath the shade of the lofty palm trees, and dips his vessel in the waters of the calm, clear stream, and recovers his strength to go forth again upon his pilgrimage in the desert with renewed vigor and cheerfulness."—Reade.

"He that would prepare for heaven, must honor the Sabbath on earth. He that would hope for the spiritual joys there, must acquire a taste and aptitude for them here."—Bp. D. Wilson.

And man's Redeemer; for the soul's increase In sanctity, and sweet repose bestowed;
Type of the rest when sin and care shall cease,
The rest remaining for the loved of God!

—Bp. Mant.

^a Zec. xi. 13;
Matt. xxvii. 10.

^b "By this is meant the horizontal lathe of the potter, consisting of two wheels or round plates, on the upper one of wh. was placed the clay, which he molded into vessels at his pleasure. These wheels were either of wood or stone, and were in use at an early period among the Egyptians."—Henderson.

"Repine not, nor reply; View not what Heaven ordains with reason's eye;

Too bright the object is, the distance is too high.

The man who would resolve the work of fate,

May limit number and make crooked straight;

Stop thy enquiry, then, and curb thy sense, Nor let dust argue with Omnipotence."—Prior.

^a Is. xlv. 9; Ro. ix. 20, 21.

^b "God is said to repent of evil, when He changes His dealings with men and nations, on their turning to Him."—Augustine.

"When through the clay not being of a proper consistency, or otherwise, not answering to the potter's will, the vessel is spoilt, he does not throw it away, but crushes it together, dashes it back upon the wheel, and begins his work afresh, till the

CHAPTER THE EIGHTEENTH.

"This chapter is the introduction of a group of prophecies (extending to ch. xxv. of various dates; their sequence has evidently not been determined by chronological considerations. The prophet's first object is, perhaps, to refute the scoffing inquiry (ch. xvii. 15), "What has become of the [threatening] word of Jehovah?" and to justify the glorious promise given at the conclusion of the last chapter."—Cheyne. 1-4. (2) house, or workshop. The clay-field lay south of Jerusalem, just beyond the valley of Hinnom.^a (3) wheels, lit. the two wheels.^b (4) marred, or spoiled: it was a failure. made it again, i. e. made up the clay again into a new vessel, and possibly one of another shape, and fitted for another purpose.

The parable of the potter (vss. 1-10).—Consider man in the hands of God—I. As morally defective: the clay marred, in moral judgment, moral affections, moral conduct. II. As morally improvable: God is mighty to save, emotionally, magisterially, reformatively. III. As morally free. It is here indicated that man is—I. Responsible for his destiny; 2. For his conduct.—Thomas.

The clay and the potter.—Every life has not the same purpose. The potter makes vessels of innumerable shapes. Yet each life is successful as its own particular purpose is fulfilled. The homely jug may be perfect, though it is very different from the graceful vase. A life is no failure because it is lowly and put only to lowly uses so long as it attains the end for which God designed it. It is important to note that God's first work with us is in forming our own souls aright. The first question is not as to what we do, but as to what we are. The potter is making vessels; God is making characters, souls, lives. After this we may be put to some further end—used for good after we have been made right, as the vessel is of service after the potter has done his work with it. . . The clay is refractory. It must be broken up and remodelled. Man is more than clay. He has free-will, mysterious as may be the connection of this with the almighty sovereignty of God. In a much more terrible way he too is refractory, wilfully and stubbornly. For this he must be broken. His life must be disturbed and shaken up, but only that God may begin again to fashion him for his destined end. Great disappointments, destructive events, the failure of a man's work, the disruption of a Church, the revolution of a nation, may seem simply disastrous. But we see how that by means of these things God, in his infinite patience and gracious perseverance, will finally effect his own great purposes, and so secure the true blessedness of his creatures.—Pul. Com.

5-10. (6) cannot . . potter, a strong assertion of God's absolute power and right over the creatures He makes and the nations He calls into being.^a ye in mine hand, i. e. I can crush you down into a shapeless mass, out of which I may form a new nation. (7) At what instant, lit. "suddenly." pluck up, ch. i. 10. (8) If that nation, the action of God is not arbitrary, like that of the potter, but always in strict accordance with the manner in which they behave themselves towards Him.^b (9) build, or establish it. (10) of the good, change My purpose of blessing it with prosperity.

Note on vss. 7-10.—"First of the prophets, Jeremiah proclaims distinctly what had been more or less implied throughout, that predictions were subject to no overruling necessity, but depended for their fulfilment on the moral state of those to whom they were addressed; that the most confident assurance of blessing could be frustrated by sin; that the most awful warnings of calamity could be averted by repentance."—Stanley's Jewish Church. The dignity of man.—When a piece of base metal is coined with the king's stamp, and made current by his edict, no man may henceforth presume either to refuse it, either in payment, or to abate the value of it; so God, having stamped His own image upon every man, and withal signified His blessed pleasure, how precious He would have him to be in our eyes and esteem, we must look to answer it as a high contempt of that sacred Majesty, if we set any man at nought, or make less account of him than God would have us.—Bp. Sanderson.

Recessional.—

God of our fathers, known of old—

Lord of our far-flung battle-line—

Beneath Whose awful Hand we hold

Dominion over palm and pine—

Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!

The tumult and the shouting dies—

The captains and the kings depart—

Still stands Thine ancient Sacrifice,

A humble and a contrite heart.

Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!

Far-called our navies melt away—

On dune and headland sinks the fire—

Lo, all our pomp of yesterday

Is one with Nineveh and Tyre!

Judge of the Nations, spare us yet,

Lest we forget—lest we forget!

If, drunk with sight of power, we loose

Wild tongues that have not Thee in awe—

Such boasting as the Gentiles use

Or lesser breeds without the Law—

Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!

For heathen heart that puts her trust

In reeking tube and iron shard—
All valiant dust that builds on dust,

And guarding calls not Thee to guard—

For frantic boast and foolish word, Thy mercy on Thy people, Lord!

Amen.

—Rudyard Kipling.

II—14. (11) go to, Ge. xi. 3. frame, as a potter frames a work on his wheels. devise, etc., terms implying careful preparation. return, i. e. turn from the evil, and return to your God, and goodness. (12) "And they said, rather, But they go on saying (comp. Ezek. xxxiii. 17, 20). There is no hope, the rendering may be easily misunderstood. "The speakers are not, as we might suppose, despondent about their state and prospects, but they seek to check the troublesome preacher by the warning that he has no chance of success (so ch. ii. 25)."—Pul. Com. (13) Ask . . heathen, see if you can find a parallel case. virgin, a term intended to remind the people that they had been wholly separated unto God. (14) will, etc., R. V., "shall the snow of Lebanon fail from the rock of the field? or shall the cold waters that flow down from afar be dried up?" The snow never leaves Lebanon, nor do the streams dry up—but Israel has forgotten her source, etc.

Fallen man.—We saw at Hanover the unfinished palace of the deposed monarch; we were shown his state and private carriages and his stables of cream-colored horses. A saddening sight to see all the emblems of sovereignty and no king; the insignia of royalty and the monarch for ever exiled. How like to human nature, which has so much about it prepared for the service of the King of kings, so much of faculty for heavenly occupation; but the King has departed and the house is left desolate, and all the furnishing thereof perverted to alien uses. Thought, imagination, judgment, memory, all fit to be yoked to celestial chariots, become the very hacks of the devil, and the body once a palace now a haunt of thieves. Alas, alas! poor manhood!—Spurgeon.

15—17. (15) Because, better, "yet surely." forgotten me, the pure and living water; ch. ii. 13, xvii. 13. vanity, a word meaning falsehood. and they, i. e. the false gods; said to do what the false prophets and priests really did. ancient paths, the old beaten track, as set forth in the law of Moses. paths, R. V., "bypaths." not cast up, raised, and prepared, so as to be fit and safe to travel on. (16) hissing, an expression of insult and contempt. wag . . head, in mockery and ridicule. (17) east clay has taken the predetermined shape. So then, it was God's purpose that Judea should become the proper scene for the manifestation of the Messiah, and its sons be fit to receive the Saviour's teaching and carry the good tidings to all lands. If, therefore, at any stage of the preparation, the Jewish nation took, in its free will, such a course as would frustrate this purpose of Providence, it was crushed by affliction into an unresisting mass, in which the formative process forthwith began again."—Payne Smith.

e 2 Kl. xvii. 13; Je. vii. 3.

"This language of the Jews involves the last stage of hardened wickedness."—Henderson.

d "Even among the heathen it was a thing unheard of, that a nation should lay aside its gods for foreign gods, though their gods are false gods."—Fausset.

a "A road cast up means one raised sufficiently to keep it out of the reach of floods, etc. We still call our chief roads highways, bec. when the country was undrained it was necessary to raise them above the level of the adjoining fields."—Spk. Com.

Is. lvii. 14, lxii. 10.

^b Job xxvii. 21, xxxviii. 24; Ps. xlviii. 7; Is. xxvii. 8.

^c Is. i. 15, lix. 2.

^d "They comforted themselves with the assurance that God had made these lasting institutions in His Church, and the Law declares they shall never perish. Le. vi. 18, x. 11; comp. Je. v. 11."—Grotius.

"If slander be a snake, it is a winged one—it flies as well as creeps."—Douglass Jerrold.

"Where it concerns himself, Who's angry at a slander makes it true."—Ben Jonson.

^a "These words of malediction, regarded as utterances of personal feeling, are not exempt from the taint and stain of human infirmity and passion."—Wordsworth.

^b "It redounds to the glory of God's justice that incorrigible sinners should meet with exemplary punishment."—Lowth.

"Suffering becomes beautiful when any one bears great calamities with cheerfulness, not through insensibility, but through greatness of mind."—Aristotle.

wind,^b fig. for the calamities of war and wasting judgments. the back, R. V., "look upon their back," driving them before me in anger, ch. ii. 27.^c

Man—perversion of his faculties.—According to the fable, the tail of the snake obtained precedence of the head and led the way in the creature's journeying. Being altogether blind the new guide dashed against a stone at one moment, and the next came violently against a tree, and at last drowned both itself and the head in the river of death. Here may be seen the unhappy condition of men in whom their baser nature is dominant, the animal controlling the intellectual. They invert the order of nature, they rebel against common sense; their course cannot but be unwise and dangerous, and their end must be fatal. God made man upright, and placed his thoughtful faculties aloft in the place of sovereignty, but man in his folly permits the appetites which he holds in common with the brute creation to reign supreme, while the mind, which ought to rule, is degraded to meanest servitude.—Spurgeon.

18—20. (18) said they, "the leaders among those whom Jeremiah had addressed," devise devices, or frame a plot to secure his ruin. not perish, etc., i. e. we need not fear if we put this troublesome Prophet away; we shall still have the Law, the priest, and the prophet among us.^d with the tongue, by carrying malicious reports about him to the king, Jehoiakim. (19) Give heed, appeal to God from heedless man. (20) digged . . soul, Ps. xxxv. 7. speak good, to plead in their behalf. "Behold the glaring contrast between my innocence of all hurtful intent, and their clamorous injustice, between my truth and their falsehood, my prayers for their salvation and their outcry for my blood."—Exp. Bib.

Slander—poisonous.—This slander is compared to poison—"the tongue is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison." The deadliest poisons are those for which no test is known; there are poisons so destructive that a single drop insinuated into the veins produces death in three seconds, and yet no chemical science can separate that virus from the contaminated blood and show the metallic particles of poison glittering palpably, and say, "Behold, it is there."—F. W. Robertson.

'Tis slander

Whose edge is sharper than the sword, whose tongue
Outvenoms all the worms of Nile; whose breath Rides on the posting winds, and doth belie
All corners of the world, kings, queens, and states, Maids, matrons; nay, the secrets of the grave
This viprous slander enters.

—Shakespeare.

21—23. "This passage is lyrical in form and expression and something must be allowed for the fact in estimating its precise significance."—Exp. Bib. (21) deliver, etc., Ps. cix. 10.^a "Let the calamities of war and famine, which Thou hast threatened, come upon them; I can intercede no more." and pour, etc., R. V., "and give them over to the power of the sword." put to death, R. V., "slain of death." (22) cry, such as arises in a city wh. is given over to be sacked. (23) thou knowest, in this the good man may ever find rest. forgive not, but execute Thy judgments on them.^b

Jeremiah's supplication.—In reading this supplication, we vainly try to escape from feeling what a ferocious, savage tone the words have. The dreadful meaning of the words, taken in their natural signification, is only too plain. We must by no means try to defend the prayer; we can only do something to extenuate the language by remembering the provocation the prophet had received, and the spirit of the age in which he lived. It is at least important to remember that he is distinctly conscious of having had good motives towards these enemies. He knew that God meant their good, and he, in speaking, had meant the same. It must be noticed also that, whatever his feelings, he expresses them as a prayer to God. He does not take retaliation into his own hands. His rights and interests, whatever they are, he leaves in the hands of Jehovah. He has, indeed, his own estimate as to what his enemies deserve, but he seeks that they may get their deserts in the way of manifestly

Divine judgments. Then he evidently spoke in great excitement. The wrath even of a good man may boil over into language which he would not wish to be held by in cooler moments. We may be perfectly sure that if, in after years, Jeremiah had been reminded of this prayer, and asked if he really, seriously meant that the innocent connections of his enemies should be ruthlessly slaughtered, he would have been quick to plead that his words were those of excitement. Shall it be thought wonderful that he should utter such a wish when the disciples of the meek and lowly Jesus had drunk in so little of the spirit of their Master as to wish fire from heaven to come down upon the inhospitable Samaritans? The passage under consideration is just one of those which strongly shows the difference which has been made by the sermon on the mount. If Jeremiah had been a Christian apostle instead of a Jewish prophet, his prayer would have been a very lamentable utterance indeed.—Pul. Com.

CHAPTER THE NINETEENTH.

1-5. (1) earthen bottle, Heb. bakbuk, a flask with a long neck, wh. took its name from the noise made by liquids in running out of it. ancients, R. V., "elders." ancients . . priests, i. e. the heads of the twenty-four courses.^a These were to be witnesses of the symbolic action. (2) Hinnom, ch. vii. 31. east gate, R. V. "the gate Harsith," i. e. "the gate of the potsherd," the place where broken pottery was thrown away. (3) ears . . tingle, 1 Sa. iii. 11; 2 Ki. xxi. 12. (4) estranged, etc., alienating it from God by introducing the idol worship. blood of innocents, children offered to Moloch, as vs. 5. (5) built also, comp. ch. vii. 31, 32.^b

The preliminaries of the breaking.—Spectators of the proper sort needed to be deliberately gathered together in the proper place. We may suppose that the elders of the people and of the priests were peculiarly responsible for all that concerned the safety of the city. This symbolic action was best performed before the select responsible few. As they went forth with the prophet they had time to ask themselves what the meaning of this unusual summons might be. It is, perhaps, a little to be wondered at that they should have gone with the prophet at all. And yet, although none might have quite the right motive for going, each would have his own motive, and so an acquiescent assembly be formed. God knows how to subdue and blend the motives of men for his own purposes. In some minds there would be a superstitious regard for the prophetic office; in others, curiosity would operate; and in a few there might be somewhat of the hearing ear and understanding mind. We are, then, to imagine this company going forth; and they do not go forth at random. It is not for mere seclusion they go out of the city. They are led to the very place which, because of the abominations practised in it, is to be one of the principal causes of future woe. Thrs we see how carefully God arranges the circumstances in which his truth is to be proclaimed.—Pul. Com.

6-9. (6) Tophet, ch. vii. 32. (7) I will make void, the Heb. verb means literally, I will pour out. It has been thought that Jeremiah here suited the action to the word, and having previously filled with water the vessel which he bore, now poured out the contents on the ground.—Camb. Bib.^c carcases, etc., ch. vii. 33, xvi. 4. (8) hiss, in contempt. (9) eat, etc., Le. xxvi. 29; De. xxviii. 53; La. iv. 10. "A ghastly reversal of natural affection, to which the severity of the siege will give rise."—Driver.

Fervency in preaching.—

Still thinking I had little time to live,
My fervent heart to win men's souls didst rive;
I preached as never sure to preach again,
And as a dying man to dying men! . .
Though God be free, He works by instruments,
And wisely fitteth them to His intents.

"Most wretched men Are cradled into poetry by wrong;
Then learn in suffering what they teach in song."
—Shelley.

"What nothing earthly gives, or can destroy, the soul's calm sunshine and the heartfelt joy."—
Pope.

^a 1 Chr. xxiv. 4.

^b Baal and Moloch were names promiscuously given to the same idol. Prob. Baal was the general name, and Moloch distinctive of one form of his manifestation.

"George Herbert built a new church near Spaulding, and by his order the reading pew and pulpit were both of an equal height; for he would often say, 'They should neither have a priority of the other; but that prayer and preaching, being equally useful, might have an equal honor and estimation.'"—Life of Herbert.

^c "Neumann supposes that Jer. carried the bottle to Tophet full of water, the symbol in the East of life, and at these words emptied it before the assembled elders."—Spk. Com.

"True eloquence consists in saying all that is necessary and nothing more."

A proud unhumbled preacher is unmeet
 To lay proud sinners humbled at Christ's feet;
 So are the blind to tell men what God saith,
 And faithless men to propagate the faith:
 The dead are unfit means to raise the dead,
 And enemies to give the children's bread;
 And utter strangers to the life to come,
 Are not the best conductors to our home.
 They that yet never learned to live and die,
 Will scarcely teach it others feelingly.

—R. Baxter.

* "By these figures is set forth the distinction between chastisements and judgments."

† Zep. i. 5.

"What a noble thing it is, the power of playing upon the souls and wills of men and rousing them to lofty purposes and holy deeds! Paul says, 'If I speak with the tongues of men and of angels and have not love, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal.' And we all know why. We have all felt the brazenness of words without emotion, the hollowness, the unaccountable unpersuasiveness, of eloquence behind which lies no love." — Drummond.

"Zeal for the public good is the characteristic of a man of honor and a gentleman, and must take place of pleasures, profits, and all other private gratifications. Whoever wants this motive is an open enemy, or an inglorious neuter to mankind, in proportion to the misapplied advantages with which nature and fortune have blessed him." — Steele.

"I find doing the will of God, leaves me no time for disputing about his plans." — George MacDonald.

10—13. (10) break, etc., as a sign of the entire and hopeless destruction of the city. "The people have the same custom of breaking a jar, when they wish to express their utmost detestation of any one. They come behind or near him, and smash the jar to atoms, thus imprecating upon him and his a like hopeless ruin." — Thomson, The Land and the Book. (11) made whole, or healed.* (12) as Tophet, ch. vii. 31, as it had been made unclean by idolatry so shall the houses of Jerusalem be defiled by corpses. (13) because of, better, even the very houses. roofs, flat, and often used as places for sacrifices.†

Purpose of the shattered vessel.—The thing was not done in mere wantonness and thoughtlessness, nor in passion, nor in carelessness. The prophet did not draw his lesson from a jar which some one else had happened to break. He got the vessel with the deliberate purpose, divinely put into his mind, of breaking it. This was far enough away from the purpose with which it was made, and the vessel, once shattered, could be of no further use for this first purpose; but in its destruction it served a far nobler end than if it had been carefully kept to carry water for many long years. Rightly considered, indeed, the vessel was not destroyed, but only its service divinely and wisely changed. So, looking from the symbol to the reality behind it, we must bear in mind that the capture of Jerusalem and the conquest of the land of Israel served certain purposes of God. He did not separate this people and give them this land that at last they might be scattered, even beyond the usual scattering of a conquered people. But when the scattering did come, he sought to make it evident that it was from his hand. It was not a mere chance of war, but something prepared for and prophesied—something to teach and warn the thoughtful among all nations. Israel's obstinacy.—It is hard to see how the religious instinct of men in this peculiar stage of belief and practice was to be enlightened and purified in any other way than the actual course of Providence. What arguments can be imagined that would have appealed to minds which found a fatal fascination, nay, we must suppose an intense satisfaction, in rites so hideous that one durst not even describe them; minds to which the lofty monotheism of Amos, the splendid eloquence of an Isaiah, the plaintive lyrical strain of a Jeremiah, appealed in vain? Appeals to the order of the world, to the wonders of organic life, were lost upon minds which made gods of the most obvious subjects of that order, the sun, moon, and stars; which even personified and adored the physical principle whereby the succession of life after life is perpetuated. —Exp. Bib.

14—15. "Here begins a fresh section of the narrative. Jeremiah has executed his commission, and now proceeds to the temple, where he repeats before the assembled people his announcement of the awful judgment." — Pul. Com. (14) in the court, indicating his fearless obedience, ch. xviii. 18. He chose the position in which he would be able to address the greatest crowd. (15) all her towns, or suburban villages.

Ministers of the Gospel.—An English merchant, who had occasion to visit Scotland on business about the year 1650, happened to hear three of the most eminent of the Scottish ministers of that age—Robert Blair, Samuel Rutherford, and David Dickson. Being asked, on his return, what news he had brought from Scotland, the gentleman, who had never shown any sense of religion before, replied, "Great and good news! I went to St. Andrew's, when I heard a sweet majestic-looking man (Blair), and he showed me the majesty of God. After him, I heard a little fair man (Rutherford), and he showed me the loveliness of Christ. I then went to Irvine, where I heard a well-favored proper old man, with a long beard (Dickson), and that man showed me all my heart." "The whole general assembly," says Wodrow, "could not have given a better character of the three men."—Whitecross. Preaching without heart.—"Fine sermon, wasn't it?" asked one of Farmer Peters' boarders, referring to a scholarly discourse with which the Meadowville meeting-house congregation had been favored that morning by a city clergyman. "Mebbe," returned Farmer Peters. "Why," persisted the boarder, "that man knows more about the Bible, he has made a deeper study of Biblical history and geography, than almost any other minister in this country." "Has he, now?" inquired Farmer Peters, mildly. "Well, then, I reckon the trouble must've been with me. You see I'd cal'lated I sh'd hear somethin' about the way to heaven, an' I only learned the way from Jerusalem to Jericho."

"Every stone is a witness of God's revelation, and every ruin a monument of his wrath."—Pierrotti.

"Alas! we were warned, but we recked not the warning, Till our warriors grew weak in the day of despair; And our glory was fled as the light cloud of morning, That gleams for a moment, and melts into air."

CHAPTER THE TWENTIETH.

1, 2. The narrative begun in xix. 14 continues through vs. 6. (1) Pashur, prob. head of the 16th course of priests. chief governor, better, deputy-governor. Heb. Pakid Nagid, or high priest's deputy. (2) smote, "the utterance of these warnings and threats in the very Temple was too much for the authorities of that place. They proceeded to inflict punishment in its ordinary forms, viz., stripes (no doubt the forty save one which kept safely within the limits permitted in Deut. xxv. 3; comp. 2 Cor. xi. 24) followed by confinement in the stocks."—Camb. B. the prophet, so called here for the first time. stocks, 2 Chr. xvi. 10; Ac. xvi. 24. high gate, or upper gate. Prob. the gate on the north of the Temple.

Huguenot persecutions.—The irreligious character of the Revolution which these and their fellow workmen and the Encyclopædists brought about, followed logically enough from the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, and a century and a half of Satanic persecution directed against the Huguenots—persecutions in the time of Louis XV., not the work of fanatics, but proceeding from a vicious king and a sceptical Court. The injury permanently done to the nation by such insensate intolerance is incalculable. The most earnest and devotedly religious spirits of France were either driven into exile or extinguished. When the earnest spirit of Protestantism was driven out, the earnest spirit of Catholicism decayed likewise; a mocking hypocritical uniformity took its place; license and corruption flourished unproved; and when deism and atheism arose, they found no antagonists worthy of respect. It were a melancholy thing to resign ourselves to the conclusion that so shameful a history as that of Louis XV., and the horrors of the French Revolution, were inflicted on a great people without any intelligible causes. One of the chief of these was the inhuman and odious persecution which the devoted adherents of an austere and sublime creed met with from the day of the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes.—Edinburgh Review.

3—6. (3) Magor-missabib, i. e. "terror on every side." Jeremiah means to say that Pashur would one day become an object of general horror. (4) terror, etc., interpretation of the name. We do not know the nature of his punishment. (5) deliver, etc., 2 Ki. xx. 17. strength, etc., R. V., "riches of this city, and all the gains thereof." labours, for produce of the labors. (6) thy friends, or partisans. lies, false assurances of peace and deliverance.

The wicked a terror.—Such terror befell Tullus Hostilius, King of Rome, who had for his gods Pavor and Pallor. Great pity but this should ever have had his gods at hand, since he was so fond of them. Richard III. and Charles IX. of France, a pair of bloody princes, were Magor-missabibs in their generations, as terrible at length to themselves as they had been formerly to others, and therefore could never endure

* 1 Chr. xlv. 4.

b "Poss. he was set over the several watches or guards of the priests and Levites: for they kept watch and ward in the Temple both night and day."—Lowth.

c "An instrument of torture with five holes, in wh. the neck, two hands, and two feet were thrust, the body being kept in a crooked posture."—Fausset. "And when religious sects ran mad, He held, in spite of all his learning, That if a man's belief is bad, It will not be improved by burning."—Prael.

"For modes of faith let graceless zealots fight; he can't be wrong whose life is in the right. In faith and hope the world will disagree, but all mankind's concern is charity."—Pope.

^a "The Prophet alludes to his reluctance to accept the prophetic office, wh. it required powerful inducements from Jehovah to overcome." — Henderson.

"I could have no temptation to run upon this errand without being sent, since it procures me nothing but ill-usage." — Lowth.

"Unnatural deeds
Do breed unnatural trouble; Infected minds
To their deaf pillows
Will discharge their secrets." — Shakespeare.

"This world," the liar to the laggard cried,

"Owes you a living.
Snatch it if you can!"

"An earlier debt," the voice of Truth replied,

"Must first be paid. You owe the world a man!"

"This above all, to thine own self be true;
And it must follow, as the night the day, Thou canst not then be false to any man." — Shakespeare.

^a "So the Jews often tried to persuade our Lord to say something that might form ground of accusation against Him: e. g. Mk. xii. 13—17." — Spk. Com.

^b Ro. viii. 31.

"That thou art blamed shall not be thy defect; for slander's mark was ever yet the fair; so thou be good, slander doth not approve thy worth the greater." — Shakespeare.

to be awakened in the night without music or some like diversion.—Trapp.

7—9. (7) deceived, better, persuaded.^a stronger than I, this and vs. 9 show us that the prophets did not speak of their own will. It was an influence which they could not resist that urged them forward, in spite of the certain ills that should follow to themselves. Compare xxiii. 29; so Amos iii. 8 ("The Lord God hath spoken; who can but prophesy?"), and 1 Cor. ix. 16 ("Necessity is laid upon me").—Camb. B. in derision, R. V., "I am become a laughing-stock all the day." (8) cried out, R. V., "For as often as I speak, I cry out; I cry, Violence and spoil." reproach, bec. the people said of Jeremiah, "He does nothing but groan." (9) R. V., "And if I say, I will not make mention of him, nor speak any more in his name, then there is in mine heart," etc. burning fire, Ps. xxxix. 3. He found that he could not resist the impulses of God's spirit.

Testimony for God.—Have we not known seasons when the impulse was strong on us to say something for God? It has come when we have been preaching or teaching, and we have broken away from the calm, not to say cold, tone in which we have been going on, and have spoken to those before us words which have come up from the very depths of our soul, and we have seen in the countenances of our children or our congregation that they, too, were conscious that they were being spoken to in a manner other than usual, and that portion of the day's lesson or the sermon has been remembered when all the rest has been forgotten. And sometimes this impossibility of keeping silence for God has come to us on the railway journey, in the quiet walk with a friend or child, or in social converse, or in the casual talk with a stranger into whose society we may have been for a while thrown; and then we have felt we must say something for God, and it has been said feebly, weakly perhaps, but nevertheless the testimony has been borne, the endeavor has been made. God would not let us be silent; we could not stay from speaking; necessity was laid upon us. These are in their measure instances of the same Spirit as that which moved the prophets and apostles of old, though in a far less degree. But it is evident how well it would be for us all who bear Christ's name to possess in far larger measure than we do this holy and irresistible impulse. The spur is what we too often need; how rarely the bridle! not the holding back, but the urging on.—Pul. Com. A reproach unto me, and a derision.—Words applied to his own case by the great Florentine, Savonarola, in one of his many sermons from the Cathedral pulpit during the last years of the fifteenth century, when the fortunes of his State, owing to the misdeeds of rulers and people, were reduced to a very low ebb. "Thy sins, O Florence, are the cause of these stripes. And now repent, give alms, offer prayers, become united. O people, I have been a father to thee; I have wearied myself all the days of my life to make known to thee the truths of the faith and of holy living, and I have had nothing but tribulations, derision, and reproach."—Clark's Savonarola. I never thought the world had been so wicked, when the Gospel began, as now I see it is; I rather hoped that every one would have leaped for joy to have found himself freed from the filth of the Pope, from his lamentable molestations of poor troubled consciences, and that through Christ they would by faith obtain the celestial treasure they sought after before with such vast cost and labor, though in vain. And especially I thought the bishops and universities would with joy of heart have received the true doctrines; but I have been lamentably deceived. Moses and Jeremiah, too, complained they had been deceived.—Martin Luther.

10—13. (10) This explains the temptation to keep silence. defaming, or the people talking together, Ps. xxxi. 13. report, etc., R. V., "Denounce, and we will denounce him, say all my familiar friends, they that watch for my halting. Peradventure," etc. my familiars, Heb. men of my peace. Ps. xli. 9. men of my acquaintance. enticed, i. e. misled, so that some good ground of accusation against him might be found.^a (11) with me, in this was assured safety, whosoever his enemies might be.^b for . . prosper, etc., R. V., "because they have not dealt wisely, even with an everlasting dishonor which shall never be forgotten." (12) triest, etc., ch. xi. 20, xvii. 10. opened, unfolded, and so committed. (13) Sing, in anticipation; bec. the Prophet was quite sure that God would work deliverance for him.

Thanksgiving for future blessings.—We may be thankful for blessings not yet received. Jeremiah closes his prayer with praise. No sooner has he asked for God's help than he feels so assured of receiving it that he anticipates it in imagination, and breaks forth into grateful song as though he were already enjoying it. This is a proof of genuine faith. Faith makes the absent seem near and the future appear present (Heb. xi. 1). It influences our whole being—the imagination among other faculties—so that it enables us to conceive the good thing trusted for so vividly and so confidently that the thought of it affects the mind just as strongly as if we saw the object with our eyes and grasped it in our hands. Such an effect is a test of the earnestness and faith of prayer. Some people could not be more surprised than by receiving the exact answer to their prayers.—Pul. Com.

14—18. (14) Cursed, etc., comp. Job iii. 3, x. 18.^c Wordsworth calls this "a passionate outbreak of human infirmity." (15) very glad, bec. of the possible future usefulness that seems to be in every new-born child. (16) cities, etc., Ge. xix. 25. cry, of alarm. shouting, of the warriors.^d (17) slew, etc., a fig. for his wish that he had never known the miseries of life. (18) Wherefore, etc., Job x. 18, 19.

An outburst of passionate grief (vss. 17—18).—These words may be compared with those which Job (iii. 3; compare x. 18) first uttered after his seven days of silent grief, although those passages are even more violent than this. The words however are sufficiently intense in their tone to cause some difficulty, especially when we compare them with those which have gone immediately before. Hence it has been sought to explain them as (i) words put by Jeremiah in the mouth of Pashur, (ii) words misplaced by copyists, (iii) words placed here by Jeremiah, although really uttered by him at a different time, and only introduced now by way of contrast to the happier feelings to which he had just given expression, and to remind him of the passionate trouble from which he had been delivered. These explanations are all rather desperate remedies. We are probably nearer the true explanation, if we say that the words express in the intense language of Eastern emotions the bitterness of the pangs which ever and again seized upon the prophet's mind and heart, as he contemplated his position and that of his country. Compare David's imprecation on Gilboa, as the scene of the death of Saul and Jonathan (2 Sam. i. 21).—Camb. B.

"Mid pleasure plenty, and success, Freely we take from Him who lends:
We boast the blessings we possess,
Yet scarcely thank the One who sends.

"But let affliction pour its smart,
How soon we quail beneath the rod!
With shattered pride, and prostrate heart,
We seek the long-forgotten God." —Eliza Cook.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-FIRST.

Here begins a new division of the whole book, concerning the time of the last King of Judah. 1, 2. (1) son of Melchiah, head of the fifth course. A different man from the Pashur of ch. xx. 1. (2) Nebuchadrezzar,^a "This form predominates in Jeremiah and Daniel, and is the only form found in Ezekiel. It is, in fact, the correct way of spelling the name, which is in Babylonian Nabu-kudura-ur, i. e. "Nebo, protect (or perhaps, 'has made') the crown."—Cheyne. according . . works, i. e. accomplishing our deliverance as in former days: comp. Is. xxxvii. 6. go up, withdraw his army from Jerusalem. Comp. the deliverance from Sennacherib.

"A lie should be trampled on and extinguished wherever found. I am for fumigating the atmosphere when I suspect that falsehood, like pestilence, breathes around me."—Carlyle.

^c "Job's words are more violent and passionate, and more directly directed against God than Jeremiah's." —Keil.

"This lamentation is written in poetical figures, and it is not to be looked upon as expressing indignation and malice, but rather mourning and sorrow." —Lowth.

^d "Let him be kept in alarm the whole day, not merely at night when terrors ordinarily prevail, but in daytime when it is something extraordinary." —Fausset.

^a "This prophecy was given prob. when, after having repulsed the Egyptians who brought succor to the Jews, the Chaldees were a second time advancing against Jerusalem, but were not yet closely besieging it." —Fausset.

"Let prayer be the key of the morning and the bolt of the evening."—Matthew Henry.

"Consult your friend on all things, especially on those which respect yourself. His counsel may then be useful, where your own self-love might impair your judgment."—Seneca.

"Good counsels observed are chains to grace."—Fuller.

b "Apparently this broke out at an early part of the siege, and was the result of the excessive crowding of men and animals in a confined space, with all sanitary regulations utterly neglected."—Spk. Com.

"A minister without boldness is like a smooth file, a knife without an edge, a sentinel that is afraid to let off his gun. If men will be bold in sin, ministers must be bold to reprove."—Gurnall.

Think of that Reformer, who, when some one said to him, "The whole world is against you," calmly replied, "Then I am against the world."

"Scriptures hard to be understood, must be explained by those that are plain."—Collins.

Note on chap. 21.—This commences a new division of the whole book. We here pass at once from the time of Jehoiakim to that of Zedekiah the last king of Judah, and the occasion on which (ver. 4) the city was attacked by the Chaldeans. Zedekiah under these circumstances follows the example set by Hezekiah towards Isaiah the great prophet of his time (2 Kings xix. 2) and sends Pashur and Zephaniah to Jeremiah to ask for a declaration of the future. The prophet replies in this and the three following chapters to the effect that the successive crimes of kings, prophets and priests, which he speaks of in detail, have secured for Judah the unenviable fate now visibly at hand, while there appear however from time to time gleams of brighter things.—Camb. B. God consulted in vain.—There is a moral necessity as well as a physical. No sane man would pray that two and two might make five. There are moral impossibilities equally impregnable. A just God cannot forgive the impenitent. All that God does must be for the best, and nothing can induce him to turn from what he knows is best. If men need chastisement God will give it them, though they may most earnestly desire to be delivered from it. It was good for the Jews as a discipline, as well as just as a punishment, that they should be carried captive to Babylon. Therefore, even if all thoughts of inflicting the penalties of justice were in abeyance, God's merciful intentions to his people would make their prayers for escape vain.—Pul. Com.

3—7. (3) Then, etc., a response was made that would be quite opposed to their wishes and hopes. (4) in your hands, i. e. the turning back will be on your part, not on the part of the Chaldeans. then, the weapons, i. e. the soldiers who had been outside the walls harassing the Chaldeans shall be driven back into the city. (5—6) I myself, and to this victory of the Chaldeans He would add His own vengeance, by pestilence. (7) not spare, ch. lii. 10, 27.

Armies of God.—In heaven He hath armies: of fire to burn Sodom; of floods to drown a world; of hailstones to kill the Amorites; of stars to fight against Sisera; the sun which stood still in Gibeon, and the moon in the valley of Ajalon, whilst Israel slew their enemies. Yea, there are heavenly soldiers. "Suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host." One of those celestial soldiers slew in one night above a hundred thousand Assyrians. Below He hath seas to drown Pharaoh; the earth to devour Korah; with fierce lions, fell dragons, hissing serpents, crawling worms, He can subdue His rebels. In hell He hath an army of fiends, though bound in chains, that they should not hurt the faithful, yet let loose to terrify the wicked. There was an evil spirit to vex Saul; foul spirits in the Gospel made some deaf, others dumb, and cast many into fires and into waters.—T. Adams.

8—10. (8) way . . death, De. xxx. 19. Here life means securing their life by passing over to the Chaldeans. (9) falleth to, goes and makes his submission to. life . . prey, as of something not belonging to one but grasped hastily and insecurely for booty. (10) against, i. e. fully purposing its complete destruction.

Jeremiah.—It was not indifference to his country, but attachment to its permanent interests, with the yet larger consequences wrapt up in them, which induced him to counsel submission. It was his sense of the inestimable importance of that sacred spot, with its sacred institutions, which caused him to advise every sacrifice for the sake of retaining it. He had the courage, so rare in political leaders, to surrender a part for the sake of preserving the whole—to embrace in his view the complete relations of the great scheme of the world, rather than fix his attention exclusively on the one pressing question of the moment. As there are times when the constitution must be broken to save the commonwealth, when the interests of particular nations or doctrines must give way to the preponderating claims of mankind or of truth at large, so Jeremiah staked the eternal value of the truths which Jerusalem represented against the temporary evils of the Chaldean dominion. It was a bitter pang, but the result seemed to him worth the cost.—Stanley.

11—14. (11) house, the royal house or family, who "appear, from this passage to have monopolized the judicial function."—Pul. Com.

(12) in the morning, better "every morning," the ordinary time for such business, while it was still cool. (13) inhabitant, the population of Jerusalem. rock, Jerusalem is called both "valley" and "rock" (comp. xvii. 3) because, although it is lower than the surrounding mountains, yet the hills on which it is built rise high above the plain. (14) forest, the Jewish fig. for stateliness, and used here for the stately buildings of Jerusalem.^a Notions of God.—There are two notions of God that have more or less prevalence among men. One represents Him as a vast organ located in the very centre of heaven, and giving forth majestic sounds when touched, and silent when not. The other represents Him as a Being that is never silent, never still, never unheard; One that has such a nature that if there were not an angel in heaven, if there were not a man on earth, if there were nothing in all creation, from side to side, there is that in Himself that would make Him for ever overflow with taste, and feeling, and love. The one ascribes to Him a nature that is merely susceptible of being called out upon the application of the motive. The other ascribes to Him a nature that pours itself abroad in the earth by reason of its own fulness and richness. It is the latter of these two ideas that I hold, and suppose the Scriptures to teach.—Beecher.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-SECOND.

Chaps. xxii—xxiv. were probably sent in writing to Zedekiah. They consist of prophecies uttered from time to time and now modified to suit present needs.—Camb. Bib. 1—5. (1) Go down, the palace on Zion was actually higher than the Temple, but regarded as inferior.^b (2) servants, or courtiers. these gates, the large space at the entry of the palace-courts, where the king would hold audience. (3) Execute, etc., ch. xxii. 12.^c Comp. vs. 17. (4) indeed, truly and heartily. enter, etc., ch. xvii. 25. (5) not hear, ch. xvii. 27. swear, De. xxxii. 40—42. this house, the royal palace.

Reproving kings.—This is a message for the king and for such people as live in palaces. Remarkable to notice how God's messengers have been brought into contact with the kings and grantees of the earth. Divinely guided, they have been able to find their way where others, even with large worldly influence, have been excluded. So Moses comes to deal with Pharaoh; Jeremiah with this king here; John the Baptist with Herod; Jesus with Pontius Pilate; Paul with Felix, Festus, and Agrippa. As God can make a way for his servants out of prisons, so he can also make a way for them into palaces. And once entered into the palace, the prophet was to address himself first and chiefly to the king. Kings have many counsellors, and their temptation is to say what may be agreeable to the royal ears. This king, maybe, had not one honest, disinterested man about him; if so, all the more need for Jeremiah's counsels.—Pul. Com.

6—9. (6) unto the king's house of Judah; rather, concerning the house of the King of Judah; i. e. the royal palace, which, on account of its height and its being constructed so largely out of cedar-wood (comp. vss. 14, 23), is called, "Gilead, and the summit of Lebanon," just as Solomon's palace was called "the house of the forest of Lebanon."—Pul. Com. art Gilead, Gilead was famous for its aromatic plants, its grassy uplands, and its abundance of sheep and cattle: so it is fitly taken as the emblem of prosperity. Lebanon, the usual metaphor for everything magnificent.^a cities, the judgment should include all the cities of Judah along with Jerusalem. (7) prepare, Heb. sanctify: appoint to execute My judgments. choice cedars, fig. for the princes and state officers: or perhaps for the chief dwellings. (8) many, etc.,^b De. xxix. 24—26.

The basis of a kingdom's prosperity.—You might as well quench the sun, and suppose that the world can get on without light, as to think that men or that nations can do without God. I tell you on the

^a "The metaphor of a forest is employed to convey the idea of a dense mass of buildings with which the city was filled."—Henderson.

"The unholy soul, like the mystical Babylon, makes itself a cage of unclean birds, and a habitation of filthy spirits; and if it continues to be such, it must, when it dislodges, take up its habitation with cursed spirits for ever in utter darkness."—Leighton.

^b It was also necessary to descend from the Temple-mountain in order to reach the palace on Mount Zion. Comp. 2 Chr. xxiii. 20.

^c "There can be no doubt that the Prophet has in his eye the oppressive measures adopted by Jehoakim for raising the tribute wh. Necho, king of Egypt, had imposed upon him (2 Chr. xxxvi. 8); and defraying the cost of the expensive buildings which he caused to be erected in Jerusalem."—Henderson.

^a "Though thou wert never so precious in my sight, wert as valuable for riches and plenty as the fat pastures of Gilead, and thy buildings as beautiful for their stateliness as the tall cedars of Lebanon, yet unless thy princes and people reform, thou shalt become nothing but ruin and desolation."—Lowth.

^b "The Gentile nations, more intelligent than you, shall understand that which you do not, viz.,

that this city is a spectacle of God's vengeance."—Calvin.

* 2 Ki. xxiii. 34.

4 Comp. the Shallum of 2 Ki. xv. 13, who only reigned one month.

* "The people perhaps entertained hopes of Shallum's return fr. Egypt, in wh. case they would replace him on the throne, and thereby free themselves from the oppressive taxes imposed by Jehoia-kim."—Fausset.

"A man may benefit the cause of God more by the faithful testimony of a Christian death than by fifty years of continued work."

2 For Jehoia-kim's history see 2 Ki. xxiii. 34—37, xxiv. 1—6.

a "From the absence of machinery the raising of materials for the upper stories was a difficult task, especially when massive stones were used." — Spk. Com.

b Comp. De. xxiv. 14, 15.

c "A beautiful red paint, called sinapis, bec., according to Pliny, it was first discovered near the town of Sinope, in Pontus. It was composed of quicksilver and sulphur, and must not be mistaken for the preparation of red lead, known amongst us by the name of vermilion." — Henderson.

evidence of all history that the streams of morals would dry up. It is turning from the best to the worst, deliberately loving darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil. There is not a single historian of that period (the fifteenth century) who does not admit that a fearful moral retrogression followed on the overthrow of faith. Let the English working classes once adopt atheistic principles, and I would not give five years' purchase for England's happiness or England's fame.—Farrar. Heathen idolatry.—A singular phenomenon, known as the Spectre of the Brocken, is seen on a certain mountain in Germany. The traveler who at dawn stands on the topmost ridge, beholds a colossal shadowy spectre moving on the summits of the distant hills. But, in fact, it is only his own shadow projected upon the morning mists by the rising sun, and it imitates, of course, every movement of its creator. So heathen nations have mistaken their own image for Deity. Their gods display human frailties and passions and scanty virtues, projected and magnified upon the heavens, just as the small figures on the slide of a magic lantern are projected, magnified and illuminated, upon a white sheet.

10—12. (10) the dead, i. e. for Josiah. This is the first of the sections which treat consecutively of the three immediate predecessors of Zedekiah. The sense of the verse is that even the fate of Josiah, who was slain in battle at Megiddo (2 Kings xxiii. 29), was preferable to that of his son and successor, who was carried captive to Egypt only to die in that strange land (2 Kings xxiii. 34).—Camb. B. goeth away, into captivity. This was the fate of Jehoahaz: from the captivity he never returned. (11) Shallum, most prob. a name of Jehoahaz: poss. given to him in irony by the Prophet bec. he only reigned three months. (12) die . . place, i. e. in Egypt. "He was the first king of Judah who died in banishment."

Recollection of home.—

How dear to this heart are the scenes of my childhood,
When fond recollection recalls them to view;
The orchard, the meadow, the deep tangled wildwood,
And every loved spot which my infancy knew.

—Woodworth.

Thou spot of earth, where from my bosom
The first weak tones of nature rose,
Where first I cropp'd the stainless blossom
Of pleasure yet unmix'd with woes,
Where, with my new-born powers delighted,
I tripp'd beneath a mother's hand—
In thee the quenchless flame was lighted,
That sparkles for my native land.

—Walker.

13—16. (13) Woe unto him, i. e. Jehoia-kim, who seems to have been a heartless tyrant. chambers, lit. upper chambers, wh. involved toilsome work in building. wrong, R. V., "injustice." service without wages, in olden times kings were accustomed thus to exact forced labor on public works from their people. (14) wide house, lit. "house of extensions." windows, lit. my windows, the language of boastfulness. Some think it should be "large or double windows." ceiled, roofed. vermilion, Eze. xxiii. 14. Red sulphuret of mercury. (15) reign, permanently and securely. closest, etc., "strivest to excel in cedar," i. e. Solomon whom he would outdo. eat and drink, the sign of enjoying life and peace. (16) know me? in choosing what was righteous he shewed himself acquainted with the character of Him whose pleasure he was doing.

Buildeth by unrighteousness.—Such injurious and therefore accursed builders were the pyramid-makers in Egypt. Tarquinius Priscus, Caligula, Nero, Phocas, who is said to have heard this voice of heaven—"Though thou shouldst erect thine edifice as high as heaven, yet sin that lieth at the foundation will soon overturn all." Bernard inveigheth against some in his time who did with great care and cost (erigere muros, negligere moros) build high manors, but not amend their manners.—Trapp. What we read of here makes us regard very dubiously many of the monuments of architectural power belonging to ancient civilization. We may suspect that only too many of them were constructed by forced labor. How much of unrequited toil there must have been, not only in temples, palaces, Pyramids, but also in such plainly useful works as roads, bridges and aqueducts! The results have been pleasing enough to the eye and rich in giving resources to the lovers of art; but their beauty becomes only deformity, if we have reason to believe that force, fraud and cruelty had a considerable share in the production of them. Even Christian cathedrals and churches may have been built in this way to a greater extent than we should like to think possible.—Pul. Com.

17—19. (17) covetousness, including all kinds of getting for his own pleasure or aggrandisement.^d violence, or crushing; applied to the liberties and rights of the people. Habakkuk (ii. 9—12) probably refers to this same king.—Cheyne. (18) not lament, the death of such a tyrant would only be felt as a national relief. Ah sister, a general expression, introduced here probably for the sake of the parallelism. (19) burial . . ass, the manner of Jehoiakim's death is not recorded,^e the point of the prophecy is that his body would not be buried.

The doom of the defrauder (vs. 19).—This said of Jehoiakim; his life and death suggestive of the romance of crime. I. The romance of fraud—many think the poorest way to get money is to earn it. II. The romance of libertinism. III. The romance of assassination.—Talmage.

The safety of right-doing.—Truth has no revolution in it. Right has no change in it. Justice is always safe and sure. If you must crucify Christ because He will not join your party, your faction, your Church, your religion, then crucify Him; but remember the eighteen hundred years of darkness, and revolution, and turmoil that followed His first crucifixion. The great battle of God Almighty is not fought out yet, and you will have more of it in your day. If you want peace, do right. If you will not do right, remember that God is the incendiary of the universe, and that He will burn your plans, and will by-and-by burn you with unquenchable fire.—Beecher.

The Sinner's Burial.—

Wrapt in a Christless shroud,
He sleeps a Christless sleep;
Above him the eternal cloud,
Beneath, the fiery deep.

Laid in a Christless tomb,
There bound with felon-chain,
He waits the terrors of his doom,
The judgment and the pain.

O Christless shroud, how cold!
How dark, O Christless tomb!
O grief that never can grow old!
O endless, hopeless doom.

O Christless sleep, how sad!
What waking shalt thou know?
For thee no star, no dawning glad,
Only the lasting woe!

To rocks and hills in vain
Shall be the sinner's call;
O day of wrath, and death, and pain,
The lost soul's funeral!

O Christless soul, awake,
Ere thy last sleep begin!

^d For Jehoiakim's character comp. Eze. xix. 6.

^e "Prob. he was taken prisoner in some valley during the siege, then killed, and his dead body cast into the highway."—Lowth.

"Some men are so covetous, as if they were to live forever; and so profuse, as if they were to die the next moment."—Aristotle.

"The covetous man lives as if the world were made altogether for him, and not for the world, to take in everything and part with nothing."—South.

"The covetous man pines in plenty, like Tantalus up to the chin in water and yet thirsty."—Adams.

O Christ, the sleeper's slumbers break;
Burst Thou the bands of sin.

—Bonar.

a "O Jerusalem, thou that art lifted up on high like Lebanon, and that makest thy nest in the stately cedars, that thinkest thyself secure, like an eagle which has built its nest in the loftiest trees of the highest mountain."—Wordsworth.

"A holy woman was wont to say of the rich—'They are hemmed round with no common misery; they go down to hell without thinking of it, because their staircase thither is of gold and porphyry.'"—Spurgeon.

"No sooner does the warm aspect of good fortune shine, than all the plans of virtue, raised like a beautiful frost-work in the winter of adversity, thaw and disappear."—Warburton.

b "The estimation in which signets were held is the point of the metaphor in the present instance."—Henderson.

c 2 Ki. xxiv. 15. "Who feels no ill Should therefore fear them; and when fortune smiles, Be doubly cautious, lest destruction come Remorseless on him, and he fall unpitied."—Sophocles.

"It is a preposterous thing that men can venture their souls where they will not venture their money."—William Penn.

20—23. (20) Lebanon, etc., the highest places in the surrounding country are mentioned as those from whence the people might see the victorious march of the Chaldeans and the failure of the Egyptian allies. Bashan, the northern part of the region beyond Jordan. passages, R. V., "Abarim," a range of mountains to the south of Gilead. lovers, Egypt and her allies. (21) prosperity, in thy prosperous days. thy youth, i. e. the time of the exodus. (22) eat up, strictly, shall pasture upon all thy pastors. The "wind" referred to is doubtless the parching east wind, the symbol of calamity, which is actually called a "sharp" wind in ch. iv. 11. (23) inhabitant, etc., a fig. of Jerus. in view of the palaces roofed with cedar fr. Lebanon. gracious, R. V., "how greatly to be pitied."

Man in material prosperity (vs. 21).—Here we have man in material prosperity—I. Addressed by Almighty God. 1. Be humble; 2. Be spiritual; 3. Be generous. II. Refusing an audience with his Maker. 1. Because I am happy as I am; 2. Because Thy voice will disturb me. Address the prosperous:—(1) Be wise in time; (2) Use the world as not abusing it, etc.—Thomas.

"Tom of Ten Thousand."—Among the thousand victims of that most disastrous adventure, the South Sea scheme, there was perhaps scarcely one more to be pitied than a native of Leeds, of the name of Thomas Hudson. In the early part of his life he filled a respectable situation as a Government clerk in London. While in this situation, he came into the possession of a large fortune by the death of an aunt; he then retired into the country, where he lived for some time very happily, until he unfortunately became an adventurer in the South Sea scheme; and so sanguine was he of its success, that he embarked the whole of his fortune in it. When the news reached him of the failure of his darling scheme, he left his residence in a state of distraction, and went to London. From this moment he became insane, and "Tom of Ten Thousand," as he called himself, wandered through the streets, wrapped in a rug, and leaning on a crutch, and without either shoes or stockings. In this state did the poor creature perambulate, even in the coldest weather, and crave assistance from the humane, until death released him from all his troubles at a very advanced age.—Percy Anec.

24—27. (24) Coniah, or Jehoiachin, son and successor of Jehoiakim. He surrendered to the Babylonians, and was carried captive to Chaldæa. signet, i. e. the royal ring used for sealing public documents." (25) give thee, as a captive. (26) mother, i. e. the queen-mother, who had great influence at the Jewish court. there shall ye die, "he was detained in prison at Babylon for thirty-six years, until released by Evil-Merodach, son and successor of Nebuchadnezzar, who nevertheless retained him in a sort of honorable captivity for the rest of his days (chap. lii. 31—34), which were probably not very many. At the end of two years Evil-Merodach himself was slain."—Camb. Bib. (27) desire to return, intimating that the bitterness of captivity shall partly be the "home-sickness" which they shall suffer.

Dr. Franklin.—It is recorded of Franklin that, when a young man expressed his surprise that a gentleman well known to them, of unbounded wealth, should appear more anxious after business than the most assiduous clerk in a counting-house, the doctor took an apple from the fruit basket, and presented it to a little child, who could just totter about the room. The child could scarcely grasp it in his hand; he then gave it another, which occupied the other hand. Then choosing a third, remarkable for its size and beauty, he presented that also. The child, after many ineffectual attempts to hold the three, dropped the last on the carpet, and burst into tears. "See there," said Franklin, "there is a little man with more riches than he can enjoy." The increase of painful care, anxiety, and trouble, generally bear at least an equal proportion to the increase of riches. The peace of the child was not broken until the attempt was made to obtain the grasp of the third apple; had but two been thought of, its happiness would have been great.—R. T. S.

28-30. (28) idol, R. V., "vessel." The prophet's human feelings are stirred; he cannot withhold his sympathy from the sad fate of his king. What! he exclaims; is it possible that this Coniah is treated as a piece of ill-wrought pottery ware (comp. ch. xviii. 4), and "hurled" into a strange land?—Pul. Com. (29) O earth, etc., the repetition expresses deep feeling, as if Jeremiah thoroughly joined in the lamentation over Coniah. (30) childless,^a he had children (1 Chron. iii. 17) but not to succeed him on the throne. "This is all the passage means;" and so in him the proper line of Davidic kings became extinct.^b

A call to hear the Word of the Lord (vs. 29).—I. The subject of the address. 1. The Word of the Lord is unwritten as well as written; 2. It is threatening as well as promising. II. The duty inculcated in the address. 1. To hear and understand; 2. To hear and obey; 3. To hear and make known to others. III. The style of the address, apostrophe. 1. The universality of its range; 2. The earnestness and affection of its spirit.—G. Brooks.

Clement and Conradin.—We may find a mediæval analogy to the situation at Jerusalem in the relations of Clement IV. to Conradin, the last heir of the house of Hohenstaufen. When this youth of sixteen was in the full career of victory, the Pope predicted that his army would be scattered like smoke, and pointed out the prince and his allies as victims for the sacrifice. When Conradin was executed after his defeat at Tagliacozzo, Christendom was filled with abhorrence at the suspicion that Clement had countenanced the doing to death of the hereditary enemy of the Papal See. Jehoiachin's friends felt towards Jeremiah somewhat as these thirteenth-century Ghibellines towards Clement. Moreover the charge against Clement was probably unfounded; Milman says of him, "He was doubtless moved with inner remorse at the cruelties of 'his champion' Charles of Anjou." Jeremiah too would lament the doom he was constrained to utter. Nevertheless he could not permit Judah to be deluded to its ruin by empty dreams of glory.—Exp. Bib.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-THIRD.

1-4. (1) pastors, here rulers.^c my pasture, they used the sheep as if they had independent rights over them, whereas the sheep were the Lord's, and they only under-shepherds, not owners. (2) scattered, etc., i. e. the wrong-doing of the rulers first led the people away from God into idolatry, and then brought on them judgments and captivity. driven, eastern shepherds never drive the sheep; the sheep follow them. (3) remnant, left out of the coming calamities. folds, better, pastures. fruitful, ch. iii. 16. "The fertility of the Jewish race in modern times has been a frequent subject of observation, and supplies the best comment upon Jeremiah's prophecy." (4) shepherds, such as Ezra, Nehemiah, etc. be lacking, "none shall be missing."

The present God (vs. 4).—I. The text proves the folly and sin of every form of idolatry. 1. It is senseless; 2. Sinful. II. The truth of the text should stimulate us to the cultivation of an incessantly devotional spirit. III. See in the text a source of sure consolation to the Christian amidst the sorrows to which he is exposed. IV. What a safeguard against the seductions of sin may these noble words prove. 1. We are self-tempted; 2. We are socially tempted; 3. We are Satanically tempted.—Homilist.

The unfaithful minister.—

"But the unfaithful priest, what tongue Enough shall execrate!
By solemn, awful ceremony, he Was set apart to speak the truth entire,

^a No son of Jeconiah's is found in the list of Jewish kings.

^b "Though Mesiah, the heir of David's throne, was lineally descended from Jeconiah, it was only through Joseph, who, though his legal, was not his real father."—Fausset.

How many hearers of the Gospel are like Pharaoh's lean kine! They seem to devour everything, and digest nothing.

^c Comp. Eze xxxiv. 2.

"Probably many who are called Gospel ministers are more chargeable with concealing truths than affirming direct error; with not properly building the house than wilfully pulling it down."—Witherspoon.

"Unfaithfulness is to undo our own souls as well as our people's."—Bridges.

"Preaching to some hearers is like throwing a ball against a wall; all that is said to them seems to rebound without producing any sensible effect. It is like playing upon a piano whose strings are all broken; there is no musical response. They are dead to the impressions which the truth is calculated to produce within them."—John Bate.

^a Ps. lxxii. 2; Is. xi. 6, xxii. 1.

^b "He by whom Jehovah works righteousness,"—Hengstenberg.

^c "This view equally contains the doctrine of the Godhead of the Messiah, but not so directly. For it implies the existence of a vicegerent of God upon earth, by whom God will impart that perfect righteousness, to wh. no man can attain by himself."—Spk. Com.

^d Je. xi. 8.

^e "External circumstances assist in urging on to ruin those who choose the dangerous path of vice."—Spk. Com.

"To believe that happiness exists in a feverish ambition rather than in a tender and simple affection is to believe that the immensity of the sea will more readily quench thirst than the pure limpid water of a humble fountain."—Emilo Castelv.

"You know I say just what I think, and nothing more nor less. And, when I pray, my heart is in my prayer, I cannot say one thing and mean another.

If I can't pray, I will not make believe."

—Longfellow.

By action and by word; and round him stood
The people, from his lips expecting knowledge.

They stood, for he had sworn, in face of God
And man, to deal sincerely with their souls;
To preach the Gospel for the Gospel's sake.

Most guilty, villainous, dishonest man!
Wolf in the clothing of the gentle lamb!
Dark traitor in Messiah's holy camp!
Leper in saintly garb! assassin masked
In virtue's robe! Vile hypocrite, accursed!
I strive in vain to set his evil forth."

—Pollok.

5—9. (5) The mention of good shepherds serves as the introduction to one of the few clear Messianic prophecies of Jeremiah. Besides this we have xxxiii. 15—18, and less plainly xxx. 9.—Camb. B. righteous Branch, comp. Is. iv. 2, xi. 1, liii. 2; Zec. iii. 8, vi. 12. and a King, etc., R. V., "and he shall reign as king and deal wisely." execute judgment, the characteristic of the kingdom of Christ. (6) his days, De. xxxiii. 28. name, Jehovah Tsidkenu, "the Lord our righteousness." Righteousness here means "personal holiness," rather than "justification." (7) Repeated from xvi. 14—15. (8) north country, the Prophet's description of Chaldaea. (9) R. V., "Concerning the prophets. Mine heart," etc. Here begins a new prophecy extending to vs. 40. prophets, i. e. the false prophets. like a drunken man, staggering under the words of Divine threatening which he had to utter. his holiness, R. V., "his holy words," on the unholy doing of the false prophets.

The Lord our righteousness (vs. 6).—I. Explain the title here given to the Redeemer. 1. The dignity of His nature; 2. The importance of His work; 3. The interest of His people in Him. II. Assign some reasons for the prominence of this title. Because it exhibits—1. A grand view of His character; 2. Views of His character which have been most virulently opposed; 3. But which must be cordially embraced by His people.—G. Brooks.

The Branch of David.—The glorious prophecy of the Messianic future which here bursts forth from Jeremiah, after his denunciation of his nation's sin and lamentation over its approaching calamities, is necessarily clothed in the language of the age, and viewed in an especial relation to contemporary wants. The people are suffering from bad rulers and an unrighteous government. A good king, administering his kingdom happily and justly, is promised for the golden age of the future.—Pul. Com.

10—12. (10) adulterers, those living in immorality and sin. swearing, or "the curse," wh. iniquity has brought upon it. pleasant places, R. V., "pastures." course, or mode of life. (11) profane, common and unholy by reason of iniquity. in my house, comp. 2 Ki. xxi. 5; xxiii. 12. (12) slippery ways, down which they must surely fall. driven on, pressed on by their very sins. visitation, or the set time of Divine judgment.

Cure of profanity.—A merchant on fitting out a ship for India, told the captain, at the time of making the contract for the voyage, that he must engage not to swear, nor have any swearing among the crew. This must be the law of the ship. The captain said he was willing to reform. "But how can I suddenly break off an inveterate habit?" he inquired. "I will take care you are reminded of your duty," replied the owner. "Wear the ring that I will give you, and let the law of the vessel be explicitly known." The ring was provided, bearing this motto, "Swear not at all." The vessel performed the voyage, and returned to port. On inquiry, it was found that there had been no profaneness on board, excepting a little within the first twenty days after sailing; and the old habit was entirely destroyed.

13—16. (13) folly, the stupidity of prophesying by Baal. Heb. word means that which is unsavory, comp. Job i. 22; xxiv. 12. (14) horrible thing, even worse things than in Samaria. strengthen, by the influence of their bad example. as Sodom, Is. i. 9. (15) wormwood, ch. viii. 14, ix. 15. (16), vain, R. V., "they teach you vanity," i. e. they deceive you.^a vision . . heart, i. e. one of their own invention, in wh. is no truth.

Strengthening the hands of the wicked (vs. 14).—I. All sin is horrible in its nature. II. To strengthen the hands and hinder the repentance of sinners is to oppose the great plan of God's government. III. It tends to the misery of mankind. IV. It is to operate with the spirit of evil who works in the children of disobedience. V. It is a horrible thing because we thus become partakers of their sins. VI. It is directly contrary to God's commands, and is marked with His peculiar abhorrence. Apply —1. To teachers of religion, to Christians in general, to heads of families, and the young; 2. It is also a horrible thing to be strengthened in evil-doing.—Lathrop.

17—20. (17) still, R. V., "continually." have peace, ch. vi. 14. imagination, R. V., "stubbornness." (18) who hath stood? meaning, "manifestly they have not." (19) R. V., "Behold the tempest of the Lord, even his fury, is gone forth, yea a whirling tempest: it shall burst upon the head of the wicked," i. e. it will soon reach Jerusalem. (20) not return, not be restrained or withdrawn.^b latter days, those following on the great calamities.

Governing of prophecy.—Unfortunately, when prophecy becomes professional in the lowest sense of the word, it is governed by commercial principles. A sufficiently imperious demand calls forth an abundant supply. A sovereign can "tune the pulpits;" and a ruling race can obtain from its clergy formal ecclesiastical sanction for such "domestic institutions" as slavery. When evildoers grow numerous and powerful, there will always be prophets to strengthen their hands and encourage them not to turn away from their sin.—Exp. Bib.

21—24. In vss. 17—20 Jeremiah has shown that these cannot be true prophets, because their message is diametrically opposed to the true revelation. He now proves it from the absence of any moral effect from their preaching. (21) ran,^a manifesting in the Prophet's work great eagerness. (22) my counsel, vs. 18. The sign of the true prophet is his influence in favor of morality. (23) at hand, then surely I see the wickedness of these false prophets. (24) hide himself, Ps. cxxxix. 7.^b

The true pulpit (vs. 22).—The text enables us to sketch an ideal preacher. I. His mental position, "If they had stood in My counsel." This mental position is—I. Most necessary; 2. Most ennobling. II. His grand work caused My people to hear My words. 1. A most difficult work; 2. A most urgent work. III. His true test. 1. Conversion from evil is the great want of mankind; 2. The great tendency of God's Word.—Thomas.

Soul-converting preachers.—There are preachers, by myriads and majorities, and deeply pious ones too, that never once in all their lives distinctly concentrated their purposes to the single point of converting men. Their efforts are to finish an eloquent sermon, to develop theological or Biblical truth, to thrill æsthetically an audience, to pour forth general religious emotion, to spread a popular fame, to gather crowds, to build a large church. Verily these have often their reward, namely success in their objects. But here is a lonesome preacher, who does not object to all these; but with or without them, by study, by closet, by pulpit, by pastoral work, some or all, he means to convert souls, and just so many as he can. Where this is attained all the other success is well enough. Where this is not attained, all the other success does not comfort him a penny; he goes off crestfallen and disappointed, indignant at the devil and himself. He will not stay there where Satan has beaten him: but he will go where, please God, he can get some souls. Maffitt, in his golden days, did convert his thousands, for that was his unerring aim. Bascom aimed to be the pulpit orator; his purpose terminated in the elaborate harangue, the thrilled audience, and the gathering crowd. He did not entertain the downright purpose of conversion. Summerfield terminated his effort with pouring his own rich religious emotions upon his melting congregation; but his emotion did not go forth into the sharp

^a "They delude you with vain promises of security," — Maurer.

^b "The expression is taken from a messenger that comes back without doing his business," — Lowth.

"Mystery such as is given of God, is beyond the power of human penetration, yet not in opposition to it." — Madame de Staël.

^a Je. xiv. 14, xxvii. 15, xxix. 9.

^b "Are ye so ignorant as to suppose that I can only see things near Me, viz., things in heaven, and not earthly things as being too remote?" — Fausset.

"Many a time when we stand in the pulpit some sinner may be present who will never hear the Gospel, or be exhorted to take care of his soul again. Should we not wish to pour upon such a one the whole force of our powers of persuasion; to speak to him emphatically, in the words of Baxter. 'as a dying man to dying men'?" — Christian Review.

"I believe it to be true that dreams are the true interpreters of our inclinations; but there is art required to sort and understand them." — Montaigne.

We would fain have the ministry of the Word of God surrounded with all that can serve to win attention, command reverence, and excite interest; we should be alert to look out for such things, and to secure them so far as we may; but let us see to it that they be but subordinate, that they all are used as aids to what is far higher and more important than themselves—that within this husk the pure grain of God's Word is enshrined and preserved.—Pul. Com.

"A good theological definition of the nature and effects of the labors and mission of an atheist or infidel is 'The devil's whetstone to sharpen dull preachers on.'" —Driver.

"The truths of the Bible are like gold in the soil. Whole generations walk over it, and know not what treasures are hidden beneath. So centuries of men pass over the Scriptures, and know not what riches lie under the feet of their interpretation."
—Beecher.

volition and the determined practical drudgery of action. And we think that this same analysis exercised upon every minister of strength and ability would, in nearly every case, bring out the answer to the question, What prevents this able minister from converting souls? He does not, in the full force of the word, try.—Wheeldon.

25—28. (25) dreamed, De. xiii. 1. (26—27) How long shall this be. This and the following verse consist rather of two questions, the first being broken off short and the second undergoing in the middle a change of construction. "How long (shall this state of things continue)? Is it in the mind of the prophets that prophesy falsehood and the prophets of the deceit of their heart—do they think to make my people forget my name by their dreams which they declare every man to his neighbor, as their fathers forgot my name by (reason of) Baal?"—Camb. Bib. (28) let him tell, i. e. as a dream, not as inspiration. chaff, dreams out of men's mere imaginations. wheat, truth communicated by God.

A suggested contrast (vs. 28).—The contrast in this passage admits of a threefold application. 1. To true and false doctrines; 2. To true and false teachers; 3. To true and false professors.

29—32. (29) like . . fire, as in vss. 19, 20, so here, the prophet contrasts the message of the false prophets with that of the true. The former flatter their hearers with promises of peace; the latter speak a stern but potent word, which burns like a fire, and crushes like a hammer.—Pul. Com. (30) steal . . neighbor, i. e. try to catch up and imitate the true Prophets, bec. they have no message of their own. (31) use, their tongue as a tool to make prophecies with. He saith, this phrase, borrowed from the true prophets, will, they expect, help their sayings to pass as genuine. By the side of the Party of the Nobles "perhaps opposed to them, perhaps allied with them, in that strange combination which often brings together, for purposes of political or religious animosity, parties themselves most alien to each other, was the great body of the Sacerdotal, and even of the Prophetic order. There were those who directly lent themselves to magical rites . . who recited the old prophetic phrases, often careless of what they meant."—Stanley's F. Ch. (32) lightness, R. V., "vain boasting."

The Bible like a fire and a hammer (vs. 29).—I. Like a fire heaven-kindled, all-penetrating, destructive, discriminating, refining, sanctifying. II. Like a hammer, heart hard and unimpressible, breaks down pride and self-righteousness. Apply:—I. Employ the Bible for our personal salvation; 2. Maintain its authority and power against all gainsayers; 3. Beware of immoderate expectations concerning effects.—G. Brooks.

Picture in Wyclif's Bible.—There is a picture frontispiece in Wyclif's Bible which was issued contrary to the commands of the church authorities. There is a fire burning and spreading rather rapidly, representing true Christianity. Around this spreading fire are congregated a number of significant individuals, all trying to devise methods whereby they can put the fire out. One with horns and tail represents Satan. Another is the Pope with his red-coated cardinals, who forbade the promulgating of the Bible among the common people. Another represents infidelity. At length one suggests that they all make a united effort to blow on the fire till they blow it out. The resolution is adopted and there they are with swollen cheeks and extended lips blowing upon the fire with all their might, but instead of blowing it out, they are blowing it up, and themselves out of breath. The fire is inextinguishable.

33—36. (33) forsake you, R. V., "I will cast you off," throw you as a burden away into captivity. (34) say, The burden, professing to be burdened with a Divine message. (35) answered, they were to speak in this form henceforth bec. the false prophets were making use of the word burden.* It had become cant and a new term was needed. (36) word . . burden, i. e. his derisive use of a prophetic phrase shall become a heavy burden to him.

Hints to preachers.—I. Preach Christ crucified, and dwell chiefly on the blessings resulting from His righteousness, atonement, and intercession. II. Avoid all needless controversies in the pulpit; except it be when your subject necessarily requires it; or when the truths of God are likely to suffer by your silence. III. When you ascend the pulpit, leave your learning behind you; endeavor to preach more to the hearts of your people than to their heads. IV. Do not affect too much oratory. Seek rather to profit, than to be admired.—Brewer.

* This had been Jeremiah's characteristic word, and Isaiah's. Prob. the false prophets took it up and used it partly in ridicule. "When God beckons you forward he is always responsible for the transport."—F. B. Meyer.

Duty of the clergy.—The London Times delivered, some time since, an excellent homily to the English clergy, which applies equally well to ministers of all countries and denominations: "The clergy are ready to rely upon everything rather than on the substantial claims of their message. One party take to gay dresses, banners, and processions; another to penny readings, political lectures, and concerts. They change from one thing to another day by day, and the result is only a weary waste of their own time, and the creation of a certain amount of social feeling which might equally be produced without the supernatural aid of the Church and religion. Religious truths, if they are what they are believed to be, cannot need all this trivial machinery to recommend them; and the religious convictions, which are to be of any value, must be produced and sustained by more simple and permanent means. If we may judge by the history of the Church, both in early and modern times, a man of truly religious feeling needs nothing but a room and a Bible to bring about the greatest results. The one thing essential is not new plans and daily changes, but a belief in the power of the permanent truths of the Christian religion, and a devotion to these alone. The personal example and the public teaching of religion are the only necessary instruments of a clergyman, and, in our opinion, the less he is diverted from these to novel devices and elastic webs the better."

37-40. (38) ye say, wilfully refusing in this to yield to My commands. (39) forget you, the Heb. may also be rendered, will assuredly take you up (make you a burden). forsake you, R. V., "cast you off," by withdrawing My protection from you, leaving you to your calamities. (40) everlasting reproach, ch. xx. 11.

The office of the preacher.—If a man wants to indulge in levities, or fantasies, or imaginations, let him do it: I am not beset with superstitions. But still, if a child would play mumblety-peg, I would not advise him to go into the graveyard and play on his father's and mother's graves. There are proprieties and adaptations, and if a man is called merely to please, if he is to be a pleasure-monger, even of ideas, let him take the lecture-room or the theatre, let him go where pleasure is the normal end. But to take the Church, to take the crucified Saviour, to take the everlasting issues of human life, and in the midst of these tremendous verities, think of nothing but soft sentences, and sweet figures, and sentimental graces, and preaching these short sermons that please everybody, and particularly the closing passages of them—this I do not think is salutary. But if there is any case in which it is allowable, it is the case of men that preach for the sake of pleasing, and for that only. But they are said to be refined. Yes, they are refined. Oh! but they are said to be eloquent. Yes, they are eloquent. Oh! but they are said to be attractive. But when they stand on that awful, final day, between the living and the dead, before God Almighty's judgment, and all God's angels are gathered together, and there is nothing to stand between them and damnation, except elegance, and refinement, and pleasant voices, and words, and gestures—in that hour, will it seem to them to have been worth their while to have bought their destruction at such a price.—Beecher.

The Church's power.—A factory is sometimes linked by a belt to a powerhouse. Christ is the centre and source of all power for his church. The Holy Ghost is the belt to the church, carrying up our needs and prayers, and bringing down Christ's answers and fullness. As I believe that wind power is the best for sail-boats, and steam power is the best for engines, so I believe that the Holy Ghost is the best power for churches. For a church to bring in an opera-singer or amusements and secular appliances to make the church go is as absurd as for an ocean steamer to uncouple its shaft from the engine and couple it on to the donkey-engine.—A. J. Gordon.

"Point to without trying to prop up the cross."—Theodore L. Cuyler.

"No condemnation can be too strong for the treachery and dishonesty of those persons who appropriate the consecrated phrases of Christianity as a subterfuge under which to attack its spiritual truths. Let us be careful in using the Bible, not to read our own thoughts into the text, but to search simply for the original meaning of it."—Pul. Com.

"A church is not of much account where the minister does all the preaching, and nearly all the praying, and all the visiting."—D. L. Moody.

"Winter brings blessings, so the chill Of dark adversity;—from its cold grasp The soul revives reanimate,—more strong, And better armed."

—F. A. Mackay.

"I have read of a fountain that at noonday is cold, and at midnight it grows warm. So many a precious soul is cold Godward and Heavenward in prosperity, and grows warm in the midnight of adversity."—Brooks.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-FOURTH.

* "The bad figs may have been those of the sycamore tree, which, unless they are punctured as they ripen, contain an acrid juice which renders them uneatable. — Tristram.

"This prophecy was designed to encourage the despairing exiles, and to reprove the people at home who prided themselves as superior to those in Babylon, and abused the forbearance of God." — Fausset.

A bishop of the Church of England, who was tutor to a princess, said to her, "I find that my instructions have made you but little better." She replied, "Ah! but my lord, you do not know how much worse I should have been without them."

b "To have a kindly feeling towards the object regarded." — Henderson.

"Moralsympathy is the true key to knowledge of God. Reverence, humility, love, trust, submission, affections of the heart, are its conditions. Even right ideas of God depend very materially on the state of the heart towards him." — Pul. Com.

* Comp. De. xxviii. 25, 37.

"Here there is a well-beaten track under our feet. Let us keep it. It may not be quite the shortest way; it may not take us through all the grandeur and sublimity which "Again Jeremiah's ungrateful task is to take up an attitude of direct opposition to the king (comp. ch. xxii. 13-30), though, indeed, Zedekiah personally is so weak and dependent on others that he neither deserves nor receives a special rebuke. He and all the people that are left are likened to very bad figs, the good figs—the exiles—having been picked out and sent to Babylon, whence they will one day be restored." — Pul. Com. 1-3. (1) after, etc., 2 Kings xxiv. 12; 2 Chr. xxxvi. 10. (2) One basket, of the two (vs. i.) put in the appointed place for offerings of firstfruits in the forecourt of the Temple. (2) first ripe, the fig bears three crops, of wh. the first is considered the best."

Pictorial illustration.—Saints Cyril and Methodius, the earliest apostles of the Slavonic tribes,—the Moravians, Bohemians, Hungarians, and Bulgarians,—were two Greeks monks of the order of St. Basil, and connected in a very interesting manner with the history of religious art. Cyril was learned and eloquent, a philosopher and a poet: Methodius was considered an excellent painter of that time, when his country produced the only painters known. These two monks departed together, by order of the patriarch of Constantinople, to preach to the savage nations along the shores of the Danube. Bogaris, the king or chief of Bulgaria, having heard of the art of Methodius, required of him that he should paint a picture in the hall of his palace; and that it should be "something terrible," to impress his subjects and vassals with awe. Methodius accordingly painted the Day of Judgment, representing at the summit our Lord seated in glory, and surrounded with angels: on His right, the resurrection of the blessed; and, on His left, the doom of sinners, swallowed up in flames, and tormented by the most hideous demons. When the king desired to have the interpretation of this "terrible" picture, Cyril, who was as eloquent in words as Methodius was in colors and forms, preached to the barbarian monarch and his attendants such a sermon as converted them all on the spot. Their mission was extended successfully through the surrounding nations. While Methodius painted the doctrines of the Christian faith, Cyril explained them in the language of the people.—Mrs. Jameson.

4-7. (5) acknowledge, R. V., "regard the captives of Judah," as one looks with pleasure on good fruit." (6) bring.. land, fulfilled in the restoration under Zerubbabel, etc. (7) return.. heart, i. e. heartily give up their idolatry, and give themselves again sincerely to the worship of Jehovah. The return is to be both outward, to Jerusalem, and spiritual, to their allegiance.

Prosperity restored.—He sets his "eyes upon them for good." Men shrink from the eyes of God as from a keen and fatal scrutiny. But God is not always looking as the Judge. He beholds his children with love. There is a wonderful tenderness in this gaze, like that of a mother fondly watching over her suffering infant—a deep pity for sorrow, an earnest care to ward off harm, a kindly will to bestow all real good. It is blessed indeed to be so beheld by God. There are men possessed of such great power and influence that some consider a favorable look from them sufficient to make their fortune. What must be the effect of God setting eyes on a man for good?

8-10. (8) evil figs, by this term Zedekiah, and the remnant still in Judæa, are indicated. They were left in their corruptions, of Egypt, whither some had fled during the wars. (9) removed, R. V., "tossed to and fro," driven hither and thither, at home nowhere. for their hurt, these were to be scattered without hope of return." (10) be consumed, so as never to be gathered together again.

Impenitence.—The reason why a wicked man doth not turn unto God is not because he cannot (though he cannot), but because he will not. He cannot say at the day of judgment, "Lord, thou knowest I did my best to be holy, but I could not." The man that had not on a wedding-garment could not say, "Lord, I was not able to get one." But he was "speechless."—W. Fenner. A cure for a hard heart.—I was weary of a cold heart towards Christ, and his sacrifice, and the work of his Spirit—of a cold heart in the pulpit, in secret prayer, and in study. For fifteen years previously I had felt my heart burning within, as if going to Emmaus with Jesus. On a day ever to be remembered by me, as I was going from Dolgelly to Machynlleth, and climbing up towards Cadair Idris, I considered it to be incumbent upon me to pray, however hard I felt my heart, and however worldly the frame of my spirit was. Having begun in the name of Jesus, I soon felt as it were the fetters loosening, and the old hardness of heart softening, and, as I thought, mountains of frost and snow dissolving, and melting within me. This engendered confidence in my soul in the promise of the Holy Ghost. I felt my mind relieved from some great bondage: tears flowed copiously, and I was constrained to cry out for the gracious visits of God, by restoring to my soul the joy of his salvation.—Christmas Evans.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-FIFTH.

1—3. (1) fourth year, comp. Da. i. 1. "The date assigned to this chapter is remarkable; it is the fatal year of the battle of Carchemish, which brought Syria and Palestine within the grasp of Babylon," 605 B. C.—Pul. Com. (3) From . . year, nineteen years in Josiah's reign, three months of Jehoahaz's, and four years of Jehoiakim's. rising early, the fig. for earnestly, ch. vii. 13.

Venn's account of Whitefield.—To give your ladyship any just description of what our eyes have witnessed and our hearts felt, within the last few days, exceeds my feeble powers. My inmost soul is penetrated with an overwhelming sense of the awful power and presence of Jehovah, who hath visited us with the blessed effusion of His Spirit, on this occasion, in a very eminent manner. Under Mr. Whitefield's first sermon, there was a visible appearance of much soul-concern among the immense crowd that filled every part of the burial-ground; so that many were overcome with fainting; others sobbed deeply; some wept silently; and a solemn concern appeared on the countenance of almost the whole assembly. When he came to press the injunction in the text (Isa. li. 1) upon the unconverted and the ungodly, his words seemed to cut like a sword upon several in the congregation; so that, whilst he was speaking, they could no longer contain, but burst out in the most piercing, bitter cries. At this juncture Mr. Whitefield made a pause of a few seconds, then burst into a flood of tears. During this short interval, Mr. Madan and myself stood up, and requested the people as much as possible to restrain from making any noise. Twice afterwards we had to repeat the same counsel, still advising the people to endeavor to moderate and bound their feelings, but not so as to resist or stifle their convictions. Oh, with what eloquence, what energy, what melting tenderness, did Mr. Whitefield beseech sinners to be reconciled to God—to come to Him for life everlasting, and rest their weary souls in Christ the Saviour! When the sermon was ended, the people seemed chained to the ground. Mr. Madan, Mr. Talbot, Mr. Downing, and myself, found ample employment in endeavoring to comfort those who seemed broken down under a sense of guilt. We separated in different directions among the crowd, and each was quickly surrounded by an attentive audience, still eager to hear all the words of this life. Of such a season as this it may well be said, "I have heard thee in a time accepted, and in the day of salvation have I succoured thee: behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation."

4—7. (4) prophets, "the people's wickedness was aggravated yet further by the fact that the call to repentance and amendment had come not from Jeremiah only, but from many other accredited messengers of God. Compare vii. 13, 25, xxxv. 15." Besides Jeremiah, Urijah, Zephaniah, and Habakkuk had prophesied during this period. (5) Turn, etc.,^a 2 Ki. xvii. 13; Je. xviii. 11, xxxv. 15. (6) works . . hands, a severe and scornful description of the idols, and more widely of "the systematic enbolder pedestrians might see: we may miss a picturesque waterfall, a remarkable glacier, a charming view; but the track will bring us safe to our quarters for the night."—Dale.

"The door of heaven shuts from below, not from above."—Williams, of Wern.

"Judge not the preacher; for he is thy judge: if thou mislike him, thou conceiv'st him not. God calleth preaching folly. Do not grudge to pick out treasures from an earthen pot. The worst speak something good; if all want sense, God takes a text and preaches patience."—Herbert.

"A French officer whose ship had been taken by Nelson was brought on board Nelson's vessel and he walked up to the great admiral and gave him his hand. 'No,' said Nelson, 'your sword first, please.' That is the gospel. Many people would take Christ's hand and say he is a noble character. Give up your rebellious will, first; admit your guilt; then Christ will take your hand and never let go."—John McNeil.

^a "The great summons of God to mankind whether given by the Prophets of old, by John the Baptist, or by the Apostles and their successors."—Spk. Com.

During a flood in St. Petersburg, the sentinel before the palace refused to leave his post (though ordered so to do by the empress, and death by drowning seemed imminent) till relieved by the proper officer.

gement in idolatrous practices." (7) not hearkened, this was evident, for they had not obeyed.

The value of faithfulness.—It is the life of Paul, not his death that is of value to the world. The death-bed testimony impresses us only as it is the outgrowth of a life. Life is the test. Triumphant living is better than triumphant dying. Those who have fought the good fight are ready to be offered. Upon removing the ashes of Vesuvius from a buried city, there was found a Roman sentinel in armor, standing for eighteen hundred years in the place where his captain had placed him upon that fatal morning,—standing to his charge amid the terror and ruin of the perishing city. To do the present duty, to die doing it, is more important than to behold unutterable glories in the dying moment.—E. P. Tenney. The call to repentance.—In the second century, Celsus, a celebrated adversary of Christianity, distorting our Lord's words, complained, "Jesus Christ came into the world to make the most horrible and dreadful society; for he calls sinners, and not the righteous; so that the body he came to assemble is a body of profligates, separated from good people, among whom they before were mixed. He has rejected all the good, and collected all the bad." "True," said Origen, in reply, "our Jesus came to call sinners—but to repentance. He assembled the wicked—but to convert them into new men, or rather to change them into angels. We come to him covetous, he makes us liberal; lascivious, he makes us chaste; violent, he makes us meek; impious, he makes us religious."—Exp. Bib.

A faithful clerk.—As a clerk in a country store in Illinois Abraham Lincoln quickly became known for his honesty. He was truthful in what he said about the goods, he gave good weight, and in particular, he lost no time and spared no pains in correcting mistakes.

He was closing the store one evening when a woman called for a half a pound of tea. In the morning he saw from the weight in the scale that he had given her only a quarter of a pound. Leaving everything else, he weighed out the other quarter and carried it to her.

Another customer paid him six and one-quarter cents more than was his due, and when the store was closed at night he hastened to correct the mistake, although she lived two miles away.—Anon.

a "The sound of the hand-mill is a familiar one in the East, and its cessation is aptly mentioned by the Prophets as one of the signs of utter desolation."—Van Lennep.

b "No night-light; so universal in the East, that the poorest house has it burning all night."—Fausset.

Job xxi. 17.

"There are some diseases that are called the reproaches of physicians; and there are some people that may be truly called the reproaches of ministers; and those are they who are great hearers, and talkers, and admirers of ministers, but never obey the doctrines delivered by them."—T. Brooks.

8—11. (9) families . . north, ch. i. 13, 14, races from the great region watered by the Tigris and Euphrates. my servant, we must take "servant" to be applied to Nebuchadnezzar in a lower sense than to the other bearers of the title. The Hebrew 'ebhed may be either "slave" in something approaching to the terrible modern sense, or in the sense in which Eliezer was one (i. e. little less than a son, and a possible heir, Gen. xxiv. 2; Gal. iv. 1), and which is still in full force in Arabia.—Pul. Com. astonishment, ch. ii. 12, v. 30. hissing, ch. xviii. 16, xix. 8. (10) millstones, "mention of the millstones" and of the candle (lamp)^b is added, to increase the force of the warning. Not only all sign of mirth, but also of domestic labor and social cheer, should vanish. See the same description somewhat amplified in Rev. xviii. 22, 23.—Camb. Bib.

Delaying repentance.—"Now," thou resolvest, "I will hereafter look to it better than I have done before." Alas, this will for hereafter is no will! First: because it is only to shuffle off the willing of the present. The heart is unwilling to obey, and therefore it puts off the commandment to the future, not for any desire that it hath to do it hereafter, but only because it is unwilling to do it for the present; like a man that is unwilling to lend. "I'll lend you hereafter," says he, only because he would shuffle off lending at all. Secondly: this will for hereafter is no will, because it goes without God's will. God's will is now; thine is hereafter. "He that will not when he may, when he would he shall have 'Nay.'" Take heed lest when thou wouldst fain be pardoned, and criest, "Lord, open to me," thou dost find thyself too late.—William Fenner. Hearing a voice from the unseen.—Lady Henry Somerset, whose philanthropies and eloquence in the cause of humanity have won for her world-wide fame, was during her earlier life a woman of the world, given up to fashion and pleasure. Inheriting immense wealth, she had the power to gratify every desire, but restless and unsatisfied, she began to question the meaning of life. Turning to the Bible and studying it earnestly, she soon felt the need of religious consecration and of greater motive power; but under the influence of the spirit of criticism about her, she found her faith weakening and her mind clouded by perplexity and doubt. One day while, alone in her garden, she was pondering the mysteries of life and questioning the very existence of God, she heard a voice say distinctly: "Act as if I were, and you shall know that I am." Though the voice was not audible to the material ear, Lady Henry declares that she heard the words with the ear of her soul as distinctly as though they had been spoken, and the sentiment they expressed made a powerful impression upon her mind. The more she thought of the mysterious utterance the more it seemed to her that only divine wisdom could have prompted the words, and she determined to live by their counsel. Soon her faith in God and Christ returned, and she entered into the life of active benevolence which is now universally recognized, and has been followed by such beneficent results. To every earnest yet perplexed and doubting soul, the voice which spoke to this devoted woman speaks today: "Act as if I were, and you shall know that I am."—Anon. Voices. —There is the voice of God, and the voice of Nature. I cannot be wrong if I listen to them. Sometimes, when uncertain of a voice from its very loudness, we catch the missing syllable in the echo. In God and Nature we have Voice and Echo. When I hear both, I am assured. My sense of hearing does not betray me twice. I recognize the Voice in the Echo; the Echo makes me certain of the Voice; I listen and I know.—Drummond.

12—14. (12) seventy years, this number may be intended as a figure for the complete period ordered in the Divine Providence.^a The number seven is in Scrip. the symbol of perfection or completion. punish, etc.^b comp. Isa. x. 5, 16. perpetual desolations, vs. 9,^c true of its condition to the present day. (13) And I will bring, etc. "Clearly this verse cannot have formed part of the original prophecy, but must have been added whenever the collection of prophecies against foreign nations finally assumed its present form."—Pul. Com. (14) serve themselves, i. e. they shall reduce the Chaldeans to slavery. This was fulfilled in Cyrus and his confederates. also, R. V., "even of them." deeds, treatment of the Jews.

Fulfillment of prophecy.—Two rabbis, approaching Jerusalem, observed a fox running upon the hill Zion. And Rabbi Joshua wept; but Rabbi Eliezer laughed. "Wherefore dost thou laugh?" said he who wept. "Nay, wherefore dost thou weep?" demanded Eliezer. "I weep," replied the Rabbi Joshua, "because I see what is written in the Lamentations fulfilled: "Because of the Mount Zion, which is desolate, the foxes walk upon it." "And therefore," said Rabbi Eliezer, "do I laugh; for, when I see with mine own eyes that God has fulfilled His threatenings to the very letter, I have thereby a pledge that not one of His promises shall fail; for He is ever more ready to show mercy than judgment."

15—17. (15) wine . . . fury, R. V., "the cup of the wine of this fury."^a This figure expresses "stupifying judgments."^b to drink it, this offering of the wine-cup took place in vision. (16) moved, R. V., "and reel to and fro," having all the symptoms of drunkenness. sword, the symbol of war. (17) took I the cup, not however in any literal sense, just as the cup was not a literal cup, but along with its contents a figurative expression for the wrath of God as manifested in a national subjugation. Hence the view, which has been maintained, that Jeremiah presented a cup of actual wine to the ambassadors of these various powers, assembled, according to this hypothesis, for counsel in Jerusalem, may be dismissed, as utterly improbable. The figure was sufficiently carried out by the proclamation of God's message in Jerusalem, whence it might be conveyed to the other nations united by a common danger.—Camb. B.

The wine-cup of fury.—Though "God is angry with the wicked every day," he is forbearing, and restrains his wrath till it cannot longer be justly withheld. Then we may suppose that the longer it has been accumulating the worse will be its outflow. Men have been treasuring

"Those auditors who can find nothing to do but note elegant words and phrases, or perhaps an ill grace of gesture go away with little pleasure, and no profit."—Bp. Hall.

^a Comp. Da. ix. 2, 24.

^b "Though the Chaldeans and other nations were instruments in the hands of God in punishing the Jews, yet, as they had no knowledge of this fact, but merely gratified their cruel and ambitious passions, they, in their turn, thereby contracted guilt for which Jehovah threatens to punish them."—Henderson.

^c Je. l. 40.

^a Ps. lx. 3; Je. xiii, 12, 13.

^b "God's judgments are metaphorically represented by a cup of intoxicating liquors, bec. they fill men with astonishment, and bereave them of their common judgment and discretion."—Lowth.

Ps. lxxv. 8; Is. li. 17; Je. xlviii. 26, xlix. 12, Ha. ii. 16; Re. xiv. 10, xvi. 19.

"This is an allusion to those intoxicating draughts which used to be given to malefactors just before their execution, to take away their senses."—Lewis.

a "Jerusalem must first drink of it, because judgment begins at the house of God."—Wordsworth.

"This clause may, however, have been inserted by Jer., at his final revision of his prophecies in Egypt."—Fausset.

b "Auxiliaries."—Gesenius.

c "The islands and maritime regions where the Phœnicians had planted colonies."—Henderson.

"Contempt is frequently regulated by fashion."—Zimmerman.

"I am no courtier, no fawning dog of State, to lick and kiss the hand that buffets me; nor can I smile upon my guest, and praise his stomach, when I know he feeds on poison, and death disguised sits grinning at my table."—Sewel.

a Je. ix. 26.

b "A mixture of people in that part of Arabia, properly called the Desert, consisting of the nations called in Scrip. by the general name of the children of the East."—Lowth.

c Syr. renders Zamron, which may connect with Zimran, see Ge. xxv. 2.

up wrath against the day of wrath. Such seasons of the outpouring of the cup of fury may be noted in history; e. g. in the invasions of Nebuchadrezzar, the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, the sacking of Rome by Alaric. It is important to note that this happens in seasons. It is not always harvest. But the spring sowing prepares for the autumn reaping. We may be now preparing for an outburst of wrath. How foolish not to guard against it because it has not yet come! Delay of judgment is no excuse for doubt about it, for this is part of the Divine method of action.—Pul. Com.

18—22. (18) "We may perceive a certain system (south to north) in the enumeration. After Jerusalem and Judah the prophet takes in order the furthest south (Egypt), (southeast (Uz), southwest (Philistines), east (Edom, etc.), west (Tyre, etc.), east and northwards (Dedan, etc. to the Medes), and finally the north far and near."—Camb. Bib. kings,^a poss. to include Jeconiah and Zedekiah, the successors of Jehoiakim, as well as that monarch. as . . day, may have been a later insertion of Jeremiah—after the fulfilment of this prophecy (Camb. B.), or the addition of some later writer. (Cheyne.) (19) Pharaoh, the general title of the Egyptian kings, like Shah, or Czar. (20) mingled people, Heb. Ereḇ, prob. foreign mercenaries, serving in Egypt,^b or the mixed races on the shores of the Red Sea. Uz, a district of Edom. Philistines, on the southern borders of the Mediterranean. Azzah, or Gaza. remnant of Ashdod, this town had been captured and destroyed by Psammetichus, after a siege of 29 years. (Herodotus.) (22) Tyrus . . Zidon, the great Phœnician seaports. isles, or coast-lands of the Mediterranean.^c

The growth of sin.—The thistle is the emblem of Scotland, and may be said to be worshiped by all patriotic Scotchmen. Well, it happened that a Scotch resident of Melbourne, while visiting the old country, took it in his head to carry a thistle with him on his return to Australia. So he placed the plant in a pot, and watered it carefully every day during the voyage from London to Melbourne. When he arrived, his performance was noticed in the newspapers, and a subscription-dinner was arranged in honor of the newly arrived plant. About 200 Scotchmen sat down to dinner at which the thistle was the centerpiece and the great object of attraction. The next day the thistle was planted with a great deal of ceremony in the public garden of Melbourne, and it was carefully watched and tended by the gardener who happened to be a Scotchman. The thistle blossomed and everybody rejoiced. The seeds of that thistle were borne on the breezes and all over the colony of Victoria, they found a lodging in the soil, grew, and prospered and sent out more seeds. That thistle has been the cause of ruin to many a sheep and cattle-run all over Australia. Thousands, yes millions of acres of grass have been destroyed by that pernicious weed. Anathemas without number and of the greatest severity have been showered on the Scotchman who brought the plant to Australia, and the other Scotchmen who placed it in the public garden.—Thomas W. Knox.

23—26. (23) Dedan, Ge. xxv. 3, 4; Is. xxi. 13. Tema . . Buz, neighboring tribes of Arabia, Job xxxii. 2. corners, R. V., "and all that have the corners of their hair polled." Comp. xlix. 28, 32. A description of the tribe of Kedar. (24) mingled people, "the intermingled people" (see on vs. 20); i. e. probably in this passage populations of a different race interspersed among the Aramaic tribes to which most of the inhabitants of the desert belonged."—Pul. Com.^b (25) Zimri,^c prob. a tribe on the east side of the desert, towards Persia; but not identified. Elam, at the head of the Persian Gulf, used for Persia. (26) Sheshach, or Babylon, ch. li. 41. shall drink after them, the turn of Babylon shall come to drink of the cup of divine wrath.

Swiftness of destruction.—One bolt of lightning, and the whole gold-house has gone down. One chill some damp night, and the health-house is ruined from attic to basement. One touch by the invisible hand, and the brain that had in it a thousand inventions trembles, and cannot remember. One keen disappointment, and pleasure is struck dead; its face is an annoyance, its rattle is an insult, its invitations are blasphemies, in face of a woe so terrible. There is but one abiding confidence—"Rock of Ages, cleft for me." There is but one refuge from the storm.—"Jesus, refuge of my soul."—Peop. Bib.

27—29. (27) therefore, R. V. "And thou." be drunken, etc., "metaphors denoting the utter helplessness to which the nations are reduced by drinking the wine-cup of fury."—Spk. Com. (28) refuse to take, endeavor to master the circumstances of difficulty and distress in which they will be placed. (29) R. V. "For, lo, I begin to work evil at the city." should . . . unpunished? if God did not spare His own people, there could be no hope for them.

Duty and danger.—The perils of good men in former days. Persecution; special trials and deliverances; Apostles the only preachers, hence, and for other reasons, God specially protected them. The common prison; strong, where common malefactors were kept. Subject, —Duty and Danger. I. Duty often involves danger. This the case with nearly every duty. Work, a duty, exposes to various risks. To save one from drowning or burning, a duty, yet there may be danger. A duty to live a Christian life, but it often entails danger: cross words, opposition, petty persecution. II. Danger does not absolve us from duty. When the doors were opened the angel did not tell the Apostles to go away from the city, but to proceed with their work and in the most public place. Other men would be in great danger, spiritual and eternal, if they did not hear "all the words of this life." III. God our trust and protection from danger, while we are in the way of duty. He saw His servants in prison: did not abandon them, sent an angel, etc. May not work a miracle in our behalf; but will not neglect us, sends inward supports if not outward deliverances. Learn:—Better to have external things against us, and our conscience at peace, than conscience disturbing us in the midst of surrounding prosperity.—Hive.

30—33. (30) roar, etc., as a lion, filling with consternation both the shepherds and their sheep. upon his habitation, R. V. "against his fold," i. e. Judæa, his pasturage. shout, the vintage cry. (31) A noise, that made by the trampling of the invaders. (32) evil, in the sense of calamity. whirlwind, ch. xxiii. 19. coasts, R. V. "the uttermost parts of"—the storm appears on the horizon and seems to come from the ends of the earth, as ch. vi. 22.^c (33) not lamented, ch. viii. 2, xvi. 4.

"The Lord shall roar."—In highly poetic language the judgment of the Gentiles is described. Jehovah has risen like a lion from his covert, and at His roaring the whole world is filled with terror and confusion. Sheep and shepherds roll on the ground in consternation, but cannot escape; for, like a storm-wind, judgment stalks abroad, and the slain of the land cover the ground from one end of the earth unto the other, and lie unwept and without burial.—Payne Smith. The strict judgment of God sounds much stronger and clearer than we can bear. Hence the six hundred thousand men were so terrified when they heard the voice of God, that they said, "Let not God speak with us lest we die" (Exod. xx. 19). It is well that we do not refuse to hear, or stop our ears against the sweet sound of God's voice in the sacred office of the preacher, because we can have it (Ps. xcv. 8); or the time will come when we shall be obliged to hear its awful roaring, which God forbid. For when the lion roars, who shall not be afraid? (Amos iii. 8).—Cramer.

34—38. (34) shepherds, fig. for kings and rulers. wallow, roll yourselves about in. principal . . . flock, lit. "the strong ones of the flock," i. e. the leaders of society; the great and rich men. of your slaughter, etc., R. V. "of your slaughter are fully come, and I will break you in pieces, and ye shall fall," etc. pleasant vessel, precious vessel, "destroyed as a crystal glass."^a (35) to flee, lit. flight shall fail the shepherds. (36) hath spoiled, or spoileth, ch. vi. 2, 3. (37) peaceable habitations, R. V. "and the peaceable folds are brought to silence because of the fierce anger of the Lord." (38) forsaken his covert, and come forth to judgment. is desolate, R. V. "is become an astonishment." oppressor, R. V. "the oppressing sword." Heb. jonah, signifying also dove.^b

Hypocrisy and sincerity.—Consider, hypocrisy lies close in the heart; if thou art not very careful thou mayest easily pass a false judgment on thyself. They who were sent to search the cellar under the Par-

^a "If they either do not believe thy threatenings, or else disregard them, as thinking themselves sufficiently provided against any hostile invasion."—Lowth.

"It is vain to have a name to live if we are dead; the name will not galvanize us back into life."—Pul. Com.

"I am sometimes downright staggered at the exceeding riches of his grace. How Christ can go on pardoning day after day, and hour after hour; sometimes I feel almost afraid to ask, for shame."—A. L. Newton.

^a Joel iii. 16; Am. i. 2.

^b Comp. Is. xvi. 9, 10; Je. xlviii. 33.

^c "The thunder-storm seen first on the edge of the horizon overspreads the heaven, and travels from nation to nation in its destructive course."—Spk. Com.

"Man-like is it to fall into sin, Fiend-like is it to dwell therein, Christ-like is it for sin to grieve, God-like is it all sin to leave."—Longfellow.

^a "Your past excellency shall not render you safe now. I will turn to your ignominy whatever glory I conferred on you."—Calvin.

LXX. render, "Ye shall fall like chosen rams."

^b "There may be a covert allusion to the Chaldean standard bearing a dove on it, in honor of Semiramis, the first queen, said in popular superstition to have been nourished by doves when exposed at birth, and at death to have been transformed into a dove."—Fausset.

"If you commit one sin, it is like the melting of the lower glacier upon the Alps, the others must follow in time. Set the coral insect at work, you cannot decree where it shall stay its work."—Spurgeon.

liament, at first saw nothing but coals and winter provisions; but upon a review, when they came to throw away that stuff, they found all but provision for the devil's kitchen: then the mystery of iniquity was uncased, and the barrels of powder appeared. How many are there that, from some duties of piety they perform, some seeming zeal they express in profession, presently cry, "Omnia bene," and are so kind to themselves as to vote themselves good Christians, who, did they but take the pains to throw those aside, they might find a foul hypocrite at the bottom of them all. Hypocrisy often takes up her lodging next door to sincerity, and so she passes unfound, the soul not suspecting hell can be so near heaven. And as hypocrisy, so sincerity is hard to be discovered. This grace often lies low in the heart, like the sweet violet in some valley or near some brook, hid with thorns and nettles—infirmities, I mean; so that there requires both care and wisdom, that we neither let the weed of hypocrisy stand, nor pluck up the herb of grace in its stead.—A Divine of the 17th Cent. God's withdrawalment from man.—"Think of God sending a famine upon the soul, of minds pining and dying because Divine messages have been withdrawn! We know what the effect would be if God were to withdraw the dew, or to trouble the air with a plague, or to avert the beams of the sun; the garden would be a desert, the fruitful field a sandy plain, the wind a bearer of death, summer a stormy night, and life itself a cruel variation of death: so penetrating, so boundless is the influence of God in nature. Is it conceivable that the withdrawalment of God's influence would be less disastrous upon the spirit of man?"—Joseph Parker.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-SIXTH.

*Je. xxv. 1, 11.

"God's ministers must have their hearts fired, not with passion, but with love. The thunderbolt may crash, but the sun melts. It is better to love as a pastor than speak as an angel." — Watson (1649).

"An iron key is better than one made of gold if it will better open the door, for that is all the use of a key." — Augustine.

"The words of a preacher ought purgare non palpare, to prick the heart, not smooth and coax."—Jerome.

"This chapter as a whole gives us a rapid sketch of the circumstances under which Jeremiah had delivered himself of the prophecies that went before. The more definite he had become in his warnings, the more he excited the wrath of the false prophets and of those who sided with them; and now that he had explicitly announced (xxv. 11) a seventy years' captivity, their indignation boiled over, and they sought to compass his death. From the contents of this chap. then we can realize better under what conditions and with what courage the prophet continued his forecastings of definite calamity in the chapters which follow. 'The beginning' will naturally denote some date earlier than the fourth year of Jehoiakim's reign, when the crisis came about, and Jeremiah was no longer listened to nor tolerated (chap. xxxvi.)."—Camb. Bib. 1—7. (1) beginning, etc., "prob. soon before the critical battle of Carchemish, wh. established the supremacy of Nebuchadnezzar and Babylon." (2) in the court, the largest court, where the males assembled for worship. (3) repent me, ch. xviii. 8. (6) like Shiloh, ch. vii. 12, 14. (7) heard, etc., Jer. spoke publicly, and at a time when the court was full of people.

Preaching the whole truth.—Somerfield, just before his death, speaking of his recovery, said, "Oh, if I might be raised again! How I could preach! I could preach as I never preached before. I have taken a look into eternity!"—Luther, of whom Richter has said that "his words were half battles," when he first began to preach, suffered unheard agony. "O Dr. Staupitz, Dr. Staupitz!" said he to the Vicar General of his order, "I cannot do it, I shall die in three months; indeed I cannot do it." Dr. Staupitz replied, "Well, Sir Martin, if you must die, you must; preach, man, preach; and then live or die as it happens." So Luther preached, and lived; and he became one great whirlwind of energy to work without resting in this world.—Spurgeon.

8—11. (8) made an end of speaking, "they allowed Jeremiah to finish his discourse (of which we have here only the briefest summary), either from a lingering reverence for his person and office, or to obtain fuller materials for an accusation (comp. the trial of Stephen, Acts vi. 12—14)." priests and prophets, these were more bitter against Jer. than the princes were. Thou shalt surely die, "that prophet, who spoke without God's command, was according to the Mosaic Law (Deut. xviii. 20) to be put to death. The charge against Jeremiah then was of this nature, and the alleged proof, that it was impossible in the nature of things that such a calamity could be allowed to happen to the people of God. —Camb. Bib." (9) gathered against, R. V. "gathered unto," i. e. in a judicial assembly. Comp. vs. 16. (10) princes, these were the true judges, without whose presence Jer. could not have had a true trial. new gate, or east gate. A judicial court was at once constituted. (11) worthy to die,^b and they demand instant judgment and execution.

Heroic constancy.—A mother and her seven sons were brought before the tyrant Antiochus in the persecution of the Jews, and offered a discharge if they would but taste swine's flesh. They unanimously refused, were "tormented with scourges and whips," but still refused. "What wouldst thou ask of us? We are ready to die rather than transgress the laws of our fathers," they said. The enraged king ordered the speaker to be slain in the most excruciating manner. His mother and six brothers were compelled to witness his awful agony, yet, with unshaken constancy, exhorted one another to die manfully. The second son follows the first to martyrdom. The third stretched out his hands to the executioner to be cut off, saying, "These I had from heaven, and for his laws I despise them." The fourth, fifth, and sixth sons endured torture and death with the same dauntless fidelity. The mother and her youngest son remain. The mangled members of her six sons strew the ground. Antiochus now lays bribes before the youth. Wealth and station are proffered him, if he will but taste. The nobler than Spartan mother addresses him: "I beseech thee, my son, look upon the heaven and the earth, and all that is therein, and consider that God made them of things that were not; and so was mankind made likewise. Fear not this tormentor, but, being worthy of thy brethren, take thy death, that I may receive thee in mercy again with thy brethren." O wonderful woman! The record runs, "Last of all, after the sons, the mother died." These Jewish martyrs inherited the promise, being "faithful unto death."

12—15. Jeremiah's defence—comp. Acts v. 39. (12) The Lord sent me, his message was from God, therefore not blasphemy nor treachery, but truth, which a wise people would hear. (13) amend, etc., ch. vii. 3. (14) in your hand, he was quite willing to submit to lawful government, but whatever the result, he must simply deliver the Divine message.^a (15) innocent blood, i. e. the guilt of putting the innocent to death.

Fearlessness.—"What can I fear?" asked Chrysostom before the Pro-consul. "Will it be death? but you know that 'Christ is my life,' and that I shall gain by death. Will it be exile? but 'the earth with all its fulness is the Lord's.' Will it be the loss of wealth? but 'we brought nothing into this world, and we can carry nothing out.' Thus, all the terrors of the world are contemptible in my eyes, and I smile at all its good things. Poverty I do not fear; riches I do not sigh for; from death I do not shrink; and life I do not desire except for the progress of your souls." Courage.—I heard of a young man who went into the army. The first night in the barracks with about fifteen men playing cards and gambling around him, he fell on his knees and prayed, and they began to curse and throw boots at him. So it went on the next night and the next, and finally the young man told the chaplain what had taken place and asked him what he should do. "Well," the chaplain said, "those soldiers have just as much right in the barracks as you have. It makes them angry to have you pray and the Lord will hear you just as well in bed." Some weeks after that, the chaplain met the young man and asked, "By the way, did you take my advice?" "I did for two or three nights, but I felt like a whipped hound and the third night I knelt down and prayed." "Well," said the chaplain, "how did that work?" The young soldier answered, "We have a prayer-meeting there now every night. Three have been converted and we are praying for the rest."—D. L. Moody.

16—19. (16) spoken .. name, if Jer. was a true prophet, it was their duty to listen to his message." (17) elders,^b i. e. some of the elder

^a "They accused him of uttering falsehood in the name of Jehovah, a crime wh. was threatened in the law of Moses with death." — Henderson.

^b Lit. "a sentence of death is to this man," i. e. is due to him.

"A Christian is the highest style of man."—Pope.

"Tender-handed stroke a nettle And it stings you for your pains, Grasp it like a man of mettle, And it soft as silk remains." —Aaron Hill.

"There's a brave fellow! there's a man of pluck!"

A man who's not afraid to say his say, Though a whole town's against him." —Longfellow.

^a See De. xviii. 20.

Comp. Jos. ix. 25; 2 Sa. xv. 26; Da. iii. 16.

"Base, grovelling souls ne'er know true honor's worth, but weigh it out in mercenary scales: the secret pleasure of a generous act is the great mind's great bribe." —Dryden.

"'Tis much he dares; And to that dauntless temper of his mind He hath a wisdom that doth guide his valor To act in safety." —Shakespeare.

^a "A prophet could not be put to death unless he prophesied in the name of other gods; or after his prophecy had failed in its accomplishment." —Fausset.

^b Ac. v. 21.

* "He prophesied in the time of Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, and was contemporary with Hosea and Amos in Israel, and with Isaiah, in Judah." — Wordsworth.

† 2 Chr. xxxii. 26.

"Seeing a Christian woman go cheerfully to prison, an observer said to her, 'Oh, you have not yet tasted of the bitterness of death.' She as cheerfully replied, 'No, nor ever shall, for Christ hath promised that those who keep His sayings shall not see death.'"

* "The circumstances detailed in this and the three following verses appear to have been adduced in opposition to what had been related respecting Micah; and as they had taken place in the reign of the present monarch, they furnished an apt precedent for the condemnation of Jeremiah." — Henderson.

ones among these princes. the assembly, "the word rendered 'assembly' is the traditional legal term for the 'congregation of Israel' (Deut. xxxi. 30). Thus, with all the faults of the government of Judah, which Jeremiah himself reveals to us, it was very far removed from the Oriental despotisms of our day. The 'elders' are still an important element in the social system, and form a link with that earlier period in which the family was the leading power in the social organization."—Pul. Com. (18) Micah, etc.,^c comp. Mic. i. 1, iii. 12. This was a denunciation, and a prophecy of national calamities, like the prophecy of Jeremiah. (19) fear the Lord, so as to give heed to His message. besought the Lord, R. V., "entreat the favor of the Lord."^d Thus, R. V., "thus should we commit great evil," etc., i. e. by doing any evil to Jer.

Zion a desolation.—Morning dawned; "and with my kind host, to whom every spot in and around Jerusalem was familiar, I ascended to the terraced roof. Just behind Moriah, the Tyropean valley was distinctly marked by a deeply-shaded dell, running from north to south through the city. Beyond it rose Zion, higher and longer than Moriah. . . . As I looked, a moving object in one of the fields riveted my attention. "Haste, give me the glass," I said. I turned it upon the spot. Yes, I was right; a plough and a yoke of oxen were there at work. Jeremiah's prophecy was fulfilled before my eyes.—Porter.

20—24. (20) Urijah,^e this narrative was probably introduced later by Jeremiah to shew the danger in which he stood at the time, and does not form a portion of that which was said on the occasion by any of the parties present. It would have been a dangerous attack to make upon Jehoiakim, the reigning king. It is hardly likely also that there would have been time between the accession of Jehoiakim and the somewhat vague date assigned to this attack on Jeremiah. (vs. 1) for all these events to have occurred in the case of Urijah.—Camb. Bib. (21) mighty men, captains of his army. (22) Elnathan, 2 Ki. xxiv. 8. Achbor, 2 Ki. xxii. 12. (23) fetched, etc., Jehoiakim was at the time a vassal of Egypt, so one accused of treason would be readily surrounded to him. graves, etc., 2 Ki. xxiii. 6. (24) Nevertheless, in spite of this attempt to urge the prince to put Jer. to death. Ahikam, 2 Ki. xxii. 12, 14.

Comparative peril.—Though at the present moment it is he who seems to be in danger, he well knows that his peril is but a surface trifle when compared with that attaching to the scowling enemies who are crowded around him. He can be rescued, if so it please God; but who is to rescue those who are striding onwards, ever more swiftly, to a righteous doom? God can deliver the prophet from his enemies, for the prophet himself interposes no obstacle to his deliverance; but these people of Judah and Jerusalem interpose insurmountable obstacles, in that they will not amend their ways and doings and obey the voice of God. More than that, it seems as if they were about to add a fresh obstacle by shedding the innocent blood of God's latest messenger. The persecutor is always in greater peril than the persecuted. Physical pain and physical death are transitory and unreturning ills, but the evil-doer has to face the worm that dieth not. Compare with the words of the prophet here the words of Jesus as he was being led to crucifixion: "Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for me, but weep for yourselves, and for your children" (Luke xxiii. 28).—Pul. Com.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-SEVENTH.

1—4. (1) Jehoiakim, this is prob. an error for Zedekiah. Spk. Com. etc. also the Syriac Ver. (2) bonds and yokes, R. V. "bands and bars." The yoke here is the carved piece of wood attached to the two yokes on the pair of oxen, and connecting them; but it stands for the entire instrument. The bonds are the straps or fastenings of these yokes. (3) send them, this was to be actually done. The nations referred to were those wh. God had given into the hand of the king of Babylon. The ambassadors of these kings had prob. come to Jerus., to make a league for resisting the king of Babylon.^f (4) their masters, the great kings, vs. 3.

God and the earth (vss. 4, 5).—I. God is the Creator of all earthly things; the earth is not eternal, not the production of chance, not the work of many gods. II. God is the Sovereign Disposer of all earthly things; might have built it and left it uninhabited; might have populated it with other creatures than those who tenant it now; He has given what He thinks fit of it to individuals, tribes, and nations.—Thomas.

5—8. (5) given it,^a Da. iv. 17, 25, 32. "The terms of the message are these:—God, as Creator of the world and of all that is in it, has the right to give it to whomsoever He will. He has therefore placed Nebuchadnezzar in power for such time as it shall please Him, and none may resist His will."—Camb. Bib. (6) my servant, ch. xxv. 9, xliii. 10. beasts, etc., "the territories of these nations were to become mere hunting grounds for him."—Spk. Com. (7) son . . son's son, Evil-Merodach was his son, and Belshazzar his grandson.^b until, etc., R. V. "until the time of his own land come," i. e. the time of its destruction also. serve . . him, or bring him into servitude.

Parables.—The place of parable in teaching, and especially after the sanction of the greatest of Teachers, must always be recognized. The very necessities of language, indeed, demand this method of presenting truth. The temporal is the husk and frame-work of the eternal, and thoughts can be uttered only through things.—Drummond.

The creation.—

I saw when at His word the formless mass,
The world's material world, came to a heap;
Confusion heard His voice, and wild uproar Stood ruled, stood vast infinitude confined;
Till at His second bidding darkness fled,
Light shone, and order from disorder sprung:
Swift to their several quarters hasted then
The cumbrous elements, earth, flood, air, fire;
And this ethereal quintessence of heaven
Flew upward, spirited with various forms,
That roll'd orbicular, and turned to stars
Numberless, as thou seest, and how they^c move;
Each had his place appointed, each his course;
The rest in circuit walk this universe. —Milton.

9—11. (9) diviners, etc., these arts were expressly forbidden to the Jews.^e enchanters, R. V. "soothsayers." (10) to remove you, i. e. the certain effect of the delusion will be to remove you. (11) bring . . neck under, i. e. yield to the conqueror, and put themselves into subjection to him.

God's supreme control.—When the yoke is seen on the neck of the ox laboring at the plough or drawing the wagon, that yoke signifies, not only submission, but a submission that is inevitable. The ox is made for the service of man, and although when young it may rebel and defy for a while, it must submit at last. The superior intelligence and the ordained master cannot but conquer. And what the ox is in the hands of man, that every nation, even the strongest and bravest, is in the hands of God. Babylon, conqueror and spoiler as it was, was no more free from God's yoke than any of the nations it defeated. It is quite compatible with the carrying out of God's great purpose that there should be the most striking disparities in the temporal conditions of both individuals and nations. That Babylon should be the victor and these other nations the vanquished, was in His eyes a matter of very secondary moment.—Pul. Com.

12—15. (12) Zedekiah, who was restless under the Babylonian yoke, and, revolting, brought the final ruin on the land. Although Zedekiah is addressed, the plural is used throughout on account of his many sympathisers among all ranks. Bring . . under, fig. for quietly submitting. (13) die, by stubborn and wilful resistance. (14) a lie, ch. xiv. 14, xxiii.

^f "The task assigned to Jer. required great faith, as it was sure to provoke alike his own countrymen, and the foreign ambassadors, and their kings, by a seeming insult, at the very time that all were full of confident hopes grounded on the confederacy."—Fausset.

^a "God here, as elsewhere, connects with the symbol doctrine, which is as it were its soul, without which it would be not only cold and frivolous, but even dead."—Calvin.

^b "The two kings mentioned in Ptolemy's Canon between Evil-Merodach and Belshazzar (or Nabonadus)—viz., Neriglissarus and Laborsorachodus, had no right by lineal descent: for Neriglissarus was only husband to Evil-Merodach's daughter, and Laborsorachodus was son to Neriglissarus."—Lowth.

^c De. xviii. 11; Is. ii. 6.

"There is also an affected ignorance, such a one as is contracted by a wilful neglect of the means; and this is not excusing but condemning. . . . In the midst of light to be in darkness; for an Israel to have an Egypt in a Goshen; this is highly provoking, and may justly cause God to lay hold on vengeance."—South.

"To perceive truth by its proper evidence, is of the formal nature of the rational mind; as it is of the physical nature of the eye to see an object by the light that it reflects, or of the ear to hear the sounds which the air conveys to it"—Bp. Horsley.

^a 2 Ki. xxiv. 13; 2 Chr. xxxvi. 5—7.

^b 2 Ki. xxv. 13—17; 2 Chr. xxxvi. 18.

"Do not as some ungracious pastors do, show me the steep and thorny way to heaven, whilst like a puff'd and reckless libertine himself the primrose path of dalliance treads, and reckes not his own road."—Shakespeare.

^c 2 Ki. xxv. 13; Je. lii. 17, 20, 21.

^d Ezr. i. 7, v. 13, 14.

"He hath a heart as sound as a bell, and his tongue is the clapper; for what his heart thinks his tongue speaks."—Shakespeare.

^e "The Jews often divided any period into two halves, the beginning and the end. So the fourth year would be in the beginning of Zedekiah's reign; and during the first three years the country was in a very disturbed state."—Fausset.

^f Better render, "I have determined to break."

^g "Hananiah prob. fixed this date by the expectation that the confederacy then on foot would defeat Nebuchadnezzar."—Spk. Com.

21, xxix. 8, lyingly. (15) not sent them, so no kind of trust is to be put in their prophecies.

Detection of lying.—The folly of lying consists in its defeating its own purpose. A habit of lying is generally detected in the end; and after detection the liar, instead of deceiving, will not even be believed when he happens to speak the truth. Nay, every single lie is attended with such a variety of circumstances which lead to a detection, that it is often discovered. The use generally made of a lie is to cover a fault; but as this end is seldom answered, we only aggravate what we wish to conceal. In point even of prudence, an honest confession would serve us better.—Gilpin.

16—18. (16) vessels, etc., these had been carried away in the reigns of Jeconiah, and also of Jehoiakim.^a (18) But if they be prophets, etc. The "false prophets" have neglected one of the principal functions of a prophet, viz. intercessory prayer. Seeing that a part of the sacred vessels had been carried to Babylon, all true prophets ought to intercede with Jehovah that those still left might be spared. The end was that the remaining vessels were carried off on the capture of Jerusalem (2 Kings xxv. 13).—Pul. Com.^b

The prayer-test.—If it can be said of a person, "Behold, he prayeth!" we may know much of him. Prayer is the barometer that rises or falls with the changing tone of the spiritual atmosphere. When we "restrain prayer" this is a sad sign that our better life is failing. It is useless to boast of spiritual attainments such as those of the professional prophets; these are nothing but delusions if the prayer-test reveals a condition of spiritual deadness. The results of prayer are a further test. We cannot say that a particular prayer is not acceptable to God because it does not bring us the particular thing we seek, since we are always making foolish requests, and God mercifully deals with us according to his wise and good will rather than according to the letter of our language. Still, if no answer is ever received to prayer, something must be wrong.—Pul. Com.

19—22. (19) pillars, etc., 1 Ki. vii. 15, 23, 27.^c (22) then . . restore, after the captivity, when God Himself shall arrange for the return of His people. This was fulfilled in the commission of Cyrus.^d

Faith in God's promises.—If we can put our trust in God when we are in total darkness, when may we not trust Him? Sometimes we are called upon to trust in God when He seems to go right back against all His promises. That is trusting Him in the darkness. Weak faith will judge God's promises by one's feelings, by one's evidences, when we ought to judge the feelings and the evidences by the promises. As long as I have the promises, God give me grace to trust in Him whatever befall and bid my soul keep still, knowing that He will never fail.—Marcus Rainsford.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-EIGHTH.

This chapter tells how the prophet opposed Hananiah who falsely encouraged the hopes of the people, promising the return of the sacred vessels within two years, and the restoration of the exiles. (Driver.)

1—4. (1) beginning, or earlier half. Zedekiah reigned eleven years.^e of Gibeon, a priestly city, Jos. xxi. 17. (2) the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel. "Either this solemn form of introduction was a usual one with all who claimed the prophetic gift, or Hananiah assumed it as implying an equal claim to inspiration with Jeremiah, in whose mouth we so constantly find the formula, e. g. vii. 3, 21, xvi. 9, xix. 3, 15, xxv. 27, xxvii. 4, 21, vs. 14. of the present chapter and often subsequently (xxix. 4, 8, 21, 25, etc.)."—Camb. Bib. broken . . king,^f by this declaration Hananiah assures the people that they will be relieved of Babylonian dependence and bondage. (3) two full years, lit. "two years of days."^g (4) Jeconiah, whom the people regarded as their rightful king.

The hallucination of patriotic prophets.—The popular doctrine of the inviolable sancity of the Temple had sustained a severe shock when Nebuchadnezzar carried off the sacred vessels to Babylon. It was inconceivable that Jehovah would patiently submit to so gross an indignity. In ancient days the Ark had plagued its Philistine captors till they were only too thankful to be rid of it. Later on a graphic narrative in the Book of Daniel told with what swift vengeance God punished Belshazzar for his profane use of these very vessels. So now patriotic prophets were convinced that the golden candlestick, the bowls and chargers of gold and silver, would soon return in triumph, like the Ark of old; and their return would be the symbol of the final deliverance of Judah from Babylon. Naturally the priests above all others would welcome such a prophecy, and would industriously disseminate it.—Exp. Bib.

5—9. (5) said, in answer to this utterly false prophecy. (6) Amen, or even so I could heartily wish it might be. (7) Nevertheless, i. e. spite of all your prophecies and my wishes, I must give you God's message. (8) prophets . . . pestilence, Jer. here intimates that he does not stand alone. He only carries on former Divine denunciations. (9) when . . . pass, Jer. is satisfied to wait the testing of events. Comp. Deut. xviii. 22 and xiii. 1—3.

The reply to Hananiah's challenge.—It was almost a mark of the true prophet that he should be the herald of disaster. The prophetic books of the Old Testament Canon fully confirm this startling and unwelcome statement. Their main burden is the ruin and misery that await Israel and its neighbors. The presumption therefore was in favor of the prophet of evil, and against the prophet of good. Jeremiah does not, of course, deny that there had been, and might yet be, prophets of good. Indeed every prophet, he himself included, announced some Divine promise, but:—"The prophet which prophesieth of peace shall be known as truly sent of Jehovah when his prophecy is fulfilled." It seemed a fair reply to Hananiah's challenge. His prophecy of the return of the sacred vessels and the exiles within two years was intended to encourage Judah and its allies to persist in their revolt. They would be at once victorious, and recover all and more than all which they had lost. Under such circumstances Jeremiah's criterion of "prophecies of peace" was eminently practical.—Exp. Bib.

10—14. (10) took . . . yoke," ch. xxvii. 2. This was done as a sign that Hananiah regarded Jer.'s predictions as wholly false. He matched Jer.'s symbolic act by an answering symbolical act. (11) all nations, ch. xxvii. 7. went his way, not deigning any reply. (13) shalt make, "rather, 'but thou hast made,' the sense in which Hananiah is said to have made 'a yoke of iron' (we should render in the singular) comes out in vs. 14. The point is that there was a certain justification for Hananiah's violent act, but not that which he supposed. Jeremiah's wooden yoke was really an inadequate symbol; the prophet was too tender to his people. Thus God made the truth appear in still fuller brightness from the very perverseness of its enemy."—Pul. Com. (14) yoke of iron, impossible to break, and heavy to bear."

Ignorance of the future.—None, indeed, can open the "seven-sealed book," or look forward over the dim and shadowy field stretching out illimitably before him. The astronomer discourses on the rate at which a sunbeam travels, and explains how the flashing lightning may be dispersed, and its terrible swoop evaded. He even indicates those spheres where storms never gather, and thunders never roll; but he cannot solve the anxious problems of our future, nor help us by his great wisdom to avoid its manifold evils, because they come unforewarned. Nor will the lives of those gone before avail us, seeing no two lives are marked by the same vicissitudes, or chequered by the same light and shades, the same joy and sorrow. In the eloquent words of a foreign divine, "We can become familiar with a landscape; we know where to find the waterfall, and the shady ledge where the violets grow in spring, and the sassafras gives forth its odors; but we can never become familiar with our life-landscape; we can never tell where we shall come upon the shady dell, or where the fountains will gush, and the birds sing. That is with God." And His name be praised that it is so! for a definite a "Hananiah had given no warning as the need of repentance and conversion, but had foretold prosperity unconditionally." —Fausset.

"Wolsey regretted that he had not 'served God with half the zeal he had served his king,' but none has ever bewailed the zeal with which he followed Christ!" —Hom. Com.

b "Hananiah resorts to violence, tears the yoke from the Prophet's neck, and breaks it, prob. to the great delight of the multitude, who saw in this spirited act a symbol of deliverance." —Spk. Com.

a Je. xxvii. 6, 7. Christ's yoke easy.—Queen Elizabeth carried the crown in the procession of her sister Mary at the coronation, and she remarked that it was very heavy; but someone standing by told her it would not be heavy when she had to wear it herself. So the precepts which some men do but carry in their hands seem very heavy, but when a man comes to know Christ and to love Him, those very precepts become light and easy.—Spurgeon.

"Men should strive to live well, not to live long."—Earl of Stirling.

"Then let us fill This little interval, this pause of life,

With all the virtues we can crowd into it."

—Addison.

prescience thereof would, in most instances, cloud the whole course of life, poison every stream of enjoyment, and render existence a curse of no ordinary magnitude.—E. Davies.

15—17. (15) not sent thee, Jer. had courage to make this distinct charge when he had received the new message from God. (16) this year, Hananiah actually died two months after uttering his false prophecy. taught rebellion, "the prophet who misleads his countrymen is to be put to death, because he has been disloyal to Israel's divine Redeemer, and in order that the evil which he secretly meditates may be checked in the bud."—Driver on Deut. xiii. 5. (17) seventh month, comp. fifth month of vs. 1. This fulfilment of Jer.'s word must have greatly strengthened his authority as God's Prophet.

The great possibility of the new year.—I. Life is the greatest uncertainty in the world. 1. Thousands have died since the last New-Year's day; 2. Thousands of others will die before the next; 3. Youth no preventive; 4. Health no safeguard; 5. You may have to leave your schemes unfinished; 6. Your education may be only begun; 7. You may be unprepared; 8. You may delay preparation; 9. You may be unwilling to think about it. II. You may have strong hopes of the contrary. Should you die this year.—1. You will be for ever cut off from all the pleasures of life; 2. All your hopes will be disappointed; 3. You will be deprived for ever of the means of salvation.—Pres. Davies.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-NINTH.

"This chapter contains the letter sent by Jeremiah to the exiles (who had been disquieted by prophets announcing their speedy return to Judah exhorting them to settle down contentedly where they were.)"

—Driver. 1—7. (1) residue of the elders, those of them who were still alive. (2) After that, etc., 2 Ki. xxiv. 12, etc. queen, or queen-mother. (3) Zedekiah . . sent, the object of this embassy is not indicated. (4) all . . captives, the letter was written soon after they were carried away, and was intended to console them. (5) Build, etc., i. e. settle quietly down, for the captivity will certainly be prolonged. (6) increased there, in numbers and wealth. (7) seek the peace, or be peaceable citizens in the land of sojourn, duly obeying the laws."

Prayer for one's own country.—John Knox used to be in such agony for the deliverance of his country that he could not sleep. He had a place in his garden where he used to go to pray. One night, he and several friends were praying together, and as they prayed Knox spoke declaring that deliverance had come. He explained that he could not tell what had happened, but he felt sure that in some way their prayers had been answered. And the next news informed them that their enemy, Mary Queen of Scotland, was dead.—At one time during the Lutheran reformation, soon after the conference of Augsburg in 1530, when the Reformer's cause looked mournful, Melancthon, with Luther and other divines, met to consult about the situation; and, after spending some time in prayer to God, Melancthon was suddenly called out of the room, from which he retired heavily depressed. While absent he saw several elders of the reformed churches with their parishioners and families; and many, young and old, were in prayer for the triumph of their cause. He re-entered the room with a joyous countenance, which astonished Luther, who inquired, "What now has happened to you, Philip, that you are become so cheerful?" "Oh, sirs," replied Melancthon, "let us not be discouraged, for I have seen our noble protectors, and such as, I will venture to say, will prove invincible against every foe." "And pray," returned Luther, thrilling with surprise and pleasure, "who and where are these powerful heroes?" "Oh," said Melancthon, "they are the wives of our parishioners and their little children, whose prayers I have just witnessed—prayers which I am satisfied our God will hear; for as our Heavenly Father and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ has never despised our supplications, we have reason to trust that He will not in the present alarming crisis." The event proved a "It would have degraded their whole moral nature to have lived as conspirators, banded together against the country that was for the time their home, and cherishing feelings of hatred towards those with whom they were every day brought into contact."—Spk. Com.

"When we have learned to offer up every duty connected with our situation in life as a sacrifice to God a settled employment becomes just a settled habit of prayer."—Thos. Erskine.

"All true opinions are living, and show their life by being capable of nourishment; therefore of change. But their change is that of a tree, not of a cloud."—Ruskin.

"What is truth?" was once asked of a deaf and dumb boy. He moved his finger in a straight line. "What is false-that Melancthon was not mistaken. God heard their prayers.—Cox's "Life of Melancthon."

8—11. (8) Let not your prophets and your diviners, etc. It seems as if the Babylonian "Jewry" were a copy of that at home. It had not only its "princes" and its "elders," but its "prophets" and its "diviners," who encouraged the same false hopes as those in Judah (comp. ch. xxvii. 9; xxviii. 2.).—Pul. Com. (9) falsely, or in a lie. (10) after seventy years, ch. xxvi. 11, 12. (11) peace, or good will. expected end, R. V. "hope in your latter end," i.e. a good hope for the issue.

Divine purposes fulfilled in answer to prayer (vss. 8—13).—I. A certain danger declared. II. A blessed deliverance promised. 1. The grounds on which it rested; 2. The time of their return expressly declared; 3. In their restoration the Divine faithfulness would be strikingly manifested; 4. The procuring cause of their deliverance was the boundless compassion of God. III. An important duty enjoined. 1. It is Divinely ordained; 2. The greatest encouragement is afforded for its observance; 3. To be successful it must be attended to in no formal manner.

12—14. (12) call upon me, this explains the change that is to take place. The people themselves will be changed. They will unite in prayer to their God. Da. ix. 3. (13) seek, etc., Le. xxvi. 39, 40; De. xxx. 1; Ps. xxxii. 6. (14) be found, etc., comp. De. iv. 29, 30, xxx. 1—5.

"When ye shall search for Me with all your heart."—To help you in getting your whole soul united in seeking God, ponder these considerations. 1. The priceless value of the soul; 2. The shortness and uncertainty of life; 3. The sadness and bitterness of sin; 4. Your utter helplessness in saving yourself; 5. The full and sufficient salvation provided in Jesus Christ. If your heart is wholly set upon the search for God, it will be manifested by such things as these:—(1) The immediate and resolute giving up of all sin; (2) The earnestness of your own personal decision for Christ; (3) The importunity with which you carry your cry for mercy and salvation to the throne of the heavenly grace. Let then your whole heart seek.—Hive.

Fervency in prayer.—We must be earnest and fervent, or shall have but a cold answer. He that asks with a doubting mind and wavering lazy desire, begs for nothing but to be denied. God gives His people what they ask, or better. We beg for removal of present sadness—but He gives that which makes us able to bear twenty sadnesses, a cheerful spirit, peaceful conscience, joy in God, the antepast of eternal rejoicings in His kingdom. Remember how great a God you go to, how great a need you have, how great a thing you pray for.—S. Thodey.

15—19. (15) ye have said, these denunciations are addressed to the false prophets. (16) king that sitteth, Zedekiah, who was not the actual king while Jeconiah lived. (17) vile figs, ch. xxiv. 8. (18) persecute them, ch. xxiv. 9, also xix. 8, xxv. 18. removed, R. V. "tossed to and fro." (19) Because, etc., ch. xxv. 4, xxxii. 33.

Note on verses 15, 16.—The sense appears to be this. One of the difficulties raised by the exiles when the prospect of seventy years' captivity was held out to them would be, We have prophets here at Babylon who tell us just the reverse of all this. Which shall we believe? To this the reply of Jeremiah is twofold. (i) These prophets' teaching shall soon be disproved. The king and the remnants of the kingdom, upon whose continued existence at Jerusalem they lay such stress, will soon pass away. Ye shall not soon be restored to your brethren, but they shall be exiles and scattered like to you. (ii) The false prophets, who thus delude you, shall themselves miserably perish and become a proverb and by-word.—Camb. B.

20—23. (21) Ahab . . Zedekiah, false prophets, not otherwise known, (22) a curse, i. e. a formula of cursing (comp. Isa. lxv. 15). There is here a play upon words, such as the Biblical writers delighted in, partly with the view of assisting the memory. "A curse" is in Hebrew kelalah, and "to roast" is kalah. roasted in the fire, "casting into the midst of a burning fiery furnace" was a common punishment both among the Assyrians and the Babylonians, comp. Dan. iii.—Pul. Com. (23) hood?" He made a zigzag motion with his finger. Truth is the straight line, falsehood is the crooked way.

"The truth is infinite as the firmament above you. In childhood both seem near and measurable; but with years they grow and grow; and seem further off, and further, and grander, and deeper, and vaster, as God Himself; till you smile to remember how you thought you could touch the sky, and blush to recollect the proud and self-sufficient way in which you used to talk of knowing or preaching 'The Truth.'"—F. W. Robertson.

"The undying love of the Jews for their Fatherland, and their ineradicable desire to return to it, are displayed in an affecting manner on the day of atonement. The services close with the beseeching shout, 'when next year comes, may we all be in Jerusalem!' We could almost make this prayer our own as we think of the 'Jerusalem above.'"

"It may be a sin to long for death, but I am sure it is no sin to long for heaven."—Matthew Henry.

"Blessed are the home-sick, for they shall come at last to the Father's house."—Heinrich Stilings.

* "Burning alive was a mode of punishment customary among the Chaldeans."—Henderson.

^b Is. xxxii. 6. Believers are God's workmanship; and the end or all His works is to form one vast mirror in which to reflect His own image.

^a "This was addressed to Shemaiah after the messengers who delivered the former message to the captives in Babylon were returned home, and they brought the letter of Shemaiah mentioned in the following verse."—Lowth.

^b "As he despised the lawful time, and wished to return before the time God had expressly announced, in just retribution he should not share in the restoration from Babylon at all."—Fausset.

You are sure to do all things spiritually, if you live in the spirit of sonship.

^a "The joyful transition is marked by a sudden change from grave and mournful accents in solemn prose, to a jubilant outburst of poetic ecstasy."—Wordsworth.

villainy, folly, or lewdness." even I know, R. V., "and I am he that knoweth."

Tortures.—The Assyrian king Assurbanipal says, in one of his inscriptions concerning a viceroy of Babylon who had revolted, that Assur and the other gods "in the fierce burning fire they threw him and destroyed his life"—possibly through the agency of Assurbanipal's servants. One of the seven brethren who were tortured to death in the persecutions of Antiochus Epiphanes is said to have been "fried in the pan." Christian hagiology commemorates St. Lawrence and many other martyrs, who suffered similar torments. Such punishments remained part of criminal procedure until a comparatively recent date; they are still sometimes inflicted by lynch law, and have been defended even by Christian ministers.—Exp. Bib.

24—29. (24) Shemaiah is only known through this passage.^a (25) letters, prob. one to the people, and a separate and private one to the priest. (26) officers, Heb. pâkîds; having the overcharge of the Temple. Overseers to keep order. mad, etc., intimating that Jeremiah was in such a state. (27) reproved, exerted your authority in silencing. (28) is long, this was the brunt of Jer.'s offending. The false prophets declared there would be a speedy return. Jer. said No, not for many long years. (29) read this letter, whether in a kindly spirit, or to annoy the Prophet, does not appear.

Note on verses 24—29.—On the arrival at Babylon of Jeremiah's letter, which ends with vs. 23, there is much indignation on the part of the false prophets, and one of them, Shemaiah by name, writes to Zephaniah the acting high-priest, urging upon him that he should take severe measures to silence Jeremiah as a madman. This suggestion however Zephaniah is so far from following that he shews the letter to the prophet, who writes again to Babylon, this time for the purpose of condemning Shemaiah's conduct.—Camb. B.

30—32 (31) trust . . . lie, in an utterly false representation. (32) thus saith the Lord, "these and the following words come at length as the part of the sentence answering to 'because thou hast sent,' etc. of vs. 25. The intervening break has resulted from the long explanation and detail which was necessary. The punishment to be inflicted on Shemaiah was twofold. First, he was to leave no children behind him, and secondly, he should see no good come upon his people, either in the way of the speedy return which he had been promising them, or in the way of peace and comparative prosperity in exile."—Camb. B.^b taught rebellion, ch. xxviii. 16.

Deceiving the heart.—It is a lamentable fact that, without any hireling shepherd to cry "Peace," men will cry that for themselves. They need not the syren song to entice them to the rocks of presumption and rash confidence. There is a tendency in their own hearts to put sweet for bitter,—to think well of their evil estate and foster themselves in proud conceit. Let men alone, let no deluder seek to deceive them, hush for ever every false and tempting voice, they will themselves, impelled by their own pride, run to an evil conceit, and make themselves at ease, though God Himself is in arms against them. To be tormented on account of sin is the path to peace, and happy shall I be if I can hurl a firebrand into your hearts.—Spurgeon.

CHAPTER THE THIRTIETH.

This chapter and the next have been called "the triumphal hymn of Israel's salvation." 1—3. (1) word, etc., different in tone to the preceding "words."^a This prophecy chiefly concerns the restoration of the exiles. (2) in a book, "according to the present context the 'all,' in this case, refers merely to the following four chapters. These prophecies of restoration would be specially precious to the exiles; and now that the Jews were scattered through many distant lands, they could only be transmitted and preserved in writing."—Exp. Bib. (3) Israel and Judah, note that both sections of the people of Israel are included in the promises of restoration.^b In ch. xxxi. distinct messages are given, first to the ten tribes, then to Judah.

The effect of mercy.—A soldier in the —th regiment, a fine, gallant fellow, heard of the severe sickness of his wife. He applied for leave of absence, but was refused. The officers of his regiment then made a new application in his behalf, which was again refused. He left the army; but before he got away, was retaken and brought in as a deserter. He was tried, found guilty, and summoned before the commanding officer to receive his sentence. He entered the tent—a fine, tall, soldierly-looking man—saluted, and stood perfectly unmoved, while the officer read his fearful doom—"To be shot to death with musketry on the next Friday." Not a muscle of his face twitched, not a limb quivered. "I deserve it, sir," he replied, respectfully; "I deserted from my flag. Is that all, sir?" "No," replied the officer; "I have something else for you;" and taking another paper, he read aloud the doomed man's pardon. The undaunted spirit, whom severity had failed to move, was completely broken down by clemency. He dropped to the ground shaking, sobbing, and overcome; and being restored to his regiment, proved himself grateful for the mercy shown him, and was soon promoted for good conduct. There are many who say, "We are not going to be frightened into religion," and who profess to be too brave to fear God's wrath. But will you withstand the proffers of His grace? If you shrink not from the curse of the law, will you not hear the tender entreaty of the Cross? Ah! if, like the deserter, you really heard the sentence ringing in your ears; if, like him, you really felt that you deserved it; if you knew that the execution of it was near at hand, like him you would be broken down by the voice of Jesus saying, "Thy sins are forgiven thee;" gladly would you welcome the gracious pardon. Shut not your ears to that compassionate voice. Throw yourself at Jesus' feet, take the forgiveness He freely offers, and let your life henceforth show that His grace has not been bestowed in vain.—American Messenger.

4—9. (5) voice of trembling, "rather, a sound of trembling, a sound causing men to tremble; doubtless it is "the sound of the trumpet, the alarm of war" (ch. iv. 19).—Cheyne. They feared the approach of Cyrus, who nevertheless was to be their deliverer. (6) a man, or "a male." The men seemed as full of trouble as women in the time of childbirth.^a (7) that day, the day when Babylon is captured. (8) break his yoke, i. e. the yoke of Babylon. serve themselves, exact forced labor. (9) David their king, viz. the righteous Branch of ch. xxiii. 5, 6.

Trials.—It sometimes seems hard to find out any reason for God's dealings with his children. We may not be able to find out why we are afflicted and may think that perhaps it is because of some undiscovered sin; but I do not think that God often deals with us in that way. He generally likes to let His people know their faults when He chastises them. You remember how when Absalom could not get Joab to come and talk with him, he burned up his corn-fields and then Joab came. Now, the Lord often sends sore afflictions upon his children in order that they may come and talk with Him more. You remember that Christ took away Lazarus in order that the sisters might send for Him and that the people through all ages might get a wondrous discovery of Him as the resurrection and the life. And you remember too how John the Baptist was taken away from his disciples in order that they might rather go to Christ.—Andrew A. Bonar.

10—13. (10) fear . . not, comp. Is. xli. 13, xliii. 5, xlv. 2. my servant, vss. 10, 11 are especially noticeable: the title of honor "my servant" here given to Israel for the first time (and applied to the actual nation), appears to have formed the basis upon which the second Isaiah constructs his great conception of Jehovah's ideal servant.—Driver. from afar, even "from the most distant provinces of the Chaldean empire." (11) full end, ch. iv. 27, v. 18. correct . . measure ch. x. 23, 24. (12) bruise, etc., ch. xvii. 9. Only to be cured by such extreme afflictions and chastisements. wound is grievous, ch. x. 19, xiv. 17, xv. 18. (13)

^b Je. Hi. 18; Eze. xxxvii. 6, 21, 22; Ho. i. 11.

"Have we ever thought of those 'hands stretched forth' from heaven to this world, draining themselves of love, if it were possible, toward 'disobedient and gainsaying people?' Is not this wonderful—wonderful? Men have to run away from the love of God if they are ever without it. They must get somewhere—I know not where; some strange call of their own invention must be found by men who would escape the love of God; for God's hands are stretched out, and they drip with riches of mercy."—H. W. Webb-Peploe.

^a Je. iv. 31, vi. 24; Nah. ii. 10.

"The fullest reference of this term must be to Messiah, in whom all the promises made to David were to be fulfilled."

Is. lv. 3, 4; Eze. xxxvii. 23, xxxvii. 24; Ho. iii. 5.

"People are always expecting to get peace in Heaven; but you know whatever peace they get there will be ready-made. Whatever, of making peace they can be blest for, must be on the earth here."—Ruskin.

^a "So desperate were the circumstances of the Jews in Babylon, while enduring the punishment God had inflicted upon them for their crimes, that no human interposition which they could rationally expect, could avail for their deliverance."—Henderson.

^b "God condescends to employ language adapted to human conceptions."—Fausset.

^c "The fault is in thyself, not in Me; and the remedy is in thine own hands. Turn to Me by repentance, and thou shalt be healed."—Wordsworth.

"The sick body needs health, not wealth; and the sick soul needs healing before all external changes of condition."—Pul. Com.

^a "Generally there was a castle or citadel in the middle of the ancient cities, upon a rising ground, for the greater strength and security of the place."—Lowth.

^b "It is not only foretold that a native governor should be set over the house of Israel, but that he should be distinguished for his piety."—Rob. Hall.

One of my parishioners at East Hampton, converted after having lived through three or four revivals, to the age of fifty, and having given up hope, used to exclaim for several weeks after his change, "Is it I? Am I the same man who used to think it so hard to be converted, and my case so hopeless? Is it I?"

bound up, or "for the pressing together of thy wound." None can help or heal.^a God's gracious designs towards His chosen people (vss. 10, 11.)—Observe then—I. That God has glorious things in reserve for His chosen people. 1. For the Jewish people; 2. For His people afar off among the nations. II. That even His darkest dispensations towards them are intended for their good. 1. This was, and still is, the case with respect to the Jews; 2. And may we not see the hand of God ordering and overruling everything for our good? III. That His presence with them is their never-failing security. Exhort—(1) Those who are afar off; (2) Those who are visited with any great affliction; (3) Those who are under discouragement of any kind.—C. Simeon.

14—17. (14) lovers, i. e. the nations which sought the alliance of Judah, esp. Assyria and Egypt. seek thee not, to show any concern for thy distress. of a cruel one, i. e. with a severity which looks like cruelty.^b (15) criest thou, pleading as if I had dealt unjustly with thee. ch. xv. 18.^c sorrow, or bodily pain. (16) be devoured, God would raise up Cyrus against them. (17) restore health, since even the incurable God can cure. Outcast, or "one put away and rejected."

The Restorer of mankind (vs. 17).—How deep are the wants which our faith supplies, and how wide is the feeling of the beauty and the power of the remedy. 1. Faith in the Christian sacrifice and its attendant revelation of the Divine character alone answer the demands of the heart and reason of man for a higher state of moral perfection; 2. Christianity offers to maintain a communication between this world and that eternal world of holiness and truth; 3. Faith confirms and directs that principle of hope which even in our daily life we are perpetually forced to substitute for happiness; 4. But above all its recommendations to the wants and solicitudes of man, the Gospel commends itself by the adorable object which it presents to our affection.—Archer Butler.

18—22. (18) Jacob's tents, ch. iv. 20. The term "tent" is perhaps used to indicate the temporary character of their dwellings in Chaldæa. own heap, "meaning, not heap of ruins, but the hill on which she had previously stood, on her old site. A 'hill' was the usual position of the eastern cities (Matt. v. 14), as helping to protect them alike from sudden attack and from inundation. Hence the frequency with which the word Tel (which is the Heb. here translated heap) forms part of the name of a city; Telassar (Thelassar) (2 Kings xix. 12; Is. xxxvii. 12); Ten-Harsa=Tel-Harsa and Tel-Melah (Ezra ii. 59; Neh. vii. 61); Tel-Abib (Ezek. iii. 15)."—Camb. Bib.^a palace, remain, or "each palace shall be inhabited suitably. (19) thanksgiving, such would be becoming to the restored and redeemed people. not small, or not lightly esteemed. (20) aforetime, as in the prosperous days of David. (21) of themselves, the governors shall be natives, not foreigners. Reference is to Zerubabel, a prince of the house of David. draw near, as a specially favored one.^b engaged his heart, R. V. "hath had boldness." "None but the priests were permitted to enter the Lord's presence, and the Holy of Holies was open but once a year to the high-priest himself. To all others this was a profanity to be punished with death. For Messiah as being God the Son the approach to the Father was open. This is the thought concealed in the verse till Christian times should bring it to light. Even to Jewish ears however the expressions betokened the Messiah."—Camb. Bib. (22) my people, ch. xxiv. 7.

Encouragement to seek after God (vs. 21).—From this passage I shall call your attention to the following propositions:—1. That it is man's grand privilege that he can approach unto God; 2. That he has from Scripture a special warrant to draw near to God; 3. That God engages for the success of that man who thus seeks to approach unto Him.—R. Cecil.

A restoration to lost rights and possessions.—The city is to be built again "upon her own mound." The people not only find the vines they grow in Chaldæa fruitful; they are restored to their own land. The prodigal would not have been satisfied if his comrades had helped him to affluence and pleasure again; he must return to the old home. There is something imperfect in the return of prosperity to Job in the fact that though he has greater riches and as many sons and daughters as before his calamities, his dead children are not raised from the grave, and the loss of them cannot be really compensated by the gift of a new family. So is it with earthly losses. The greatest are irretrievable. But the glory of God's ultimate salvation is that it restores old lost blessings as well as gives new blessings, both comforting memory and satisfying hope.—Pul. Com.

23, 24. "Vss. 23, 24, are apparently a gloss, added as a suitable illustration of this chapter, from xxiii. 19, 20, which are almost identical with these two verses."—Exp. Bib. (23) whirlwind, etc., 2 Ki. ii. 1; comp. Je. xxiii. 19, 20. continuing, R. V. "a sweeping tempest: it shall burst upon the head," etc. (24) latter days, first referring to the restoration times and then to the times of Messiah. consider, R. V. "understand."

Consideration.—There is much in a heart-searching retrospect, over the earliest and most innocent period of life, to awaken compunction and regret; but if the wholesome check, which the habit of considering the latter end imposes, be not found in good time, the blackening horror of the later and more advanced period makes that early time seem bright in the comparison, and gives birth to feelings which have found expression in such words as these—

"Lost days of youth! Oh, holy days,
When joy was blest with prayer and praise—
When this sad heart, now deeply dyed
With many a thought unsanctified, Trembled at every venial stain,
And shrunk from sin as now from pain."

Oh, not that even in that hour
Of early reason's dawning power,
My soul was pure from thoughts of sin;
But now so dark the past has been,
That those first stains from young offence Bear the bright hue of innocence."

—Kitto.

The past.—Think of it! the past is not only focussed there, in a man's soul: it is there. All things that he has ever seen, known, felt, believed, of the surrounding world are now within him, have become part of him, in part are him; he has been changed into their image. He may deny it, he may resent it, but they are there. They do not adhere to him, they are transfused through him. He cannot alter or rub them out. They are not in his memory: they are in him. His soul is as they have filled it, made it, left it.—Drummond.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-FIRST.

1—5. (1) same time, i. e. in the latter days mentioned ch. xxx. 24. be the God, be manifestly their God through My intervention on their behalf: ch. xxx. 22. all the families of Israel, the twelve tribes. Afterwards the Northern kingdom is dealt with (2—22), then the Southern (23—26), and then again both together (27—40). (2) left of the sword, referring either to the ancient deliverance from Egypt, or figuratively to the restoration from Babylon. went . . rest, or planned to guide him to the rest of Canaan. (3) of old, marg. from afar." The Church of the faithful Israel is the speaker. "From afar" (so we ought to render, rather than "of old") she sees Jehovah, with the eye of faith, approaching to redeem her; comp. Isa. xl. 10 and lix. 20 (only that in these passages it is to Jerusalem, and not to Babylon, that Jehovah "comes" as the Redeemer); also the promise in ch. xxx. 10, "I will save thee from afar," and ch. li. 50.—Pul. Com. drawn thee, better: "I have prolonged loving-kindness to thee." comp. Ps. xxxvi.

Is it I? Oh, wonderful!"—Lyman Beecher.

"The God of nature alone, can revive the flower the mind has withered."—Mme. De Stael.

"We should echo in our thankfulness the first intimation that God gives in His providence of an approaching mercy. If you do but hear when the king is on his road towards your town, you raise your bells to ring him in, and stay not till he be entered the gates. Thus should we strike up our harps in praising God at the first appearance of a mercy."—Gurnall.

"Never yet were the feelings and instincts of our nature violated with impunity; never yet was the voice of conscience silenced without retribution."—Mrs. Jameson.

"The object of punishment is, prevention from evil; it never can be made impulsive to good."—Mann.

a "The Babylonish captivity may fitly be spoken of figuratively as a wilderness state."—Henderson.

b "Israel gratefully acknowledges in reply God's past grace; but at the same time tacitly implies by the expression of old, that God does not appear to her now."—Fausset.

"Bredren," said the old preacher, "whatever de good God tell me to do in dis blessed Book"—holding up an old and evidently much-read Bible—"dat I'se gwine to do. If I see in it dat I mus' jump troo a stone wall, I'm gwine to jump at it. Goin' troo it 'longs to God to 'tend to; but jumpin' at it 'longs to me, my bredren!"

"In Greenland, when a stranger knocks at the door, he asks, 'Is God in this house?' And if they answer 'Yes,' he enters."

a "The schism of Jeroboam shall be healed in the captivity."—Wordsworth.

b De. xxvi. 19.

c "The house of Joseph is thus to be restored to its old pre-eminence."—Spk. Com.

Nature is true to itself, and so is grace; the ox is not better known by its lowing, nor a lion by its roar, than a Christian by his holy life.

"A saint's tears are better than a sinner's triumphs. Bernard saith, 'The tears of penitents are the wine of angels.'"—Secker.

d "The Jews call all countries islands wh. they go to by sea."—Lowth.

e "In Jerusalem they would be occupied with religious duties, but after these are rendered to God, they are to disperse each to his own fields."—Spk. Com.

f 1 Sa. ii. 28.

10. (4) tabrets, alluding to Ex. xv. 20. (5) and shall eat, etc., R. V. "and shall enjoy the fruit thereof."

Everlasting Love.—A father, whose affluence was considerable, mourned over a reckless son, whose misconduct brought shame upon himself and family. From home the prodigal went into another country, and for years he was lost to his relatives. A chance occurring, he sent by a friend this message, should he meet his boy, "Your father loves you still." The bearer sought him long and in vain. At last he saw him enter a house of vice, and called him; and there, at a late hour of evening, he delivered this message. The dissolute gambler's heart was touched. The thought that his father still loved him, and wished to forgive him, broke the spell of Satan. He abandoned his profligacy and returned to his father. Oh! the power of such a message of inalienable love from God! Not as the world loves doth God love. They love today and hate tomorrow, wearing their friends like flowers, which we may behold in their bosoms whilst they are fresh and sweet, but soon they wither and then are laid aside. Whereas the love of God to His people is everlasting, and He wears them as a signet upon His right hand, which He will never part with.—White.

Could we with ink the ocean fill,
Were the whole world of parchment made,
Were every single grass a quill,
And every man a scribe by trade:
To write the love Of God above
Would drain the ocean dry,
Nor could the scroll Contain the whole,
Though stretched from earth to sky.

6—9. (6) watchmen, "these were placed on heights at the time of the new moon to give first notice of its appearance." up to Zion, both sections of the nation, Israel and Judah, uniting in the sacred festivals.^a (7) among, or because of the restoration of Israel, regarded as the chief of the nations.^b (8) north country, the Chaldean districts to which Israel had been carried: ch. iii. 12, 18. coasts, R. V., "uttermost parts of," ch. xxv. 32. thither, to Palestine. (9) weeping, that of gladness, not of sorrow. supplications, indicating a right spirit of dependence on God. walk . . rivers, indicating full supply during their desert journey. Ephraim . . firstborn, these words may merely express the choice of Israel as against all other nations of the world. It is also, however, very possible that Ephraim may here mean the Northern kingdom (of which this was the principal tribe), and then the sense will be, Although its punishment came earlier than that of the Southern kingdom, yet if it repent, it shall be forgiven first.—Camb. Bib. 1 Chr. v. 1, 2.^c

"Weeping and supplication." The return from Babylon was a season of joy and congratulation, yet productive of mixed feeling—they came with weeping and supplication. Great events in life often produce opposite emotions. The moment of transition is a critical one—calls up many recollections of the past, many anticipations of the future. The prisoner has been known to sigh at leaving his dungeon; the bride trembles at the altar; the prince receives the crown not without emotion; the Christian takes upon him the vows of God under mingled impressions. Tears and prayers do well together.

10—14. (10) nations, the pagan nations. isles, as before, the coast-lands of the Mediterranean.^a (12) flow, "i. e. the Ephraimites, after praising God on the holy hill, shall spread themselves over their own territory like an overflowing stream, and enjoy the 'goodness' or good gifts of Jehovah—the corn, the wine, the oil, etc. (comp. Deut. viii. 8."—Pul. Com.) watered garden, fresh and growing, Is. lviii. 11. (13) into joy, at being settled in their own land and under God's blessings. (14) satiate, i. e. fully satisfy. fatness, through the great abundance of the thank-offerings.^f

God's goodness satisfying (vs. 14).—I. The objects of His Divine complacency,—“My people.” II. The measure of their joy,—“shall be satisfied.” III. The source of their delight,—“My goodness.”

15—17. (15) voice .. Ramah,^s “this is a poetical figure, representing the miserable condition of the kingdom of Ephraim devastated by the sword of the Assyrians. Ramah is in Benjamin, two hours’ journey from Jerusalem.”^a Rachel, as mother of Benjamin, Ephraim, and Manasseh, she stands as mother of the ten tribes.¹ (16) rewarded, the reward of mothers is for their children to grow up, and dwell in the land. (17) in thine end, ch. xxix. 11, R. V., “for thy latter end.”

The captive Jews (vss. 15, 16).—Briefly allude to circumstances under which the words of text were spoken: while Ezekiel was prophesying to captive Israel in Chaldæa, Jeremiah was prophesying in Israel; the former preparing the captives for their return, the latter encouraging the remnant to expect that event. Consider—I. The place they had left. The promised land. For their sins God had permitted their captivity. You are now surrounded by good influences. If thoughtless, God may permit the loss to you of much that is good. Those who see this will grieve. II. The place they had gone to. Chaldæa, land of idolatry. Left home, friends, liberty; and worst of all, means of grace, comfort, instruction. You may wander to the far country (prodigal), and sigh for lost good. III. The hope of their return. By whom entertained. Old friends, teachers, etc. How brought about. Spirit of God awakening desire. Memory recalling the past. Providence preparing the way, Mercy calling.—Hive.

Historical types of future events.—It is worthy of note that in the New Testament some words are quoted from the Prophets which contain no prediction at all, and are yet spoken of as being fulfilled, because the event to which they allude was a type of that to which they are applied. Our Lord, and after Him the Apostles, laid down the principle that past history may represent that which is to happen hereafter. Thus the Saviour refers to the brazen serpent, and to Jonah as prefiguring His resurrection, and even the time of it on the third day. If Paul teaches that Hagar and Ishmael are typical of the covenants; the paschal lamb of Christ’s atoning death; the passage of the Red Sea of baptism, the smitten rock of Christ; the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews, St. Peter in his allusion to the deluge, and St. John in his mystical application of the names Sodom, Egypt, and Babylon, confirm the principle which helps us to interpret passages of the Old Testament, such as those where the Messiah is called David, and to understand passages of the New Testament where what was spoken of David is applied to our Lord. The principle also solves the apparent difficulty of the two passages cited above,—a difficulty strongly insisted upon by the enemies of Christianity. In neither case does St. Matthew quote predictions, but Hosea’s and Jeremiah’s references to past history. When Hosea said, “Out of Egypt have I called My Son,” or when Jeremiah spoke of Rachel weeping for her children, neither was uttering a prediction of the future, but alluding to facts long past. Hosea was alluding to the Exodus eight centuries before, and Jeremiah to the carrying away of the ten tribes one hundred years before he wrote. St. Matthew, therefore, speaks of them as being fulfilled in the only way in which facts can be fulfilled, in events the anti-types of those referred to.—A. McCaul.

18—21. (18) bemoaning, in a penitent and humble frame of mind. bullock, etc., lit. “like an untaught calf,” Ho. x. 11.^a (19) turned, by God’s dispensations of chastisement. instructed, or brought to my senses by my suffering.^b smote .. thigh, the natural expression of one who is suddenly struck with a thought or a conviction. reproach .. youth, burden of the memory of youthful sins.^c (20) since I spake, R. V., “as often as I speak.” God is represented as the speaker. He asks Himself whether Ephraim is still beloved by Him. The answer is contained in the words that follow. As often as He makes mention of him, His affection towards him is stirred. The picture is of course adapted to human modes of thought and feeling, and represents God as acting in the same way in which a man would, when thinking upon the ingratitude and rebellion of

^s Mat. ii. 18.

^a “By a beautiful figure, Rachel, the mother of the Ephraimites, who was buried at this place, is personified, and represented as risen from her grave, and bitterly lamenting the absence of her descendants, who had all been carried into exile.”—Henderson.

¹ “The immediate reference of the allusion is to the assemblage at Ramah of Benjamin, by the captain of the Chaldean guard, of the unfortunate captives whom he was carrying away from their country to Babylon.”—W. H. Mill.

“A crowd is not company, and faces are but a gallery of pictures, where there is no love.”—Bacon.

“When we would convince men of an error by the strength of truth, let us withhold pour the sweet balm of love upon their heads. Truth and love are two of the most powerful things in the world; and when they both go together they cannot easily be withstood.”—Cudworth.

^a “Ephraim acknowledged that he had been chastised rightly, and for his good, because, like an untrained steer, he had resisted Jehovah’s will.”—Spk. Com.

^b “Chastisements are effects of displeasure, but not of a displeasure intended for the destruction of its object, but the amendment.”—Rob. Hal.

^c “The burden of punishment and shame due to the sins of my youth; my former estate, ever since the exodus from Egypt."—Wordsworth.

"Much may be enjoyed now. Larger faith would open at once more abundant stores. God's hand is not shortened. It is we who limit our own enjoyment of his grace by unbelief and sinfulness. Still there can be no perfect satisfaction in this imperfect world." — Pul. Com.

Seeking satisfaction in this world is like trying to quench the thirst by drinking the salt waters of the sea. The more we drink, the thirstier we are. Alexander conquered the world, but it did not satisfy his soul; and if he could have conquered all the worlds that stud the heavens, he would still have wept for more. For God has not created a single human soul so small and poor that all the material universe can fill it. All literature is full of expressions of the failure of worldly things to satisfy the soul.—Peloubet's Notes.

"The Christian Fathers see a reference in this passage to the Virgin Mary."

"We look before and after, And pine for what is not; Our sincerest laughter

With some pain is fraught; Our sweetest songs are those that tell of sad, dest thought." — Shelley.

"There are three parts in truth: first, the inquiry, which is the wooing of it; secondly, the knowledge of it, which is the presence of it; and a son, whom he nevertheless cannot but continue to love."—Camb. Bib. (21) waymarks, to mark the way back to Palestine.

The true penitent (vss. 18, 19).—We have here—I. The picture of a true penitent. 1. His position is solitary; 2. His language that of self-reproach; 3. He refers his state entirely to God; 4. He at length ventures on the filial relationship. II. The process of his restoration. 1. It was by affliction; 2. Instruction; 3. Conviction; 4. Humiliation. Apply:—(1) Consider afflictions as preparatives for conversion; (2) Consider them subsequently to conversion as preventives, restoratives, preparatives.

The yoke.—The simile is a most apt one. I had frequent opportunities of witnessing the conduct of oxen when, for the first time, put into the yoke, to assist in dragging the wagons. On observing an ox that had been in the yoke for seven or eight hundred miles beginning to get weak, or his hoofs to be worn down to the quick, by treading on the sharp gravel, a fresh ox was put into the yoke in his place. When the selection fell on an ox I had received as a present from some African king, of course one completely unaccustomed to the yoke, such generally made a strenuous struggle for liberty, repeatedly breaking the yoke, and attempting to make its escape. At other times such bullocks lay down upon their sides or backs, and remained so in defiance of the Hottentots, though two or three of them would be lashing them with their ponderous whips. Sometimes, from pity to the animal, I would interfere, and beg them to be less cruel. "Cruel!" they would say, "it is mercy, for if we do not conquer him now, he will require to be so beaten all his life." Some oxen would seem convinced of the folly of opposing the will of the Hottentots by the end of the first day; some about the middle of the second; while some would continue the struggle to the third; after which they would go on as willingly and quietly as any of their neighbor oxen. They seemed convinced that their resisting was fruitless as kicking against the pricks, or sharp-pointed iron, which they could not injure, but that every kick they gave only injured themselves.—Campbell. Yoke of Christ.—Did you ever stop to ask, what a yoke is really for? Is it to be a burden to the animal which wears it? It is just the opposite. It is to make its burden light. Attached to the oxen in any other way than by a yoke the plow would be intolerable. Worked by means of a yoke it is light. A yoke is not an instrument of torture; it is an instrument of mercy. It is not a malicious contrivance for making work hard; it is a gentle device to make hard labor light. It is not meant to give pain, but to save pain. And yet men speak of the yoke of Christ as if it were a slavery, and look upon those who wear it as objects of compassion.—Drummond.

22—26. (22) daughter, Israel. compass, there is no satisfactory interpretation of this verse. "The meaning of the concluding enigma is as profound a mystery as the fate of the lost tribes, and the solutions rather more unsatisfactory. An explanation often given is that, in the profound peace of the New Dispensation, the women will protect the men."—Exp. Bib." (23) As yet, R. V., "Yet again." The old form of blessing shall be renewed. (24) go forth with flocks, i. e. the scattered peoples of the land, who live by shepherding. (25) satiated, fully satisfied. (26) I awaked, i. e. the Prophet, who had seen all this joy and prosperity of the restoration time in his dream or vision.

Waymarks in the East.—Dr. Bonar, writing of his journey through the Wilderness near the spot of Israel's first encampment, says, "We rode off about nine, through a fine large plain; but quite a plain of the desert, —no stream, no verdure; at first soft sand, then hard gravel, then stones, and all these generally of a white colour. Ras Atâkah towered upon our right, full in the morning sunshine. No trace of a road appeared, for though the camels do form a track, or rather a number of parallel tracks, yet the drifting sand obliterates them, or washes them out. Still the waymarks are visible everywhere.—consisting of small heaps of stones set up on each side, which are carefully preserved by the Bedouin; for even they might at times be at a loss as to the way so great is the sameness of the region for miles on every hand. Jeremiah's words came into mind, 'Set thee up waymarks; make thee high heaps, set thine heart toward the highway, even the way which thou wentest' (chap. xxxi. 21). The sand does not seem to obliterate these, or, if it does, they are renewed from time to time. They were always a welcome sight to us, assuring us that we were in the right track; for at times we began to ask whether even our Arabs were sure of their way; so waste did the desert appear, without a mark or foot-trace of any kind whatsoever."—Days and Nights in the East.

27—30. (27) sow . . . beast, fig. to represent the swift and abundant increase of the population.^c (28) watched, for the right opportunity for punishing them. watch . . . build, using similar care and vigilance in restoring them. (29) fathers, etc.,^a see Eze. xviii. 2. (30) own iniquity,^b "with the fall of Jerusalem, a chapter in the history of Israel was concluded for ever; Jehovah blotted out the damning record of the past, and turned over a new leaf in the annals of His people. The account between Jehovah and the Israel of the monarchy was finally closed, and no penal balance was carried over to stand against the restored community."—Exp. Bib.

The bane of humanity is bad heredity. We cannot get rid of it. "The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge," say the Scriptures. The fathers have drunk the cup of sinful pleasures and the children have drunk the dregs. The wondrous thing of the Gospel is that it gives us a new heredity. I count that the very highest and sublimest statement of the doctrine of regeneration. A man grafting trees saws off a limb to put in a scion. If the limb is rotten he has to saw it off nearer to the trunk. We were grafted in Adam, but it was discovered that the branch was rotten, and then God began at the very beginning and grafted us into Jesus Christ the Divine Son of God. Dr. Williams of Boston was asked, "How early do you think the training of a child ought to begin?" He replied instantly, "a hundred years before the birth of a child." When God would build up a child holy in all things, He goes back to the very beginning and gives us our birth in God, Himself. As from Adam we had this hereditary tendency to do wrong, so when we are grafted into Jesus Christ and given the eternal life, we have that influence impelling us to holiness.—A. J. Gordon.

31—34. (31) new covenant, He. viii. 8—12. (32) an husband, ever dealing with them compassionately and tenderly. (33) inward parts, giving them right principles, and a right disposition, so that obedience shall become easy to them. their God, ch. xxxii. 38. (34) teach no more, "the sense is not that there shall be no longer any need of instruction in religion, but that there shall be a directness of access to God, both for Jew and Gentile, which did not exist under the old covenant."—Camb. Bib.

Note on vss. 31—34.—We have here the announcement of a new covenant which should supersede that made at the time of the Exodus from Egypt, differing from it (i) in permanence, (ii) in the principle by which it should be maintained unbroken. The Mosaic Law consisted of duties imposed upon the people from without; the spring of action which should produce willing conformity to the new covenant was to be wholly within. Moses indeed (Deut. xxx. 6) speaks of the people's hearts being circumcized to love the Lord with all their heart and soul, but now the motive power that belongs to the new dispensation is for the first time made plain. The sense of forgiveness (vs. 34) through God's grace shall call out such a spirit of gratitude as shall ensure a willing service, depending on inward not outward motives, based on love, not fear. The new covenant therefore is at once to replace the old (see Heb. viii. 8—12), and yet, new in form, to be still the same in substance. "I will be their God, and they shall be my people," was the central object of the old (Exod. xxix. 45; Lev. xxvi. 12), even as it is now of the new.—Camb. B.

35—37. (35) divideth, R. V., "stirreth up," comp. ch. xxxiii. 20; Ps. lxxxix. 36, 37. (36) those ordinances, such as of the sun, moon, sea, etc. God's purpose concerning His people is as unchangeable as the laws of nature are. (37) thus saith the Lord, "it is not without meaning that the prophet so frequently repeats: 'Thus saith the Lord.' This formed the Alpha and Omega; his word was the sole ground of hope for Israel.

thirdly, the belief, which is the enjoyment of it."—Bacon.

^c Eze. xxxvi. 8—11; Ho. ii. 23.

^a "The proverb among the exiles' children born in Babylon, to express that they suffered the evil consequences of their fathers' sins, rather than of their own."—Fausset.

^b Ga. vi. 5, 7.

"After all, the most natural beauty in the world is honesty and moral truth; for all beauty is truth. True features make the beauty of a face, and true proportions the beauty of architecture, as true measures that of harmony and music. In poetry, which is all fable, truth still is the perfection."—Shafesbury.

"The difference between the regenerate and unregenerate man is that the unregenerate man lives in sin and he loves it; but the regenerate man lapses into sin, and he loathes it."—A. J. Gordon.

The Jewish rabbis repeat a tradition that David had a harp suspended at the head of his bed, and that, whenever the north wind blew upon it at night, it yielded the most agreeable music. The severest blasts which God sends upon the good man only awaken in his soul the harmony of sanctified emotions.

It is impossible to walk across so much as a rood of the natural earth, with mind unagitated and rightly poised, without receiving strength from some stone, flower, leaf, or sound, nor without a sense as of a dew falling on you out of the sky.—Samuel Johnson.

There is dew in one flower and not in another, bec. one opens itself and takes the moisture in, while the other closes itself and the drop runs off. So God rains goodness and mercy as wide as the dew, and if we lack them, it is because we will not open our hearts to receive them.

■ Ne. iii. 1; Zec. xiv. 10; 2 Ki. xiv. 13.

"You needn't have such a reverence for truth as always to stand at an awful distance from it."

"Sir Walter Raleigh one day asking a favor from Queen Elizabeth, the latter said to him, 'Raleigh, when will you leave off begging?' To which he answered, 'When your Majesty leaves off giving.' Ask great things of God. Expect great things from God. Let his past goodness make us 'instant in prayer.'"—New Cyclopædia of Illustrative Anecdotes.

^b Je. xxxix. 1; 2 Ki. xxv. 1.

^c Je. xxxvii. 5.

"The siege lasted from the tenth month of the ninth year of Zedekiah's reign to the fourth month of the eleventh year."

—Lowth.

^d "Zedekiah's was a harder fate than the words suggest; Je. xxxix. 6, 7, lii. 11."—Spk. Com.

Apart from it, despair was as reasonable as now it was unreasonable."—Hengstenberg.

The Church's security (vss. 35—37).—Let us contemplate—I. The promises here made to God's Church and people. Certainly they refer—1. To God's ancient people, the Jews; 2. To the Christian Church. II. The use which is to be made of them by individual believers. We should be careful—I. As to the persons to whom they belong; 2. As to the extent to which they are to be applied; 3. As to the use that is to be made of them when they are so applied. Lay down the following rules:—(1) Seek to gain Christ Himself as your portion; (2) Embrace His promises with humility; (3) Improve them will all care.—C. Simeon.

The uniformity of law.—This great doctrine has come to the forefront of modern science. By some it is thought to be a difficulty in the way of religious belief. But Jeremiah shows us how to regard it as an encouragement for faith. It proves us the unchangeableness of God. Events shift and vary, but laws remain. The seasons come and go, but the sun still shines and rules them. Though the sea rages and roars, its wild waves are curbed by invisible reins, linked to heavenly motions, obedient to unvarying laws. So we may learn that amid the changing circumstances of life and the varying actions of God in providence the same great principles are maintained and the promises of God work out their blessed results unceasingly. This is true of God's thoughts and will. It is true of our personal enjoyment of the privileges of his covenant. Israel is to endure. The Church is founded on a rock. The "final perseverance" of the Christian follows from his identification of his life with eternal laws of God. God will no more cast off his people than the sun cease to rule the seasons or the moon the tides; for in grace, as in nature, eternal laws and principles preserve eternal stability to the spiritual universe.—Pul. Com.

38—40. The connection is not very clear. The main point of these verses is that Jerusalem, when rebuilt, shall be altogether "the Lord's." Its circumference shall even be extended with the single object of including spots at present unclean, but then to become holy like the rest of the city. According to Hengstenberg and Keil, Jerusalem is here a figure of the kingdom of God in the latter days."—Pul. Com. (38) tower . . . corner, the ancient limits of the city." (39) Gareb, "the locality outside the city, where lepers were removed to." (40) valley, etc., ch. vii. 32. Tophet; S. of the city. horse gate, Ne. iii. 28. not be plucked up, the rebuilt city shall be established for long generations.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-SECOND.

1—5. (1) The word that came, this is the introduction to a long section of the Book more continuously historical than any of the preceding portions. It gives the incidents of the two years preceding the capture of Jerusalem, the capture itself, and the events which immediately followed, with prophecies interspersed."—Camb. Bib. tenth year, the siege of Jerus. began in Zedekiah's ninth year.^b It was temporarily raised upon the approach of an army fr. Egypt.^c (2) in the court, etc., Jer. had been arrested on attempting to leave Jerusalem. At first he was only in custody, afterwards he was put into a dungeon. (3) shut him up, fearing the influence of his prophecies upon the people. (4) not escape, ch. xxxiv. 2, 3. (5) visit him, an expression that may either mean for restoration, or for punishment.^d

Zedekiah's captivity, blindness, and death.—Some superficial or inattentive readers of the Bible have supposed this prophecy, which declares that Zedekiah should behold the king of Babylon, to be contradictory to Ezek. xii. 13, where it is said, he should be brought to Babylon, but should not see it; and, indeed, Josephus tells us that the seeming inconsistency of the two prophecies determined Zedekiah to believe neither of them. Both of them, however, were literally fulfilled. Zedekiah was taken in the plains of Jericho, and sent to the king of Babylon at Riblah (2 Kings xxv. 5, 6), where he then resided, whom he saw and spoke to, and who caused his eyes to be put out. He was then sent to Babylon, which he could not see, and was there imprisoned and died. —Carpenter. "Until I visit him."—Zedekiah does not seem to have been a bad man, though he did evil. Weak rather than wicked. One like Charles I. of England, or Louis XVI. of France. One of those men unhappily called to places of great responsibility and difficulty, without the moral strength requisite for so arduous a post. A sadder life than that of King Zedekiah, the last king of Judah and Jerusalem, cannot be conceived. It is a piteous tale. Bereaved, a captive, blinded, he was dragged to Babylon, and there died. And it is because the prophet of God recognizes that death to such an one could not but be a sweet messenger of relief, therefore he calls it "the Lord visiting him." True, the visit of the Lord often means the wrath of the Lord. He will "visit the sins of the fathers," etc. But it yet more often means the goodness of the Lord. "The Lord hath visited and redeemed his people." He visited Hannah. He visits his flock. And this gentler meaning it has here; for the sore punishment of his sins Zedekiah had already been visited. This visit, therefore, tells of God's merciful visitation.—Pul. Com.

6—12. (7) Hanameel, Jeremiah's first cousin, field in Anathoth, a sacerdotal city, so having 2,000 cubits of suburban fields outside the walls attached to it. right of redemption, Le. xxv. 24, 25; Ru. iv. 3—6. (8) right of inheritance, since Hanameel had no children. Then I knew, i. e. the coming of Hanameel confirmed the directions I had received. (9) weighed, money does not seem to have been coined. seventeen shekels, or about 40 shillings. (10) subscribed, etc., did all that was necessary properly to secure the transfer of the property. (11) evidence, R. V. "the deed," according to the law and custom, rather, "the offer and the conditions," the two parts of which the deed consisted, as explained above, viz. the description of the property and the conditions under which it was sold. Camb. Bib. (12) Baruch, Jeremiah's agent.^a

A patriotic purchase.—When Hannibal was besieging Rome the ground on which his army was encamped was offered for sale in Rome and a Roman senator bought it at its full value.

13—15. (13) charged Baruch, gave him the following instructions. (14) earthen vessel, "the deed was made in two copies, so that if the open one were lost, or suspected of having been tampered with, an appeal might always be made to the sealed copy. The latter was to be placed in an earthen vessel, to preserve it from injury by damp."—Pul. Com. This would be hidden in the ground in some secure place, to be found when the land was again inhabited.^b (15) again, i. e. subsequent to the captivity.

The contract and its terms.—The terms "that which is sealed" and "that which is open" may, however, be explained of either of one or two documents somewhat as follows: the record was written, signed, and witnessed; it was then folded up and sealed; part or the whole of the contents of this sealed-up record was then written again on the outside or on a separate parchment, so that the purport of the deed could easily be ascertained without exposing the original record. The Assyrian and Chaldean contract-tablets were constructed on this principle; the contract was first written on a clay tablet, which was further enclosed in an envelope of clay, and on the outside was engraved an exact copy of the writing within. If the outer writing became indistinct or was tampered with, the envelope could be broken and the exact terms of the contract ascertained from the first tablet. Numerous examples of this method can be seen in the British Museum. The Jews had been vassals of Assyria and Babylon for about a century, and thus must have had ample opportunity to become acquainted with their legal procedure; and, in this instance, Jeremiah and his friends may have imitated the Chaldeans. Such an imitation would be specially significant in what was intended to symbolize the transitoriness of the Chaldean conquest. The earthen vessel would preserve the record from being spoilt by the damp; similarly bottles are used nowadays to preserve the documents that

If we work upon marble, it will perish, if we work upon brass, time will efface it; if we rear temples, they will crumble in to dust; but if we work upon immortal souls, if we control them with principles, with the just fear of God and love of our fellow men, we engrave on these tablets something which will brighten to all eternity.—Daniel Webster.

^a This field was at the time in actual possession of the Chaldean army.

"Blessed is that simplicity, which leaveth the difficult paths of dispute, and goeth on in the plain and sure path of God's commandments."—Thomas à Kempis.

^a Je. xxxvi. 4.

^b "Special care was taken that the deed should sustain no injury from the length of time that would elapse before the Jews could recover their possessions in Palestine."—Henderson.

"I worship Thee, sweet Will of God!
And all Thy ways adore;
And every day I live, I seem To love Thee more and more.

"I have no cares,
O blessed will,
For all my cares are Thine;
I live in triumph, Lord,
for Thou Hast made Thy triumph mine."
—Faber.

"The trial of faith is by finding what we will do for God. To trust Him when we have securities in our own iron chest is easy, and not thank-worthy. But to depend on Him for what we cannot see, as it is more hard for man to do, so it is more acceptable to God when done, for in that act we make confession of His deity."—Feltham.

are built up into the memorial stones of public buildings. In both cases the object is that "they may continue many days."—Exp. Bib.

16—20. (16) prayed, prob. to relieve his own anxiety, and to unburden his own fears. (17) too hard, marg. "too wonderful for Thee." (18) shewest, etc., Ex. xx. xxxiv. 7; Is. lxxv. 6. (19) eyes .. men, Job. xxxiv. 21; Pr. v. 21. (20) even unto this day, "means that signs and wonders equal to those wrought in Egypt have continued to the present time."—Cheyne.

God's omniscience.—The Inquisition, or the record on high.—"Within those blood-stained walls, for whose atrocious cruelties Rome has a heavy account to render, a prisoner is under examination. He has been assured that nothing he reveals shall be recorded or used against him. While making frank and ingenuous confession, he suddenly stops. He is dumb—a mute. They ply him with questions, flatter him, threaten him; but he answers not a word. Danger makes the senses quick. His ear has caught a sound; he listens, and that sound ties his tongue. An arras hangs beside him, and behind it he hears a pen running along the pages. The truth flashes on him. Behind that screen there sits a scribe, committing to the fatal page every word he says, and he shall meet it all again on the day of trial. Ah! how solemn to think that there is such a pen going in heaven, and entering on the books of judgment whatever we say and wish, all we think and do. Would to God we heard it—heard it everywhere—always heard it! What a check it might prove!"—Guthrie.

21—25. (21) hast brought, etc., De. xxvi. 8. terror, "for the terror caused to neighboring nations by the miracles attendant upon the Exodus compare Exod. xv. 14; Deut. iv. 34." (22) flowing .. honey; Ex. iii. 8. (23) possessed it, settled down in it. (24) mounts, siege-works, raised for the battering-rams. (25) Buy thee the field, purchase of property when the State was just upon its ruin seemed very unreasonable. for the city, R. V. "whereas the city," etc., i. e. the command and the state of the city seem to be contradictory.

Trust in perplexity.—You are greatly troubled are you? It is a common lot with us all. And you have nothing on earth to trust to now, and are going to be cast on your God alone? Happy trouble that drives thee to thy Father! Blessed storm that wrecks thee on the Rock of ages! Glorious billow that washes thee upon this heavenly shore! And now thou hast nothing but thy God to trust to, what art thou going to do? To fret? Oh, do not thus dishonor thy Lord! Show the world that thy God is worth ten thousand worlds to thee. Show rich men how rich thou art in thy poverty when the Lord God is thy helper. Show the strong man how strong thou art in thy weakness when underneath thee are the everlasting arms. Now, now is thy time to glorify God. There was no room for courage before, but now there is space for feats of faith and valiant exploits. Be strong and very courageous, and the Lord thy God shall certainly, as surely as He built the heavens and the earth, glorify Himself in thy weakness, and magnify His might in the midst of thy distress. The Lord help us to lean wholly on Him, and never on ourselves, and let His name be had in remembrance while the earth endureth. Amen.—C. H. Spurgeon. The danger of the modern church.—The sin which Jeremiah denounced is by no means outside Christian experience; it is much nearer to us than conversion to Buddhism—it is possible to the Church in every stage of its history. The missionary finds that the lives of his converts continually threaten to revert to a nominal profession which cloaks the immorality and superstition of their old heathenism. The Church of the Roman Empire gave the sanction of Christ's name and authority to many of the most unchristian features of Judaism and Paganism; once more the rites of strange gods were associated with the worship of Jehovah, and a new Queen of Heaven was honored with unlimited incense. The Reformed churches in their turn, after the first "kindness of their youth," the first "love of their espousals," have often fallen into the very abuses against which their great leaders protested; they have given way to the ritualistic spirit, have put the Church in the place of Christ, and have claimed for Unfaith in aught is want of faith in all."

* "Mounds of earth, raised as breastworks by the besieging army, behind which they employed their engines, and which they gradually pushed forward to the walls of the city."—Fausset.

"Faith and unfaith can ne'er be equal powers;

"Rutherford has a quaint saying, that 'when he was cast into the cellars of affliction, he always remembered that the great King kept His wine there, and he at once searched for the wine-bottles and drank 'wines on the lees well refined.'" human formulæ the authority that can only belong to the inspired Word of God. They have immolated their victims to the Baals and Molochs of creeds and confessions, and thought that they were doing honor to Jehovah thereby.—Exp. Bib.

"Christianity removes the attraction of the earth; and this one way in which it diminishes men's burden. It makes them citizens of another world."—Henry Drummond.

26—30. (27) God . . flesh, Nu. xvi. 22. Difficulties are never hindrances to God. (28) I will give, or I am giving. That is My settled purpose. (29) and burn it, a still more significant prediction to Jewish hearers than to us, for it implies that Jerusalem had become utterly rebellious, and deserved the punishment of the old Canaanitish cities. It was to be made a chérem. Deut. xiii. 12—16.—Pul. Com. roofs, etc., ch. xix. 13. (30) only done, so abundant were their idolatries and rebellions that nothing else could be seen in the review of their history. youth, or origin as a nation.^a God's revelation of Himself (vs. 27).—This is God's revelation of Himself, not the fancy of the speculator, dream of poet, etc. I. Here is a direct assertion of personality, not the voice of creation but of the Creator. II. Here is a direct assertion of dominion, not a Lord, but the Lord.—J. Parker.

31—35. (31) as a provocation of, literally upon. The preposition which Jeremiah uses is often employed by him in a vaguer sense than is usual elsewhere in the Bible. Here the meaning seems to be that the city constitutes a burden which rests on God's wrath, so to speak, and makes it incumbent upon Him to display it in the shape of punishment.—Camb. Bib. remove . . face, withdraw My protection from it. (32) evil, especially in the encouragement of idolatry, and its attendant immoralities. (33) back, Heb. neck: ch. ii. 27. (34) set . . house, ch. vii. 30, 31. (35) cause, etc., ch. vii. 31, xix. 5. Molech, here Baal and Molech are identified. "Molech the king and Baal the lord are simply different names of the sun god, but in altered relations."

God's power over the sinful heart.—Can God subdue sin in the heart of a man? When we see the outrages, the duration, the strength of hold, the universality, the attractiveness, the prestige, and the love of sin, it does seem as if the subjugation of this was too hard even for the Lord. To turn back the tides, to reverse the law of gravity, to alter any other law of the universe,—this were an easy task compared with the stupendous change which must be wrought in man before the love of sin can die out of him, and the love of God rule in its stead. What endeavors have been made! what schemes devised! what philosophies elaborated! but all in vain. Hence, despair for ourselves and for others too often predominates in our souls. Evil we are, and evil we must be. Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? Can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit? But "there is nothing too hard for the Lord." The history of the Church of God proves that there is, in the regenerating, sanctifying Spirit of God, that power which is needed here.—Pul. Com.

36—38. (36) now therefore, this introduces the strange and lovely contrast to the gloomy picture which has gone before. It will be observed that there is no direct reference to Jerusalem, but the capital was only emphasized before as the heart of the nation, and it would, of course, be no comfort to say that Jerusalem's inhabitants (alone) would be restored.—Pul. Com. (37) gather them,^a and so the seeming destruction shall only issue in a great restoration, when, through their afflictions, they are cured of their idolatry. (38) my people, ch. xxiv. 7.

God's thorough good will towards His people.—His will is ever to show favor and do good to mankind. That will is always in action, but it can only be in manifestation when men themselves, by their spirit of submission to God and obedience to his directions, make such a manifestation possible. As he is thorough in his anger against the rebellious and idolatrous, so he is thorough in his favor towards the repentant. It is well that we should ever remember this deep good will of God to men when things are going wrong with us. The fault of untoward experiences may be in us or it may be in others; it cannot be in God. We must not put down to arbitrariness in him the painful workings of that

^a Je. ii. 7, 25, vii. 23, 28, xxxii. 21.

"There is a contemptibly quiet path for all those who are afraid of the blows and clamor of opposing forces. There is honorable fighting for a man who is ready to forget that he has a head to be battered and a name to be bespattered. Truth wants no champion who is not as ready to be struck as to strike for her.—J. G. Holland.

"When God takes possession of a slow tongue, He can make it fast if he wants to, but you will get none of the credit."—H. W. Webb-Peploe.

"The goodness of a Christian lies in his holiness, as the goodness of the air lies in the clearness of it, and the worth of gold in its pureness."—T. Watson.

^a Je. xxxii. 8, 9, 18—20, 33.

Truth will be uppermost one time or other, like cork, though kept down in the water.

"God's people have always in their worst conditions found out the best of their God."

Luther says: "Bene orare est bene studisse. —To have prayed well is to have studied well."

^b "In ch. iii. 18, the manifold paths of sins are described as the scattering of men's ways, but under the new covenant they will with one consent walk in the one narrow path of right doing." — Spk. Com.

^c Ps. lxxxix. 34, 35; Is. lv. 3; He. viii. 10.

"Called an 'everlasting covenant,' not only bec. God will be for ever faithful to it, but bec. the consequences of it will be everlasting." — Mat. Henry.

^d "Trade shall revive, for they shall have money enough to buy land with. Husbandry shall revive, for those that have money shall covet to lay it out upon lands." — Mat. Henry.

"As the dog in Æsop's fable lost the real flesh for the shadow of it, so the covetous man casts away the true riches for the love of the shadowy." — Adams.

"Whom God adopts, he anoints; whom he makes sons, he makes saints." — Watson.

^e "This invitation betokens God's favor and loving-kindness; that He is ready to comply with the first intimations of His servant's desires." — Lowth.

law which manifests itself in sequence to human ignorance and folly. — Pul. Com.

39—41. (39) one heart,^b Eze. xi. 19. Prob. referring to the reunion of Israel and Judah. (40) everlasting covenant, ch. xxxi. 31, 33.^c (41) assuredly, i. e. in truth. Indicating God's fixed purpose.

Bible religion (vs. 40).—I. As having its seat in the heart. 1. Not merely in the intellect; 2. Not merely in the sentiments; 3. Not merely in occasional service. II. As imparted by God. 1. Not miraculously, not irrespective of man's activities; 2. By the ministry of His servants. III. As a safeguard against apostasy.—Thomas.

God rejoicing. We are to think of him as the "blessed" God, i. e. as essentially happy. The brightness and beauty of the world are reflections from the blessedness of God. Because he is glad, nature is glad, flowers bloom, birds sing, young creatures bound with delight. Nothing is more sad in perversions of religion than the representations of God as a gloomy tyrant. Less terrible, but scarcely less false, are those monkish ideas which deny the tyranny but cherish the gloom of a sombre divinity more suited to chill, dark cloisters than to that glorious temple of nature in which the eternal presence dwells and manifests himself symbolically. These fragrant meadows, broad rolling seas of moorland heather, rich green forest-cities of busy insect life, flashing ocean waves, and the pure blue sky above, and all that is sweet and lovely in creation, swell one symphony of gladness, because the mighty Spirit that haunts them is himself overflowing with joy. Our God is a Sun. And if divinity is sunny, so should religion be. The happy God will rejoice in the happiness of his children. Innocent mirth can be no offence to such a God. The typical citizens of his kingdom are little children; and what is so joyous as childhood?—Pul. Com.

42—44. (42) Like as, in similar faithfulness to My word. (43) fields .. land, "returning to the symbol of the purchased field, Jehovah declares that fields shall be bought, with all the legal formalities usual in settled and orderly societies, deeds shall be signed, sealed, and delivered in the presence of witnesses."—Exp. Bib.^a (44) subscribe evidences, vs. 10. in the land of Benjamin, the several parts of the land are specified in order to make the promise more distinct that it should be possessed again in its entirety.

Variety in religious character.—We ought, if rightly minded, to rejoice in the exuberance and variety of the spiritual gifts possessed by Christians, just as we delight in the rich variety of nature, or in that of the Word of God. There are many lines of thought in religion, many forms which practical and personal piety takes, although, of course, they are all animated by the same essential principles. St. John and St. Paul were both equally devoted to the cause and person of our Lord, yet no two men ever existed who manifested this devotion in shapes more different. Both these members held of the Head by a living union, but they discharged for the Head functions altogether different. Let us not conceive of all genuine religion as moving in one groove of feeling and practice, and refuse to acknowledge any man as a Christian, because he does not run upon our particular groove. There are several points of view from which Christianity may be surveyed; and although it be one and the same object, from whatever point we look, yet eyes placed on different levels will see it grouped in different perspectives.—Goulburn.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-THIRD.

"In this chap. the prophet looking out beyond the troubles of the present, depicts afresh the subsequent purification and restoration of the nation."—Driver. 1—3. (1) second time, after the message about the field. shut up, ch. xxxii. 2, 3. (2) maker, R. V. "who doeth it," i. e. what he has purposed. Isa. xxxvii. 26. (3) mighty things, or things hidden, or shut up—in the mysterious counsels of God.^a Prayer (vs. 3).—I. The invitation to prayer. 1. Whose is it? 2. To whom is the invitation addressed? 3. What is the tenor of the invitation? II. The promise. 1. It is general; 2. It is special. Apply:—(1) Reprove the prayerless; (2) Encourage the prayerful.—G. Brooks.

Prayer.—Thomas Brooks, alluding to the old classical myth of Daedalus, who, being imprisoned in the island of Crete, made wings for himself, by which he escaped to Italy, says, "Christians must do as Daedalus, who, when he could not escape by a way upon earth, went by a way of heaven." Holy prayers are the wings of the soul's deliverance. A Well of Consolation.—The dungeon of the Mamertine, where a probable tradition declares that Paul was for a while confined, is entered through a round hole in the floor of another dungeon above. The uppermost apartment is dark enough, but the lower one is darkness itself, so that the apostle's imprisonment was of the severest kind. We noticed, however, a strange fact:—in the hard floor there is a beautiful fountain of clear crystal water, which doubtless was as fresh in Paul's day as it is now; of course the Papists believe the fountain to be miraculous; we who are not so credulous of traditions rather see in it a symbol full of instruction:—there never was a dungeon for God's servants which was without its well of consolation.

4—8. (4) thrown . . . mounts, R. V. "which are broken down to make a defence^b against the mounts, and against the sword,"^c i. e. they were thrown down to make room for defensive works. (5) They come, a poetical figure. These ramparts and inner defences are said to advance to fight the Chaldeans. (6) health, etc., first the cure of its moral evils, then gracious outward restoration. (7) build them, or establish them.^d (8) cleanse, "this distinctive feature of the new covenant has been already brought out strongly in xxxi. 34. We shall have it again, l. 20."

Peace is revealed in Jesus Christ. In him there is the secret of a composure and a steadfastness unaffected by all the common cause of discord and instability. He had an unusual number of enemies, and this because he was so persistent in declaring righteousness; and yet all the time he had that peace within which showed how outside forces only affected the mere shell of life. In this life there was ever the joint manifestation of peace and steadfastness, and the steadfastness was explained by the fact that he came from God, continued in God, did the will of God, and so, ever having this hold on the Eternal, and being held by the Eternal, the shaking influences of time did ever more and more both to reveal his strength and their own weakness. All the exhortations of Jesus with respect to faith are meant to reveal to us the abundance of peace and truth. With what pity Jesus must look on the abortive, melancholy attempts of men to trust in the untrustworthy! and yet the unveiled magnificence of peace and truth is unseen.—Pul. Com.

9—II. (9) it shall be, R. V. "this city shall be." a praise,^a Is. lxii. 7. fear and tremble, with awe at the signs of the power and faithfulness of Israel's God.^b (10) shall be desolate, better, "is desolate."^c The Prophet seems to see the land as the people thought of it during the time of the captivity—uninhabited and silent. (11) voice, etc., ch. vii. 34, xvi. 9. praise, etc., "these clauses seem to have been liturgical forms used in the Temple services. This we gather from such passages as 2 Chron. v. 13, vii. 3, 6; Ezra iii. 11; Ps. cvi. 1."—Camb. Bib. cause to return, or "reverse."^d

Jerusalem.—When, on one occasion, a crowd of crusaders approached the Holy City, and caught the first sight of its spires through the blue luminous tremors of the distance, some knelt in silent praise, some kissed the earth, some prayed, and laughed, and wept in wild emotion; and knight and palmer, old man and little child joined to raise the cry, "Jerusalem, Jerusalem!"—Stanford. The voices of the future. —The sounds of life are to flow back into the now desolate streets, but they are to be the sounds of a different kind of life. Sounds springing from righteousness within and from a principle of obedience to Jehovah. Sounds that come from a universally satisfied people. Not sounds of joy and gladness in palaces, and sounds of privation and despair in hovels; but sunshine falling everywhere, and everywhere the hearts of the people ready to break forth into song. In the eleventh

"True, conscious honor is to feel no sin, He's armed without who's innocent within: Be this thy screen, and this thy wall of brass." —Pope's Horace.

b "In ancient sieges, as the works of the enemy approached the walls, it was usual to build inner fortifications, and for this purpose houses were pulled down, both to give the vacant space necessary, and to supply materials." — Spk. Com.

c Mattocks in 2 Chr. xxxiv. 6; axes in Eze. xxvi. 9.

d Je. xxiv. 6, xxxi. 4, 28, xlii. 10.

a "That is, the subject of men's praise and admiration, the glory of which redounds to God, who is her protector."—Lowth.

b Comp. Ps. cxxxix. 14; Is. lx. 5.

c Je. xxxii. 43.

d "To 'reverse' the captivity does not here mean to restore the captives from their exile, but to restore the country from the circumstances of desolation to wh. it had been reduced, although this naturally presupposed the restoration of its inhabitants." — Henderson.

"Christianity has given to truth a dignity independent of time and numbers. It has required that truth should be believed and respected for itself."—Vinet.

^a Is. lxx. 10; Je. 1. 19.

^b "Every shepherd tells his tale," i. e. "counts the number of his sheep."—Milton's L'Allegro.

^c "I will make to rise," God's promise having for a time seemed to lie dead and abortive."—Calvin.

^d "The name is here given to Jerus., i. e. to the Church, bec. it is her business immediately to work on earth that righteousness which Christ works absolutely."—Spk. Com.

The brightest Christian, in his graces is not unlike the sea, which never continues long at high water mark. "In the channel through which a running stream is directed upon a mill wheel, the same turning of a valve that shuts the water out of one course throws it into another. Thus the Jews, by rejecting the counsel of God, shut themselves out, and at the same moment opened a way whereby mercy might flow to us who were afar off."—William Arnot.

verse there is first of all the general indication of gladness. Every one is full of healthy life, which, as a matter of course, breaks forth into joyful manifestation. Then, as a very significant illustration, there is the gladness of the bridegroom and the bride. This signifies a stable society, a hopeful prospect, the joys of home life. Probably there was no joy so demonstrative as that connected with wedding festivities. Then the joy of religion comes in to crown and conclude all. Praise to Jehovah for his goodness and his enduring mercy, and offerings of thanksgiving in his house. If joy of this kind had been absent, the other joy would not long have lasted. From what God sends down into our lives as causes of abiding joy, we must send back to him responses of intelligent and heart-felt praise.—Pul. Com.

12—14. (12) habitation, rather, a pasture (including the idea of an encampment).^a (13) telletth, i. e. counteth.^b There will be so many that they will have to be counted. A hint of the coming prosperity. (14) good thing, or good word: ch. xxix. 10, xxxiii. 5, 6.^c

Revival of prosperity.—It is remarkable how soon the battle-field with its hideous relics becomes a flowery meadow. The rapid revival of the French nation after the war of 1870 was an astonishment to Europe. This may be accounted for partly on natural principles, since war rarely touches the permanent resources of a country; if it drains the stream, it does not stanch the fountain-head. The capital of a country is always being consumed and remade in peaceful times, so that the destruction of it in war is not so great a calamity as might appear at first sight. But a true revival of prosperity depends on higher causes. A nation is only really prosperous when its people are advancing in moral tone, when there is a Divine root to their recovery. This is implied in the description of restored Israel.—Pul. Com.

15—18. (15) Branch, ch. xxiii. 5. (16) our righteousness, "the symbolic name which in xxxiii. 6 is given to the Messianic king is here assigned to the restored, ideal city. The name is intended, of course, to symbolize the fact that Jehovah is the source of righteousness to the restored community."—Driver.^d (17, 18) never want a man, Heb. "there shall not be cut off from David." "The permanence of the kingly and priestly line is here emphatically declared. But elsewhere Jeremiah no less plainly announces the cutting off of both, of the former in xxiii. 30, xxx. 21, of the latter in iii. 16, xxxi. 33. We must therefore take the passage as one of the prophet's pictures of the Christian dispensation, clothed in a Jewish dress, the only form in which it could present any meaning to those to whom it was delivered."—Camb. Bib.

Hill and his gardener.—The Rev. Rowland Hill had great reason to rejoice in the consistent lives and zealous devotion to God of many of his people at Wotton. There was amongst them a person of the name of Rugg, of a piety so deep, and of a life so useful and unblemished, that even his enemies admired and were awed by his character. Mr. Hill's gardener at Wotton, who had always passed for an honest, quiet sort of man, was at length discovered to have been the perpetrator of several burglaries and other daring robberies in the neighborhood, though he had, till caught in the act, never been even suspected. He was tried at Gloucester, condemned, and executed. It need scarcely be said that his master visited him in jail. During his interview with him there, he confessed the many crimes of which he had been guilty. "How was it, William," he inquired, "that you never robbed me, when you had such abundant opportunity?" "Sir," replied he, "do you recollect the juniper bush on the border against the dining-room? I have many times hid under it at night, intending, which I could easily have done, to get into the house and plunder it; but, sir, I was afraid: something said to me, He is a man of God: it is a house of prayer; if I break in I shall surely be found out: so I never could pluck up courage to attempt it." In another conversation he told him, "Sir, I well knew that old Mr. Rugg was in the habit of carrying a deal of money in his pocket; times and times have I hid behind the hedge of the lane leading to his house—he has passed within a yard of me, when going home from the prayer-meeting, again and again; I could not stir; I durst not touch so holy a man. I was afraid. I always began to tremble as soon as he came near me, and gave up the thought altogether, for I knew he was a holy man."—Cheever.

19—22. (20) break . . day, "the constant, regular succession of day and night is an emblem of the equally regular supply of royal descendants of David and of Levitical priests, and the countless grains of sand are symbolic of the wonderful increase of their numbers."—Pul. Com. Ch. xxxi. 35, 36. (21) covenant . . David, 2 Sa. vii. 12—16. (22) host, etc., ch. xxxi. 37. Fulfilled spiritually in Christian believers.

Jerusalem discoveries.—Outside Jerusalem how much remains for us to learn! The field has been scarcely furrowed by the merest surface plough; and whole districts, with many a mountain nook, are virgin soil to the Western explorer. We have in the Book of Joshua the Domesday Book of the land of Israel. Who yet has taken that olden roll in hand, and verified by it the sites and caves, the living villages and the ruinous heaps which stud every corner of the land? Let us remember that what Rawlinson, and Layard, and Botta have done for the history of the later monarchy in the mounds of Assyria and Chaldaea, yet remains to be done for Numbers and Joshua, and for the golden period of the Israelitish monarchy. It is not for nothing, surely, that Providence has left it within our grasp, in a sceptical age—in an age devoted, beyond all others, to physical research and physical evidences to elucidate the details of the Word written, by the numberless illustrations which every diligent exploration of the land, which is, as it were, the framework, the setting, of the Divine history, at once affords. It matters nothing to the truth of God's Word where stood the temple of Solomon, where are buried the ruins of Capernaum, where Israel pitched their tents in the wilderness, where John preached the baptism of repentance; but it does matter something to our understanding of that Word, that we should be able to show its minute and exact accordance with the existing facts of local topography.—Chr. Advoc. and Rev.

23—26. (24) two families, "the sense of this verse then is, that the people, seeing that both Israel and Judah ('the two families') are being apparently cast off, despise their own nation, despair of any better days, and consider their national existence to be a thing of the past."—Camb. Bib. before them, or in their judgment. Those who think thus of Israel and Judah are degenerate Jews who had lost faith. (25) covenant, vs. 20. (26) Then, but not till them, will cause, etc., ch. xxxii. 44. "There shall yet be rulers and priests over Israel in its spiritual sense, viz. the Christian Church, the natural successor and development of Judaism. For this thought one step further advanced, and pointing faintly to the means by which the issue was to be brought about, compare Is. lxvi. 19—21."—Camb. Bib.

Necessity of correct belief.—Go into New York, and in the Sixth Ward you shall find two representative men. One says, "I voted for the judge, and helped to put him where he is, and he will wink at my crimes. I can drink as much as I please, on Sundays and on weekdays, and he will not disturb me. He is easy and good natured, and he is not going to be hard with me if I do break the laws a little." And the man, because he believes that the judge does not care for his wickedness, and will not punish him, grows bold and corrupt in transgression. But at length he is brought before the court, and he finds there, instead of his bribed judge, a white-faced man—not red-faced; one of those men with a long head upward—not backward and downward; a man with a full sense of the value of justice and truth. The culprit begins his shuffling excuses. The judge listens to none of them; he reads the law, and says, "Your conduct is herein condemned, and sends him away to receive his just deserts. When the man has expiated his crime, he goes around in the same ward, and says, "You must walk straight hereafter. The judge that sits on the bench now is not the jolly old judge that used to sit there. If you go before him, he will make you smart." Does it not make a difference what a man believes about a judge? If he believes that he is a lenient, conniving judge, a "The perpetual succession of day and night, in virtue of the Divine ordinance to that effect, is appealed to as a pledge of the inviolability of the promise made by God both to David and the Levites." — Henderson.

Comp. Nu. xxv. 12, 13; Ps. lxxxix. 3, 28, 34; Mal. ii. 4, 5, 8.

"The richest promises are confirmed by the strongest assurances." — Cowles.

"God has hitherto kept promise with nights and days that one shall succeed the other; and will He not keep touch with His people?" — Trapp.

a "Christ is that seed of David that is to be perpetual dictator to the seed of Ab., Is. and Jacob; and as this people shall never want such a King, so this King shall never want such a people. Christianity shall continue in the dominion of Christ, and the subjection of Christians to Him, till day and night come to an end."—Matthew Henry.

"Deep security commonly ends in deep despair; whereas those that keep up a holy fear at all times have a good hope to support them in the worst of times."—Henry, "To every man who truly studies Nature there is a God. Call Him by whatever name—a Creator, a Supreme Being, a Great First Cause, a Power that makes for Righteousness — Science has a God; and he who believes in this, in spite of all protest, possesses a theology."—Drummond.

^a "This prediction belongs in point of time to ch. xxxii. 1—5, and is merely an amplification of what is contained in those vss. It was consequently delivered before Jeremiah was placed in custody."—Henderson.

^b "The verbose description well suits the pomp of an Oriental army; and also describes the fact, that such an army consisted of a loose aggregate of tributary and half-conquered nations and tribes, held together by the personal influence of one man."—Spk. Com.

^c "It was customary among the Jews, at the funeral of their kings, esp. of those whose memory they honored, to prepare a bed of spices (2 Chr. xvi. 14), which they made a perfume of by burning them, and therein to deposit the body of the deceased prince."—Lowth.

does it not make him careless? And if he believes that he is a straightforward judge, does it not make him afraid of transgression? Now lift up the judge's bench, and make it the judgment-seat; and take out the human judge, and put God Almighty there. If men believe Him to be an all-smiling God—a God that is all sunshine, an all-sympathizing God—a God that is nothing but kindness, and goodness, and gentleness, they say to themselves, "We will do as we have a mind to." Take away that miserable slander upon the revealed character of God, and lift up the august front of Justice, on whose brow love proudly sits, and let men see that there is a vast heart of love and gentleness indeed, but one that will by no means clear the guilty, and they will take more heed to their conduct. Does it, then, make no difference what a man believes about God's nature, and His manner of dealing with men? It makes all the difference between laxity and earnestness, between an endeavor to live truly and no endeavor at all in that direction; between right and wrong conduct.—H. W. Beecher.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-FOURTH.

"Ch. xxxiv. 1—7" is virtually a postscript to ch. xxxii., xxxiii.; it apparently contains the prophecy referred to in ch. xxxii. 3—5 as the cause of Jeremiah's imprisonment. The same prophecy recurs in a shorter form in ch. xxxvii. 17, and, by comparing the context of this passage with ch. xxxii. 1, etc., we are enabled to infer that the original prophecy was uttered at the renewal of the siege of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans, who had withdrawn for a time on the news of the approach of Pharaoh's army."—Pul. Com. 1—3. (1) of his dominion, R. V. "that were under his dominion."^a people, or peoples, tribes under his rule."^b (2) burn it, a sign of the exasperated state of Nebuchadnezzar's mind.

The woe of weakness.—"Zedekiah, King of Judah." The life of this unhappy monarch is a piteous but powerful illustration of the misery of instability of character, the sorrows that dog the footsteps of the infirm will. What men need, in order to be happier and better than they are, is not more knowledge of what is right—they are amply supplied with that; or the presence of plentiful good purpose and desire to do the right—hell itself is paved with good intentions; but what is needed is strength of will, firmness and stability of character. It is for lack of that that men go so wrong and make such a miserable confusion of their own life and that of others. The history of Zedekiah illustrates all this.—Pul. Com. A common doom.—One of the mysteries of Providence is that those who are most responsible for national sins seem to suffer least by public misfortunes. Ambitious statesmen and bellicose journalists do not generally fall in battle and leave destitute widows and children. When the captains of commerce and manufacture err in their industrial policy, one great result is the pauperism of hundreds of families who had no voice in the matter. A spendthrift landlord may cripple the agriculture of half a county. And yet, when factories are closed and farmers ruined, the manufacturer and the landlord are the last to see want. In former invasions of Judah, the princes and priests had some share of suffering; but wealthy nobles might incur losses and yet weather the storm by which poorer men were overwhelmed. Fines and tribute levied by the invaders would, after the manner of the East, be wrung from the weak and helpless. But now ruin was to fall on all alike. The nobles had been flagrant in sin, they were now to be marked out for most condign punishment—"To whomsoever much is given, of him shall much be required."—Exp. Bib.

4—7. (4) Thou . . sword, this assurance, however, implies his captivity. (5) burn odours, R. V. "make a burning for thee."^c (7) Lachish, 2 Ki. xviii. 13, xix. 8. These were outlying fortresses which, at the time of the prophecy, had not fallen into Nebuchadnezzar's hands.

Allegory of death.—Now I further saw, that betwixt them and the gate was a river; but there was no bridge to go over, and the river was very deep. At the sight, therefore, of this river, the pilgrims were much stunned; but the men that went with them said, "You must go through, or you cannot come at the gate." They then addressed themselves to the water; and, entering, Christian began to sink; and, crying out to his good friend Hopeful, he said, "I sink in deep waters; the billows go over my head; all his waves go over me." Then said the other, "Be of good cheer, my brother: I feel the bottom, and it is good." Then said Christian, "Ah! my friend, the sorrow of death hath compassed me about: I shall not see the land that flows with milk and honey." And with that a great darkness and horror fell upon Christian, so that he could not see before him. Hopeful, therefore, here had much ado to keep his brother's head above water; yea, sometimes he would be quite gone down, and then ere a while would rise up again half dead. Hopeful did also endeavour to comfort him, saying, "Brother, I see the gate, and men standing by to receive us;" but Christian would answer, "It is you they wait for: you have been hopeful ever since I knew you." "And so have you," said he to Christian. "Ah, brother!" said he, "surely, if I was right, He would now rise to help me; but for my sins He hath brought me into the snare, and hath left me." Then I saw in my dream that Christian was in a muse a while. To whom, also, Hopeful added these words, "Be of good cheer; Jesus Christ maketh thee whole." And with that Christian brake out with a loud voice, "Oh! I see Him again, and He tells me, 'When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee.'" Then they both took courage, and the enemy was after that as still as a stone until they were gone over.—Bunyan.

8—11. "The inhabitants of Jerusalem, under pressure of the siege, had solemnly engaged to emancipate their Hebrew slaves, but afterwards, when the siege was temporarily raised, had treacherously disregarded the engagement."—Driver. (8) proclaim liberty, Ex. xxi. 2. "By the law a Hebrew, after having been a bond-servant for six years, on the seventh was to be let go free."^a (9) serve himself of, i. e. make the Hebrew serve him. (10) obeyed, carried out the wishes of the king. (11) turned, etc., this was during the time that the Chaldeans raised the siege, prob. in order to meet an Egyptian army.^b

Futility of oaths.—Whatever influence oaths may have in causing a would-be liar to speak the truth, they are very poor guarantees for the performance of contracts. William the Conqueror profited little by Harold's oath to help him to the crown of England, though it was sworn over the relics of holy saints. The famous "blush of Sigismund" over the violation of his safe-conduct to Huss was rather a token of unusual sensitiveness than a confession of exceptional guilt. The Romish Church has exalted perfidy into a sacred obligation. As Milman says: "The fatal doctrine, confirmed by long usage, by the decrees of Pontiffs, by the assent of all ecclesiastics, and the acquiescence of the Christian world, that no promise, no oath, was binding to a heretic, had hardly been questioned, never repudiated."—Exp. Bib. Love of liberty.—John Milton, the chief of poets, held the post of Latin Secretary under Cromwell. At the restoration he was of course dismissed from his office. He was now poor and blind and to these afflictions Charles II. added political persecutions; he fined him, and doomed his writings on liberty to be publicly burned. Nothing daunted by these fierce and multiplied trials, the great poet retired into private life, evoked his mighty genius, and produced Paradise Lost. But after he had endured the ills of poverty several years, Charles, feeling the need of his matchless talents, invited him to resume his former post, with all its honors, emoluments, and court favors. But Milton knew that the price of this honor must be silence on the great question of human liberty. Therefore he did not hesitate a moment. It was a strong temptation—the bribe was splendid. By merely keeping silence, he could have honor, abundance, and high position, in exchange for poverty, persecution, and neglect! But this could not be. The poet loved truth too well. His soul was too noble, too sincere, too firm in its allegiance

"Dreadful is their doom, whom doubt has driven To censure fate and pious hope forego; Like yonder blasted boughs by lightning riven, Perfection, beauty, life, they never know, But frown on all that pass, a monument of woe."

—Beattie.

^a De. xv. 12.

^b Je. xxxvii. 7, also xxxiv. 21, 22.

"Hypocrisy, detest her as we may (And no man's hatred ever wronged her yet), May claim this merit still: that she admits The worth of that she mimics with such care, And thus gives virtue indirect applause."

—Cowper.

"No man's condition is so base as his, None more accursed than he; for man esteems Him hateful 'cause he seems not what he is; God hates him 'cause he is not what he seems."

—Quarles.

"The love of liberty with life is given, And life itself the inferior gift of heaven."

—Dryden.

"To refuse discussion is like sitting on the safety valve of a steam boiler. It will result in explosion and destruction. Powder burned loose on the rock in the open air makes a great blaze and smoke, but does little harm. That powder confined in a rock produces an earthquake. Whatever church or nation attempts to prevent free thought and free discussion is living on a volcano."—Peloubet's Notes.

to God and liberty, to barter away its right to condemn tyranny for place or gold. Hence he spurned the royal offer, and clung to his principles and his poverty, until death called his free soul to enter its congenial heaven. And so gentle was the summons, so sweetly calm was his unruffled spirit to the hour of dissolution, that his friends knew not the precise moment of his death.—W. Smith.

12—16. (12) Therefore, on account of this insulting act of disobedience (13, 14) covenant, etc., Ex. xxi. 2; De. xv. 12. It seems that the last year of Zedekiah was the Sabbatical year. Comp. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 21. The Sabbatical years had been neglected for 500 years previous to the captivity. (15) ye . . turned, i. e. at last a people were found who had obeyed. "Ye" is emphatic, in the house, or Temple. The matter had been public and solemn.¹ The insult of the disobedience was the more marked. (16) turned, again to the old wilful ways, polluted, R. V., "profaned."

Christian liberty.—

Grace makes the slave a freeman. 'Tis a change
That turns to ridicule the turgid speech
And stately tone of moralists, who boast
As if, like him of fabulous renown,
They had indeed ability to smooth
The shag of savage nature, and were each
An Orpheus, and omnipotent in song:
But transformation of apostate man
From fool to wise, from earthly to divine,
Is work for Him that made him. He alone,
And He by means, in philosophic eyes
Trivial and worthy of disdain, achieves
The wonder; humanising what is brute
In the lost kind, extracting from the lips
Of asps their venom, overpowering strength
By weakness, and hostility by love . . .
He is the freeman whom the truth makes free,
And all are slaves besides.

—Cowper.

* An ancient writer relates that Agamemnon, the leader of the Greeks, at the siege of Troy, "to confirm his faith sworn to Achilles, ordered victims to be brought. He took one, and with his sword divided it in the midst, placed the pieces opposite to each other, and holding his sword, reeking with the blood, passed between the separated pieces."

"Passing between the divided pieces implied the willingness of the parties to be so treated, if they failed in adhering to the stipulations."—Henderson.

The spiritually-minded Christian, when the Sun of Righteousness shines upon his path, looks upon all his sins as upon his shadow, viz., as "cast behind his back."

17—22. That the institutions of Mosaic law fell out of use for centuries and were later re-introduced is in many passages. (Comp. 2 Chron. xxx. 26; xxxv. 18; xxxvi. 21; Neh. viii. 17, also 2 Ki. xxiii. 22.) These passages show, however, that there was no doubt of the antiquity of the enactments in question.—Oehler. (17) liberty for you, freedom fr. the Divine protection. removed into, R. V. "tossed to and fro among." (18) cut the calf, referring to the significant rite by which the covenant was sealed." Ge. xv. 10. (19) princes of Judah, "territorial magnates." (20) dead, etc., ch. vii. 33, xvi. 4. (21) gone up from you, or have temporarily raised the siege. (22) return, and complete their work.

Liberty.—God is always on the side of liberty, for only to the free individual is full opportunity given of serving God. And yet this must be said with qualification. External liberty is only of use when it is accompanied with deliverance from inward bondage. Hence, in the New Testament, no great stress is laid upon civil liberty; that would come in due time, and, irresistibly, by the growth and conquering power of Christian principle. The stress in the New Testament is on the maintenance by the individual of liberty within himself. But in ancient Israel there was a God-governed nation as well as God-governed individuals, and civil liberty had to be sought as far as possible by Divine provisions and commands.—Pul. Com. Dividing victims for sacrifice.—It was a customary thing to cut the victim (which was to be offered as a sacrifice upon the occasion) into two parts, and so placing each half upon a different altar, to cause those who contracted the covenant to pass between them (Gen. xv. 9, 10, 17). This rite was practised both by believers and heathen at their solemn leagues. And the offering of these sacrifices, and passing between the parts of the divided victim, was symbolically staking their hopes of purification and salvation on their performance of the conditions on which it was offered. This remarkable practice may be clearly traced in the Greek and Latin writers. The following superstition is related by Pitts: "If the Algerine corsairs, at any time, happen to be in a very great strait or distress, as being chased, or in a storm, they will gather money, light up candles in remembrance of some dead marrabot (saint) or other, calling upon him with heavy sighs and groans. If they find no succor from their before-mentioned rites and superstitions, but that the danger rather increases, then they go to sacrificing a sheep, which is done after this manner: having cut off the head with a knife, they immediately take out the entrails, and throw them and the head overboard, and then, with all speed they can, they cut the body into two parts by the middle, and throw one part over the right side of the ship, and the other over the left, into the sea, as a kind of propitiation." In the case here referred to the ship passes between the parts thus thrown on each side of it.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-FIFTH.

"This and the following chapter take us back into the reign of Jehoiakim. Ch. xxxv. is toward the close of that reign, when, the territory of Judah being overrun by marauding bands, (2 Ki. xxiv. 2,) the nomad tribe of Rechabites took refuge in Jerusalem."—Driver. 1—5. (1) Jehoiakim, the predecessor of Zedekiah. (2) Rechabites, a tribe of Arabs, of the family of Jethro. "A kind of nomadic ascetics belonging (1 Chron. ii. 55) to the Kenites, who from the time of Moses had enjoyed the rights of hospitality in Israel, and had been incorporated into the tribe of Judah."—Oehler. wine to drink, their allegiance to principle was to be tested. One of their rules was not to drink wine. (3) Jaazaniah, etc., chief men of the tribe. (4) chamber . . princes, these chambers were round the temple-courts. (5) Drink, "probably they were aware that the scene was intended to have symbolic religious significance."—Exp. Bib.

The Rechabites.—It is refreshing to meet these quiet, simple people after wearying ourselves with sickening sights of the vice and hypocrisy of the court and city life of Jerusalem. We are inclined to think too much of external civilization. Making allowance for exaggerations and eccentricities, we may find some much-needed lessons in the protest of Mr. Ruskin against the industrial ideal of the age. Inventions, commerce, wealth,—these are but means to an end. What is the use of the working of wonderful machinery if the outcome is poor and profitless? Many a man's business is a Frankenstein which becomes a tyrant to him. By others the science and resources of the age are only used as ministers to selfish pleasures. Thus the men and women may be none the better for all the advance that is made in the material appliances of the most complex civilization. Yet the personal condition of these men and women, and not that of the machinery of life, is the one matter of final importance. The quieter, simpler life of the Rechabites had many points which it would be instructive for us to consider. It was out of all the rush and worry of town-life. It was calm and comparatively free from care. With few wants, the Rechabites had few anxieties. Are we so much better off than they in this respect? Then, as a wandering life, it was a reminder of the truth, so often forgotten to our serious harm, that all men who live a life higher than the earthly must be pilgrims and strangers here, and must "seek a better country, that is, a heavenly."—Pul. Com. The Rechabites.—"On my arrival at Mesopotamia, some Jews that I saw there pointed out to me one of the ancient Rechabites. He stood before me, wild, like an Arab, holding the bridle of his horse in his hand. I showed him the Bible in Hebrew and Arabic, which he was much rejoiced to see, as he could read both languages, but had no knowledge of the New Testament. After having proclaimed to him the tidings of salvation, and made him a present of the Hebrew and Arabic Bibles and Testaments, I asked him, 'Whose descend-

^a Ex. xviii. 9; Nu. x. 29, 32; Ju. i. 16; 1 Chr. ii. 55.

"This tribe came into Palestine with the Israelites, but, in order to maintain their independence, they led a nomadic life, without fixed settlements, and so were able without difficulty to remove on any attempt being made to subdue them."—Henderson.

"There are many traces of the Rechabites at present. They live entirely isolated, will not be recognized, and shun, or, rather, hate, all intercourse and every connection with the other Jews. They only sojourn in Arabia, and for the most part on the western shores of the Red Sea, and are engaged solely in the raising of cattle. They are called Arab Sebb, or Arabs who keep the seventh day."—Rabbi J. Schwartz.

"We read of a king of Poland who carried the picture of his father in a plate of gold about his neck; and when he was entering upon any great business he would kiss the picture and say, 'God grant I may observe my father's charge, and do nothing unworthy of him.'—Trapp.

"Thou sparkling bowll thou sparkling bowll Though lips of bards thy brim may press,
And eyes of beauty o'er thee roll, And songs and dance thy power confess—
I will not touch thee; for there clings A scorpion to thy side that stings."
—Pierpoint.

ant are you?" 'Mousa,' said he, boisterously, 'is my name, and I will show you who were my ancestors;' on which he immediately began to read from the 5th to the 11th vss. of Jer. xxxv. 'Where do you reside?' said I. Turning to Gen. x. 27, he replied: 'At Hadoram, now called Simar by the Arabs; at Uzal, now called Sanan by the Arabs;' and again referring to the same chapter, verse 30th, he continued: 'At Mesha, now called Mecca, in the deserts around those places. We drink no wine, and plant no vineyard, and sow no seed; and live in tents, as Jonadab our father commanded us: Hobab was our father too. Come to us, and you will find us sixty thousand in number; and you see thus the prophecy has been fulfilled,—Therefore, thus saith the Lord of Hosts, the God of Israel; Jonadab, the son of Rechab, shall not want a man to stand before Me for ever;' and saying this, Mousa, the Rechabite, mounted his horse, and fled away, and left behind a host of evidence in favor of sacred writ."
—Wolff.

6—11. (6) Jonadab, 2 Ki. x. 15. (7) build house, etc., "he probably desired to preserve their lives from the moral and religious corruption of town civilization."—Oehler. (10) tents, which can readily be removed from place to place. (11) go to Jerusalem, for the security of its walls and defences. Syrians, comp. 2 Ki. xxiv. 2. Syrians were allies of the Chaldeans at this time.

The power of strong drink.—If I were to tell you, says one, that there is in the British Isles a being into whose treasures are annually poured in unproductive consumption more than one hundred and forty millions of our national wealth; whose actions crush year by year more victims than have been crushed for centuries together by the car of Juggernaut; whose unchecked power causes year by year horrors incomparably more multitudinous than those which the carnage of any battlefields can present; if I were to say that the services wrought by this being were, if any at all, which is an open question, yet almost valueless in kind, infinitesimal in extent, while, on the other hand, the direct admitted indisputable miseries he inflicts were terrible in virulence and vast in ramification; if I were to say that at his right hand and at his left, as eager and ever active ministers, stood Idiocy and Pauperism, Degradation and Brutality; and at that point you were all to rise up at once and cry aloud, "Tell us the name of this being, that we may drive him with execration from the midst of us, and that every one of us may strive to extirpate his power and expel his polluting footsteps from our soil;" and if I were to say that, far from doing this, we all as a nation, and nearly all of us as individuals, crown him with garlands, honor him with social customs, introduce him into gladdest gatherings, sing songs in his glory, build myriads of temples to his service, familiarize our very children with his fame and praise;—were I to say this, then sentence by sentence, clause by clause, word by word, it would be literally true, not of a man, but of a thing, and that thing intoxicating drink.

a "I enjoined
nothing unreasonable, but simply to serve Me, and I attached to the command a gracious promise,
but in vain.
If Jonadab's commands, wh.
were arbitrary, and not moral obligations in themselves, were obeyed, much more ought Mine, which are in themselves right." — Fausset.

12—15. (12) Then came the word, "Jeremiah is told to go and apply the lesson which the Rechabites taught. For this purpose he is to go forth from the chamber where his interview with them was held, and address the people we must suppose in the adjacent Temple court."—Camp. (13) my words, contrasted here with those of Jonathan. (14) rising early, the usual fig. for "earnestly." (15) all my servants, contrasting God's many messengers with this one lawgiver to the Rechabite. Return ye, etc., ch. xviii. 11, xxv. 5.^a Disobedience to God condemned (vss. 13, 14).—Let us consider this complaint—I. Simply. There is at this day—1. The same regard for the commands of men; 2. The same disregard for the commands of God. But let us consider the complaint more minutely—II. With its attendant aggravations. 1. The authority from which the different commands proceeded; 2. The commands themselves; 3. The manner in which they were enforced. Address—(1) Those who regard man, and not God; (2) Those who regard God, and not man; (3) Those who feel a united regard for both.—C. Simeon.

The simplest learner a true scholar.—The uncombed, ragged little wretch that has hardly got off from the briny sea—having come from the Emerald Isle—and that goes into the mistress' school and begins to fumble the book, though he never saw the inside of a book before, and begins to learn, is a scholar just as much as the boy that is reaching out his hand to take his diploma and go to the next higher school. He is a scholar, though he has the bulk of his learning yet to acquire. And so it is with following Christ. Whoever will go to the Word of God, where four pictures open—Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, whoever will read the life of Christ just as you would read the life of any other person, and follow that, he is a Christian.—H. W. Beecher. Obedience.—In nature we find great universal forces—light, heat, gravity, cohesion, magnetism, electricity, chemical affinity, life. We have only to understand the laws or conditions within which they act and we may command them; obey the law of the power, and the power obeys you. Thus we command light and it becomes our artist; heat and it becomes our refiner and purifier; gravity, and it becomes our giant mechanic; magnetism, our pilot; electricity our motor, messenger, illuminator. The Holy Spirit is the all subduing power of the Spiritual realm. Obey the laws of the Spirit, and all His power is at your disposal. In the work of God the believer may command Him.—Arthur T. Pierson.

16—19. (17) I will bring, nothing shall remove the threatened penalty." (18) house, or representatives of the family of. (19) want a man, i. e. the race should not be permitted to die out.^b

Obedience to parents (vss. 18, 19).—I. Endeavor to impress on the attention of the young the necessity for a strict obedience to the commands of their parents. II. As also for a general obedience, under the limitation of altered circumstances and times, to the institutions and customs of our forefathers. III. Show that it is much more our duty implicitly to respect and obey every command of God.—H. C. Cherry.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-SIXTH.

"This chapter narrates the memorable incident of the 5th year of Jehoiakim, when the roll of Jeremiah's prophecies was burned by the king, leading to the writing of the second roll which was the basis of the prophecies as we have them."—Driver. 1—4. (1) Fourth year, ch. xxv. 1. (2) roll, pieces of parchment joined together so as to make a roll, having a piece of wood at each end.^c write, etc., i. e. he was to collect his prophecies, and make a permanent record of them.^d Comp. Hab. ii. 2. ff. Is. viii. 1. "The purpose for which such records were made was to guarantee to coming generations the veracity of the Divine word. Isa. xxx. 8; xxxiv. 16; Jer. xxx. 2.—Oehler. (3) may be, comp. xxvi. 3.^e (4) Baruch, ch. xxxii. 12, 13, 16.

The names of writing materials and their origins.—Amongst the materials upon which the ancient Scriptures were written, were skins, tanned, or dyed red or yellow. These were not bound by the edge, but so fastened together as to form one continuous roll; hence the word volume, from Lat. volumen, a roll. Some were written on prepared skins called parchments, so called from Pergamos, the place where parchment was first made. "Sometimes tables of wood or stone, called caudices, or codices, were employed, hence the term codex (Lat. tablet) came to be applied to a manuscript on any material;" and hence also a system of laws was called a code, because the use of such tables was once frequent for legal purposes, where durability was important. "These tables were written on in their natural state (or, when used for temporary purposes, covered with wax) with an iron needle (Job xix. 24) called a stylus; hence we have the term style now applied to the style of the composition.

The Bible.—

Within this ample volume lies
The mystery of mysteries:
Happiest they of human race

"Some one asked Abraham Lincoln to appoint a day of fasting and prayer that God might be on their side. 'Don't bother about that,' said the man of common sense. God is now on the right side; you simply get with Him. The only way to command God is to obey Him, just as the only way to command electricity and steam is to obey the laws that govern them."—A. C. Dixon.

^a Pr. i. 24; Is. lxxv. 12.

^b "Dr. Wolff and Sig. Pierotti bear witness to the existence of a large tribe who represent themselves as the descendants of the Rechabites."—Bib. Dict., Smith.

Many of the experiences of childhood are forgotten in after life, yet they all have had their influence; and this influence still exists, secretly controlling our lives.

^c Is. viii. 1; Eze. ii. 9; Zec. v. 1.

^d We may assume that many of these prophecies had been previously written.

^e "In such places God is introduced, as speaking after the manner of men, and using such methods as in human probability may be most likely to prevail."—Lowth.

Exod. xxxii. 15; Deut. vi. 9; Isa. xxx. 8; Hab. ii. 2; Luke i. 68; 2 Cor. iii. 3.

"Walls . . . will not hold out long without men, any more than men without walls; nor will both to gether stand people in any stead without God and his protection." — W.

W. Dowling.

^a The great day of expiation, wh.
was kept upon the tenth day of the seventh month. Le. xxiii.
27, 29.

^b Keil supposes this fast to have been held in commemoration of the capture of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans in the previous year.

^a "The honorable treatment which Baruch meets with shows that the princes were favorably inclined towards him and Jeremiah." —
Spk. Com.

"Books are delightful when prosperity happily smiles; when adversity threatens, they are inseparable comforters. They give strength to human compact, nor are grave opinions brought forward without books. Arts and sciences, the benefits of which no mind can calculate, depend upon books." — Richard Aunger-vyle.

^b "Jeremiah being prob. only under house-arrest, would find no difficulty in availing himself of the advice given by the princes." — Henderson.

18. Ink.—The Oriental ink is thicker than ours, and consists of lamp-black or charcoal mixed with gum and water.
It is sold dry in grains.

To whom their God has given grace
To read, to fear, to hope, to pray,
To lift the latch and force the way;
And better had they ne'er been born,
That read to doubt, or read to scorn.

—Scott.

5—10. (5) shut up, "the same verb in the original is used chaps. xxxiii. 1, xxxix. 15, where it means imprisoned. Here, however, it cannot have that force, as we see by vs. 19, but simply means that he was hindered from addressing the people by some cause, probably danger to his life arising from the extreme unpopularity of his recent utterances." — Camb. Bib. (6) fasting day,^a when the multitudes would be assembled in the temple-courts. (7) supplication, for pardon and mercy. (9) proclaimed a fast, i. e. a special one, perhaps on account of the national calamities.^b (10) higher court, "there were two courts about the Temple," raised one above the other like terraces. The inner one was the higher court. The second court, or place of worship for the people, was separated from the first not by a wall but only by a railing, thus allowing the congregation to witness what was transacted in the court of the priests." — Oehler.

11—15. (11) son of Gemariah, this Gemariah was the public scribe, or the secretary of state, but he had not been present at Baruch's reading. His son had no bad purpose in carrying the report to him. (12) scribe's chamber, or office of the secretary of state, prob. in the forecourt of the king's palace. princes sat there, holding a council of state. (13) declared, etc., i. e. recited the chief points. (14) Jehudi, his pedigree indicates that he was of good family. "He seems to have been a kind of court-usher." — Exp. Bib. (15) read . . ears, much of the substance of it was political, so if the utmost interest to them.^a

The value of memorizing.—John Ruskin in his autobiography, tells of the foundation on which his character was reared. "After our chapters (from two to three a day according to their length) the first thing after breakfast (and no interruptions from servants allowed, none from visitors who either joined in the reading or had to stay upstairs and none from any visiting or excursions except real traveling) I had to learn a few verses by heart or repeat to make sure I had not lost something of what was already known; and with the chapters thus gradually possessed from first to last, I had to learn the whole body of the fine old Scotch paraphrases, which are good, melodious and forceful verses, and to which together with the Bible itself, I owe the first cultivation of my ear in sound. Though I have picked up the elements of a little further knowledge in mathematics, meteorology, and the like in after life—and owe not a little to the teaching of many people, this material installation of my mind in that property of chapters, I count very confidently the most precious and on the whole the one essential part of my education."

16—19. (16) afraid, R. V., "they turned in fear one toward another." "Such an announcement as Jeremiah's at such a serious crisis startled them by its boldness. We may infer that the prophet had for some time, by Divine command, kept his sombre anticipations in the background." — Pul. Com. tell the king, bec. of the political importance of these writings. (17, 18) Tell us, etc., before speaking to the king the princes were anxious to be assured that they were the very words of the recognized Prophet, Jeremiah. (19) hide thee,^b bec. the princes too truly guessed the effect of such denunciations on so jealous a tyrant as Jehoiakim.

Influence of books.—Benjamin Franklin tells us, in one of his letters, that, when he was a boy, a little book fell into his hand, entitled Essays to do Good, by Cotton Mather. It was tattered and torn, and several leaves were missing. "But the remainder," he says, "gave me such a turn of thinking, as to have an influence on my conduct through life! for I have always set a greater value on the character of a doer of good than any other kind of reputation; and, if I have been a useful citizen, the public owes all the advantages of it to the little book." Jeremy Bentham mentions, that the current of his thoughts and studies was directed for life by a single phrase that caught his eye at the end of a pamphlet: "The greatest good of the greatest number." There are single sentences in the New Testament that have awakened to spiritual life hundreds of millions of dormant souls. In things of less moment, reading has a wondrous power. George Law, a boy on his father's farm, met an old, unknown book, which told the story of a farmer's son, who went away to seek his fortune, and came home, after many years' absence, a rich man. From that moment, George became uneasy, left home, lived over again the life he had read of, returned a millionaire, and paid all his father's debts. Robinson Crusoe has sent to sea more sailors than the pressgang. The story about little George Washington telling the truth about the hatchet and the plum tree, has made many a truth-teller. We owe all the Waverley novels to Scott's early reading of the old traditions and legends; and the whole body of pastoral fiction came from Addison's sketches of Sir Roger De Coverley in The Spectator. But illustrations are numberless. Tremble, ye who write, and ye who publish writing. A pamphlet has precipitated a revolution. A paragraph quenches or kindles the celestial spark in a human soul, in myriads of souls.—R. Donkersley.

20—23. (20) laid . . . roll, not venturing at first to show it to the king. (21) fetch the roll, being determined to see it for himself. stood, it seems that the king sat and the courtiers stood. (22) winter house, this is noticed to explain the presence of the fire.^a ninth month, or December. on the hearth, R. V., "brazier."^b (23) he cut, R. V., "the king cut it," treating the prophecy "with deliberate and ostentatious contempt."—Exp. Bib. penknife, lit. "the secretary's knife," used for trimming the reed-pen.^c

Jehoiakim's penknife (vs. 23).—I. The use of the historical portions of Scripture is, that they represent to us embodied truth, and weave doctrine into the details of ordinary life. II. Christian parents should not let this and other instances of persons who have had godly parents dishearten them in their endeavor to train their children aright. III. Without literally mutilating the Word of God men may be practically guilty of the same act.—H. C. Milchenson. Efforts to destroy God's Word.—When Luther's books were publicly burned by order of the Papal Nuncio, the remark made to the Emperor Charles' ministers was, "Do you imagine that Luther's doctrines are found only in those books that you are throwing into the fire? They are written where you cannot reach them, in the hearts of the nation."—D'Aubigne. God's Word indestructible.—In the hand of a mummy, it is said, was found a seed three thousand years old, that given air and light and soil and water, grew and blossomed into a beautiful flower. True or not, it is a true illustration. God's Word might lie buried—hidden in dead hands or dead hearts—for centuries; but the life is in it, and when God's time comes it will bloom, and bless the place it grows in. Nothing can kill the life of it. I have heard of a Bible which was used (some leaves of it) to paste on the walls of a poor cabin, like wall paper. The people did not care for the words, perhaps could not even read them; I have forgotten about that. If they covered the rough, splintery boards, it was enough. But one day came a belated traveler, riding, and begging shelter from the storm. He was an unbeliever, who cared nothing for any of God's words, printed or spoken. Yet he could not help reading them as they stared him in the face all through that stormy day and evening. The writer who tells the story says that they at last led him to seek the Saviour and "keep his words" like a true disciple. You cannot hide or tear or burn or in any way destroy God's Word, any more than you could keep Christ in the grave. It is a living thing, and nothing can kill it.

24—26. (24) not afraid,^a "contrast with this the conduct of the king's father when the newly found Book of the Law was read in his ears (and compare 1 Kings xxi. 27). Josiah on that occasion in sorrowful dismay rent his garments (2 Kings xxii. 11) but his son now rends not his garments, but the Roll itself. And thus passed away "his last chance, his last offer of mercy: and as he threw the torn fragments of the roll on the fire he threw there in symbol his royal house, his doomed city, the temple,

"As companions and acquaintances, books are without rivals; and they are companions and acquaintances to be had at all times and under all circumstances. They are never out when you knock at the door; are never 'not at home' when you call. In the lightest as well as in the deepest moods they may be applied to, and will never be found wanting." — Langford.

^a "The great men had distinct houses or apartments, fitted for the several seasons of the year Am. iii. 15." — Lowth.

^b "In the East neither chimneys nor ovens are used, but, when the weather is cold, a ditcher of brass or iron, containing burning wood or charcoal, is used for the purpose of warming the chambers, and when the wood has burned to embers, a cover is placed over the pot to make it retain the heat." — Henderson.

^c "As often as Jehudi read three or four columns, the king cut the piece he had read off, and threw it into the fire, until the entire roll was burnt." — Fausset.

^a 2 Ki. xxii. 11.

"The drunken captain may cut in pieces the chart that tells of the rocks in the vessel's course, and put in iron the sailor who calls his attention to it, but neither will avert the crash that must ensue unless the helm is turned."—F. B. Meyer.

"This is the bitterest of all,—to wear the yoke of our own wrong-doing."—George Eliot.

"Your non-searching of the Scriptures, your weariness under gospel preaching, your want of care to understand the mind of God, is prima facie evidence that there is some enmity in your heart against the Most High."—Charles H. Spurgeon.

"The same educations wall and press upon two lives. One rises on them into greatness, the other drags them down upon it and is crushed beneath them into ruin. . . . How is it that the Pharisee and the publican came down the same temple steps, one cold and proud and bitter, and the other with his heart full of tenderness and gratitude and humblest charity?"—Philips Brooks.

"God puts into our hands the Book of life, bright on every page with open secrets, and we suffer it to drop out of our hands unread."—F. W. Farrar.

"As long as one Bible remains, the empire of Satan is in danger."—Charles H. Spurgeon.

"It was a mercy to Jerusalem that when Bibles were scarce they had prophets, as that, afterward, when prophecy ceased, they had more Bibles: for and all the people of the land.—Spk. Com. (25) made intercession, or entreaty. (26) the son of Hammelech, R. V., "the king's son," i. e. a royal prince, not necessarily son of Jehoiakim. take, i. e. arrest and put in prison. This the princes had expected, vs. 19.

Jeremiah's roll burnt (vs. 2 4).—We learn hence.—I. The importance of the written Word. II. The value of Divine ordinances. III. The Lord's object in the Scriptures. IV. The rebellion of the carnal mind. V. The folly of destroying God's Word. Apply:—1. Make known this Word to others; 2. Study it for our own comfort.—C. Clayton.

Books and reading.—Of all the amusements which can possibly be imagined for a hard-working man, after his daily toil, or in its intervals, there is nothing like reading an entertaining book, supposing him to have a taste for it, and supposing him to have the book to read. It calls for no bodily exertion, of which he has had enough or too much. It relieves his home of its dullness and sameness, which in nine cases out of ten, is what drives him out to the alehouse, to his own ruin and his family's. It transports him into a livelier, and gayer, and more diversified and interesting scene; and while he enjoys himself there, he may forget the evils of the present moment, fully as much as if he were ever so drunk, with the great advantage of finding himself the next day with his money in his pocket, or at least laid out in real necessities and comforts for himself and his family—and without a headache. Nay, it accompanies him to his next day's work, and if the book he has been reading be anything above the idlest and lightest, gives him something to think of besides the mere mechanical drudgery of his every-day occupation,—something he can enjoy while absent, and look forward with pleasure to return to. But supposing him to have been fortunate in the choice of his book, and to have alighted upon one really good and of a good class. What a source of domestic enjoyment is laid open! What a bond of family union! He may read it aloud, or make his wife read it, or his eldest boy or girl, or pass it round from hand to hand. All have the benefit of it—all contribute to the gratification of the rest, and a feeling of common interest and pleasure is excited. Nothing unites people like companionship in intellectual enjoyment. It does more, it gives them mutual respect, and to each among them self-respect—that corner-stone of all virtue. It furnishes to each the master-key by which he may avail himself of his privilege as an intellectual being to Enter the sacred temple of his breast,

And gaze and wander there a ravished guest,
Wander through all the glories of his mind,
Gaze upon all the treasures he shall find.

And while thus leading him to look within his own bosom for the ultimate sources of his happiness, warns him at the same time to be cautious how he defiles and desecrates that inward and most glorious of temples.—J. Herschel. Half of a Bible.—Perhaps you have seen a story in that wonderful life-story of "Uncle John Vassar" about a Bible that was cut in two. It belonged to a poor woman who had never in all her married life owned a Bible. Her husband was a wicked man who never prayed; and she told Mr. Vassar that he had never allowed her to have one in the house. When the husband found out what had been given her, he snatched it up from the table and rushed out to the chopping block where he cut it through and through with the axe. Then he came back to the cabin and threw one of the pieces toward his wife, telling her that as she had a right to half of the property she might take her half of that. The other half he threw up into a cubbyhole where tools were sometimes kept, and it was forgotten. But one wet, dreary day in winter he was rummaging around in search of something to read, and came on this dark corner. There was nothing to reward his search, not even an old newspaper. But, yes!—what was this? Half of a Bible! He remembered how it came there. For want of something better to do, he picked it up and began to turn over the pages. He began to read the parable of the prodigal son, on the last page; but it was not all there. He did not like to ask his wife for the rest of the book. But he must have it to finish the story. He hunted and prowled around in hope of finding it, but his poor wife had taken good care to hide that other half. He must finish that story. You know how hard it is to leave some stories unfinished. Finally he went to her and asked to see her piece of the Bible. She brought it and he read the story through and through and through again. By and by it became his story, for he was another "prodigal son" returned to his Father.

27—32. (27) after that, and in response to this act of public insult to God through His Prophet. (28) another roll, for man's wilfulness cannot be permitted to destroy God's Word.^a (29) Why, etc., here is given the point which so greatly offended Jehoiakim. (30) dead . . heat, ch. xxii. 19. (31) punish, or visit his iniquity upon him. (32) like words, other prophecies of the same kind.^b This is probably the basis of much of our book of Jeremiah and explains their form, i. e. not as originally uttered but as afterward recorded, with some explanatory additions, etc.

Jehoiakim burns the sacred roll (vss. 27, 28).—The folly of this act was great as the impiety, and take occasion to notice—I. The enmity of man's heart against the Word of God. The same disposition may be shown in a variety of ways. 1. By denying the Divine authority of Scripture; 2. By explaining away all its fundamental truths; 3. By entertaining doubts of its utility to the poor; 4. By setting its precepts at defiance; 5. By reviling and persecuting those who embrace it. II. The folly of indulging it. 1. We cannot change one declaration in all the Scriptures; 2. We cannot prevent the execution of one threatening; 3. We accumulate on our own heads the judgments we despise.—Simeon.

God's voice to the heedless.—There was a fisherman of the Bay of Fundy (so Frances Willard told the story in the Gospel Tabernacle, New York) who was one day watching his son out on the water fishing. He was not afraid to trust him, for the boy was well used to such work, and could take care of himself, so the father thought. But suddenly he did begin to grow anxious. Storm clouds were gathering. Far out at sea he saw them coming, and a low moaning wind gave its note of danger. It ruffled the water, and then even the boy saw it. Too late he understood. In the rough sea the boat went over—and under. Before long the father was carrying the dead boy home in his arms, and none of the friends and neighbors who went with him in a sad procession could give him any comfort. The old fisherman said a strange word, and he would say no other. This is what he said: "O God, I see that thou art bound to have my heart!" He and God knew what this trouble meant. It was God's sharp call to come to him. No doubt he had heard gentler ones, and never minded. Fathers and mothers make their voices sharp and stern when children will not hear the pleasant ones. So does our heavenly Father. Jehoiakim's conduct.—In opposing Jeremiah Jehoiakim was not defying clear and acknowledged truth. Like the Pharisees in their conflict with Christ, the persecuting king had popular religious sentiment on his side. According to that current theology which had been endorsed in some measure even by Isaiah and Jeremiah, the defeat at Megiddo proved that Jehovah repudiated the religious policy of Josiah and his advisers. The inspiration of the Holy Spirit enabled Jeremiah to resist this shallow conclusion, and to maintain through every crisis his unshaken faith in the profounder truth. Jehoiakim was too conservative to surrender at the prophet's bidding the long-accepted and fundamental doctrine of retribution, and to follow the forward leading of Revelation. He "stood by the old truth" as did Charles V. at the Reformation. "Let him that is without sin" in this matter "first cast a stone at" him. Though we extenuate Jehoiakim's conduct, we are still bound to condemn it; not, however, because he was exceptionally wicked, but because he failed to rise above a low spiritual average: yet in this judgment we also condemn ourselves for our own intolerance, and for the prejudice and self-will which have often blinded our eyes to the teachings of our Lord and Master.—Exp. Bib. The continuance of God's mercy.—Why should the roll be rewritten? The threats it contained could be executed without any reissue of them. If all fair warnings were disregarded, no more could be required. True, and no more were required. Yet out of His great,

God never leaves himself without witness." — Spurgeon.

^a "Here is a sublime specimen of the triumph of God's Word, when repressed by the power, and burnt by the rage of this world, whether it be in the suppression of the Scriptures, or in preventing their circulation, or in casting copies of them into the fire, or in the imprisonment and martyrdom of God's preachers. That Word rises more gloriously out of all its persecutions." — Wordsworth.

^b "To consume the material volume was not to defeat the design of Him who had inspired it."—F. Jacox.

"There was a king once who wanted to know what could best help his people, and so he left his palace to go and learn ship-building in a Dutch seaport. He put the workman's blouse on and made his own hands hard with tools and braved all weathers. No other workman seemed more humble or more hardy than he was. But all the time he was the king. He went back to his throne and that hard toll-marked hand held the king's scepter. So Christ was a king always. Though he stooped to be a man among men, he never lost his kingship."

long-suffering grace God issued His warnings afresh. This is the deeper truth that underlies the command to write out the prophecies once more. The same truth is illustrated in all the history of the Jews. God sent a succession of prophets, "rising up early and sending," to impress upon the people the same unheeded lessons. The continuance of revelation with us is a reminder of God's forbearing mercy.—Pul. Com.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-SEVENTH.

Here we return to the narrative in chapter xxxiv., and are given an account of Jeremiah's personal history during the siege of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans. 1—5. (1) Zedekiah, 2 Ki. xxiv. 17. (2) did hearken, more esp. to the advice to yield fully to the Chaldeans. (3) sent, etc., during the interval of hope excited by news of the approach of the Egyptian army. Pray now, "there seemed to be a hope that as in the time of Sennacherib's invasion, when Hezekiah was king (2 Kings xix. 35), there might now be given in answer to prayer a miraculous overthrow of the invading host." (4) not . . prison, i. e. not yet, see vs. 15. (5) departed, for a time raising the siege."

Valueless Prayers.—Scarcely any ministers but can recall instances of their prayers being asked by persons who have been prayerless themselves. One will suffice. I went to see a woman in G—. She was dying but without a gleam of hope. "Oh, pray for me. I cannot, cannot pray for myself sir." "Indeed, but why not for yourself?" "My state is too hard; I have known all about religion since childhood, but have insulted my conscience, rejected God, resisted the Spirit, neglected Christ, and O, I dare not, I cannot speak to Heaven now!" All my pleading failed to awaken hope in her, or to induce her to an effort to pray. It seemed awful. No! She should be thankful if I would pray for her; but the could not even frame in her thoughts a petition; prayer in her was dead. Although I did kneel and earnestly plead for her, yet when I asked her is she had joined in any one of my direct and urgent prayers, she answered, "No, I have no power to bring my mind to any definite desire. I have killed prayer in my soul; I can't now speak a thought to God." The people did not wish when they asked these prayers to be severed from sin, only to be relieved of trouble. But such desire could not be granted; therefore God held them down to the consequences of their sin. Their request was an insult to God. Such men are well described in Mrs. H. W. B. Stowe's book, "Uncle Tom's Cabin," where one of them, Haley, is thus spoken to by a comrade: "After all, what's the odds between me and you? 'Tain't that you care one bit more or have a bit more feelin'; it's clean, sheer, dog meanness, wanting to cheat the devil and save your own skin. Don't I see through it? And your 'gettin' religion,' as you call it, arter all, is too p'isin mean for any crittur; run up a bill with the devil all your life, and then sneak out when pay-time comes! Boh!" Is there not a vast amount of this meanness?"—Pul. Com. Praying soldiers.—Nor are those the worst soldiers who are often upon their knees. Hume tells us that on the eve of the battle of Hastings the Saxons spent the night in drinking mead and metheglin; but that the Normans passed it in silence and religious devotions, and went into battle singing the hymn of Roland. The psalm-singers had the best of it in the bloody struggles around the standard; and the Cavaliers, in spite of their chivalry, went down before those terrible fellows who marked the "fighting verses" in their Bible with the blades of their swords. "Show me the men that pray," Gustavus Adolphus used to observe, "and I will show you those that you can't beat;" and we will be bound that the stout Highlander who grounded his arms at the door of Dum-Dum Church sooner than take part in a service which was against the grain of his conscience, never showed his back to an enemy, and never will.—Daily Paper.

6—10. (7) Pharaoh's . . land, i. e. their help will be of no practical value to you. (8) come again, comp. ch. xxi. 4—7.^a (10) wounded, "our

^a Pharaoh Hophra, the Apries of Herodotus, was an ally of Zedekiah, but his intervention availed nothing. Whether, however, he withdrew without giving Nebuchadnezzar battle, or whether he was defeated, we do not know." —Spk. Com.

"As that storm roars the loudest which has been the longest gathering, so God's reckoning day with sinners, by being long coming, will be the more terrible when it comes." —Guthrie.

"Dear as freedom is, and in my heart's just estimation, prized above all price, I had much rather be myself the slave And wear the bonds than fasten them on him."

—Cowper.

Those as much deceive themselves who think to escape God's judgments as those who think to brave them; the feet of him that flees from them will as surely fall as the hands of him that fights against them. —Matthew Henry.

^a "God has the sovereign command of all the hosts of men, even of those that know Him not, that own Him not, and they are all made to serve his pur-version fails to give the full force of the Hebrew, which is that even though but a few individuals remained, and those severely wounded (literally, transfixed), they would be more than a match for the Jews. So certainly was it God's purpose that Jerusalem should be overthrown."

The Great Advantage of Obeying God.—Connect with past history of Israel, and the day's lesson. I. Had the nation been obedient, instead of invasion and oppression, they had had increasing peace: instead of sin and idolatry, their moral and religious excellence had abounded. II. But it applies to us also. 1. We have a picture of what our peace may be if we serve the Lord. Picture a river; at first narrow, gets broader; at first shallow, gets deeper; at first a babbling brook, full of little eddies, turns, etc., by-and-by a majestic river, flowing on without a sound or a ripple. 2. Our righteousness is also illustrated by waves of sea; ocean an image of infinitude; waves wash round all coasts; how much they cover, how much they bear up. Learn:—(1) All this depends upon obedience and trust: then peace with God, conscience, etc.; (2) Some hearken to the advice of others rather than commands of God; and what the result?—Hive.

11—15. (11) broken up, the fig. intimates that they removed their siege-engines, and raised the siege. (12) Then, taking advantage of the openness of the country. separate himself, R. V., "to receive his portion there." "He saw too clearly the coming catastrophe, and was on the point of escaping from Jerusalem to end his days in his own loved village of Anathoth."—Stanley." (13) took Jer., "we may be sure that at this time the gates were in charge of trusty adherents of the princes of the Egyptian party." fallst away, their excuse for this false charge was that the prophet had advised such action, xxi. 9. (14) false, however he may have advised that as a national policy he did not intend to desert his countrymen in this crisis. (15) prison .. house, the place reserved for political offenders.^b

Treatment of Prisoners.—The treatment of those that are shut up in the Eastern prisons differs from our usages, but serves to illustrate several passages of Scripture. Chardin relates several circumstances concerning their prisons, which are curious, and should not be omitted. In the first place, he tells us that the Eastern prisons are not public buildings erected for that purpose; but a part of the house in which their criminal judges dwell. As the governor and provost of a town, or the captain of the watch, imprisoned such as are accused in their own houses, they set apart a canton of it for that purpose, when they are put into these offices, and choose for the jailer the most proper person they can find of their domestics. Sir John supposes the prison in which Joseph, together with the chief butler and chief baker of Pharaoh, was put, was in Potiphar's own house. But I would apply this account to the illustration of another passage of Scripture: "Wherefore," it is said, Jer. xxxvii. 15, "the princes were wroth with Jeremiah, and smote him, and put him in prison in the house of Jonathan the scribe; for they had made that the prison." Here we see a dwelling-house was made a prison; and the house of an eminent person, for it was the house of a scribe, which title marks out a person of quality; it is certain it does so in some places of Jeremiah, particularly ch. xxxvi. 12, "Then he went down into the king's house into the scribe's chamber, and lo, all the princes sat there, even Elishama the scribe, and Delaiah," etc. The making the house of Jonathan the prison, would not now, in the East, be doing him any dishonor, or occasion the looking upon him in a mean light; it would rather mark out the placing him in an office of importance. It is probable it was so anciently, and that his house became a prison, when Jonathan was made the royal scribe, and became, like the chamber of Elishama, one of the prisons of the people.—Harmer.

16—21. (16) dungeon, lit. "house of the pit," undoubtedly implies an underground excavation. Ch. xxxviii. 6.^a cabins, R. V. "cells." many days, prob. till the Chaldeans had returned again. (17) secretly. The poor, weak king had probably nothing to do with his imprisonment and seems to have had a superstitious veneration for the prophet.—Cheyne.

poses. He directs their marches, their counter-marches, their retreats, their returns, as it pleases Him; and furious armies, like stormy winds, in all their motions are fulfilling His Word."—Mat. Henry.

^a Allusion, however, may be to Jer.'s going, as others did, to fetch a store of provisions from the neighboring country.

"When the siege was temporarily raised, the first object with everybody would be to obtain supplies of food, and accordingly Jeremiah in the midst of the people, i. e. accompanied by others, who, like himself, had a right to a share in the priests' produce at Anathoth, started thither to see whether any stores still remained which might be available for their common use."—Spk. Com.

^b "Often in the E. part of the private house of a public officer serves as a prison."—Fausset.

^a "That selected for Jer. appears to have been of a squalid description, consisting of a well, or pit, with vaults round the sides, in which the prisoners were lodged."—Henderson.

"The event hath now convinced you how much they have deceived you; for you see the siege renewed, and the city in imminent danger of being taken."—Lowth.

^b"The streets in E. cities are generally distinguished fr. each other, not by the separate names which they bear, but by the sort of traffic or business carried on in them. The different branches of trade, instead of being intermixed, as with us, are usually assigned to a distinct locality."—Hackitt.

"The essence of a lie is the intention to deceive."

The return of the Chaldæans had renewed the king's anxiety. thou . . . Babylon, ch. xxxii. 3, 4, xxxiv. 2, 3. (18) I offended, R. V., "wherein have I sinned." He had been but God's agent. (19) not come, this the false prophets had constantly said. (21) court, a freer kind of custody. A piece of bread "is not sumptuous fare, but it is evidently mentioned as an improvement upon his prison diet: it is not difficult to understand why Jeremiah was afraid he would die in the house of Jonathan." Bakers' street, or quarter.^b

Ovens.—In primitive times, an oven was designed only to serve a single family, and to bake for them no more than the bread of one day; a custom which still continues in some places of the East; but the increase of population in the cities, higher degrees of refinement, or other causes in the progress of time, suggested the establishment of public bakehouses. They seem to have been introduced into Judæa long before the captivity; for the Prophet Jeremiah speaks of "the bakers' street," in the most familiar manner, as a place well known. This, however, might be only a temporary establishment, to supply the wants of the soldiers assembled from other places to defend Jerusalem. If they received a daily allowance of bread, as is the practice still in some Eastern countries, from the royal bakehouses, the order of the king to give the Prophet daily a piece of bread, out of the street where they were erected, in the same manner as the defenders of the city, was perfectly natural. The custom alluded to still maintains its ground at Algiers, where the unmarried soldiers receive every day from the public bakehouses a certain number of loaves. Pitts indeed asserts, that the Algerines have public bakehouses for the accommodation of the whole city. The women prepare their dough at home, and the bakers send their boys about the streets, to give notice of their being ready to receive and carry it to the bakehouses. They bake their cakes every day, or every other day, and give the boy who brings the bread home, a piece or little cake for the baking, which is sold by the baker. Small as the Eastern loaves are, it appears from this account, that they give a piece of one only to the baker, as a reward for his trouble. This will perhaps illustrate Ezekiel's account of the false prophets receiving pieces of bread by way of gratuities: 'And will ye pollute me among my people, for handfuls of barley, and pieces of bread?' These are compensations still used in the East, but of the meanest kind, and for services of the lowest sort.—Paxton.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-EIGHTH.

^a "Jer. would not have so often repeated this unwelcome message, but that he could put them in a certain way, though not to save the city, yet to save themselves; so that every man might have his own life given him for a prey if he would be advised."—Mat Henry.

1—3. (1) Shephathiah, "the removal of Jeremiah from prison to the court of the guard was of course favorable to the publication of his message. Hence the princes take alarm and apply to the king for permission to put him to death. There was no doubt truth in their assertion that Jeremiah's words were 'weakening the hands of the men of war,' but the fact, that the words which he spoke were not his own but the Divine message with which he was charged, made all the difference in the case."—Camb. Bib. (2) He that, etc., ch. xxi. 9. (3) surely, so the defenders may cherish no hope of success.^a Life a River.—Pliny compares life to a river. The river, small and clear in its origin, gushes forth from rocks, falls into deep glens, and wantons and meanders through a wild and picturesque country; nourishing only the uncultivated tree or flower by its dew or spray. In this, in its state of infancy and youth, it may be compared to the human mind, in which fancy and strength of imagination are predominant: it is more beautiful than useful. When the different rills or torrents join, and descend into the plain, it becomes slow and stately in its motions, and able to bear upon its bosom the stately barge. In this mature state, it is deep, strong, and useful. As it flows on towards the sea, it loses its force and its motion, and at last, as it were, becomes lost and mingled with the mighty abyss of waters.—H. Davy.

4—6. (4) Therefore, i. e. bec. Jer.'s messages disheartened the soldiers; and he seemed to recommend their desertion to the enemy,^b that remain, comp. vs. 19. Some had already gone over to the Chaldeans. (5) in your hand, Zedekiah felt powerless to resist his chief officers.^c (6) dungeon, ch. xxxvii. 16: a pit, or cistern.^d son of Hammelech, R. V., the king's son." with cords, this gives indication of the depth and unwholesomeness. The princes hoped Jer. would die in the pit. the mire. It is difficult not to connect this event with the 69th Psalm vss. 2, 14, 15, 20.—Stanley.

Prisons.—There were two prisons in Jerusalem; of which one was called the king's prison, which had a lofty tower that overlooked the royal palace, with a spacious court before it, where state prisoners were confined. The other was designed to secure debtors and other inferior offenders: and in both these the prisoners were supported by the public, on bread and water. Suspected persons were sometimes confined under the custody of state officers, in their own houses; or rather a part of the house which was occupied by the great officers of state, was occasionally converted into a prison. This seems to be a natural conclusion from the statement of the Prophet Jeremiah, in which he gives an account of his imprisonment: "Wherefore, the princes were wroth with Jeremiah, and smote him, and put him in prison, in the house of Jonathan the scribe; for they had made that the prison." The royal prison in Jerusalem, and especially the dungeon, into which the prisoner was let down naked, seems to have been a most dreadful place. The latter cannot be better described than in the words of Jeremiah himself (xxxviii. 6), who for his faithfulness to God and his country, in a most degenerate age, had to encounter all its horrors. A discretionary power was given to the keeper to treat his prisoners as he pleased; all that was expected of him being only to produce them when required. If he kept them in safe custody, he might treat them well or ill as he chose; he might put them in irons or not; shut them up close, or indulge them with greater liberty; admit their friends and acquaintances to visit them, or suffer no person to see them. The most worthless characters, the most atrocious criminals, if they can bribe the jailer and his servants with large fees, shall be lodged in his own apartment, and have the best accommodation it can afford; but if he be the enemy of those committed to his charge, or have received larger presents from their persecutors, he will treat them in the most barbarous manner.—Paxton.

7—9. (7) Ebed-melech, prob. keeper of the royal harem.^a Ethiopian, Heb. Cushite. sitting in the gate, where causes were usually heard. It was the king's duty to sit there, as a magistrate, for a certain time every day. (9) like to die,^b likely to die. no more bread, it would almost seem as if the little remaining bread had been brought together by command of the magistrates, and that it was given out in rations by them (comp. ch. xxxvii. 21). Nobody was likely to think of the poor prophet.

God's Care for His Own.—Mungo Park, faint and perishing, observes a single tuft of grass in the waste African desert, when he thought there was nothing left for him but to die, and his heart argued with the rapidity of lightning, that the Creator of that tuft of grass could not be unobservant of him, His child; and strengthened by the thought he persevered and was saved. And now Jehovah singled out an Ethiopian in the court of Zedekiah, and sent to him a message of His divine and fatherly love. To God the small and the great are alike (Isa. xl. 26, 29).—Hom. Com.

10—13. (10) thirty men, a sufficient number to prevent the princes from interfering. (11) cast clouts, rags of torn garments. rotten rags, pieces of worn-out garments.^c (12) under . . . armholes, to ease the strain of lifting Jer. up out of the well. (13) in the court, still in custody, but not in peril of his life.

b "Had Jer. not had a Divine commission he might justly have been accused of treason; but, having one, which made the result of the siege certain, he acted humanely as the interpreter of God's will under theocracy, in advising surrender." —Fausset.

c "Zedekiah in his pusillanimity gives up Jeremiah to the princes, as Pilate gave up Christ to the chief priests." —Wordsworth.

d "Every house in Jerus. was supplied with a subterranean cistern, so well constructed that we never read of the city suffering in a siege from want of water." —Spk. Com.

"An old writer has said that we have two eyes and two ears, but only one tongue, that we may see and hear twice as much as we say; but unhappily men generally act the reverse; for, alas! they say far more than they see or hear."

a "Eunuchs of the present day, to whom the charge of harems is committed, are mostly from Nubia or Abyssinia." —Michælis.

b Lit. "he is dead in his place;" the language of fear of the worst.

c "This thoughtful act of the negro shows his kindness, the depth of the cistern, that force would be necessary in pulling out Jeremiah and therefore that the mire was deep, and possibly that Jeremiah was enfeebled by his privations, and required gentle treatment."—Spk. Com.

"To refuse to hear the voice of God is a proof of idolatry."—W. W. Dowling.

a "Zedekiah is an example of that moral cowardice which is the bane and destruction of many, especially in courts."—Wordsworth.

There is nothing in the universe that I fear, but that I shall not know all my duty, or shall fail to do it.—Mary Lyon.

"As flowers always wear their own colors and give forth their own fragrance every day alike, so should Christians maintain their character at all times and under all circumstances."—H. W. Beecher.

"Fear or guilt attends the deeds of darkness: The virtuous breast ne'er knows it."

—Havard

"Cowards die many times before their deaths, The valiant never taste of death but once."

—Shakespeare

"Fear is the tax that conscience pays to guilt."

—Sewell

Divine Uses for Mean Things.—God, who made all things, can see a thousand adaptations and utilities for that which man supposes has been used up. Are there not weapons in the King's armory that have been allowed to rust when they might have done good service? talents that have been hid in a napkin when they should have been at usury? There need be no idle members in the King's household. He takes out of his treasury things new and old, and calls upon the blind, the halt, the maimed, the aged, the poor, the ignorant, to do him honor and service. "But I have no talents in that direction," etc. Yet God can use you if you will ask him. He will regenerate you by using you; purify you of all the moral dross and filth that adhere to you; and develop higher faculties and a diviner serviceableness, if you will but let him. There were kingly robes in Judah that day that had not a tithe of the honor of these "old rotten rags;" and there are great, wise, and noble who will have to give place in the day of judgment to the weak things, and things which have been despised (1 Cor. i. 26—31).

14—16. (14) third entry, what this means exactly is not clear; probably the "entry" led from the palace to the temple. It must have been a private place, else it would not have been chosen for this interview. —Pul. Com. a thing, or a word, a prophetic revelation, as in xxxvii. 17. (15) hearken, R. V. "thou wilt not hearken." This is not a question in the Hebrew. The king was influenced momentarily by those in whose presence he happened to be. (16) sware secretly, being too weak to take a decided and open course."

A Prison.—

A prison is in all things like a grave,
Where we no better privileges have Than dead men; nor so good. The soul, once fled, Lives freer now than when she was cloister'd
In walls of flesh; and though the organs want
To act her swift designs, yet all will grant
Her faculties more clear, now separate,
Than if conjunction, which of late
Did marry her to earth, had stood in force, Incapable of death or of divorce:
But an imprison'd mind, though living, dies,
And at one time feels two captivities:
A narrow dungeon, which her body holds,
But narrower body which herself enfolds.

—Bishop King.

17—19. (17) go forth, and give thyself up as prisoner. the king of Babylon's princes, "an intimation that Nebuchadnezzar was not himself at this time in command of the besieging forces. While the tedious blockade continued, he had no doubt taken up his position at Riblah, where we find him somewhat later (xxxix. 5)." soul . . live, or thy life shall be spared. (18) given into, as a conquered city. thou . . hand, ch. xxxix. 5. (19) lest they, i. e. the Chaldeans. mock me, for deserting at last, only when it was too late to save the city.

Zedekiah is a perfect monument of the miseries that wait upon weakness: he was everybody's friend in turn—now a docile pupil of Jeremiah and gratifying the Chaldean party by his professions of loyalty to Nebuchadnezzar, and now a pliant tool in the hands of the Egyptian party persecuting his former friends. At the last he was afraid alike of the princes in the city, of the exiles in the enemy's camp, and of the Chaldeans. The mariner who had to pass between Scylla and Charybdis was fortunate compared to Zedekiah. To the end he clung with a pathetic blending of trust and fearfulness to Jeremiah. He believed him, and yet he seldom had courage to act according to his counsel. Zedekiah is a conspicuous example of the strange irony with which Providence entrusts incapable persons with the decision of most momentous issues; it sets Laud and Charles I. to adjust the Tudor Monarchy to the sturdy self-assertion of Puritan England, and Louis XVI. to cope with the French Revolution. Such histories are after all calculated to increase the self-respect of those who are weak and timid. Moments come, even to the feeblest, when their action must have the most serious results for all connected with them. It is one of the crowning glories of Christianity that it preaches a strength that is made perfect in weakness.—Exp. Bib.

20—23. (20) Obey, all will then come right. (21) this is the word, viz., that both Zedekiah and the city would be taken. (22) women, of the court. These would be taken as prey by the Chaldaean officers, and they would reprove Zedekiah for following bad advice.^a Thy friends, comp. Obad. 7. they .. back, i. e. the friends in whom Zedekiah trusted would forsake him in the hour of need. (23) thou shalt cause, i. e. the harder fate of the city shall be the consequence of thine obstinacy.^b

How We are Linked Together.—You remember the touching story of the daughter of Sir Robert Peel. Her father gave her, as a birthday present, a gorgeous riding habit, and went out with her on the same day for an airing in the park, his heart swelling with parental pride as he rode by her side. Shortly afterwards, she sickened and died of typhus fever of the most malignant type; and when inquiry was made as to how she caught the infection, it was discovered that the habit, bought from one of the London West End tradesmen, had been made in a miserable attic, where the husband of the seamstress was lying ill of fever, and that it had been used by her to cover him in his shivering fits. Thus, whether we will believe it or not, the safety of the highest is bound up with the condition of the lowest.—W. N. Taylor.

The Mission of a True Prophet.—There is no greater peril than to turn away from any true messenger of God; and happily there is no need to do so, through uncertainty as to his credentials. Any one who points out a present wrong in our lives that needs to be put right immediately, is to that extent a prophet of God; and if, in addition, he ventures on certain predictions, then all we can do is to wait. Gamaliel's shrewd advice cannot be too constantly kept in mind. What we cannot be certain about while a thing is in the seed will be made clear when it comes to the fruit. The most important matters are ever those on which we have to decide at once; and God never fails to send forth his light and truth so as to make the decision right.—Pul. Com.

24—28. (24) no man know, throughout the interview Zed. shows himself to be utterly weak. (25) the princes, whom Zed. so greatly feared. (26) Jonathan's house, ch. xxxvii. 15. (27) the matter, i. e. the advice to desert to the Chaldæans, which Jer. had so earnestly given to the king. (28) court, ch. xxxix. 21. and he was there, etc., these words belong to chapter xxxix., and are to be translated "And it came to pass, when Jerusalem was taken (in the ninth year of Zedekiah . . . the city was broken up) then all the princes of the king of Babylon," etc.

Equivocation.—

Honesty, even by itself, though making many adversaries Whom prudence might have set aside, or charity have softened, Evermore will prosper at the last, and gain a man great honor.
Yet there are others that will truckle to a lie, selling honesty for interest.
And do they gain! They gain but loss; a little cash, with scorn.
Behold! sorrowful change wrought upon a fallen nature:
He hath lost his own esteem and other men's respect.
For the buoyancy of upright faith, he is clothed in the heaviness of cringing;

For plain truth, where none could err, he hath chosen tortuous paths;
In lieu of his majesty of countenance, the timorous glances of servility;
Instead of Freedom's honest pride, the spirit of a slave.

—Tupper.

^a The Prophet now informs Zed. that if he refused to submit, he would become the object of more cutting derision on the part of his own mistresses, who, in order the more to gratify their new lords, would exult over his fallen condition." —Henderson.

^b "It shall be thine own act, as completely as if done with thine own hand." —Spk. Com.

"His words are bonds, his oaths are oracles;

His love sincere, his thoughts immaculate;

His tears, pure messengers sent from his heart;

His heart as far from fraud as heaven from earth."

"No matter how poor I am, no matter though the prosperous of my own time will not enter and take up their abode under my roof, if Milton will cross my threshold to sing to me of Paradise, and Shakespeare, to open to me the worlds of imagination and the workings of the human heart, and Franklin to enrich me with his practical wisdom, I shall not pine for want of intellectual companionship, and I may become a cultivated man though excluded from what is called the best society in the place where I live." —Channing.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-NINTH.

^c "After his expedition to Jerusalem, Nebuchadnezzar himself seems to have retired to Riblah in the land of Hamath, to the north of Palestine, on the right bank of the river Orontes, about 85 miles N.E. of Baalbec, on the great road between Palestine and Babylonia."—Wordsworth.

^d "It was customary among the Chaldeans to give the names of their idols, as an additional title, or mark of honor, to persons of distinction."—Louth.

^a "They took to flight by the double wall which ran along the south side of Zion, and reached the point whence two roads struck off, the one to Beth-lehem, and the other across the south side of the Mount of Olives. They appear to have taken the latter route in order to reach the Jordan, having crossed which they might have escaped into Arabia Deserta."—Henderson.

^b Comp. Je. xxxii. 4; Eze. xii. 13.

"Possibly he was deprived of sight by having a red-hot iron held before his eyes."—Michaelis.

"The Assyrian sculptures depict the delight with which the kings struck out, often with their own hands, the eyes of captive princes."—Fausset.

1-3. (1) ninth year, 2 Ki. xxv. 1, 2; Je. lii. 4.^c (2) eleventh year, the siege lasted just one year and six months. broken up, R. V., "a breach was made in the city." (3) And all, R. V., "that all," etc., continuing the last clause of chap. xxxviii. middle gate, that wh. separated the city of Zion from the lower town. Rab-mag, prob. the official title of the second Sharezer, meaning "Chief of the magicians," the sacerdotal caste of Chaldæa.^d

The Retribution of God.—What an accumulation of woe do the eight verses with which this chapter opens present! Let thought dwell on the several statements made here, and let imagination seek to realize what they must have meant to those upon whom the calamities they speak of came; and it will be seen, in vivid lurid light, that the retribution of God upon sin and sinners has been in the past no mere empty threat, and it will lead to the salutary suggestion, so questioned now, that his like threatened retribution in the future is no empty threat either. How unreasonable, in the face of historic facts such as those told of here, and in the face of actual facts of today in which dread suffering and awful calamity are seen overtaking wicked doers, to doubt that God will do the like again should necessity arise!—Pul. Com.

4-7. (4) fled, "it was night and under cover of the darkness Zedekiah and his little army fled, by the rocky ravine of the Kedron; as far as the 'plains of Jericho,' doubtless hoping to cross the Jordan and elude their pursuers in the mountains of Moab."—Cheyne. 2 Ki. xxv. 4-12.^a plain, or wilderness of Judæa. (5) gave judgment, pronounced his sentence. (6) slew, etc., Zedekiah's punishment was specially terrible because of the stubbornness of his resistance. (7) put out .. eyes, a cruel but not unusual punishment.^b

Putting Out the Eyes.—By an inhuman custom, which is still retained in the East, the eyes of captives taken in war are not only put out but sometimes literally scooped or dug out of their sockets. This dreadful calamity Samson had to endure, from the unrelenting vengeance of his enemies. In a posterior age, Zedekiah, the last king of Judah and Benjamin, after being compelled to behold the violent death of his sons and nobility, had his eyes put out, and was carried in chains to Babylon. The barbarous custom long survived the decline and fall of the Babylonian empire, for by the testimony of Mr. Maurice, in his History of Hindostan, the captive princes of that country were often treated in this manner by their more fortunate rivals; a red-hot iron was passed over their eyes, which effectually deprived them of sight, and at the same time of their title and ability to reign.—Paxton. The blinding of captives was a common Assyrian practice. In the bas-reliefs representing the capture of Lachish by Sennacherib, the prisoners were represented. Some pegged down to the ground to be flayed alive and others having their eyes put out. In one of the sculptures at Khorsabad, Sargon represents himself in person holding a prisoner by a thong attached to a ring passed through his under lip. The victim kneels before him while with a spear he pierces his eyes. Others are held chained and with hooks through their lips are held awaiting their turn. In other cases, the king slays the prisoners with his own spear. In another, an executioner flays a captive fastened to the wall. It was especially in Persia that the cruel practice of blinding prisoners prevailed and it is mentioned by most of the Greek historians. In Turkey it was formerly the custom for a sultan on his accession either to slaughter or blind his half brothers that he might have no rivals or dangerous ones near his throne. In modern Persia the shahs have invariably, even up to the present century, put out the eyes of all their brothers who did not escape in time to distant provinces. The late shah was the first Persian monarch who was prevailed upon to abandon the practice.—Tristram. Chains.—There is in the British Museum a pair of bronze fetters, brought from Nineveh, which weigh eight pounds eleven ounces, and measure sixteen and a half inches in length. These probably resemble the fetters put on Zedekiah. The rings which enclose the ankles are thinner than the other part so that they could be hampered smaller after the feet had passed through them.—Freeman.

8—10. "This section by way of introduction to the brief account of the treatment of Jeremiah, gives a sketch of the fate of the inhabitants generally. If we had only this summary, we might suppose that Nebuzar-adan was present at the time in person. We find from the two other forms of the account (chap. lii.; 2 Kings xxv.) that he did not arrive till a month after the taking of Jerusalem."—Camb. Bib. (8) burned, as Jer. had foretold. (9) captain.. guard, or chief marshal. remnant, those left from the first deportation. fell to him, or deserted to him. (10) gave them vineyards and fields, "the parallel accounts (lii. 16; 2 Kings xxv. 12) say that they were left as vinedressers and husbandmen. Combining the accounts then we see precisely how the matter was. They were put in charge of this kind of property, which in a sense was given to them as their own, but might be resumed at any moment by the conqueror."

Burning the City of Jerusalem.—The temple, the palace, the houses of the nobles were deliberately set on fire. The very bones and framework of J. appeared to be wrapped in flames. The walls and gates seemed to lament and cry as they sank into the earth. Some of the princes were hung up by their hands on the temple walls; others were carried off to execution at Riblah. Age and youth, men and women, alike fell victims to the passion of cruelty of the emperor.—Farrar.

11—14. (11) charge, instructions how to treat the Prophet. (12) Take him, secure his personal safety, and pay him every attention. (13) Compare the names with those in vs. 3. (14) Gedaliah, ch. xxvi. 24. He was the chief of the deserters to the Chaldeans. home, prob. to Gedaliah's home. dwelt.. people, as a freeman.

Trials of a Prisoner.—A prisoner is an impatient patient, lingering under the rough hands of a cruel phisitian; who having come to his disease, knowes his complainte, and hath power to cure him, but takes more pleasure to kill him. He is like Tantalus, who hath freedom running by his doore, yet cannot enjoy the least benefit thereof. His greatest griefe is that his credit was so good and now no better. His land is drawne within the compasse of a sheepe's skin, and his owne hand the fortification that barres him of entrance; hee is fortunes tossing-bal, an object that would make mirth melancholy: to his friends an abject, and a subject of nine dayes' wonder in euery barber's shop, and a mouthful of pitty (that he had no better fortune) to midwives and talkatiue gossips; and all the content that this transitory life can giue him seems but to flout him in respect the restraint of liberty barres the true.—Sir T. Overbury.

15—18. A prophecy to Ebed-melech is here introduced, which, though uttered previously (see ch. xxxviii.), could not have been mentioned before without breaking the sequence of events. (15) while.. prison, but after Ebed-melech had rescued him from the pit. (16) before thee, the intimation that Ebed should see the evil, and live through it. (17) deliver thee, as a recognition of his services to God's Prophet. afraid, Ebed might well fear the wild slaughter and rioting that is usual when a city is sacked. (18) for a prey, or an unexpected and unlooked for gain.^c

"In That Ye Ministered to the Saints."—How many instances there are!—the widow of Sarepta; the Shunamite woman; Dorcas; Paul's friends, Onesiphorus, etc.; Jonathan; Mary of Bethany; Cyrus and the Persian nation, for their goodness to Israel, the people of Malta (Acts xxviii.); our own country (England), for offering asylum to persecuted

^a "The fate of the city was delayed for a month, probably until definite instructions had been received from Nebuchadnezzar.

"He that shuts Love out, in turn shall be Shut out from Love and on her threshold lie, Howling in outer darkness." —Tennyson.

^b "No doubt he had been informed that the Prophet had exhorted both king and people to submit themselves to his authority." —Lowth.

"How often in the straits of God's people have they had to confess that He has raised up for them from most unlikely sources the helpers they have needed!" —Pul. Com.

^c "The 'life' which he had risked in rescuing the Prophet was to be his reward, being spared beyond all hope when the lives of his enemies should be forfeited." —Fausset.

Je. xxi. 9, xxxviii. 2.

"This pious courier had interceded for the prophet with the king; but the prophet had in turn interceded for him with God the Lord. Ebed-melech had drawn him out of the pit, but Jeremiah draws him by his prayer from the jaws of all Chaldean war-vortices." — Cramer.

Hollanders and Huguenots. And, besides such instances, there are repeated declarations to the same effect: "I will bless them that bless thee;" "They shall prosper that love thee." The cup of cold water given in the name of a disciple "shall in no wise lose its reward." "Whoso shall receive one such little child in my Name receiveth me." How comparatively slight was the ministry! how cup of cold water-like! yet how great the reward! How much this country owes, in her commerce, her character, her fame, to her ministry to God's saints! Many people denounce Cromwell for most things he did, but all applaud his interference with the bloody papists on behalf of the persecuted Waldenses. Milton's grand lines, "Avenge, O Lord, thy slaughtered saints," etc., have immortalized that deed as it deserved. No, indeed; "God is not unrighteous to forget," rather is he most gracious to remember all such ministries.—Pul. Com.

CHAPTER THE FORTIETH.

a "Prob. all the prisoners of note, who might be worth taking to Babylon, were collected at Ramah indiscriminately, and examined there." — Spk. Com.

b "From the signs of hesitation which Jer. manifested, the captain concluded that he would rather remain in the land than go to Babylon, and not only sent him to Gedaliah, but provided him with victuals for his journey, and dismissed him with a present." — Hendersen.

"There is a power in real godliness which commands the reverence of those who hate it." — Robinson.

a "The leaders of the Jewish army had been scattered throughout the country on the capture of Zedekiah, in order to escape the notice of the Chaldeans." — Fausset.

b 2 Sa. xxiii. 28.

c De. iii. 14.

1-6. (1) from Ramah, ch. xxxi. 15.^a He had been carried, with other prisoners, to Ramah, a short distance from Jerusalem. chains, or manacles. At first Jer. was mixed up with the other captives, who were bound together with chains on the hands. (2) Lord, etc., for the nonce, the prophet's mantle seems to have fallen upon the Chaldean soldier. He speaks to his auditor just as Jeremiah himself had been wont to address his erring fellow-countrymen.—Exp. Bib. (3) brought it, to pass. (4) loose thee, so give thee thy personal liberty. look well, ch. xxxix. 12. (5) while . . . back, or while he was hesitating.^b reward, R. V., "present." (6) Gedaliah, ch. xxvi. 24, xxxix. 14. Mizpah, in Benjamin, 2 hours N. W. of Jerusalem, where Saul was named king, 1 Sam. x. 17. Comp. 1 Sam. vii. 5; 1 Ki. xv. 22. Identical with "Nob," Is. x.: 32.

Jeremiah's Choice.—Probably the motives that decided Jeremiah's course of action were, firstly, that devoted attachment to the sacred soil which was a passion with every earnest Jew; and, secondly, the inspired conviction that Palestine was to be the scene of the future development of revealed religion. This conviction was coupled with the hope that the scattered refugees who were rapidly gathering at Mizpah under Gedaliah might lay the foundations of a new community, which should become the instrument of the divine purpose. Jeremiah was no deluded visionary, who would suppose that the destruction of Jerusalem had exhausted God's judgments, and that the millennium would forthwith begin for the special and exclusive benefit of his surviving companions in Judah. Nevertheless, while there was an organized Jewish community left on native soil, it would be regarded as the heir of the national religious hopes and aspirations, and a prophet, with liberty of choice, would feel it his duty to remain.—Exp. Bib. Choice of a Residence.—Babylon was a heathen city. Jeremiah preferred to remain in the Holy Land. Surely the religious advantages of a neighborhood should be taken into account as of first importance. Yet many people seem to be strangely blind to all such considerations. The soil, the scenery, the society, the convenience of the house, are duly considered; but the Church accommodation is scarcely thought of. A gravel soil is most essential; healthy religious influences are regarded as of very secondary interest. A beautiful view must be got, though the enjoyment of it means banishment from all healthy Church life. How strange that heads of families professing to be Christian should act like pagans in this matter, and care so little for the spiritual atmosphere in which their children are to be brought up!—Pul. Com.

7-12. (7) in the fields, or scattered over the wilder parts of the country.^a (8) came to, to offer their allegiance and service to him. Netophathite, fr. Netophah, a town in Judah.^b Maachathite, from Maachath, at the foot of Mt. Hermon.^c (9) Fear not, "the governor had been carefully selected: his views were precisely those which Jeremiah had so long vainly inculcated in Jerusalem."—Cheyne. serve . . Babylon, comp. Jer.'s advice, ch. xxvii. 11, xxix. 7. (10) to serve, lit. "stand before." come unto us, i. e. whose officers will come with the king's commands and requirements. gather, etc., there would be fruit on the trees, though no corn in the fields. taken, "seized." There is implied in the verb what was no doubt the case, viz. that these captains had not scrupled to take possession of such walled towns or fortresses of any kind as best suited their purposes. (11) in Moab, etc., i. e. seeking shelter in neighboring lands. (12) Mizpah, vs. 6. There Gedaliah seems to have had his residence.

Affliction Endears the Promises.—We never prize the precious words of promise till we are placed in conditions in which their suitability and sweetness are manifested. We all of us value those golden words, "When thou walkest through the fire thou shalt not be burned, neither shall the flame kindle upon thee," but few if any of us have read them with the delight of the martyr Bilney, to whom this passage was a stay, while he was in prison awaiting his execution at the stake. His Bible, still preserved in the library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, has the passage marked with a pen in the margin. Perhaps, if all were known, every promise in the Bible has borne a special message to some one saint, and so the whole volume might be scored in the margin with mementos of Christian experience, every one appropriate to the very letter.—C. H. Spurgeon.

13—16. (13) Johanan, vs. 8. (14) Balis, perhaps the same king referred to as seeking alliance with Zedekiah.^a He was naturally opposed to the Babylonian official, Gedaliah. slay thee, Heb. "strike thee in soul," i. e. a deadly stroke.^c (15) I will slay, privately assassinate. (16) falsely, so Gedaliah, in his over-trustfulness, thought.

Trusting a Traitor.—Gedaliah was told that Ishmael meditated his death. Told, not by one man, but by all who had opportunity of knowing the traitor's designs. Was it, then, blameworthy in him to neglect the information? We cannot tell. It may have been that he knew of jealousies which made him think that the rest of the captains were slandering Ishmael. Slanderers, be it remembered, are quite as numerous as traitors. The fault of Gedaliah, if fault it was, was that of a generous heart. It is one of the weapons of a traitor to put on the semblance of a true man. Then probably Gedaliah was further influenced by the proposition to kill Ishmael. If the informers had merely urged him to guard himself, they might have been better attended to. But those were days when, if people wanted to get rid of a troublesome man, they had little scruple in taking the most effectual way.—Pul. Com.

CHAPTER THE FORTY-FIRST.

1—3. (1) seventh month, fr. this it appears that Gedaliah's presidency lasted only two months.^a and the princes, R. V. "and one of the chief officers of the king, and ten men," he was a prince of the royal house and was doubtless jealous that Gedaliah should hold his place. eat bread, wh. is the Eastern sign of friendship. (2) Then arose, i. e. in the midst of the banquet. The day of this murder was kept as a fast day by the post-captivity Jews. Zech. vii. 5; viii. 19. (3) slew, etc., Gedaliah's death being the signal for a general massacre, but it was confined prob. to the men of war.

Gedaliah's Death.—Josephus suggests that Ishmael seized the opportunity of slaughter when Gedaliah and his guests were merry with wine, and his words are: "When Gedaliah had feasted Ishmael, and those that were with him, in a splendid manner at his table, and had given them presents, he became disordered in drink, while he endeav-

"Fire, and hammer, and file are necessary to give the metal form; and it must have many a grind and many a rub ere it will shine; so, in trial, character is shaped, and beautified, and brightened."—S. Coley.

^a Je. xxvii. 3.

^c "This Ishmael, being of the seed royal of David, envied Gedaliah, who had the presidency to wh. he thought himself entitled. Therefore he leagued himself with the ancient enemy of Judah."

"Ingratitude is treason to mankind."—Thomson.

^a 2 Ki. xxv. 8, 25.

"If there be a crime Of deeper dye than all the guilty train Of human vices, 'tis ingratitude."

—Brooke.

"It was said once of the whole world that it was nothing better than a prison for the man who had offended Cæsar; and I may say of the great universe, however wide it be, that it is but a narrow cell for the man who has offended God."—C. H. Spurgeon.

^b Jno. iv. 5.

^c "Some think should be Salem, close to Shechem."

^d "The persons here spoken of belonged to the remainder of the ten tribes, who had retained their veneration for the God of their fathers, and prob. were in the habit of repairing at stated seasons to Jerus. The plight in which they now appeared was indicative of deep mourning on account of the destruction of that city." — Henderson.

"The man of pure and simple heart

Through life disdains a double part;

He never needs the screen of lies

His inward bosom to disguise."—Gay.

^a "Subterranean storehouses for keeping grain safe from robbers." — Wordsworth.

vs. 8. "This refers to stores they had concealed, as is clear from the mentioning of 'the oil and honey.' During the time of the Kandian war many prisoners received lenient treatment, because of ored to be very merry with them; and when Ishmael saw him in this case, and that he was drowned in his cups to the degree of insensibility and fallen asleep, he rose up on a sudden, with his ten friends, and slew Gedaliah and those that were with him at the feast.—Antiq. x. 9, 4. Hospitality.—Among the Greeks existed a custom of pledging lasting friendship in return for hospitality. It was in this wise: On a four-sided stone was written the name of each guest; the stone, called "Tessara hospitalis," was then broken, and each friend carried away the part of the stone bearing the other's name, and it entitled the holder of the part to ask protection and shelter from the other whenever necessity arose.—Hom. Com.

4—7. (4) no man knew, i. e. beyond the town of Mizpah. (5) Shechem, or Cychar, mod. Nablous.^b Shiloh, ch. vii. 12.^c Samaria, the chief town of the ten tribes. beards shaven, a sign of deep sorrow. cut themselves, Le. xix. 27, 28. De. xiv. 1.^d These were pilgrims, descendants of the old ten tribes, on their way either to Jerusalem,—or to some place at Mizpah which Gedaliah had prepared as a centre of worship.—Pul. Com. (6) weeping . . . went, as if in sympathy with the pilgrims. Come to Gedaliah, speaking as if he were a court-official. (7) slew them, the reason for this treacherous murder does not appear.

Ishmael's atrocities remind us of the Indian Mutiny, its leader, and the well at Cawnpore. Treachery, ingratitude, murder, massacre, greed, cowardice,—all are gathered in this detestable character. And such men are permitted to be. So clearly seen is this, that every drama has its villain; they are recognized as having definite place and function in this poor life of ours. History is full of them. But for them one might almost say there would be no history. Can we explain this permission? Wherefore are such men created and preserved? It is a part of the great question of moral evil, for the full solution of which we must wait. Like as was said to a lad of one of our public schools, who had heard his master say in a sermon in the school chapel that in mathematics there were lines in the same plane ever converging but which never met. The lad heard this, and as he knew something of mathematics himself, he believed and said to a senior in the school that the master was wrong. The senior defended the master, and told the lad of the lines that mathematicians call asymptotes. "But explain," said the astonished lad. "No, I can't," said the other. "You must wait till you get there." The lad had not read on so far in the science as that, and hence there was nothing for it but to believe that, though it was at present incomprehensible to him how such lines as those spoken of could be, nevertheless, when he had read on farther, he would see it clearly enough. And so we have to hear and see things which, to fully reconcile with the existence and superintendence of an all-loving and all-powerful God, is beyond our power, and there is nothing for it but that we must "wait till we get there"—there where the reading of these problems will be ready and clear.—Pul. Com.

8—10. (8) we have treasures,^a these men knew that hidden stores of provisions would be important to Ishmael, and their secret would be lost with them if he put them to death. (9) because of, etc., R. V. "by the side of Gedaliah, (the same was that which Asa . . . Israel)." "Nothing is said of this 'pit' in the historical books, but only (1 Kings xv. 22=2 Chron. xvi. 6) that Asa used the material with which Baasha had fortified Ramah to build Geba and Mizpah. It would seem that this 'pit' formed part of Asa's defensive works; probably it was a cistern to supply the town with water during the siege."—Camb. Bib. (10) captive, intending to set up a petty kingdom under the shelter of the Ammonites.

Granaries in the East.—In Palestine wells or cisterns are used for grain. In them the farmers store their crops of all kinds after the grain is threshed and winnowed. They are cool and perfectly dry. The top is hermetically sealed with plaster, and covered with a deep bed of earth; and thus they keep out rats, mice, an even ants—the latter by no means a contemptible enemy. The custom is doubtless an ancient one, and is extended from this country through the Carthaginians of North Africa into Spain. They seem to be alluded to in the passage cited above. These cisterns not only preserve the grain and other stores deposited in them from insects and mice, but they are admirably adapted to conceal them from robbers. These ten men had doubtless thus hid their treasures, to avoid being plundered in that time of utter lawlessness; and in a similar time I found people storing away grain in cisterns far out in the open country between Aleppo and Hamath; and they told me it was to hide it from the Government tax-gatherers. It is quite dangerous to come upon a deserted site full of these open cisterns and wells, especially at night, as I have often found. Frequently they are entirely concealed by the grass, and the path leads right among them. They must always be dug in dry places, generally on the side of a sloping hill. They would not answer in a wet country, but in these dry climates stores have been found quite fresh and sound many years after they were thus buried.—Thomson.

11—14. (11) Johanan, ch. xl. 13: the man who had warned Gedaliah. (12) great waters, a large open pool; doubtless the pool at which Abner and Joab met. (2 Sam. ii. 13) Gibeon was a city of the priests (Josh. xviii. 25; xxi. 17) in the tribe of Benjamin. (13) glad, at the prospect of deliverance. (14) cast about, turned round.

Liberty is quite as much a moral as a political growth—the result of free individual action, energy, and independence. It may be of comparatively little consequence how a man is governed from without, whilst everything depends upon how he governs himself from within. The greatest slave is not he who is ruled by a despot, great though that evil be, but he who is in the thrall of his own moral ignorance, selfishness and vice. There have been and perhaps there still are so-called patriots abroad who hold it to be the greatest stroke for liberty to kill a tyrant, forgetting that the tyrant usually represents only too faithfully the millions of people over whom he reigns. But nations who are enslaved at heart, cannot be freed by any mere change of masters or of institutions and so long as the fatal delusion prevails that liberty solely depends upon and consists in government, so long will such changes, no matter at what cost they be effected, have as little practical and lasting result as the shifting of the figures in a phantasmagoria.—Smiles. Triumph of Good.—John Huss once had a singular dream. He thought that the powers of evil thronged his chapel of Bethlehem to obliterate the pictures of Jesus upon the walls. But angels of light on the other side with swift hands repainted them in colors richer, and in more entrancing beauty. Such are the powers that contend in the place of our assemblies. But fairer, tenderer, stronger shall the influence of Jesus grow under angel hands. The saints witness its triumphs. The faithful ministry paints Emmanuel with impassioned force and many a loving repetition, till every stone and beam seem eloquent of His story, and the whole place a monument to His incomparable name.—Old Test. Anec.

15—18. (15) escaped, fleeing at once, scarcely even showing fight, but losing two of his party. (16) took Johanan, he becoming the leader on the death of Gedaliah. (17) Chimham, Chimham was the son of the rich Gileadite Barzillai,^a who probably founded this “habitation,” or rather “hospice” (“khan,” “caravanserai”), for the accommodation of travelers—a characteristic mark of public-spirited liberality. Josephus and Aquila, however, appear to have read “by the hurdles of Chimham”—a very possible name for a locality in such a pastoral country.—Pul. Com. (18) Because of the Chaldæans,^b who would certainly take vengeance for the murder of the governor whom they had appointed.

Certainty of Judgment.—There was a man who committed a foul murder in a Scottish castle upon a young bridegroom, at whose marthe assurance that they had treasures hid in the field, and that they should be the property of their keepers. In some cases there can be no doubt there were large sums thus acquired by certain individuals.”—Roberts.

“The wise and good wish well to liberty, throughout all lands; but aim to win her cause by some bold manly movement from the heart of all united nations; not by base assassin’s craft, of hangman’s well repaid. But how to gain this, how to inaugurate this grand blessing seems a knot time’s wearied fingers work at till they bleed; and baffled races vainly pray for. Still the riddle must be read. The hour must come when retributive Mercy shall succeed her sterner sister Justice, and aye reign in parity divine with righteous love.”—Bailey.

^a 2 Sa. xix. 38, 40.

^b “Lest the Chaldæans should suspect all the Jews of being implicated in Ishmael’s treason, as though the Jews sought to have a prince of the house of David.”—Fausset.

"God will put up with a great many things in the human heart, but there is one thing he will not put up with in it, a second place. He who offers God a second place offers him no place."
—John Ruskin.

"The strength of the church lies not in the oratory of the pulpit, but in the oratory of the closet." — Spurgeon.

^a "They profess great reverence for Jeremiah, as for God; but will not hearken to the one or the other, but prefer their own wilfulness to both." — Wordsworth.

"That which is called considering what is our duty in a particular case is very often nothing but endeavoring to explain it away." — Bishop Butler.

^b "It is the constant method of hypocrites to pretend a profound submission to the will of God till that comes to cross their inclinations or interest." — Lowth.

"Among all the graces that adorn a Christian soul, like so many jewels of various colors and lustres, against the day of her espousals to the Lamb of God, there is not one more brilliant than patience." — Bp. Horne.

riage festivities he had hypocritically assisted. The assassin took horse in the dead of night, and fled for his life through wood and winding path. When the sun dawned, he slackened his pace, and behold! he was emerging from a thicket in front of the very castle whence he had fled, and to which, by tortuous paths, he had returned. Horror seized him; he was discovered, and condemned to death. So, however far and fast we may fly, we shall find ourselves, when light returns, ever in presence of our sin and of our Judge. Temptation.—Solitude hath its temptations as well as society. St. Anthony of Egypt before his conversion was a gay and fast young man of Alexandria, and when he was converted he found the temptations of the city so intolerable that he fled into the Egypt desert and became a hermit; but he afterward confessed that the temptations of a cell in the wilderness were worse than those of a city. It would not be safe to exchange our temptations for those of another. Every one has his own. The attraction of temptation is overcome by a counter attraction. The love of Christ in the heart destroys the love of sin and the new song of salvation enables us to despise the siren's song of temptation and pass it by.—James Stalker.

CHAPTER THE FORTY-SECOND.

1-3. (1) came near, "it was no slight matter for the choicest part of the remnant of Israel to return to the very land out of which their fathers had been divinely guided."—Cheyne. (2) unto Jeremiah, who poss. was one of the captives taken away by Ishmael. (3) supplication, etc., as ch. xxxvi. 7. thy God, intimating that he had prevailing power with Him. (4) show us the way,^a "the desire to ascertain God's will expressed here, even when compared with their disobedience to that will when declared (chap. xliii. 4), need not imply hypocrisy. They may have made up their minds that it was necessary to flee into Egypt, and, assuming that this resolution would be confirmed by the divine response, desired only to know what particular course they should adopt in accordance with it."—Camb. Bib.

Importance of Prayer.—Many years ago, the late Duchess of Gordon called on good Harrington Evans, and said, "I have just five minutes, but I could not leave town without calling to say 'good-bye!'" "Five minutes," said Mr. Evans, with that solemn and impressive manner by which he was distinguished; "five minutes! Then pray! Pray! Pray! Good morning." "I felt so struck with these words," said the Duchess to a friend, "that I could not forget them; and, as I thought on them, I was led to study prayer, as a means of grace as well as an act of worship, and ever after my chief work in the Lord's service became the promotion of prayer-meetings."

4-6. (4) heard, ch. xxxiv. 10, xxxv. 17. (5) Between us, or against us,^b i. e. to bear witness and punish us if we fail to do our part as we now promise.

Rewards of Obedience.—It is related how an aged couple in the vicinity of London, who in the early part of life were poor, but who by the blessing of God upon their industry enjoyed a comfortable independency in their old age, were called upon by a Christian minister, who solicited their contributions to a charity. The old lady was disposed to make out some excuse, and to answer in the negative, both for her husband and for herself, and therefore replied, "Why, sir, we have lost a deal by religion since we began; my husband knows that very well." And being wishful to obtain her husband's consent to the assertion, she said, "Have we not, Thomas?" Thomas, after a long and solemn pause, replied, "Yes, Mary, we have lost a deal by our religion! I have lost a deal by my religion. Before I got religion, Mary, I had got a water-pail in which I carried water; and that, you know, I lost many years ago. And then I had an old slouched hat, a patched old coat, and mended shoes and stockings; but I have lost them also long ago. And, Mary, you know that, poor as I was, I had a habit of getting drunk and quarrelling with you; and that, you know, I have lost. And then I had a burdened conscience and a wicked heart, and then I had ten thousand guilty feelings and fears; but all are lost, completely lost, and like a millstone cast into the deep sea. Before we got religion, Mary, you had a washing-tray, in which you washed for hire, and God Almighty blessed your industry; but since we got religion you have lost your washing-tray. And you had a gown and bonnet much the worse for wear, though they were all you had to wear; but you have lost them long ago. And you had many an aching heart concerning me at times; but those you happily have lost. And I could even wish that you had lost as much as I have lost, and even more; for what we lose by our religion will be our eternal gain."—Pul. Com.

7—12. (7) ten days, "nine days the prophet passed in meditation and prayer. Knowing him, as we do, we cannot doubt that he sustained a severe mental conflict. Common sense seemed to favor the policy of Johanan. And yet the prophetic spirit had distinctly assured him that in Babylon alone could the regeneration of Israel be effected."—Cheyne. (10) still abide, settling down quietly under the power of the Chaldeans. repent, ch. xviii. 11. (12) I . . mercies, by overruling the King of Babylon's plans concerning you.

The Great Work God is Disposed to Do.—It is indicated by these two not infrequent figures of building and planting. God was willing to make these people his husbandry, his building (1 Cor. iii. 9). He had been lately engaged in a great pulling down and rooting up; and why? Because his people had been putting up the wrong buildings, planting the wrong plant. Every plant not planted by God must be rooted up. God is the Builder, not a mere helper in building. We may be said to be fellow-workers with God, but it can never describe him rightly to call him fellow-worker with us. The work and the glory are his of building up the holy character, the perfect manhood, the everlasting home. He it is who makes his people fruitful in every good word and work. And the way for all this building and planting was now clear so far as God himself was concerned. All the pulling down and rooting up was done. Only let the people give the needed opportunity and all else would prosper.—Pul. Com. The Delayed Blessings Office.—In the charming little booklet, Expectation Corner, Adam Slowman was led into the Lord's treasure-houses, and among many other wonders there revealed to him was the "Delayed Blessings Office," where God kept certain things prayed for until the wise time came to send them. "It takes a long time for some pensioners to learn that delays are not denials. . . . Ah, there are secrets of love and wisdom in the 'Delayed Blessings Department,' which are little dreamt of. Men would pluck their mercies green when the Lord would have them ripe." (Isa. 30: 18.)—Peloubet.

13—16. (14) Egypt, seeking shelter there was the plan generally favored. see no war, if they thought they would escape the presence of war they were mistaken. Now that the barrier of Judæa had been swept away Egypt would be even more open to attack from the east. (15) sojourn there, seeking the protection of its king rather than the protection of God. (16) which ye feared, R. V., which ye fear. The calamities mentioned were precisely those of which the Jews were apprehensive in their own country. So afterwards, "whereof ye are afraid."—Pul. Com. overtake you, ch. xlv. 14. 18.*

The Desire to Go to Egypt.—Jeremiah knew too well what mingled hopes and fears drew his hearers towards the fertile valley and rich cities of the Nile. He sets before them the reverse of the picture: they might refuse to obey God's command to remain in Judah; they might say, "No, we will go into the land of Egypt, where we shall see no war, nor hear the sound of the trumpet, nor hunger for bread, and there will we dwell." As of old, they craved for the flesh-pots of Egypt; and with more excuse than their forefathers. They were worn out with suffering and toil,

"I worked with patience, which is almost power." —E. B. Brown-ing.

"If a man is unsound in his faith the clergy take the ecclesiastical sword and cut him off at once. But he may be ever so unsound in charity, in patience, and nothing is said about that. We must be sound in faith, in love, and in patience if we are to be true to God." —D. L. Moody.

"What is the glory of a man who invented a useful art or founded a flourishing kingdom, what the glory of the greatest prince or potentate (and on such grounds did the heathen deify men), compared with the glory of the Creator of the world?"—Henry.

* "What our hearts are most set on often prove fatal to us. Those who think to escape troubles by changing their place will find them wherever they go." —Fausset.

Vigilance in watching opportunity, tact and daring in seizing upon opportunity, force and persistence in crowding opportunity to its utmost of possible achievement—these are the martial virtues which must command success.—Austin Phelps.

b "The Jews going into Egypt for protection, was in effect refusing to submit themselves to the king of Babylon, to whom God had decreed the government of Judæa, and all the neighboring countries."—Lowth.

"Ottocar, King of Bohemia, refused to do homage to Rodolphus I., till at last, chastised with war, he was content to do him homage privately in a tent; which tent was so contrived by the emperor's servants, that, by drawing a cord, all was taken away, and so Ottocar presented on his knees, doing his homage, to the view of three armies then in the field. Thus God at last shall uncase the closest dissembler to the sight of men, angels, and devils; having removed all veils and pretences of religion and piety."—Spencer.

"Thou mayest be sure that he that will in private tell thee of thy faults is thy friend, for he adventureth thy dislike and doth hazard thy hatred."—Sir W. Raleigh.

some of them had wives and children; the childless prophet was inviting them to make sacrifices and incur risks which he could neither share nor understand. Can we wonder if they fell short of his inspired heroism, and hesitated to forego the ease and plenty of Egypt in order to try social experiments in Judah?—Exp. Bib. "There is a machine employed at the Mint of such perfect accuracy and finish that, when a number of sovereigns are tested by it, it will automatically and instantly and infallibly reject every one that fails in the least degree to come up to the proper standard of weight. So if we thus bring into view the unseen and eternal, all the crowd of facts and events that come before us day by day will each one spontaneously, promptly, and infallibly be judged, and we shall neither under nor over estimate them but as we ought."—Pul. Com.

17—19. (17) all the men, for a limitation of this denunciation, comp. ch. xlv. 14, 28. (18) execration, etc., ch. xxiv. 9. (19) admonished you, R. V. "testified unto you."

Foreseeing the Evil.—"No man can find himself over the abyss, the floor of which is paved with wrecks, and white with the bones of the shrieking myriads of human beings whom the waves have swallowed up, without some thought of the dread possibilities hanging over his fate. There is only one way to get rid of them; that which an old sea-captain mentioned to me, namely to keep one's self under opiates until he wakes up in the harbor where he is bound. I did not take this as serious advice, but the meaning is that one who has all his senses about him cannot help being anxious."—Oliver Wendell Holmes. It is equally true that on the voyage of life he who has his senses must be thoughtful about the dangers of the voyage, and only the opiates of folly, and pleasure, and worldliness can keep him from it.—Peloubet.

20—22. (20) dissembled, R. V. "for ye have dealt deceitfully against your own souls." See vss. 3, 5, 6. (21) not obeyed, as you so faithfully promised, and even swore to do.

Present Age Suitable to Hypocrisy.—There was an age of chivalry, when no craven courted knighthood, for it involved the hard blows, the dangerous wounds, the rough unhorsings, and the ungentle perils of the tournament; nay, these were but child's play: there were distant Eastern fields, where Paynim warriors must be slain by valiant hands, and blood must flow in rivers from the Red-cross knights. Then men who lacked valor preferred their hawks and their jesters, and left heroes to court death and glory on the battle-field. This genial time of peace breeds carpet knights, who flourish their untried weapons, and bear the insignia of valor, without incurring its inconvenient toils. Many are crowding to the seats of the heroes, since prowess and patience are no more required. The war is over, and every man is willing to enlist. When Rome commenced her long career of victory, it was no pleasant thing to be a soldier in the Roman legions. The power which smote the nations like a rod of iron abroad, was a yoke of iron at home. There were long forced marches, with hunger and cold and weariness; heavy armor was the usual load when the legionary marched at ease; but "ease" was a word he seldom used. Rivers were forded; mountains were scaled; barbarians were attacked; proud nations were assailed; kingdoms were subdued. No toil too stern for the scarred veteran, no odds too heavy, no onslaught too ferocious, no arms too terrible. Scarcely were his wounds healed, ere he was called to new fields; his life was battle; his home the tent; his repast was plunder; his bed the battle-field; while the eagle's bloody talons removed all need of sepulchre for his slaughtered body. But afterwards when Rome was mistress of the world, and the Prætorian cohorts could sell the imperial purple to the highest bidder, many would follow the legions to share their spoils. It is not otherwise to-day. Into the triumphs of martyrs and confessors few are unwilling to enter; in a national respect to religion, which is the result of their holiness, even ungodly men are willing to share. They have gone before us with true hearts valiant for truth, and false traitors are willing to divide their spoils.—C. H. Spurgeon.

CHAPTER THE FORTY-THIRD.

1—4. (2) Azariah, comp. ch. xlii. 1. proud, or presumptuous.^a (3) setteth thee on, "taking ch. xlv. 4, 5 in connection with ch. xlii. 10 I infer that Baruch believed that, even after its heavy losses, Israel as a nation would yet be 'built up' in its own land."—Cheyne. (4) dwell .. Judah, abide quietly under Chaldaean sway.

Refusing Unwelcome Demands.—Certain tacit conditions may always be considered attached to a profession of willingness to be guided by a friend's advice. Our newspapers frequently record breaches of engagements that should be as binding as that entered into by Johanan and his friends, and they do so without any special comment. For instance, the verdicts of arbitrators in trade disputes have been too often ignored by the unsuccessful parties; and—to take a very different illustration—the most unlimited professions of faith in the infallibility of the Bible have sometimes gone along with a denial of its plain teaching and a disregard of its imperative commands. While Shylock expected a favorable decision, Portia was "a Daniel come to judgment;" his subsequent opinion of her judicial qualities has not been recorded. Those who have never refused or evaded unwelcome demands made by an authority whom they have promised to obey may cast the first stone at Johanan.—Exp. Bib.

5—7. (5) remnant, ch. xl. 11, 12. (6) men, etc., comp. xli. 16. (7) Tahpanhes, ch. ii. 16, in the northern frontier of Egypt,^b which was nearest to Palestine.

Discontent Cured.—All human situations have their inconveniences. We feel those that we find in the present: and we neither feel nor see those that exist in another. Hence we often make troublesome changes without amendment, and frequently for the worse. In my youth I was a passenger in a little sloop descending the river Delaware. There being no wind, we were obliged, when the tide was spent, to cast anchor and wait for the next. The heat of the sun on the vessel was excessive—the company strangers to me, and not very agreeable. Near the river side I saw what I took to be a pleasant green meadow, in the middle of which was a large shady tree, where, it struck my fancy, I could sit and read—having a book in my pocket—and pass the time agreeably until the tide turned. I therefore prevailed with the captain to put me ashore. Being landed I found the greatest part of my meadow was really a marsh; in crossing which, to come to my tree, I was up to my knees in mire; and I had not placed myself under its shade five minutes before mosquitoes in swarms found me out, attacked my legs, hands, and face, and made my reading and my rest impossible; so that I returned to the beach, and called for the boat to come and take me on board again, where I was obliged to bear the heat I had strove to quit, and also the laugh of the company. Similar cases in the affairs of life have since frequently fallen under my observation.—Franklin.

8—13. "Prophecy of the Fall of Egypt (8—14; xlv. 30) fulfilled in the 5th year after the destruction of Jerusalem (584) when Nebuchadnezzar invaded Egypt, slew its king and carried away a host of Jews to Babylon."—Oehler. (9) great stones, as large as he could carry. hide .. clay, R. V. "hide them in mortar in the brick work." "he is directed to take great stones and imbed them in the mortar (not 'clay') in the brick pavement at the entry of the palace. When the events predicted came to pass, these stones would testify that Jeremiah had predicted them."—Pul. Com. (10) my servant, ch. xxv. 9. set .. hid, a symbolical declaration that he should surely conquer the country. (11) and when,

^a Ps. xix. 18.

"Those that are resolved to contradict the great ends of the ministry, are industrious to bring a bad name upon it."—Henry.

"Observe the old diabolical trick; when preachers practice God's word and their office with zeal, the world understands how to conflict it with another name and call it personal interest."—Cramer.

^b Je. xlv. 14; Eze. xxx. 18.

"They that are not content with their present condition are like little children upon a hill; and they look a good way off, and see another hill, and think, if they were on the top of that, then they were able to touch the clouds with their fingers; but, when they are on top of that hill, alas, they are as far from the clouds as before."

^c "Poss. the palace of Pharaoh was being built or repaired at this time; hence arose the mortar and brick at the entry."—Fausset.

^d "He shall invest the land of Egypt, and take entire possession of it, just as a shepherd's garment covers his body all over. So calamities, when they surround men on every side, are compared to a garment. Ps. cix. 19.—Lowth.

"With as great ease as a shepherd throws his cloak round him when going forth to watch his flock by night in the open field, so easily shall the King of Babylon take possession of all the wealth and glory of Egypt, and throw it round him, and depart without any one daring to resist his progress." — Spk. Com.

"There is no use of living if our lives do not help other lives." — Phillips Brooks.

^a Is. xi. 11; comp. Ge. x. 14.

"Every religious life is woven of many diverse strands; if the web as a whole is rotten, the Great Taskmaster can take no account of a few threads that have a form and profession of soundness."—Exp. Bib.

"Why comes Temptation, but for man to meet

And master, and make crouch beneath his feet,

And so be pe-destalled in triumph?"

—Browning.

R. V., "And he shall come," etc. death to death, ch. xv. 2; Zec. xi. 9. (12) I will kindle, etc., the king is but the instrument of Jehovah. array himself,^a he shall carry off the spoil as easily as a shepherd wraps his garment about him. (13) images, R. V. "pillars," originally a natural boulder or block of stone, regarded as the abode of a deity. Then an obelisk. "The lofty obelisks in front of the Temple of the Sun (one of which is the Cleopatra's Needle) are here referred to. It was the distinguishing mark of a holy place."—Driver on Deut. xvi. 22. Beth-shemesh, i. e. "the house of the Sun," or Heliopolis, or On.

Dependence upon any earthly power is utterly vain. Egypt is dreamt of as a refuge from their woes. Its power, typified by the clay of the kiln or brick-field, only overlies the power of God, typified by the stones. They would be in his hands still, although they knew it not. Through the clay of worldly dependence they must needs fall upon the stones of Divine judgment. Man cannot flee from his Maker. There is no earthly security from the consequences of sin. If the remnant of Judah, pursuing its tendency towards worldly mindedness and idolatry to the bitter end, should persist in putting its trust in the Egyptian power, to whose religion and life it was in such imminent danger of assimilating itself, woe to it! Through Pharaoh even will they be confronted with Nebuchadnezzar yet again. God is the only true Helper and Saviour, and in the practice of holiness and the precepts of true religion is security alone to be found. What assurance company can shield the sinner from the consequences of his misdeeds? And if God be for any man, who can be against him?—Pul. Com. "Kindle a Fire in the Houses of the Gods of Egypt." Egypt was full of temples and idol-gods; those of wood the conquering army would commit to the flames; those of gold they would carry away as spoil to Babylon. This burning of temples and idols by Nebuchadnezzar, and afterwards by the Persian kings, was mercifully ordered by God to wean the exiles there from their idolatry into which they sank, and to revive their faith in the God of Israel.—Hom. Com. Recent Discoveries.—Mr. Flinders Petrie recently discovered at Tell Defenneh a large brickwork pavement, with great stones buried underneath, which he supposed might be those mentioned in our narrative. He also found there another possible relic of these Jewish émigrés in the shape of the ruins of a large brick building of the twenty-sixth dynasty—to which Pharaoh Hophra belonged—still known as the "Palace of the Jew's Daughter." It is a natural and attractive conjecture that this was the residence assigned to the Jewish princesses whom Johanan carried with him into Egypt.—Exp. Bib.

CHAPTER THE FORTY-FOURTH.

1-6. (1) The word that came, "this is the last prophecy of Jeremiah in respect of time. The occasion we see to have been the unabated idolatry which characterized the people even in the midst of the punishment which they were undergoing in exile. It may have been uttered at any time between the arrival in Egypt (about 585 B. C.) and the fulfilment (not earlier than 572 B. C.)."—Camb. Bib. dwelling, better, sojourn. These Jews expected soon to return to Judæa. Migdol, a city on the eastern frontier of Egypt, towards the Red Sea. This is not the Migdol of Ex. xiv. 2, but the Magdolon of Herodotus. Comp. xlv. 14; Ezek. xxix. 10, etc.—Cheyne. Tahpanhes, ch. ii. 16. Noph, Memphis. Pathros,^a or Upper Egypt. (2) seen, are eye-witnesses of the fulfilment of My threatened judgments. (3) went to burn, "implying perverse assiduity." serve other gods, comp. De. viii. 6, xxxii. 17. (4) sent prophets, ch. vii. 13, xxv. 4. (5) inclined their ear, to listen with a view to obedience. (6) poured forth, ch. xlii. 18.

The Abominable Thing (vs. 4).—I. Sin is an abominable thing, if we consider it—1. In reference to God; 2. In reference to the moral law;

3. In reference to its fatal influence on man. II. Sin is an abominable thing which God hates. 1. He has shown it in the expulsion of the rebel angels from heaven; 2. In the exile of our first parents from Eden; 3. In the prevalence of disease and death among men; 4. In a long series of recorded judgments; 5. In the cross of Christ. III. Sin is an abominable thing which God hates, and which He therefore exhorts and entreats us not to commit. 1. By the Bible; 2. By conscience; 3. By affliction.—G. Brooks.

7—10. (7) to cut off, i. e. to bring on yourselves the judgments of the God whom you offend.^a (8) be gone, of your own accord. (9) their wives, it seems, from the history, that the Jewish queens were great promoters of idolatry.^b (10) humbled, "literally, bruised, contrite and penitent for sin. The word is used of the vicarious bearing of the sins of the guilty by the innocent in Is. liii. 5, 'he was bruised for our iniquities.' The prophet changes to the third person, as including in his remark the previous generations also."—Camb. Bib.

Neglect of Past Warnings (vss. 9, 10).—"Have ye forgotten," etc. I. It was their duty to recollect the lessons taught by the past. II. They were not unwilling to recall the past glories of Israel. III. They ought to have remembered the connection between former sins and their punishment, in the light of God's unchanging justice. IV. Such remembering of the past, duly improved, had saved from present and future misery.

Memory: A Warning Voice.—A gracious soul remembers that Saul lost two kingdoms at once—his own kingdom and that of heaven—for sparing Agag and the fat of the cattle. He remembers how the unprofitable servant, for the non-improvement of his talent, was cast into outer darkness. He remembers how Ananias and Sapphira were struck dead suddenly for telling a lie. He remembers that Jacob smarted for his lying to his dying day. He remembers how God followed him with sorrow upon sorrow, and breach upon breach, filling up his days with grief and trouble. He remembers how Moses was shut out of the Holy Land, because he spake unadvisedly with his lips. He remembers how Zacharias was stricken dumb, because he believed not the report of the angel Gabriel; and the remembrance of these things stirs up his hatred and indignation against the least sins.—Brooks.

11—15. (11) set . . evil, Am. ix. 4. all Judah, i. e. "the Judah in Egypt, not that in Babylon. Notice the qualification of this too absolute statement in vss. 14, 28." (12) remnant of Judah, those are distinctly marked out who had sought shelter in Egypt in opposition to the commands of the Prophet. (13) punish, comp. ch. xlii. 15—18. (14) none . . escape, i. e. none but those mentioned in vs. 28. (15) had burned, better, "did burn."

The Frown of God (vs. 11).—I. The smile of God, the token of His favor, brightens all nature and life, "Thy favor is life," etc. II. The frown of God, the token of His displeasure, casts a shadow on the heart and life. Apply—I. To those who enjoy God's smile,—live in it, reflect it; 2. To those who have forfeited it,—seek reconciliation through Christ.

A Nullified Purpose.—This remnant, not finding in Egypt the expected safety, think there is nothing easier than to go back again to the land of Judah. Whereas they find too late that, while departure from their own proper place is easy enough, return to it may be impossible. Opening the door to get out was one thing; opening it to get in again quite another. Seventy years were to pass before they of the Captivity should return from Babylon—indeed, it would really be another generation altogether; and should those who sought Egypt in contumacy and rebellion expect to fare better? We must be wise in time. To be wise too late gives suffering its keenest edge. So Judas brought back in vain the thirty pieces of silver, and Esau found no place of repentance though he sought it carefully with tears. This is why God is so earnest in promising wisdom and light to those who seek for ^a Comp. Nu. xvi. 38; Pr. viii. 36; Je. vii. 19.

^b "God designed that this remnant should have kept possession in Judaea, when the rest of their brethren were carried away captive. But by their going into Egypt, and defiling themselves with the idolatries of that nation, they have provoked God to make an utter destruction of them."—Lowth.

^c 1 Ki. xi. 1—8, xv. 13, xvi. 31.

"Thus will you live until, with a seared conscience, you lie down on the bed of death, and there, perhaps, when it is too late, all your old fears will be awakened. You may send to your minister upon that bed of death, and he may come, but by your bedside he may be speechless; his very power to pray may depart from him, and in trying to ask mercy for you all his utterances may be choked; and you may go from that wretched dying bed to hell. And as you sink down into the pit, the millstone about your neck will be the abominable thing which God hates."—S. Martin.

them, that we may seek for them at the right time, at the beginning of the great opportunity of life, and at the beginning of every smaller opportunity.—Pul. Com.

* "It is the curse of impiety not to perceive the hand of God in calamities."—Fausset. "So perversely did they misconstrue providence, though God, by His prophets, had so often explained it to them, and the thing itself spoke the direct contrary."—Mat. Henry.

† Nu. xxx. 7, 8.

‡ La. i. 8; Da. ix. 11, 12.

"We should regard as a divine part of virtue the clemency and long suffering which God manifests, reforming few indeed by punishment, but, by the slowness of punishment, benefiting and admonishing many."—Plutarch.

§ "The Jews, heretofore, in the midst of all their idolatry, had retained the form of appeal to the name of God, and the law, the distinctive glory of their nation. God will allow this no more."—Fausset.

"It may be well for us to listen to Hesiod, who maintains not, with Plato, that punishment is a suffering that follows wrong doing, but that it is a twin birth with wrong doing, springing from the same soil and the same root."—Plutarch.

16—19. (17) goeth . . . mouth, "we should rather render 'all the thing,' (or, 'every word') that is gone forth," i. e. the particular vow that we have avowed to the queen of heaven we will perform to the uttermost. The people rely on the argument that this is no new worship of theirs, and that their experience shews that it was for their national advantage that it should be kept up. The queen of heaven has done more for them than the God whose prophet now addresses them."—Cam. Bib. queen of heaven, ch. vii. 18, xix. 13. "To the moon and the rest of the host of heaven." had we plenty, "fools attribute their seeming prosperity to God's connivance at their sin."^a (18) wanted all, been starving and suffering. (19) cakes, ch. vii. 18. without our men, R. V. "husbands."^b "A wife's vows were not valid without her husband's sanction, and the women avail themselves of this principle to shift the responsibility for their superstition on the men's shoulders.—Ex. Bib.

Worship of Venus.—St. Isaac the Great, of Antioch, who died about A. D. 460, tells us that the Christian ladies of Syria—whom he speaks of very ungallantly as "fools"—used to worship the planet Venus from the roofs of their houses, in the hope that she would bestow upon them some portion of her own brightness and beauty. This experience naturally led St. Isaac to interpret the Queen of Heaven as the luminary which his countrywomen venerated.—Exp. Bib.

20—23. (20) the women, notice that here, as in Isa. iii. 16—24, one of the most evident tokens of the nation's corruption is the condition of its women. (21) remember them, i. e. the various idolatrous acts. (22) no longer bear, even Divine patience being outworn by long-continued wilfulness and disobedience. (23) sinned . . . Lord, not merely in idolatrous acts, but in the cherished spirit of disobedient wilfulness.^c

Irreligion Tends to Immorality and Ruin.—Even a Machiavelli, cool and cynical and audacious as was his scepticism, could see and admit that faithfulness to religion is the secret of the happiness and prosperity of States. An irreligious society tends inevitably to become a dissolute society; and a "dissolute society is the most tragic spectacle which history has ever to present—a nest of disease, of jealousy, of dissensions, of ruin, and despair, whose last hope is to be washed off the world and disappear. Such societies must die sooner or later of their own gangrene, of their own corruption, because the infection of evil, spreading into unbounded selfishness, ever intensifying and reproducing passions which defeat their own aim, can never end in anything but moral dissolution."—Farrar.

24—28. (24) Moreover Jeremiah said: "the people in all likelihood obstinately pressed forward to carry out their idolatrous intentions. Jeremiah therefore declares the consequences of this persistence, and with the announcement that in their ruin shall be involved that of the Egyptian king Pharaoh-Hophra, closes, as far as we know, the whole series of his prophecies."—Camb. Bib. (25) fulfilled . . . hand, "when Jer. said these words he pointed to their hands, in which they were carrying the crescent-shaped cakes wh. they had vowed to the goddess." surely accomplish, R. V. "establish then your vows, and perform your vows," read as an ironical phrase. (26) I have sworn,^a comp. God's solemn vow with theirs. God refuses to recognize any longer His covenant relation to this remnant. (27) watch, etc., ch. i. 10; Eze. vii. 6. (28) small number, vs. 14. Isaiah's doctrine of the remnant. In the midst of judgment, God remembers mercy, and his ancient covenant. A remnant is saved as the nucleus of a regenerate people.—Pul. Com. know, by bitter and desolating experiences.

Man's Words and God's (vs. 28).—I. The words of man betray often the sin of the heart and the vanity of the mind. II. The words of God manifest His integrity, holiness, power and love. III. In regard to life and salvation, time and eternity, whose shall stand? IV. Whose word shall stand the test of the hour of repentance or death?

National Uprightness.—The character of a people decides its destiny. A would-be statesman said not long ago that purified politics were an "iridescent dream," and that the "decatalogue and Golden Rule had no place in statesmanship." But the man or the nation that lives according to such principles will find their prosperity to be an "iridescent dream."—Peloubet. God's Judgment is Discriminating.—Even now it must be so; for "shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" But we do not yet know its purposes and its methods, and therefore to us it looks as though it could not take note of individual deserts. Ultimately we shall see how God has overlooked no exceptional case. Noah is picked out of the drowning world. Lot is remembered in Sodom. Elijah is provided for in the general drought. We can look for no such evidences of an interfering Providence in earthly things now, perhaps, but the truth they illustrate holds good, and must work its blessed results in the day of final account. Natural selection does not always result in the survival of the morally fittest on earth. On the contrary, the good may become martyrs, the bad triumphant tyrants. But we see only the opening acts of the drama. The final catastrophe will reveal the justice that regulates.—Pul. Com.

29, 30. (29) sign, a calamity wh. you shall witness shall be to you the assurance of calamities wh. you shall suffer. (30) Pharaoh-hopra, or Apries, who succeeded Psammis, the successor of Pharaoh-Necho, who was beaten by Nebuchadnezzar at Carchemish. The calamity of Hophra came about six or seven years after Jer.'s prophecy. He was kept prisoner in his palace at Sais for more than ten years, and died B. C. 570. He was intensely hated by the Egyptians.

Historical Signs (vs. 29).—I. The sign mentioned in the text a reminder of the retributive justice of God. II. The events of history to be interpreted in the light of Divine justice and love. III. Some of them, as destruction of Armada, invention of printing, discovery of America, pre-eminently significant.

CHAPTER THE FORTY-FIFTH.

1-5. (1) unto Baruch, this address to an individual following upon words spoken to a nation has been compared to the Epistles addressed by St. Paul to individuals (Timothy, Titus, Philemon), which in like manner are placed after those which he indites to churches. Baruch was a man of high birth, grandson of Maaseiah (chap. xxxii. 12), who was governor of the city in the time of Josiah (2 Chron. xxxiv. 8). He seems to have expected to have either important office in the state or more probably the gift of prophecy bestowed upon him. His ambition is destined not to be gratified, and the prophet here warns him of the fact.—Camb. Bib. when .. written, see ch. xxxvi., which this should follow. (3) grief .. sorrow, R. V. "sorrow to my pain; I am weary with my groaning, and," etc. Baruch grieved for the nation's sins, and sorrowed for the punishments such sins must surely involve. Possibly also Baruch had to bear personal troubles in that anxious time. (4) break down, comp. ch. i. 10. (5) great things, matters of personal benefit. "Dost thou aspire to honor and dignity in a time of common calamity?"^a for a prey, ch. xxxix. 18.

Ambition (vs. 5).—I. The evil denounced. It may be viewed under three aspects. 1. There are some who pursue worldly objects that are far above them; 2. There are some who pursue with undue eagerness worldly objects they might reasonably hope to attain; 3. There are some who pursue all classes of worldly objects in a selfish spirit. II. The reasons why it is denounced. 1. Because it attaches excessive value to worldly objects; 2. Because it misapprehends the comparative advan-

"Vows are easily made, but more easily broken. A sea captain, while upon a single plank in the wide ocean, vowed to devote his life to God if he should be saved, but forgot his vow as soon as his feet were on the solid earth."

"The man who is confident in worldly wisdom is simply confident in the doctrine of chances. His chance success is equally good with that of others. But God would have us understand that success of this sort is only a deferred failure."—Pul. Com.

^a "Baruch, who was of a noble house in Jerusalem, and whose brother Seraiah was advanced to high place in the court of Judah, felt, it seems, some disappointment in seeing that the avenues to the promotion and preferment of which he had a reasonable expectation, and to which he aspired, were closed by his call to the service of God."—Wordsworth.

"As the first step heavenward is humility, so the first step hellward is pride. Pride counts the Gospel foolish, but the Gospel always shows pride to be so."
—Mason.

tages of the different ranks in the social scale; 3. Because it overlooks the duties which arise out of the relations we sustain to our race and our Maker; 4. Because it ignores all the facts, and objects, and interests, and blessings of the spiritual world.—G. Brooks.

Lowliness.—Men sigh for the wings of a dove, that they may fly away and be at rest. But flying away will not help us. "The Kingdom of God is within you." We aspire to the top to look for rest; it lies at the bottom. Water rests only when it gets to the lowest place. So do men. Hence be lowly.—Drummond. Ambition.—The deadness of John, Duke of Saxony, to the world was very remarkable. When he was informed of the rebellion of the ascetics, which led to so afflictive a war in Germany, he said, "If it be the will of God that I should continue a prince, as I have hitherto been, His will be done; but if otherwise, I can descend to a lower station; fewer horses and a humbler equipage will serve me as well."—Whitecross.

CHAPTER THE FORTY-SIXTH.

"Chaps. xlv. —li. form the book of Jeremiah's prophecies concerning foreign nations, grouped together as in Isaiah and Ezekiel. The prophecies are closely connected with ch. xxv. and in the Sept. are inserted there."—Driver. 1-4. (1) Gentiles, R. V. "concerning the nations." (2) Pharaoh-necho, "this monarch had defeated and slain Josiah at Megiddo, and set Jehoahaz on the throne. In three months he had deposed and imprisoned him at Riblah, and set up Jehoiakim. He was extending his conquests in the Asiatic direction when in the fourth year of Jehoiakim's reign he was overthrown at Carchemish.—Camb. Bib. Carchemish, not Circesium, but "discovered by Mr. George Smith to be at Jerâbis on the right bank of the Euphrates."—Pul. Com.: so Camb. Bib. (3) Order, or get in order. buckler, a small round shield, carried by light-armed troops. shield, a heavier defence, covering the whole body. (4) Harness, or mount. furbish, rub or scour to brightness. brigandines,^a R. V. "coats of mail."

The Battle Cry (vs. 3).—I. There are wars of conquest, resulting from unrighteous ambition, pride, etc. II. There are wars of defence, as when men fight for home and liberty, etc.—as Switzerland, etc. III. There are wars of Divine retribution, as when God moves the hearts of men to punish sin and oppression. IV. In the midst of all war it is the believer's privilege to live at peace with God. V. Learn the folly of fighting against God. "Who hath fought against God and prospered?"

The Judgment of Egypt.—God is the God of the Gentile as well as the Jew, of a heathen as well as the Christian, of the godless as well as the godly. In Him all men live and move and have their being; from Him they receive every blessing of life; to Him they will have to give account of their deeds. Therefore God notes the conduct of heathen nations and chastises them when needful; so He does with individual men who renounce His authority over them or are brought up in ignorance of it. The heathen will be judged by their heathenish light and not by the high standards of Christian principles. But there is enough in that light to allow of a genuine judgment and a just sentence. The "Book of the Dead" contains a high and noble system of morality. With this in his possession, the Egyptian was without excuse in his vice and cruelty.—Pul. Com.

5-8. (5) Wherefore, etc., R. V. "Wherefore have I seen it? They are dismayed, etc., a sudden exclamation of astonishment."^b So well equipped an army was nevertheless driven back in dismay. look not back, make no attempt to halt in their flight. (6) Let not, better, "the swift shall not." north, Euphrates was northward in relation to Judah. (7) as a flood, R. V. "Who is this that riseth up like the Nile." waters . . rivers, or "his waters toss to and fro as the rivers."^c (8) R. V., "Egypt

^a "This term translates the Hebrew word siryon, a coat of mail. Brigandine is defined by Wedgwood and Richardson as a kind of scale armor, made of many-jointed plates, very pliant and, easy for the body, so called from being used by the light-armed foot soldiers known as brigands."—Venables.

"No man can do one thing well if he never does more than that one thing. Broadening the base of one's work is as essential as sharpening its point.—S. S. Times.

^b "The moment seized by the Prophet is that when the Eg. host first feels that the battle is lost, and, overborne by the enemy, loses heart, and in despair, yet not without a struggle, gives way."—Spk. Com.

^c "The rise of the Nile is gentle, but at the mouth it, unlike most rivers, is much agitated, owing to the sand banks impeding its course, and so it rushes into the sea like a cataract."—Fausset.

riseth up like the Nile, and his waters toss themselves like the rivers." the city, better, cities in general, the expression of the world-conquering power.

Glorying in Self.—Have done with every glorying except glorying in the Lord. You cannot trust God too much, nor yourself too little. I read a book one day called "Self-made Men" and in its own sphere it was excellent; but spiritually I should not like to be a self-made man. I should think he would be an awful specimen of humanity. At any rate a self-made Christian is one of the sort the devil very soon takes. As I have seen a child so take a bran doll and shake it all out. He likes to shake out self-made Christians till there is nothing left of them. But God-made men,—these are they that do exploits; and God-made Christians who fall back upon the eternal strength at all times and confide there,—these are the men to hold on their way and to wax stronger and stronger.—Spurgeon.

9—12. "A call to the two grand divisions of the army—the warriors in chariots, and the light and heavy armed infantry." (9) Ethiopians, Heb. Cush. Libyans, Heb. Put. shield, the heavy-armed detachments. bow, the light-armed troops. (10) sacrifice, this slaughter is looked upon as having a sacred meaning, as when a great sin offering is offered to Jehovah. (11) virgin, Egypt is so called bec. she had never been brought under the power of any foreign monarch. not to be cured,^a R. V. "there is no healing for thee." (12) the land, i. e. the earth. mighty .. mighty, in the wild confusion the warriors trampled down each other.

The Balm of Gilead, or Balsam of Mecca.—The genuine balsam of Mecca (Amyris opobalsamum) is both scarce and expensive. The kings of Judah cultivated this shrub, but only to a very small extent. It will be interesting to learn that a bottle of this extraordinary balsam is kept at the botanical garden at Paris, as an object of the rarest and highest value. What is generally sold by the name of balsam of Mecca is merely the oil, obtained by boiling, from the seeds, stones, and branches of the tree. The balm itself is too rare to be purchased in the ordinary way. Josephus informs us that the queen of Sheba brought it first to Judæa, where balsam, myrrh, and incense, in the days of old, were to be seen used by the populace in abundance almost daily. This is one of the many things which we "mourn for" in "the days gone by." The reason of its excessive scarcity is supposed to be owing to the destruction of Jerusalem. The Jews, actuated by despair and hatred, destroyed all the balsam plants. There are none now to be found in Palestine. Only one plantation is now known to furnish it, and that is in Arabia Petræa. The whole plantation only yields about three pounds annually, and it is monopolized by the Grand Seigneur.—Piesse's Art of Perfumery.

13—17. (13) The word, this prophecy was probably delivered at the time of the prophet's residence in Egypt. (14) Declare, etc., ch. iv. 5. Migdol, etc., ch. xlv. 1. Stand fast, R. V. "Stand forth." sword shall devour, R. V. "hath devoured;" alluding to the previous conquests of Nebuchadnezzar. (15) thy valiant men, or, "thy mighty one." The Sept. understands the reference to be to Apis, the Bull, the idol of Egypt.^c (16) one .. another, as vs. 12. to our own people, this would be the cry of the hired troops in the Egyptian army, such as are mentioned in vs. 9. (17) a noise, or empty sound. he hath passed, R. V., "he hath let the time appointed pass by," i. e. he might have repented, but it is now too late.

The Real Cause of the Decline of empires.—A hardy, temperate, courageous people, driven by necessity or attracted by the hope of gain, fall upon some decrepit power, destroy it, and on its ruins build their own fortunes. For a while the same courage and virtue which enabled them to gain possession of their prize are manifested in consolidating their power and in building up their rule. But after the lapse of years, they have gained secure foothold and are able to live less on their

For "day of the Lord" see Is. xiii. 6; Joel i. 15, ii. 1; Am. v. 18; Zep. i. 14, 15.

^a Je. xxx. 13; Eze. xxx. 21.

"Physicians would be astonished at the numerous kinds of medicine wh. are administered to a patient. The people themselves are unwilling to take one kind for long together. Should a patient, when about to take his medicine, scatter or spill the least quantity, nothing will induce him to take the rest; it is a bad omen; he must have the nostrum changed."—Roberts.

^b "Some take this as an ironical address to Egypt, and a summons to them to stand upon their defence."—Henderson.

^c "Apis, the bull-shaped Egyptian idol, worshipped at Noph, or Memphis. The contrast thus is between the palpable impotence of the idol, and the might attributed to it by its worshippers."—Fausset.

"If our religion means anything, it means composure, heroism, serenity, loyalty at all times and in all places."—Garrett Wyck-off.

"Nothing endures but personal qualities."
—Walt Whitman.

^a "Tabor rises in the form of a truncated cone to the height of about 1,850 feet above the plain of Esdraelon, its total height above the sea level being 1,805 feet. Other mountains of equal elevation are in sight, but its shape and the wide extent of the plain around it, make it a far more conspicuous object. Carmel also is a most commanding mountain."—Robinson.

^b Comp. Je. iv. 31.

"The most important thought I ever had was my responsibility to God."—Daniel Webster.

^c "He was the first of the supreme triad of Thebes, and confessedly his form was the most elevated and spiritual under which the Egyptian priesthood represented the divinity to the adoration of the people. He was the deity invisible and unfathomable, whose name signifies the concealed, and was the mysterious mainspring, who created, preserves, and governs the world."—Lenormant.

^d Eze. xxix. 13.

guard against enemies. Wealth and luxury increase and exert their enervating power. In this soil the vices, whatever they may be, to which as a people they are predisposed, grow rapidly and affect the national habit and character. Then their decay has begun. It hastens rapidly on until, in their turn, this once victorious people are vanquished, overthrown by a nation more bold and righteous and therefore more powerful than themselves. This law can be readily traced in the histories of Egypt, Assyria, Babylon, Persia, Greece, Rome, and in more modern instances as well. Were there no moral causes at work in the overthrow of the French empire under Napoleon I.? In all cases it will be seen that, in one form or another, God's love of righteousness has been outraged, and vengeance has speedily, or surely if not speedily, come. What was the Reformation but the revolt, of men's consciences against the abominable sins of the Catholic Church? But how came that Church—once so fair, so beautiful, so glorious—to have sunk so low as to become hateful in men's eyes? It was this same enervating influence of wealth, power, and other forms of earthly prosperity which sapped her spiritual strength until she became utterly unworthy of men's confidence, and she was punished, and is so to this day, by the loss of well-nigh all Northern Europe, the noblest half of her ancient domain."—Pul. Com.

18—21. (18) as Tabor, or "like a Tabor among the mountains."^a So Nebuchadnezzar shall stand out conspicuous above all neighboring rulers. (19) daughter . . Egypt, fig. term for the people of Egypt.^b furnish . . captivity, make preparations for captivity. (20) destruction, or "the destroyer." Lit. "a gadfly from the north has come upon her." The fly that destroys cattle. (21) hired men, mercenary troops. fatted bullocks, ready to be slaughtered. "We do not look for chronological sequence in such a poem, so that this picture of the flight and destruction of the mercenaries is not necessarily later in time than their overthrow and contemplated desertion in verse 15. The prophet is depicting a scene of bewildered confusion; the disasters that fell thick upon Egypt crowd into his vision without order or even coherence."—Exp. Bib.

The Oaths of Jehovah (vs. 18).—I. The Divine oaths recorded in Scripture exhibit and declare the glory of the Divine character. 1. As they show forth the infinite condescension of God; 2. As they furnish a sublime and awful manifestation of the sincere earnestness of the Divine mind in what He declares unto us in His Word, with such an attestation; 3. As they exhibit the benevolent solicitude of God for the welfare of the unworthy creatures whom He thus addresses; 4. As they intimate the unchangeableness of the Divine mind in relation to those arrangements in His moral and natural government which were in that manner established and confirmed. II. The Divine oaths also serve to illustrate the moral character of man, and to exercise a powerful influence on his moral and spiritual influence. 1. As they strongly corroborate the fact that the human heart is corrupt and alienated from God; 2. As they are fearful warnings of the perilous condition of the impenitent and unbelieving soul; 3. As they afford the strongest encouragement to believers in their onward progress to heaven.—W. Rees.

22—26. (22) like a serpent, R. V. marg. "Her sound is like that of a serpent as it goeth." Egypt (like Jerusalem, in Isa. xxix. 4) is imagined as a maiden (comp. vs. 19) seated on the ground, and faintly sighing; and her feeble voice is likened to the rustling sound of a serpent in motion. (23) though . . searched, i. e. though it seems to be impenetrable. A fig. for the vast multitudes of the Egyptian army. grasshoppers, R. V. "locusts." (24) daughter, as vs. 19. (25) multitude, R. V., "Amon of No," i. e. the chief god worshiped in No (called also No Amon, margin of Nah. iii. 8). The name Amon signified invisible, and hence he was connected with the most spiritual form of Egyptian worship. The Greeks and Romans compared him to Zeus and Jupiter, and hence his name, familiar to us, of Jupiter Ammon.^c Camb. Bib. No, the sacred city of Thebes. (26) afterward, after a time of Divine judgments, lasting some forty years.^d

No-Amon (vs. 25).—No, or No-Amon, or Amon of No (marginal reading), was the metropolis of Upper Egypt, by the Greek geographers termed Thebes, a city eminently distinguished for the worship of Jupiter, who by the Egyptians was called Amon or Ammon; hence the city received the appellation of Diospolis, or the City of Jupiter. The grandeur of ancient Thebes must now be traced in the four small towns or hamlets of Luxor, Karnak, Medinet-Abou, and Gournou. Karnak is regarded by the most accurate modern travelers as the principal site of Diospolis; and the Egyptians seem to have called forth all the resources of wealth, and all the efforts of art, in order to render it worthy of their supreme divinity.—Horne.

27, 28. These vss. have probably been introduced here by the prophet as a quotation from the earlier passage (see ch. xxx. 10, 11), which is one prophetic of the return from exile, in order to shew that if Egypt's troubles were to be but temporary, much more should those of Judah and even of Israel also pass away.—Camb. B. (27) fear not thou, etc., Is. xli. 13, xliii. 5, xlv. 2; Je. xxx. 10. (28) a full end, ch. xxx. 11° in measure. R. V. "with judgment."

God's Promise Unchangeable.—Verse 28 is so clearly connected with vs. 27, that both must be read together. They resemble chap. xxx. 10, 11, and relate probably to the same subject. Towards the fall of the Jewish monarchy, Judæa became the battle-ground between the Egyptians, on one side, and the Babylonians on the other. It was subject now to one of these powers, now to the other, as they respectively conquered. At length Babylon became finally master of the territory from the river of Egypt to the Euphrates, 2 Kings xxiv. 7. In the days of Jehoiakim Jerusalem was held under vassalage to Nebuchadnezzar, who took Daniel and his companions, with probably others of its principal inhabitants, to Babylon. Subsequently Jerusalem was more thoroughly subdued by Nebuchadnezzar, and large numbers of its people were carried away to his distant empire. The Prophet, in the passage to be elucidated, comforts the Jews under the humiliation and sufferings thus inflicted on them. Their land should not be made "altogether desolate," Jer. xxx. 11. The nations which oppressed and enslaved Judæa should be destroyed, but God would not make a full end of her. She should be corrected with moderation, and her sons should afterwards be restored to their own land. This prediction was fulfilled when the Jews returned from Babylon under favor of Cyrus, the conqueror of all the East.

CHAPTER THE FORTY-SEVENTH.

This chapter concerns the Philistines and indirectly also Tyre and Sidon. (vs. 4.) 1—4. (1) against, or, concerning. before . . Gaza, 'probably the allusion is to a capture of Gaza by the Egyptians not otherwise known to us, either on their retreat from Carchemish or in connection with movement noted in xxxvii. 5.'—Driver. (2) waters rise, Is. viii. 7. overflowing flood, or torrent, Is. xxx. 28. (3) noise . . hoofs, Nah. iii. 2. fathers . . children, each would care only to save himself; natural affections would be destroyed. feebleness of hands, by being made helpless with extreme fear. (4) remnant . . Caphtor, "the few of the Philistine nation that still survive after the wars with Egypt and Assyria, which they had long undergone. Caphtor is spoken of also in Deut. ii. 23; Amos ix. 7, as the origin of the Philistines. Its position is somewhat doubtful. Some identify it with Crete, but more probably it was the Delta of Egypt. 'The country' is literally the isle, or the sea-coast."—Camb. Bib.

Ruins at Gaza.—The ruins of white marble sometimes found at Gaza prove that it was formerly the abode of luxury and opulence. It has shared in the general destruction; and, notwithstanding its proud • "Nations have their periods; the Jewish nation itself has come to an end as a nation; but the Gospel Church, God's spiritual Israel, still continues, and will to the end of time; in that this promise is to have its full accomplishment, that, though God correct it, He will never make a full end of it."—Mat. Henry.

"They were, in truth, great rascals, and belonged to that class of people who find things before they are lost."—Grimm.

a 2 Chr. xxxv. 20, xxxvi. 8.

b "The Philistines, being the neighbors of the Phœnicians, would naturally make a common cause with them in case of foreign invasion."—Henderson.

"There can be no treaty of peace till we lay down these weapons of rebellion with which we fight against heaven; nor can we expect to have our distempers cured, if our daily food be poison."—Scougal.

^c Eze. xiv. 17, xxi. 3.

"The Word of the Lord is not bound. How men have sought to sheathe it in the scabbard, to hide and hold it there, so that they may go on unchecked in their own ways! But it has leapt forth in spite of them; and, in spite of pagan, Roman, and other persecutions, has asserted its supreme might."

"God smites, and not imperfectly; nor does He need to smite twice."

^a "These districts were possessed by the Emim, a gigantic people, but the Moabites were successful in expelling them, and occupied at first a considerable region, the uplands east of the Dead Sea, and the Jordan as far as the mountains of Gilead, together with the lowlands between their own hills and the river, a region perhaps 50 miles in length, and 10 or 12 broad."—Ayre.

^b 2 Ki. xxiv. 2.

^c Nu. xxxii. 3, 38.

^d Is. xv. 1, xvi. 7, 11.

^e "An ancient and royal city, nearly midway between the rivers Jabbok and Arnon, the ruins of which cover the sides of an elevated hill, wh. commands an extensive view of the surrounding country."—Henderson.

title of the capital of Palestine, it is now no more than a defenceless village (baldness has come upon it), peopled by, at most, only two thousand inhabitants." It is forsaken and bereaved of its king." The sea-coast, by which it was formerly washed, is every day removing farther from the deserted ruins of Ashkelon. "It shall be a desolation. Ashkelon shall not be inhabited." Amid the various successive ruins, those of Edzoud (Ashdod), so powerful under the Philistines, are now remarkable for their scorpions. "The inhabitants shall be cut off from Ashdod."—Keith.

5—7. (5) Baldness, the sign of mourning, ch. xvi. 6. Ashkelon is cut off, etc. R. V., "Ashkelon is brought to naught, the remnant of their valley." valley, or low-lying plain, known as Shephelah. cut thyself, i. e. will you never cease grieving? (6) sword, etc., the instrument of Divine judgment. ^c how long, "as" Jeremiah contemplates this fresh array of victims of Chaldean cruelty, he is moved to protest against the weary monotony of ruin. (7) given it a charge, wh. it is bound to execute to the full. sea shore? the strip of shore-land held by the Philistines.

The Means of Terminating War.—(vss. 6, 7).—I. The evils of protracted war. 1. War is a tremendous evil; 2. Well might the Prophet desire its speedy termination. II. The reason of its continuance. 1. War is one of those judgments with which God punishes the sins of men; 2. Till He has effected His purposes by it, no human efforts can bring it to a close. III. Means of its termination. 1. The intention of God's chastisements is to bring us to repentance; 2. On the attainment of this end He will instantly remove His judgments from us. IV. Suggests some hints respecting those heavy judgments which God has denounced against sinners in another world, and respecting the best means of averting them from our souls.—C. Simeon.

An Appeal to God.—The prophet ceases to be the mouthpiece of God, and breaks out into the cry of human anguish. How often since, amid the barbarian inroads that overwhelmed the Roman Empire, amid the prolonged horrors of the Thirty Years' War, amid the carnage of the French Revolution, men have uttered a like appeal to an unanswering and relentless Providence! Indeed, not in war only, but even in peace, the tide of human misery and sin often seems to flow, century after century, with undiminished volume, and ever and again a vain "How long" is wrung from pallid and despairing lips. For the Divine purpose may not be hindered, and the sword of Jehovah must still strike home.—Exp. Bib.

CHAPTER THE FORTY-EIGHTH.

1—3. (1) Moab, Ge. xix. 37.^a "The prophets show a very keen interest in Moab. With the exception of the very short Book of Joel, all the prophets who deal in detail with foreign nations devote sections to Moab. The unusual length of such sections in Isaiah and Jeremiah is not the only resemblance between the utterances of these two prophets concerning Moab. There are many parallels of idea and expression, which probably indicate the influence of the elder prophet upon his successor; unless indeed both of them adapted some popular poem which was early current in Judah.—Exp. Bib.^b Nebo, a town 8 Rom. miles S. of Heshbon.^c Kiriathaim, prob. Et-teym, west of Medeba, and S. W. of Heshbon. Misgab, R. V. margin, "the high fort." Ref. is to the celebrated fortress, Kir-heres.^d (2) Heshbon,^e the capital city of the Moabites, Nu. xxi. 26. When the Chaldeans took this city, they there devised plans for subduing the whole country. Heshbon in Chaldee means "a device." cut down, R. V., "brought to silence." Madmen, the name of some unknown town used to make a play on words: "Thou shalt become still O House of stillness." (3) Horonaim, Is. xv. 5.

The Departed Praise of Moab.—Those whose tongues had been full of the praises of Moab needed not to be silent. The very overthrow of Moab would be a signal for praise and congratulation among the good. When the unhallowed praises of men are silenced by destruction of the things they praised, then angels begin to sing. And they who praise low, earthly things may have their thoughts introduced to heavenly ones, and then they will discover what man was made to praise. How the words that are exaggerated and altogether disproportioned when applied to the works of men, have in them an exquisite fitness when we speak of the works of God or of Christ, or of men properly engaged in Christian service!—Pul. Com.

Moab.—It is easy to understand why the Jewish Scriptures should have much to say about Moab, just as the sole surviving fragment of Moabite literature is chiefly occupied with Israel. These two Terahite tribes—the children of Jacob and the children of Lot—had dwelt side by side for centuries, like the Scotch and English borderers before the accession of James I. They had experienced many alternations of enmity and friendship, and had shared complex interests, common and conflicting, after the manner of neighbors who are also kinsmen. Each in its turn had oppressed the other; and Moab had been the tributary of the Israelite monarchy till the victorious arms of Mesha had achieved independence for his people and firmly established their dominion over the debatable frontier lands. There are traces, too, of more kindly relations: the House of David reckoned Ruth the Moabitess amongst its ancestors, and Jesse, like Elimelech and Naomi, had taken refuge in Moab. Accordingly this prophecy concerning Moab frequently strikes a note of sympathetic lamentation and almost becomes a dirge.—Exp. Bib.

4-6. (4) Moab, prob. meaning here the city Ar-Moab, Nu. xxi. 15. her little ones, "her children augmenting the distressing scene by their pitiable shrieks." (5) Luhith, R. V. "For by the ascent of Luhith with continual weeping shall they go up;" it was a hill town. comp. Is. xv. 5. going down, descending into the valley towards Horonaim, highlands and lowlands suffer alike. (6) like the heath, literally, "and (your souls) shall be like destitute ones in the wilderness." Imagine the case of one who has been robbed of everything, and left alone in the desert; not less miserable is that of the Moabite fugitives.

Flee for Your Life (vs. 6).—I. Whence you are to flee. II. Where you are to flee. III. How you are to flee. IV. When you are to flee. V. Why you are to flee.—Hugh Macmillan.

The Cities of Moab.—In this inventory, as it were, of the ruin of Moab our attention is arrested by the constant and detailed references to the cities. This feature is partly borrowed from Isaiah. Ezekiel too speaks of the Moabite cities which are the glory of the country; but Jeremiah's prophecy is a veritable Domesday Book of Moab. With his epic fondness for lists of sonorous names—after the manner of Homer's catalogue of the ships—he enumerates Nebo, Kiriathaim, Heshbon, and Horonaim, city after city, till he completes a tale of no fewer than twenty-six, and then summarizes the rest as "all the cities of the land of Moab, far and near." Eight of these cities are mentioned in Joshua as part of the inheritance of Reuben and Gad. Another, Bozrah, is usually spoken of as a city of Edom. The Moabite Stone explains the occurrence of Reubenite cities in these lists. It tells us how Mesha took Nebo, Jahaz, and Horonaim from Israel. Possibly in this period of conquest Bozrah became tributary to Moab, without ceasing to be an Edomite city. This extension of territory and multiplication of towns points to an era of power and prosperity, of which there are other indications in this chapter.—Exp. Bib.

7-10. (7) works, or "idols," the works of their hands.—Cheyne. Chemosh, the object of Moab's national worship." The oldest Heb. form of the word in this passage seems to be Chemish, and although it is not elsewhere found, yet probability is given to its existence by "War will never yield but to the principles of universal justice and love, and these have no sure root but in the religion of Jesus Christ."—Channing.

"So calm, the waters scarcely seem to stray, and yet they glide, like happiness, away."—Byron.

b "Solomon built a high place for Chemosh, near to Jerusalem (1 Ki. xi. 7, 33), which was defiled by Josiah (2 Ki. xxiii. 18). There are various conjectures concerning this false god; some identifying him with Mars, and some with Saturn."—Ayre.

"No greater grief! Is it then always grief

Remembering happier times in times of sorrow?

Does one day of delight ne'er bring relief

To the sick soul on a despaired morrow?

Past joys are a possession."

—Todhunter.

"According to Jewish tradition, Chemosh was worshipped under the symbol of a black star, wh. would seem to countenance the opinion that he corresponded to Saturn." — Henderson.

* Lit. filters, who tip a vessel to drain the wine off from the dregs.

"There is a spirit of resistance implanted by the Deity in the breast of man, proportioned to the size of the wrongs he is destined to endure." — C. J. Fox.

"It always seems to me to be a very insane thing for a man to glory in his animal force, for there can be no merit in it. In the strength of those brawny limbs of theirs and those powerful muscles, some vaunt themselves abunsuch compounds as Car-chemish. If the god is powerless to prevent his own captivity, what chance is there for the people?—Camb. Bib.^b priests, etc., ch. xlix. 3. (8) valley, or lowlands on the east bank of the Jordan. plain, comp. De. iv. 43, upland pasture districts. (9) Give wings, bec. only extreme haste can save any of them. (10) deceitfully, R. V. "negligently." Reference is to the agents sent by God to execute His judgments on Moab.

Lukewarmness and Zeal. vs. 10.—He serves God deceitfully—1. Who serves Him with the body without the soul; 2. He who serves Him with the soul without the body, when both may be conjoined in His service; 3. He who reserves one faculty for sin or one sin for themselves or one action to please himself and many for religion.—Bp. Taylor.

Moab.—Moab has often been a field of contest between the Arabs and Turks; and although the former have retained possession of it, both have mutually reduced it to desolation. The different tribes of Arabs who traverse it not only bear a permanent and habitual hostility to Christians and to Turks, but one tribe is often at variance and at war with another; and the regular cultivation of the soil, or the improvement of those natural advantages of which the country is so full, is a matter either never thought of, or that cannot be realized. Property is there the creature of power, and not of law; and possession forms no security when plunder is the preferable right. Hence the extensive plains, where they are not partially covered with wood, present a barren aspect, which is only relieved at intervals by a few clusters of wild fig trees, that show how the richest gifts of nature degenerate when unaided by the industry of man. And instead of the profusion which the plains must have exhibited in every quarter, nothing but "patches of the best soil in the territory are now cultivated by the Arabs;" and these only "whenever they have the prospect of being able to secure the harvest against the incursions of enemies." The Arab herds now roam at freedom over the valleys and the plains; and "the many vestiges of field enclosures" form not any obstruction; they wander undisturbed around the tents of their masters, over the face of the country; and while the valley is perished, and the plain destroyed, the cities also of Aroer are forsaken; they are for the flocks which lie down, and none make them afraid. The strong contrast between the ancient and the actual state of Moab is exemplified in the condition of the inhabitants as well as of the land; and the coincidence between the prediction and the fact is as striking in the one case as in the other.—Keith.

11—13. (11) settled. lees, as wine left, after fermentation. For similar figure comp. Zep. i. 12. emptied. vessel, by a refining process that removes the dregs. taste, his pride and luxury. (12) wanderers, R. V. "them that pour off, and they shall pour him off." (13) ashamed, bec. her idol can give her no security. of Beth-el, ashamed of the golden calf that was set up there by Jeroboam I. 1 Ki. xii. 29.

Much Ease, Much Peril.—"There is a reference here to wine, or to the process by which it is prepared and finished. It is first expressed from the grape, when it is a thick discolored fluid or juice. It is then fermented, passing through a process that separates the impurities and settles them as lees at the bottom. Standing thus upon its lees or dregs in some large tun or vat, it is not further improved. A gross and coarse flavor remains, and the scent of the feculent matter stays by and becomes fastened, as it were, in the body of the wine itself. To separate this and so to soften or refine the quality, it is now decanted or drawn off into separate jars or skins. After a while this is done again and then again; and so, being emptied from vessel to vessel, the last remains of the lees or sediment are finally cleared, the crude flavors are reduced, the scent itself is refined by ventilation, and the perfect character is attained." Now, the prophet affirms here that Moab had been at ease from his youth. It is difficult in the face of the somewhat checkered history of Moab to see the exact meaning of this. Probably he refers to the long lapse of time since their great and awful defeat told of in 2 Kings iii. 21. Some two centuries and a half had rolled away since that dread day, and in that interval Moab regained all, and more than all, of its former prosperity. For the land was beautiful and rich in the extreme. Its pastures were covered over with sheep and its valleys with corn. The very name "Moab" is thought to mean the land of desire, that is, the desirable land. Now, during these long periods, the description here given is applicable. They had enjoyed much ease, and the natural evils engendered by their cruel idolatrous system had become more fixed and settled; "their scent had not changed." The truth, therefore, which is here taught is that prolonged and abundant ease, however coveted by men, is full of peril to their higher nature, and tends continually to the deterioration of character and the hardening of the habit of evil. Troubles Revive Us.—Staying for awhile in the valley of Aosta, in Northern Italy, we found the air to be heavy, close, and humid with pestilential exhalations. We were oppressed and feverish—one's life did not seem worth a pin. We could not breathe freely, our lungs had a sense of having a hundred atmospheres piled upon them. Presently, at midday, there came a thunder-clap, attended by big drops of rain and a stiff gale of wind, which grew into a perfect tornado, tearing down the trees; then followed what the poet calls "sonorous hail," and then again the lightning flash, and the thunder peal on peal echoing along the Alps. But how delightful was the effect! How we all went out upon the verandah to look at the lightning and enjoy the music of the thunder! How cool the air and bracing! How delightful to walk out in the cool evening after the storm! Then you could breathe and feel a joy in life. Full often it is thus with the Christian after trouble. He has grown to be careless, lethargic, feverish, heavy, and ready to die, and just then he has been assailed by trouble, thundering threatenings have rolled from God's mouth, flashes of lightning have darted from Providence: the property vanished, the wife died, the children were buried, trouble followed trouble, and then the man has turned to God, and though his face was wet with tears of repentance, yet he has felt his spirit to be remarkably restored. When he goes up to the house of God, it is far more sweet to hear the Word than aforetime. He could not pray before, but now he leans his head on Jesus' bosom and pours out his soul in fellowship. Eternity now exerts its heavenly attractions, and the man is saved from himself.—Spurgeon.

14—17. (14) mighty, and quite able to stand in the war. (15) gone up, R. V. "and they are gone up into her cities," i. e. the enemy. chosen . . . men, the choice of them have only gone to battle to be slain. (16) near to come, Is. xiii. 22. About twenty-two years passed bet. this prophecy and the calamity. (17) strong staff, etc. for these expressions, as implying national glory and power over others, compare Ps. cx. 2; Is. xiv. 29; Ezek. xix. 11, 12, 14.

The Strong Staff and the Beautiful Rod (vs. 17).—I. The purposes of our Heavenly Father in great bereavements. 1. To teach us that we should not misplace our trust; 2. To convince us of our sins and to sever us from them; 3. To teach us His own independence of the instruments He employs; 4. To remind us of the sovereignty of God; 5. To exhibit His wise and watchful providence. II. The duties to which we are, amid such scenes, specially called. 1. We are to exercise submission; 2. We should profit by the example of those who have died in the Lord; 3. We should cease from man and put our trust in God.—W. R. Williams.

18—20. (18) Dibon, Is. xv. 2. Dibon "now Dhiban (the "Moabite stone" was found there) stands on two hills. Hence the expression 'come down' in the text. The language here is intensified in both clauses from the corresponding passage relating to the daughter of Babylon in Is. xlvii. i." sit in thirst, comp. "sit in the dust," Is. xlvii. i. "Sit in a dantly. Though 'the Lord taketh not pleasure in the legs of a man,' yet some count it a very wonderful thing that they can outrun or out-leap their fellows. O athlete, though thou be strong as Samson or swift as Asahel, what hast thou that thou hast not received? Hadst thou been born with a tendency to consumption, or with some other hereditary weakness, couldst thou have prevented it? And now that thou art strong, art thou to be praised for that, any more than a horse or a steam-engine?"—Spurgeon.

"A Roman custom was to bring in a bundle of rods tied hard with many knots to be laid before one who was about to be scourged. These knots must all be untied, slowly and in order. While this was going on, the judge watched the offender to see how he behaved. Sometimes his manner gained him mercy. The rods were so many warnings. Each told him silently of coming punishment. If he heard their voice, he might go free of it."

a "Jer. draws a picture of the conquered inhabitants, who formed a valuable part of the spoil of war, collected together outside the walls, waiting until the time comes for their captors to march them away to the slave-mart."—Spk. Com.

"Destruction o'ertakes as often those that fly as those that boldly meet it."
—Denham.

"If we will not use our opportunities for God's purpose, God will secure in due time, that we should not use them for our own." — Pul. Com.

b "Strength is often expressed by the horn, wherein the strength of bulls and such like creatures consists; and by the arm, wherein human strength doth chiefly discover itself." — Lowth.

Ps. lxxv. 5, 10; La. ii. 3.

"In God's own might We gird us for the coming fight,— And, strong in Him whose cause is ours In conflict with unholy powers, We grasp the weapons he has given— The Light, and Truth, and Love of Heaven."
—Whittier.

land where everything is parched." (19) Aroer, on the river Arnon, De. ii. 36. It lay in the way of the Moabites who fled to Arabia Deserta; and its inhabitants would learn from the fugitives the lot that surely awaited themselves. (20) it is, i. e. Dibon.

Dibon.—The ruins of Dhiban (Dibon) situated in the midst of a fine plain, are of considerable extent, but present nothing of interest. The neighboring hot wells, and the similarity of the name, identify the ruins of Myoun with Meon, or Beth Meon of Scripture. Of this ancient city, as well as of Araayr (Aroer), nothing is now remarkable but what is common to them with all the cities of Moab—their entire desolation. The extent of the ruins of Rabba (Rabbath Moab), formerly the residence of the kings of Moab, sufficiently proves its ancient importance, though no other object can be particularized among the ruins except the remains of a palace or temple, some of the walls of which are still standing; a gate belonging to another building; and an insulated altar. There are many remains of private buildings, but none entire. There being no springs on the spot, the town had two birkets, the largest of which is cut entirely out of the rocky ground, together with many cisterns. Mount Nebo was completely barren when Burckhardt passed over it, and the site of the ancient city had not been ascertained. Nebo is spoiled.—Keith. III.—Effects of Prosperity.—History constantly illustrates how when Christians were disturbed and prosperous the wine of truth settled on the lees and came to taste of the cask; and—to change the figure—how affliction and persecution proved most effectual tonics for a debilitated Church. Continental critics of modern England speak severely of the ill-effects which our prolonged freedom from invasion and civil war, and the unbroken continuity of our social life have had on our national character and manners. In their eyes England is a perfect Moab, concerning which they are ever ready to prophesy after the manner of Jeremiah. The Hebrew Chronicler blamed Josiah because he would not listen to the advice and criticism of Pharaoh Necho. There may be warnings which we should do well to heed, even in the acrimony of foreign journalists.—Exp. Bib.

21—25. (21) Holon, Jos. xv. 51. Jahazah, Nu. xxi. 23; Is. xv. 4. Mephaath, Jos. xiii. 18, xxi. 37. (22) Bethdiblathaim, comp. Nu. xxxiii. 46, and Eze. vi. 14. (23) Bethgamul, the city of camels. The site is unknown. Beth-meon, comp. Jos. xiii. 17. Now Miun, a mere ruin. (24) Kerioth, Jos. xv. 25; Am. ii. 2. Bozrah, the capital of the Edomites at one time. Ge. xxxvi. 33; Is. lxiii. 1. (25) horn, the Eastern emblem of strength and sovereignty.^b

Cities of Moab.—And the cities of Moab have all disappeared. Their place, together with the adjoining part of Idumæa, is characterized in the map of Volney's Travels, by the ruins of towns. His information respecting these ruins was derived from some of the wandering Arabs; and its accuracy has been fully corroborated by the testimony of different European travelers of high respectability and undoubted veracity, who have since visited this devastated region. The whole country abounds with ruins. And Burckhardt, who encountered many difficulties in so desolate and dangerous a land, thus records the brief history of a few of them: "The ruins of Eleale, Heshbon, Meon, Medaba, Dibon, Aroer, still subsist to illustrate the history of the Beni Israel." And it might with equal truth have been added, that they still subsist to confirm the inspiration of the Jewish Scripture, or to prove that the seers of Israel were the prophets of God, for the desolation of each of these very cities was the theme of a prediction. Everything worthy of observation respecting them has been detailed, not only in Burckhardt's Travels in Syria, but also by Seetzen, and, more recently, by Captains Irby and Mangles, who, along with Mr. Banks and Mr. Legh, visited this deserted district. The predicted judgment has fallen with such truth upon these cities, and upon all the cities of the land of Moab far and near, and they are so utterly broken down, that even the prying curiosity of such indefatigable travelers could discover among a multiplicity of ruins only a few remains so entire as to be worthy of particular notice. The subjoined description is drawn from their united testimony:—Among the ruins of El Aal (Eleale) are a number of large cisterns, fragments of buildings, and foundations of houses. At Heshban (Heshbon) are the ruins of a large ancient town, together with the remains of a temple, and some edifices. A few broken shafts of columns are still standing; and there are a number of deep wells cut in the rock. The ruins of Medaba are about two miles in circumference. There are many remains of the walls of private houses constructed with blocks of silex, but not a single edifice is standing. The chief object of interest is an immense tank or cistern of hewn stones, "which, as there is no stream at Medaba," Burckhardt remarks, "might still be of use to the Bedouins, were the surrounding ground cleared of the rubbish to allow the water to flow into it; but such an undertaking is far beyond the views of the wandering Arabs." There is also the foundation of a temple built with large stones, and apparently of great antiquity, with two columns near it.—Keith.

26—30. (26) Make. drunken, God's judgments are represented as a cup of intoxication: ch. xxv. 15. And what is Moab's crime? At an earlier point the prophet said that it was the callousness produced by long prosperity (vs. 11); but here another sin is mentioned—Moab's haughty contempt of Jehovah. For this it deserves that its contempt should be thrown back upon itself, by its being made, like a drunken man, the scorn of all.—Ewald. wallow, "Fall down as drunkards do." (27) Israel. thee, Moab had made game of the calamities of the Jews. among thieves, what giveth thee the right to show such scorn and insolent triumph towards Israel, as if he were one who had been arrested in the very act of robbery (comp. ch. ii. 26)? for since, etc. R. V. "for as often as thou speaketh of him thou waggest the head." (28) like the dove, wh. often makes its nest in the sides and roofs of caverns: Is. xvi. 1, 2. (29) pride of Moab, Is. xvi. 6. (30) but it shall not, etc., R. V., "that it is naught; his boastings have wrought nothing."

Pyrrhus and the Philosopher.—When Pyrrhus, king of Epirus, was making great preparations for his intended expedition into Italy, Cineas, the philosopher, took a favorable opportunity of addressing him thus: "The Romans, sir, are reported to be a warlike and victorious people; but if God permit us to overcome them, what use shall we make of the victory?" "Thou askest," said Pyrrhus, "a thing that is self-evident. The Romans once conquered, no city will resist us; we shall then be masters of all Italy." Cineas added, "And having subdued Italy, what shall we do next?" Pyrrhus, not yet aware of his intentions, replied, "Sicily next stretches out her arms to receive us." "That is very probable," said Cineas, "but will the possession of Sicily put an end to the war?" "God grant us success in that," answered Pyrrhus, "and we shall make these only the forerunners of greater things, for then Lybia and Carthage will soon be ours: and these things being completed, none of our enemies can offer any farther resistance." "Very true," added Cineas, "for then we may easily regain Macedon, and make an absolute conquest of Greece; and, when all these are in our possession, what shall we do then?" Pyrrhus, smiling, answered, "Why then, my dear friend, we will live at our ease, drink all day long, and amuse ourselves with cheerful conversation." "Well sir," said Cineas, "and why may we not do all this now, and without the labor and hazard of an enterprise so laborious and uncertain?" Pyrrhus, however, unwilling to take the advice of the philosopher, ardently engaged in these ambitious pursuits, and at last perished in them.—Cheever.

31—34. (31) howl for Moab, Is. xv. 5. all Moab, comp. "whole Palestina," Is. xiv. 31. mine heart, etc. R. V., "for the men of Kir-heres shall they mourn: Kir-heres was the chief stronghold of Moab. Is. xvi. 7. 11. (32) vine of Sibmah, Is. xvi. 8. thy plants, R. V. "thy branches." over "His heart is black with pride.

He for himself hell's gate has opened wide,
For, weighed in God the All-Sufficient's scale,
Not claims nor righteousness or men avail:
But these are costly in His sight indeed,— Repentance, contrite shame, and sense of need."
—Oriental, tr. by Trench.

a "The ministers of the Divine justice are to make Moab drink of the wine-cup of God's fury, till terror deprives him of his senses. His sin had been that of magnifying himself against Jehovah by depriving the Reubenites of the country which God had taken from the Amoitites to give them." — Spk. Com.

b "Shall be so afflicted by God's wrath as to disgorge all his past pride, riches, and vainglory, and fall in his shameful abasement." — Fausset.

"No creature but is furnished with means of security and defence. The weakest creatures have often the strongest shelters. In religion the extremes of being meet. Human weakness and Divine strength; human folly and Divine wisdom; human insufficiency, Divine all-sufficiency." — Hom. Com.

"Crosses are of no use to us but inasmuch as we yield ourselves up to them, and forget ourselves." — Fencelon.

^a "Trans. 'Eglah Shelishiah';" fr. Zoar to Horonaim, even to the third Eglah; several places seem to have borne the name of Eglah, and this is specified as the 'third Eglah.'"—Light-foot.

"There are no crown wearers in heaven who were not cross-bearers here below." — Spurgeon.

"What we call the potency of life, its germ, may be conferred by a divine act; but if the life is to be more than a potency, more than a germ, we must live it." — R. W. Dale.

^b Is. xvi. 12.

"We find Arabs, La Roque tells us, 'who have their arms scarred by the gashes of a knife, which they sometimes give themselves, to mark out to their mistresses what their rigor and the violence of love made them suffer.' From this extract we learn what particular part of the body received these cuttings. The Scripture frequently speaks of them in a more general manner." — Harmer.

^a "Nebuchadnezzar's rise seemed to be like that of the mighty eagle, spreading out his wings, feathered with the innumerable colors of the variegated masses which composed the Chaldean host, sweeping over different countries, and striking fear in his flight." — Stanley.

^b De. xxviii. 49; Je. xlix. 22; Eze. xvii. 3.

the sea, i. e. the Dead Sea. sea of Jazer, the word "sea" was probably repeated by a scribe's error.—Cheyne. (33) joy, etc., Is. xvi. 10. (34) Elealeh, Is. xvi. 9. Zoar, Is. xv. 5. as an heifer, R. V. to Eglath.—Shelishiyah" or trans. "even to the third Eglah." ^a Nimrim, Is. xv. 6. at the S. E. end of the Dead Sea. The sense of vs. 34 is that the cry uttered from Heshbon is heard at Elealeh (about two miles distant) and is even carried on to Jahaz; a considerable distance southwest. Again, the wail uttered from Zoar is borne to Horonaim, both in the south of the land. Thus the lamentation shall be caught by one from another and be universal.—Camb. B.

The Cities of Moab.—When the towns of Moab existed in their prime, and were at ease, when arrogance, and haughtiness, and pride prevailed among them, the desolation and total desertion and abandonment of them all must have utterly surpassed all human conception. And that such numerous cities, which substituted for many ages, which were diversified in their sites, some of them being built on eminences, and naturally strong; others on plains, and surrounded by the richest soil; some situated in valleys by the side of a plentiful stream; and others where art supplied the deficiencies of nature, and where immense cisterns were excavated out of the rock, and which exhibit in their ruins many monuments of ancient prosperity, and many remains easily convertible into present utility, should have all fled away, all met the same indiscriminate fate, and be all desolate, without any to dwell therein, notwithstanding all these ancient assurances of their permanent durability, and their existing facilities and inducements for being the habitations of men, is a matter of just wonder in the present day, and had any other people been the possessors of Moab, the fact would either have been totally impossible or unaccountable. Trying as this test of the truth of prophecy is, that is the word of God, and not of erring man, which can so well and so triumphantly abide it. They shall cry of Moab, How is it broken down.—Keith.

35—39. (35) in the high places, this would be the last relic of the national religion. When the temples were destroyed, worship would be kept up on the "high places."^b (36) like pipes, or like the flutes, used at funerals. Comp. Is. xvi. 11. (37) bald, clipped the usual signs of mourning. Is. xv. 2 cuttings, ch. xvi. 6, xli. 5, xlvii. 5. (38) generally, better, "nothing but lamentation everywhere." (39) They shall howl. down, R. V., "How is it broken down! how do they howl!" turned the back, to flee away.

Cuttings for the Dead (vs. 37).—The relations of the deceased often testify their sorrow in a more serious and affecting manner, by cutting and slashing their naked arms with daggers. To this absurd and barbarous custom the Prophet thus alludes: "For every head shall be bald, and every beard clipped; upon all hands shall be cuttings, and upon the loins sackcloth." And again, "Both the great and the small shall die in the land; they shall not be buried, neither shall men lament for them, nor cut themselves." It seems to have been very common in Egypt, and among the people of Israel, before the age of Moses, else he had not forbidden it by an express law: "Ye are the children of the Lord your God; ye shall not cut yourselves, nor make any baldness between your eyes for the dead." Mr. Harmer refers to this custom, the "wounds in the hands" of the Prophet, which he had given himself, in token of affection to a person.—Paxton.

40—43. (40) he, i. e. Nebuchadnezzar.^a as an eagle, in the power and majesty and resistlessness of its flight toward its prey.^b (41) surprised, taken by storm. (42) destroyed, people, its national existence shall be ended. (43) Fear, etc., Is. xxiv. 17, 18.

Cities of Moab.—While the ruins of all these cities still retain their ancient names, and are the most conspicuous amid the wide scene of general desolation, and while each of them was in like manner particularized in the visions of the Prophet, they yet formed but a small number of the cities of Moab: and the rest are also, in similar verification of the prophecies, desolate without any to dwell therein. None of the ancient cities of Moab now exist as tenanted by men. Kerek, which neither bears any resemblance in name to any of the cities of Moab which are mentioned as existing in the time of the Israelites, nor possesses any monuments which denote a very remote antiquity, is the only nominal town in the whole country, and in the words of Seetzen, who visited it, "in its present ruined state it can only be called a hamlet;" "and the houses have only one floor." But the most populous and fertile province in Europe (especially any situated in the interior of a country like Moab) is not covered so thickly with towns as Moab is plentiful in ruins, deserted and desolate though now it be. Burckhardt enumerates about fifty ruined sites within its boundaries, many of them extensive. In general they are a broken down and undistinguishable mass of ruins; and many of them have not been closely inspected. But, in some instances, there are the remains of temples, sepulchral monuments, the ruins of edifices constructed of very large stones, in one of which buildings "some of the stones are twenty feet in length, and so broad that one constitutes the thickness of the wall;" traces of hanging gardens; entire columns lying on the ground, three feet in diameter, and fragments of smaller columns; and many cisterns cut out of the rock.—Keith. Self-sufficiency.—In mid Atlantic, the other day, the "Etruria," in which I was sailing, suddenly stopped. Something had gone wrong with the engines. There were five hundred able-bodied men on board the ship. Do you think if we had gathered together and pushed against the mast we could have pushed it on? When one attempts to sanctify himself by effort, he is trying to make his boat go by pushing against the mast. He is like a drowning man trying to lift himself out of the water by pulling at the hair of his own head. Christ held up this method almost to ridicule when he said: "Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit to his stature?" The one redeeming feature of the self-sufficient method is this—that those who try it find out almost at once that it will not gain the goal.—Drummond.

44-47. (44) fleeth . . pit, a forcible way of declaring that none shall escape. (45) R. V., "they that fled stand without strength under the shadow of Heshbon: for a fire is gone forth," etc., "the fugitives of Moab shall take refuge under the walls of the neighboring city of the Ammonites, but as they stand there in hopes of aid, there bursts forth from the city on which their only hopes rest a flame kindled by the Chaldean foe." a fire, etc., comp. Nu. xxi. 28, 29. crown, etc., Nu. xxiv. 17. (46) Chemosh, vs. 7. (47) bring again, "we gather that even this rough handling was disciplinary; at any rate, the former lack of such vicissitudes had been to the serious detriment of Moab. It is strange that Jeremiah did not apply this principle to Judah. For, indeed, the religion of Israel and of mankind owes an incalculable debt to the captivity of Judah, a debt which later writers are not slow to recognize."—Exp. Bib. Comp. ch. xli. 26, xlix. 6, 39.

God's Judgment upon the Wicked.—Sometimes visitation is sudden, quick, and terrible, as in the case of Ananias and Sapphira. But oftener men go on sinning with no bad consequences to themselves, so far as appearance goes. They do not lose health; they do not seem to lose reputation; there are no checks in their success; and perhaps they even furnish an example whereby worldly wisdom hangs its maxim that it is not well to be too particular. The frequent prosperity of the wicked is indeed a fact not at all concealed or qualified in the Scriptures. A man of the world takes his own worldly way to keep peril at a distance, and he seems to fall into no pit, no snare. Let all this be allowed. Nothing is gained by trying to make out that the wicked have no advantages. It was an old-world legend that some men sold themselves to the devil, and that his protection secured to them their wonderful immunities and prosperity. All that is gained is in the way of postponement. Wicked

"There is no passion which steals into the heart more imperceptibly and covers itself under more disguises than pride."—Addison.

"In pride, in reasoning pride, our error lies;

All quit their sphere, and rush into the skies.

Pride still is aiming at the blest abodes,

Men would be angels, angels would be gods."—Pope.

"The meaning is that the fire of war consumes both far and near, both hair and beard, i. e. everything that the fire can singe or destroy."—Spk. Com.

"The devastation was to reach the most elevated, and the most remote, parts of the country."—Henderson.

"Open rebukes are for magistrates and courts of justice. Private rebukes are for friends; where all the witnesses of the offender's blushes are blind, and deaf and dumb."—Feltham.

men travel in a narrowing path, and at last are shut up to face the judgments of God. The moment of what seems to them complete success is quickly followed by the moment of complete ruin.—Pul. Com.

CHAPTER THE FORTY-NINTH.

^a Ge. xix. 37, 38.

"This prophecy seems to have been occasioned by their encroachments on the territory of Israel, E. of the Jordan, after the deportation of the ten tribes. The Ammonites were subdued by Nebuchadnezzar five years after the fall of Jerusalem."—Wordsworth.

^b 1 Ki. xi. 5, 33; ² Ki. xxiii. 13.

^c "The abundance of thy valley."—Ewald.

"In the riches of thy fat and plentiful valleys, which overflow with abundance of all things."—Lowth.

"If thou art rich, thou art poor; For like the ass whose back with ingots bows, Thou bear'st thy heavy riches but a journey And Death unloads thee."—Shakespeare.

"Its inhabitants were among those children of the East, famed for wisdom, because of their skill in proverbs and dark sayings."—Spk. Com.

"Cressus, whose name is a synonym for great wealth, was himself taken captive, stripped of all his treasures, and in old age was supported by the charity of Cyrus."

This chapter contains prophecies on the Ammonites (1—6); on Edom (7—22); on Damascus (23—27); on Kedar (28—33); and on Elam (34—39). "All of these except the last belong to the 4th year of Jehoiakim, and reflect the profound impression which Nebuchadnezzar's victory at Carchemish made on the prophet."—Driver. 1—3. (1) Ammonites, the people settled north of the Moabites. no heir, "in seizing Gilead the Ammonites acted as if the country had no rightful owner." or heir. their king, R. V., Malcam possess God," i. e. Moloch, the fire God, in whose worship children were destroyed in the fire." (2) Rabbah, Am. i. 14; comp. 2 Sa. xii. 26—30. daughters, smaller towns and villages. be heir, R. V., "possess them that did possess him." This was partly fulfilled in the time of the Maccabees. (3) Ai, an unknown town, prob. near Heshbon. hedges, or vineyard walls. Running anywhere for shelter. their king, R. V., "Malcam."

Places of Burial (vs. 3).—The places of burial in the East are without their cities, as well as their gardens, and consequently their going to them must often be by their garden walls, not hedges. The ancient warriors of distinction who were slain in battle were carried to the sepulchres of their fathers; and the people often went to weep over the graves of those whom they would honor. These observations put together sufficiently account for this passage.—Harmer.

4—6. (4) gloriest . . valleys, the country was cut into valleys by the streams flowing towards the Jordan. flowing, i. e. "abounding." (5) right forth, without even making effort at resistance. gather up, rally the fugitives. (6) bring again, ch. xlviii. 47.

Zeal for God.—Do not the "work of God negligently" and idly; let not thy heart be upon the world, when thy hand is lift up in prayer; and be sure to prefer an action of religion in its place and proper season before all worldly pleasure, letting secular things, that may be dispensed with in themselves, in these circumstances wait upon the other; not like the patriarch who ran from the altar in St. Sophia to his stable in all his pontificals, and in the midst of his office, to see a colt newly fallen from his beloved and much-valued mare Phorbante. More prudent and severe was that of Sir Thomas More, who being sent for by the king when he was at his prayers in public, returned answer, he would attend him when he had first performed his service to the King of kings. And it did honor to Rusticus, that when letters from Cæsar were given to him, he refused to open them till the philosopher had done his lecture. In honoring God and doing His work put forth all thy strength; for of that time only thou mayest be most confident that it is gained, which is prudently and zealously spent in God's service.—Jeremy Taylor.

7—11. (7) Much of vss. 7—16 is almost verbally the same as Obad. 1—8. Edom, "brought forward as an object of judgment as a type of those nations of heathendom whose origin and the course of whose history had placed them nearest to the kingdom of God, but who had only opposed that kingdom with the more deadly hatred."—Oehler, Comp. Is. xxxiv. 5; Am. i. 11; Obad. 3. Edom lay along the south of Judah, from the district of Moab to the Mediterranean. wisdom . . Teman, comp. Obad. 8. Noted for its wisdom (Eliphaz the Temanite, Job. ii. 11), "Has even Teman no advice or judgment?" (8) dwell deep, turn your caravans into the very depths of the desert, for there is danger in the well-known tracts. Dedan, this people was noted for conducting caravans. (9) grape gatherers, Obad. 5. (10) secret places, even the hiding-places of Mt. Seir. his seed,

i. e. the seed of Esau. (11) Leave, etc., the usual sign of mercy mingling with judgment.

Martin Luther's Will.—In the last will and testament of this eminent reformer, occurs the following remarkable passage:—"Lord God, I thank Thee that Thou hast been pleased to make me a poor and indigent man upon earth. I have neither house, nor land, nor money, to leave behind me. Thou hast given me wife and children, whom I now restore to Thee. Lord, nourish, teach, and preserve them, as Thou hast me." Comfort of religion.—We must always regard it as a grand peculiarity of the religion that comes from God that it brings relief and comfort under trials for which the world has no balm, and throws light upon dispensations which would be otherwise clouded with a hopeless and impenetrable gloom. The religion of Jesus comes as a comforter when other oracles are silent; comes as a star of promise and of hope when every other lamp is extinguished; comes to breathe upon our ear its still small voice of mercy, when we hear nothing besides but the earthquake, and the fire, and the great and strong wind; and clothes with a mantle of celestial light the darkest appearances of this lower world.—Hom. Com. Compassion.—The history of the Church tells out wonderful instances of compassion to parents and children. Look at the first mission of an angel to a world; was it not to deserted and widowed Hagar before the birth of her first child? And was not the second visit of an angel to Hagar and Ishmael when the Lord heard the voice of the lad? Did not the angel descend to wrestle with Jacob when involved in trouble for his family, lest Esau come and smite the mother with the children? Was it not to the widow of Zarephath Elisha was sent? Was not Elijah's greatest miracle employed on behalf of that pious mother mourning for her only son? Was not the Lord with Joseph when separated from his father? with Moses when left to the bulrushes? Look at our Lord's miracles.—Hom. Com.

12—16. (12) they . . cup, R. V., "they to whom it pertained was to drink" (see note on xiii. 12), the Jews, who might be expected to escape judgments, if any nation did. (13) Bozrah, ch. xlviii. 24. (14) rumour, etc., Obad. 1. (15) heathen, R. V., "nations." comp. Obad. 2. (16) dwellest . . rock, the cities of Edom were hewn in the sides of seemingly inaccessible rocks, and in this the people felt the utmost confidence and security.^a nest . . eagle, Obad. 4.

Rock Dwellings.—In this beautiful passage the Prophet strictly adheres to the truth of history. Esau subdued the original inhabitants of Mount Hor, and seized on its savage and romantic precipices. His descendants covered the sides of their mountains "with an endless variety of excavated tombs and private dwellings, worked out in all the symmetry and regularity of art, with colonnades and pediments, and ranges of corridors, adhering to the perpendicular surface." On the inaccessible cliffs, which, in some places, rise to the height of seven hundred feet, and the barren and craggy precipices which enclose the ruins of Petra, the capital of the Nabatai, a once powerful but now forgotten people, the eagle builds his nest, and screams for the safety of his young, when the unwelcome traveler approaches his lonely habitation.—Paxton.

17—22. (17) hiss, in mockery at the utter abasement of its pride. plagues, or distresses. (18) overthrow, etc., Ge. xix. 25. neighbour cities, such as Admah and Zeboim.^b (19) he, i. e. Nebuchadnezzar. swelling, or flood time.^c But many with R. V. translate "pride of Jordan," i. e. the thickets on its banks. make him run away, a difficult clause. Means prob., make the Edomites flee from the habitation of the strong. who is a chosen man, etc., Camb. Bib. "I will appoint him who is (my) chosen." appoint me the time, "rightly explained in the Eng. margin, convent (i. e. convene) me in judgment, in other words, by naming, as the plaintiff in a suit had a right to do, the time of trial, claim the power of protesting against God's decision." (20) least . . flock, "the feeblest of the Israelites shall suffice for the rooting out of Edom." draw, or drag them about, as a lion would a sheep. (21) is moved, or quakes. (22) as the eagle, ch. xlviii. 40.

"To steel his melting heart,
To act the martyr's sternest part;
To watch with firm, unshrinking eye
His darling visions as they die.
Too happy if, that dreadful day,
His life be given him for a prey."
—Keble's "Christian Year."

^a "The Idumeans proudly imagined that the terror with which the celebrity of their power had inspired those by whom they were surrounded, would secure them against any hostile attack."
—Henderson.

"Ten thousand of the greatest faults in our neighbors are of less consequence to us than one of the smallest in ourselves."
—Whately.

^b "From A. D. 536 onwards, Petra suddenly vanishes from the pages of history. It was unknown to the Arabs, was confounded by the Crusaders with an entirely different place, and only in the present century was its real site discovered by Burckhardt, and full details given of its splendid but desolate remains by Laborde."
—Spk. Com.

^c "When the Jordan swells in the time of harvests, the lions that lie in the thickets on the river-side, are raised out of their coverts, and infest the country."
—Lowth.

"'Tis to be happy that we run after pleasures. But we, alas! mistake our happiness, and foolishly seek it where it is not to be found. As silly children think to catch the sun, when they see it setting at so near a distance. They travel on, and tire themselves in vain; for the thing they seek is in another world."—Hickes.

* Comp. Is. lviii. 20.

† "This ancient city was celebrated for its felicitous position, the exquisite beauty of its environs, the magnitude of its temple, and the wealth of its inhabitants."—Henderson.

‡ 2 Ki. xiii. 3.

"Far sadder sight than eye can know,
Than proud bark lost, or seaman's woe,
Or battle-fire, or tempest cloud,
Or prey bird's shriek, or ocean's shroud,
The shipwreck of a soul."

"There is no greater sign of a general decay of virtue in a nation, than a want of zeal in its inhabitants for the good of their country."—Addison.

Petra.—Petra, the ancient capital of Idumæa, hitherto wrapped up in the deep recesses of solitude, remained until lately unknown. Here was the cradle of commerce seventeen centuries ago; the emporium of northern Arabia, and the entrepôt between Palestine, and Syria, and Egypt. It was the birthplace of Balaam, and renowned for oracles and auguries; in it, as a stronghold, were deposited the treasures of the sultans of Egypt; and yet the name of Petra seemed to have become all but extinct with the declension of the Roman power in the East. Here is a town embosomed amid a fortress of mountains; utter desolation reigns over wonderful ruins, noble in decay, and sublime in their fall. Mount Hor, with Aaron's tomb, surmounts the city of desolations, the metropolis of moving sands, and a blighted desert. The entrance is from the east, through a deep gorge, or ravine, called El syk, and the river that supplied Edom flowed through this valley; the wall of rock is from four hundred to seven hundred feet high. The sides of this romantic chasm are clothed with tamarisk, wild fig, oleander, and the caper plant, the latter hanging in luxuriant festoons from cracks and crevices; the solitude is only disturbed by the screaming of eagles, hawks, owls, and ravens, which congregate here in vast multitudes. The ruins burst on the eye of the astonished and bewildered traveler in all their awful magnificence. This amphitheatre of mountains is tinged with extraordinary hues, and is at once romantic and picturesque. Sepulchres and tombs; sculptures, in all the majesty of art, decorate these "everlasting hills;" more than two hundred and fifty sepulchres are chiselled in the rock. And this is Edom, the metropolis of Idumæa! The stupendous ruins, the magnificent tombs, the amphitheatre, the columns, and capitals, obelisks, friezes—all attest the magnificence which once reigned in this mountain metropolis; a city of desolation, which even the bitterness scarce disturbs, "lines of confusion, and stones of emptiness." The territory of the descendants of Esau is swept by "the besom of destruction," and remains a miracle of evidence, as palpable as any monument in the history of time. Its eighteen cities are moldered into dust, and the dwellers among the rocks that "made their nests among the stars," are brought low.—Murray.

23—27. (23) Damascus, in Syria, as it existed in the time of David, there were at least three cities of importance, Hamath, Zobah, and Damascus. The kingdom, of which the second of these was the capital, soon disappeared, and Damascus came to be held by a powerful dynasty of kings, who reduced the other cities under their own sway. It is not known, however, what was the political condition of Syria at the time that Jeremiah wrote, but it is clear that it was to be no more exempt than other countries, from the tread of the conqueror. The tidings of his approach reach one city after another, and fill them with dismay.—Camb. Bib. Hamath . . Arpad, 2 Ki. xvii. 24. fainthearted, R. V., "they are melted away." sorrow . . sea, i. e. as on the sea.^a (25) not left, not spared in the time of general calamity. The prophet laments the destruction of the beautiful city.^b of my joy, i. e. in which I delighted. (27) fire, Am. i. 4. Ben-hadad,^c the name, prob., of a race or dynasty of kings of Syria.

Damascus.—As the traveler from the west climbs up and up the steep passes of the great Lebanon range, and at length nears their eastern side, there, on the summit of a cliff, high up above the plain beneath, he looks down on the city of Damascus. "At the foot of the cliff on which the beholder stands, a river bursts forth from the mountain in which it has had birth. That river, as if in a moment, scatters over the plain, through a circle of thirty miles, the verdure which had hitherto been confined to its single channel. It is like the bursting of a shell, the eruption of a volcano—but an eruption, not of death, but of life. Far and wide extends in front the level plain, its horizon bare, its lines of surrounding hills bare, all bare, far away on the road to Palmyra and Bagdad. In the midst of this plain lies at your feet the vast island of deep verdure, walnuts and apricots hanging above, corn and grass below." The river is its life.

It is drawn out in water-courses and spread in all directions. For miles around it is a wilderness of gardens—gardens with roses among the tangled shrubberies, and with fruit on the branches overhead. Everywhere among the trees the murmur of unseen rivulets is heard. Even in the city, which is in the midst of the garden, the clear rushing of the current is a perpetual refreshment. Every dwelling has its fountain; and at night, when the sun has set behind Mount Lebanon, the lights of the city are seen flashing on the water. Travelers in all ages have paused to feast their eyes on the loveliness of the city as they first behold it from the cliffs of Lebanon. Abana and Pharpar still flash and gleam as they flow along amid her fragrant gardens and by her dark olive groves. Snow-capped Hermon and the rugged range of Lebanon still keep over her their wonted watch and ward. Hence she may will be taken as the symbol of all that is lovely and fair in outward life, all that is bright and beautiful in the moral nature of man.—Pul. Com.

28, 29. (28) Kedar, ch. ii. 10. Hazor, a district in Arabia Petrea, divided into districts, each presided over by a petty chief. shall smite, R. V. "smote." (29) curtains, or tent hangings. "All the possessions of the nomad are here mentioned, they are all to be seized by the Chaldeans." Fear, etc.,* a favorite expression of Jeremiah, from Ps. xxxi. 13. See Jer. vi. 25; xx. 3, 10; xli. 5.

"Fear on Every Side."—Jeremiah frequently exclaims, "Fear on every side!" We know not how many dangers surround us—political, social, domestic, personal; dangers to property, family, health, and life. The wonder is that they who have no refuge above themselves are so complacent. Such unwarrantable calmness must be traced to moral dullness rather than to true courage. For how truly terrible is the condition of the sinner! The laws of the universe are against him. If he flees from this life new horrors await him in the dread unknown land.—Pul. Com.

30—33. (30) get . . off, or hurry hastily away. dwelt deep, as vs. 8. (31) Arise, addressed to Nebuchadnezzar. "Rather, tranquil, dwelling at ease. Three grounds of encouragement are given to the invading army, (a) the people have felt hitherto secure against attack, (b) they have no walled towns, (c) they have no powerful neighbors, from whom to seek aid.—Camb. Bib. neither . . bars, comp. De. iii. 5; Eze. xxxviii. 11. (32) utmost corners, see ch. ix. 26. (33) dragons, R. V., "jackals;" (ch. x. 22).

Dragons.—Shaw represents the land of Edom, and the wilderness of which it now forms part, as abounding with a variety of lizards and vipers, which are very dangerous and troublesome. The Arabs, in general, avoid the ruins of the cities of Idumæa, "on account of the enormous scorpions with which they swarm." Its cities, thus deserted by man, and abandoned to their undisturbed and hereditary possession, Edom may justly be called the inheritance of dragons.—Keith.

34—39. This prophecy is "about 7 yrs. later than the preceding prophecies of the group."—Camb. Bib. (34) Elam, the province of Elymais, part of Susiana, W. of Persia proper. (35) bow of Elam, this country was famed for its archers.^b (36) the four winds, an emblem of the utter hopelessness of escape. The four winds (figuratively spoken of by Zechariah (vi. 5) as "presenting themselves" before God, to receive his commissions) shall combine their forces to scatter the doomed nation. (37) dismayed, etc., for confirmation of this prophecy, comp. Da. viii. 2, 27. (38) destroy . . king, i. e. Elam would lose its independent sovereignty. (39) bring again, comp. ch. xlviii. 47.* "The Elamites are chiefly mentioned as representatives of the distant and less civilized Gentile nations, and the fulfilment is granted whenever a similar people to the Elamites is brought to the knowledge of the true religion."—Pul. Com.

Restoration of Elamites.—The full restoration belongs to Gospel times: and "Elamites" were among the first who heard and accepted the Gospel. Their presence at the Pentecost shows that the Elamites were still preserved by the Divine Providence, and were there among the representatives of the Gentile world to whom the Evangel of Christ was proclaimed.—Hom. Com.

"He who reigns within himself, and rules passions, desires, and fears, is more than a king."—Milton.

"To do so no more is the truest repentance."
—Luther.

a "The very noise of the enemies shall fright them, and bring a panic fear upon them."
—Lowth.

"The law of the Lord squares up the whole man, keeps him perpendicular, and puts him on good terms with himself, with the world, and with God."—Edward Beecher Mason.

"Winter brings blessings, so the chill Of dark adversity;—from its cold grasp The soul revives reanimate, — more strong, And better armed."
—F. A. Mackay.

^b Is. xxii. 6.

"The reason for the judgment on the Elamites does not appear. They do not seem, as a people, to have molested the Hebrews. It is possible that they may have been addicted to idolatry, and thus been distinguished from the Persians proper, whose religion in the main was monotheistic."—Henderson.

* Comp. Ac. ii. 9.

CHAPTER THE FIFTIETH.

"A long and impassioned prophecy against Babylon is given in chaps. I. and li."—Driver. This prophecy against Babylon forms an appropriate conclusion to the series. The nations immediately bordering upon Palestine have had their fate foretold, and then the more remote, but none the less is that Empire, which is to execute God's vengeance upon them, destined in its turn to fall. And this, the climax of the prophecies against foreign nations, is marked by the grandeur of the images employed by the prophet.—Camb. Bib. 1-3. (1) against, as before, better rend. concerning. This prophecy was given in the fourth year of Zedekiah: see ch. li. 59, 60. (2) set . . standard, to call attention to the message. Bel, Is. xlv. 1. Merodach, or Marduk, the tutelary God of Babylon, Is. xxxix. 1. confounded, R. V., "put to shame." (3) north, the district of Media.^b Sinners Returning to God (vss. 1-5).—I. In those days the children of Israel shall come, they and the children of Judah, together—so enmities are to be abolished. II. Going and weeping: going whither? weeping wherefore? going to Zion with tears of joy and gratitude. III. They seek the Lord their God. IV. They ask their way to Zion with their faces thitherward. V. Come and let us join ourselves to the Lord in a perpetual covenant.

Broken Images (vs. 2).—As it was generally believed that the divinity abandoned any figure or image which was mutilated or broken, this prophetic declaration may be considered as asserting the destruction of the idols. Such a sentiment still prevails among the heathen. Dr. Buchanan, who visited many Indian provinces at the commencement of the seventeenth century, mentions that a Polygar chief, about two hundred and fifty years before, had been directed by the god Ganesa to search for treasures under a certain image, and to erect temples and reservoirs with whatever money he should find. "The treasures were accordingly found, and applied as directed; the image from under which the treasures had been taken was shown to me, and I was surprised at finding it lying at one of the gates quite neglected. On asking the reason why the people allowed their benefactor to remain in such a plight, he informed me that the finger of the image having been broken, the divinity had deserted it; for no mutilated image is considered as habitable by a god."—Burder.

4-8. (4) come, or return. weeping, partly with joy at so unexpected an opportunity; partly in penitence. (5) perpetual covenant, Ne. viii. 38, x. 29. "The new covenant is everlasting (Hos. ii. 19). It is possible by reason of the people's repentance. Hence it is that when the divine summons penetrates the lands of their captivity the rejected ones hasten with trembling, lest their deliverance should be delayed (Hos. xi. 10), and return with weeping and supplications (Jer. xxxi. 9). The divine forgiveness corresponds with the repentance."—Oehler. (6) on the mountains, where they sacrifice to their idols. restingplace, Jehovah, the only true source of good. (7) devoured them, as wild beasts would wandering sheep. offend not, excusing themselves as being agents of Jehovah, who was angry with His people.^a habitation of justice, comp. ch. xxxi. 23. (8) he goats, which go first, and lead the flock.^b

Faces Zionward.—Among the old Romans there prevailed the touching custom of holding the face of every new-born infant towards the heavens, signifying, by their presenting its forehead to the stars, that it was to look above the world into celestial glories. It was a vain superstition; but Christianity dispels the fable, and gives us a clear realization of the Pagan yearning. Young live should be turned with their faces heavenwards.—Hom. Com. A restingplace.—O ye children of God, ye have a Resting-place; how is it that ye can forget it? Touch upon the things of nature, how they chide you! Bring to your remembrance the birds of the air, the beasts of the forest, the dumb driven cattle accus-

^b "The devastation of Babylon here foretold includes not only that by Cyrus, but also that more utter one by Darius, who took Babylon by artifice, when it had revolted from Persia, and mercilessly slaughtered the inhabitants, hanging 4,000 of the nobles; also the final desolation of Babylon owing to Seleucia having been built close by under Seleucus Nicator."—Fausset.

"Lowliness is the base of every virtue;

And he who goes the lowest builds the safest.

May God keep all His pity for the proud!"

—Bailey.

^a "As long as the sheep are in the fold, it is a trespass to attack them, and is punished as such. But Israel having left the fold, has now no owner, and may therefore be maltreated with impunity."—Spk. Com.

^b "Lead ye the way for the people, out of Babylon, as the he-goats press forward, and place themselves at the head of the flocks, and lead them to pasture."—Wordsworth.

tomed to the yoke, and let them chide you; for they forget not their restingplace. Carried away to the city the other day, the dove was taken from its cage, and they let it loose, fastening to it the message that was to be sent. It mounted aloft, it whirled around awhile, that it might see where it was. It was far, far away from the dove-cote; it was found hundreds of miles away; but whither did it fly? Swift as an arrow from the bow, it sought its restingplace with the infallibility of affection; it found its nearest way to the cote where it had been reared, and brought its message safely there. And even the dog which thou despisest, taken away from its master, carried many miles away, in darkness, too, so that it might not know its way, has been known to swim rivers, cross byways it could not have known, and then is found barking for admission at its master's door; oh, so happy when it hears its master's voice again. It could not rest elsewhere. O my heart, wilt thou let the pigeon outstrip thee in affection? art thou more doggish than a dog? Dost thou forget thy Lord, when dogs remember well their masters? Let us learn from them and forget our Resting-place nevermore.—Spurgeon.

9—13. (9) assembly, etc., the mixed armies of Medes, Persians, and their allies. from thence, i. e. by the great nations coming from the north. none .. vain, none of the warriors shall return without aiding in the conquest. (10) satisfied, with the abundance they bear away. (11) heifer at grass, who might eat her fill, indulge how she pleased.° bellow, etc., R. V., "neigh as strong horses." (12) behold, etc., R. V., "behold she shall be the hindmost of the nations, a wilderness," etc. (13) Comp. ch. xix. 8, xlix. 17.

The spirit of the "destroyers."—Jehovah meant Babylon for the chastisement and the humiliation of his own people, that they might be enlightened and purified through the losses they thus sustained. They lost many things they loved, but at the same time they lost things which tempted and ensnared. The description here, "Destroyers of mine heritage," indicates sufficiently the spirit in which Babylon acted. What God wanted was the thorough purification of his heritage, not at all its destruction. Babylon cared nothing as to whether Israel was better or worse for its afflictions. It could only rejoice over another nation conquered, another territory acquired, and a fresh degree of brightness added to its military glory. It is surely a terrible thing when men do good work unconsciously and not meaning it to be good work at all. When we have to engage in any work that inflicts suffering, shame, and loss on others, it ought to be under the sternest pressure of necessity and as the sorrowing ministers of violated law. There are times when we cannot escape being the agents of suffering to wicked and foolish men; but if we only act in the right spirit, keeping our hearts free from all that is vengeful and exulting, we may even have some share in turning them from their wickedness. Everything that savors of our personal satisfaction and gain must be kept away when we have to make others suffer.—Pul. Com.

14—16. (14) Put .. array, post yourselves in good positions. (15) Shout, as conquerors do. given her hand, i. e. in submission, comp. Gen. xxiv. 2; 2 Ki. x. 15, etc. foundations, better, buttresses. Her walls are thrown down—this was not done by Cyrus, who entered the city beneath the walls by the river bed, after diverting the stream. It therefore points on to the later capture of Babylon by Darius, who "having become master of the place, destroyed the wall, and tore down all the gates; for Cyrus had done neither the one nor the other when he took Babylon." Herod. Bk. iii. (16) sower, so that even the fields shall not be tilled, referring probably to the larger district of Babylonia.

Palace at Babylon.—The palace of the king of Babylon almost vied with the great temple of their god. And there is now some controversy, in which of the principal mountainous heaps the one or the other lies buried. But the utter desolation of both leaves no room for any debate on the question—which of the twain is bowed down and confounded, and which of them is broken in pieces. The two palaces, or castles, of Baby-

"Take Him for what He is; oh, take Him all, And look above.

Then shall thy tossing soul find anchorage And steadfast peace;

Thy love shall rest on His, thy weary doubts

For ever cease;

Thy heart shall find in Him and in His grace

Its rest and bliss."

—W. M. Taylor.

° Some render, "as a heifer threshing," which being unmuzzled would eat abundantly and become frisky.

"Common happiness is sustained, not by great exertions, which are in the power of a few, and happen rarely even to them, but by great numbers doing every one a little, every one something in his particular province, to his particular neighborhood. This is the way in which Providence intended society to be carried on, and beneficence to be exercised." — Paley.

"The mighty monarchy of Chaldea was under the control of the God of Israel, and He who made it flow like a stormy ocean, and overwhelm the nations with its flood, could say to its proud waves, Hitherto shalt thou go, and no farther." — Wordsworth.

"It is the worst condition into which the Church of God can come when the enemies who desolate it maintain they are in the right in doing so. It is, however, a just Nemesis when those who will not hear the regular messengers of God must be told by the extraordinary messengers of God what they should have done." — Naegelsbach.

lon were strongly fortified. And the larger was surrounded by three walls of great extent. When the city was suddenly taken by Demetrius, he seized on one of the castles by surprise, and displaced its garrison by seven thousand of his own troops, whom he stationed within it. Of the other he could not make himself master. Their extent and strength, at a period of three hundred years after the delivery of the prophecy, are thus sufficiently demonstrated. The solidity of the structure of the greater as well as of the lesser palace, might have warranted the belief of its unbroken durability for ages. And never was there a building whose splendor and magnificence were in greater contrast to its present desolation. The vestiges of the walls which surrounded it are still to be seen, and serve with other circumstances to identify it with the Mujelibé, as the name Merodach is identified with the palace. It is broken in pieces, and hence its name Mujelibé, signifying overturned, or turned upside down. Its circumference is about half a mile; its height one hundred and forty feet. But it is "a mass of confusion, none of its members being distinguishable." The existence of chambers, passages, and cellars, of different forms and sizes, and built of different materials, has been fully ascertained. It is the receptacle of wild beasts, and full of doleful creatures; wild beasts cry in the desolate houses, and dragons in the pleasant palaces—"venomous reptiles being very numerous throughout the ruins." "All the sides are worn into furrows by the weather, and in some places where several channels of rain have united together, these furrows are of great depth, and penetrate a considerable way into the mound." "The sides of the ruin exhibit hollows worn partly by the weather." It is brought down to the grave to the sides of the pit.—Keith. The fate of Babylon.—When, because of iniquity, God determines the destruction of a city or empire, nothing can save it. If ever a city appeared impregnable, it was Babylon. Its walls, says one writer, "were above 300 feet high, 87 feet broad, and 48 miles in compass." In addition, the river Euphrates appeared an insuperable barrier to an enemy entering the city. Yet, notwithstanding its mighty wall with its hundred gates of solid brass, notwithstanding its wide and deep river, Babylon was taken, according to the word of the Lord.

17—20. (17) scattered sheep, "like a flock driven in all directions." king of Assyria, Shalmaneser. (18) have punished, in the destruction of Nineveh." (19) habitation, R. V., "pasture." Carmel, etc., places noted for their rich pastures." (20) those days, perhaps referring to the more distant times of the Messiah. not .. found, comp. Ps. x. 15, xxxviii. 36; Is. xli. 12. I reserve, R. V., "I leave as a remnant."

Treasures of Chaldæa.—And after the incessant spoliation of ages, now that the end is come of the treasures of Chaldæa, the earth itself fails not to disclose its hidden treasures, so as to testify that they once were abundant. In proof of this an instance may be given. At the ruins of Hoomania, near to those of Ctesiphon, pieces of silver having (on the 5th March, 1812) been accidentally discovered, edging out of the bank of the Tigris, "on examination there were found and brought away," by persons sent for that purpose by the pacha of Bagdad's officers "between six and seven hundred ingots of silver, each measuring from one to one and a half feet in length; and an earthen jar, containing upwards of two thousand Athenian coins, all of silver. Many were purchased at the time by the late Mr. Rich, formerly the East India Company's resident at Bagdad, and are now in his valuable collection, since bought by Government, and deposited in the British Museum." Amid the ruins of Ctesiphon "the natives often pick up coins of gold, silver and copper, for which they always find a ready sale in Bagdad. Indeed, some of the wealthy Turks and Armenians, who are collecting for several French and German consuls, hire people to go and search for coins, medals, and antique gems; and I am assured they never return to their employers empty-handed," as if all who spoil Chaldæa shall be satisfied, till even the ruins be spoiled unto the uttermost.—Keith.

a "At the taking of this city, the last king of Assyria was killed, and the seat and title of the empire removed to Babylon, wh. was no longer called the Assyrian, but the Babylonian monarchy." — Lowth.

b Is. lxxv. 10; Eze. xxxiv. 13, 14.

Cicero said of Cæsar, "He forgiveth nothing but injuries only."

"These evils I deserve, Yet despair not of His final pardon, Whose ear is ever open, and His eye Gracious to re-admit the suppliant." —Milton.

Restoration by itself will do nothing. If the man comes back to his possessions as he went away, then he can only misuse and squander as of old. The house swept and garnished only presented to the evil spirits a chance for greater riot and defilement than before. To the old land there comes back a new people. After tasting the bitterness of wanderings, they have tasted also the powers of the world to come—old carnal temptations no longer charm, new spiritual considerations stand full in view. Formerly, even on Carmel and Bashan, Mount Ephraim and Gilead, there had been discontent, because, with all the goodness in these places, there was not enough for the carnal heart. But now, when things are used spiritually, there is enough and more than enough. If only we follow where God leads there will be ample provision and ample blessedness.—Y.

21—24. (21) Go up, prob. addressed to Cyrus. Merathaim . . Pekod,^a modern investigations have ascertained the existence of the latter name as that of a place in Babylonia; it is therefore at least possible that the former may also have existed. Whether, however, Jeremiah intended to play upon the names of actually existent places or not, he doubtless meant to emphasize the senses of these two names, viz., double rebellion . . . punishment.—Camb. Bib. (23) hammer . . earth, Is. xiv. 4—6, 16, 17. desolation, comp. Re. xviii. 19. (24) snare.

Destruction of Babylon by Fire.—On the summit of the hill are “immense fragments of brick-work of no determinate figures, tumbled together, and converted into solid vitrified masses.” “Some of these huge fragments measured twelve feet in height, by twenty-four in circumference; and from the circumstance of the standing brick-work having remained in a perfect state, the change exhibited in these is only accountable from their having been exposed to the fiercest fire, or rather scathed by lighting.” “They are completely molten—a strong presumption that fire was used in the destruction of the tower, which, in parts, resembles what the Scriptures prophesied it should become, ‘a burnt mountain.’ In the denunciation respecting Babylon, fire is particularly mentioned as an agent against it. To this Jeremiah evidently alludes, when he says that it should be ‘as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah,’ on which cities, it is said, ‘the Lord rained brimstone and fire.’ ‘Her high gates shall be burned with fire, and the people shall labor in vain, and the folk in the fire, and they shall be weary.’” “In many of these immense unshapen masses might be traced the gradual effects of the consuming power, which had produced so remarkable an appearance; exhibiting parts burnt to that variegated dark hue, seen in the vitrified matter lying about in glass manufactories; while, through the whole of these awful testimonies of the fire (whatever fire it was!) which, doubtless, hurled them from their original elevation” (I will roll thee down from the rocks), “the regular lines of the cement are visible, and so hardened in common with the bricks, that when the masses are struck they ring like glass.—Keith.

25—28. (25) armoury, storehouse of weapons. “A truly grand figure. The north country is regarded by the prophet as a storehouse of young and “inexhaustible” nations, from which Jehovah can at any time “bring forth weapons of his indignation.” The latter phrase occurs again in the parallel prophecy (Isa. xiii. 5), where it is evidently applied to the army of Medo-Persian invaders.”—Pul. Com. God’s weapons for the judgment of nations are war, famine, pestilence, disease and death. for this is, etc., R. V., “for the Lord, the Lord of Hosts hath a work to do in the land of the Chaldeans.” (26) as heaps, of corn, to be burnt as a bonfire.” (27) bullocks, fig. for her strong youths, or princes, magnates. (28) them that flee, the liberated Jews. of his temple, wh. the Chaldeans had destroyed.

Destruction of Babylon by Fire.—The high gates of the temple of Belus, which were standing in the time of Herodotus, have been burnt with fire; the vitrified masses which fell when Bel bowed down rest on the top of its stupendous ruins. “The hand of the Lord has been ^a “Because she is the land of Merathaim, or double rebellion, therefore she is the land of Pekod, or visitation; i. e. of punishment from God.”—Wordsworth.

“God’s Word, God’s providence, God’s Spirit, all unite to testify to the existence and by-and-by the exercise of that triumphant power by which all the might of evil shall be crushed, shattered, and broken for ever. On which side, then, are we taking our place?”—Pul. Com.

“Happiness is the rule, misery the exception. Were the order reversed, our attention would be called to examples of health and competency, instead of disease and want.”—Paley.

^a “This metaphor describes the suddenness, ease, and completeness with which Babylon will be taken and spoiled; it will be like the conflagration of a barn of corn.”—Wordsworth.

“Ariosto, in one of his romantic legends, tells us of a tree, many-branched, and covered with delectable bunches; but whose shook that tree to win the fruit, found, too late, that not fruit, but stones of crushing weight, came down upon his head. The sensualities which fools call pleasure are such a tree: they who seek its fruit become its victims."—S. Coley. "All men that have rambled after happiness have failed; neither learning, nor fame, nor wealth, nor pleasure, could ever give it, without a right set of principles for thought and practice; amongst which may be reckoned the love of justice, temperance, fortitude, and benevolence."—Antoninus.

"There is a temple in ruin stands, fashioned by long forgotten hands;

Two or three columns, and many a stone, Marble and granite, with grass o'er grown."

—Byron.

* Comp. Job. xvi. 13.

"Unlamented pass the proud away,

The gaze of fools, the pageant of a day; So perish all whose breast ne'er learned to glow. For others' good, or melt at others' woe."

—Pope.

b "Babylon has hitherto, by its ambition, kept the world in unrest: now by its fall men everywhere can dwell in security."—Spk. Com.

Is. xiv. 6—8.

stretched upon it; it has been rolled down from the rocks, and has been made a burnt mountain,"—of which it was further prophesied, "They shall not take of thee a stone for a corner, nor a stone for foundations, but thou shalt be desolate for ever, saith the Lord." The old wastes of Zion shall be built; its former desolations shall be raised up: and Jerusalem shall be inhabited again in her own place, even in Jerusalem. But it shall not be with Bel as with Zion, nor with Babylon as with Jerusalem. For as the "heaps of rubbish impregnated with nitre" which cover the site of Babylon "cannot be cultivated," so the vitrified masses on the summit of Birs Nimrood cannot be rebuilt. Though still they be of the hardest substance, and indestructible by the elements, and though once they formed the highest pinnacles of Belus, yet, incapable of being hewn into any regular form, they neither are nor can now be taken for a corner or for foundations. And the bricks on the solid fragments of wall, which rest on the summit, though neither scathed nor molten, are so firmly cemented, that, according to Mr. Rich, "it is nearly impossible to detach any of them whole," or, as Captain Mignan still more forcibly states, "they are so firmly cemented, that it is utterly impossible to detach any of them." "My most violent attempts," says Sir Robert Ker Porter, "could not separate them." And Mr. Buckingham, in assigning reasons for lessening the wonder at the total disappearance of the walls at this distant period, and speaking of the Birs Nimrood generally, observes, "that the burnt bricks (the only ones sought after) which are found in the Mujelibé, the Kasr, and the Birs Nimrood, the only three great monuments in which there are any traces of their having been used, are so difficult, in the two last indeed so impossible, to be extracted whole, from the tenacity of the cement in which they are laid, that they could never have been resorted to while any considerable portion of the walls existed to furnish an easier supply: even now, though some portion of the mounds on the eastern bank of the river" (the Birs is on the western side) "are occasionally dug into for bricks, they are not extracted without a comparatively great expense, and very few of them whole, in proportion to the great number of fragments that come up with them." Around the tower there is not a single whole brick to be seen.—Keith.

29—32. (29) archers,^a vs. 14, "a dramatic way of indicating that the siege is about to begin."—Pul. Com. (30) Therefore, etc., ch. xlix. 26. (31) most proud, Heb. "O pride," "O man of pride." Bab. is the personification of pride. (32) fire .. cities, Cyrus seems to have ravaged the Babylonian district for twenty years before taking Babylon itself.

The Almighty Deliverer (vss. 31—34).—I. God's vengeance on His enemies. II. His merciful interposition on behalf of His people. 1. An interesting title to be considered; 2. An important qualification referred to; 3. A convincing proof adduced; 4. A gracious fact declared.

Retribution Though Slow, Yet Sure.—Slowly the hand had crawled along the dial plate, slowly as if the event would never come, and wrong was heaped on wrong, and oppression cried, and it seemed as if no ear had heard its voice, till the measure of the wickedness was at length fulfilled; the finger touched the hour, and as the strokes of the great hammer rang out above the nation, in an instant the mighty fabric of iniquity was shivered to ruins.

33. 34. (33) refused .. go, therefore the strong arm of Jehovah must deliver them by judgments on their enemies. (34) Redeemer, Heb. Goel, the title of the near kinsman, to whom according to Jewish law belonged the duty of revenging a murder, as well as that of advocate and general protector. In like manner the Lord is about to rescue His people and take vengeance upon their foe.^b

The Strength of the Redeemer (vs. 34).—I. These words suggest a difficulty: why does Israel so often suffer? 1. God does not display His strength at once in order to glorify it; 2. In order to make His people lay hold of it; 3. Hereby He chastens His people; 4. And instructs them; 5. And that He may show mercy to their oppressors. II. These words convey a blessed truth; 1. Consider the might of the enemies from whom He delivers them; 2. Consider the completeness of the deliverance; 3. Consider that He upholds to the end all whom He has redeemed. III. These words imply a terrible warning—I. To all who oppress God's people; 2. To all who reject His help.—Stems and Twigs.

35—40. (35) wise men, Magi, Da. i. 4. Partly the astronomers and astrologers at the various observatories in Babylonia, whose duty it was to send in monthly reports of the appearances in the sky, which were regarded as having an occult political significance (comp. Isa. xlvii. 13). In the next verse they are called liars, or praters.—Pul. Com. (36) liars, impostors. dote, talk foolishly. (37) mingled people, mixed races, many of whom had been brought to Babylon as captives, like the Jews. (38) idols, lit. terrors. "Bugbears to frighten children with." (39) wild beasts of the islands, R. V., "wolves," Is. xiii. 21. owls, R. V., "ostriches." (40) Sodom, etc., Ge. xix. 25; Je. xlix. 18.

Babylon and Prophecy (vs. 38).—Possibly refers to a circumstance attending the capture of the city by the Persians; but it more probably alludes to the physical condition of the country. The plain in which Babylon stands is exposed to long drought and intense heat in summer, so that the dry soil must have been at all times perfectly barren without artificial irrigation; but with such irrigation the ground is, even at this day, of unexampled fertility, except upon the wide-spread grit and debris of desolated cities. Therefore it was that the land exhibited one of the most extensive and complicated systems of irrigation that the world ever saw. It was overrun with innumerable canals in all directions—the largest of them navigable and feeding others, diminishing in importance with their distance from the trunk. These, as well as the parent river, were bordered with an infinity of hydraulic machines, by which the water was raised and distributed into the fields and gardens. The same plan is still pursued, to a limited extent, at some spots in the immediate vicinity of the rivers. But it is now literally true of Babylon that "a drought is upon her waters, and they are dried up." Yet still the lines and ridges of innumerable canals remain, which enable the spectator to trace the general system, and to verify the ancient historians as well as the prophecies of Scripture; the whole being strongly calculated to show the extent to which human skill and industry were once employed in giving to this now desolate region that fertility for which it was in old times celebrated. This explanation seems to us to give much force to the present prediction, since there can be no country the subsistence of which more entirely depended upon a complicated system of irrigation. Wherever water is applied in this region (with the exception already made), the productive powers of the soil and climate cannot be exceeded; but where that is wanting, it becomes a naked desert.

41—44. A repetition of vi. 22—24. See notes there. (41) many kings, in the allied army under Cyrus. coasts, or remote parts. (42) cruel, Is. xiii. 17, 18. like a man, in orderly array, so as to seem like one great man moving on. (43) waxed feeble, so that he attempted no resistance. Compare the panic of Belshazzar, Da. v. 6. This and following verses adapted from xlix. 19—21. See notes there.

The Destruction of Babylon.—The weapon which Babylon in its greed of conquest had used against Jerusalem is turned against itself. First of all, Babylon looks covetously on the land of Israel and spoils it of its people and their possessions. And then, enriched, Babylon becomes in turn an object of desire. God has only to leave covetousness and grasping alone, whether in nations or individuals. There will generally come in some human agency to dissipate ill-gotten gains. As Babylon became richer in external goods, it became weaker in manly resources. There was more to invite attack, more need of the best defences, and yet at the same time less ability to defend. Babylon took the sword and she in turn must perish by the sword; and that same sword successful against Babylon points to the destruction of those who wielded it.—Pul. Com.

"What do we live for, if it is not to make life less difficult for each other?"—George Eliot.

"Many of their idols were huge and grotesque in appearance, and calculated to inspire beholders with terror."—Henderson.

"Fully to understand this passage, a person must see the frenzy of the heathen when they get a sight of their idols. Thus, when the gods are taken out in procession, the multitudes shout, and the priests mutter and rave. The gestures are all distorted, and the devotees are affected with alternate sorrow or joy."—Roberts.

"This utter extinction of Babylon was not effected by one stroke, but gradually. Cyrus took away its supremacy. Darius Hystaspes deprived it, when it had rebelled again Persia, of its fortifications. Seleucus Nicator removed its citizens and wealth to Seleucia, which he founded close by Babylon. The Parthians removed all that was left to Ctesiphon. Nothing but its walls were left under the Roman Emperor Adrian."

"Every human soul has the germ of some flowers within; and they would open, if they could only find sunshine and free air to expand in. I always told you, that not having enough of sunshine was what ailed the world. Make people happy, and there will not be half the quarrelling, or a tenth part of the wickedness there is."—Mrs. Child.

45. 46. (45) Therefore, etc., comp. ch. xlix. 20. (46) cry . . nations, "who shall be astonished at the unexpected downfall of so great a city, and so potent an empire." Chs. I. and li. are apparently a mosaic, compiled from lost as well as extant sources; and dwell upon a few themes with a persistent iteration of ideas and phrases hardly to be paralleled elsewhere, even in the Book of Jeremiah. It has been reckoned that the imminence of the attack on Babylon is introduced afresh eleven times, and its conquest and destruction nine times. The advent of an enemy from the north is announced four times.—Exp. Bib.

The spoiling of Chaldæa.—When the Romans under Heraclius ravaged Chaldæa, "though much of the treasure had been removed from Destagered, and much had been expended, the remaining wealth appears to have exceeded their hopes, and even to have satiated their avarice." The deeds of Julian and the words of Gibbon show how Chaldæa was spoiled—how a sword continued to be on her treasures—and how, year after year and age after age, there was rumor on rumor and violence in her land.—Keith.

CHAPTER THE FIFTY-FIRST.

This chapter continues the prophecy against Babylon. 1—4. (1) in the midst . . against me, R. V., "in Leb-kamai." "The Hebrew was leb-kamai, which is Kasdim, or Chaldea, written in the cypher called Athbash; just as Sheshach in vs. 41 is equivalent to Babel."—Pul. Com. destroying wind, ch. iv. 11. The metaphors used in this and succeeding verses are agricultural. (2) fanners, comp. ch. xv. 7.^a (3) brigandine, R. V., "let not the archer bend his bow, and let him not lift himself up in his coat of mail," ch. xlvi. 4. (4) in her streets, or, more generally, in her land.

What One Sin Will Do.—There was but one crack in the lantern, and the wind has found it out, and blown out the candle. How great a mischief one unguarded point of character may cause us! One spark blew up the magazine and shook the whole country for miles around. One leak sank the vessel and drowned all on board. One wound may kill the body. One sin destroy the soul. It little matters how carefully the rest of the lantern is protected, the one point which is damaged is quite sufficient to admit the wind; and so it little matters how zealous a man may be in a thousand things, if he tolerates one darling sin; Satan will find out the flaw, and destroy all his hopes. The strength of a chain is to be measured not by its strongest but by its weakest link, for if the weakest snaps, what is the use of the rest? Satan is a very close observer, and knows exactly where our weak points are; we have need of very much watchfulness, and we have great cause to bless our merciful Lord who prayed for us that our faith fail not. Either our pride, our sloth, our ignorance, our anger, or our lust, would prove our ruin unless grace interposed; any one of our senses or faculties might admit the foe, yea, our very virtues and graces might be gates of entrance to our enemies. O Jesus, if Thou hast indeed bought me with Thy blood, be pleased to keep me by Thy power even unto the end.—C. H. Spurgeon.

5—9. (5) forsaken, better, widowed. filled with sin, R. V., "is full of guilt." (6) Flee, etc., ch. I. 8.^a (7) golden cup,^b Babylon, as the instrument used by God for his judicial purposes, is likened to a wine-cup, which "made all the earth drunken" (comp. ch. xxv. 15, 16); and, more than this, to a golden cup, such was the impression made upon the Jewish prophets, by Babylon's unexampled splendor.—Pul. Com. (8) howl for her, this is addressed to her enemies, and means that her destruction shall be so terrible that even they will lament for her.^c (9) skies, or clouds.

"Suffering, But Not Forsaken."—Israel is not forsaken because she

^a The "vannus" of the Romans was a broad basket, into which the corn and chaff was received after thrashing, and then thrown towards the wind. The Jews used a shovel, and threw the corn and chaff against the wind.

"A time may come when it is well to separate one's self. There may come moments in the life of a Church when it will be a duty to leave the community. Such a moment is come when the community has become a Babylon."—Herzog.

^a Comp. Re. xviii. 4.

^b "The cup in the hand of Babylon is a golden cup; she chooses such a cup, in order that men's eyes may be dazzled with the glitter of the gold, and may not inquire what it contains."—Origen.

^c Re. xiv. 8, xviii. 2.

is driven from her home. Babylon is not more favored because she flourishes for a season as a "golden cup in the Lord's hand." For the land of the Chaldeans is filled with sin against the Holy One of Israel.

I. When God chastises his people he must not be thought to have forsaken them. The chastisement is for their own good. It is, therefore, a proof that God has not neglected them.

II. Though God will chastise his people he will never forsake them. This is a further step. Not only is the chastisement no proof of God's having forsaken his people, but in no case will he forsake them; no such proof can ever be found. True, they may be separated from God and may become "castaways;" but this is only because they forsake him.

III. Outward circumstances are no indications of our relations with God.—Pul. Com.

10—13. (10) Lord . . . righteousness, i. e. "their justification in their controversy with Babylon." (11) Make bright, or sharpen. The Lord, etc., the universality of the Divine kingdom is constantly taught in O. T. Jehovah uses the nations, heathen rulers for His purposes. Comp. Is. x. 5ff. xxxvii. 28; Is. xix.; Heb. i. 6; Jer. xxvii. 5; Ezek. xxx. 4; xxxi. 9; Dan. ii. 21; vii. 14. And the end of this government. Is. xlv. 22.—Oehler. Medes,^a including the Persians. (12) upon the walls, R. V. "against the walls." A summons to the invaders. (13) many waters,^b the turnings of the Euphrates, and the canals irrigating the land. measure, meted out as judgment on thy covetousness: the limit, to which it will be allowed to go.—Ewald.

Duty of Acknowledging God's Mercies.—Consider.—I. What is that word which we are now called to declare? 1. The agricultural; 2. The commercial; 3. The political; 4. The religious. II. In what manner should we declare them? 1. Let us acknowledge God in them; 2. We must adore Him for them; 3. By anticipation bless God for the yet richer mercies which he has in reserve for us.—C. Simeon.

Spoiling of Babylon (vs. 13).—On taking Babylon, Cyrus became immediately possessed of the treasures of darkness, and hidden riches of secret places. On his first publicly appearing in Babylon, all the officers of his army, both of the Persians and allies, according to his command, wore very splendid robes, those belonging to the superior officers being of various colors, all of the finest and brightest dye, and richly embroidered with gold and silver; and thus the hidden riches of secret places were openly displayed. And when the treasures of Babylon became the spoil of another great king, Alexander gave six minæ (about $75) to each Macedonian horseman, to each Macedonian soldier and foreign horseman two minæ ($25), and to every other man in his army a donation equal to two months' pay. Demetrius ordered his soldiers to plunder the land of Babylon for their own use. But it is not in these instances alone that Chaldæa has been a spoil, and that all who spoil her have been satisfied. It was the abundance of her treasures which brought successive spoilers. Many nations came from afar, and though they returned to their own country (as in formerly besieging Babylon, so in continuing to dispoil the land of Chaldæa), none returned in vain. From the richness of the country, new treasures were speedily stored up, till again the sword came upon them, and they were robbed. The prey of the Persians and of the Greeks for nearly two centuries after the death of Alexander, Chaldæa became afterwards the prey chiefly of the Parthians, from the north, for an equal period, till a greater nation, the Romans, came from the coasts of the earth to pillage it. Within the provinces of their empire, it was their practice, on the submission of the inhabitants, to protect and not to destroy. But Chaldæa, from its extreme distance, never having yielded permanently to their yoke, and the limits of their empire having been fixed by Hadrian on the western side of the Euphrates, or on the very borders of Chaldæa, that hapless country obtained not their protection, though repeatedly the scene of ruthless spoliation by the Romans. The authority of Gib-

"Man may lay out his plans, but God alone can give them effect in answer to the tongue of prayer."—Maurer.

^a "The Medes, the Madai of Ge. x. 2, were a branch of the great Aryan family, who as conquerors had seized upon the vast regions extending from the Caspian Sea to the Eastern borders of Mesopotamia, but without being able to dispossess the Turanian tribes who had previously dwelt there. They were divided into numerous clans, each with its own local chief, the leaders of the larger sections being those who are called kings." — Spk. Com.

^b Re. xvii. 1, 15.

"Cheerful tempers. manufacture solace and joy out of very unpromising material. They are the magic alchemists which extract sweet essences out of bitter herbs, like the dear old colored saint in the smoky hut who was glad of anything to make a smoke with and though she had but two teeth thanked God that they were opposite each other." — Arthur T. Pierson.

"An extreme rigor is sure to arm everything against it, and at length to relax into a supine neglect." — Burke.

"Content's a kingdom, and I wear the crown."
—Heywood.

"When the Master of the universe has points to carry in His government He impresses His will in the structure of minds." — Emerson.

"There are three kinds of praise: that which we yield, that which we lend, and that which we pay. We yield it to the powerful from fear, we lend it to the weak from interest, and we pay it to the deserving from gratitude." — Colton.

"When I am pressed with thoughts about worldly or home cares, I take a Psalm, or a saying of Paul, and go to sleep on it." — Luther.

bon, in elucidation of Scripture, cannot here be distrusted, any more than that of the heathen historians. To use his words, "a hundred thousand captives, and a rich booty, rewarded the fatigues of the Roman soldiers," when Ctesiphon was taken, in the second century, by the generals of Marcus. Even Julian, who, in the fourth century, was forced to raise the siege of Ctesiphon, came not in vain to Chaldæa, and failed not to take of it a spoil; nor, though an apostate, did he fail to verify by his acts the truth which he denied. After having given Perisador to flames, "the plentiful magazines of corn, of arms, and of splendid furniture, were partly distributed among the troops, and partly reserved for the public service; the useless stores were destroyed by fire, or thrown into the stream of the Euphrates." Outward Treasures.—We must not look too closely at the magnificent houses of a great city, with their contents, or else we shall be speedily undeceived as to their real glory. We shall see how much greed and unjust gain and the grinding of the poor had to do with such buildings. Grand buildings for some men to live in can have no charm to the Christian eye, if a necessary condition for their existence is that many others should live in ruinous hovels. The just and loving God must look on splendid cities with a very different eye from the human one. And doing so, he must of necessity fix a limit to covetousness. Covetousness goes on adding to its treasures, until at last it excites the covetousness of others. And even apart from this, outward treasures, unduly esteemed, must in time corrupt the inward man.—Pul. Com.

14—18. (14) Lord . . himself, Am. vi. 8. I will fill, etc., "it is better to render, with Ewald and Keil, 'Even though I have filled thee with men, as with locusts, they shall raise over thee the cheer of the vintage;' i. e. the millions of Babylon's population will not save her from the most utter ruin."—Pul. Com. caterpillars, R. V., "canker worms." (15, 16) made, etc., comp. ch. x. 12, 13. (17, 18) every man, etc., ch. x. 14, 15.

The resources of Jehovah.—Judged according to human standards, some men are powerful, some men wise, and some are men of understanding; but very seldom, even according to the human standard, are all three qualities united in one man; and it is not very often that even two of them are found. Man may have power, mere muscular strength, the power of the athlete, the power of the ox, without anything worthy the name of wisdom. So there may be wisdom without power; and there may be a very high degree of wisdom apart from large knowledge or a powerful understanding. Men are made so that what is defective in one may be supplied by another. The greatest human works are done when the power of one is joined with the wisdom of a second and the understanding of a third. But with Jehovah all these qualities, in their highest degree, are found united in One. The only account after all that man can give of the making of matter is that it has been made by a God. And then his wisdom has reduced everything to order, arranged the world in all its grades, organisms, and mutual connections. The natural man comes nearest to God when he can combine the power of one, the wisdom of another, and the understanding of yet a third, to make as it were one new man for the doing of special work; and the spiritual man comes nearest to God when, still preserving his individuality of action, he exchanges for his natural weakness the spiritual power of Christ, for his natural folly the spiritual wisdom of Christ, and for his often useless and deluding knowledge of the things of this world that knowledge which comes in the revelation of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ.—Pul. Com.

19—24. (19) portion, etc., ch. x. 16. (20) battle axe,^a the reference is to Cyrus. (21, 22) break in pieces, and so utterly ruin. (23) captains, Heb. Pakah, prob. the original of the title pasha. (24) render unto, bring upon Bab. retributive judgments.

The Church God's Battle-axe.—Notwithstanding the many accretions of error and superstition with which the pure faith of Christ so soon became encumbered, there yet remained inherent in it and inseparable from it such vital and mighty energy that it smote as with a "battle-axe" one falsehood after another, until they were well-nigh all slain. The forces against her in that ancient world were simply tremendous, but the Church went forth conquering and to conquer.

^a "The mace, or mall, was among the weapons used by the soldiers, and by the Assyrian monarchs themselves." — Rawlinson.

25—29. (25) destroying mountain, fig. for Babylon. "The description evidently points to a volcano. (1) Jehovah says that he will roll the mountain down from the rocks, which can only be understood of the stones and lava hurled down from the crater; (2) that he will make it a 'mountain of burning,' i. e. either to a burning, or, more forcibly, a burnt-out mountain; and (3) that, as a consequence of this, its stones shall be unsuitable for the purposes of the builder."—Pul. Com. burnt mountain, i. e. one burnt out, whose fires are quenched, and which is left a mere useless ruin. (26) not . . . stone, bec. the stones of volcanoes are unfit for building purposes. (27) Ararat, in Armenia, 2 Ki. xix. 37. Minni and Ashchenaz, also in Armenia. Ge. x. 3. captain, or satrap. caterpillars, R. V. "canker-worm." (28) Prepare, lit. consecrate. (29) tremble, with its fear and confusion.

The Destroying Mountain Destroyed.—The mountain is a very fitting symbol of a people eminent among the nations and seeming easily to dominate over them. In such a symbol there is involved the undisputed assertion of superiority. The mountain looks down on the plains, and the plains accept the position. But whereas, in nature, the mountain looks down upon the plains with a mingling of benefits and injuries, of which even the injuries are seen to be benefits when looked at more closely, here we have a destroying mountain spoken of—a mountain that destroys the whole earth. God is against Babylon, not merely for the hurt it has inflicted on his own people, but because destruction is the very element in which it lives. Wheresoever Babylon came it brought spoliation, enslavement, and misery.—Pul. Com.

30—32. (30) forborn, etc., in utter hopelessness and despair. bars are broken, all her fortresses, and chief defences. (31) One . . . another, intimating the simultaneous entry of the enemy at different points.^a at one end, R. V., "on every quarter." (32) passages, prob. the ferries.

Effeminacy.—Woman has her natural limitations. Her usual place is not in the battle-field or on the walls of the attacked city. An army of women against an army of men would be an unnatural, a revolting spectacle. But this very difference between the proper place of women and the proper place of men intensifies the reproach against a man when it can truly be said of him that he has become as a woman. Those qualities which in a woman are womanly in a man are only effeminate.

33—35. (33) threshing-floor, such were in the open air, the ground being trodden down hard by cattle.^b time to thresh, R. V. "at the time when it is trodden." (34) devoured me, i. e. the Jewish nation, wh. is here introduced, complaining of the injuries inflicted on them by the Chaldeans. dragon, or serpent which swallows its prey whole. A sea monster. delicates, delicacies, treasures; dainty meats, Ge. xlix. 20. cast me out, keeping up the fig. of the overgorged animal. (35) my flesh, wh. Nebuchadnezzar, as a wild beast, devoured.^c

Babylon.—On the one side, near to the site of Opis, "the country all around appears to be one wide desert of sandy and barren soil, thinly scattered over with brushwood and tufts of reedy grass." On the other, between Bussorah and Bagdad, "immediately on either bank of the Tigris, is the untrodden desert. The absence of all cultivation,—the sterile, arid, and wild character of the whole scene, formed a contrast to the rich and delightful accounts delineated in Scripture. The natives, in traveling over these pathless deserts, are compelled to explore their way by the stars." "The face of the country is open and flat, presenting to the eye one vast level plain, where nothing is to be seen but here and there a herd of half-wild camels. This immense tract is very rarely diversified with any trees of moderate growth, but is an immense wild, bounded only by the horizon." In the intermediate region, "the whole

"A certain Austrian count, once climbing the Alps, was told by his guide that to go on to a cliff was dangerous. He believed it, went, fell, and they found his body at the hotel at the foot of that cliff. The world is full today of disasters which are merely the consequences of unbelief."—A. F. Schaffier.

"The grand old book of God still stands, and this old earth, the more its leaves are turned over and pondered, the more it will sustain and illustrate the sacred word."—Professor Dana, the geologist.

^a Herodotus says that the extreme parts of the city were taken before they who dwelt in the middle of it were sensible of their danger.

^b "Near Jericho were no less than five such floors, all trodden by oxen, cows, and younger cattle, arranged in each case five abreast, and driven round in a circle, or rather in all directions, over the floor."—Robinson.

"Babylon is like a threshing-floor not trodden for a long time, but the time of harvest, when her citizens shall be trodden under foot, shall come."—Calvin.

^c "Nebuchadnezzar had devoured Jerusalem, had treated her as ruthlessly as a crocodile does its prey, and for this cruelty he and Babylon are justly to be punished."—Spk. Com.

"Wealth is a weak anchor, and glory cannot support a man; this is the law of God, that virtue only is firm, and cannot be shaken by a tempest." — Pythagoras.

^b "The night in wh. the conquest of Babylon was effected, was during the great festival which had been instituted in honor of the idols, and at which revelry of every description was indulged in to such a pitch that most of the inhabitants were more or less in a state of inebriation." — Henderson.

^c Is. xxxiv. 6.

"Private credit is wealth, public honor is security; the feather that adorns the royal bird supports its flight; strip him of his plumage, and you pin him to the earth." — Junius.

"Much learning shows how little mortals know;

Much wealth, how little worldlings can enjoy."

—Young.

"When a man makes a fool of himself, he generally does the job well."

extent from the foot of the wall of Bagdad is a barren waste, without a blade of vegetation of any description; on leaving the gates, the traveler has before him the prospect of a bare desert, a flat and barren country." "The whole country between Bagdad and Hillah is a perfectly flat and (with the exception of a few spots as you approach the latter place) uncultivated waste. That it was at some former period in a far different state, is evident from the number of canals by which it is traversed, now dry and neglected; and the quantity of heaps of earth covered with fragments of brick and broken tiles, which are seen in every direction,—the indisputable traces of former population. At present the only inhabitants of the tract are the Sobeide Arabs. Around, as far as the eye can reach, is a trackless desert." "The abundance of the country has vanished as clean away as if the 'besom of desolation' had swept it from north to south; the whole land, from the outskirts of Babylon to the farthest stretch of sight, lying a melancholy waste. Not a habitable spot appears for countless miles." The land of Babylon is desolate, without an inhabitant. The Arabs traverse it; and every man met with in the desert is looked on as an enemy. Wild beasts have now their home in the land of Chaldæa; but the traveler is less afraid of them,—even of the lion,—than of "the wilder animal, the desert Arab." The country is frequently "totally impassable." "Those splendid accounts of the Babylonian lands yielding crops of grain two or three hundredfold, compared with the modern face of the country, afford a remarkable proof of the singular desolation to which it has been subjected. The canals at present can only be traced by their decayed banks."—Keith.

36—40. (36) plead thy cause, ch. l. 34. dry . . sea, poss. referring to the "great lake dug by Queen Nitocris to receive the waters of the Euphrates." springs, "the word is the same as that rendered 'fountain' in the Eng. Vers. of ii. 13. The literal sense is digging, and the noun is the singular. It refers to the network of canals dug throughout the country, which were necessary not only for commerce but also for irrigation. It is through the drying up of them that the country is barren to this day. See ver. 13, and l. 38."—Camb. Bib. (37) heaps, or ruins; ch. l. 26, 39. (38) yell, or growl; "the Heb. word is an imitation of the actual sound." (39) heat, i. e. when flushed with confidence and security. drunken, or a drinking-bout, a carousal. a perpetual sleep, the sleep of death at the hands of their conquering enemy.^b (40) lambs, etc., all classes of society are here indicated.^c

Babylon.—"The soil of this desert," says Captain Mignan, who traversed it on foot, and who, in a single day, crossed forty water-courses, "consists of a hard clay, mixed with sand, which at noon became so heated with the sun's rays that I found it too hot to walk over it with any degree of comfort. Those who have crossed those desert wilds are already acquainted with their dreary tediousness even on horseback; what it is on foot they can easily imagine." Where astronomers first calculated eclipses, the natives, as in the deserts of Africa, or as the mariner without a compass on the pathless ocean, can now direct their course only by the stars over the pathless desert of Chaldæa. Where cultivation reached its utmost height, and where two hundredfold was stated as the common produce, there is now one wide and uncultivated waste; and the sower and reaper are cut off from the land of Babylon. Where abundant stores and treasures were laid up, and annually renewed and increased, fanners have fanned, and spoilers have spoiled them till they have emptied the land. Where laborers, shaded by palm trees a hundred feet high, irrigated the fields till all was plentifully watered from numerous canals, the wanderer, without an object on which to fix his eye but "stinted and shortlived shrubs," can scarcely set his foot without pain, after the noonday heat, on the "arid and parched ground," in plodding his weary way through a desert, a dry land, and a wilderness. Where there were crowded thoroughfares, from city to city, there is now "silence and solitude;" for the ancient cities of Chaldæa are desolations, —where no man dwelleth, neither doth any son of man pass thereby.—Keith.

41-44. (41) Sheshach, ch. xxv. 26. praise . . earth, ch. xlix. 25.^a (42) The sea, a fig. for the invading army.^b (43) cities, related, or dependent cities. Poss. the reference may be to the inner and outer cities, the two parts into which Babylon was divided by the Euphrates. (44) Bel, Is. xlv. 1. swallowed up, the treasures taken by the nation called after the name of this god.^c flow together, in their pilgrimages to Bel's shrine. wall, vs. 58.

Cities of Chaldæa.—While the ancient cities of Chaldæa are thus desolate, the sites of others cannot be discovered, or have not been visited, as none pass thereby; the more modern cities, which flourished under the empire of caliphs, are "all in ruins." The second Bagdad has not indeed yet shared the fate of the first. And Hillah—a town of comparatively modern date, near to the site of Babylon, but in the gardens of which there is not the least vestige of ruins—yet exists. But the former, "ransacked by massacre, devastation and oppression, during several hundred years," has been "gradually reduced from being a rich and powerful city to a state of comparative poverty, and the feeblest means of defence." And of the inhabitants of the latter, about eight or ten thousand, it is said that "if anything could identify the modern inhabitants of Hillah as the descendants of the ancient Babylonians, it would be their extreme profligacy, for which they are notorious even among their immoral neighbors." They give no sign of repentance and reformation to warrant the hope that judgment, so long continued upon others, will cease from them: or that they are the people that shall escape. Indications of ruined cities, whether of a remote or more recent period, abound throughout the land. The process of destruction is still completing. Gardens which studded the banks of the Tigris have very recently disappeared, and mingled with the desert,—and concerning the cities also of Chaldæa the word is true that they are desolations. For "the whole country is strewn over with the debris of Grecian, Roman, and Arabian towns, confounded in the same mass of rubbish."—Keith.

45-49. (45) deliver . . soul, R. V. "save yourselves every man" preserve your lives from the perils of the time of judgment. (46) R. V. and let not your heart faint, neither fear ye for the rumor that shall be heard in the land; for a rumor shall come one year," etc., i. e. the air shall be full of all kinds of rumors.^a rumour, of the approach of the Chaldæan army. (47) Therefore, the exiles should take warning from these events. (48) sing for Babylon, all nature shall rejoice at the downfall of the oppressor. Another illustration of the favorite idea that nature will participate with man in the redemption. (49) "The fact of Babylon's having caused the death of Israelites shall be visited upon many nations, which shall be mixed up in her overthrow."—Camb. Bib.

Characteristics of the Several Prophets.—Each of the prophets has his own characteristic place in the development of religion, and his own distinctive message. Amos, the Carlyle of Hebrew history, was the prophet of righteousness; Hosea, whom I have ventured to compare to John G. Whittier, was the prophet of God's tender compassion and deep, undying love; Micah, the prophet of the poor, himself a peasant, was the prophet of fraternity and equality, long before those words were coined or thought of in connection with communal life; Isaiah—the First Isaiah—was the prophet of the true method of return to God. He also laid stress on righteousness, as Amos did; he also laid stress on God's mercy, as Hosea did; he also laid stress on equality, as Micah did; but he pointed out more clearly than any of the others the way of return by repentance to God and the possibility of such return. But Amos, Hosea, Micah, and Isaiah all spoke to the nation as a nation. They did not deal to any considerable extent with individuals. They dealt with Israel as Israel, with Judah as Judah. Jeremiah foresaw the breaking up of the nation, and lived to see it overturned and the great majority of the people carried into captivity, and, before they were carried off into captivity,

^a Is. xiii. 19.

"Babylon . . had been embellished with ornaments more than any city that we are acquainted with."—Herodotus.

^b Comp. Is. viii. 7, xvii. 12, 13.

^c "Reference may be to the holy vessels taken out of the temple of the Lord at Jerusalem, and placed in the temple of Bel."—Wordsworth.

vs. 42. "This metaphor is in common use to show the overwhelming power of an enemy. 'Tippoo Saib went down upon his foes; like the sea he swept them all away.' 'True, true, the British troops went like the sea upon Bhurtpore; the forts have been carried away.'"—Roberts.

^a "The first rumor of war denounced against the head of that empire shall be the year before the siege, when Cyrus and Nabonidus (or Belshazzar) shall engage in a battle, and the latter shall be overcome, upon which defeat the conqueror should in the following year lay siege to the city itself."—Lowth.

"Misfortune had conquered her, how true it is, that sooner or later the most rebellious must bow beneath the same yoke."—Mme. de Staël. "Content can soothe, where'er by fortune placed; can rear a garden in the desert waste."—White.

^a "We lead here a life of shame. Daily the reproach is cast in our teeth that Bel has proved more mighty than Jehovah; and, we are unable to answer the taunt, and shame covers our faces."—Spk. Com.

^b "On the cylinder of Nebuchadnezzar, still extant, are these words: 'In Babylon is the tower of my abode. . . . To make more difficult the attack of an enemy against Imgour-Bel, the indestructible wall of Babylon I constructed, a bulwark like a mountain. . . . I built my palace for the wonder of the people, . . . it is proof against all attack.'"—Wordsworth.

carried away into paganism. He gave up his hope for the reformation of the nation, and turned from the nation to the individual. It is hardly too much to say that in Jeremiah moral individualism was born.—Lyman Abbott.

50—53. (50) go away, R. V. "go ye," i. e. be prepared to depart for Jerusalem. Keep that end in mind. (51) confounded, R. V. "ashamed." The exiles intimate their prostrate condition in Babylon, and the way in wh. they, and their God, were contemned." (52) do judgment, "even on this account, says Jeremiah, skilfully repeating the opening words of the picture, shall the idols be visited and their land filled with the slain. The prophet speaks very appropriately of the visitation of the idols, for just this is the recompense for the disgrace inflicted on the house of Jehovah."—Lange. (53) mount . . . heaven, a double allusion (1) to the tower of Babel Gen. xi. 4; (2) to the high walls by which Babylon was surrounded."—Lange. height . . . strength, with allusion to her high and immense walls, 350 ft. high, according to Herodotus.^b

Jeremiah.—Renan goes too far when he says, if there had been no Jeremiah there would have been no Christianity. Only a Frenchman will undertake to tell what would have been if something else had been otherwise than it was. And he goes, perhaps, too far in saying that two-thirds of the glory attributed to Moses belongs to Jeremiah. But it is certain that Jeremiah lays, in his prophecies, the foundations of Christianity, and marks more, perhaps, than any other of the preceding prophets the transition from the prophecy of righteousness and law to the revelation of grace, mercy, and truth, through Jesus Christ. To him what is vital is the change in the individual character. It is not enough that the nation, as a nation, reforms its constitution; that the king, as a king, executes the laws; that the priests administer the temple sacrifices as they should be administered. God, he says, trieth the hearts; circumcision, he says, must be of the heart. Paul borrowed that figure, as he did some others, from Jeremiah. Put hope into Jeremiah, and you get Paul. It is a great transformation; but then hope is a great transformer. It is Jeremiah, therefore, who is the prophet of the New Covenant. It is he who first used that term which has now become so familiar with us, New Testament, for "testament" means "covenant." He is the inventor of the phrase.—Lyman Abbott.

The Kingdom of God has its Broad Walls.—(Cf. Neh. iii. 8, where we read of the broad walls of Jerusalem.) Let us see to it that we maintain and preserve those walls. 1. For separation. Let us not seek to come close to the world, in its habits, maxims, spirit, behavior. Keep the wall broad, strong, high. We cannot serve God and mammon. Let there be no attempt at compromise. And these walls are also 2. For security. If we do not maintain them we run great risk for ourselves. Tampering with sin is perilous work. And let us not think that we are more likely to win the world by such breaking down of the broad walls. The result is all the other way. See how broad a wall Christ maintained between himself and the world. God has built these walls. His power, his wisdom, his love, his promise, are all portions of these walls by which his Church is guarded and against which the gates of hell shall not prevail. 3. For enjoyment. What comfort there is in the thought of them, of the sure defence, the wall of fire, which God will be to his people! And on these walls, as we "walk about Zion, and go round her, and tell the towers thereof," what rest, what communion one with another, and what bright prospects are ours! The broad walls of Babylon shall be "broken down;" but these are eternal. Are we within them?—C.

54—58. (54) cry, the war cry; ch. i. 22. (55) waves, the masses of her invading enemy pouring through her streets. (56) mighty men, vs. 30. recompences, R. V. "for the Lord is a God of recompences, he shall surely requite." Ch. i. 29. (57) drunk, so incapable of defence." wise men, Da. ii. 2. (58) broad walls, Herodotus says, 85 Eng. feet wide; Strabo says, 32 feet.^b and the people, etc., R. V. "and the peoples shall labor for vanity and the nations for the fire," etc. Quoted from Heb. ii. 13. In the end all these conquests of Chaldæa will bring nothing but suffering to the conquerors.

^a Comp. the proverb, "They whom the gods would destroy, they first demet."

^b "The walls were from 41 to 60 miles in circumference, and from 75 to 335 feet in height, at different parts.

The Broad Walls.—According to Herodotus, the outer wall of Babylon was 200 royal cubits (about 373 English feet) high, while it was fifty cubits wide. This, however, both from the nature of the case, and from the conflicting testimony of other writers, seems exaggerated. Probably the height was about 60 or 70 English feet. The walls may have been 30 or 40 feet wide, as they allowed of a team of four horses being driven along them. See Herod., Bk. i. 179, and Rawlinson's notes on that passage.—Camb. Bib. They existed as walls for more than a thousand years after the prophecy was delivered; and long after the sentence of utter destruction had gone forth against them, they were numbered among "the seven wonders of the world." And what can be more wonderful now, or what could have been more inconceivable by man, when Babylon was in its strength and glory, that the broad walls of Babylon should be so utterly broken that it cannot be determined with certainty that even the slightest vestige of them exists. I have not been fortunate enough to discover the least trace of them in any part of the ruins at Hillah; which is rather an unaccountable circumstance considering that they survived the final ruin of the town, long after which they served as an enclosure for a park; in which comparatively perfect state St. Jerome informs us they remained in his time." In the sixteenth century they were seen for the last time by any European traveler (so far as the author has been able to trace), before they were finally so utterly broken as totally to disappear. And it is interesting to mark both the time and the manner in which the walls of Babylon, like the city of which they were the impregnable yet unavailing defence, were brought down to the grave, to be seen no more. "The meanwhile," as Rauwolf describes them, "when we were lodged there, I considered and viewed this ascent, and found that there were two behind one another" (Herodotus states that there was both an inner, or inferior, and outer wall), "distinguished by a ditch, and extending themselves like unto two parallel walls a great way about, and that they were open in some places, where one might go through like gates; wherefore I believe that they were the wall of the old town that went about them; and that the places where they were open have been anciently the gates (whereof there were one hundred) of that town. And this the rather because I saw in some places under the sand (wherewith the two ascents were almost covered) the old wall plainly appear."—Keith.

59—64. "When King Zedekiah, in the fourth year of his reign, made a journey to Babylon, Jeremiah gave to Seraiah, the brother of Baruch, the marshal, the prophecy against Babylon to take with him and read in Babylon, and then with prayer to the Lord to cast it into the Euphrates."—Lange. Seraiah was the brother of Baruch, ch. xxxii. 12. Quiet prince, R. V. "now Seraiah was chief chamberlain." (60) evil, or calamity. (61) and shalt see, and shalt read, R. V., "then see that those read," not to the people of Babylon, nor even perhaps to a solemnly convoked assembly of Jews, as either course would have been at least attended with much danger, and the first of them probably impossible to carry out. The words are nevertheless to be pronounced in the presence of Jewish witnesses, who could in after days testify that thus, long before the overthrow of Babylon, these words had been read in the midst of the very city where they were to take effect, and then buried in the heart of the same.—Camb. B. (63) cast . . Euphrates, a symbolical act. (64) Thus far, intimating that the next ch. is an appendix.

God's Power of Utter Destruction.—The impossibility of discovering this stone has to be considered relatively. Strictly speaking, it might perhaps have been recovered if it had been worth while. But for all practical purposes it was finally lost. Here is the difference between human destructions and the Divine destruction. Babylon is a wilderness still. Where God has chosen to make special marks of his wrath

They formed a square, in each side of which were 25 gates leading into the city. Between these gates were 250 towers, so that it was considered to be impregnable."—Partly Henderson.

"There is a jewel which no Indian mine can buy,

No chemic art can counterfeit;

It makes men rich in greatest poverty,

Makes water wine, turns wooden cups to gold,

The homely whistle to sweet music's strain;

Seldom it comes—to few from heaven sent—

That much in little—all in naught—content."

—Wilbye.

"It was his business to ride forward each day, and select the place where the king would halt and pass the night."—Spk. Com.

"The utility of riches consists not in the welfare of the individual, but in the general good of society. What ever tends to loss of health, or comfort, or deterioration of morals, in the main body of the nation, is not wealth but poverty, notwithstanding any superficial splendor of things wherewith it may be combined."—Quarterly Review.

"We may kneel and cast our load, E'en while we pray, upon our God, Then rise with lightened cheer;
Sure, that the Father, who is nigh
To hear the famished ravens cry,
Will hear in that we fear."

"The heathen mother takes her babe to the idol temple, and teaches it to clasp its little hands before its forehead, in the attitude of prayer, long before it can utter a word. As soon as it can walk, it is taught to gather a few flowers or fruits, or put a little rice upon a banana-leaf, and lay them upon the altar before the idol god. As soon as it can utter the names of its parents,
so soon it is taught to offer up its petitions before the images. Whoever saw a heathen child that could speak, and not pray? Christian mothers, why is it that so many children grow up in this enlightened land without learning to pray?" — Vt.
Chronicle.

with the unrighteousness of men there rests a blight which no human effort can overcome; and generally speaking there is no disposition to overcome it. But where destruction comes simply through human passion and power there may be comparatively speedy recovery. This is a side of war on which we do well to reflect. Wars, with all their terrible accompaniments, may do something to get rid of some evils, and may thus be the condition of great good. Man cannot destroy where God wills to preserve. But where God destroys he destroys finally, and it is just this dreadful possibility of final ruin that should make men cautious in their estimate of the future, and prompt to turn from all evil and selfish paths.—Pul. Com.

The Cities of Babylon.—The course of the Tigris through Babylonia, instead of being adorned, as of old, with cities and towns, is marked with the sites of "ancient ruins." Sitace, Sabata, Narisa, Fuchera, Sendia, "no longer exist." A succession of longitudinal mounds, crossed at right angles by others, mark the supposed site of Artemita, or Destagered. Its once luxuriant gardens are covered with grass; and a higher mound distinguishes "the royal residence" from the ancient streets. Extensive ridges and mounds (near to Houmania), varying in height and extent, are seen branching in every direction. A wall with sixteen bastions is the only memorial of Apollonia. The once magnificent Seleucia is now a scene of desolation. There is not a single entire building, but the country is strewed for miles with fragments of decayed buildings. "As far," says Major Keppet, "as the eye could reach, the horizon presented a broken line of mounds; the whole of this place was a desert flat." On the opposite bank of the Tigris, where Ctesiphon its rival stood, besides fragments of walls and broken masses of brickwork, and remains of vast structures encumbered with heaps of earth, there is one magnificent monument of antiquity, "in a remarkably perfect state of preservation," "a large and noble file of building, the front of which presents to view a wall three hundred feet in length, adorned with four rows of arched recesses, with a central arch, in span eighty-six feet, and above a hundred feet high, supported by walls sixteen feet thick, and leading to a hall which extends to the depth of one hundred and fifty-six feet," the width of the building. A great part of the back wall, and of the roof, is broken down; but that which remains "still appears much larger than Westminster Abbey." It is supposed to have been the lofty palace of Chosroes; but there desolation now reigns. "On the site of Ctesiphon, the smallest insect under heaven would not find a single blade of grass wherein to hide itself, nor one drop of water to allay its thirst."
In the rear of the palace, and attached to it, are mounds two miles in circumference, indicating the utter desolation of buildings formed to minister to luxury. But, in the words of Captain Mignan, "such is the extent of the irregular mounds and hillocks that overspread the site of these renowned cities, that it would occupy some months to take the bearings and dimensions of each with accuracy."—Keith.

CHAPTER THE FIFTY-SECOND.

This closing chapter was not written by Jeremiah. It gives an account of the capture of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans and the exile of the inhabitants. It corresponds closely to 2 Ki. xxiv. 18—xxv. 30, but is a better account.—Driver. 1-3. (1) Zedekiah, etc. 2 Ki. xxiv. 18-20.
(2) Jehoiakim, 2 Ki. xxiii. 34-37. (3) anger .. Lord, 2 Ki. xxiv. 3, 4.
it came to pass, "this came to pass," i. e. the evil conduct of the king.
presence, that, R. V., "presence: and Zedekiah," etc.

Advice to a Mother.—The first book read, and the last book laid aside by every child is the conduct of its mother. 1. First give yourself, then your child, to God. It is but giving Him His own. Not to do it is robbing God. 2. Always prefer virtue to wealth—the honor that comes from God to the honor that comes from men. Do this for yourself, do it for your child. 3. Let your whole course be to raise your child to a high standard. Do not sink into childishness yourself. 4. Give not heedless commands, but when you command require prompt obedience. 5. Never indulge a child in cruelty, even to an insect. 6. Cultivate sympathy with your child in all lawful joys and sorrows. 7. Be sure that you never correct a child until you know it deserves correction. Hear its story first and fully. 8. Never allow your child to whine or fret, or to bear grudges. 9. Early inculcate frankness, candor, generosity, magnanimity, patriotism, and self-denial. 10. The knowledge and fear of the Lord are the beginning of wisdom. 11. Never mortify the feelings of your child by upbraiding it with dullness; but do not inspire it with self-conceit. 12. Pray with and for your child, often and heartily. 13. Encourage all attempts at self-improvement. 14. Never deceive nor break a promise to a child. 15. Reprove not a child severely in the presence of strangers. 16. Remember that life is a vapor, and that you and your child may be called out of time into eternity any day.

4—11. (4) forts, moveable towers, sometimes with battering rams, such as Assyrian sculptures show." (5) besieged, invested so closely that no provisions from outside could reach the inhabitants. (6) famine was sure, comp. Lam. i. 19, 20; ii. 11, 12, 20; iv. 9, 10. (7) was broken up, R. V. "then a breach was made in the city," i. e. the walls, probably on the north. fled, comp. 2 Ki. xxv. 4. (8) pursued, etc., 2 Ki. xxv. 5. (9) land of Hamath, omitted in 2 Kings: comp. Je. xxxix. 5. (10) slew . . . princes, ch. xxxix. 6. (11) put him in prison, this information is additional to that given us in 2 Kings.

Zedekiah's army scattered.—Zedekiah's aim was to keep his army together, for as long as he could do that, there was a chance of averting the evil day, and perhaps in the end escaping it altogether. But without his army he was utterly helpless. He could not bring himself to heed Jeremiah's counsels, doing the right and putting his trust in Jehovah. And so when the army was gone everything was gone. Nothing remained but random, desperate attempts at flight, and the certainty of ultimate capture. We have to ask ourselves what we shall do when our army is scattered from us, when the resources of our own making are vanished. The chief battles of our life are not to be fought with external resources at all. In every warfare where the weapons are carnal the weapons must fail at last. Only when we are engaged in truly spiritual warfare, and have the hosts of heaven on our side, can we be sure that our army will not be scattered from us.—Pul. Com.

12—16. (12) tenth, comp. seventh of 2 Ki. xxv. 8,^b served the king, or stood before him: implying that he was a personal attendant on the king. (13) burned, etc., 2 Ki. xxv. 9. Probably only the larger houses were burnt. (14) all the walls, to ensure that it could not again be made a centre of rebellion. (15, 16) Comp. 2 Ki. xxv. 11, 12. multitude, or of the workmen.^c

Sparing the Poor.—Whilst the king, the nobles, the wealthy, and many others were carried into exile, certain of the poor were still left in the land. We are accustomed to speak of the hardships of poverty, but there are compensating advantages not a few. Many evils of the worst character only visit the rich. In times of public trouble the houses of the rich are attacked and the persons of the great are threatened, while the poor are left in happy neglect. Great men are beset with anxieties such as are unknown to the simpler lives of the poor. Who would be a king now that kings are all marks for the assassin? In those countries where the sovereign is compelled to take elaborate precautions for his safety, the poor citizen can move about the streets without fear. The one is a prisoner in his own palace, the other a free man with liberty to roam over the whole kingdom. Ambition aims at distinction, but that is a poor crown to win. Distinguished men have peculiar vexations and dangers of their own. There is more happiness in obscurity. The wise man will say, "Give me neither poverty nor riches;" and the Christian will add, "Not my will, but thine, be done," knowing well that for him that lot is best which his heavenly Father assigns to him.—Pul. Com.

a "Erected by the besieging party for the double purpose of observing what was done by those defending the city, and of annoying them by discharging missiles upon them from the elevation which was thus afforded." — Henderson.

"Do not think that you will have no battles if you follow the Nazarene; many battles are before you. Men do not object to a battle if they are confident that they will have victory, and, thank God, everyone of us may have the victory if we will."—D. L. Moody.

b In Heb. letters are used for numerals, and some of them are so much alike that confusion is easily made by copyists.

c "The object of Nebuchadnezzar was to people Babylon, not with paupers but with men of a better class, artisans and workmen, who would enrich it. The expense of taking them to Babylon must have been considerable." — Spk. Com.

"We must distinguish between what is essentially sacred and what is sacred only by association and to serve a purpose. When the purpose is accomplished the sacred sinks back into the common. God dwelleth not in temples made with hands. He was none the poorer for all this burning. Babylon learned hereafter that, though his house had been burned, his power was not at all diminished."

"The Jews fell as a nation because every man in it fell as an individual."
—F. D. Burrell.

"The captivity of Judah was the fault of her religious men. . . . Men are more endangered by false uses of the religious nature than by the denial of it altogether."
—A. E. Dunning.

"To give pain is the tyranny, to make happy the true empire, of beauty."
—Steele.

"Satiety comes of riches, and contumaciousness of satiety."
—Solon.

"If I were rich and owned but self—
How poor in self I'd be;
If I were poor and owned myself—
The wealth of worlds I'd see!"

17—23. "This description of the fate of the Temple furniture is much fuller than in the Kings' passage, and has no parallel whatever in chap. xxxix. For the vessels here mentioned see chap. xxvii. 19. They were too large to be conveniently carried as they were, and so were broken and taken to Babylon for the sake of the material. In Kings all is omitted before the brass."—Camb. Bib. (17) pillars, etc., 2 Ki. xv. 13—15. (20) under the bases, "the bases were under the ten lavers;" so this would better read, "The twelve brazen bulls which were instead of bases," to support the brazen sea. (21—23) pillars, etc., 2 Ki. xxv. 16, 17. (22) five cubits, 1 Ki. vii. 16.

The Finger as a Measure.—In the same way do the people of the East speak of anything which is less in measure than a span. "What height are your pepper vines?" "About two fingers." "When the rice becomes five fingers in height we shall want more rain." That which is less than a finger is spoken of as a grain of rice; the next gradation is an ellu, i. e. gingelly seed; the next is a mustard seed; and the last an anu, i. e. an atom.—Roberts.

24—27. (24) Seraiah, 2 Ki. xxv. 18. "Probably the son of Azariah and grandson of Hilkiah." (1 Chron. vi. 14.) (25) seven men, comp. "five men" of 2 Ki. xx. 19. principal scribe, R. V. "and the scribe of the captain of the host," i. e. the chief military scribe. (26, 27) so . . land, 2 Ki. xxv. 20, 21.

Pity for the Prisoner.—Mrs. Booth, who was the life and inspiration of the Salvation Army, and whose memory is likely to animate its work for many years, always placed herself on the side of misfortune and suffering, and the story of her first "open-air procession" is eminently characteristic of that spirit. When a little girl, running along the road with hoop and stick, she saw a prisoner dragged along by the constable to the lockup. A mob was hooting the unfortunate culprit, and his utter loneliness appealed at once to the child; it seemed to her that he had not a friend in the world. Quick as the thought, she sprang to his side, and marched down the street with him, determined that he should know there was one heart that felt for him, whether he suffered from his own fault or that of another. One might call this the first procession ever held by the Salvation Army. Patience in Suffering.—More than a year ago a young girl, belonging to a prominent family in a Southern town, was stricken with a loathsome and incurable disease. For months she bore intense agony, the mere sight of which made strong men turn pale; but whenever a moment of relief came she was hopeful, loving and gay, as if in health, eagerly seeing the villagers in whom she was interested, and saying once to her father, who had been a soldier: "When your captain ordered you to march over a bad bit of ground, you knew he had a reason for it. You did it without complaining. So will I." When at last she was laid to rest, an intelligent working-man came up to her father as he turned from her grave, and said respectfully: "Sir, there's hardly a man or woman, black or white, in this village, who has not been helped by the sight of that child's courage and faith in the Master she loved. Perhaps you don't understand why such pain was sent to her, but we do. She suffered for us."

28—30. (28) in the seventh year. As Ewald and Keil agree, we should correct "seventh" into "seventeenth" (just as in 2 Chron. xxxvi. 9, for "eight" we should read "eighteen"). On the small number of Jews deported Ewald remarks, "Nothing so clearly shows the extent to which the best men from the upper classes had been already despatched by the Chaldeans across the Euphrates, as the fact that in all the years of the second, and, if it be insisted on, of the third revolt, put together, they found only 4,600 men more whom they thought worth the trouble of transporting."—Pul. Com. three . . twenty, comp. 2 Ki. xxiv. 14, 16. (29) eighteenth year, when Nebuc. raised the siege of Jerus., to march against the king of Egypt. He then sent all the captive Jews in his camp away to Babylon. (30) three and twentieth year, when Nebuc. laid siege to Tyre.

Count Ugolino and His Children.—Ugolino, a Florentine count, with his four children, was thrown into a dungeon by Archbishop Ruggieri. The horrors which he was here doomed to encounter have given a melancholy celebrity to his name. "The hour," says he, "approached, when we expected to have something brought us to eat; but instead of seeing any food appear, I heard the door of that horrible dungeon more closely barred. I beheld my little children in silence, and could not weep; my heart was petrified. The little wretches wept; and my dear Anselmo said, 'Father, you look on us! What ails you?' I could neither weep nor answer, and continued swallowed up in silent agony all that day, and the following night, even till the dawn of day. As soon as a glimmering ray darted through the doleful prison, that I could view again those four faces in which my own image was impressed, I gnawed both my hands with grief and rage. My children, believing I did this through eagerness to eat, raising themselves suddenly up, said to me, 'My father, our torments would be less if you would allay the rage of your hunger upon us.' I restrained myself, that I might not increase their misery. We were all mute that day, and the following. The fourth day being come, Gouldo, falling extended at my feet, cried, 'My father! why do you not help me?' and died. The other three expired one after another, between the fifth and sixth day, famished, as thou seest me now! and I, being seized with blindness, began to go grouping upon them with my hands and feet; and continued calling them by their names three days after they were dead; then hunger vanquished my grief."—Percy Anec.

31—34. Comp. 2 Kings xxv. 27—30. Evil-merodach, son and successor of Nebuchadnezzar; ascended the throne B. C. 561, ruled for two years and was murdered by Neriglissar, his brother-in-law. lifted . . head, fig. for cheered and encouraged him, by giving him liberty, and some kindly notice.^a Comp. Gen. xl. 13, 20. (32) kings, i. e. the other captive kings kept to grace the court. (33) eat bread, i. e. take his place as an official of the palace. (Comp. 2 Sa. ix. 7, 11.) (34) continual diet, or daily provision for the maintenance of himself and his attendants.^d until the day of his death, all the days of his life, the latter of these clauses as the text now stands, is probably either an addition to, or originally a substitution for, the former, in order to avoid the inauspicious ending with the word death. The general object too of the paragraph seems to have been somewhat similar, viz. to leave the reader with a parting ray of comfort and encouragement in the thought that even in exile the Lord remembered His people and softened the heart of the heathen tyrant towards David's seed.—Camb. Bib.

Jeremiah.—A strange, sad, self-contradictory, eloquent, brave man was this Jeremiah, who abhors that which is evil and cleaves to that which is good, a Puritan before the Puritans, a Protestant before the Protestants, a lover of God, a lover of righteousness, a long-lived martyr in an age that could not comprehend him; and yet he left God's message not wholly uttered. He saw that the reform of the nation had not been reform of the individual. He saw that it was in vain to write God's laws in a book and put them in a pulpit. He saw that the nation could be made righteous only as God is written in the heart of the individual. But he did not know that the righteous God, the just God, the good God, the God of Amos and Hosea and Isaiah and Micah, was yet to come, in the person of his Son, into human life. It was left for the Great Unknown, the Second Isaiah, to bring that message. Jeremiah understood that God is the secret of life, and that the individual citizens must be rightened or the nation is ruined; but it was left for the Second Isaiah, the Great Unknown, to bring the last great message of prophecy to the world—that the personality of God must come to dwell with the presence of men before mankind can know that God is just and loving and merciful, and become just and loving and merciful like him.—Lyman Abbott.

^a "Evil-Merodach is said in Jewish tradition to have formed an acquaintance with Jehoiachin while they were companions in prison; Nebuchadnezzar having put his son in prison for a time."—Fausset.

^d "This change of condition, vouchsafed at Babylon by God's mercy, after the terrible maledictions denounced against him, and after a long exile and captivity of 37 yrs., was like a presage of comfort and mercy from God Himself, and was a pledge of the liberation and exaltation of the Jewish nation, when it had been humbled and purified by the discipline of suffering, and of its return to its own land."—Wordsworth.

Introduction.

(For General Introduction see commencement of Prophecies of Jeremiah.)

This Book is a kind of appendix to the Prophecies of Jeremiah, of which, in the original Scriptures, it formed a part. It expresses with pathetic tenderness the Prophet's grief for the desolation of the city and temple of Jerusalem, the captivity of the people, the miseries of famine, the cessation of public worship, and the other calamities with which his countrymen had been visited for their sins. The leading object was to teach the suffering Jews neither to despise the chastening of the Lord, nor to faint when rebuked of Him, but to turn to God with deep repentance, to confess their sins, and humbly look to Him alone for pardon and deliverance. No Book in Scripture is more rich in expressions of patriotic feeling, or of the penitence and trust which become an afflicted Christian. The form of these poems is strictly regular, with the exception of the last. In the original Hebrew they are alphabetical acrostics, in which every stanza begins with a new letter. The third has this further peculiarity, that all the three lines in each stanza have the same letter at the commencement. As a composition this Book is remarkable for the great variety of pathetic images it contains expressive of the deepest sorrow, and worthy of the subject which they are designed to illustrate (Angus). The Book is almost universally accepted as the work of Jeremiah.

SYNOPSIS.—(According to Horne.) This Book, which in our Bible is divided into five chapters, consists of five distinct Elegies.

Elegy I.—A Lamentation of the sad reverse of fortune which the country had experienced, and a confession that the miseries were well deserved.

Elegy II.—A melancholy detail of the dire effects of the Divine anger in the subversion of the civil and religious constitution of the Jews.

Elegy III.—The inexhaustible mercies of God are set forth as the never-failing source of consolation, and an exhortation to patience.

Elegy IV.—A contrast between the present deplorable condition of the nation and their former flourishing affairs.

Elegy V.—An epilogue to the previous Elegies. This chapter is in some versions entitled "The Prayer of Jeremiah."

CHAPTER THE FIRST.

a Jerusalem is described as a widow woman, sitting sad and pensive, on the ground, the position often taken by mourners.

"If these elegies are not quite contemporaneous with the scenes they describe so graphically they cannot have originated much later; for they are like the low wallings with which the storm sinks to rest, reminding us how recently the thunder was rolling and the besom of destruction sweeping over the land."—Exp. B.

b "The darkness or solitude of the night doth naturally promote melancholy reflections."

—Lowth.

c Comp. 2 Ki. xxiv. 2.

d "Image from robbers, who, in the E., intercept travellers at the narrow passes in hilly regions."—Fausset.

"It is the weeping cloud that blesses the earth."—Barlow.

e For the joy of these journeys comp. the Psalms of Degrees, cxx. —cxxxiii.

f Ex. xv. 20; Ps. lxxviii. 25; Je. xxxi. 13.

g De. xxviii. 14.

h "In ancient sculptures such mournful processions of women and tender children are often engraved."—Spk. Com.

"The sorrows which the soul endures, not self-inflicted, are but hooded joys that when she touches the white strand of heaven, they cluster round her and slip off their robes, and laugh

1-3. (1) solitary, alone; without her inhabitants.* as a widow, "cities are often described as the mothers of their inhabitants, and their kings and princes as their husbands;" in this instance Jehovah is the husband, for whose loss is the mourning. nations . . provinces, the surrounding kingdoms, e.g. Philistines, Edomites, etc. tributary, the word here means bond-servants. "Her only function now is to be a vassal unto others." (2) weepeth sore, picture of helplessness and hopelessness. Je. xiii. 17. lovers, or allied states. dealt treacherously, utterly failing her in the hour of her need. (3) Judah, etc., Je. lii. 27. captivity, R. V. marg. "exile," the long sufferings of the Jews at the hands of Egypt and Chaldaea had induced many of them to go voluntarily to dwell in other lands. affliction . . servitude, their breaking the Mosaic law in relation to setting at liberty the slaves, was one great sign and proof of their rebelliousness. straits, a metaphor taken from hunting: driven into a corner.^d

Inactive Sorrow and Sympathy Worthless.—We are sorry (for the English are a kind-hearted people) for the victims of our luxury and neglect; sorry for the thousands whom we let die every year by preventable diseases, because we are either too busy or too comfortable to save their lives; sorry for the savages whom we exterminate by no deliberate intent, but by the mere weight of our heavy footstep; sorry for the thousands who are used up yearly in certain trades in ministering to our comfort, even to our very luxuries and frivolities; sorry for the Sheffield grinders, who go to work as to certain death; sorry for the people whose lower jaws decay away in lucifer-match factories; sorry for the diseases of artificial flower-makers; sorry for the boys working in glass-houses whole days and nights on end without rest, "laboring in the very fire, and wearying themselves with weary vanity." We are sorry for them all, as the giant is for the worm on which he treads. Alas! poor worm. But the giant must walk on. He is necessary to the universe, and the worm is not. So we are sorry, for half an hour, and glad too (for we are a kind-hearted people) to hear that charitable persons or the Government, are going to do something towards alleviating these miseries. And then we return, too many of us, each to his own ambition, comforting ourselves with the thought that we did not make the world, and we are not responsible for it.—C. Kingsley.

4-6. (4) ways, i.e. highways leading from the country districts to Jerusalem. mourn, bec. none journey on them to the solemn feasts.^e Grass-grown roads and streets may, figuratively, be said to be in mourning. her gates, those of Zion, here were "the markets, al fresco tribunals, open spaces for public meetings." virgins, "who took a prominent part in all religious festivals." (5) chief, R. V., "are become the head:" masters over her. prosper, lit. "are at rest," so crushed is Zion, that they have no fear of her renewing her rebellion. children . . enemy, driven before them like a herd of cattle.^f (6) beauty, R. V. "majesty," that of her temple, palaces, and walls. harts, or deer.

Illusions.—Viewed in the softened lights of memory the past is strangely simplified, its mixed character is forgotten, and many of its unpleasant features are smoothed out, so that an idyllic charm hovers over the dream, and lends it an unearthly beauty. This is why so many people foolishly damp the hopes of children, who, if they are healthily constituted, ought to be anticipating the future with eagerness, by solemnly exhorting them to make hay while the sun shines, with the gloomy warning that the sunny season must soon pass. Their application of the motto carpe diem is not only pagan in spirit; it is founded on an illusion. Happily there is some unreality about most of our yearning regrets for the days that have gone. That sweet, fair past was not so radiant as its effigy in the dreamland of memory now appears to be; nor is the hard present so free from mitigating circumstances as we suppose. And yet, when all is said, we cannot find the consolation we hunger after in hours of darkness among bare conclusions of common-sense. The melancholy that laments the lost past can only be perfectly mastered by that Christian grace, the hope which presses forward to a better future.—Adeney.

 7-9. (7) remembered, better, remembers. In her afflicted state she thinks over the past, with the bitterness of regret.^a miseries, Heb. "compulsory wanderings," "persecutions." when, better, "after which." enemy, R. V. "adversary." sabbaths, R. V. "desolations;" Heb. "ceasings." (8) removed, or she is as a thing which men remove from their sight. She is become an abomination. sigheth, "over the infamy of her deeds thus brought to open shame." backward, as if she would hide herself. (9) skirts, wh. were as if rolled in the mire.^b last end, comp. De. xxxii. 29. down wonderfully, Is. xlvii. 1; Je. xlviii. 18.

The Terrible Havoc of Sin.—I. In its revolting defilement. II. In sinking the soul to a state of abject degradation. Sin dishonors the soul. 1. In the estimation of others; 2. In its own estimation. III. In rendering the soul reckless as to consequences. IV. In its desecration of sacred things. V. In reducing a people to want.—Hom. Com.

Love in Sorrow.—Always through the darkest part of every life there runs, though we may sometimes fail to see it, the golden thread of love, so that even the worst man on earth is not wholly cut off from God, since He will, by some means or other, eternally try to draw him out of death into life. We are astounded now and then to read that some cold-blooded murderer, some man guilty of a hideous crime, will ask in his last moments to see a child who loved him devotedly, and whom he also loved. We are astonished just because we do not understand the untiring heart of the Almighty Father, who in His goodness often gives to the vilest sinner the love of a pure-hearted woman or child. So true is the beautiful old Latin saying, Mergere nos patitur, sed non submergere Christus—Christ lets us sink, may be, but not drown.—Edna Lyall.

10, 11. (10) pleasant things, prob. with special reference to the sacred vessels of the temple.^c not enter, De. xxiii. 3. (11) All her people, ref. to the sufferings of the survivors of the destruction of Jerusalem. pleasant things, here, their jewels and treasures. relieve the soul, or "cause the breath to return;" i.e. refresh a fainting person with food. vile, i.e. treated as vile.

The Horrors of Famine.—The besieged city of Leyden was at its last gasp. Bread, malt-cake, horse-flesh, had entirely disappeared; dogs, cats, rats, and other vermin were esteemed luxuries. A small number of cows, kept as long as possible for their milk, still remained; but a few were killed from day to day, and distributed in minute proportions, hardly sufficient to support life among the famishing population. Starving wretches swarmed daily around the shambles where these cattle were slaughtered, contending for any morsel which might fall, and eagerly lapping the blood as it ran along the pavement, while the hides, chopped and boiled, were greedily devoured. Women and children all day long were seen searching gutters and dunghills for morsels of food which they disputed fiercely with the famishing dogs. The green leaves were stripped from the trees, every living herb was converted into human food, but these expedients could not avert starvation. The daily mortality was frightful—infants starved to death on the maternal breasts which famine had parched and withered, mothers dropped dead in the streets with their dead children in their arms. A disorder called the plague, naturally engendered of hardship and famine, now came, as if in kindness, to abridge the agony of the people. The pestilence stalked at noonday through the city, and the doomed inhabitants fell like grass beneath its scythe. From six to eight thousand human beings sank before this scourge alone; yet the people resolutely held out, women and men mutually encouraging each other to resist the entrance of their foreign foe—an evil more horrible than pest or famine.—Motley's "Dutch Republic."

12-14. (12) nothing . . by,^a as Zion sits in her desolateness and sorrow, she appeals to all who pass by to pity her woes. "As if the Prophet had said, Let any indifferent person judge, whether any calamity is like to mine."—Lowth. (13) From above, i.e. fr. heaven. When we come to the evolution of history we are introduced to a whole world of moral forces that are not at work in the material universe.—Exp. B. fire, or inflammation. net, image taken from hunting wild beasts. turned me out angels in the world of light."

 —J. Stanyan Bigg.

^a "The bitterest ingredient in the cup of adversity is the remembrance of lost possessions and enjoyments," —Henderson.

^b "None could stain our glory if we did not stain it ourselves." —Mat. Henry.

"We are not worst at once. The course of evil begins so slowly and from such slight source, an infant's hand might stem its breach with clay; but let the stream get deeper, and philosophy shall strive in vain to turn the headlong current."

^c 2 Chr. xxxvi. 10.

"What man should learn is, to reject all that is useless in remembrance, and to retain with cheerfulness all that can profit and amend. Forget not thy sins, that thou mayest sorrow and repent; remember death, that thou mayest sin no more; remember the judgment of God, that thou mayest justly fear; and never forget His mercy, that thou mayest never be led to despair." —Petrarch.

^a "This sorrowful exclamation may, in a secondary and spiritual sense, be regarded as coming from the lips of Christ on the cross, bewailing the sins and miseries of the world wh. caused Him that bitter anguish, of which alone it could be properly said, that 'no sorrow was like unto His sorrow.'" —Wordsworth.

"There is a bondage which is worse to bear than his who breathes, by roof and floor and wall pent in, a tyrant's solitary thrall: 'Tis his who walks about in the open air, one of a nation who henceforth must wear their fetters in their souls."

—Wordsworth.

"Let never day nor night unhallow'd pass, but still remember what the Lord hath done."

—Shakespeare.

"Great abundance of riches cannot of any man be both gathered and kept without sin."—Erasmus.

^a"They fell not on the battlefield but in the heart of the city."—Calvin.

^b Ex. ix. 29, 33; Je. iv. 31.

"The most terrible trait in these pictures, one that is common to all of them, is the Divine origin of the troubles. 'It was God who sent fire into the bones, spread the net, made the sufferer desolate and faint.'"—Exp. B.

"The forms of expression used in this vs. are strongly indicative of that violently excited state of the intestines which is occasioned by excessive grief. The whole verse is the most affecting 'maginable.'"—Henderson.

"In this widening outlook of the poet one sees a sign of the softening and enlarging effects of trouble."

back, to drive me into the nets. (14) yoke, an agricultural figure. his hand, as if He were the ploughman, who fastened firmly on the yoke. wreathed, i.e. the cords fastening the yoke are knotted together. strength to fall, R. V. "to fail." from . . up, R. V. "against whom . . stand." This weakness is largely moral. "There is nothing so wretchedly depressing as the consciousness of guilt."

The Uses of Suffering.—

Though long days did Anguish,
And sad nights did Pain
Forge my shield, Endurance,
Bright and free from stain.

Doubt in misty caverns,
'Mid dark horrors sought,
Till my peerless jewel,
Faith, to me she brought.

Sorrow that I wearied Should remain so long,
Wreathed my starry glory,
The bright crown of song.

Strife, that racked my spirit
Without hope or rest,
Left the blooming flower, Patience, in my breast."—Proctor.

15—17. (15) trodden, etc.,^a R. V. "set at nought." assembly, of armies; of enemies. An ironical use of the term to signify that Jehovah summons the Chaldeans to destroy the Jews as if to a religious festival. young men, who are the strength and hope of a nation. as . . winepress, expressive of the indignation and judgment of God. Is. lxi. 3. (16) mine eye, etc., Je. xiii. 17; xiv. 17; La. ii. 18. This is the plaintive lamentation of Zion, the widow, as she sits solitary. relieve, or revive. (17) spreadeth . . hands, in usual attitude of prayer, but of prayer under pressure of great distress.^b that . . him, R. V. "that they that are round about him . . adversaries." The last clause of the vs. represents Jerusalem as an object of contempt.

Discipline of Sorrow.—Sorrow is the noblest of all discipline. Our nature shrinks from it, but it is not the less for the greatness of our nature. It is a scourge, but there is healing in its stripes. It is a chalice, and the drink is bitter, but strength proceeds from the bitterness. It is a crown of thorns, but it becomes a wreath of light on the brow which it has lacerated. It is a cross on which the spirit groans, but every Calvary has an Olivet. To every place of crucifixion there is likewise a place of ascension. The sun that was shrouded is unveiled, and heaven opens with hopes eternal to the soul, which was nigh unto despair.—H. Giles.

18—20. (18) righteous, Da. ix. 7, 14. commandment, lit. mouth, i.e. message by His prophets. This is the expression of penitence. all people, R. V. "all ye peoples." (19) lovers, vs. 2. elders . . city, i.e. died of famine, while vainly seeking for food. (20) bowels, etc., seat of the emotions. troubled, lit. "are red, inflamed" with sorrow. Is. xvi. 11; Je. xlviii. 36. turned, or violently agitated. as death, "pale pining forms, slowly wasting with hunger, and presenting the very image and appearance of death."—Spk. Com.

False Remedy for Sorrows.—You that in your sorrows give yourselves to mirth and pastime, and merry meetings, thinking thereby to drive them away, you do rather increase and augment them. Just like the pelican, of whom it is reported that, being naturally afraid of fire, the poor silly creature keeps fluttering with her wings, thinking thereby to extinguish and put them out, but does but inflame and kindle them; and by this means the fire burns both her nest and self too. So, for us to go to worldly joys and pastimes to quench the sorrows and troubles of our minds, is the ready way rather to increase than remove them.—Christopher Love.

21, 22. (21) called, or proclaimed. The day of judgments on the Babylonians; the day of the capture of Babylon. (22) do . . me, I have had my punishment; do thou proceed to inflict upon the human agents of thy wrath their share. "The vengeance here sought for cannot be brought into line with Christian principles; but the poet had never heard the Sermon on the Mount. It would not have occurred to him that the spirit of revenge was not right, any more than it occurred to the writers of maledictory Psalms."—Exp. B.

The Day that will Right all Wrongs (vs. 21).—In that day—1. God shall no longer be shut out of His own world; 2. Christ shall no longer be denied and blasphemed; 3. Evil shall no longer prevail; 4. Error shall give place to truth; 5. The saints shall no longer be maligned.—H. Bonar.

Comfort in Sorrow.—I say there is comfort, real and deep, in thinking that the path of sorrow we tread has been beaten smooth and wide by the feet of the best that ever trod this world; that our blessed Saviour was a Man of Sorrows; and that the best of His Church have been suffered to journey by no other path than that their Master went. It is not alone that the mourner travels through this vale of tears: Apostles and Prophets are of the company; saints and martyrs go with him; and the sorrowful face of the Great Redeemer, though sorrowful now no more, remains for ever with the old look of brotherly sympathy to His servants' eyes and hearts. Nothing hath come to us, nothing will come to us, but has been shared by better men. Search out the human being suffering the sharpest sorrow, and we can match it in the best of the Church of God.—Boyd.

CHAPTER THE SECOND.

1—4. (1) with a cloud, a dark threatening thunder-cloud.^a in his anger, "if God is tormenting His people it must be because He is their enemy—so the sad-hearted patriot reasons. The course of Providence does not shape itself to him as a merciful chastisement, as a veiled blessing; its motive seems to be distinctly unfriendly."—Adeney. beauty of Israel, Solomon's temple. The word "Israel" shows that the elegist recognizes the unity of the Jewish race, wh. civil war has not destroyed. footstool, i.e. the Mercy-Seat over the ark.^b This was regarded as the very centre of the Divine presence. (2) habitations, homesteads, with pastures. If God does not spare the holiest by reason of its sacredness: neither does He spare the lowliest by reason of its obscurity. strongholds, fortified towns. polluted, R. V. "profaned;" made the sacred land common or unclean, free to the invader. (3) horn, the symbol of power. God took away all power of defence. drawn . . enemy, God no longer defends his people. burned against, R. V. "burned up." (4) pleasant to the eye, all the chiefest in worth and dignity. tabernacle, R. V. "tent," i.e. habitation, city.

The Lord as an Enemy.—The Lord may become to us as an enemy. We must not suppose the relations of God to those who forsake him to be purely negative. He cannot simply leave them to their own devices. He is a King who must needs maintain order and restrain and punish rebellion, a Judge who cannot permit law to be trampled underfoot with impunity, a Father who cannot abandon his children, but must chastise them in their wrong-doing just because he is so closely related to them. Let it be well understood, then, that, in opposing ourselves to God, we run counter to a power, a will, an active authority. We provoke the anger of God. We do not simply strike ourselves against the stone, we cause the stone to fall upon us and grind us to powder.—Pul. Com.

5—8. (5) swallowed, comp. Jer.'s likening Nebuchadnezzar to a lion. increased, or heaped it up. (6) a garden, i.e. as easily as a besieging army destroys a fruit orchard wh. lies unprotected beyond the city wall. despised . . priest, i.e. shown no regard for even the most honorable offices. He made all to share in His judgments.^c (7) cast off, comp. Ps. lxxxix. 38, 39. This casting off of God's altar and abhorrence of the ^c Je. l. 1, 2, etc.

"For his was not that open, artless soul, that feels relief by bidding sorrow flow; nor sought he friend to counsel or console, whate'er his grief mote be, which he could not control."—Byron.

"When God our Comforter hides the light of His countenance the night is most dark. Yet the darkness is not always perceived, or its cause recognised. Then to miss the consolations of God consciously, with pain, is the first step towards recovering them."—Adeney.

^a "The Lord hath poured out His fury upon Zion, as in a tempest, and has dashed down her beauty as with lightning, and has not spared the ark of His sanctuary."—Wordsworth.

^b 1 Chr. xxviii. 2; Ps. lxxx. 1, xcix. 1, 5, cxxiii. 8.

"God keeps his thunder for his friends as certainly as for his enemies, if they be unfaithful to the covenant which unites them; nay, would it not be more correct to say that a more terrible thunder is reserved for those who, knowing the right, yet pursue the wrong."—Parker.

^c "With the destruction of the city the royal authority fell; with the ruined temple and the cessation of the festivals the functions of the priest ceased."—Spk. Com.

"Titus had the trees cleared from the Mount of Olives, so that one of the first incidents in the Roman siege of Jerusalem must have been the destruction of the Garden of Gethsemane." — Adeney.

a "The scene here depicted is presented in the most touching colors. The liver, denoting the bile, wh. is formed on the inferior surface of the liver, is copiously discharged when the passions are violently agitated." — Henderson.

In prosperity prepare for a change; in adversity hope for one.

"Law is to a nation what air is to the lungs, the unconscious source of life: without it the national life becomes anarchy and death."

b "What can I bring forward as a witness or instance, to prove that others have sustained as grievous ills as thou? I cannot console thee as mourners are often consoled by showing that thy lot is only what others too suffer." — Fausset.

c Comp. Je. 11. 8. v. 81. xiv. 14. xxiii. 16.

d "The false prophets, in their attempts to account for the captivity, invented any cause but the true one, the apostasy of the Jews." — Henderson.

e Lev. xxvi. 14. —39; De. xxviii. 15—68.

f For the bold figure comp. Is. xiv. 31; Je. xxii. 29; Hab. ii. 11; Lu. xix. 40.

Temple where mercy was to be expected showed plainly the hopelessness of the case. made a noise, their triumphant shouting on getting possession of the temple. (8) stretched . . line, the destruction is carried out with the same exactness as a builder exercises in constructing a building. Is. xxxiv. 11.

9—12. (9) sunk, covered up with ruins and rubbish. bars, or defences, among the Gentiles, carried away captive. law is no more, R. V. "where the law is not;" i.e. the exiles were enduring hardship in a land wh. did not observe the Torah of the Jews. prophets . . vision, with the destruction of the government, the voice of prophecy became silent. (10) elders, setting the example of extreme grief. virgins, "these young girls are the choristers whose clear, sweet voices used to ring out in strains of joy at every festival. Now both the grave utterances of magistrates and the blithe singing of maidens are hushed into one gloomy silence." (11) liver . . earth, the sight of the suffering among the little children aroused strong emotion. swoon, or faint.* (12) to their mothers, who could give them nothing. as the wounded, dying a lingering, miserable death.

Treatment of Sorrows and Pleasure.—That which the French proverb hath of sickness, is true of all evils, that they come on horseback, and go away on foot; we have often seen a sudden fall, or one meal's surfeit hath stuck by many to their graves; whereas pleasures come like oxen, slow and heavily, and go away like post-horses, upon the spur. Sorrows, because they are lingering guests, I will entertain but moderately; knowing that the more they are made of, the longer they will continue; and for pleasures, because they stay not, and do but call to drink at my door, I will use them as passengers with slight respect. He is his own best friend, that makes least of both of them.—Bishop Hall.

13—16. (13) take to witness,^b or, What prophetic testimony can I give thee? The Prophet had no consoling or comforting message to deliver. equal to thee, what instance of national calamity can compare with thine? breach . . sea, measureless, like the sea. (14) foolish things, delusions, Jer. xxiii. 26.^c discovered, or declared to thee; not sought to bring thee to a true sense of thy sins. turn . . captivity, R. V. "bring again, etc."; i.e. by producing in thee repentance. false burdens, or prophetic messages. causes, false reasons to account for your banishment.^d (15) clap their hands, Job. xxvii. 23, xxxiv. 37. wag . . head, in token of joy or contempt. 2 Ki. xix. 21; Ps. xlv. 14. perfection of beauty, Ps. xlviii. 2. (16) opened . . mouth, as wild beasts.

Indelible Impressions.—The rapidity with which ideas grow old in our memories is in a direct ratio to the squares of their importance. Their apparent age runs up miraculously, like the value of diamonds, as they increase in magnitude. A great calamity, for instance, is as old as the trilobites an hour after it has happened. It stains backward through all the leaves we have turned over in the book of life before its blot of tears or of blood is dry on the page we are turning. Did you ever happen to see that most soft-spoken and velvet-handed steam-engine at the Mint? The smooth piston slides backwards and forwards as a lady might slip her delicate finger in and out of a ring. The engine lays one of its fingers calmly, but firmly, upon a bit of metal; it is a coin now, and will remember that touch, and tell a new race about it, when the date upon it is crusted over with twenty centuries. So it is that a great, silent-moving misery puts a new stamp on us in an hour or a moment—as sharp an impression as if it had taken half a lifetime to engrave it.—Holmes.

17—19. (17) devised, purposed, and previously intimated.* The eldest does not lose sight of the fact that behind the mockery and hatred of these enemies, is the real Power wh. has devised these miseries. (18) wall, appealing to the very wall, which was broken down, to join in weeping over the sorrows of the city.^b river, or torrent. apple, i.e. the pupil, comp. Ps. xvii. 8. (19) cry out, in prayer. beginning . . watches, i.e. of each watch; cry all the night through. young children, nothing could be more pitiable than to see these dying of hunger. top . . street, at every street corner. Is. li. 20.

Ancient Wall.—Walls can not only be beautiful and even sublime, as Mr. Ruskin has shewn in his Stones of Venice; they may also wreathe their severe outlines in a multitude of thrilling associations. This is especially so when, as in the present instance, it is the wall of a city that we are contemplating. Not a new piece of builder's work, neat and clean and bald, bare of all associations, as meaningless as in too many cases it is ugly, but an old wall, worn by the passing to and fro of generations that have turned to dust long years ago, bearing the bruises of war on its battered face, crumbling to powder, or perhaps half buried in weeds—such a wall is eloquent in its wealth of associations, and there is pathos in the thought of its mere age when this is considered in relation to the many men and women and children who have rested beneath its shadow at noon, or sheltered themselves behind its solid masonry amid the terrors of war. The walls that encircle the ancient English city of Chester and keep alive memories of mediæval life, the bits of the old London wall that are left standing among the warehouses and offices of the busy mart of modern commerce, suggest to us multitudinous reflections. But the walls of Jerusalem surpass them all in the pathos of the memories that cling to their old grey stones. It does not require a great stretch of imagination to picture these walls as once glowing and throbbing with an intense life, and now dreaming over the unfathomable depths of age-long memories.—Exp. B.

20—22. (20) to whom, even to Thine own chosen and covenant people.^c fruit, i. e. their own children. span long, R. V., "that are dangled in the hands."^d (21) young . . . old, the slaughter was indiscriminate; a mere massacre of the population. (22) solemn day, or feast-day. Terrors come crowding round Zion, as people used to do at her festivals. The phrase, Magor-missabib, fear on every side, is found Je. vi. 25. swaddled, R. V., "dandled."

Light Beyond.—A traveler in Madeira set off one morning to climb the summit of a lofty mountain to gaze upon the distant scene and enjoy the balmy air. He had a guide, and they had with difficulty ascended some two thousand feet, when a thick mist was seen descending upon them, obscuring the heavens. The traveler thought there was no hope left but to retrace their steps or be lost. But as the cloud came nearer and darkness enveloped them, the guide stepped on before, penetrating the mist, calling out every now and then, "Press on, master, press on; there's light beyond!" They did press on, and in a few minutes, emerging from the thick mist, found themselves gazing upon a scene of transcendent beauty. Above, the sky was bright and cloudless; below, the almost level cloud through which they had passed was silvered with the rays of the sun, like a field of untrodden snow. In the darkest experiences, if we will but listen, we may hear the voice of our Divine Guide exclaiming, "Press on, press on; there is light ahead."—Barlow.

CHAPTER THE THIRD.

1—6. (1) seen affliction, in the sense of suffering or experiencing it. Reference is rather to the suffering of the people, in the siege and destruction of Jerusalem, wh. he had personally shared. rod, etc., Babylon was God's instrument of chastisement; Pr. xxii. 8. (2) brought, etc., R. V., "caused me to walk in." darkness, the fig. for calamities.^a (3) turneth his hand, in order to give a repetition of strokes; R. V., "turneth his hand again and again all the day." (4) made old, worn out as with constant rubbing and chafing. broken my bones, Is. xxxviii. 13.^b (5) builded, as besiegers build mounds. gall, or bitterness. travel, "travail," "weariness." (6) set me, R. V., "made me to dwell." dark places, the victim of Divine wrath is a captive languishing in a dungeon, which is as dark as the abodes of the dead, as the dwellings of those who have been long dead. The horror of this metaphor is intensified by the idea of the antiquity of Hades.—Exp. B. dead of old, R. V., "have been long dead."

Unequalled Grief.—Every man feels, and not strangely, that there never were such experiences of life as his own. No joy was ever like our joy, no sorrow ever like our sorrow. Indeed, there is a kind of indignation excited in us when one likens our grief to his own. The soul is jealous of its experiences, and does not like pride to be humbled by "Violent fires soon burn out themselves." —Shakespeare.

"The misfortune is, that, when man has found honey, he enters upon the feast with an appetite so voracious, that he usually destroys his own delight by excess and satiety." —Knox.

"Every inordinate cup is unblest, and the ingredient is a devil." —Shakespeare.

"Too much is stark nought." —Welsh.

"One may be surfeited with eating tarts."

"Gentleness does more than violence." —French.

"Soon fire, soon ashes." —Dutch.

"This is a continuation of the pathetic appeal from the wall which surrounded Jerusalem, and which now lay in ruins on the ground." —Wordsworth.

^a Comp. Le. xxvi. 29; De. xxviii. 56, 57; Je. xix. 9.

"A mystery lies upon the whole scheme of life. Its best explanation I find is Christ. My hope is in His cross." —Parker.

"A bow overbent will weaken."

"Extremes meet." "Too far east is west."

"A baited cat may grow as fierce as a lion."

—English.

^a Is. lix. 9; Je. xlii. 18; Am. v. 20.

^b "The anguish I feel in my mind is as painful as if all my bones were broken." —Lowth.

"Very prob. the Prophet draws much of what he says from his own experience, but the whole that he sets forth is more than his own personality; it is the type and pattern of every individual." —Ewald.

"The excesses of our youth are drafts upon our old age, payable with interest, about thirty years after date."—Colton.

"The application of Ch. iii. to the Man of Sorrows is more than a case of literary illustration; for the idea of representative suffering which here emerges, and which becomes more definite in the picture of the servant of Jehovah in Isa. liii., only finds its full realization and perfection in Jesus Christ."

"Desperate tides of the whole world's anguish forced through the channel of a single heart."—Exp. B.

a "He conceives of himself as a traveller whose way is blocked up by a solid wall, and who, being compelled to turn aside into the devious pathways of the forest, is exposed to the rapacity of wild beasts."—Henderson.

"Small causes are sufficient to make a man uneasy, when great ones are not in the way; for want of a block, he will stumble at a straw."—Swift.

b "Keeping up the metaphor of vs. 15, Jer. complains that his bread was so filled with grit that in eating it his teeth were broken."—Spk. Com.

"What would the nightingale care if the toad despised her singing? She would still sing on, and leave the cold toad to his dank shadows. And what care I for the sneers of men who grovel upon earth? I will still sing on the thought that they are common. For though we know that the world groans and travails in pain, and has done so for ages, yet a groan heard by our ear is a very different thing from a groan uttered by our mouth. The sorrows of other men seem to us like clouds of rain that empty themselves in the distance, and whose long-traveling thunder comes to us mellowed and subdued; but our own troubles are like a storm bursting right overhead and sending down its bolts upon us with direct plunge.—Beecher.—Pitt Lying in Solitude.—Pitt died at a solitary house on Wimbledon Common. Not far off, by the roadside, stood a small country inn, where the various parties interested in the great statesman's life were accustomed to apply for information, and leave their horses and carriages. On the morning of the 23rd of January, 1806, an individual having called at the inn, and not being able to obtain a satisfactory reply to his inquiries, he proceeded to the house of Pitt. He knocked, but no servant appeared—he opened the door and entered—he found no one in attendance—he proceeded from room to room, and at length entered the sick chamber, where, on a bed, in silence and in perfect solitude, he found to his unspeakable surprise, the dead body of that great statesman who had so lately wielded the power of England, and influenced, if he did not control, the destinies of the world. We doubt whether any much more awful example of the lot of mortality has even been witnessed.—Cheever.

7—12. (7) hedged, Job iii. 23, xix. 8; Ho. ii. 6. chain, lit. chain of brass. (8) shuteth out, as if the prisoner were shut down so deep in his dungeon that his prayers cannot reach his jailer; Job xxx. 20; Ps. xxii. 2. (9) inclosed, R. V., "fenced up." paths crooked, compelling me to turn aside from the ordinary road.^a (10) was, R. V., "is." bear . . lion, the peril of those who take by-paths and forest-paths. (11) turned, etc., "caused me to go astray." pulled . . pieces, as by these wild beasts. desolate, i. e. stunned, stupefied. (12) me as a mark, Job vii. 20. Made me the mark or object of His indignation.

The Sinner's Hedges (vs. 7).—I. There is the hedge of moral sense. II. Of social life. 1. Of social relationship; 2. Of social sentiment. III. Of personal incapacity. 1. The lack of physical health; 2. The lack of intellectual ability; 3. The lack of secular means.—Dr. Thomas.

The Use of Trials.—A friend was asked concerning a beautiful horse feeding on the pasture with a clog on his foot, "Why do you clog such a noble animal?" The reply was, "I would a great deal sooner clog him than lose him; he is given to leap hedges." That is why God clogs his people. He would rather clog them than lose them, for if He did not, they would leap and be gone.—Spurgeon.

13—16. (13) arrows . . quiver, lit. "sons of his quiver;" "nay, arrow after arrow has already been let fly, and the dreadful Huntsman, too skilful ever to miss His mark, has been shooting 'the sons of His quiver' into the very vitals of the object of his pursuit."—Adeney. veins, seat of the affections, the vitals. (14) derision, Je. xx. 7. their song, a popular by-word, a butt of ridicule; Job xxx. 9. (15) bitterness, better pl., bitterness. wormwood, De. xxix. 18. (16) broken my teeth, Pr. xx. 17.^b covered me, better, "pressed me down into ashes;" fig. for extreme humiliation wh. the enemies forced upon Jerusalem.

Perfect Through Suffering.—The people of Verona, when they saw Dante in the streets, used to say, "See, there is the man that was in hell!" Ah, yes! he had been in hell—in hell enough, in long severe sorrow and struggle, as the like of him is pretty sure to have been. Comedias that come out divine are not accomplished otherwise. Thought, true labor of any kind, highest virtue itself, is it not the daughter of pain? Born as out of the black whirlwind; true effort, in fact, as of a captive struggling to free himself: that is thought. In all ways we are to become perfect through suffering.—Carlyle.

17—21. (17) removed, R. V. marg., "cast off." peace, prosperity. Ps. lxxxviii. 14. prosperity, or good. (18) said, or thought in my heart. strength . . Lord, the exceeding heaviness of the immediate misery keeps the hope of the light of a new day quite out of sight; Is. xl. 27. (19) Remembering, better rend., remember, an invocation to God. misery, or homelessness. (20) humbled, R. V., "bowed down;" sinks down as in a swoon. (21) This, the assurance of the faithfulness and mercy of God, wh. will not overlook or leave unrewarded true humility and contrition.

The Importance of Humility.—Dr. Franklin once received a very useful lesson from the excellent Dr. Cotton Mather, which he thus relates in a letter to his son:—"The last time I saw your father was in 1724. On taking my leave, he showed me a shorter way out of the house by a narrow passage, which was crossed by a beam overhead. We were still talking, as I withdrew, he accompanying me behind, and I turning towards him, when he said hastily, 'Stoop, stoop!' I did not understand him till I felt my head hit against the beam. He was a man who never missed an opportunity of giving instruction; and upon this he said to me, 'You are young, and have the world before you; learn to stoop as you go through it and you will miss many hard thumps.' This advice, thus beat into my head, has frequently been of use to me; and I often think upon it when I see pride mortified and misfortunes brought upon people by their carrying their heads too high."—Laconics.

22—25. (22) we . . consumed, Adeney prefers the trans. of the Targum: "The Lord's mercies, verily they cease not." This restores balance to the triplet wh. designs to teach the amazing persistence of God's goodness. compassions, Ps. lxxxvi. 15. (24) portion, Ps. xvi. 5, lxxiii. 26, cxix. 57; Je. x. 16. (25) wait for Him, and so wait His time.

God's Unceasing Mercies.—I. God's mercies never cease. 1. We have no claim upon their continuance; 2. We have done much to provoke the cessation of them; (1) By ungratefully accepting them; (2) By complainingly ignoring them; (3) By sinfully abusing them; 3. They sometimes appear to cease; 4. They change their form. Even wrath is mercy in disguise. II. God's mercies are constantly renewed. III. The ceaselessness of God's mercy is a proof of his faithfulness.—Pul. Com.

Jeremiah and the Duke, a Contrast.—Imagine the Prophet in his solitariness. All around him is widespread desolation: the once gorgeous palace is in ruins; the temple, adorned with gold and silver, and the richest tapestry, no longer graces the heights of Moriah, but is reduced to ashes; the favored people are in exile; the Prophet is sorrowful and sad; yet, while the tear still glistens in his eye, and his bosom heaves with intense emotion, he exclaims, "The Lord is my portion, saith my soul; therefore will I hope." How different is it with the man whose portion is earthly! It is said of a certain duke that he has a passion for costly diamonds; and what is the consequence? His house resembles a castle rather than a mansion, and is surrounded with a lofty wall, over which no one can climb without giving alarm. His treasure is kept in a safe, let in the wall of his bedroom, so that it cannot be reached without first waking or murdering the owner; the safe is so constructed that it cannot be forced without discharging four guns, and setting an alarm-bell a-ringing in every room. His bedroom, like a prisoner's cell, has but one small window, and the bolt and lock of the massive door are of the stoutest iron. In addition to these precautions, a case, containing twelve loaded revolvers, stands by the side of his bed. Might we not inscribe over it, "Diamonds are my portion; therefore I do not fear?"—R. Gray.

26—30. (26) good, "the repetition of the word at the beginning of this and the connected verses heightens the effect." quietly wait, or wait in silence;^a abstaining from all complaining. salvation, including all God's gracious ways of helping. (27) yoke, the yoke may stand for one of three things—for instruction, for labor, or for trouble. Divine disciplinary dealings. youth, early in life, when all lessons are more easily learned. (28) keepeth silence, comp. "quietly wait," of vs. 27; R. V., "Let him sit alone," etc.; vs. 29, "Let him put," etc.; vs. 30, "Let him give," etc. borne it, R. V., "laid it." (29) mouth . . dust, the attitude of deep humiliation.^b (30) cheek, etc., "the connection is, if suffering is really attended with benefit to the sufferer, then let him submit readily to it."—Cam. B. Is. i. 6; Mat. v. 39.

Wisdom Sought Early.—The human soul in youth is not a machine of which you can polish the cogs with any kelp or brick-dust near at hand, and, having got it into working order, and good, empty, and oiled serviceableness, start your immortal locomotive at twenty-five years old or thirty, express from the Strait Gate on the Narrow Road. The whole period of youth is one essentially of formation, edification, instruction in the ear and bosom of God."—Beecher.

"No roses bloom upon my fading cheek, nor laughing graces wanton in my eyes; but haggard Grief, lean-looking, sallow Care, and pining Discontent—a rueful train—dwell on my brow, all hideous and forlorn."—Rowe.

"What a rich feast the canker grief has made; how has it suck'd the roses of thy cheeks! and drunk the liquid crystal of thy eyes!"—Sewell.

^a Mal. iii. 6.

"Sometimes a light surprises the Christian while he sings: It is the Lord who rises with healing in His wings. When comforts are declining, He grants the soul, again, a season of clear shining, to cheer it after rain."

"In every distress, learn to wait with patience for the appointed time. Wait for it believing, wait for it praying, wait for it contending."

"Visiting a dying Christian woman, Dr. John Brown once said to her, 'What would you say, Janet, if, after God has done so much for you, He should let you drop into hell?' She calmly replied, 'E'en as He likes; but He'll lose more than I will.'"

^b Ps. xxxvii. 7.

Ps. cxix. 25.

The teacher is like the switchman, who holds the key to the switches on the railroad. If he does his duty faithfully, the train will reach its destination safely: if he neglects it, disaster and ruin.

follow. A misplaced switch or a wrong signal may send hundreds into eternity unprepared.

c He. xii. 10.

d "As God takes no pleasure in oppressing the poor and helpless, so neither will He suffer any men to go unpunished that are guilty of such acts of injustice and cruelty, who never think that all the wrongs they do are committed in the sight of the supreme Judge of the world. —Lowth.

"O God! how thou breakest into families! Must not the disease be dangerous when a tender-hearted surgeon cuts deep into the flesh? How much more where God is the operator, who afflicteth not from His heart, nor grieveth the children of men?" —McCheyne.

a "The prep. in the Heb. is very forcible, implying, 'Let us go back, not half-way but the whole.' —Nagelsbach.

b "The action of confession was not to be the mere outward extension of the hands towards God. Such outward expression, to be sincere, was to be accompanied with the inward feelings of the heart." —Henderson.

"The greatest blessing to be sought for her was not liberty to return to the hills and cities of Palestine; it was permission and power to come back to God." —Exp. B.

c "Our sins become the hiding cloud."

"I have seen a father hold out at a distance from the child,

(I use the words with their weight in them), in taking of stores, establishment in vital habits, hopes, and faiths. There is not an hour of it but is trembling with destinies; not a moment of which, once past, the appointed work can ever be done again; or the neglected work struck on the cold iron.—Ruskin.

31-36. (31) cast off, He puts away in chastisement, but not in forsaking. Divine punishments are only temporary, hence the need of resignation. (32) cause grief, by His judgments. (33) willingly, lit. "from his heart."^c (34) crush, etc., prob. referring to the excess of cruelty with which the Chaldeans had executed the Divine commission. (35) turn . . right, so as to procure an unjust judgment. most High, here only a superior, a judge. The judges as representing God were called by His name; see Ex. xxi. 6.—Rev. Ver. (36) approveth not, or seeth not with approval.^d The argument is: if God does not approve of these things in men, He cannot do them Himself, therefore mankind must wait patiently before the Lord.

Chastisement for a Season.—I. The fact that chastisement is only for a season. 1. Is no ground for reckless indifference. For (1) The wrath is terrible enough while it lasts; (2) It must endure as long as impenitent guilt is persisted in; (3) Sin that presumes on mercy is the most gross ingratitude. 2. Should be a consolation in trouble. 3. Is an encouragement to repentance. II. The reason why chastisement is only for a season. This is to be found in the character of God.—Pul. Com.

Suffering Preferred to Injustice.—While Athens was ruled by the thirty tyrants, Socrates was summoned to the senate-house and ordered to go with some other persons to seize one Leon, a man of rank and fortune, whom they determined to put out of the way that they might enjoy his estate. The commission Socrates flatly refused, and not satisfied therewith, added also his reason for such refusal. "I will never willingly," said he, "assist in an unjust act." Cherides sharply replied, "Dost thou think, Socrates, to talk always in this style and not to suffer?" "Far from it," answered he, "I expect to suffer a thousand ills, but none so great as to do unjustly."—Barlow.

37-41. Vss. 37-54. The order of thought in this group is, All events are absolutely in the hands of God. Thus evil comes from Him as well as good. But it is man's sin that procures for him the former; he therefore may not complain.—Cam. B. (37) Who . . not? Ps. xxxiii. 9. (38) evil and good, R. V., "cometh . . good?" not a statement of fact, but a question wh. must be ans. in the affirmative; Am. iii. 6. (39) living, the word is emphatic in the sentence. "As long as God spares a man's life, why does he murmur? The chastisement is really for his good; only let him use it aright, and he will be thankful for it in the end."—Spk. Com. (40) try our ways, our conduct, for in this we shall find the reason for our chastisement. turn again, or return.^a (41) heart . . hands, the hands in the attitude of prayer; the heart with them, making the prayer both sincere and earnest.^b

The Believer's Portion.—'Tis not a part and portion which can never be spent. You may live upon God: there is enough in Him for millions and millions and millions. God is better than heaven, better than grace, better than glory, better than things present, or things to come. The promises are like a rich ring of gold,—but this is the rare diamond in that ring; it is the crown, the top, excellency of all promises. His wisdom is the soul's for direction, His power for protection, His grace for its acceptance, His Spirit for its consolation, His creatures on earth to serve us, His angels to guard us, His ordinances to feed and strengthen us, His grace to adorn us, His riches to advance and crown us to eternity.—Benj. Keach.

42-45. (42) We . . thou, the pronouns are emphatic in the original. not pardoned, or overlooked our iniquity, but rather, has visited it upon us. (43) covered . . anger, i. e. covered Thy face in anger. persecuted us, R. V., "pursued us." (44) covered . . cloud, to hide Thy face from the observation of our distresses.^c (45) offscouring, "the poet seems to be alluding to the exceptional severity with which the obstinate defenders of Jerusalem had been treated by their exasperated conquerors." 1 Cor. iv. 13.

A Delayed Answer to Prayer.—After Augustine had lost faith in Manichæism, he found himself in the same situation as he was ten years before. There was the same longing after truth, but linked now with a feeling of desolation, a bitter sense of deception, and a large measure of scepticism. He was no longer at ease in Carthage, and resolved on a journey to Rome, where he ventured to hope for a more brilliant and profitable career as a rhetorician. His mother wished either to prevent his going, or to go with him. While she spent a night in the Church of the Martyr, praying and wrestling with God in tears to prevent the voyage, Augustine sailed for the coast of Italy, and his deceived mother found herself the next morning alone on the sea-shore. She had learned, however, the heavenly art of forgiving, and believing also where she could not see. In quiet resignation she returned to the city, and continued to pray for the salvation of her son. Though meaning well, she this time erred in her prayer, for the journey of Augustine was the means of his salvation. The denial of the prayer was, in fact, the answering of it. Instead of the husk, God granted rather the substance of her petition in the conversion of her son. "Therefore," says he, "hadst Thou, O God, regard to the aim and essence of her desires, and didst not do what she then prayed for, that Thou mightest do for me what she continually implored."—Schaff.

46—50. (46) opened their mouths, R. V., "their mouth wide;" ch. ii. 16. (47) fear, etc., cause or object of fear, Is. xxiv. 17; Je. xlviii. 43. (48) "pit," desolation, R. V., "devastation." (48) Mine eye, etc., Je. iv. 19. (49) trickleth, R. V., "poureth." without . . . intermission, or because there is no intermission of my miseries. (50) Till the Lord, intimating that in his seeming hopelessness he yet held fast his hope in God.

The Treatment of Slanderers.—It is said that an eminent person of the present day has treasured up in a book all the fiercest attacks which have been made upon him, and without having answered one word either good or bad, keeps that book for the amusement of his friends. Better, perhaps, was the observation of another, "They cannot harm me by what they say of me. I am too near the Great White Throne for that." At any rate we can all imitate the forgiving spirit of good Archbishop Tillotson. Among his papers, at his death, was found a bundle of all the worst lampoons which had ever been written against him, with the pathetic memorandum, "May God forgive them; I am sure I do."—Farrar.

—The Power of Sympathy.—Happy is the man who has that in his soul which acts upon the dejected as April airs upon violet roots. Gifts from the hand are silver and gold; but the heart gives that which neither silver nor gold can buy. To be full of goodness, full of cheerfulness, full of sympathy, full of helpful hope, causes a man to carry blessings of which he is himself as unconscious as a lamp of its own shining. Such an one moves on human life as stars move on dark seas to bewildered mariners; as the sun wheels, bringing all the seasons with him from the south.—Beecher.

51—54. (51) affecteth . . . heart, R. V., "soul," maketh my soul ache. daughters, the virgins of Jerusalem who had to suffer the horrors of Chaldean lust and rapine. (52) like a bird, as hunters do a bird; tiring it down with long pursuit; ref. to the prophet himself, as persecuted by his countrymen. The other way of understanding it is of the Israelites generally in their hour of suffering, and specially of the godly, among whom the prophet in his sufferings would be a typical instance.—Cam. B. (53) dungeon, i. e. tried to destroy; Je. xxxvii. 16. stone, the princes did not cast stones at Jer. as he lay in the dungeon, but they placed a stone at its mouth to increase his suffering and secure him. (54) Waters . . . head, a figurative expression of his great trouble. Comp. Ps. lxxix. 2. cut off, Ps. lxxxviii. 5; Is. liii. 8. I am as good as dead.

An Etching of the Siege.—A graphic picture like this helps us to imagine the fearful accompaniments of the destruction of Jerusalem much better than any general summary. As we gaze at this one scene among the many miseries that followed the siege—the poet hunted out and run down, his capture and conveyance to the dungeon, apparently without a shadow of a trial, the danger of drowning and the misery of standing in the water that had gathered in a place so utterly unfit for human habitation—there rises before us a picture which cannot but impress our a promised good. The child, as soon as he saw it, stretched out his hands to take it, but found that it was too far away for him to reach. He then came nearer, and stretched forth his hands with greater effort. Still the object was too far for his grasp. Again the child came nearer and made another mighty effort. The father seeing the child so much in earnest to seize the object, drew his hand toward the child, and smilingly allowed him to seize the promised blessing."—John Bate.

"Hide not thy tears; weep boldly, and be proud to give the flowing virtue manly way; 'tis nature's mark to know an honest heart by. Shame on those breasts of stone that can not melt in soft adoption of another's sorrow." — Aaron Hill.

"Remembrance is the only paradise out of which we cannot be driven away. Indeed, our first parents were not to be deprived of it."—Richter.

"Suffering is sweet when honor doth adorn it. Who slights revenge? not he that fears, but scorns it." — Buckingham.

"For sorrow is the messenger between the poet and men's bosoms. Genius can fill with unsympathizing gods the scene, but grief alone can teach us what is man." — Bulwer Lytton.

He who lays out most for Christ provides best for himself. He who serves not himself, but Christ, is most truly free.

He who belongs not to himself, but to Christ, possesses a l1 things.

"Prayer is so mighty an instrument that no one ever thoroughly mastered all its keys. They sweep along the infinite scale of man's wants and God's goodness."—Hugh Miller.

As a wind musical instrument in the hands of the musician, so should Christians in prayer be in the hands of the Divine Spirit; they should present such prayers as He indites within them. The harmony, melody, sweetness, power, and effect of their prayers should be produced by the agency of the Spirit dwelling in them.

a Je. xl. 19. xviii. 18.

b Ps. xxi. 7.

c Ps. lxxix. 12.

d "Lit. a 'covering of the heart,' i. e. a mental disease, obstinacy, hardness, the worst calamity that can befall a human being."—Henderson.

When this patriotic poet thought of the desolated city and the authors of such atrocities, we cannot expect him to anticipate Christ's intercession for His enemies.

minds with the unutterable wretchedness of the sufferers from such a calamity as the siege of Jerusalem. Of course there must have been some special season for the exceptionally severe treatment of the poet. What this was we cannot tell. If the same patriotic spirit, burned in his soul in the midst of the war as we now find at the time of later reflection, it would be most reasonable to conjecture that the ardent lover of his country had done or said something to irritate the enemy, and possibly that as he devoted his poetic gifts at a subsequent time to lamenting the overthrow of his city, he may have employed them with a more practical purpose among the battle scenes to write some inspiring martial ode in which we may be sure he would not have spared the ruthless invader.—Exp. B.

55—59. (55) low dungeon, R. V., "lowest dungeon." (56) breathing, or sighing. (57) Thou drewest near, in past time of trouble. (58) hast pleaded, as my Goël or avenger. (59) judge . . cause, at this present time also.

"Fear Not!"—I. We much need Divine encouragements to overcome fear. 1. In real danger; 2. In the threatening aspect of the future; 3. In the mystery of life; 4. In the fears of others; 5. In hours of weakness. II. We have many Divine encouragements to overcome fear. 1. In directly urging us not to fear; 2. In promises of help; 3. In the fatherly character of God; 4. In our personal relations with God. III. Divine assurances against fear should inspire our prayers for help in danger.—Pul. Com.

Prayer in Trouble.—Sinking times are praying times with the Lord's servants. Peter neglected prayer at starting upon his adventurous journey, but when he began to sink, his danger made him a suppliant, and his cry, though late, was not too late. In our hours of bodily pain and mental anguish we find ourselves as naturally driven to prayer as the wreck is driven upon the shore by the waves. The fox hies to his hole for protection, the bird flies to the wood for shelter, and even so the tried believer hastens to the mercy-seat for safety. Heaven's great harbor of refuge is All-prayer. Thousands of weather-beaten vessels have found a haven there, and the moment a storm comes on it is wise for us to make for it with all sail.—Spurgeon.

60—63. (60) imaginations, or devices.^a The word carries the idea of plans formed by men in mere wilfulness. (62) The lips,^b or the talk; the foolish and malicious speeches: supply, "thou hast heard." (63) music,^c R. V., "song;" the subject of their merriment.

Treating Reproaches.—Pericles, as he was sitting before others in a meeting, a foul-mouthed fellow railed upon him all the day long; at night, when it was dark, and the meeting broke up, the fellow followed him and railed at him, even to his door, and he took no notice of what he said; but when he came home, this is all he said to him, "It is dark, I pray let my man light you home."—Jer. Burroughs.

64—66. (64) Render, etc., R. V., "Thou wilt render," etc. "Thou wilt give," etc. "Thou wilt persecute," etc. Comp. Ps. lxxix. 22—28: the words are taken fr. Ps. xxviii. 4. (65) sorrow of heart, R. V., "hardness," or judicial blindness.^d curse, we see here one of the worst effects of tyranny—the dark passion of revenge that it rouses in its victims. The fierce fires of Hebrew hatred for the oppressors of the much-suffering race here burst into a flame, and towards the end of this finest of elegies we read the dark imprecation, "Thy curse unto them!" Exp. B. (66) de-destroy, etc., comp. Je. x. 11. heavens . . Lord, Ps. viii. 3, cxv. 16.

A Godly Life the Music of Society.—I. Like music, a godly life is—1. Harmonious. It is in harmony (1) With God; (2) With itself; (3) With the highest good of the race. 2. Cheerful. 3. Inspiring. 4. Calming. II. Are our lives morally musical?—The Lay Preacher.

Generosity Toward Enemies.—When Aristides, the Athenian general, sat to arbitrate a difference between two persons, one of them said, "This fellow accused thee at such a time." To whom Aristides answered, "I sit not to hear what he has done against me, but against thee." That was a noble reply of Philip the Good when urged by his courtiers to punish a prelate who had done him great injustice, he declined, saying, "It is a fine thing to have revenge in one's power; but it is a finer thing not to use it."—Barlow.

CHAPTER THE FOURTH.

1—4. (1) gold . . dim, gold is used metaphorically for the illustrious portion of the Jewish people.—Grotius. stones . . sanctuary, metaphorical, for the “noble sons of Zion;” ref. to the gems on the breastplate, or the stones of wh. the temple was built, is wide of the mark. top . . street, ch. ii. 19. (2) earthen pitchers, “they are regarded as of no more value than potter’s work, though formerly they had been prized as the dainty art of a goldsmith.” Je. xix. 10, 11. (3) sea . . monsters, R. V., “jackals.” ostriches, Job xxxix. 13—17. (4) cleaveth . . thirst, bec. the mothers, in the famine time, have no milk.

Fine Gold Dimmed.—Fine gold is dimmed—I. When noble gifts of nature are put to base uses. II. When rare talents are wasted or abused. 1. When they are idly neglected; 2. When they are prostituted to base ends. III. When youth is ill spent. IV. When a Christian falls into sin. V. When the Church is corrupted.—Pul. Com.

5—8. (5) delicately, or daintily. “Faring sumptuously every day.” desolate, i.e. there are none to wait on them, or provide for them. Such persons are the most helpless in famine times. in scarlet, prob. referring to the luxurious scarlet couches of the grand houses. dunghills, are content to lie on the dunghills to secure a little warmth.” (6) For . . of, R. V., “For the iniquity of . . than the sin of Sodom,” i. e. the guilt rather than the punishment of Jerusalem is compared with that of Sodom. is greater,” bec. her knowledge and privilege were greater. stayed upon, R. V., “were laid upon;” i. e. no human hands were wearied in the work of destroying her. (7) Nazarites, R. V., “nobles,” or separated ones; see Nu. vi. purer . . milk, ref. to the delicateness of their complexion in comp. with the bronzed appearance of the toilers. (8) visage, etc., these indicate the effects of prolonged famine.” like a stick, withered and dry.

God’s Inexorable Law.—The punishment of Israel is greater than that of Sodom. But this is punishment; and the odious comparison would not be made unless the sin had been of the blackest dye. Thus in this elegy the calamities of Jerusalem are again traced back to the ill-doings of her people. The awful fate of the cities of the plain stands out in the ancient narrative as the exceptional punishment of exceptional wickedness. But now in the race for a first place in the history of doom Jerusalem has broken the record. Even Sodom has been eclipsed in the headlong course by the city once most favored by heaven. It seems well nigh impossible. What could be worse than total destruction by fire from heaven? The elegist considers that there are two points in the fate of Jerusalem that confer a gloomy pre-eminence in misery. The doom of Sodom was sudden, and man had no hand in it, but Jerusalem fell into the hands of man—a calamity which David judged to be worse than falling into the hands of God; and she had to endure a long, lingering agony.—Exp. B.

9—12. (9) better, bec. at once put out of their misery. pine away, Heb. flow out; as if the famine struck them, and life slowly ebbed away.” (10) hands . . children, De. xxviii. 57; La. ii. 20. (11) accomplished, etc., by this expression we are recalled to the fact that this Divine visitation had been threatened. devoured . . thereof, a picture for complete destruction. (12) not . . believed, bec. the city seemed to be so well fortified.”

The Misery of the Conquered.

The wretched owner sees afar,	Thy ravished virgins shriek in vain;
His all become the prey of war;	Thy infants perish on the plain.
Bethinks him of his babes and wife,	What boots it then, in every clime
Then smites his breast, and curses	Through the wide-spreading waste life!	of time,
Thy swains are famished on the	Thy martial glory, crown’d with rocks	praise,
Where once they fed their wanton	Still shone with undiminished flocks:	blaze?

“With solid gold is contrasted the hollow pitcher, easily broken, and made of materials of no intrinsic value, but deriving its worth from mere human labor.”—Spk. Com.

Dr. Shaw also says that, during the lonesome part of the night the ostriches often made a doleful and hideous noise, wh. would sometimes be like the roaring of a lion; at other times it would bear resemblance to the hoarser voices of other quadrupeds, particularly of the bull and the ox. I have often heard them groan, as if they were in the greatest agonies,—an action beautifully alluded to by the Prophet Micah (i. 8), when it is said, ‘I will make a . . mourning as the owls,’ or rather, ostriches. s Comp. Job xxiv. 8.

b “Sodom was not given up into the hands of an enemy that laid siege to it, nor condemned to the lingering destruction of famine.”—Lowth c Job xxx. 30.

a “Stricken through, or pierced through, is very expressive of the sharp pain occasioned by severe hunger.”—Henderson.

b “Such was the natural strength of Jerusalem, and such the widespread belief that the God of the Jews was omnipotent, that the city was considered to be impregnable.”—Henderson.

"There is a sacredness in tears. They are not the mark of weakness, but of power. They speak more eloquently than ten thousand tongues. They are the messengers of overwhelming grief, of deep contrition, and of unspeakable love." — Washington Irving.

a Eze. xxii. 28. 28; Zep. iii. 4.

b Comp. Mat. xxiii. 31, 37; Ac. vii. 52.

"Sooner mayest thou trust thy pocket to a pick-pocket than give loyal friendship to the man who boasts of eyes to which the heart never mounts in dew! Only when man weeps he should be alone; not because tears are weak, but they should be secret. Tears are akin to prayer—Pharisees parade prayers, impostors parade tears." — Bulwer.

"O may I join the choir invisible of those immortal dead who live again in minds made better by their presence." — George Elliot.

"Shed a tear of pity on their woes, which, as it drops, some soft-eyed angel bears, transformed to pearl, and in her bosom wears." — Sir W. Jones.

a Je. viii. 20, xxxvii. 4—10, xli. 17.

b "Towards the end of the siege the towers erected by the enemy would command the streets, and such spots would be avoided." — Spk. Com.

c Comp. Je. iii. 8, 9.

"Thales Miletus one of the wise men of Greece, being asked what was the Thy towering spirit now is broke, Forsaken, wanders o'er the heath;

Thy neck is bended to the yoke. The bleak wind whistles round her head, Yet, when the rage of battle Her helpless orphans cry for ceased, bread;

The victor's soul was not ap- Bereft of shelter, food and friend, peased. She views the shades of night descend,

The naked and forlorn must feel And, stretched beneath the inclem-Devouring flames, and murdering And, stretched beneath the inclemsteal! ent skies,

The pious mother, doomed to Weeps o'er her tender babes and death, dies. — Smollett.

13—16. (13) For the sins, R. V., "It is because of the sins," the evangelist ascribes the cause for this wonderful overthrow; Je. v. 31, xxiii. 21.^a shed . . . just, Je. xxvi. 7—24.^b (14) They, these religious leaders. wandered, lit. "staggered," under the panic occasioned by the siege. with blood, their acts of violence have been continued to the very end of their term of power. Their garments are still stained with blood when the summons to depart into exile reaches them.—Pul. Com. could not touch, for fear of defilement. (15) They cried, i. e. men generally, even the heathen, cried against these "fugitives and vagabonds, with the mark of Cain upon them, driven out at the gates by the impatient mob," and would not let them settle amongst them. (16) anger, lit. the face. divided them, scattered them among the nations. they respected, men generally in the countries sought as asylums by the outlawed priests and elders.

The False Prophets Rewarded.—In the hour of their exposure these wretched prophets and priests lose all sense of dignity, even lose their self-possession, and stumble about like blind men, helpless and bewildered. Their behavior suggests the idea that they must be drunk with the blood they have shed, or overcome by the intoxication of their thirst for blood; but the explanation is that they cannot lift up their heads to look a neighbor in the face, because all their little devices have been torn to shreds, all their specious lies detected, all their empty promises falsified. This shame of dethroned popularity is the greatest humiliation. The unhappy man who has brought himself to live on the breath of fame cannot hide his fall in oblivion and obscurity as a private person may do. Standing in the full blaze of the world's observation which he has so eagerly focussed on himself, he has no alternative but to exchange the glory of popularity for the ignominy of notoriety.—Exp. B.—A Scoffer Nonplussed.—On a certain occasion, in the presence of a vast and brilliant assemblage, a person more noted for his self-esteem than for his learning was speaking against the Christian religion in terms of the severest scorn and derision. The celebrated Dr. Belknap, overhearing the orator, stepped up to him and asked, "Well, sir, have you found a religion that is better?" The scoffer, considerably abashed by this unlooked-for question, was forced to acknowledge that thus far he had not. "Well," responded the Doctor, "when you have, let me know, and I will join you in adopting it." The rebuke was as wise as it was just.—Hom. Com.

17—20. (17) our eyes, etc., "our eyes still waste away (as we look) for our help in vain." The expectation that Egypt or some other nation might come to the rescue, was cherished to the end of the year and a half of the siege, and here is set forth the heart-sickness caused by this hope deferred.—Cam. B. (18) They . . . steps, referring to the missiles of the besiegers, whose engines were now advanced close to the walls." (19) pursued, any of the inhabitants who tried to escape, but the king and his followers in particular." (20) breath . . . nostrils, with this, as applied to a king, a sentence of Seneca has been well compared: "He (the Emperor) is the breath of life, which these many thousand (subjects) draw." Ge. ii. 7. anointed, the Jewish term for the king. taken . . . pits, hunted like a wild beast.

Persecution.—One Palmer, of Reading, being condemned to die, in Queen Mary's time, was much persuaded to recant, and among other things a friend said to him, "Take pity on thy golden years and pleasant flowers of youth, before it be too late." His reply was as beautiful as it was conclusive, "Sir, I long for those springing flowers which shall never fade away." When he was in the midst of the flames he exhorted his companions to constancy, saying, "We shall not end our lives in the fire, but make a change for a better life; yea, for coals we shall receive pearls." Thus do we clearly see that, although "if in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable," yet the prospect of a better and enduring substance enables us to meet all the trials and temptations of this present life with holy boldness and joy.

21, 22. (21) Rejoice, this call to an enemy of God's people appears to be ironical. "Rejoice while thou mayest." cup, of Divine judgment. (22) accomplished, carried through, and completed. discover thy sins, "when sins are forgiven they are said to be covered; therefore, when they are said to be discovered, it is as though we were told that God does the reverse of forgiving them—strips them of every rag of apology, lays them bare. That is their condemnation. Nothing is more ugly than a naked sin."^a—Exp. B.

Injustice and Anger.—There is an anger that is damnable: it is the anger of selfishness. There is an anger that is majestic as the frown of Jehovah's brow: it is the anger of truth and love. If man meets with injustice, it is not required that he shall not be roused to meet it; but if he is angry after he has had time to think upon it, that is sinful. The flame is not wrong, but the coals are.—Beecher.

CHAPTER THE FIFTH.

1—5. (1) O Lord, this fifth elegy is addressed directly to God. It is a prayer; but not a string of petitions. It is a meditation in the presence of God. reproach, or national disgrace. (2) Our inheritance, Ps. lxxix. 1.^a aliens, foreigners. (3) fatherless . . widows, bec. the war destroyed so many of the men. (4) water for money, the insult implied in paying a price for the common necessities of life fr. their own land and wells, signifies the abject servitude into wh. the Jews had been reduced. (5) necks, whereon yokes were laid.² R. V., "Our pursuers are upon our necks," i. e. gaining upon the fugitives.

God Answers Prayer.—I once saw a grand procession in which an Oriental monarch, surrounded by a thousand life-guards, moved to the sound of all kinds of music. Some unknown subject had a request to urge. He knew the utter impossibility of ever breaking through the guards that day and night surrounded his majesty. That humble person perhaps had some dear friend in prison, who, according to Oriental custom, could never be tried or freed while the prosecutor's malice or purse held out. They have no Habeas Corpus law among nations without the Bible. This poor creature took the only possible way known to one unable to bribe the officers, and flung his petition over the heads of the guards, and it fell at the feet of the sovereign. In a moment one of the life-guards pierced it with his bayonet, and flung it back into the crowd. Alas! the proud, pleasure-loving monarch, amid the luxuriant splendors of his court, palace, army, and plans of reaping renown, never so much as dreamed of noticing the prayer of that broken heart and crushed spirit. Not thus does the King of kings treat the humblest suppliant who seeks His help.—Van Doren.—I never was deeply interested in any object, I never prayed sincerely and earnestly for anything, but it came; at some time, no matter how distant a day, in some shape, probably the last I should have devised, it came.—Adoniram Judson.

6—10. (6) given the hand, as a pledge of fidelity; submitted ourselves, under stress of starvation. The exiles in the south submit to Egypt; those in the east to Babylon. with bread, i. e. to get mere food to keep us alive. (7) Our . . not, Je. xxxi. 29; Eze. xviii. 2. (8) Servants have ruled, better, "slaves;" the Satraps of the Chaldean monarch were slaves promoted by favoritism to places of honor; Neh. v. 15. (9) got, "get." sword . . wilderness, fig. for the perils from the Arabs, who plunder those venturing outside the cities to reap the harvests. (10) was black, etc., Cam. B., "glows like an oven because of the burning blast of famine." The feverishness brought on by hunger is meant; ch. iv. 8.

Children Suffer for the Sins of Their Parents.—It is a fact that chilmost difficult thing in life, answered, "For a tyrant to live to old age."—Barlow.

"Whose hearts are ready at humanity's soft call to drop the tear."—W. Mason.

"He will discover how great thine iniquities are, by the remarkable judgments wherewith He punisheth thee."—Lowth.

^a Le. ix. 24.

² De. xxviii. 48.

"Every inward aspiration is God's angel undelled, and for every 'O my Father!' slumbers deep a 'here, my child.'"—Royal Helps.

"Thy heart is big! Get thee apart and weep. Passion I see is catching; for mine eyes, seeing those beads of sorrow stand in thine, begin to water."—Shakespeare.

"Prayer is a key which, being turned by the hand of faith, unlocks all God's treasures."—Hannah More.

"Unvalued here such tears may fall; but know, each tear will prove a precious pearl in heaven above."—The Triumph of Time.

"The nunneries of silent nooks, the murmur'd longing of the wood."—Lowell.

"Look upon any duty or grace, and you will find it. He between Scylla and Charybdis, two extremes alike dangerous. Faith, the great work of God, cuts its way between the mountain of presumption and the gulf of despair. Patience (a grace so necessary that we cannot be without it a day, except we would be all that while beside ourselves) keeps us that we fall neither into the sleepy apoplexy of a blockish stupidity, nor into a raging, fit of discontent."—Gurnall.

a "Comp. the boast of Sennacherib, who says of the people of Ekron, 'The chief priests and noblemen I put to death, on stakes all around the city I hung their bodies; the people of the city with their wives I gave to slavery.'"—Spk. Com.

a "They were prob. first attracted thither by the bodies of the slain, of which they are particularly fond."—Henderson.

"When the fight begins inside himself a man's worth something."

—Browning.

"From these pearly eyes should there fall down more tears of penitence than the clouds drop to purchase a new spring, I could not be forgiven."—Old Play, Muleasses.

b Ps. xxix. 10, cii. 12, cxiv. 13.

"Our only hope is in the eternity and unchangeableness of Thy nature; and that Thou still governest the world, and orderest all the events of it; whereby Thou art always able to help us, and art never forgetful of the promises which Thou hast made to Thy people."—Lowth.

dren do suffer for the sins of their parents. It was apparent in the times of the Captivity; for owing to Josiah's reformation the moral condition of the nation then was better than it had been a generation or so before; yet the blow, which was caused by the greater guilt of the fathers, fell upon the children. It may often be observed in history that the greatest catastrophes do not fall on the most guilty, but on their successors, who are often better men. Thus James II. was a better man than Charles II., though the Stuart dynasty ended in the younger brother; and Louis XVI. was comparatively innocent, and yet he had to suffer for the vices of Louis XIV. and Louis XV. In private life, poverty, disease, and disgrace are inherited by children from their parents. Now, it is a sign of the robust truthfulness of the Bible that this dark fact is distinctly recognized. There is no attempt to shun it because it is mysterious. We have in the Bible an honest, brave confronting of the evils of life, and not a system which is only beautiful to contemplate in idea and which cannot be squared with facts.—Pul. Com.

11—15. (12) hanged, prob. aft. their death they were impaled or crucified after the Babylonian custom, to expose them to public contumely.* hand, i. e. not a ref. to any mode of hanging, but to the enemy who insulted the dead. (13) grind, rather, "the young men have borne the mill." The lower millstone seems to have been specially heavy, and to carry it about must have required a more severe exertion even than the constant turning of the mill-handle. This was the work of female slaves. under the wood, i. e. under the heavy burdens of wood which they were compelled to fetch and carry. (14) ceased.. gate, from attending as magistrates. (15) dance, the sign of cheerfulness.

Dishonored Old Age.—

"I have ventured,

Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders,
This many summers in a sea of glory,
But far beyond my depth; my high-blown pride
At length broke under me; and now has left me,
Weary and old with service, to the mercy
Of a rude stream, that must forever hide me.
Vain pomp and glory of this world, I hate ye!"

—Shakespeare.

16—18. (16) crown, fig. for the glory of the nation. we have sinned, not only does this generation suffer for the of the fathers, but also for their own sins is this woe come upon the nation. (18) foxes, or jackals, creatures that frequent desolated cities, and live among ruins.*

Yearning for God.—When my blood flows like wine, when all is ease and prosperity, when the sky is blue and birds sing and flowers blossom, and my life is an anthem moving in time and tune, then this world's joy and affection suffice. But when a change comes, when I am weary and disappointed, when the skies lower into a sombre night, when there is no song of bird, and the perfume of flowers is but their dying breath, when all is sunset and autumn, then I yearn for Him who sits with the summer of love in His soul, and feel that all earthly affection is but a glow-worm light compared to that which blazes with such effulgence in the heart of God.—Beecher.

19—22. (19) remainest, etc., not even the destruction of Jerusalem, the death of the king or the subsequent horrors of exile can destroy the faith of the elegist in the steadfastness of Jehovah, Ps. ix. 7.* (20) for ever, if Jehovah's power is intact why does he permit Israel to feel herself forsaken? (21) Turn.. us, "bring us into a state of reconciliation with Thee," Je. xxxi. 18. (22) thou hast, R. V. marg., "unless thou .. and art, etc," an hypothesis not to be accepted as fact.

Genuine Conversion (vs. 21).—The text teaches that—1. It is a turning of the soul to the Lord, not to creeds, not to churches; 2. It is a turning of the soul to the Lord, by the Lord; no one can turn the human soul to God but Himself.—Thomas.

God's Faithfulness Inspires Hope.—So wide and deep is our Father's love, so firm is the adamant strength of His eternal fidelity, we may be absolutely confident that, though the mountains be removed and cast into the sea, and though the solid earth melt away beneath our feet, He will still abide as the Eeternal Refuge of His children, and therefore that He will never fail to welcome all who seek His grace to help them return to Him in true penitence and filial trust. Thus we are led even by this most melancholy book in the Bible to see, as with eyes purged by tears, that the love of God is greater than the sorrow of man, and His redeeming power more mighty than the sin which lies at the root of the worst of that sorrow, the eternity of His throne, in spite of the present havoc of evil in the universe, assuring us that the end of all will be not a mournful elegy, but a pæan of victory.—Adeney.

"Talent is best nurtured in solitude; character is best formed in the stormy billows of the world."—Goethe.

"Happiness is not the end of life; character is," — Beecher.

Introduction.

I. Author. Ezekiel (God will strengthen) the son of Buzi, was, like Jeremiah, a priest as well as a prophet; "but with the priestly character more largely developed, and also one step farther removed from the ancient Prophets, inasmuch as he is the first in whom the author and the writer entirely preponderates over the seer, the poet, and the statesman" (Stanley).

"The period at which the prophet's youth was passed was rich in influences that must have powerfully affected him. Though too young to take part in the reform of Josiah (620), or perhaps to remember it, he grew up in the midst of the changes which it had introduced, and probably learned to estimate previous history from the point of view which it gave him. The tragic events which followed one another closely at this epoch, such as the death of Josiah (608), the exile of Jehoahaz to Egypt and of Jehoiachin to Babylon, made a lasting impression on his mind. The last event formed the chief landmark of his life, and that not solely because his own history was so closely connected with it. It was not, however, merely the silent teaching of events from which Ezekiel learned. He had a master interpreting events to him to whose influence every page of his prophecies bears witness. Jeremiah, indeed, may not have been Ezekiel's only master; there were other prophets of the time like-minded with him, such as that Urijah whom Jehoiakim dragged from his hiding-place in Egypt and slew with the sword (Jer. xxvi.), and perhaps others of whose names no record has been kept. Still the teaching and life of Jeremiah was probably the most powerful influence under which the young priest grew up. It could hardly have been otherwise. For 30 years before Ezekiel's captivity Jeremiah had been a prophet, speaking in the courts and chambers of the temple and in the streets of Jerusalem, and having such a history as made him the prominent figure of the day. In the year 597 B. C. Nebuchadnezzar took Jerusalem and carried into captivity the young king Jehoiachin, the flower of the population including many priests, Ezekiel among them, as well as a multitude of other citizens, particularly craftsmen. Ezekiel with a community of other exiles was settled at Tel-Abib by the river Chebar—not to be identified with the Chabor which falls into the Euphrates near Carchemish, but some stream or canal in Babylonia proper" (Cambridge Bible). Five years later, B. C. 592, Ezekiel began his ministry, and the latest date given in the book is the 27th year of the captivity, i. e., B. C. 570.

"The ascription of the book to Ezekiel is almost universally accepted, and there is no serious doubt as to the authorship of any considerable passage" (W. H. Bennett). "The picture, if it can be called so, which the prophet gives of the life of the exiles and their circumstances is singularly colorless. His interests were exclusively religious. His own mind was occupied with the largest conceptions, and the exiles were to his eye representatives of a larger subject. It is only on rare occasions that he draws any distinction between the exiles and those remaining in the land. When he does so he shares the feeling of Jeremiah (ch. xxiv, xxix. 16 seq.) that the flower of the people had been carried into captivity with Jehoiachin, and that the hope of the nation lay in them (xi. 14-21). But usually the exiles are regarded as the representatives of the house of Israel" (Cambridge Bible).

Synopsis.

(According to Hengstenberg.)

The First Cycle.....	i.—vii.
The Second Cycle.....	viii.—xix.
The Third Cycle.....	xx.—xxiii.
The Fourth Cycle.....	xxiv.
Foreign Nations	xxv.—xxxii.
Words of Comfort.....	xxxiii. 21—xxxix.
The Restoration	xl.—xlviii.

(According to Litton.)

I.—Relating to the destruction of Jerusalem.

Ezekiel's call (i.—iii.). Symbolical representations of siege and capture of Jerusalem (iv.—vii.). Vision of Jerusalem, exhibiting the idolatry of the people (viii.—xi.). Reproofs and warnings addressed to contemporaries (xii.—xix.). Another series, warning of the approaching calamity (xx.—xxiii.). Announcement of the commencement of the siege by the King of Babylon (xxiv.).

II.—Relating to heathen nations (xxv.—xxxii.).

III.—Relating to the restoration of the Jews (xxxiii.—xlviii.).

CHAPTER THE FIRST.

First Div. Ch. i.—xxiv., Proph. regarding the Downfall of Jerusalem.

b 1 Ki. xviii.
46.

"Be we where we may, we may be there with the unseen Christ and He will be its glory."

"While we view,
amid the noon-tide walk, a limpid rill gush through the tickling herbage, to the thirst of summer yielding the delicious draught of cool refreshment;
o'er the mossy brink shines not the surface clearer, and the waves with sweeter music murmur as they flow?"
—Akenside.

"The one secret of life and development is not to devise and plan, but to fall in with the forces at work, to do every moment's duty aright, that being the part of the process allotted to us;
and let come,
not what will,
for there is no such thing, but what the Eternal wills for each of us, has intended for each of us from the first."
—G. Macdonald.

"Enemies may banish from home; they cannot banish from God."

—Adeney.

"If poets learn in sorrow what they teach in song, may not the glory of the song justify the experience of the sorrow, and so explain some of the mystery of it?"

—Adeney.

1-3. (1) Now it came, better, "and it came." A discourse in Hebrew is usually begun with the particle vau or and. thirtieth year, it is impossible to determine from what era or event this 30th year is reckoned. It may be some unknown Babylonian era. fourth month, i. e. Tammuz, our June or July. captives, or people of the captivity. Chebar, the Chebar of Ezekiel is the Nahr-Malcha, or Royal Canal of Nebuchadnezzar, the greatest of that king's irrigation works, to which, therefore, the name Chebar (i. e. uniting) would be appropriate.—Pulp. Com. visions of God, sublime, mysterious, majestic visions, or better, actual theophanies of the divine being wh. would constitute a call to the prophetic office. These visions were prob. during his waking consciousness while he was in an ecstatic state, cf. 2 Cor. xii. 2, 3. (2) Jehoiachin's captivity, 2 Ki. xxiv. 12. 592 B. C. Ezekiel nowhere recognizes Zedekiah as king over Israel. (3) Ezekiel, nothing is known of Ezekiel or of his father. Buzi, except what may be gathered from the book. Heb. Jehzekel. hand . . him, indicating that he felt sensible impressions of God's power resting upon him.^b

Visions of God.—I. The seer of the visions. 1. A priest; 2. A prophet. II. The time of the visions. 1. After years of preparation; 2. Before a life of work. III. The circumstances of the visions. 1. Ezekiel was among the captives. (1) He was an exile from his native land; (2) He was surrounded by sorrowful men; (3) He was himself a captive. IV. The source of the visions. 1. They were from heaven; 2. They were through the opening of heaven. V. The nature of the visions.—W. F. Adeney.

The River Chebar (vs. 1).—"The Khabour flows through the richest pastures and meadows. Its banks were now covered with flowers of every hue, and its windings through the green plain were like the coils of a mighty serpent. An uncontrollable emotion of joy seized all our party when they saw the end of their journey before them. The horsemen urged their horses to full speed; the Jebours danced in a circle, raised their colored kerchiefs on their spears, and shouted their war-cry; the Tizari sang their mountain songs and fired their muskets into the air. Trees in full leaf lined the water's edge. We rode through a mass of flowers, reaching high above the horses' knees, and such as I had never before seen, even in the most fertile parts of the Mesopotamian wilderness. We had passed several tels and the double banks of ancient canals, showing that we were still amidst the remains of ancient civilization. Flocks of sheep and herds of camels were spread over the meadows on both sides of the river. On the morning after our arrival we crossed the Khabour on a small raft, and pitched our tents on its northern bank, near the ruins of Arban, which consist of a large artificial mound of irregular shape, washed by the river. From the top of the mound the eye ranged over a level country bright with flowers, and spotted with black tents, and innumerable flocks of sheep and camels. During our stay at Arban the color of these great plains was undergoing a continual change. After being for some days of a golden yellow, a new family of flowers would spring up, and it would turn almost in a night to a bright scarlet, which would again as suddenly give way to the deepest blue. Then the meadows would be mottled with various hues, or would put on the emerald green of the most luxuriant pastures. The glowing descriptions I had so frequently received from the Bedouins of the beauty and fertility of the banks of the Khabour were more than realized."—Experience of God.—Now and then a great experience comes unexpected and unsought. It touches the greater chords of the soul, and lifts it above the common level of emotion, outruns all former knowledge. But what other experience is like that of the personal disclosure of God in the soul. . . . There comes an hour to some, to many, of transfiguration. It may be in grief; it may be in joy; it may be in the opening of the door of sickness; it may be in active duty; it may be under the roof or under the sky, where God draws near with such reality, glory, and power that the soul is filled, amazed, transported. All before was nothing; all afterwards will be but a souvenir. That single vision, that one hour, is worth the whole of life, and throws back a light on all that went before. It . . . gives to the soul some such certainty of invisible, spiritual truths as one has of his own personal identity. When one has had this hour of divine disclosure, of full and entrancing vision, it never can be retracted, or effaced, or reasoned against, or forgotten.—Beecher.

4—9. (4) whirlwind,^a one of the mightiest of Eastern destructive agencies. the north, wh. was felt by the Jews to be the peculiar seat of the power of Jehovah, the vision granted to the exiled prophet on the plain of Babylonia embodied a truth opposed to the religious prejudices of his time, but reassuring to himself—that the fall of Israel leaves the essential sovereignty of Jehovah untouched; that He still lives and reigns, although His people are trodden underfoot by worshipers of other gods.—Exp. B. infolding itself, R. V. marg., “flashing continually.” brightness round about, i. e. about the whole phenomenon of storm and cloud; though a great cloud it was illuminated all round by the continuous flashing of fire within it.—Cam. B. colour, or appearance. amber, comp. the sunset color just before the crimson flush.” As this great storm cloud advanced across the plain the first general splendor divided itself into the various features outlined. (5) four . . creatures, these were the cherubim, but Ezekiel did not at first recognize them, see Re. iv. 6. of a man, i. e. they were erect, and unlike the religious symbols sculptured upon the Assyrian temples. (6) four faces, vs. 10. (7) straight feet, i. e. like a man’s leg, without the middle joint which four-footed beasts have. sole . . feet, the foot proper was shaped as a calf’s, indicating solid, firm treading. (8) hands . . wings, i. e. hands under each of the wings. (9) joined, i. e. in flying, one wing of one creature touched the wing of the next.” they turned not, i. e. their faces; in whichever direction they went the man’s face was presented first.

The Preparatory Vision for True Prophets (vs. 4).—Note—I. What is local and temporary in this vision. 1. The peculiar sources of impression and instruction of the prophet. II. The revelation of God’s dealings with the Jews. Here we are taught—1. The Divine dealings would be marked by majesty of thought, by God’s mode of manifesting Himself, by the agency of God’s command. Note—II. What is universal and permanent in this vision. 1. That Divine providence possesses stupendous machinery; 2. That Divine providence has ever a moral aim in the use of its stupendous machinery; it teaches that all the mighty agencies of God are against evil, that with the Divine majesty of retribution there is also the majesty of mercy.—U. R. Thomas.

Clouds.—Those war-clouds that gather on the horizon, dragon-crested, tongued with fire;—how is their barbed strength bridled? What bits are these they are champing with their vaporous lips; flinging off flakes of black foam? Leagued leviathans of the sea of heaven, out of their nostrils goeth smoke, and their eyes are like the eyelids of the morning. . . . Where ride the captains of their armies? Where are set the measures of their march? Fierce murmurers, answering each other from morning until evening—what rebuke is this which has awed them into peace? What hand has reined them back by the way by which they came? “The wondrous works of Him which is perfect in knowledge?” We have too great veneration for cloudlessness.—Ruskin.

10—14. (10) likeness, or the things wh. their faces resembled. The human face was the prominent one, the lion face was on the right side, the ox face on the left, and at the back the eagle face. The man’s face signifies that man is the highest symbol of the Eternal; the lion, for sovereignty; the ox for sacrifice; the eagle for kingly power. (11) stretched upward, this was the attitude when the figure was in flight. two . . bodies, although free from earthly imperfection they cover themselves with their wings before His majesty, in token of the reverence which is due from the creature in presence of the Creator. (12) straight forward, bec. they never needed to turn themselves round, seeing that, whichever way they went, they had a face looking that way. spirit . . go, whichever way the inward impulse constrained them. “One spirit of one conscious life guided all the motions in perfect harmony.” (13)

^a Ps. lviii. 9; comp. Is. xxi. 1; Je. xxiii. 19, xxv. 32.

^b The word used may also be trans. “polished brass,” LXX. and Vulg. render it by electrum, a compound of gold and silver.

^c “Ezekiel was living in a country on the walls of whose temples and palaces were those strange mixed figures, human heads with the bodies of lions and the feet of calves, and the like, wh. we see in the Babylonian and Assyrian monuments. . . . The Prophet is not constructing his cherubim in imitation of these figures: the Spirit of God is revealing forms corresponding to the general rules of Eastern symbolism.”

—Spk. Com.

“Incessant restless motion indicates the plenitude of life in these cherubim. Comp. Re. iv. 8.”—Fausset.

“There has never been a weak deity worshipped, and it is safe to say there never will be one. Man is too strong himself not to admire strength, and looks with pity or contempt upon weakness. And no deity can be pitied or despised and hold his sovereignty over men’s mind. The heavens must be traced beyond the possibility of fall, or they who live beneath the dome could never gaze with awe into the overhanging spaces. . . . I do not expect that any of mortal kind have a correct idea of God. . . . How little do we know even yet of the qualities and uses of material and finite Nature!"

a "As it were one wheel put across within another, like two circles in a sphere, cutting one another at right angles, to signify the stability and uniformity of their motions, and the subserviency of one part of providence to another."

—Lowth.

"The holy power that clothes the senseless earth with woods, with fruits, with flowers, and verdant plains, whose bounteous hand feeds the whole brute creation, knows all our wants, and has enough to give us."

—Rowe.

b "All four creatures together with their wheels are here called the living creature, because they formed a whole, one in motion, and one in will, for one spirit was in them."

—Spk. Com.

c "Such as dazzles the eye with its lustre."

—Lowth.

a Job xxxvii. 4, 5; Ps. xxix. 3, 4, 5; Re. x. 3.

vs. 23. "The wings therefore of the whole four being in contact with each other, formed a kind of curtain beneath the incumbent pavement, and thus completed the resemblance to the temple

R. V., "and in the midst of the living creatures was an appearance like burning coals of fire, like the appearance of torches." burning . . . fire, suggested by the altar fire in the temple. Here the vision of Ezekiel, in which the living creatures were thus incandescent, bathed, as it were, in the fire that played around them, yet not consumed, followed in the path of previous symbols—of the burning bush (Exod. iii. 2), of the pillar of fire by night (Exod. xiii. 22).—Pulp. Com. (14) This vs. not in the lxx. Davidson remarks: both in regard to the terminology and construction the verse is untranslatable. Prob. a gloss explaining vs. 13 wh. has crept into the text.

The Bright Fire.—I. Consider how good it is for the fire to be bright. There are men in whose breasts the fire of God burns dimly. The embers smoulder in a dull mass, threatening speedy extinction. Love is chilling, faith is fainting; as for the flame of hope, that is long since dead. On the other hand, the bright fire may stand for fresh warmth of soul, a burning zeal, a passion of devotion, a glow of heavenly love.

15—18. (15) one wheel, i. e. one wheel to each of the living creatures, arranged to fit exactly the motion of the creatures. by, R. V., "beside." with . . . faces, R. V., "for each of the four faces thereof," i. e. "for each face of the individual living creature there was a wheel. The appearance would be so if the wheel really seemed two wheels cutting one another transversely." (16) work, or construction. colour of a beryl, the modern topaz, of fine golden color, suggesting to Ezek. the idea of fire. wheel . . . wheel, "each wheel was composed of two circles, cutting one another at right angles, one only of wh. appeared to touch the ground, according to the direction the cherubim desired to move in." (18) rings, or felloes, the circumferences of the wheels. full of eyes, symbolizing the divine omniscience.

The Wheels.—From all that we can gather of the form of these wheels, they appear to have been each composed of two of equal size, and inserted, the rim of the one into that of the other at right angles, and so consisting of four equal parts or half circles. They were accordingly adapted to run either forward or backward, to the right hand or the left, without any lateral turning; and by this means their motion corresponded with that of the four faces of the living creatures to which they were attached. . . . When it is said, "they turned not," it is not to be understood that they had not a revolving or rotary motion, but that they, like the faces, never forsook a straightforward course.—Bush.

19—25. (19) went by them, or along with them. (20) spirit . . . go, vs. 12. (21) in the wheels, "One and the same spirit actuated the living creatures throughout, wheels and all." (22) R. V., "And over the head of the living creature there was the likeness of a firmament, like the colour of the terrible," etc. colour . . . crystal, a perfectly, oppressively clear sky, in wh. the Divine glory appeared as upon the throne. (23) straight, i. e. level, cf. vs. 9, 11. covered . . . bodies, the upper wings folding over their heads, the lower ones shading their limbs. (24) noise, rustling. voice . . . Almighty, i. e. like thunder. voice of speech, or tumult. (25) from the firmament, R. V., "above the firm." let . . . wings, to take the attitude of waiting, listening for Divine commands.

Note on vs. 22.—Heb. "As for the likeness upon the heads of the living creatures, it was that of an expansion stretched over their heads above, like the aspect of the terrible crystal." This expansion was a splendid level pavement or flooring, of a crystal clearness, and resting upon the heads of the living creatures, as the temple lavers rested upon the four cornerstays, or "undersetters," of their bases. The resemblance to the crystal was not in color, but in transparency, for the color was like that of a sapphire stone, or the cerulean azure of the real firmament of heaven. This is evident from vs. 26, and also from Ex. xxiv. 9, 10, containing an evident allusion to this vision, and perhaps the germ of it. "Then went up Moses and Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel; and they saw the God of Israel: and there was under His feet, as it were, a paved work of a sapphire-stone, and, as it were, the body of heaven in its clearness." (Vs. 24).—Heb. "And there was a voice—in their standing they let down their wings." The design of the Prophet seems to be, to show the perfect obsequiousness of the living creatures to the word of command emanating from the throne above, and directing their movements. When the word was given to move, their wings were at once expanded, the resounding din was heard, and the glorious vehicle, instinct with life, rolled on in amazing majesty. Again, when the counter mandate was heard, they in an instant stayed themselves in mid career, and relaxed their wings.—Bush.

26—28. (26) throne, comp. Ex. xxiv. 10. The throne appeared as if made of light, and resembling the colors and the brightness of sapphire. appearance of a man, “the prophet speaks with great reverence. What he saw was the “appearance” of a throne and of one sitting on it and of a rainbow; he does not venture to say that he saw these things themselves.” (27) It may be assumed that in the prophet’s mind each detail of the symbolism expressed some idea, though it may not be possible now to interpret the details with certainty. The firmament and throne represent Jehovah as God of heaven, God alone over all, the omnipotent.—Cam. B. (28) of the bow, i. e. spanning the scene with one splendid arch.^b

Notes on ch. i.—The vision is intended to declare that the God of Israel was come in all His glory to dwell w. the exiles in Babylonia wh. was now, and till the restoration to Canaan was to be, the centre of the national life. Jehovah returns to the Temple in ch. 43, 2.—Polychrome Bib.—That which ch. i. presents is a theophany, a manifestation of God to the prophet. It is not a vision of the cherubim nor of anything else, but of God. The cherubim, wheels, firmament and throne are all subordinate, they have no meaning in themselves, they merely help to suggest what God is who thus manifests himself.—Cambridge Bib.

CHAPTER THE SECOND.

1—5. (1) Son of man,^a a term applied to Ezekiel 80 times: only applied otherwise to Daniel;^b and our Lord. It may be used to put Ezekiel in mind of his frailty and personal insignificance, though he was honored with such sublime visions.^c stand, in the attitude of one listening and ready to obey—“it is man erect, man in his manhood, with whom God will have fellowship and with whom he will speak.” (2) spirit entered into me, i. e. the source of energy and vitality. This energy came from God. The Spirit which moved the “living creatures” and the “wheels” in the mysterious symbol was now in him. Ezekiel finds in that fact the ground of his prophetic inspiration.—Pulp. Com.—“Ecstasy was at first the ordinary condition of prophetic utterance (1 Sam. xix. 24; Mic. i. 8); it was gradually dispensed with, as prophecy became reflective and moral.”—Polychr. Bib. set .. feet, Da. x. 11. Comp. Eze. i. 28. (3) nation, Heb. goyim, the word applied to heathen nations, and used to intimate that the Jews had outdone the wickedness of the heathen. R. V., “nations,” i. e. the plural signifying the whole nation of Israel. He is a prophet to the whole house of Israel, including the lost kingdom of the ten tribes, as well as the two sections of the kingdom of Judah, those now in exile and those still remaining in their own land. This is his ideal audience; the sweep of his prophecy is to embrace the destinies of the nation as a whole, although but a small part be within the reach of his spoken words.—Exp. B. (4) impudent, Heb. hard of face. stiffhearted, unwilling to yield to counsel or chastisement. (5) rebellious house,^d this stereotyped expression indicates that Ezek.’s clear insight into the spiritual condition of the “house of Israel,” shows him conclusively that the people are not yet ready to be won back to Jehovah by assurances of His compassion and mercy. Is. xxx. 9.

Commission Given to Ministers (vs. 4).—1. To declare God’s will; 2. To assert His authority; 3. To seek, notwithstanding all our discouragements, the salvation of their souls. Learn hence—1. The importance of the ministry; 2. The duty of those who are ministered unto.—C. Simeon.

6—10. (6) not afraid, Je. i. 8, 18. briers^a .. scorpions, figures for those who might annoy, resist and persecute the Prophet. (7) speak my words, i. e. God encourages Ezek. by promising him words to speak. most rebellious, or rebellion itself. (8) Be not rebellious, the work was bases, and forming in fact a magnificent living chariot.” —Bush.

^b “This vision being an evident representation of the Word that was to be made flesh, whose incarnation is the foundation of God’s covenant of mercy with mankind, a rainbow, the symbol and token of mercy, was a very fit attendant upon that glorious vision.” —Lowth.

“Though you have no visions of God, unwavering fealty to His law will secure that He will guide you by His counsel, and afterwards receive you to glory.” —Goulty.

^a Heb. Ben Adam.

^b Da. viii. 17.

^c 2 Cor. xii. 7.

^d “Whether they will regard what is said by thee or not, yet the event answering thy predictions shall render thy authority unquestionable, and them inexcusable for not hearkening to the warnings thou hast given them.” —Lowth.

“He is good that does good to others. If he suffers for the good he does, he is better still; and if he suffers from them to whom he did good, he is arrived to that height of goodness that nothing but an increase of his sufferings can add to it.” —Bruyere.

^a Comp. 2 Sa. xliii. 6; Sol. Song ii. 2; Is. ix. 18.

^a Comp. Re. x. 9.

^c "The idea is to possess himself fully of the message, and digest it in the mind: not literal eating, but such an appropriation of its unsavory contents, that they should become, as it were, part of himself, so as to impart them the more vividly to his hearers."

—Fausset.

^d "So as to be completely filled, as the sealed roll in the Apocalypse. Re. v. 1."

—Wordsworth.

^a Re. x. 9.

^b "The sweetness in the mouth denoted that it was good to be a messenger of the Lord, but the bitterness which accompanied it denoted that the commission brought with it much sorrow, for the tidings were sad and evil."—Spk. Com.

"I have seen angels by the sick one's pillow—theirs was the soft tone and the soundless tread; where smitten hearts were drooping like the willow, they stood between the living and the dead."—Elizabeth Wetheralt.

^c "I have given thee courage and assurance proportionable to the hardness and impudence of those thou hast to deal with."—Lowth.

¹ Formed from the Lat. adam-as, it formed the point of the ancient pen, or stylus.

^e Ezekiel's firmness being that of a diamond, he should cut a stroke home to the hardened both arduous and painful: painful because it was against his own people that the prophet had to speak; and arduous because leading to opposition and persecution. There is no easy situation in God's service. Had the prophet refused the great commission he would have rebelled like Israel. eat . . thee,^b fig. for receive the message, commit it to memory.^c The meaning of this strange symbol appears to include two things. In the first place it denotes the removal of the inward hindrance of which every man must be conscious when he receives the call to be a prophet. Something similar occurs in the inaugural vision of Isaiah and Jeremiah. In the second place the eating of the book undoubtedly signifies the bestowal on the prophet of the gift of inspiration—that is, the power to speak the words of Jehovah.—Exp. B. (9) sent, or stretched forth. roll, ancient books were written on skins, rolled up, not folded. The message was definite. (10) within and without,^d not as usually, on the one side only, but on both sides, because there was so much woe to record.

CHAPTER THE THIRD.

I—3. (1) eat . . speak, receive the truth thyself, then speak it to others. This iteration may denote some hesitation on Ezek.'s part. The message was too sorrowful and severe. But the true prophet must not expect to choose his own message. (2) opened my mouth, in the attitude of obedience. (3) cause . . eat, perhaps intimating that he should wait for a full impression of the message, and not act merely on a first impression of it. mouth . . sweetness,^e any message given by God the good man feels to be precious, but he may afterwards be oppressed by finding it to be a message of woe.^b Eating a Book.—I. The food provided: 1. This is in the form of literature. God feeds our highest nature through literature. 2. This must be taken as it is provided. We do not create Divine truth. We find it in the Bible. 3. The Divine provision is full and ample. The Bible has far more in it than Ezekiel's roll. Its many words are rich and deep. No age will ever consume the whole of its vast and varied teachings. II. the meal consumed. We must feed on the Bible to profit by it. 1. There must be personal appropriation. 2. There must be internal consumption. We have much verbal knowledge of the Bible without ever making it our food. The meaning of texts, historical and geographical allusions, side-lights of manners and customs, may all be studied, and yet the Bible may lie outside us, and our souls starve for want of spiritual food, because we do not take its essential truths down into our inner being in comprehension, meditation and application. 3. There must be assimilation. III. The effects following: 1. There is a pleasant taste. He who only sympathizes with the spirit in which the Bible was written will never need to read it as a task. 2. Pain ensues (vs. 14). Conscience makes the pleasant reading of the Bible to be followed by painful reflections. Yet this bitterness is a wholesome tonic. 3. The final result is an increase of strength. Feeding on God's Word fits us to teach that Word and to exemplify it by our conduct.—Pul. Com.

4—9. (5) strange speech, a people speaking an obscure and unintelligible language. The idea is that even they would more readily listen to the Prophet than Israel would. (6) many people, or peoples; the heathen nations. (7) not . . me, speaking through the law and prophets; by providences and judgments. (8) face strong,^c with prob. reference to Ezekiel's name, wh. means "One whom God makes strong." (9) adamant, Heb. shamir, a diamond.^d Zec. vii. 12; Je. xvii. 1. flint, De. viii. 15. The diamond was employed to cut flint.^e

10—14. (10) Although the prophet for the whole house of Israel, Ezek.'s immediate work was with the captives at Tel-abib. Hence the command anew to obey God's message. receive . . heart, explanation of the fig. of eating the roll, ch. ii. 8. (11) of thy people, God does not say, "of My people." They have disfranchised themselves by their sins." He is commanded to proclaim to the captives that his words are spoken with prophetic power. His message is a "Thus saith the Lord." (12) took me up, to carry me to the place where the message was to be delivered. rushing, caused by the passing away of the wonderful theophany he had seen. Blessed . . . place, i. e. the place where God had given the revelation of His glory. (13) wings, etc., ch. i. 20. (14) bitterness, i. e. indignation or anger. "The prophet was lifted up into sympathy with God and shared his righteous indignation against Israel." hand . . . strong, I could not resist the Divine impulses.

Ezekiel's Commission.—Never does the voice say, Ezekiel, excite thine imagination, call upon the fountain of thine eloquence, arouse thy noblest intellectual faculties, and consider what had better be said to people who are living in such moral neglect and corruption; on the contrary, Ezekiel is simply to listen, to receive, to hear, and then he is to go; and having gone, he is to open his commission and continue it, and conclude it with the words, "Thus saith the Lord God."—J. Parker.

15—17. (15) Tel-abib, on the river Chebar (ch. i. 3), the chief seat of the Jewish exiles in Babylon, and I sat where they sat, R. V., "and to where they dwelt." astonished, or astounded; having my spirit utterly cast down and overwhelmed. seven days, the usual period for mourning. At the end of that time the effects of the ecstasy seem to pass away, and more light breaks on him with regard to his mission. He realizes that it is to be largely a mission to individuals. He is appointed as a watchman to the house of Israel, to warn the wicked from his way; and as such he is held accountable for the fate of any soul that might miss the way of life through failure of duty on his part.—Exp. B. Job. ii. 13.^b (17) a watchman, Is. lvi. 10; Je. vi. 17.^c "One to look out from a city's walls, and see whether an enemy is coming, and give notice of his approach." Perhaps this passage, vs. 16—21, recounts the message wh. Ezek. uttered while he sought to "reprove" the exiles.

The Watchman (vs. 17).—I. His character and qualifications. 1. He must be a man of good repute; 2. He must produce proofs of past fidelity and good management; 3. He should have discernment, ingenuity, and courage; 4. He should be healthy and strong, able to bear exposure and fatigue; 5. He must be properly appointed; 6. He must have a proper dress and light. II. The watchman's duty. 1. One part is to tell the hour; 2. To protect the persons and property of the inhabitants from villains, accidents, and offences; 3. Go give alarm when danger is near; 4. To give account of the city to the magistrates.—Benson Bailey.

Waiting.—

Let tongue rest and quiet thy quill be!
Earth is earth and not heaven, and never will be.
Man's work is to labor and leaven—
As best he may—earth here with heaven.
'Tis work for work's sake that he is needing;
Let him work on and on as if speeding
Work's end, but not dream of succeeding;
Because if success were intended,
Why, heaven would begin ere earth ended.—Browning.

18—21. (18) surely die, i. e. surely, unless you repent. This condition is assumed in all the Divine messages. speakest to warn, implying that the Prophet ought to do this again and again. die . . . iniquity, unforgiven, and therefore to meet the eternal penalties. blood . . . hand, counting you guilty of his death, in his sins, if you failed to warn him.^d (19) delivered thy soul, from the burden of the man's death in sin. The dread warning has for its complement a message of comfort. The judgment passed on the prophet does not depend on the results of his ministry. "Whether men will hear, or whether they will forbear," he has "delivered his soul," i. e. saved his life, when he has done his duty as a watchman.—Pulp. Com. (20) lay a stumbling block, or cause his iniquity to become his ruin. (21) sin not, and he manifestly ought not to sin if he be a righteous man. Ezek. has thrown the experiences of this period into a symbolical form; the thought of God, of the divine majesty and greatness, which filled his mind at first and constantly, is presented under the form of the Theophany (ch. i.) always present with him. The feeling that he was a true prophet of God, commissioned to declare his will, and hearts of a rebellious people."

—Spk. Com.

a "The idea seems to be that though God should forsake and destroy His temple, which is pre-eminently His place, yet His presence makes every place to be His temple, and He is attended there by multitudes of the heavenly host."
—Wordsworth.

b Hill of Abib, meaning either hill of corn (Gesenius) or hill of grass land (Fuers) and so named on account of its fruitfulness.

a "The stunning of the faculties by fear or surprise conveys the ordinary idea of the word."
—Woolrych.

b Ge. i. 10; 1 Sa. xxxi. 13.

c Hab. ii. 1.

"God has so arranged the chronometry of our spirits that there shall be thousands of silent moments between the striking hours."
—Martineau.

"Vicarious atonement is a necessity. Personal guilt establishes a law that repentance is powerless to heal."

d "It shall be charged upon them in the day of account that it was owing to their unfaithfulness that such and such precious souls perished in sin; for who knows but if they had had fair warning given them, they might have fled in time from the wrath to come?"
—Mat. Henry.

"The God who has placed his servants in responsible positions has designed to inform them what shall be the effects of neglect and cowardice. The wicked might have died, though warned; but he might have repented and lived. For every position of influence, or honor, or usefulness we hold, 'we must give account of ourselves before God.' —Davies.

a. "The silence of prophets is God's punishment of a people." — S. Chrysostom.

The memory of good actions is the starlight of the soul.

"Our memories, corrupted by the fall, are often like those ponds where frogs live and the fish die." — Cripplegate Lectures.

"The Word of God counts the years and months and days of our distress to make us understand that it is not unknown to God how long we have borne the yoke of the cross and the oppression of tyrants." —Starck.

b. "Those used by the Assyrians appear to have consisted of a strong framework on wheels, so covered as to protect the soldiers working it, and armed with one, sometimes two, pointed weapons. It differed considerably from the more familiarly known ram employed by the Romans." —Ayre.

a. "Prob. dating from Jeroboam's first setting up the idolatrous worship of the golden calves, to the last captivity of the Jews, in the twenty-that the divine presence was always with him is symbolized in the other actions which follow (ii. iii.).—Cam. B.

22—27. (22) hand of the Lord, i.e. a trance or ecstasy, in wh. his vision was transported to some lonely spot. (23) glory, etc., ch. i. 28. "Now he is to learn that there is a time to be silent, as well as a time to speak, and that both are appointed by God." (24) shut . . house, this signifies his almost entire withdrawal from public life. Instead of being like his great predecessors, a man living full in the public view, and thrusting himself on men's notice when they least desired him, he is to lead an isolated and a solitary life, a sign to the people rather than a living voice.—Exp. B. (25) bands, etc., this must be treated morally, for we have no account of Ezekiel's having been imprisoned. (26) be dumb, no judgment can be greater than that wh. comes by the silencing of God's prophets and ministers." (27) when I . . thee, then thou shalt be free to speak. This silence broken only by prophetic utterance, characterized Ezek. until the fall of Jerus.

Ezekiel's Preparation.—Ezekiel went forth from Tel-abib into the plain, that there he might have further talk with the Most High God. Again he fell on his face, and again the spirit set him upon his feet, and talked with him as a man might talk with his friend. Not yet was the preparation complete. Ezekiel was commanded in these words, "Go, shut thyself within thine house." There he might either pray in secret, or begin his mission in a small degree, speaking to one and another, but not yet publicly declaring himself as the prophet and the reformer of Israel. Thus we begin by being overthrown and filled with a sense of humiliation; then we are invigorated by the Spirit of God; then we are driven away that we may see somewhat of the field wherein we are to work; then we have imposed upon us a discipline of silence; then we go forth into the plain to hear, as it were, the whispers, the last trembling cadences, of the divine instruction and exhortation; then we begin within the small limits of our house to speak the word with which we have been entrusted: all the while God will be with us, to watch us, chasten us, help us; and inasmuch as we are identified with him we have the assurance that, troublous as our ministry may be, it will end in victory and in immortal joy.—J. Parker.

CHAPTER THE FOURTH.

1—4. (1) Ezek. preaches to the exiles by means of various symbols. 1st, the symbol of the siege of Jerus. This prophecy occurred some four years before the actual siege, and put an end to the delusive hopes of a speedy return fr. captivity. a tile, or brick. "Such are found in Babylon, covered with cuneiform inscriptions, often two feet long, one broad." pourtray, i.e. draw the picture of. (2) lay siege, i.e. represent the laying of a siege. fort, or watch-tower. mount, for the engines. battering rams, the engine used for thrusting down walls.^b (3) iron pan, or plate: as a kind of shield. This was to be Ezekiel's defence as he conducted (in symbol) the siege of the city. "The fate of Jerusalem represented the disappearance of everything that had constituted the glory and excellence of Israel's national existence." This message would fill the captives with horror and dismay. (4) vs. 4—8, 2nd symbol: the people fearing the hardship of the exile as punishment for the national sins. In the first symbol Ezek. besieges Jerus., in this symbol he represents the besieged. bear their iniquity, i.e. the punishment due to iniquity. lie . . side, to represent the prostrate and bound condition of Jerusalem in the time of siege.

5—8. (5) three . . ninety,^a the text of the Greek translation helps us past this difficulty. The Hebrew manuscript from which this version was made had the reading a "hundred and ninety" instead of "three hundred and ninety" in vs. 5. This alone yields a satisfactory sense, and the reading of the Septuagint is now generally accepted as representing what Ezekiel actually wrote.—Exp. B. See Nu. xiv. 34. (6) forty days, representing the forty years of the Judean exile. (7) set thy face. This vs. resumes the symbol of vss. 1—3; i.e. direct thy mind. arm . . uncovered, so as to wield a weapon." (8) bands. This vs. resumes the symbol of vss. 4—6; to keep you from moving; a symbol of the straitness of the siege.

9—12. (9) vs. 9—17, 3rd symbol: the rigors of famine in Jerus. during the prolonged siege. wheat, etc., needful food for the time of his lying down. fitches, or spelt. three . . days, cf. vs. 5. (10) meat, i.e. food, although so poor the people could have only scant rations. by weight, carefully doled out. shekels, eight or nine ounces, as compared with 2 lbs., an ordinary allowance, indicates great scarcity. Ge. xxiii. 15. (11) hin, Ex. xxix. 40. About a quarter of a pint. (12) bake . . man, indicating the lack of ordinary firing materials. The dried dung of cattle is constantly used for firing in the East."

Millet.—This word (millet) occurs more than once in the sacred volume. It is made into bread, with camel's milk, oil, butter, and other unctuous substances, and is almost the only food eaten by the common people of Arabia Felix. Niebuhr found it so disagreeable, that he would willingly have preferred plain barley bread. This is certainly the reason that it was appointed to the Prophet Ezekiel as a part of his hard fare.—Paxton.

13—17. (13) defiled bread, i.e. unclean according to Levitical rules. "This typifies the unclean relig. condition of the people when in exile." The idea is that all food which has not been consecrated by being presented to Jehovah in the sanctuary is necessarily unclean, and those who eat of it contract ceremonial defilement. In the very act of satisfying his natural appetite a man forfeits his religious standing. This was the peculiar hardship of the state of exile, that a man must become unclean.—Exp. B. (14) polluted, by infringement of the laws concerning the clean and the unclean. abominable flesh, i.e. meat left over till the 3rd day, Lev. vii. 18; xix. 7. (15) cow's dung, which was commonly used: camel's dung makes the clearest fires. (16) break the staff, Le. xxvi. 26. (17) astounded, comp. ch. iii. 15.^b Ezek. sought to teach his fellow exiles that this sad religious condition was to continue for a generation.

Fuel.—In consequence of the want of wood, camel's dung is used in the East for fuel. Shaw, in the preface to his Travels, where he gives a detailed description of the mode of traveling in the East, says that in consequence of the scarcity of wood, when they wanted to bake or boil anything, the camel's dung which had been left by a preceding caravan was their usual fuel, which, after having been exposed to the sun during three days, easily catches fire, and burns like charcoal. We will also add what Niebuhr says in his description of Arabia. "The Arabs of the desert make use of an iron plate to bake their bread-cakes; or they lay a round lump of dough in hot coals of wood or camel's dung, and cover them entirely with it, till the bread in their opinion is quite done, when they take the ashes from it, and eat it warm."—Rosenmüller.

CHAPTER THE FIFTH.

1—4. (1) vss. 1—4, 4th symbol: fate of the population of Jerus. when the city is taken. knife, or sword, symbol of the destruction of the inhab. of Jerus. by the sword of the Chaldeans. barber's razor, R. V., "as a barber's razor shalt thou take it unto thee." balances, to signify the exactness of Divine justice. (2) burn, to indicate the destruction of this proportion of the inhab. by famine and pestilence. smite . . knife, as a symbol of this proportion killed by the sword. scatter . . wind, to represent the captivity of the last third. (3) few, to represent those left in the land, Je. xl. 5, 6. (4) cast . . fire, to signify the calamity of even the few that were spared for a time.^c for thereof, etc., omit "for," R. V., "therefrom," i. e. the afflicted remnant.

The Scriptures a Record of Human Sorrow.—The Bible, from the third of Genesis, is the history of a sorrowful race. This fact should teach us—I. That sorrow is mightily present in our world. Here is a book—I. The product of many lands and ages, expressing their sorrows; 2. Intended for all lands and times. This reflection should—(1) Stir our third year of Nebuc.'s reign."

—Lowth.

b Is. iii. 10.

c "To use human dung for such a purpose implies the most cruel necessity. It was in violation of the law. De. xiv. 3, xxiii. 12—14."

—Fausset. Those periods of tribulation and chastisement, which the prophet here represents, have they not a voice for other times? . . . The lukewarm and fruitless professor is in bondage to the elements of the world, and therefore can have no part in that good land which floweth with milk and honey."

—Fairbairn.

a Comp. Ac. x. 14.

b "Look one upon another as persons under astonishment for the greatness of your calamities, and pining away or dying a lingering death through famine and other hardships."

—Lowth.

"Let it teach us not to be rigid and stick to our wills, and think it a disparagement to abate of our wills and right, and yield to others, when God, who is infinitely above us, can yield to us, and doth so daily, bearing our infirmities." —Greenhill.

c Je. xlii. 18, xlv. 11—15.

Some judgments crush, others cut.

"Look, who comes here; a grave unto a soul, holding the eternal spirit, against her will, in the vile prison of afflicted breath. —Shakespeare.

"Memory, the bane of the wicked, the home of the past, the mind's magnetic telegraph."—Family Friend.

^a La. iv. 6; Da. ix. 12; see also Zec. xiii. 8, 9, xiv. 2.

"As God connected Himself peculiarly with Israel, so there was to be a peculiar manifestation of God's wrath against sin in their case."—Fairbairn.

^b "This is only a partial and imperfect mode of representing God's dealings with men."—Spk. Com.

"The completely human clothing of ideas in this passage is a sensible representation of the personality of God, in His being and in His actions."—Schroeder.

^a Ex. xxiii. 29; De. xxxii. 24; 2 Kl. xvii. 25.

thought; (2) Cultivate our soberness; (3) Quicken our sympathies. 11. Sorrow is present in this world because of sin. The Scriptures, as the record of human sorrow, teach—1. That sorrow is here because of sin; 2. As the penalty of sin; 3. As one means of purification from sin.—Thomas.

5—9. (5) vs. 5—17. Ezek. explains these four symbols (a) 5—10, reasons for these judgments, (b) 11—17, the nature of the judgment. in the midst, with the intention that she should hold forth My truth and claims before the nations. Notice the locally central position of Palestine: esp. as between Egypt, Phœnicia, and Assyria. (6) changed my judgments, R. V., "she hath rebelled against my judgments in doing wickedness . . . and against my statutes." Jerus. "had proved herself unworthy of her distinction and privileges, and tried to live as the nations around." Therefore her chastisement shall be unexampled in its severity. (7) multiplied, better, "ragcd tumultuously," in your self-will and rebellion. neither . . . you, the words find their explanation in Jer. ii. 10, 11. In doing as the nations (ch. xi. 12; xvi. 47), Jerusalem had not done as they did, for they were at least true to the gods whom they worshipped, and she had rebelled against her God.—Pulp. Com. (8) execute judgments, those who beheld Israel's wickedness were to behold God's righteousness. (9) not done, comp. Mat. xxiv. 21.^a

The opposition of God is unspeakably dreadful. It is dangerous for a man to run counter to the will of God. The very fact that He loves us, instead of mitigating the honor of the opposition, must heighten it, for no plea can soften the blow, when love itself acquiesces in it.—Pulpit Com.

10—13. (10) eat . . . thee, Le. xxvi. 29; De. xxviii. 53; La. ii. 20, iv. 10. remnant . . . scatter, fulfilled in the present condition of the remnant of the Jews; they are found in every land. (11) defiled, etc., 2 Chr. xxvi. 14; Jer. viii. This pollution of the sanctuary through false worship was the taproot fr. wh. sprung all the other evils. detestable things, i.e. idols. diminish thee, R. V. marg., "withdraw mine eye that it shall not spare." (12) third part, as in the symbol, vs. 2. (13) fury to rest, or cease, when its purpose of punishment is completed. comforted, appeased, either bec. his vengeance is satisfied, or the punishment has led men to repentance. my zeal, or just regard for My honor and authority.^b

14—17. (14) waste, etc., De. xxviii. 37. sight . . . by, the scorn and contempt of the heathen was one of the most humiliating punishments Israel could receive. Lamentations 11, 15, 16. (15) it shall be, rather, "she shall be," i. e. Jerusalem. instruction, they shall learn of God and His claims from such an example of judgment. (16) arrows, De. xxxii. 23. staff of bread, ch. iv. 16. (17) evil beasts, wh. soon multiply in a desolate and uninhabited country.^a Punishment of Pre-eminent Severity.—Notice—1. The great Agent in this punishment; 2. The nature of this punishment; 3. The retributory character of this punishment; 4. The exemplary aspect of this punishment; 5. The awful certainty of the punishment.—Pul. Com.

Figurative Use of the Word "Arrow."—The arrow in this passage, means the pestilence. The Arabs thus denote it: "I desired to remove to a less contagious air. I received from Solymán, the emperor, this message: that the emperor wondered what I meant, in desiring to remove my habitation. Is not the pestilence God's arrow, which will always hit His mark. If God would visit me herewith, how could I avoid it? 'Is not the plague,' said he 'in my own palace; and yet I do not think of removing.'"—Busbequies.

Tokens of Doom on Created Things.—Judgments were executed upon them, not because they could be held guilty, but because they had been the scenes of human wrong-doing. We are taught the needed lesson that sin is to be abhorred, not only because it defiles the sinner, but also because it draws the trail of the serpent over all he uses in his sin.—Preacher's Com.

CHAPTER THE SIXTH.

1—4. (2) set thy face, as if directing thy message. Cf. Dan. vi. 10. Vss. 2—10 are an apostrophe to the mountain land of Israel, which seems to stand out before the exile's mind with its mountains and hills, its ravines, and valleys, in contrast to the monotonous plain of Babylonia which stretched around him. But these mountains were familiar to the prophet as the seats of the rural idolatry in Israel. Exp. B. (3) mountains, etc., Palestine was a hilly, though it can hardly be called a mountainous country. rivers, "ravines."^a high places, Canaanitish sanctuaries wh. had been adopted by Israel and sanctified to the worship of God. (4) images, or sun images, Le. xxvi. 30.^b slain . . idols, to show the manifest connection between idolatry and calamity, and to put the idol-trusting to shame. The figure is a very graphic one. The idols were no longer to have a living congregation of worshipers, but were to be surrounded by a cordon of dead men, so that the gods and their worshipers should resemble one another.—Pul. Com.

Preachers to be Acquainted with Human Nature.—Michael Angelo, when painting an altar-piece in the conventual church, in Florence, in order that the figures might be as death-like as possible, obtained permission of the prior to have the coffins of the newly-buried opened and placed beside him during the night; an appalling expedient, but successful in enabling him to reproduce with terrible effect, not the mortal pallor only, but the very anatomy of death. If we would preach well to the souls of men, we must acquaint ourselves with their ruined state, must have their case always on our hearts both by night and day, must know the terrors of the Lord and the value of the soul, and feel a sacred sympathy with perishing sinners. There is no masterly, prevailing preaching without this.—Spurgeon.

5—7. (5) dead carcasses, of those killed by famine and the sword. bones, to intimate that no decent burial should be given to the dead bodies.^c (6) works, i. e. your idols, which are not gods, but the mere work of men's hands. (7) I . . Lord, by the display of My glory as the "All-powerful punisher of sin." The term Jehovah is used in the later prophets to mean the true and only God. In this prophet the purpose and the effect of all the judgments on Israel is that they may know that He who inflicts them is Jehovah—God alone. The same is the purpose and effect of His judgments on the heathen—these learn also the same truth.—Cam. B.

A Ruined Civilization.—Palestine is now a land of ruins, and the prophecy before us predicted that condition. But there is more behind. Houses broken down, altars overthrown, streets grass-grown, inhabited places made desolate,—these are the outward and visible signs of a decayed and broken civilization. The destruction of the civilization is the real disaster. This happened in Israel when wild beasts came out from the forests and prowled over the once safe and populous country; and it happened in another form in Europe when the hardy barbarians poured over the plains of Italy, and destroyed, not only buildings, but also the whole fabric of ancient society, and so ushered in the gloom and disorder which took possession of the early part of the Middle Ages. Christian civilization has been lost on the north coast of Africa, where Tertullian, Cyprian, and Augustine were once shining lights; it has almost vanished from the site of the seven Churches of Asia. Modern Egypt is far below the Egypt of the Pharaohs in civilization: the fellahen of to-day build mud hovels; their ancestors forty centuries ago constructed the great Hall of Columns at Karnak—one of the wonders of the world. The ancient civilization of Mexico had entirely vanished before the discovery of South America by the importers of a new Roman Catholic civilization. The Christian civilization that has grown out of the experience of ages and slowly ripened through generations of culture is the most precious heritage we have received from our forefathers. Let us guard and treasure it as a sacred trust.—Pul. Com.

8—10. (8) a remnant, Is. iv. 2; Je. xlv. 14. These would comprehend the purposes of Jehovah and would become connected to true monotheism. (9) remember me, when under the pressure of calamity, they would, in penitence, turn thought and heart to God. broken, better, "when I have broken their whorish heart," etc. with their eyes, omit "with." lothe themselves, lit. "loathe themselves in their own sight;" R. V., "eyes and heart were alike involved in the sin (ch. xx. 7, 8, 24; Numb. xv. 39), and both came under the same chastisement that was to

^a Mentioned as the favorite seat of idol rites, just as hill-tops were.

^b 2 Chr. xxxiv. 4; Is. xvii. 8. We get life, as we lost it; both the one and the other independently of ourselves. "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."

"God does not fulminate merely for the sake of showing his greatness; when he makes us afraid it is that he may bring us to final peace."

^c Comp. 2 Kl. xxiii. 14, 16.

With love, the heart becomes a fair and fertile garden, with sunshine and warm hues, and exhaling sweet odors; but without it, it is a bleak desert covered with ashes."

"The spell shall at last be broken in the new knowledge of Jehovah which is produced by calamity; and the heart of the people, purified from its delusions, shall turn to Him who has smitten them, as the only true God." — John Skinner.

^a Nu. xlv. 10; Eze. xxi. 17.

^b "In indignation at the abominations of Israel, extend thine hand towards Judea, as if about to 'strike' and 'stamp,' shaking off the dust with thy foot, in token of how God shall 'stretch out His hand upon them,' and tread them down."

—Fausset.

^c Je. li. 20; Ho. iv. 13.

^d Nu. xxxiii. 46; Je. xlviii. 22.

"The name, in the modified form Diblath, is found on the Moabite stone."
—Spk. Com.

^a Mal. i. 1, ii. 11.

"Possibly Manasseh and his successors in the kingdom of Judah had the dominion of the whole land of Canaan, formerly divided into the two kingdoms of Judah and Israel, as tributaries under the kings of Assyria."

—Prideaux.

^b Nu. xxiv. 17.

"What stronger breastplate than a heart untainted? Thrice is he armed who hath his quarrel just; and he but naked, though locked up in steel, whose conscience with injustice is corrupted."

—Shakespeare.

"Justice looks at us straight and treats us accordingly."

"Obligation to do right is a blessed tyranny."

lead them to repentance."—Pul. Com. (10) said in vain, i. e. without adequate cause, or full intention and power to execute.

11—14. (11) Smite . . foot,^a gestures indicating deep concern at the wickedness of the people.^b "Call attention by acts of grief and consternation." Alas, etc., Woe! because of all the abominations of the house of Israel.—Polychr. Bib. (12) far off, i. e. out of reach of the perils of the siege. remaineth, in the city besieged, R. V., "preserved," i. e. for the worst evil of all. (13) slain . . altars, vss. 4, 5. hill, etc., noted places for idolatrous worship.^c sweet savour, the smoke of the sacrifice was regarded as a sweet savor or fragrance to the idol. (14) Diblath,^d a wilderness of Diblath is unknown; Diblathaim besides being in Moab could not be called desert. The construction is difficult, but probably the reading should be: from the wilderness to Riblah, i. e. from south to north. Riblah was situated on the northern border of the country.—Cam. B.

Stages of the Soul's Progress from Sin unto Salvation.—1. Sin leading to punishment. Sooner or later, penalty follows transgression. 2. Punishment leading to recollection. Trials should lead us to review our life and consider our ways. 3. Recollection leading to repentance. The true penitent never seeks to excuse himself on account of his sins, or to explain them away, or to extenuate the guilt of them. 4. Repentance leading to devout recognition of God. "They shall know that I am the Lord." "The Lord would have spoken in vain or to no purpose if the event had not corresponded with the utterance. By the correspondence of utterance and event it appears that He who was spoken of by the Son of Man is Jehovah" (Hengstenberg). Pain and trial are blessed when by Divine grace they lead to earnest reflection and sincere repentance and saving knowledge of God.—Pul. Com.

CHAPTER THE SEVENTH.

"Ch. vii. is one of those singled out by Ewald as preserving most faithfully the spirit and language of Ezekiel's earlier utterances. Both in thought and expression it exhibits a freedom and animation seldom attained in Ezekiel's writings, and it is evident that it must have been composed under keen emotion." 1—4. (1) Moreover, etc., the ch. beginning thus is a dirge rather than a prophecy. Only three or four years were to intervene before the final overthrow of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans. (2) land of Israel, this is the term for the whole land that is used after the captivity of the northern nation.^a four corners, or wings;^b fig. to include the whole land; the inevitableness and finality of doom. (3) recompense, etc., God speaks of the people's sin as if it had been a personal injury to Him. (4) not spare, or set limits to the calamities that are coming. Punishment and bitter suffering are necessary to reveal the hateful character of sin. know . . Lord, i. e. that He who is able to inflict such punishments is Jehovah; and what the nature of their Jehovah is by the righteousness of his vengeance.

The Hand of the Clock on the Hour of doom.—1. Retribution, though apparently tardy, has its own set time. 2. Retribution is not a haphazard accident. 3. Retribution from God is most equitable. 4. Retribution, when it comes, is most complete. 5. This retribution is the natural fruitage of sin.—Pulpit Com.

5—9. (5) an only evil, lit. "one evil," an evil wh. is one and final. Hag. ii. 6, "Yet once, it is a little while, and I will shake," etc. is come, R. V., "it cometh," the nearness of the punishment fills the prophet's vision. (6) the end, the final manifestation of the Divine judgment on the land. watcheth, "wakes up for thee," slumbering vengeance is about to fall upon Israel. (7) morning, R. V., "doom," sounding, R. V., "a day of tumult, and not of joyful shouting upon the mountains," no vintage shouting, but the sullen tumult of invasion. (8) shortly, in a very few years; at most three or four. (9) not spare, vs. 4.

Sin in Blossom (vs. 5).—The teaching of the figure before us is—I. That beauty may be associated with evil, as beauty of countenance, Absalom, poetry, eloquence, art, magnificent mansions and picturesque acres. II. That success is no test of moral right or wrong. III. That the forces of retribution are ever at work.—W. R. Thomas.

10-15. (10) morning, i. e. dawn springs out of the earth: the rod of Divine vengeance flowers; the pride of Israel's sinfulness bears fruit. rod . . . blossomed, a fig to represent the fact that the iniquity of Judah was now full, and demanded immediate Divine interference. (11) rod of wickedness, or a rod that must punish wickedness: multitude . . . theirs, R. V., and their multitude nor of their wealth neither shall there be misery among them. Israel was to be entirely swept away. (12) day, i. e. the day of doom: buyer . . . mourn. We have to read, between the lines the story of Ezekiel's companions in exile. They belonged, it will be remembered, to the nobler and wealthier class (2 Ki. xxv. 19). They, it would seem, had been compelled to sell their estates at a price which made the "buyer rejoice and the seller mourn." In each case the joy and the sorrow would be but transient. Wrath had gone out against the whole multitude.—Psalm. Comm. (13) not return, to occupy his land, the lease of which he sold. The coming calamity is about to obliterate all traces and prevent their reoccupation by the exiles of Tel-abib, although . . . alive, i. e. during their lifetime, for the vision . . . return, i. e. "for wrath is upon all" and shall go straight onward to do its work neither . . . life, better. Neither shall any strengthen for himself his life by his iniquity." (14) none . . . battle, Sec. of failing hearts. (15) sword, etc., v. 2, vi. 12, etc.

Destiny is the Summing up of Previous Actions.—1. Punishment for sin comes slowly. 2. Punishment for sin comes surely.—Preachers' Com.

16-19. (16) escape . . . mountains, even if any escape the immediate doom, it will be only to the mountains where they will mourn for the ruined city. doves, noted for the mournfulness of their note, and their fond attachment to their homes and mates.^a (17) refers to the besieged hands . . . feeble, for the fig. see Job iv. 3, 4; Is. xxxiv. 3. (18) gird, etc., Is. xv. 3; Je. xlviii. 37. baldness, Is. xxix. 12; comp. De. xiv. 1. (19) cast, etc., this would be done in the misery of famine, when they found gold and silver could feed nobody: stumbling block, curse was on the gold and silver because they had made idol gods, and ornaments for idol gods with it.^b

20-22. (20) beauty . . . ornament, better. "and the beauty of their ornament they turned into pride, and they made images . . . thereof." The thing spoken of is still their silver and gold, this they not only turned into pride, but made also images of it.—Cam. B. images, of their idol gods. set . . . them, "made it as an unclean thing;" given it into the hands of the Gentiles. (21) strangers, barbarous and savage nations. (22) face . . . them, so as not to interfere and defend the temple from their outrages.

Strangers.—Instead of abiding under a settled and enlightened government, Judah has been the scene of frequent invasions which have introduced a succession of foreign nations. When the Assyrians took Syria from the Mamelukes, they considered it as the spoil of a vanquished enemy. According to this law, the life and property of the vanquished belong to the conqueror. The Government is far from disapproving of a system of robbery and plunder which it finds so profitable.—Volney.

23-27. (23) Make a chain, comp. Je. xxvii. 2. A chain is the symbol of captivity: bloody crimes, i.e. judgment of blood, i. e. "murder committed with hypocritical formalities of justice." (24) worst, the most cruel and terrible: pomp . . . strong, or the pride of power. Je. xxvii. 19. their holy places, God no longer owns them as His. (25) mischief, Is. xlviii. 11. seek a vision, comp. Je. xxvii. 17. xxxviii. 14. "A powerful description of the dismay and despair that will seize all classes in the state at the day of wrath draws near. Calamity after calamity comes, rumor follows hard on rumor, and the heads of the nation are distracted and cease to exercise the functions of leadership." (27) king . . . troubled, general consternation making all the leaders and counsellors of the land helpless: "prince," i. e. chief civil ruler. deserts, "In the correspondence bet. desert and retribution men shall be made to acknowledge the operation of the divine righteousness."

^a "Wickedness easily springs and blossoms, till it becomes ripe for judgment."—Lowth.

^b "The violence and fury of Him who easily have risen up so as to become a rod to punish the wickedness of the people."—Spk. Com.

^c "From the body of the guilty dead a thousand and grievous fears and haunting thoughts proceed."—Wordsworth.

^d Joel ii. 2; Zeph. i. 14.

^e "As doves, whose natural mode is the ravage, when driven by fear from the mountains mourn lamentably. So shall the remnant who have escaped actual death, mourn in the land of their exile."—Spk. Com.

^f "Their wealth will not procure them the necessities of life under the weights of famine or miseries of bondage."—Lowth.

^g Eze. xiv. 3. xvi. 17. xlv. 12.

^h "It was customary to lead away captives in a row with a chain passed from the neck of one to the other."—Flanсет.

ⁱ De. xxviii. 49. 50.

^j "This expression appears to indicate that at this time the Bab. empire constituted in it an element of rude, rough and uncultivated warriors, while at the same time there must have been a highly civilized population long settled in Nineveh or Babylon."—Ewald.

No Help or Hope.—Pitiable is the figure which is brought before our vision—men seeking the spiritual, men inquiring for the prophet, men crying out for Samuel, men praying that they may be enabled to pray; yet every cry returning to the suppliant without an answer, and every expectation falling back upon its author only to increase his sense of mortification and loss.—People's Bible.

b Comp. 2; Ki. xvi. 10—15, xxi. 7.

c "Ezekiel has this repeated vision of the glory of God to aggravate the sin of Israel, in changing their own God, the God of Israel (who is a God of so much glory as here He appears to be), for dunghill gods, scandalous gods, false gods, and indeed no gods."

Mat. Henry. "Surely if sin attacks the sovereignty of God, self-righteousness is equally guilty of treason: for as sin boasts, 'I will not keep God's law,' self-righteousness exclaims, 'I will not be saved in God's way; I will make a new road to heaven.'" a "The locality of the idol enhance the heinousness of the sin before God's own altar."—Fausset.

b Comp. Eze. vii. 21, 22, x. 18.

"What is there so ponderous in evil, that a thumb's bigness of it should outweigh the mass of things not evil which were heaped into the other scale.—Hawthorne.

"Many prayers which seem earnest are not answered because they supplicate for gratification to some lust of the flesh or mind. Many a religious meeting dissolves as a vapour wherein no appearance of God is traceable, because they have

CHAPTER THE EIGHTH.

1—4. (1) one year and two months after the first vision. elders, those carried away with Jehoiachin, and now at the Chebar. These had come to inquire of the Lord, through His Prophet, concerning the affairs in Jerus. They were aware, whether the information was recent or not, that they were absolutely disowned by the new authorities in Jerusalem, and that it was impossible that they should ever come back peaceably to their old place in the state. This created a problem which they could not solve.—Exp. B. hand . . me, i. e. the trance-state, ch. i. 3. (2) likeness, etc., lxx. "the appearance of a man," comp. ch. i. 26, 27. loins . . fire, to intimate the vengeance of God kindled against the wicked Jews. amber, ch. i. 4. (3) form of a hand, comp. Da. v. 5. in the visions, i. e. he seemed to have all these things done to him in the vision. In all probability we have here the actual picture of the terrible state of affairs due to the degenerating influences of irreligion, wh. existed in Jerus, when Ezek. fell into this trance. door . . gate, R. V., "door of the gate of the inner court," i. e. the entrance to the court of the priests. image of jealousy, some idol figure that provoked Jehovah to jealousy." (4) glory . . there, showing plainly that it was the residence of Jehovah alone. Ref. is to the Shekinah cloud,^c wh. appeared to Ezek. in his first vision.

An Idol Provokes the Jealousy of God.—1. Pleasure. "Love not pleasure, love God: for the supreme love of the one excludes the supreme love of other."—Carlyle. 2. Money—a hard, helpless idol. 3. Earthly love. When a human affection will not yield in submission to the will of God, the object of it becomes an "image of jealousy." 4. Self-will. We may think we serve God, yet are only working according to our own will. This also is idolatry. 5. All these images of jealousy are just so many embodiments of self, the monster idol of the soul and rival of God.—Pulpit Com.

5, 6. (5) toward the north, comp. 2 Ki. xvi. 14^a the altar, i. e. the great altar of burnt-offering. (6) great abominations, by thus in the most insulting way setting up an idol image right in front of Jehovah's shrine. The first effect of the sense that "Jehovah hath forsaken his land," was the multiplication of false objects of worship. "Syncretism in religion and fatalism in politics—these were the twin symptoms of the decay of faith among the upper classes in Jerusalem." go . . sanctuary, being compelled to forsake it, and deliver it up to its pollution." turn . . abominations, R. V., "but thou shalt again see yet other great abom." "Bad begins but worse remains behind."

7—11. (7) vss. 7—12, the Elders practising idolatry in secret. hole in the wall, through which he could see into one of the very side chambers of the sanctuary itself. (8) dig, etc., the secrecy of these rites is thus forcibly indicated: the ordinary entrance had been covered up, and some secret entrance made, poss. through the other rooms. Or the very chamber itself may have been secretly made in the foundations. (9) Go in, so as to get demonstration of the evil. (10) pourtrayed, etc., these pictures were objects of worship. "The words obviously paint the theriomorphic worship of Egypt, the scarabæus probably being prominent. The alliance between Jehoiakim and Pharaoh (2 Kings xxiv. 33—35), and which Zedekiah was endeavoring to renew, would naturally bring about a revival of that cultus." (11) seventy, etc., a company of the elders or leaders of the nation. Poss. members of the great council, or Sanhedrim. That the very highest and most influential citizens of Jerus should embrace this heathenish abomination, indicated the utter collapse of Jehovah worship.

The Chamber of Imagery (vss. 7—12).—From this vision we learn the following truths. I. That the degenerating tendency in the most advanced people has ever been strong. II. That the greatest sins of humanity are generally the hidden ones. 1. Man has power to conceal his sins; 2. As a sinner he has the strongest reasons for concealment. III. That an insight of the hidden iniquity of a population is a necessary qualification for a true reformer. 1. It serves to impress him with the justice of human suffering; 2. Also with the greatness of God's love in redemption; 3. With the sublime mission of Christianity. IV. That the most hidden sins are destined to be exposed. Of this exposure of sin there are two kinds. 1. Unconscious; 2. Conscious. V. That a practical disregard of the constant presence and inspection of God is an explanation of all sin.—Thomas.

Secret Wickedness.—All that was done by rebellious Israel was done "in the dark." By the "dark" we are to understand that the idolatry was performed in secret. There was an open and public idolatry in Jerusalem at this very time, but such is the downward tendency of all evil that it was not sufficient to have a public and an almost established idolatry, but something further should be done in darkness and concealment. Stolen waters are sweet. Man cannot have enough of evil. He always invents another sweetness, another luxury, another delight in the service of his evil master. When wickedness can be enjoyed in public it ceases to be an enjoyment. It would appear as if the darkness were necessary to bring out the full savor of a bad man's delight.—Peop. Bib. —In reading Dr. Madden's account of the way in which he got access to the chamber of imagery of the temple of Edfu, we were strongly reminded of the similar chamber which the prophet saw. Hassan, an old man, disclosed to Dr. Madden a secret passage, "a chink in an old wall, which I should creep through on my hands and feet. This passage, not two feet and a half high, that my mouth and nose were sometimes buried in the dust. After proceeding about ten yards in utter darkness, I had the inexpressible satisfaction of standing once more on my feet. We found ourselves in an apartment of great magnitude, and adorned with sacred paintings and hieroglyphics."—Kitto.

12—14. (12) ancients, i. e. elders, in the dark, or in secret.^a chambers . . imagery, or his chambers painted with images.^b Lord . . earth, R. V. marg., "land." The wish was father to the thought; men who so readily yielded to the belief in Jehovah's absence were very willing to be persuaded of its truth. The religion of Jehovah had always imposed a check on social and civic wrong, and men whose power rested on violence and oppression could not but rejoice to be rid of it.—Exp. B. (14) weeping for Tammuz, or Adonis, poss. the same as Osiris, a symbol of the sun.^c "The sun-god mourned by his lover Astarte, the personification of vegetable and animal life, at his departure in the decline of the year to dwell in the region of gloom with Persephone."

the love-tale
Infected Sion's daughters with like heat;
Whose wanton passions in the sacred porch
Ezekiel saw, when, by the vision led,
His eyes surveyed the dark idolatries
Of alienated Judah.—Par. Lost.

15—18. (16) inner court, that of the priests. between . . altar, positions which even the priests only took on the most solemn occasions, and then they turned to the west of the temple.^d "During all this time the glory of Jehovah has stood in the court, and there is something very impressive in the picture of these infatuated men and women preoccupied with their unholy devotions and all unconscious of the presence of Him whom they deemed to have forsaken the land." faces . . east, offering thus the insult of their backs to Jehovah, and the worship of their faces to the sun. (17) branch . . nose, "as the Persians, who, when worshipping the rising sun, held a tamarisk branch in their hands. Polychrome Bib. reads, "behold they are sending a stench to my nostrils." (18) not spare, ch. v. 11.

Ezekiel's Vision.—It is not easy to say how far the representation that the idolatrous usages were practiced in the temple is to be taken not come to the Father only by Christ. Get a single eye, purify hearts by faith, search out all doublemindedness in private or public means of worship, lest God go far off, refusing to accept and hear. 'Beside Him there is no God,' and a divided worship is worthless."

"Conscience is harder than our enemies; knows more, accuses with more nicety." — George Eliot.

"It is not the loud voice but upright heart, that God will regard."

—Pul. Com.

^a As vs. 7, 8.

^b "Every one of the 70 elders had his own imagery, his favorite object of idolatrous worship portrayed upon the wall of the chamber; and to it he did homage with his censor, according to the device of his own heart."

—Wordsworth.

^c "This was a form of Nature-worship. It was a festival held when Nature in the E. seems to wither and die under the scorching heat of the sun, to burst forth again into life in due season. The death of Adonis symbolised the suspension of the productive powers of Nature, wh. were in due time revived. The excitement of the festival led to unbridled license and excess." — Biblical Things.

^d Joel 11. 17.

^e "To understand this clearly it should be observed that, as if purposely to prevent the abomination referred to, the entrance of the temple was on the E. side of the building, so that, in looking towards it in worship, the worshippers necessarily turned their backs upon the sun at its rising in the E., at wh. time the luminary was most usually worshiped."

—Kitto.

* Comp. 2 Ki. i. 24.

† Re. vii. 1.

"A noble yet most solemn thought is it that every man has near him the angel of the Lord, bringing blessing or inflicting judgment, or training the life in all the mystery of progress." — People's Bible.

* 2 Chr. xxxvi. 17.

"Judgment often begins at the house of God, bec. such persons sin against greater light and clearer convictions."

—Lowth.

† Nu. xix. 11.

"Where much is given, much shall be required. There are never privileges to enjoy without corresponding duties to fulfil in return." — Phillips Brooks.

"Every great and original writer, in proportion as he is great or original, must himself create the taste by which he is to be relished." — Wordsworth.

Dr. Thompson, spaking of one of these scribes or letter-writers, says:—"This is a sort of Moslem confessional, and that fellow's head must be crammed with the secrets and the scandal of half literally. Such practices are not referred to by Jeremiah nor other prophets of the time. It is possible that the chambers and cells about the gateways, which appear in some cases to have belonged to private persons, may have been used for illegitimate purposes, but that sun-worship was actually practiced between the temple and the altar has little probability. And the scene in the chamber of imagery is obviously ideal. The prophet certainly desires to shew that idolatry both public and in private was practised by all classes, the elders representing the nation, the women, and perhaps also the priests; and that these idolatries were not only the old native ones of Israel, but new imports at this period from all the nations around.—Camb. B.

CHAPTER THE NINTH.

1—4. (1) loud voice, as giving a command requiring immediate attention. have charge, i. e. the angels charged to execute God's judgments on the city.^a draw near, quickly; ready to act at once. (2) slaughter weapon, such as Levites used for preparing the sacrifices. one man, the leader of them. linen, the dress of the priests, and symbol of purity. inkhorn . . side, it was quite usual for scribes to carry the receptacle for ink and pen stuck in their girdle. (3) gone up, departed from the inner sanctuary to the threshold, to direct the work of his supernatural agencies of execution. (4) mark,^b to indicate that such should be spared. sigh, etc., in their grief at the iniquity around them, but had still remained faithful to true Jehovah worship.

Christians a Living Protest Against Sin (vs. 4).—I. God's people described. 1. They are sighing ones, sorrowing; 2. They are crying ones, protesting. II. Their peculiar mark, a mark of—1. Separation; 2. Service; 3. A visible mark; 4. A mark of safety.—Whythe.

5—7. (5) smite, all that have not the mark of vs. 4. (6) begin . . sanctuary, where idolatry was most shamefully developed. "There he was most present, there most fully known, there if possible most forgotten and provoked, and there his holiness and godhead will assert themselves with most terribleness against the sins of men." This work of destruction was in fact done by the Chaldeans.^a ancient men, ch. viii. 11, 12, 16. (7) Defile the house, this was done by shedding human blood in it, and leaving in it dead bodies.^b

Beginning at the Sanctuary.—1. There is no protection in the sanctuary. 2. The greatest guilt is found in the sanctuary. 3. The doom of the sanctuary is a warning to the world. Let us flee from the sanctuary to the Saviour.—Pulpit Com.

Preaching: its Force the Main Consideration.—I had tried to drive certain long brass-headed nails into a wall, but had never succeeded except in turning up their points, and rendering them useless. When a tradesman came who understood his work, I noticed that he filed off all the points of the nails, the very points upon whose sharpness I had relied; and when he had quite blunted them, he drove them in as far as he pleased. With some consciences our fine points in preaching are worse than useless. Our keen distinctions and nice discriminations are thrown away on many; they need to be encountered with sheer force and blunt honesty. The truth must be hammered into them by main strength, and we know from whom to seek the needed power.—Spurgeon.

8—11. (8) left, bec. the avengers were gone forth from the temple to slay in the city. Then the Prophet intercedes. residue, etc., Ezek., like Moses and St. Paul, inquires of God whether he will utterly destroy the Jewish nation, or in his graciousness only chastise. (9) full of blood, the sign of violence. perverseness, or wresting of judgment, ch. viii. 23. He is reassured by the declaration that the guilt of Judah and Israel demands no less a punishment than this, because the notion that Jehovah had forsaken the land had opened the floodgates of iniquity, and filled the land with bloodshed and the city with oppression.—Exp. B. (10) not spare, ch. v. 11. (11) reported, his report concerned his safe preservation of God's elect by affixing on them the required mark.

The Work of Justice Proceeds Side by Side with that of Mercy.—

Along with the six officers appointed to destroy was one differently clad, whose work was to save. His clothing was the attire of peace—white linen—i. e. the dress of a true priest. Against six destroyers there was one protector, which denoted how few was the number of the faithful. They were to have a distinguishing mark in the most conspicuous place—in their foreheads. The owner of the flock will take care to put his own sign-manual on his sheep. "The Lord knoweth them that are his." In every time of trouble "he has hidden them in his pavilion—in the secret of his tabernacle will he hide them." Noah and his family in the ark; Lot and his daughters in Zoar; the early Christians safe in Pella when Jerusalem was destroyed.—Pul. Com.

CHAPTER THE TENTH.

1-4. (1) in the firmament, better, "above the firmament;" the glory of the Lord had returned fr. the threshold to the throne above the cherubim. cherubims, R. V., "cherubim," comp. ch. i. 26. sapphire stone, Ex. xxiv. 10. (2) he spake, i. e. the being seated on the throne. cherub, i. e. the fourfold fig. described in ch. i. coals, with which to burn up, or destroy the city." (3) right side, or south side. cloud .. court, i. e. the Shekinah cloud was moved from the entrance of the sanctuary, and filled the priest's court." (4) went up, as if ascending and passing away.

5-7. (5) sound .. wings, ch. i. 24. The cherubic figure appears to move, as if in close attendance on the Divine glory. voice .. God, the use of "God Almighty" (El Shaddai; comp. Exod. vi. 3), the name of God as ruling over nature, while "Jehovah" expressed his covenant relationship to Israel, is characteristic of the early stage of the religion of Israel (Gen. xvii. 1; xxviii. 3).—Pulp. Com. (6) Take fire, vs. 2. (7) clothed with linen, symbol of his priestly office; but now he has to become a minister of Divine vengeance. took .. went out, to put the command at once into execution.

8-12. The whole passage (vss. 8-17) is certainly superfluous, and might be omitted but for the difficulty of imagining any motive that would have tempted a scribe to insert it. We must keep in mind the possibility that this part of the book had been committed to writing before the final redaction of Ezekiel's prophecies, and the description may have served a purpose than which is superseded by the fuller narrative which we now possess in ch. i.—Exp. B. (8) man's hand, ch. i. 8. (9) beryl stone, ch. i. 16. (10) appearances, etc., ch. i. 13, 15, 17. (11) head looked, either the "principal" wheel wh. for the time determined the course of the whole cherubic chariot; or "the front of the chariot." (12) eyes, ch. i. 18.

The Hand and the Wing (vs. 8).—There are two proofs of our religious life—our great thoughts of God; our great deeds for God. In religion, as in life, there are two ideas—the sense of farness, the sense of nearness. I. See what a Divine work creation is. II. Then you see what Divine providence is. III. See in the human hand, beneath the wing of the angel, the relation of a life of action to a life of contemplation. IV. In a word, you see what religion is; it is the human hand beneath the angel's wing—E. P. Hood.

13-17. (13) O wheel, Polychr. B. "And in my hearing the wheels were called 'chariot.'" Heb. the galgal, or the whirling. These wheels were most rapid in their revolutions. (14) of a cherub, why we have "cherub" here instead of "ox" it is difficult to see. (15) lifted up, to attend the Divine Glory on this its removal from the Temple. (16) cherubims went, ch. i. 19. (17) spirit .. them, ch. i. 20, 21.

Note on vs. 14.—It seems possible to explain the verse only by making some suppositions which may appear rather artificial, viz. first that the prophet looking at the phenomenon of the chariot and four creatures as a whole saw four faces presented to him, one (and a different one) by each of the creatures, and that he named the faces which were thus presented to him. We should then translate "the face of the first," "the face of the second," etc., though this seems opposed to the meaning of the first words of the verse. And secondly, that he assumes the side of the city. No matter; I suppose, like other confessors, he keeps dark and may be trusted. Still, this letter writing would not be a very thriving business in our own country."

God is infallible, and His commands make right. Obedience to them must characterize His people.

^a For coals of fire as denoting the Divine vengeance, see Ps. cxl. 10; Re. viii. 5.

^b "The Shekinah, or Divine glory, is represented as a bright flame breaking out of a thick cloud."—Lowth.

"The Most High, if he pleases, can turn our greatest comforts into our direst curses; and he may do so if we misuse them. 'They had a abused fire,' says Greenhill, 'to maintain their gluttony, for fullness of bread was one of their sins; they burned incense to idols, and abused the altar fire, which had been the greatest refreshing to their souls; . . . and now even this fire kindled upon them.' And as a matter of fact, fire was used in destroying the temple and other places in Jerusalem. Josephus tells how Nebuzaradan, by command of the King of Babylon, having despoiled the temple of its precious and sacred treasures, set fire to it. 'When he had carried these off, he set fire to the temple in the fifth month, the first day of the month, in the eleventh year of the reign of Zedekiah, and in the eighteenth year of Nebuchadnezzar; he also burnt the palace and overthrew the city."—W. F. Adeney.

^a "The cherubim (or chariot) had stood first on the threshold of the temple door, and there received the glory of the Lord. They then lifted their wings, rose and left the temple by the east gate of the outer court, at the entrance of which they now for a time stood. It was by the east gate of the outer court that the glory of the Lord returned to the new temple. Ch. xliii. 4."—Spk. Com.

^a Je. i. 18; Eze. xiv. 3, 4.

^b "These infidels purpose to deride the Prophet; as if they had said—If this city be a caldron, we had rather take our chances of being consumed in it, than leave our fine houses and run the risk of war or captivity."—Lowth.

^c 1 Ki. viii. 65; 2 Ki. xiv. 25.

^d Je. iii. 9, 10.

"There would be peculiarities in the woes which should befall Israel that would be marked as unique throughout all time. If acts as shocking are observed in the distressed periods of other nations, we must remember that when a wife or child is expelled from the home, the calamity, though similar, is far worse than when a guest or servant is expelled."— the chariot presented to him not to be the front, but regards the side looking in another direction as the front or head.—Cam. Bib.

D. G. Watt.

^a Comp. Je. iv. 27, v. 10, 18.

18—22. (18) departed,^a moved again, as if ascending. "It now quite leaves the house itself, and settles upon the cherubim which stood in the court adjoining it, vs. 3." Ezek. considered the temple deserted of God fr. that moment. It was like Shiloh. (19) wheels .. them, ch. i. 19, 26. (20) knew .. cherubims, i. e. now I recognized that this strange living creature represented the cherubim that guarded the glory, in the holy of holies. (21) hands, ch. i. 8. (22) saw .. Chebar, as narrated in ch. i. Now, as it were, he understands why the first vision was seen as coming from the north. He does not tell us whether the journey of which he saw the beginning was to end. For the present there was a halt, as we learn from ch. xi. 23, "over the midst of the city." Even when the vision ended, it had not gone further than the Mount of Olives. It was, at any rate, no longer in the temple. The banks of Chebar or any other place might become, as Bethel had been to Jacob (Gen. xxviii. 17), as "the house of God" and "the gate of heaven."—Pul. Com.

CHAPTER THE ELEVENTH.

1—4. (1) lifted me up, ch. iii. 12, 14, viii. 3. east gate, where the glory tarried awhile in its departing. five .. men, "princes of the people," who were plotting rebellion against the king of Babylon in opposition to the teachings of Jeremiah. The priests forsake God's laws, the rulers spurn his counsel. Jaazaniah, comp. ch. viii. 11; but the names cannot be identified with any known persons. (2) wicked counsel, esp. in bidding the people not to believe the Divine threatenings by the Prophets. (3) not near, i. e. the threatened day of calamity. R. V., "the time is not near to build houses." I incline, while adopting the Revised Version rendering, to interpret the words, as Smend takes them, as the defiant utterance of despair: "It is no time for building houses, here or elsewhere. We are doomed. Well, let us meet it as we best may."—Pul. Com. caldron,^a likening their safety within the impregnable walls of Jerusalem, to the safety of flesh in a caldron, wh. the fire cannot reach."^b (4) prophesy, declare the denunciations of God against them.

Note on chs. 9—11.—Davidson concisely points out the relation existing betw. chs. ix, x; and ch. xi. in these words: "The city was thought impregnable strong, and Jehovah's presence would protect it. The prophet symbolizes the departure of Jehovah from it, and warns those who trust to its strength that their trust is vain. Yet the fall of the city is not the last act in Israel's history; the 'house of Israel' is wider than the population of Jerusalem, and towards the larger Israel Jehovah has purposes of mercy. He will restore them to their ancient heritage, where they shall serve him in a land purified from all its uncleanness."

5—12. (5) fell upon me, comp. ch. iii. 24. I know the things, i. e. their plottings. Ezek. read their thoughts before they issued in deeds. (6) multiplied your slain, ch. xxii. 3, 4. The conspirators put to death all who opposed their evil policies. (8) the sword, or judgment by war. (9) hands of strangers, who shall carry you into captivity: the Babylonian army under Nebuchadnezzar. (10) border of Israel, at Riblah in the land of Hamath,^c where the king of Babylon judged and condemned Zechariah.^d (11) not .. caldron, i. e. it shall be no defence from the fire of the Divine indignation. (12) not walked, etc., De. xii. 30, 31.

13—16. (13) Pelatiah, vs. 1. This stroke of God indicated the destruction of the idolaters, of whom Pelatiah was a leader. full end, or a complete, irremediable destruction.^a (15) thy brethren, i. e. those of thy kindred and acquaintance who are carried captive with thee. men .. kindred, Polychr. B. and Sept. "thy fellow-exiles." As in Jeremiah's vision (xxiv. 1), they were the "good figs;" those in the city, the vile and worthless. They were the remnant, the residue, for whom there was a hope of better things. They were despised as far off from the Lord. They were really nearer to his presence than those who worshipped in the temple from which Jehovah had departed.—Pulp. Com. us .. possession, i. e. those left in Jerusalem regarded their captive brethren as coming under Divine judgments, and themselves as in the Divine favor. The idea which lay under their religious attitude was that the exiles had gone into captivity because their sins had incurred Jehovah's anger, and that now His wrath was exhausted and the blessing of His favor would rest on those who had been left in the land.—Exp. B. (16) little sanctuary,^b R. V., "a sanctuary for a little while." Religion perhaps perishes sooner from the overgrowth of ritual than fr. its deficiency."

The Sanctuary of the Exile.—I. God is the best sanctuary. 1. God vouchsafes His presence to His people. He does not only give a house of worship; He comes Himself. 2. God's presence sanctifies. Wherever God visits us He makes a sanctuary. The workshop is a holy place when God is in it. 3. God's presence saves; for He is "a Sun and a Shield." II. This sanctuary is to be found in exile. 1. In exile from the native land. 2. In exile from the old delights. 3. In exile from heaven. 4. For a short season.—W. F. Adeney.

Spiritual Religion.—It is a historical fact that the very meagreness of the religion which could be practised in exile was the means of strengthening the more spiritual and permanent elements which constitute the essence of religion. The observances which could be maintained apart from the Temple acquired an importance which they never afterwards lost; and although some of these, such as circumcision, the Passover, the abstinence from forbidden food, were purely ceremonial, others, such as prayer, reading of the Scriptures, and the common worship of the synagogue, represent the purest and most indispensable forms in which communion with God can find expression. That Jehovah Himself became even in small measure what the word "sanctuary" denotes indicates an enrichment of the religious consciousness of which perhaps Ezekiel did not perceive the full import.—Exp. Bib.

17—21. (17) gather you, etc., the point seems to be that the earlier captives should return, but the proud remnant then in Jerusalem should be destroyed, or, if taken into captivity, never return from it to their own land. (18) they, i. e. the people of the earlier captivities. detestable things, or things associated with idolatry. (19) one heart, a united feeling of devotion to the sole service of God (Is. xxxii. 39).^c new spirit, comp. the stiff-neckedness and rebelliousness which they had formerly shown.^d stony . . flesh, the old stony heart, unimpressible and obstinate, shall be taken away, and a heart of "flesh," sensitive and responsive to the touch of Jehovah, shall be given them.^e (20) my people, as serving Me heartily and sincerely, keeping faithfully their covenant with God. (21) heart . . heart, we should prob. read, "whose heart goeth after their detestable things," etc.

A New Heart—An Indian Chief.—The efforts of some Christian missionaries had been the means of diffusing much Scriptural knowledge among the Delaware Indians of North America, and their doctrines were frequently the subject of conversation among them.^a One evening, Tedynscung, a native chief, was sitting by the fireside of his friend, who mentioned the golden rule to him as very excellent.—"For one man to do to another as he would the other should do to him." "It is impossible!—It cannot be done!" said the Indian chief. After musing for about a quarter of an hour, Tedynscung again gave his opinion, and said, "Brother, I have been thoughtful on what you told me. If the Great Spirit that made man would give him a new heart, he could do as you say, but not else."

22—25. (22) lift up, as in attitude for flying. (23) upon the mountain, i. e. the Mount of Olives. The Shekinah thus left altogether the temple and city: yet, in great grace, it lingered near.^a (24) brought . . Chaldaea, i. e. back again to the banks of the Chebar.^b (25) them . . captivity, see ch. viii. 1.

Departure of God from His temple (vs. 23).—I. How averse God is to forsake His people. Look we to His declarations; look we to examples. II. What are the different steps by which His departure may be discovered? He withholds.—1. The manifestations of His love; 2. The influences of His grace; 3. The warnings of His spirit. III. The dreadful state of those who are forsaken by Him. 1. They are delivered up into the hands of their spiritual enemies; 2. They live only to —Wordsworth. Is. viii. 14; Ps. xci. 9.

^b "They have been carried far away from the literal and material sanctuary at Jerusalem, but I myself will be their sanctuary."

"My shrine is the humble heart—a preparation for Gospel catholicity when the local and material temple should give place to the spiritual."—Fausset. "God and all that He has made is not more than God without anything that He has made. It is therefore better to enjoy Him without anything else than to enjoy everything else without Him."—Secker.

^d Zec. xii. 10.

^e Ac. iv. 32.

^e "The contrast is not, as usual, between the spirit and the flesh, but, between the heart unnaturally hardened, and the heart reawakened to feeling proper to man."

—Spk. Com.

^a A heart unspotted is not easily daunted." —Shakespeare.

^a The Rabbis say that the glory lingered for three years over the Mount of Olives, but of this Scripture says nothing.

^b "Not in actual fact, but in ecstatic vision. He had been as to the outward world all the time before the elders in Chaldaea; he now reports what he had witnessed with the inner eye."—Fausset. "The form of the vision changes, but the God of the vision abides the same."—Parker.

increase their guilt and misery. Apply:—(1) How are we to reconcile this doctrine with other parts of Scripture? (2) How are we to avert this awful calamity? C. Simeon.

CHAPTER THE TWELFTH.

a De. xxix. 4.

b 2 Ki. xxv. 4; Je. xxxix. 4.

"Leaning upon God, upheld by Him, but not mixed up with Him in our affairs.—Of ourselves we cannot stand a single moment."—Lange.

"The earnest men are so few in the world that their very earnestness becomes at once the badge of their nobility; and as men in a crowd instinctively make room for one who seems eager to force his way through it, so mankind everywhere open their ranks to one who rushes zealously toward some object lying beyond them."—Dwight.

a "Ezekiel, bearing his staff on his shoulder, was a sign of the weight of calamity coming upon king and people."—Spk. Com.

b Eze. vii. 27.

"Some troubles can be endured and lived down by fortitude, by patient submission, or by the comforting resources of the inner life. But this is not possible with the judgments of Heaven. They are too terrific to be calmly endured. The inner resources of consolation are withheld. The soul is punished as well as the body."

c 2 Ki. xxiv. 14, xxv. 12.

"Constitutional bravery will exclude the possibility of fear,

1—7. (1, 2) dwellst, i.e. even now, in the captivity, such is the character of the people around you." They will not heed the prophet's instructions. They will not read the moral meaning of history. (3) stuff, or household goods, symbolic of the movements of people in a besieged city who look for its speedy overthrow. (4) by day, so that all may see, take notice, and be warned by it. (5) Dig, etc., to illus. the escape of Zedekiah from Jerusalem.^b wall, the city wall. (6) cover thy face, prob. symbolic of the king's blindness. twilight, R. V., "dark;" so vss. 7, 12.

The Divine Expectation (vs. 3).—I. The subject to which this expectation refers. 1. Men do not consider that they are sinful creatures; 2. Nor that they are dying creatures; 3. Nor that they are immortal creatures. II. The means employed for bringing about the expectation which is here expressed. 1. The Divine forbearance; 2. The afflictive dispensations of Divine Providence; 3. The ministry of the Gospel.

The Necessity of Israel's Destruction.—The preceding symbols, such as those in ch. iv.—xii. and ch. viii.—xi., had foreshewn the certainty of the nation's fall, a new series of discourses demonstrate the necessity of it. Many thoughts and considerations occurred to men's minds which invalidated the force of the prophet's threats and disinclined them to receive them, or at least left them in hesitation. They had been for long familiar with threats of judgment, but the threatened storm had passed over. There were also men who saw into the future as well as Ezekiel, who, however, discerned no signs of approaching calamity, but foretold peace and security. And further, was not Israel the people of Jehovah, whom he could not cast away? In a new series of discourses (ch. xii.—xix) the prophet disposes of such considerations, adding also positive reasons which demonstrate the moral necessity of the nation's removal.—Camb. Bib.

8—12. vss. 8—16. The symbol explained. (9) house of Israel, those among whom Ezekiel dwelt. (10) burden, or prediction of woe.^a prince, or King Zedekiah.^b Possibly Ezekiel avoided the title "king," as seeing in him one who was a ruler de facto, but not a king de jure. (11) your sign, i.e. a warning to you of what shall surely come to pass. (12) bear, etc., trans. "shall carry forth on his shoulder; in the darkness shall he go forth." just as the Prophet had represented. Comp. the historical account.

Ezekiel's Symbolic Acts.—Ezekiel's collecting together his goods, does not look like a person's flying in a hurry, and by stealth; and consequently his going forth in the evening, in consequence of this preparation, cannot be construed as designed to signify a stealing away. These managements rather mark out the distance of the way they were going—going into captivity in a very far country. The going into captivity had not privacy attending it; and accordingly, the sending their goods to a common rendezvous beforehand, and setting out in an evening, are known to be Eastern usages.—Harmer.

13—16. (13) My net, Zedekiah was caught in escaping by the Chaldeans, but the net was really God's. not see it, bec. his eyes were put out. (14) scatter, etc., 2 Ki. xxv. 4, 5. (15) know, by the fulfilment of the threatened Divine judgments. Jerusalem and Israel is set in the midst of the nations round about (ch. v. 5), its history is a drama enacted before the eyes of mankind, and the drama when finished will reveal, not only to Israel but the nations of the world, Jehovah in his fulness.—Cam. B. (16) a few men, ch. vi. 8—10.^c

Unbelief.—Josephus reports that an account of this prophetic action and its explanation was sent to Zedekiah, but that he, on comparing it with the danger which Jeremiah had warned him of, found that the latter said that he should be carried to Babylon, while Ezekiel said that he should not see it. The discrepancy was so glaring in the king's view that he concluded, not that one was right and the other wrong, but that both were false! "In this he but showed the captious disposition of superficial inquirers and shallow unbelievers of all ages, who no sooner discover some obvious difficulties on the surface of Revelation than they conclude the whole to be a cunningly devised fable, or treat it as unworthy of their serious consideration. Would they but search a little deeper, and survey, in a spirit of impartiality, the entire field of Revelation, they would find that the things which at first stagger their belief disappear on closer inspection, or remain only as difficulties inseparable from communications which bear respect to the character and purposes of Godhead."—Fairbairn.

17—20. (17, 18) with quaking, i.e. with such signs of alarm as persons would feel in a time of siege; and with anxiety to limit the quantity of food to that barely necessary to sustain life." (19) people of the land, i.e. the captives. They were to feel that the lot of their brethren in Jerusalem was far worse than their own. desolate . . . therein, i.e. desolated of her people and her treasures. (20) cities, dependent on the fall of the chief city, Jerusalem.

Fear.—I. Fear arises from evil causes. The sound and innocent soul in healthy circumstances should not know fear. Observe some of the causes of fear. 1. Ignorance; 2. Weakness; 3. Guilt. II. Fear is hurtful. 1. It is one of the most painful elements of punishment; 2. Fear is a cause of disaster; 3. Worse than all, fear is often morally degrading. III. Fear may be conquered by faith.—Pul. Com.

21—25. vss. 21—28, Warning against those who cry down the truthfulness of prophecy. (22) days . . . faileth, the point of the prov. is that the threatened judgment was so long in coming that the people need not fear its ever coming at all.^b The reference is specially to prophecies of judgment, and there was room for misapprehension in regard to these, because being drawn forth by moral evils existing when they were uttered, they were of the nature of threats, the object of which was to bring the people to repentance, and thus prevent their own fulfilment. For the same reason they were often of a general character, and thus when their fulfilment was postponed or when they were not literally fulfilled, men judged that they were merely uttered in the air.—Cam. B. vision, i. e. prophetic vision. (23) at hand, close at hand. Very close when Ezekiel wrote. The immediate reference is to the destruction of Jerusalem which the prophet saw to be one of those events which were unconditionally decreed, and an event which must bulk more and more largely in the vision of the true prophet until it was accomplished.—Exp. B. effect, lit. the word or contents. (24) vain vision, one that will not be fulfilled. One of the great hindrances to the effectiveness of prophecy was the division in the ranks of the prophets. They contradicted one another in the name of Jehovah, and the people were tempted to give the preference to those who prophesied smooth things. flattering divination, one that encourages the people to think they will yet be spared. Very soon the national calamities will silence the false diviners." (25) in your days, before you die: in your time.

Trouble Exposes Delusions.—So long as Jerusalem prospered the vain visions continued, and the flattering divination was practised without intermission. It was the touch of real trouble that broke the bubble. Many a comfortable soul is living in a fool's paradise or direful error without fear or pain until some real adversity comes. Then the utter delusiveness of the admired notions is suddenly revealed with appalling amazement. If we are able to hold to fatal notions till the end of life, we shall find at last that they are but rotten planks, which will break up when we try to float on them over the chill waters of death.—W. F. Adeney.

26—28. (27) many days, i. e. it belongs only to the far off future." (28) prolonged, even Divine long-suffering now shall fail, and judgment come speedily.

"Fear" exclaimed the hero Nelson, when only a boy, to his grandfather and mother, who had asked if he had not met fear when he had lost his way, 'what is it like? I have never seen it.'"

"The direst foe of courage," says George Macdonald, "is the fear itself, not the object of it; and the man who can overcome his own terror is a hero and more."

a "A symbolical representation of the famine and fear with which they should eat their scanty morsel at the siege."—Fausset.

"Even sin demands patience—we cannot spell out misery in a moment."

b Je. xvii. 15. xx. 7; Zep. i. 12; Is. v. 19; 2 Pe. iii. 3, 4.

c "The false prophets who foretold peace and safety, shall see their prophecies so confuted by the events quite contrary to what they foretold, that they will never pretend any more to publish new prophecies."

—Lowth.

Notice in the seed the germ of the tree. Cut it open; study it under the microscope. Root, trunk, branches, leaves, are all there. So in the Christian's heart is planted the germ of all that makes a son of God.

a "Not a mere repetition of the scoff (vs. 22). There the scoffers asserted that the evil was so often threatened and postponed, it must have no reality; here formalists do not go so far as to deny that a day of evil is coming, but assert it as far off yet. The transition is easy from this carnal security to the gross infidelity of the former class."—Fausset.

^b Je. vi. 14, xliii. 11, etc. xxvii. 14, xxix. 8, 22, 23; Mic. iii. 5.

^c Comp. Is. i. 1, ii. 1.

^d "In deserts the foxes become so ravenous and crafty in their devices to get food. So the prophets wander in Israel, a moral desert, unrestrained, greedy of gains which they get by craft."—Fausset.

^e "It was the office and duty of prophets, if they were truly what they pretended, by their prayers and intercessions to put a stop to God's vengeance when it was just ready to be poured out upon a sinful people."—Lowth.

"Reference is to jackals, which in desolate ruins are more hungry and rapacious than others."

—Wordsworth.

^a "They come to believe their own lies. 'The Lord hath not sent them that they should hope,' i.e. so that they should have grounds to hope that the words will be confirmed." — Spk. Com.

^b "They shall die in their captivity and shall die childless, and so their names shall not be found among those who either themselves or their posterity returned out of Babylon, of whom a particular account was kept in a public register."—Mat. Henry.

CHAPTER THE THIRTEENTH.

1-5. Ch. xiii: Ezek. continues his denunciation against the false prophets. (2) prophecy . . . hearts, i. e. of their own will, and not as delivering a Divine message.^b "Whatever there might be in their prophetic experiences that resembled those of a true prophet, there was nothing in the oracles that did not belong to the sphere of worldly interests and human speculation." To one who knew that his vision was fr. God, this false prophecy seemed peculiarly heinous and revolting. (3) foolish prophets, i. e. those lacking the moral qualities necessary in a prophet. "True prophets had a stringent personal and state morality. In their view the true cause of the destruction of the state was its immoralities. But the false prophets had no such deep moral convictions, and seeing nothing unwonted or alarming in the condition of things prophesied of 'peace.' They were not necessarily irreligious men; but their religion had no truer insight into the nature of the God of Israel than that of the common people."—Davidson. seen nothing, had no Divine vision given them.^c "Seers of what they have not seen." (4) like the foxes, these creatures find their homes in desolate and ruined countries and cities.^d (5) gaps, or breaches. The fig. is taken from stopping the way of an enemy when a breach in the walls has been made.^e made . . . hedge, or thrown up any works of defence. These prophets knew neither what measures to adopt to stop the way of the invading dangers, nor what protective methods to recommend that the state might be successfully defended.

The Condemnation of the False Prophets.—"Woe unto the foolish prophets, saith the Lord God;" "I am against you." This condemnation is apparent from several facts. 1. Their predictions are falsified, and their counsels brought to nought. 2. They mislead the people to destruction. 3. They bring confusion upon themselves. This sentence is pronounced in language very plain and very smiting. The hypocritical pretenders to a Divine commission are excluded from the register of the house of Israel, and are denied entrance into the land of Israel. All their plotting and lies are not only unmasked; they issue in confusion and destruction to themselves.—Thomson.

The False Prophets.—The prophets are like foxes; ruins are congenial to them; a condition of decay is their proper sphere; there they can burrow as their instincts prompt them. The main idea, however, is that their operations only increase the devastation and undermine and bring down anything that may yet be standing. In a declining and disastrous time the minds of men are excited and fed on the wildest schemes, and feeling themselves helpless they readily turn to those who pretend to speak to them in God's name. And it only adds to their ruin when those to whom they turn have no higher wisdom than themselves.—Camb. B.

6-9. (6) made to hope, R. V. marg., "they have hoped for the confirmation of the word;" reference is rather to their own delusive hope than the event might confirm their word.^a (7) vain vision, one that was a mere mental deception; an imagination of one's own mind. (8) am against you, or I come against you to punish your wickedness. (9) assembly, etc., here referring to the roll of the sacred people, as recognized by God. The Heb. word used means a privy council; and the Prophets may be spoken of as constituting God's privy council. written . . . Israel, the city of Jerusalem, perhaps every city of Judah, had its register of citizens. In such a register were inscribed also the names of proselytes of other races (Ps. lxxxvii. 6), and so men came to think of a like register as kept by the King of kings, containing the names of those who were heirs of the "life" of the true Israel (Exod. xxxii. 32; Isa. iv. 3; Dan. xii. 1).—Pul. Com. enter, etc., on the return of the people to their land.^b

Self-assumption is Sure to Collapse.—Vaulting ambition overleaps itself. The frog that would swell its dimensions to the size of a bull destroyed itself. 1. False teachers make God their direct enemy. "I am against you, saith the Lord God." The God of truth hates hypocrisy.

All falseness shall be like empty thistle-down, which the wind scatters. 2. They shall be excluded from the circle of honor. They had assumed to be heads and leaders in the councils of the nation; they shall be dishonored, and cast out of the deliberative assembly. The false shall be, sooner or later, excommunicated—blackballed. 3. Their posterity shall become extinct. There shall be none to perpetuate their name. New honor often comes to the memory of a righteous man from children of renown. Such honor and satisfaction shall be denied to them. They shall perish root and branch. 4. They shall not participate in the coming restoration. "Neither shall they enter into the land of Israel." The distinctive possession which God gives shall be for the true Israel, "even for those who have no guile." In the time of Israel's real prosperity there "shall not come into them the uncircumcised or the unclean." He is a Jew who is one inwardly.—Davies.

10—13. (10) saying, Peace, Je. vi. 14. a wall, very slightly: as we would say, "run up a wall." The people build a wall and the prophets cover it with plaster (vs. 10)—that is to say, when any project or scheme of policy is being promoted they stand by glozing it over with fine words, flattering its promoters, and uttering profuse assurances of its success. The uselessness of the whole activity of these prophets could not be more vividly described.—Exp. B. untempered mortar, or slight coating of lime to make it look sound. Walls in the E. are often made of unbaked bricks, or rather masses of clay, smeared over with cement. This will not stand heavy rains." (11) overflowing shower, i. e. one so heavy as to make an overflow. God's judgments are often compared to storms.^b (12) be said, your folly shall even pass into a popular proverb. (13) rend it, force it asunder so that it shall come down with an utter destruction.

Delusive Confidence Reproved (vss. 10—12).—I. Who are obnoxious to this reproof? 1. Unfaithful ministers; 2. Unbelieving people. II. The warning here given to them. Their labor will end—I. In certain and bitter disappointment; 2. In irremediable and endless ruin. Address—(1) Careless sinners; (2) Self-complacent formalists; (3) Inconsistent professors.—Simeon.

14—16. (14) discovered, uncovered, laid bare. ye . . consumed, fr. this expression it appears that the city of Jerusalem is figured by this wall which is about to be destroyed. (15) they . . daubed, i. e. the false prophets, who helped it to cherish a false security by proposing first an Assyrian and then an Egyptian alliance, ignoring the while that God was the covenanted ruler of Israel. (16) visions of peace, Je. vi. 10, viii. 11.

"Untempered Mortar."—I. A false hope is like a wall built with untempered mortar. 1. It offers protection. A false hope is planted between men and their danger, like a city wall, and it encourages them to despise the danger. 2. It presents a fair appearance. It has a certain mortar holding the stones together, which may appear to be of the very best quality. So false hopes charm with an appearance of solidity. 3. It contains solid materials. It is not a mere mound of earth. There are good hewn stones in the structure. We may have certain solid truths of the Christian religion. Yet if these are not united by personal faith they hang loosely together, and will not save us. 4. It lacks an essential element. The mortar is rotten. Then all the rest goes for nothing. Our system of religion, like the teaching of the false prophets, may have every commendable element, beauty, symmetry, fulness, etc., except one—truth. II. The tempest of trial will shatter a false hope. 1. The tempest of trial will come. If our bark is only made for fair weather, it is doomed to shipwreck, because the storm will break at last on every life. 2. The false hope will then crumble away. Hail and hurricane dash down the feeble, pretentious wall. Trouble overthrows false hopes. Then the refuge of lies tumbles into a hopeless ruin. 3. The bulder of the false hope will suffer in its overthrow. "Ye shall be consumed in the midst thereof." The greater the hope, the more fearful will be its fall, and the more dreadfully will they be bruised and crushed who take up their abode in it. 4. The false hope is overthrown that we may turn to the true Hope. "Christ our Hope."—Pul. Com.

17—19. Vss. 17—23: the false prophetesses denounced. These were private fortune-tellers who made a living off the credulous and sim-a "In a Median village the men were building a wall of beaten earth rammed into molds or boxes, to give the parts the requisite shape and consistence, and so deposited, by the withdrawal of the mold, layer by layer, upon the wall, each layer drying in its place as the work proceeds. The blocks are usually of considerable size, and are of various quality and strength, as well as cost, according to the materials employed, and the time expended upon them. Unless the climate be very dry, such a wall requires to be faced or coated with a tempered mortar of lime or sand, as a fence against the weather."—Kitto.

b Job xxvii. 20; Ps. xl. 6, xviii. 13, 14; Eze. xxxviii. 22.

"Some men, says Dr. Bushnell, are like flag-staffs — they grew; other men are like trees, — they grow. If we stop growing, our work is done." — S. S. Times.

"As a thistle, if stroked upward, will not molest a man, but, if stroked downward, will prick him: so many hearers of the word, so long as the minister preaches pleasant things, are pleased with him; but so soon as he rubs them a little on the gall, and touches them home to the quick, then they kick and storm at the same." — Cawdray.

a Ex. xv. 20; Ju. iv. 4; 2 Ki. xxii. 14; comp. Joel ii. 28.

"There is nothing so sacred which men of mercenary spirits will not profane if they can but get money by the bargain. But they did it for poor gain; if they could get no more for it, they would sell you a false prophecy that should please you to a nicety for a piece of bread or a handful of barley; and yet that was more than it was worth." — M. Henry.

b "Disheartened the righteous with groundless fears." — Lowth.

"Our life is a trust, not a gift; let us use it accordingly." — R. E. Speer.

a "They look for encouragement and comfort. But Ezekiel, with the genuine prophetic spirit, sees deep into their hearts, and finds them at variance with devotion to the true God. The idols of self-will and unsubmitableness are set up therein. The Prophet warns them that God will not be inquired of in such a spirit as this."

Spk. Com.

b "Lit. 'They have made their idols to go up upon their hearts, as if their hearts were an altar and throne for idols.'" — Wordsworth.

c "Turn thee fr. these, or dare not to inquire of Him whose name is Jealous, lest in wrath He hear and answer thine unblest desire: far better we should cross His lightning's path than be according to our idols

ple. (17) daughters, some women prophets are noticed in Scripture: this encouraged others of the same sex to pretend to the same gift. (18) sew . . armholes, Polychr. Bib., "sew amulets on all wrists." kerchiefs . . stature, magical veils put on the heads of those who consulted these false prophetesses. to hunt souls, "they hunted lives in that they based their predictions not on moral grounds but on pay, ignored the relation bet. chance and life, and fostered the immoral popular craving for fortune-telling." — Polychr. Bib. will ye save, nay rather, how surely you will deceive and destroy all you gain. (19) will ye pollute, R. V., "ye have profaned," i. e. brought God down into the region of the impure. for handfals, etc., i. e. for mere gain putting the name of God to dishonor. For even the meanest and most trifling rewards. slay . . live "promising life to the ungodly and prophesying disaster to those who were righteous."

Female prophets were not unknown in Israel whether in earlier or later times, as Deborah (Judg. iv. 3) and Huldah (2 Kings xxii. 14). The prophetesses referred to here were like the prophets, prophesying out of their own heart (vs. 17). Their prophesying was by some species of divination, which they used in order to obtain oracles. The methods of divination practiced are somewhat obscure: they bound fillets upon the joints and threw cloths or veils over the heads of those who consulted them. By these means they "hunted" souls; they saved souls alive that should not live and slew souls that should not die (vs. 19), or as expressed otherwise, they made the heart of the righteous sad and strengthened the hands of the wicked. — Camb. B.

20—23. (20) make them fly, R. V. marg., "hunt as birds." That is to say, while Ezekiel and all true prophets were exhorting men to live resolutely in the light of clear ethical conceptions of providence, the votaries of occult superstitions seduced the ignorant into making private compacts with the powers of darkness in order to secure their personal safety. tear . . arms, and expose your deceptions. (21) kerchiefs, vs. 18. (22) lies, false representations, leading the righteous to mistrust the Word of God. and deluding the sinners with vain hopes. hands . . wicked, by wh. his evil works were wrought. by promising him life, R. V., "and be saved alive." (23) see no more vanity, bec. the fulfillment of Divine threatenings, and your own destruction, are close at hand.

Prophetesses.—It is evident—(1) That their inspiration came from their own heart; and (2) That the substance of their so-called prophecies was false. They were animated by a desire to please those who resorted to them; and this they did to gratify their own prejudices or to display their own worldly wisdom. — Pul. Com.

CHAPTER THE FOURTEENTH.

1—5. (1) elders, comp. ch. viii. 1. These were fellow-exiles with Ezekiel, who was at this time fully recognized as a prophet of Jehovah. (3) idols . . heart, hankering after the old false worship, the elders' mind and affections were busied with idols. stumblingblock, etc., comp. ch. vii. 19. inquired of, i. e. God is under no obligation to answer such inquiries. (4) will answer him, or as we say in sarcasm, "He shall have his answer." that cometh, better, "by myself," i. e. by "involving them in the consequences of their own idolatries and destroying them." according . . idols, i. e. the chastisement will be proportionable to the idolatry. A reply adjusted not to his inquiry but to his evil practices. (5) take, as in a snare; their own evil heart being the snare and pitfall in which they are caught. It seems clear that one part of the threat here uttered is that the very withholding of the answer will unmask the hypocrisy of men who pretend to be worshippers of Jehovah, but in heart are unfaithful to Him and servants of false gods.

The Idols in the Heart a Barrier to the Truth (vss. 2, 3).—I. The idols that are in the heart, and the stumbling-blocks that are before the face, are the sins with which God's people are sometimes chargeable. II. Men professing to inquire after God while their idols are in their hearts, and their stumbling-blocks before their faces; or the gross inconsistency of seeking to mingle the service of God with the pursuit of sin. 1. Men may pray from the influence of custom; 2. From the promptings of conscience; 3. From the desire to stand well with their fellow-men; 4. From a vain desire to set themselves right with God. III. God taking notice of the idols that are in men's hearts, and the stumbling-blocks that are before their faces, or the faithful warnings which God addresses to those who follow sin while they profess to serve Him. 1. He intimates that He is perfectly acquainted with us; 2. He tells us that He cannot answer the requests of those who indulge in sin; 3. He shows us how unreasonable it is to expect that He will be inquired of by us.

6—8. (6) Repent and turn, the word repent deals with the right feeling; the word turn deals with the corresponding action in ordering life and conduct. (7) stranger, comp. Le. xvii. 10, xx. 2. by myself, not by the agency of a prophet, but by a direct visitation of judgment.^a (8) will make him a sign, etc., De. xxviii. 37; R. V., "will make him an astonishment for a sign," etc. His punishment will strike terror into others.

"Repent."—When did the Lord ever conclude a discourse without some evangelical tone in it? We have seen him step from his chariot of thunder that he might put his arms around some poor sinner and say, Come home ere the sun set, for we will wait for thee in night's darkest hour, and receive thee when they who would be ashamed of thee are lost in slumber. The Bible is terrific in denunciation, awful beyond all other books in its denunciation of sin and its threatening of perdition; yet through it, and through it again, and ruling it, is a spirit of clemency and pity and mercy and hope, yea, across hell's burning mouth there lies the shadow of the cross.—Parker.

9—11. (9) I . . deceived, i. e. suffered him to be deceived,^a but both he and those who are deceived by his false prophecies will alike come into the Divine judgment. (10) bear . . iniquity, both for their idolatry, and their hypocrisy in seeking Jehovah when they loved their idols. "The man who wittingly commits sin had better keep clear of religious ordinances and performances. And the "prophet" (even the modern one) had better keep clear of wicked men, lest he should be used as the instrument of their punishment and perish with them." (11) go no more astray, this was the Divine purpose in inflicting the punishments. For the Divine love works through the Divine judgments.^b

"I, the Lord, have Deceived" (vs. 9).—The meaning appears to be: if the prophet, entering into the "heart" of the idolaters, the circle and direction of their thoughts, and the general spirit which animates them, gives them a prophetic oracle which coincides with the line of their thoughts, and thus helps to foster their delusions, that prophet himself has been seduced or enticed; and it is the Lord who has enticed him. The passage has a resemblance to 1 Kings xxii. 20. There a lying spirit came forth from the Lord and entered into the prophets of Ahab and deceived them, so that they entered into the designs of the wicked king and gave an answer favorable to him. Here it is the Lord Himself who entices the prophet. In both cases this enticement or deception was in punishment for previous sin. Ezekiel does not appear to reflect upon the point whether the prophet before being deceived was true or false. The "prophet" became false when deceived, when he entered into the spirit and purposes of the idolaters, and spoke a word to them in the line of their sinful conduct and hopes.—Camb. B.

12—14. (13) the land, better, a land, any land. grievously, in a way that compels Divine interference. staff, etc., ch. iv. 16, v. 16. (14) three men, comp. Ge. xv. 1. Noah, Daniel, and Job, three men eminent in righteousness and holiness, who lived in evil days. Obs. the indication that in Ezekiel's time Daniel was known and honored among the exiles.

Noah, Daniel, and Job.—Some make great inquiry why these three men should be mentioned rather than others, and they give in their answer:—1. It is thought that they are named, for that they could not divert God's wrath by their holiness and prayers from the people of their times. Noah could not keep off the flood, nor Job the sad things which befel him and his, nor Daniel the captivity. 2. Others think they are named because they freed others in imminent danger in their times. Noah heard, and God should take us at our own vain word."—Keble.

d "I will punish him immediately by My own hands." See vs. 8.—Lowth.

"Much need, indeed, had Peter to weep bitterly; and if there are no bitter tears betimes in our religious life, it is not because we have less of Peter's sin, but little of Peter's grace." —Drummond.

a "Not merely permissively, but by overruling their evil to serve the purposes of His righteous judgment, to be a touchstone to separate the precious from the vile, and to 'prove His people.'"—Fausset. De. xiii. 1—3; 1 Ki. xxii. 23; Je. iv. 10; 2 Th. ii. 11, 12.

b "God punishes sins by means of sins."

"To believe in Him is to be like Him. All other faith is a mere mist of words, dissolving into empty air. To live our human lives as He lived His—purely, lovingly, righteously—is to share His eternity."—Lucy Larcom.

"They signally prevailed in saving others. Noah, in saving the human family; Daniel, in saving the Chaldaean astrologers from destruction (Da. ii. 24); Job, in interceding for his friends (Job xiii. 8—10)."—Wordsworth.

b "There may be times when the very Divine love must refuse to hear intercessors."

"Were there in it the most perfect of all men that have been, or are still living, they should avail nothing towards interceding for a land already doomed to destruction."
—Calvin.

a "This will compose your minds, and make you give glory to God and acknowledge His judgments to be righteous, though they touch you very nearly in the destruction of your friends and country."
—Lowth.

"The great qualification for work for Christ in the hearts of others is love to Christ in the worker's heart."—Principal Moule.

b Is. v. 1; Ps. lxxx. 8.

c "The branches of the vine are pruned every spring, being cut close to the stem and, when not needed to thatch the top of the earth-wall, are burned to put them out of the way, as they are too porous and light to serve any purpose."—Van Lennep.

"In this passage the Prophet gives us a fig. representation of man, considered especially as the object of Divine care and culture. He is naturally capable of yielding a precious fruit; in this consists his sole excellency; this is the sole end of his existence, and if he fails in this he is of no use but to be destroyed."
—Robert Hall.

saved his family from the flood; Job prayed for his friends, and they were spared; Daniel preserved the magicians and wise men. But rather they are named, because they were men of great holiness, exercised with great trials, and so the more fervent in prayer. And what if these men, who were so acceptable to me, had so much interest in me and often prevailed with me, should pray for you, yet they should do nothing for your deliverance by their prayers. These were men in great afflictions, and affliction is the whetstone of prayer, the bellows to blow up that fire.—Greenhill.

15—18. (15) noisome beasts, hurtful, comp. Le. xxvi. 6. (16) deliver .. daughters, i. e. their intercessions should be unavailing, bec. the inquiry would be such as necessitated Divine visitation.^b (17) sword, ch. xxi. 4, xxxviii. 21. (18) Though, etc., comp. vs. 16.

19—23. (19) pour .. blood, i. e. with great destruction of men's lives, by the pestilence. In Heb. blood expresses any premature kind of death. (20) own souls, or own lives. (21) upon Jerusalem, the former references had been general, now the principle of Divine healing is applied to the city of privilege, Jerusalem, whose iniquity was more hateful by reason of its superior position and privilege. (22) remnant,^a if some of the wicked in Jerusalem escape it is with a special design, viz., that those spared should reveal their great wickedness to the earlier exiles among whom they shall come, and thus shew how inevitable the destruction of the city was.—Cam. B. (23) without cause, i. e. without sufficient cause; or without a definite and gracious purpose.

Blessings of Unanswered Prayer.—Some time ago the beautiful daughter of wealthy parents failed to appear one morning at breakfast. The parents, alarmed, forced the door of her room and found her apparently dying with a bottle labeled "Poison" in her hand. Almost frantic with grief, the father hastened to the druggist's and demanded information as to what the bottle had contained. The druggist bade the father fear nothing. The young lady had asked him for some poison, but he had feared to give it to her or to let her go to another druggist, and so had substituted an innocent mixture. After several hours of sleep the young lady awoke, to the unutterable joy of her family, and with them thanked God that her request had been denied. A wife once prayed for the recovery of her husband from illness and stamped her feet, saying, with frightful emphasis, "I will not have him die; God shall not take him!" Her prayer was answered; but a few years afterward the community was shocked by the fact that he, in a moment of anger, had killed her.—E. S. Lewis.

CHAPTER THE FIFTEENTH.

1—5. (2) vine .. tree, the vine is a symbol of the Jewish Church.^b The reference here is to the wood of the tree, wh. is useless to the carpenter.^c "Men might dwell, perhaps were actually dwelling, on the thought that they were branches of the true vine, and therefore could not perish. He exposes the groundlessness of that hope in tones of scornful sarcasm. If the vine did not bear fruit, or if it only brought forth wild grapes, then its special excellence was gone, and it challenged comparison with other trees only as a timber tree, and what was its worth as such? If Israel was not true to its vocation, it was poorer and weaker than the heathen nations round it."—Pul. Com. branch, an ordinary branch of any tree. (3) pin, or peg. These were driven into walls of houses for domestic uses. (4) for fuel, sometimes the vine branches are burned for charcoal, but they do not give out heat enough for cooking purposes, and vine-wood charcoal is chiefly used in the houses of the wealthy to heat the tandoor, or warming apparatus. (5) is burned, as Jerusalem was in the prophetic vision.

Most Trees Serve Many Uses.—From root to topmost twig, every part of some trees is serviceable to man. The bark is used for cordage or for tanning. The root is often a valuable medicine. The juice which exudes is a precious gum. The fruit is wholesome food. And when cut down, the wood is devoted to house-building or forms implements of husbandry. Which fact is a parable. A nation may produce a superior literature which shall serve for the education of other lands. It may be famous for legislation, for commerce, for manufactures. Egypt and Greece and Rome were justly celebrated for many of these things.

6—8. (6) will I give, as useless, and only fit for the burning. "Naturally the supposition is made that the vinewood flung into the fire has been plucked out after having been burnt and charred, and the question is asked, Is it good for anything now? This is the condition of Jerusalem: it has been given into the fire for fuel, plucked out of it, as it were, half-burnt; is it good for anything?"—Cam. B. (7) one fire, R. V., "shall go forth from the fire, but the fire." (8) trespass, or "they have perversely fallen into perverse rebellion."

The vine tree has but one use—its fruit. Of all the trees it is the most prolific in bearing fruit. Under proper culture, its fruitfulness is certain, regular, copious. All the life and vigor of the tree are poured into its clusters. But failing this, it renders no other service to man. Its cells are not stored with any known medicinal qualities. Its wood is too brittle to bear any strain or burden. Hence, unless fruitful, it is worthless. In this respect the vine is an apt figure of the Hebrew nation. It was raised up by God for a single purpose, viz., to exhibit to the world righteousness, loyalty to the will of the invisible God. Israel was designed to be a lighthouse, to diffuse on every side the rays of moral and spiritual truth.—Davies.

CHAPTER THE SIXTEENTH.

1—5. (2) abominations, to understand and feel the grievous sin of her idolatries, and the necessity for Divine punishment. (3) of .. Canaan, i. e. it would seem, by your manners, as if you had been born in Canaan, as if your "father had been an Amorite and your mother a Hittite."^a (4) salted .. swaddled, references to the E. mode of treating new-born infants.^b The vs. describes an utterly neglected infant.^c (5) lothing .. person, or the contempt of thy life.

Without God.—The verses illustrate man's spiritual condition apart from the grace of God and the provisions of that grace. Man is morally unclean as an unwashed infant, morally neglected as an uncared-for infant, left to live or die, no one taking an interest in its condition, and being completely incapable of self-help. Is not that a picture of man's spiritual state apart from the grace of God? We inherit a sinful nature. We cannot convert or sanctify ourselves, or even do anything with a view to such results without Divine influence. We cannot repent except as we are summoned and strengthened to do so from heaven. And man cannot save us if he would; for every man is a sinner, and needs salvation himself. Neither can angels save us. Their utmost wisdom, love, and might are inadequate to the difficult task. God alone has pity enough and power enough for this work. If he leaves us we must perish. If we are to be saved He must begin and carry on the gracious work. And we rejoice to know that He does not leave any people to perish without witness of Himself, or without some gracious influences from him (cf. Acts xiv. 17; Rom. i. 19, 20; 1 Tim. ii. 4).—W. Jones.

6—9. (6) polluted, etc., R. V., "weltering," still regarding Israel as an untended infant. Live, i. e. when so utterly uncared for, I took thee up, and saved thy life. (7) come .. ornaments, fig. for "thou becamest most beautiful." whereas, R. V., "yet," i. e. when puberty would have demanded clothing. naked .. bare, i. e. nakedness and bareness itself. God presided over all the growth of the naked infant into the beautiful woman. (8) time of love, marriageable age. spread .. thee,^d symbol of taking a woman under a man's protection. (9) oil, the symbol of health and rejoicing. "There is no passage in the book of Ezekiel at once so powerful and so full of religious significance as the picture of Jerusalem, the founding child, the unfaithful spouse, and the abandoned prostitute, which is here presented."

The Life of Souls the Ordinance of God (vs: 6).—I. Servants of God, what then is our office? II. There are souls dead. 1. Men are ignorant

"The fallen Christian is lower than the 'man of the world,' and of less use to society, as the fruitless vine is of less account than the forest tree. A fruitless Church stands in the place of a useful one, and therefore it is positively injurious. There is but one good that come of it. The very destruction of it may be a warning to others."—Adeney.

a "Those are said to be our parents in the Scrip. dialect, whose manners we resemble. Mat. iii. 7; Jno. viii. 44."

—Lowth.

b "In the East at the present day, as soon as a babe is born it is washed in salted water, clothed, and swathed in a long bandage or swaddling cloth, three or four inches wide, and about ten feet long, which is firmly wound around it from the neck downward, including the arms, which are thus pinioned to its sides, so that it can stir neither hand or foot."—Van Lennep.

c Ho. ii. 3.

d "I have been delighted at the marriage ceremonies of the Hindoos, to see amongst them the same interesting custom."—Roberts.

"Each day, each week, each month, each year is a new chance given you by God. A new chance, a new leaf, a new life, —this is the golden, the unspeakable gift which each new day offers to you." — Canon Farrar.

Bessus, a Grecian, gave as a reason for pulling down the birds' nests about his house, that the birds never ceased to accuse him of the murder of his father.

"It is interesting to notice that we have in all these descriptions, not the view which Ezekiel took of the condition of Israel,—we have the condition of Israel as it revealed itself to the Divine eyes."—People's Bible.

* Oriental women are notoriously fond of decking with jewelry not only their heads, but other parts of their body as well.

Comp. Ge. xxiv. 22, 47.

"A just and reasonable modesty does not only recommend eloquence, but sets off every great talent which a man can be possessed of. It heightens all the virtues which it accompanies. Like the shades in paintings, it raises and rounds every figure, and makes the colors more beautiful, though not so glaring as they would be without."—Addison.

"Oh! there are no tears in heaven; but when angels come down to earth, it may be they can fall into companionship with human sadness, and even learn to weep; and where is the spectacle which shall wring tears from eyes which they were never meant to stain, if it be not that of the obstinate rejection of the Gospel of reconciliation, and of

of the nature of their souls; 2. The souls of men are not fulfilling the end of their being; 3. The souls of men are strangers to the peculiar joys of their being. III. Therefore, as the servants of God, the cry of our ministry is, Live.—J. Pulsford.

Love.—In the French Revolution a young man was condemned to the guillotine and shut up in one of the prisons. He was greatly loved by many, but there was one who loved him more than all put together. How know we this? It was his own father, and the love he bore his son was proved in this way: when the lists were called, the father, whose name was exactly the same as the son's, answered to the name, and the father rode in the gloomy tumbril to the place of execution, and his head rolled beneath the axe instead of the son's, a victim to mighty love. See here an image of the love of Christ to sinners; for thus Jesus died for the ungodly.—Spurgeon.

10—14. (10) brodered work, i. e. embroidered work of variegated colors, gold, silver, etc. badger's skins, R. V., "sealskin." fine linen, byssus of Egyptian manufacture; Ex. xxv. 5. silk, "silk was used for clothing first in the North of China, thence it came to Syria and Egypt by way of India." (11) ornaments, wh. were highly prized by brides. (12) jewel . . forehead, R. V., "ring upon thy nose." (13) fine flour, etc., signs of delicate provision and treatment. into a kingdom, R. V., "royal estate," as in the reigns of David and Solomon. (14) perfect, comp. ch. xxvii. 3, 4. comeliness, R. V., "majesty." These verses allegorically set forth the second period of Israel's history: her redemption by Jehovah from Egypt, his covenant with her to be her God, his leading her into the promised land, and making her the paramount power there, and loading her with all the riches of that good land. But all her grace must be traced to the provision and the care of God.

15—19. (15) trust, etc., didst think too much of thyself, and so fell into temptation. harlot, idolatry if often described by the prophets as adultery. fornications, R. V., "whoredoms," i. e. the abandonment of an ethical religion for one in which the powers of nature were regarded as the highest revelation of the divine.—Exp. B. (16) deckedst, etc., with reference to the efforts of the lewd woman to make herself attractive. like things, etc., i. e. there shall never anything happen again so revolting and so dreadful. (17) images, i. e. idol-images. (18) garments, wh. I had given thee as my bride. "The very gifts of God, designed for His worship, were prostituted to that of his rivals." (19) sweet savour, or incense offered to idols of the good things I gave thee.

Israel's Apostacy: an Example of Monstrous Iniquity.—I. It was the prostitution of God's best gifts. II. It took the worst possible forms. 1. They devoted all God's gifts to idols; (1) The common gifts of Providence; (2) Luxuries; (3) Even their own children; 2. They took special pains to spread idolatry; 3. Their lust of idolatry was insatiable; 4. They loved the sin of idolatry for its own sake; 5. They sinned thus grievously after due chastisement.—T. H. Leale.

20—24. (21) pass . . fire, to Moloch, Je. xxxii. 35. (22) remembered, or thought on. naked, etc. (vs. 7, etc.). (23) wickedness, was of two stages: (1) the heathenism wh. crept in fr. contact with the Canaanites, vs. 15—23; (2) The deliberate intro. of the idolatrous practices of the great world-powers.—Exp. B. (24) eminent place, meaning a house in which to carry on thy wicked idolatries; a heathen temple.

Moloch Sacrifice.—The immolation of children to Baal or Moloch was a common practice amongst the nations surrounding Israel, and when introduced there seems to have been regarded as part of the worship of Jehovah. What Ezekiel here asserts is that the practice came through Israel's illicit commerce with the gods of Canaan, and there is no question that this is historically true. The allegory exhibits the sin in its unnatural heinousness. The idealized city is the mother of her citizens, the children are Jehovah's children and her own, yet she has taken them and offered them up to the false lovers she so madly pursued. Such was her feverish passion for idolatry that the dearest and most sacred ties of nature were ruthlessly severed at the bidding of a perverted religious sense.—Exp. Bib.

25—29. (25) built, etc., allusion is made in this vs. to the rude manners of such lewd women. (26) Egyptians, by depending on them rather than on God, thy true Husband. great of flesh, "in an obscene sense." (27) stretched, etc. in severe dealings; abridging thee of necessities and conveniences. daughters, or cities. Reference may be intended to the calamitous times of the Judges. ashamed, etc., other nations had at least been faithful to their inherited religion, while Judah had forsaken hers. (28) Assyrians, in depending, as a nation, on their help; 2 Kings xvi. 7. (29) land of Canaan, R. V., "unto the land of traffic, unto Chaldaea."

Time Serving.—The treacherous and wanton dealing was all on Israel's part, she conceded everything to them, they yielded back nothing in return to her—her wickedness was gratuitous and unrequited folly. A solemn and pregnant truth, which the Church of God should never forget. She loses all, and the world gains all, when she foolishly stoops to impair the testimony of God, or adjust the claims and services of religion to the tastes and practices of the carnal mind. A nominal advance or apparent reconciliation may possibly be made by the manœuvre; but it can be no more than nominal or apparent; the interests that really profit by such a policy are those of the flesh and the world. It is only when the Church is faithful to her testimony—when she stands in the truth of Christ, and in that truth shines forth "bright as the sun, clear as the moon," that she is found also, in her conflict with evil, "terrible as an army with banners."—Fairbairn.

30—39. (30) weak, or wasted with passion and grown weak to resist desire. Sin ever weakens both intellect and heart. imperious, subject to no outward restraint. (31) eminent place, vs. 24. scornest hire, which the harlot seeks. (32) wife, adultery being a much deeper sin than fornication, because it involves unfaithfulness. (33) hirest, or bribest. (34) contrary, manifesting stronger wilfulness, and more shameless wickedness. (37) lovers, heathen nations, whose religion Israel had adopted. against thee, fig. of the invasion of the Assyrians, etc. (38) break wedlock, are unfaithful to marriage vows. shed blood, ref. to child murder. blood in fury, R. V., "will bring upon thee the blood of fury," i. e. "bring on thee the bloody death wh. fury and jealousy execute."

40—43. (40) stone thee, Jno. viii. 5—7. (41) burn . . fire, comp. Ge. xxxviii. 24; De. xiii. 16. sight . . women, i. e. of other nations, as Syrians, Philistines, etc." There may be reference to a custom of making women witness the fate of the adulteress, that they might take warning. (42) to rest, when the fitting punishment has been brought on thee. (43) fretted me, a word suitable to a grieved and injured husband. Is. lxiii. 10. lewdness, better, "and thus hast thou committed lewdness in (amidst) all thine abominations." Comp. Le. xix. 29.

It is Wise to Remember the Days of Youth.—1. In thankfulness. It was the sin and shame of Israel that she forsook her Deliverer, not remembering those days of her youth when he had found her forlorn and destitute, and had saved her from destruction. We have had many mercies from our youth up. It is right to remember them with thankfulness. 2. In warning. Remembering Egypt should have kept Israel from the danger of Babylon. It is well to remember the sad scenes of youth. Some of these may be burnt into the memory beyond hope of forgetfulness. "If cutting off this hand," said a great speaker, holding out his right hand, "would blot out all memories of my misspent youth, I would gladly lose it." But he who orders our lives knows that even these terrible memories may be converted into helpful warnings for the future. 3. In humility. Israel's recollection of her old abject condition should humble her. People who have risen in society do not like to be reminded of their lowly youth. Yet the humility that comes from knowing how feeble we once were is wholesome. 4. In encouragement. When in the most abject wretchedness Israel was saved by God. That was a glorious fact to be ever treasured up in the memories of youth. The recollection of such a deliverance should cheer with hope of similar mercy in future times of need.—W. T. Adeney.

44—47. (44) the mother, with reference to the Hittite mother (vs. 3). (45) lothed her husband, in the sense of the allegory "lothing her husband" should mean changing her god for another; and in the case of Jerusalem and Samaria the charge is intelligible, Jehovah being the husband (ch. xxiii.). But such a charge could hardly be made against the careless trifling with a thing so inestimably precious as the soul?"—H. Melvill.

a Le. xx. 10; De. xxii. 22.

All the wickedness you have done in your life, was first done in your heart.

"Never for one hour do I expect the Christian to reach a stage at which he can say, 'I have no self to deny.'" His fellowship with the cross of Christ will be an unceasing denial of self every hour and every moment."—Andrew Murray.

a "The judgment I will execute upon thee shall be for an instruction to other nations, how they follow thine ill-practices."—Lowth.

b "It is not a mitigation of the penalty that is here foretold, but such an utter destruction of all the guilty that there shall be no need of further punishment."—Calvin.

"The soul of man is a splendid menagerie and museum of curiosities, as each can ascertain for himself when he ventures to pull down the blinds and expose his private collection to the public."

a "The worship of Moloch was generally practiced by the ten tribes, whose metropolis was Samaria; as it was by the Amorites, who derived their original from Lot, an inhabitant of Sodom."—Lowth.

"He who would enter the realm of penitence must be girded with meekness, and his face must be washed in the pure dew of heaven, gathered in the shady places of godly sorrow."—Dean Farrar.

A little religion makes us afraid.

b "Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do."—Watts.

c Ge. xiii. 10.

a "This is not a promise of restoration, but a denunciation of hopeless ruin. When Sodom shall be rebuilt and shall flourish, when Samaria shall be again a mighty people, then, but not till then, shall Jerusalem be restored."—Spk. Com.

"Perhaps you think, 'If I could have the garden over the way, the trees on the other side of the road, if my estate could take in that morsel of plantation, I would never ask for more.' God will give you as much garden and as many trees as you can bear."—Joseph Parker.

"Thou judgest us; Thy purity Doth all our lusts condemn; The love that draws us nearer Thee Is hot with wrath to them."

—Whittier.

Canaanites, the Hittite mother and Sodom (Jer. ii. 11). The prophet appears to desert the allegory, introducing real features into his description, and referring to actual adultery and unfaithness, which were characteristic of the Canaanite nations.—Cam. B. sister, sisters, i. e. of Sodom and Samaria. (46) elder sister, lit. "greater": bec. the capital of the more important kingdom of Israel, and as setting the example of idolatry. left hand, i. e. of one looking eastward. Samaria lay to the north. her daughters, her neighboring and dependent towns." (47) very little thing, or loathed as a small thing. Judah had even gone to extreme lengths in idolatrous wickedness.

The Way of Good and of Evil.—"This must be the right way, see how smooth it is! How many feet have trodden it!" Alas, that is precisely the mark of the broad road which leadeth to destruction. "But see how it winds about, and what a variety of directions it takes! It is no bigot's unbending line." Just so; therein it proves itself to be the wrong road; for truth is one and unchanging. "But I like it so much." This also is suspicious; for what an unrenowned man is so fond of is probably an evil thing. Hearts go after that which is like themselves, and graceless men love graceless ways. "Would you have me go that narrow and rough road?" Yes, we would; for it leadeth unto life; and though few there be that find it, yet those who do so declare that it is a way of pleasantness. It is better to follow a rough road to heaven than a smooth road to hell.—Spurgeon.

48—52. (48) not done, as thou, yet Sodom's sins brought an awful Divine judgment. Matt. x. 15, xi. 24. (49) idleness, the secret of immorality, and the service of formal religions." R. V., "prosperous ease." The fruitful land of Sodom^c made her people proud, wealthy, idle, and voluptuous. hand of the poor, neglect of the poor and suffering is a high moral offence in the sight of God. (50) took them away, Ge. xix. 24. (51) justified, i. e. made them appear almost good, when set in contrast with thee. (52) bear shame, i. e. the disgrace which an overwhelming punishment will bring upon thee. "The point of the sentence is that Judah condemned those who were less guilty than herself."—Pul. Com.

53—57. (53) When I bring,^a R. V., "And I will turn again, etc." All that follows in the chapter shows that what is meant is a promise of restoration, not for Judah only, but also for her less-guilty sisters. Ezekiel sees a far-off hope for his own nation, and he cannot limit the mercy of God in bringing them also, as she was to be brought, to repentance.—Pulp. Com. (54) That shame, better, "that thou mayest bear thy shame, and be ashamed because of all that thou hast done in comforting them." Jerusalem "comforted" Samaria and Sodom in surpassing them in wickedness, and causing them to feel less their own guilt, as also in causing their restoration.—Cam. B. (55) When, etc., comp. note on vs. 53. (56) not mentioned, bec. it was utterly despised, and thought to be an awfully wicked place. It was held in utter contempt. (57) discovered, manifested by calamity; Sam. i. 8, 9. at . . Syria, R. V., "as at the time of the reproach of the daughters of S." i. e. wh. they cast upon Jerusalem. despise thee, in turn when thou hast become the object of Divine indignation.

Sodom.—Ezekiel's estimate of Sodom is noteworthy. He appears not to have in mind the story of Genesis xix. His picture was perhaps drawn from the tradition of his time. Sodom appears to have vanished from the scene before the Israelites entered Canaan.—Polychrome Bible.

Restoration of Sodom.—Another question of great interest and difficulty is the attitude towards the heathen world assumed by Ezekiel. The prophecy of the restoration of Sodom is certainly one of the most remarkable things in the book. It is true that Ezekiel as a rule concerns himself very little with the religious state of the outlying world under the Messianic dispensation. Where he speaks of foreign nations it is only to announce the manifestation of Jehovah's glory in the judgments He executes upon them. The effect of these judgments is that "they shall know that I am Jehovah;" but how much is included in the expression as applied to the heathen it is impossible to say. This, however, may be due to the peculiar limitation of view which leads him to concentrate his attention on the Holy Land in his visions of the perfect kingdom of God. We can hardly suppose that he conceived all the rest of the world as a blank or filled with a seething mass of humanity outside the government of the true God. It is rather to be supposed that Canaan itself appeared to his mind as an epitome of the world such as it must be when the latter-day glory was ushered in. And in Canaan he finds room for Sodom, but Sodom turned to the knowledge of the true God and sharing in the blessings bestowed on Jerusalem. It is surely allowable to see in this the symptom of a more hopeful view of the future of the world at large than we should gather from the rest of the prophecy. If Ezekiel could think of Sodom as raised from the dead and sharing the glories of the people of God, the idea of the conversion of heathen nations could not have been altogether foreign to his mind. It is at all events significant that when he meditates most profoundly on the nature of sin and God's method of dealing with it, he is led to the thought of a Divine mercy which embraces in its sweep those communities which had reached the lowest depths of moral corruption.—Exp. Bib.

58—60. (58) borne, the consequences of. (59) deal . . done, God would withdraw from His covenant of protection as they had withdrawn from their covenant of service.^a (60) remember . . covenant, i. e. by-and-by call it to mind, and return to thee with restoring mercies. The mind of Jehovah and the mind of Jerusalem both go back on the past; but while Jehovah thinks only of the purpose of love which he had entertained towards Jerusalem in the days of her youth and the indissoluble bond between them, Jerusalem retains the memory of her own sinful history, and finds in the remembrance the source of abiding contrition and shame.—Exp: B. everlasting covenant, the spiritual one of the Gospel.

61—63. (61) for daughters, Gal. iv. 26.^b thy covenant, not by any covenant of thy making, but by sovereign grace alone. (62) establish, etc., Ho. ii. 19, 20. know . . Lord, not then in judgments, but in wondrous restoring grace. (63) never . . mouth, in any attempted self-vindication. when I am pacified, R. V., "when I have forgiven thee." It is through the grace of forgiveness that she is overwhelmed with shame and sorrow for sin, and learns the humility which is the germ of a new hope towards God. all . . done, as detailed in this chap.^c

The Effect of God's Mercy on the Renewed Soul (vss. 62, 63).—I. The extent of man's wickedness. 1. Give a brief summary of the chapter; mark how this image was applicable to Judah and Jerusalem; to us also it may be applied. II. The exceeding riches of God's grace; vile as the Jews had been He promised to restore them to favor; this promise is no doubt to be extended to us. III. The effect of this grace upon every soul of man; it is thought by some calculated to puff up pride and conceit in all who receive it. But this is—I. Contrary to reason; 2. Contrary to fact. Remember—(1) Your covenant mercies; (2) Your covenant engagements.—Simeon.

"Not Patched, but Whole."—The preacher at a rescue mission was pressing home the question of Jesus at Bethesda, "Wilt thou be made whole?" Suddenly he leaned forward, paused an instant, then shot these words out: "Remember, men, it's not patched, but made whole." "That's it, that's just it, and all of it," responded a man, who, when the meeting was open, rose and said: "I patched for years, but the patches fell off or made bigger holes. I had become a hard drinker. I lost my situation. I sobered up, got another situation, failed again and again. Still I patched, and still I fell. At last my wife and children had to go away to her father's, and decency and clothes were gone. One wet, cold, November night, as I sat, half asleep, in the doorway of an empty house, a Bible-woman asked me to come into the misison. There Jesus found me. He didn't patch; he just made me whole. And now we're all together and happy again."—J. S. MacIntosh.

CHAPTER THE SEVENTEENTH.

1—6. (2) riddle, Ju. xiv. 12. Here meaning a figurative speech, or continued metaphor. One requiring serious thought to discern its meaning.^a (3) great eagle, representing Nebuchadnezzar. The eagle was an Assyrian emblem.^b feathers, symbols of the many nations of wh. the

^a De. xlix. 12, 14.

Parricide was by the Roman law punished in a much severer manner than any other kind of homicide. Solon, in his laws, made none against parricide, conceiving it impossible that any one should be guilty of so unnatural a barbarity.

It is through the grace of forgiveness that she is overwhelmed with shame and sorrow for sin, and learns the humility which is the germ of a new hope towards God.

^b "In the times of the Apostles there was a particular deference paid to the Church at Jerusalem as the mother Church of the Christian world."—Lowth

^c "Enhancing the grace of God, which has pardoned so many and so great sins. Nothing so melts into love and humility as the sense of the riches of God's pardoning grace."—Fausset.

It argues a tender heart to feel you have a hard one.

"We can only give the precious products of personality — love, friendship, esteem, reverence, worship. Bargain and sale are not so much a profanation as an impossibility."—Fausset.

^a "The Heb. is derived from a root meaning 'sharp,' i.e. calculated to stimulate attention and whet the intellect."—Fausset.

^b For the figure see De. xxviii. 49; Je. iv. 13; Ho. viii. 1.

c The kingdom of Judah is no longer likened to an independent cedar: in its depressed state it is only like a dependent vine.

"When people have lost all enjoyment in the word of God, this is no reason why they should relinquish its study. They may lose all enjoyment in their morning ablutions, but that is no reason why they should not bathe. A man should go on reading because of the almost unconscious effect the Bible may have upon the inner life, and because he may thereby learn to love it."

—F. B. Meyer.

a "Zedekiah was courting the favor of Egypt while he owed his very position to the bounty of Assyria."—Spk. Com.

b "The Prophet compares the Chaldaean army to a parching wind that blasts the fruits of the earth, withers the leaves of the trees, and makes everything look naked and bare."

—Lowth.

"All the fresh leaves of her sprouting shall wither."

—Wordsworth.

Bab. kingdom was composed. divers colors, intimating the variety of language, habits, and costumes of the peoples subject to Babylon. came unto Lebanon, "the kingdom of Judah is represented as a cedar in Lebanon—a comparison which shows how exalted were Ezekiel's conceptions of the dignity of the old regime which had now passed away." highest branch, or top shoot; i. e. king Jeconiah. (4) top, or head. young twigs, princes of the royal family. traffic, or commerce, i. e. Babylon, the great merchant city of that age; Is. xliii. 14. (5) seed, i. e. the king's seed: ref. is to Zedekiah. great waters, R. V., "many waters," fig. for the wealth with wh. Nebuc. supplied Zedekiah. (6) spreading vine, one not trained to a pole, but lying on the ground. Kept low so as to secure its dependence on the Bab. king. branches . . under him, better, might turn . . be under him, that the new principality should derive all its strength from Babylon and yield all its produce to the power which nourished it.

"A City of Merchants."—An apt designation this of Babylon the great, the very center and emporium of commerce in the East. The description of Babylon is applicable to the great centers of population in our own and other lands, which serve both to concentrate and to diffuse the products which constitute so large a part of the wealth of the world, and which minister to human convenience and luxury. I. Commercial cities are an expression of a deep-seated tendency of human nature. There are, indeed, impulses which estrange and isolate men; but there are others which draw them together. II. Commercial cities are the scene of very varied experiences and of remarkable friction of mind with mind. As compared with those engaged in rural pursuits, the dwellers in cities are quick and enterprising. III. Commercial cities abound with temptations to sin. There is in great cities a possibility of concealment, by which many are encouraged to form habits of self-indulgence and dissipation from which they might in more favorable circumstances have been restrained by the gentle pressure of home influence and wholesome public opinion. IV. Commercial cities are the center and source of great influence for both good and evil. Intelligence and wealth, luxury and vice, patriotism and public spirit, law and religion, spread from the great centers of population, and affect the remotest regions. V. Commercial cities afford especial opportunities for works of benevolence and evangelization.—Thomson.

7—10. (7) another . . eagle, this represents Pharaoh Hophra, king of Egypt. bend . . him, Zedekiah, inclined to favor the Egyptian alliance. that he might . . plantation, etc., R. V., "from the beds of its plantation, that he might water it." (8) "Ezekiel repeats, as justifying Nebuchadnezzar's action, that his first intention had been to leave Zedekiah under conditions which would have given his kingdom a fair measure of prosperity. The vine might have borne fruit." (9) Shall it prosper? in such manifestly unfaithful ways. he, i. e. the insulted Nebuchadnezzar. with . . spring, R. V., "that all the fresh springing leaves may wither." Zedekiah is to be severely punished. (10) east wind, in the E., so injurious to vegetation.

Vss. 11—21: Interpretation of the riddle. 11—15. (12) king of Babylon, i. e. the great eagle. (13) king's seed, R. V., "seed royal," i. e. Zedekiah. oath, of allegiance, on condition of wh. oath Zedekiah was given the throne. (14) base, as a dependent kingdom: tributary to Babylon. lift itself up, in rebellion. (15) sending . . Egypt, comp. 2 Ki. xxiv. 20; 2 Chr. xxxvi. 13; Je. xxxvii. 5—7. prosper, in violating his oath to Nebuc. and sinning against God's commands, De. xvii. 16. "In all this Nebuchadnezzar is conceived as acting within his rights; and here lay the difference between the clear vision of the prophet and the infatuated policy of his contemporaries."

Justice of Ezekiel.—Throughout this passage Ezekiel shows that he possessed in full measure that penetration and detachment from local prejudices which all the prophets exhibit when dealing with political affairs. The interpretation of the riddle contains a statement of Nebuchadnezzar's policy in his dealings with Judah, whose impartial accuracy could not be improved on by the most disinterested historian. The carrying away of the Judæan king and aristocracy was a heavy blow to religious susceptibilities which Ezekiel fully shared, and its severity was not mitigated by the arrogant assumptions by which it was explained in Jerusalem.

Yet here he shows himself capable of contemplating it as a measure of Babylonian statesmanship and of doing absolute justice to the motives by which it was dictated.—Exp. Bib.

16—18. (16) shall die, comp. ch. xii. 13. (17) Neither, etc., the aid of Pharaoh shall be in vain, Je. xxxvii. 7; Sam. iv. 17. by casting up, R. V., "when they (the Chaldean besiegers) cast up." (18) despised the oath, vs. 13. given his hand,* and so pledging his troth and fealty.

The Sacredness of Treaties.—The Old Testament abounds in illustrations of the bearings of religion upon national and corporate life. In this passage of prophecy Ezekiel rebukes his countrymen for their discontent under the Assyrian rule, and for their treacherous intrigues with Egypt. Speaking in the name of the King of kings, he upbraids them for deliberate infraction of a covenant which they were bound to observe. He shows them that political action may be sinful, and that, when such is the case, the Divine Ruler will not suffer it to go unpunished.—Thomson.

19—21. (20) spread my net, comp. ch. xii. 13, xxxii. 3. plead with him, i. e. there subject him to the consequences of his treachery, bringing it thereby to his knowledge that he is suffering the penalty of it, cf. xx. 35, 36, xxxviii. 22; Jer. ii. 35. (21) fugitives, those belonging to him who would try to escape: ch. xii. 14.

The Broken Covenant.—I. Unfaithfulness to man is unfaithfulness to God. II. Those who are pledged to the service of God are especially unfaithful to Him when they are unfaithful to their fellow-men. III. Unfaithfulness to a covenant with God is a heinous sin. Christians now stand in the ancient position of the Jews. 1. Christians are peculiarly privileged; 2. Christians are especially pledged.—Adeney.

Broken Covenants.—Princes and politicians are apt to trifle with solemn oaths and treaties, and to devise specious pretences for violating them; but the Lord will not hold them guiltless who thus take His name in vain; and few of them will be able to plead more plausibly for perfidy and prying than Zedekiah might have done, against whom these awful threatenings were denounced for breaking his covenant with the King of Babylon, and despising the oath sworn to him.—Scott.

22—24. Vss. 22—24: The ideal monarchy of the future. (22) highest branch, this shoot is taken from the "top of the cedar"—that is, the section of the royal house which had been carried away to Babylon—indicating that the hope of the future lay not with the king de facto Zedekiah, but with Jehoiachin and those who shared his banishment.—Exp. B. high mountain, this indicates the conspicuousness to the eyes of the nations of this great cedar; Is. ii. 2. (23) mountain of the height, cf. ch. xx. 40, xl. 2. fowl of every wing, as fowls flock to a great tree so all peoples will put their trust in the shadow of this great monarchy in the land of Israel; ch. xxxi. 6; Dan. iv. 12; Matt. xiii. 32. (24) as this kingdom is compared to a cedar other kingdoms are, likewise, called trees; cf. ch. xxxi. 5, 8, 14, 16, 18.—Cam. B.

Fowl of Every Wing (vs. 24).—The cedar a royal tree. Christ the true cedar, and all people are the birds that lodge in its branches. 1. The young may come; 2. The aged may come; 3. The very bad, the outrageously sinful, may come; 4. All the dying may find their nest in this goodly cedar.—Talmage.

CHAPTER THE EIGHTEENTH.

Vss. 1—20, the individual is not implicated in the sins of his forebears. 1—4. (2) concerning . . Israel, i. e. in reference to its desolations. fathers . . edge, the present generation suffers for the sins committed by previous generations.^a The proverb expresses the fatalism and despair which settled down on the minds of that generation when they realized the full extent of the calamity that had overtaken them. In whatever spirit this saying may have been first coined, there is no doubt that it had come to be used as a witticism at the expense of Providence. It indicates that influences were at work beside the word of prophecy which tended to undermine men's faith in the current conception of the divine

* "This ceremony was especially used when an inferior made profession of his subjection to his superior."—Lowth.

"As the interests of a nation are greater than those of a private person, so the violation of a national compact is a sin of blackest hue."—Davies.

"Think not to whom, but remember by whom thou hast sworn an oath."

"Christ's kingdom shall by degrees exalt itself above all the kingdoms of the world; and shall at length put an end to them, and itself continue unto all eternity."—Lowth.

Da. iv. 25, 34, vii. 27; Lu. i. 33; 1 Co. xv. 24.

Every nation has its own heroes; every religion its saints, confessors and martyrs. Some of these will live in history while the world endures, and receive the homage and veneration of mankind. But the name of Jesus is above every name. At that name every knee shall bow.—The Interior.

^a "It is nowhere said in O. T. or N. T. that God visits the iniquities of the fathers upon the children, except where the children persist in imitating the iniquity of the fathers."—Wordsworth.

"God draweth straight lines, but we think and call them crooked." Ezek. xviii. 25."

—Rutherford.

"Heathen systems will not be conquered in a generation. They survive many severe wounds and rally even after they appear to be conquered. That they can be conquered, however, and that they will be, is as true as Christianity itself. When they yield, then will be the golden age of missions." —The Independent.

b De. xii. 2; Eze. vi. 13, xvi. 16, 24, xx. 28; 1 Co. i. 21.

"The humblest trade has in it elbow-room for all the virtues. That huckster can be true and honest and honorable: what more can Rothschild be? The excellence of a circle lies in its roundness, not its bigness." — S. Coley.

"Upon his own head, but not on the heads of his children, if they do not imitate him." — Wordsworth.

"We must dig through the hardpan of evil before we strike the living springs of good."

"A man's own heart must ever be given to gain that of another." — Goldsmith.

government.—Exp. B. In opposition to this teaching, Ezek. insists upon the personal responsibility of each individual. (3) not . . use, bec. God will plainly punish this generation for their own sins; and they will not be able to shift the blame on to their fathers. (4) all . . mine, implying direct and individual dealing with each. No sin is entailed.

An Old Proverb Discarded. I. The truths behind the proverb. 1. Children share in the sufferings produced by the sins of their parents. 2. Children inherit the appetites and habits of their parents. II. The falsity of the proverb. 1. God does not inflict real punishment on innocent children; 2. Actual sin is not hereditary. III. The exposure and rejection of the proverb. 1. A familiar saying may be false; 2. It is the duty of the teacher of religion to correct popular notions; 3. There is an advance in revelation.—Pul. Com.

The Influence of Heredity upon Character.—Physically, the power of heredity is vast. A man's birth, breeding, and training count for very much; they determine the locality of his early days, the climate, the political and social circumstances, the religious education, the associations, of childhood and of youth. The bodily constitution, including the nervous organization, the temperament and the inclinations springing from it, are to a very large extent hereditary. The environment is largely the effect of birth, and the early influences involved in it. Even those who advocate spiritual ethics, and who believe in human liberty, are quite willing to admit that all men owe to hereditary causes and influences very much which makes them what they are.—Thomson.

5—9. (5) just, comprehensive term for all moral rightness. (6) eaten . . mountains, sharing in the sacrificial feasts on the high places, where are the idol-shrines.^b lifted . . eyes, in supplication and adoration. (7) oppressed, etc., Ex. xxii. 25, 26; De. xxiv. 12. restored . . pledge, De. xxiv. 6, 13. given . . hungry, De. xv. 7. (8) usury, Ex. xxii. 25; Le. xxv. 36, 37; De. xxiii. 19; Ps. xv. 5. executed . . man, free from judicial corruption so prevalent in the East. (9) truly, obediently, faithfully, and kindly. live, or preserve his life. Such a man comes into no Divine judgment.

Ezekiel's Individualism.—This emancipation of the individual soul, whether from a doom inherited from a former generation or from one entailed on it by its own evil past, was perhaps the greatest contribution made by Ezekiel to the religious life and thought of his time. He probably reached his individualism by reflection on such events as the downfall of the state, leaving now no place for religion except in the individual mind, and on the sentiments which he heard expressed by men around him. His contemporary Jeremiah reached the same truth from another direction, from his own experience of the inwardness of the relation of God to men. The very nature of this relation required that the religious subject should be the individual mind.—Camb. B.

10—13. (10) robber, or "breaker up of a house." (11) that doeth . . duties, a very difficult clause which seems so meaningless that many consider it a copyist's error. (12) lifted . . eyes, in adoration or supplication. (13) blood, "his destruction is owing wholly to himself."

God's Remonstrance with Man's Reason.—I. We are reminded of man's responsibility. II. Idolatry is a root of various immorality. III. Parental influence is potent yet not fatal. IV. Repentance, at any stage of human probation, is possible. V. Repentance leads to complete and perfect righteousness. VI. Righteousness is incipient life.—Davies.

The Only Foe.—

Remember this—not all the wild,
Huge, untamed elements have force
To reach thee, though the seas were piled
In weltering mountains in thy course.

Only thyself, thyself can harm.
Forget it not! and full of peace,
As if the south wind whispered warm,
Wait then till storm and tumult cease.—Celia Thaxter..

14—18. (14) if he, i. e. the utterly bad man, who brings destruction down upon his own head. considereth, R. V., "feareth." not such like, not any of the evil things. (15—17) comp. vss. 5—9. withholden the pledge, R. V., "hath not taken ought to pledge." taken . . poor, i. e. hath not oppressed. not. . father, but judgment shall spend itself on the sinful father.^a (18) his brother, i. e. his brother-man, or neighbor.

Heredity.—The very same difficulties which Ezekiel had to encounter in his time confront us still in a somewhat altered form, and are often keenly felt as obstacles to faith in God. The scientific doctrine of heredity, for example, seems to be but a more precise modern rendering of the old proverb about the eating of sour grapes. The biological controversy over the possibility of the transmission of acquired characteristics scarcely touches the moral problem. In whatever way that controversy may be ultimately settled, it is certain that in all cases a man's life is affected both for good and evil by influences which descend upon him from his ancestry. Hardly anything is better established by experience than that the consequences of past actions persist through all changes of spiritual condition, and, further, that children do suffer from the consequences of their parents' sin. Do not these facts, it may be asked, amount practically to a vindication of the theory of retribution against which the prophet's argument is directed? How can we reconcile them with the great principles enunciated in this chapter? The solution of the contradiction referred to lies in the separation between the natural and the penal consequences of sin. There is a sphere within which natural laws have their course, modified, it may be, but not wholly suspended by the law of the spirit of life in Christ. The physical effects of vicious indulgences are not turned aside by repentance. But there is also a sphere into which natural law does not enter. In his immediate personal relations to God a believer is raised above the evil consequences of the past. Tribulations no longer bear the aspect of penalty and are no longer a token of the wrath of God.—Exp. Bib.

19—23. (19) Why? R. V., "Yet say ye, wherefore doth not, etc." i. e. is it not a well-known fact that the son bears the father's iniquity? The Jews appeal to their own experience. When, etc., implying that if the Jews of that generation had done right, they would not have been punished for their fathers' sins of the previous generations. (20) son, etc., comp. De. xxiv. 16.^a (21) vss. 21—32. The individual is not dominated by his own past life. turn . . sins, then he shall not be dealt with on the ground of the forsaken sins, but on the ground of the new obedience. (22) not be mentioned, R. V., "remembered against;" being forgiven they shall be forgotten.^b (23) any pleasure, the frequency of prophetic denunciation might produce such an impression.^c The death of the wicked, the loss, i. e. of true life, for a time, or even for ever, might be the necessary consequence of laws that were righteous in themselves, and were working out the well-being of the universe; but that death was not to be thought of as the result of a Divine decree, or contemplated by the Divine mind with any satisfaction.—Pulp. Com.

24—26. (24) righteous, etc., this is the answering side of the truth of God's dealings declared in vss. 21, 22.^d turneth away, in utter apostasy. Reference is not to the temporary failures and fallings of the godly. mentioned, taken into account as a mitigation of sentence. (25) not equal, or weighed out, balanced; properly adjusted to the several cases.^e (26) his iniquity, i. e. you need go no further for explanation than the fact of his own sin.

Sin, not God, Changes Us.—There is something picturesque and awful in the instant change which a sudden crime makes in the whole relation which a man holds to the state he lives in. He has grown up protected by his nation's law. It cared for him even before his birth, and there has never been a moment in his boyhood, youth, or manhood when its shield has not been over him and its sword drawn to strike down any one who dared to do him harm. Some day he does a sudden crime, he disobeys the law, he takes a brother's life, and instantly, as his dagger pierces and the life-blood flows, everything alters. The law which has protected him becomes his enemy. Her sword is pointed at his heart. Her shield is spread before him only lest any one should snatch him from her certain punishment. Instead of trusting in her quiet smile, he quails

^b It is nevertheless true that hereditary disabilities do follow on parental wrong-doings; but rather on parental vices and immoralities than on such acts of unkindness, injustice, and idolatry as are dealt with by Ezekiel.

On an Alaskan steamer the passengers were proving that an Indian could not be civilized. So Dr. Hill, of Portland, called up a graduate of Marietta and Lane, a native Alaskan with bronze skin and black hair, who told the story of what the gospel had done for his people. Scepticism was impossible on deck after that demonstration.—North and West.

^a 2 Kl. xlv. 6; 2 Chr. xxv. 4; Je. xxxi. 29.

^b Je. xxxi. 34; Am. viii. 7.

^c 1 Th. ii. 4; 2 Pe. iii. 9.

It must be a strange sensation for a painter to see an image of beauty, out of nothing, so to speak, gradually developing itself on the canvas and living there. But what is this compared with seeing a soul emerging from death unto life, its wings freeing themselves from the hard, ugly chrysalis of its natural condition, to flutter forth into the sunshine of eternity? — James Stalker, D. D.

^d Comp. 2 Pe. ii. 21.

^e "It was really their way that was unequal, since living in sin they expected to be dealt with as if they were righteous. God's way was invariably to deal with different men according to their deserts."—Fausset.

a Je. xxxii. 39;
Eze. xl. 19.
xxxvi. 26.

Each sin I cast away shall make my soul more strong to soar.—T. H. Gill.

"Repentance is sorrow converted into action, into a movement to a new and better life."—M. R. Vincent.

under her pitiless eye. She is transformed the moment that he disobeys.—Phillips Brooks.

27—32. (27) turneth, in penitence of heart that makes him alter his conduct. The essential truth which he inculcates is the emancipation of the individual, through repentance, from his own past. In virtue of his immediate personal relation to God each man has the power to accept the offer of salvation, to break away from his sinful lie and escape the doom which hangs over the impenitent.—Exp. B. (28) considereth, see vs. 14. (29) not equal, vs. 25. (30) every one . . . ways, and surely no principle of judgment can be better than this. Repent, the inward feeling of penitence. turn yourselves, the corresponding outward act. This call intimates that, if thus strictly judged, the whole nation would be found guilty. ruin, R. V., "stumbling-block." (31) make . . . heart, set yourselves on the endeavor to cherish other feelings and wishes. The "new heart" indicates a religion that is spiritual, not ceremonial. The effort to renew our own heart will surely drive us to seek the new heart from God, who alone can give it by His Spirit." Comp. Ps. li. 1—5, 10, 11. (32) no pleasure, ref. to the eternal character of Jehovah as the God of salvation.

The Repentant.—What man among you can stand against his children's tears? When King Henry II., in the ages gone by, was provoked to take up arms against his ungrateful and rebellious son, he besieged him in one of the French towns, and the son being near to death, desired to see his father, and confess his wrong-doing; but the stern old sire refused to look the rebel in the face. The young man being sorely troubled in his conscience, said to those about him, "I am dying, take me from my bed, and let me lie in sackcloth and ashes, in token of my sorrow for my ingratitude to my father." Thus he died, and when the tidings came to the old man outside the walls, that his boy had died in ashes, repentant for his rebellion, he threw himself on the earth, like another David, and said, "Would God I had died for him." The thought of his boy's broken heart touched the heart of the father. If ye, being evil, are overcome by your children's tears, how much more shall your Father who is in heaven find in your bemoanings and confessions an argument for the display of His pardoning love through Christ Jesus our Lord? This is the eloquence which God delights in, the broken heart and the contrite spirit.—Spurgeon.

CHAPTER THE NINETEENTH.

a Ge. xlix. 9;
Nu. xxiii. 24.

b 2 Ki. xxiii. 33.

c "There is an allusion to the custom, when the news arrives that a lion or other savage beast is committing mischief, of assembling on all sides to seize and slay it."—Michaëlis.

d Ps. xxxv. 7, xciv. 13.

"God would have us sensitive, responsive, easily impressible, so that we can be moved by divine appeals and instantly respond to every call to the enjoyment of divine fellowship."

1—4 (1) lamentation, a dirge over the princes of Judah. princes of Israel, those of the house of Judah. Two princes are lamented, one captured and carried to Egypt, viz. Jehoahaz, son and successor of Josiah (vss. 1—4); and another carried to Babylon, who must be Jehoiachin (vss. 5—9). The elegy does not appear to extend further. Verses 10—14 refer to Zedekiah, and are prophetic.—Cam. B. (2) thy mother, the land or people of Judah, as the native country of the princes addressed. lioness,^a bec. fierce at catching prey. (3) one . . . whelps, viz. Jehoahaz.^b learned . . . prey, alluding to this king following the evil and idolatrous practices of his predecessors. (4) nations, esp. Egypt.^c pit, hunter's pit, arranged for securing wild animals,^d 2 Ki. xxiii. 33; Je. xxii. 11.

Ezekiel's Dirge.—The whole passage is highly poetical, and represents a side of Ezekiel's nature which we have not hitherto been led to study. But it is too much to expect of even the most logical of prophets that he should experience no personal emotion but what fitted into his system, or that his poetic gift should be chained to the wheels of his theological convictions. The dirge expresses no moral judgment on the character or deserts of the two kings to which it refers: it has but one theme—the sorrow and disappointment of the "mother" who nurtured and lost them, that is, the nation of Israel personified according to a usual Hebrew figure of speech. All attempts to go beyond this and to find in the poem an allegorical portrait of Jehoahaz and Jehoiachin are irrelevant. The mother is a lioness, the princes are young lions and behave as stalwart young lions do, but whether their exploits are praiseworthy or the reverse is a question that was not present to the writer's mind.—Exp. Bib.

5—9. (5) waited, i. e. when Judah saw that her hope of the return of Jehoahoz delayed and was finally lost. another, viz. Jehoiachin, 2 Ki. xxiv. 6. He was put on the throne by the consent of the people. Jehoiachin, who intervened, is not mentioned bec. he died in peace. The dirge is for princes that were captured by foreign nations. (6) catch . . prey, followed the same idolatrous course as his predecessors. (7) knew . . palaces, Polychr. B. "their dwelling-places he ravaged." (8) nations, here the Chaldeans. For the fate of Jehoiachin see 2 Ki. xxiv. 10—12. (9) voice . . mountains, as a lion seeking her prey. "The poetry here is simple and sincere. The mournful cadence of the elegiac measure, which is maintained throughout, is adapted to the tone of melancholy which pervades the passage and culminates in the last beautiful line."

10—14. (10) Thy mother, the land of Judah. The ruling prince is here addressed as such; not as any particular person. is like, R. V., was like; contrast with vs. 13. vine . . blood, "vine in her height."—Davidson. full of branches, the people multiplied under God's blessing. (11) sceptres, Ge. xlix. 10. appeared, etc., "was beheld from afar." (12) east . . fruit, Ho. xiii. 15. (13) wilderness, that of Babylon. (14) fire . . out, comp. Ju. ix. 15. Allusion is to Zedekiah's rebellion against Babylon wh. involved the whole nation in ruin.

Sceptres.—The allusion here is evidently to the sceptres of the ancients, which were no other than walking-sticks, cut from the stems or branches of trees, and decorated with gold, or studded with golden nails. Thus Achilles is introduced as swearing by a sceptre, which being cut from the trunk of a tree on the mountains, and stripped of its bark and leaves, should never more produce leaves and branches, or sprout again. Such a one the Grecian judges carried in their hands. See Homer, Il. i. 234.—Burder.

CHAPTER THE TWENTIETH.

A review of Israel's history designed to show Jehovah's respect for his own name. 1—4. (1) seventh . . month, Aug. 590 B. C. elders, as ch. viii. 1, xiv. 1. (3) not be inquired, i. e. not pay any heed to your inquiries. (4) judge, i. e. act in the capacity of a judge; pass sentence upon Israel by a rehearsal of the past history. Addressed to Ezekiel.

God will Give no Answer to the New Questions of Those Who Refuse to Give Heed to His Word Already Received.—We cannot be surprised that Ezekiel's oracle was silenced. Such insolence as that of the elders of Israel could meet with no more gracious reception. 1. If we refuse to hear God's Word, we must expect to be left in darkness. Before we cry for more light, let us use the light we have. We may indeed pray for God's Spirit to help our interpretation of the Bible, and having read the written Word we may crave more light still. But first to reject the Divine revelation and then to seek for new light is not the way to receive more truth. 2. God will not give light to those who harden themselves in impenitence. The Jews had been charged with sin and called to repentance. They had refused to admit the charge and had declined to repent. Thus they had shut the door against further Divine communications. The spiritual vision is best purged by the tears of penitence. A hard heart is deaf to God's Word. 3. It is useless to be informed about the future unless we listen to the spiritual teachings of God. Men resorted to oracles to satisfy idle curiosity or to seek mere worldly guidance. God does not speak for such comparatively worthless ends. We most need spiritual instruction for the guidance of our souls into the way of life. Till we have received and obeyed that instruction any other form of revelation must be irrelevant, distracting, and therefore positively injurious.—Adeney.

5—9. (5) lifted . . hand, the sign of swearing. known, by My judgments and deliverances. I . . God, i. e. I am the God you should serve, and I alone. (6) espied, observed and chose, as specially suitable for them. glory, or the fairest flower of all lands. (7) Cast, etc., though e "Or, he learned and practiced all the methods of tyranny and oppression."—Lowth.

a "The country of Judea, from whence the royal family have their original, was like a fruitful vine in a flourishing condition."—Lowth.

"The metaphor of the blood is less harsh in the Heb. because the juice of a vine is called in Scripture its blood. Ge. xlix. 11."—Wordsworth.

b "Because ye inquire with an evil temper, a cavilling spirit, and a murmuring tone, and not with penitential meekness, and self-abasement for your sin, and with humble submission to the will of God."—Wordsworth.

There is but one way in which man can ever help God—that is, by letting God help him; and there is no way in which His name is more guiltily taken in vain than by calling the abandonment of our own work the performance of His.

c Ex. iii. 8, iv. 31.

a "God's name means the sum total of His perfections; to manifest these, His gratuitous mercy abounding above their sins, yet without wrong to His justice, and so to set forth His glory, was and is the ultimate end of His dealings."—Fausset.

vs. 12. Though a few passages might be cited where the word "Sabbath" is perhaps used in a general sense, yet there is here a particular reference to the seventh-day Sabbath, which stood in a different position from all the other celebrations.

"The sabbaths of eternity,
One sabbath,
deep and wide."
—Tennyson.

b Ps. lxxviii. 38.

"The Sundales of man's life,
Thredded together on time's string,
Make bracelets to adorn the wife
Of the eternal, glorious King.
On Sunday heaven's gates stand open;
Blessings are plentiful and life,
More plentiful than hope."
—Geo. Herbert.

a "The pollution of the Sabbath consisted in failing to make the day holy in deed as well as in name by earnest worship and true heart service."—Spk. Com.

"Only tranquil souls reflect. Stormy natures, like ruffled streams, reveal no beautiful images upon their surfaces or within their depths."

Moses gives no positive record of the Israelites having taken up with Egyptian idolatries, inclination towards such is implied in the readiness of the people to worship the golden calf. (8) then I said, i. e. even while they were in Egypt I thought of destroying them. (9) my name's sake,* the honor of wh. was pledged in the covenant with the patriarchs. This thought is the key to the meaning and significance of the whole chapter. Not Israel's deserts but God's char. accounts for past events. polluted, R. V., "profaned."

Israel in Egypt.—The question how far Jehovah was known and worshiped in Egypt is an obscure one. The name could not have been altogether unknown or the people could not have been rallied by Moses to his service nor induced to put themselves under his protection. That his worship, however, was mixed with impurities may be assumed. How far the people partook in the worship of Egyptian deities cannot be ascertained.—Cambridge Bible.

10—13. (10) caused . . Egypt, Ex. xiii. 18. (11) statutes, as on Mt. Sinai, Ex. xx. man do, Le. xviii. 5; Ro. x. 5; Ga. iii. 12. (12) sabbaths, Ex. xx. 8, xxxi. 13, xxxv. 2; De. v. 12. (13) polluted, failed to dedicate them to Jehovah, Nu. xv. 32; Ex. xvi. 27. I said, etc., comp. Nu. xiv. 29, xxvi. 65.

The Sabbath God's Institution and Gift to Man (vs. 12).—We observe—I. That the Sabbath is God's institution. II. That the Sabbath is God's gift, man not made of iron, the body needs it, the mind needs it, above all the soul needs it. III. The ends for which the Sabbath was given. 1. To be a sign between a nation and Him; 2. To be the means of sanctifying a nation.—J. D. Hull.

14—17. (14) name's sake, as vs. 9. Hence Jehovah did not make an end of the people. (15) not bring them, i. e. the very people who came out of Egypt: only their descendants entered Canaan. (16) heart went, they hankered after the idolatries of Egypt, which seemed to them connected with plenty of food. (17) make an end,^b even in the judgments I brought upon them I remembered mercy, I pitied the sinners.

The Christian Sabbath.—It is a memorial of a completed creation work and of Christ's resurrection. In an ironmonger's shop in a country town in Scotland, the shopkeeper sat at his desk at the window. A young apprentice in the cellar below had stuck the candle which he carried in a barrel of gunpowder; the gunpowder exploded, the shop window was blown out, and the good man who sat in it was carried in the current of air to the top of the street, and there landed safely on his feet, while the apprentice was blown to pieces. It was such a wonderful deliverance that the ironmonger observed the day as a day of prayer and thanksgiving to the end of his life. Is it difficult to understand how he should have done so? And shall we not gladly commemorate our deliverance—our emancipation—the announcement that the sinner's salvation was complete, by the rising of Jesus from the dead? Shall we ever suffer ourselves to be deprived of a day that has such happy and hallowed associations?—F. S. Schenck.

18—22. (18) their children, when the fathers had fallen by the judgments in the wilderness. The Bk. of Deuteronomy contains these gracious Divine pleadings. (20) hallow, or separate, keep holy.* (21) the children rebelled, trying in each fresh generation the patience of God. polluted, profaned. (22) withdrew my hand, from inflicting the meditated judgment.

The Sabbath (vs. 20).—I. The design of the Sabbath. 1. An emblem of creation; 2. A memorial of redemption; 3. A covenant sign; 4. A foretaste of heaven. II. Its necessity. 1. Physical need; 2. Moral influence. III. Its duties. 1. To God; 2. To ourselves; 3. To our families; 4. To others.—W. W. Wythe.

23—26. (23) lifted up, i. e. made a solemn asseveration. scatter them, Le. xxvi. 33; De. iv. 27, xxviii. 64. No time stated; prob. the condition of affairs during the period of the judges saw this judgment partially fulfilled; the present exile was the culmination. (24) eyes . . idols, comp. vs. 16. (25) statutes . . good, "the reference is to the law which required the consecration of the firstborn of all animals to Jehovah. This was interpreted in the most rigorous sense as dedication in sacrifice; and then the principle was extended to the case of human beings. The divine purpose in appearing to sanction this atrocious practice was to 'horribly' the people—that is to say, the punishment of their idolatry consisted in the shock to their natural instincts and affections caused by the worst development of the idolatrous spirit to which they were delivered."—Exp. B. (26) polluted . . . gifts,^b i. e. by leaving them unrestrained to all the evil practices of their idolatry.

"To Be Obeyed, Not Answered."—When Leonard Woods, president of Bowdoin College, was in France, he was invited to dine with the king. He presented himself at the palace, and was met with his accustomed courtesy by the king, who said: "We did not know that we were to have the pleasure of your company to-day. You did not answer our invitation." Leonard Woods replied: "I thought the invitation of a king was to be obeyed, not answered." When the Spirit says, "Come," it is equal to a command, and we would better put off all other engagements and come. No matter how gently and winsomely the invitation comes, let us never forget that there is a voice of royal, imperial, imperious urgency and authority behind it.—John McNeill.

27—32. (27) in this, which the Prophet proceeds to state, viz., the defiling of the sacred land of covenant and promise with such self-willed idolatries. blasphemed, or grievously insulted. (28) lifted . . . hand, made an oath. every high hill, "to Ezekiel the unity of Jehovah and the unity of the sanctuary were inseparable ideas." In the oldest prophets, Amos and Hosea, it is the kind of worship at the high-places that is condemned, the revelry and heathenish merrymaking (Hos. ix. 1), the sensuousness (Hos. viii. 13; Am. v. 21), and the false conception of deity implied in it (Hos. vi. 6). The mere localities or multitude of altars do not seem assailed, except that the more there were of them the more sin was committed, because the whole worship was sinful.—Cam. B. provocation, etc., reference is to the meat-offering; see ch. xvi. 19. "Being offered to idols, it became abominable, and was turned into a provocation." drink offerings, Le. xxiii. 18. (29) Bamah, or high place.^a (30) Are ye, this appeal is addressed to the exiles. Notwithstanding all the warnings of men, they persisted in following the evil example of their fathers." (31) offer . . . gifts, vs. 26. Enquired of, vs. 3. (32) cometh mind, if the temple were destroyed, they thought, then the one restraint on the idolatries they loved would be removed. They would be no longer a separate people, and would be free to adopt the cultus of the heathen among whom they lived.—Pul. Com. as the heathen,^b such a resolve indicated a repudiation of their rights and privileges as Jehovah's people.

The Paganism of the Heart (vs. 32).—Look at it—I. As an evil to which the godly are liable. 1. The force of early habits; 2. Of social influence; 3. Of Satanic agency. II. As an evil against which the godly should struggle—1. By the growth of heavenly sentiments; 2. By closer fellowship with the Divine; 3. By a moral conquest over spiritual foes.—Thomas.

Formalism.—Never was more truth packed in a nutshell than in Dr. G. F. Pentecost's retort to an educated Buddhist who was swinging his prayer-wheel and repeating meaningless words. "What are you praying for?" asked the doctor. "O, nothing." "Whom are you praying to?" "O, nobody." "And that," said the doctor, "is Buddhism. Praying for nothing—to nobody."—The memory of the past makes our whole life one. We cannot part from our former selves. However Israel might have sunk into idolatry, the fact of their glorious privileges in the past still remained. None of those who dwell in a land visited by the light of God's Revelation can become, in all respects, like the heathen. We may choose the sins of heathenism, but we must be judged as those who have had opportunity for the knowledge of God.—T. H. Leale.

33—38. (33) mighty, etc., signs of judgment and severe dealing; in store for the exiles. God will shatter their resolution to be like the heathen.^c (34) the people, better, the peoples; the various nations. (35) wilderness, R. V., "wilderness of the peoples," i. e. the wilderness betw. Babylonia and Canaan, adjoining the peoples among whom they were dispersed. plead with you, a legal expression, to implead, to contend against one in a court of justice, which should be to them what the wilder-

b "I judiciously gave them up to pollute themselves. Their own sin I made their punishment." —Fausset.

"God sometimes makes sin to be its own punishment, and there needs no more to make men miserable than to give them up to their own vile appetites and passions. Let them be put into the hand of their own counsels, and they will ruin themselves and make themselves desolate." —Mat. Henry.

a There is here a play upon the words, Ba, signifying "go," and ma h, "what," Bamah, or, What go they to? Comp. Ex. xvi. 15.

"Instead of the word Misbeach, the name which God appropriated to His own altar, the place is usually called Bamah, a name taken from an idolatrous custom." —Lowth.

b "Such was Israel's infatuated resolve. But God mercifully interposed to prevent its execution, by dispersing them, as He had mercifully delivered them from Egyptian idolatry, by bringing them into the wilderness." —Wordsworth.

—Wordsworth.

c "I will no longer try to reclaim you by the gentle methods of patience and forbearance, but will govern you as masters do ill servants, by stripes and corrections, and by this means cure you of your hankering after the heathen customs and idolatries." —Lowth.

d "Lord wave again Thy chastening rod, till every idol throne crumble to dust, and Thou, O God, reign in our hearts alone."— —Keble.

a Je. xxxiii. 13.

b Ro. xi. 7—11.

e "His reasons were all fetched from Himself. Had He dealt with them according to their wicked ways and corrupt doings, He would have left them to be scattered and lost, but He recovered and restored them for the sake of His own name, not only that it might not be polluted, but that He might be sanctified in them before the heathen."—

—Mat. Henry.

d "The gift of prophecy is compared to rain, or the dew of heaven, which makes everything fruitful."

e "Judah and Jerusalem are called forests, not only because they had been full of people, as a wood of trees, but because they had been empty of fruit, for fruit trees grow not in a forest. Those that should have been as the garden of the Lord had become like a forest."

—Mat. Henry.

a Mat. xxi. 14, 15.

ness time had been to the people on their coming out of Egypt. (37) under the rod,^a a metaphor from the shepherd, and meaning, to be gathered into the flock. Le. xxvii. 32.^b The shepherd takes account of the condition of each sheep as the flock passes, one by one, under his rod. bond, or obligations and responsibilities. (38) purge you, etc., "the election of the good involves the rejection of the bad."^b

Passing Under the Rod.—It was the custom among the Jews to select the tenth of their sheep (see Le. xxvii. 32) after this manner. The lambs were separated from the dams, and enclosed in a sheep-cote with only one narrow way out. The dams were left immediately without. On opening the gate their young instantly hastened to join their mother, when a man, placed at the entrance, with a rod dipped in ochre, touched every tenth lamb, and so marked it with his rod, and said, "Let this be holy in the name of the tenth." The passage in Ezekiel, divested of its figurative form, appears to have this signification, that God would deliver a remnant of His people who were then in captivity in Babylon; that He would take particular notice of them, and count them one by one, as a shepherd does his sheep; and, marking them for His own peculiar service, bring them into the privileges of the covenant which He had made with them.—Visitor.

39—44. (39) Go ye, serve, this is evidently spoken in irony; indicating that God prefers the open idolater to the secret hypocrite. Be not half and half, naming My name, and serving your idols at the same time. The present text must read: "Go, serve ye every one his idols; but hereafter ye shall hearken unto me, and no more profane my holy name with your gifts."—Cam. B. (40) holy mountain, where God's temple was. "There we have the thought which is expanded in the vision of the purified theocracy which occupies the closing chapters of the book." all of them, both those of Judah and of Israel. first fruits, or chief. (41) be sanctified, or honored, by shewing Himself holy in Israel's restoration in the sight of the heathen, Je. xxxiii. 9. (42) know, or fully experience and realize. (43) remember, call to mind, and on account of past doings humble yourselves in the dust. (44) my name's sake,^c the supreme reason for the Divine action is the necessity for upholding, in the view of men, the Divine hour.

45—49. (45) Moreover, this is properly the beginning of a new prophecy, and so should have commenced ch. xxi. (46) south, so Judæa is situated in relation to the place where Ezekiel was in the north of Babylonia. drop thy word, De. xxxii. 2; Is. lv. 10.^a forest . . field, fig. for land of Israel; perhaps the prophet is reminded of the stately cedars of Lebanon. (47) fire, fig. for the destruction wrought by the Chaldeans. green tree, a man relatively righteous. dry tree, a sinner whose life is withered. (48) not . . quenched, until its full mission of destruction is wrought out. (49) parables, or in metaphors wh. we cannot understand, and behind wh. there lies no reality.^a Ezekiel's Preaching.—It was a fact that Ezekiel had been speaking in parables. No other prophet indulged so freely in symbolical language. His writings are a garden of luxuriant metaphors, which often blossom into elaborate allegories. This style is characteristic of Oriental literature, and it is a feature of the Bible teaching generally, though in Ezekiel it is carried out more fully than elsewhere. There is an analogy between the seen and the unseen. Unattentive hearers may be arrested by what strikes them on the plain of their own earthly living. It is not enough that we receive a bold abstract statement of truth into our understandings, for this may never fructify. An imaginative grasp of truth, even when it is less clearly defined, may be more vital and fruitful.—Pul. Com.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-FIRST.

1—5. With far other feelings than his fellows, but with as keen an interest as theirs, Ezekiel follows the development of what he knows to be the last act in the long controversy between Jehovah and Israel. It is his duty to repeat once more the irrevocable decree—the divine "delenda est" against the guilty Jerusalem.—Exp. B. (2) Jerusalem, comp. south, ch. xx. 46. holy places, i. e. the temple and its surrounding buildings. (3) my sword, wh. is the king of Babylon. righteous, etc., in a general calamity wh. would affect all classes. Comp. ch. xx. 47^b (4) south . . north, i. e. from the one end of the land to the other.^c (5) not return, i. e. into its sheath until its mission is accomplished.

The Common Fate of Righteous and Wicked.—I. It is a fact that the righteous suffer with the wicked. II. The common life of mankind necessitates this common fate. III. It is an aggravation of a calamity that the righteous share the fate of the wicked. IV. The righteous who suffer with the wicked are not ultimately injured. V. The common fate of the righteous and wicked may be a means of saving both.—Pul. Com.

The Future.—What we know not now we shall know hereafter. The anomalies of the present state of being are such as to suggest that this is only a probationary state, that we do not now and here see the unfolding of the complete purposes of the Lord and Judge of all. The Scriptures reveal a state in which retribution and compensation shall be complete, as we know they are not here. The righteous and the wicked shall not always be confused in one common category, and consigned to one common doom. The discrimination which is not exercised now shall be exercised hereafter. Prosperous sinners shall not for ever elude the righteous judgment of God. The suffering and patience of the virtuous and pious shall one day be rewarded, not only by the approbation of the Judge, but by an everlasting recompense.—Thomson.

6, 7. (6) Sigh, i. e. give public indication of your intense grief and concern. breaking . . lions, as if utterly bowed down by the weight of troubles. "The loins are the seat of strength."^a The breaking of the loins is a fig. for the utter prostration of the strength. (7) tidings, of the peril and woe of Jerusalem. melt, etc., ch. vii. 17.

8—13. (9) a sword, vs. 2.^a furbished, or brightened, made every way ready for immediate war. (10) glitter, and to excite alarm. should . . mirth, etc., R. V., "shall we then make mirth? the rod of my son it condemneth every tree;" i. e. the rod (sword of Babylon) with which Jehovah now chastises his son condemneth (exceeds in severity) every tree, or all wood (all rods of chastisement wh. are mere wood, for this is glittering steel). But the passage is very difficult and the text may be corrupt. (11) handled, and put at once to its use. (12) Cry and howl, addressed to the prophet. terrors . . people, R. V., "they (the princes of Judah (are delivered over to the sword with my people." smite . . thigh, one of the natural expressions of exceeding distress. (13) trial, or time of trial. the rod, or sceptre, R. V., "and what if even the rod (i. e. sceptre) that condemneth shall be no more?" reference being to the royal house of Judah wh. shall perish, vss. 25—27.^b

14—17. (14) third time, to express the violence of the threatening judgment. Let its stroke be repeated again and again. "Doubled" means "repeated." great men, R. V., "great one," ref. being to Zedekiah. privy chambers, better, with R. V. marg., "which compasseth them about." "Whirling around them" with ref. to the triple intensity of the sword. (15) ruins, "stumbling-blocks." wrapped, "sharpened." (16) Go . . hand, R. V., "gather thee together, go to the right; set thyself in array, go to the left!" The sword is addressed by the Lord and bidden concentrate its force to smite on the right, and set itself on to slaughter on the left. face, i. e. edge. (17) smite . . hands, as an expression of indignation. fury to rest, R. V., "satisfy my fury."

"Smite Thy Hands Together."—To smite the hands together, in the East, amounts to an oath! In the seventeenth verse, the Lord says, in reference to Jerusalem, "I will also smite My hands together, and I will cause My fury to rest: I the Lord have said." By the solemn smiting of hands it was shown the word had gone forth, and would not be recalled. When a priest delivers a message to the people, when he relates anything which he professes to have received from the gods, he smites his hands together, and says, "True."—Roberts.

18—20. (19) two ways, these were to be marked, as on a map—one leading to Jerusalem, the other to Ammon. choose . . place, "grave a

^b "The Prophet is not now touching the question as to the extent to which the righteous suffer with the wicked. That, as a matter of fact, national judgment involves the innocent in the temporal ruin of the guilty, there is no doubt. The equity of God is vindicated by the ruin being only temporal." —Spk. Com.

^c Eze. xx. 47.

"The eternal work of laboring with God for our own sanctification, that is the progress of the Christian life." —Phillips Brooks.

^a Job xl. 16; Ps. lxxvi. 11; Is. xxi. 3.

"A man's mind may be aroused by another, but he must mold his own character. What if a man falls in one thing? Let him try again—he must quarry his own nature. Let him try hard, and try again, for he does not know what he can do till he tries."

^a De. xxxii. 41.

"The faithful servant of God saw God arming Himself as a mighty man for the war, and the glittering sword of vengeance in His hand, and he calls aloud to his countrymen all at ease, with awakening thunder, 'A sword,' etc."

—McCheyne.

^b "What horrors will not arise when the sword shall cut down, without regard, the ruling sceptre of Judah?" —Karl's rube Trans. of Bible.

"If you always live with those who are lame, you will yourself learn to limp." —From the Latin.

^a Je. xxvii. 2, 3. For Rabbath or Rabbath, see 2 Sa. xii. 26; Je. xlix. 2; Eze. xxv. 5.

"To do some thing, to cause the sun to shine more brightly on the clouded lives of despondent fellow-creatures, is the one thing worth being in this world for."—Macdonald.

^b Nu. xxiii. 23.

^c "The Chaldeans marked upon the arrows the names of the places they had in view, or the alternatives they submitted to this determination. They then drew the arrows from the quiver at a venture, and the one that first came forth with one of the marks upon it, was regarded not only as supplying the response required but as manifesting the will of the gods, and as conveying an assurance of success in the enterprise in view."—Kitto.

^d Ge. xxxi. 19.

"At the best, we see but a tiny fragment of God's method of rule; if we could comprehend the whole, we should admire the skill and power and beneficence of his vast administration."—Davies.

^a "To Ezekiel's idealizing view Zedekiah was the grand victim 'pierced through' by God's sword of judgments."—Fausset.

hand" as a pointer or sign-post. The hope was cherished in Jerusalem, and probably also among the Jews in Babylon, that the first assault of the Chaldeans would be directed against the Ammonites, and that time would thus be gained to complete the defences of Jerusalem.—Exp. B. (20) to Rabbath, etc., it seems that Zedekiah invited the Ammonites to an alliance in opposition to the Chaldeans:^a this, however, would only draw down destruction on both.

Note on vs. 18—27.—The prophet is commanded to represent a way which parts into two ways. At the parting of the ways he is to set up two guide-posts, the one pointing to Rabbath Ammon, the other to Jerusalem. The king of Babylon, coming to the parting of the ways, hesitates which he shall take. He consults the oracle, draws lots by means of the arrows, and the arrow that he draws out in his right hand is the one inscribed "Jerusalem."—Camp. B.

21—24. (21) stood, better, "standeth." All the verbs should be in the present. parting . . way, i.e. where the roads divided, one leading to Ammon, and one to Jerusalem. He was uncertain which to attack first. divination, "the common word for any kind of superstitious omen."^b arrows bright, or he shook his arrows.^c images, or teraphim.^d looked . . liver, or entrails of animals offered for sacrifice. Particular appearances, wh. were really due to the animal's freedom fr. disease, were regarded as hopeful. (22) for Jerusalem, "into his right hand comes the lot marked 'Jerusalem.'"—Polyc. Bib. appoint captains, etc., "to set battering rams, to open the mouth with a cry, etc.—Cam. B. appoint . . rams, ch. iv. 2. (23) "It (what Nebuchadnezzar has done) shall be as a vain divination in their sight (in that of the men of Jerusalem), which have sworn unto them (have taken oaths of fealty to the Chaldeans, and are ready to take them again), but he (Nebuchadnezzar) brings iniquity to remembrance." The fact represented is that when the people of Jerusalem heard of the divination at the parting of the ways, they still lulled themselves in a false security. Prob. Nebuc.'s anger at their unfaithfulness decided his going first to Jerus. (24) taken . . hand, or fall into the hands of the Bab. king. The truth conveyed is that the Babylonian army is moving under the immediate guidance of Jehovah, and that not only the political projects of the king, but his secret thoughts and even his superstitious reliance on signs and omens, are all overruled for the furtherance of the one purpose for which Jehovah has raised him up.—Exp. B.

Divination by Arrows.—"He made his arrows bright." This was for the purpose of divination. Jerome on this passage says that "the manner of divining by arrows was thus: They wrote on several arrows the names of the cities they intended to make war against, and then putting them promiscuously all together into a quiver, they caused them to be drawn out in the manner of lots, and that city whose name was on the arrow first drawn out, was the first they assaulted." The method of divination practiced by some of the idolatrous Arabs, but which is prohibited by the Koran, is too singular to be unnoticed. "The arrows used by them for this purpose were like those with which they cast lots, being without heads or feathers, and were kept in the temple of some idol, in whose presence they were consulted. Seven such arrows were kept at the temple of Mecca; but generally in divination they make use of three only, on one of which was written, My Lord hath commanded me; on another, My Lord hath forbidden me; and the third was blank. If the first was drawn, they looked on it as an approbation of the enterprise in question; of the second, they made a contrary conclusion; but if the third happened to be drawn, they mixed them, and draw over again till a decisive answer was given by one of the others. These divining arrows were generally consulted before anything of moment was undertaken, as when a man was about to marry, or about to go a journey, or the like."—Burder.

25—27. (25) profane, wicked, R. V., "and thou, O deadly wounded, wicked one, the prince of Israel."^a when iniquity, etc., R. V., "in the time of the iniquity of the end," i.e. in the doom of Jerusalem and the captivity of the king. (26) diadem, for he shall no longer be king. this . . same, i.e. the present royal house in Jerusalem shall not remain; the hope of Israel is centered in Jehoiachin, the legitimate heir of David, now in exile. (27) overturn, etc., repeated to increase the solemnity, whose right it is, comp. Ge. xlix. 10. Many regard vss. 26, 27 as referring to the Messiah.

Crowns (vs. 26).—I. Some of the crowns that will at death be taken off,—of wealth, of nobility, etc. II. Some of the crowns that will not be taken off,—of character, of life, etc.

28—32. It is probably in mockery that the prophet uses such language regarding the puny pretensions of Ammon. (28) Ammonites, vs. 20. reproach, or scorning of Judah. consume . . glittering, R. V. marg., "it is furnished to the uttermost that it may be as lightning." (29) see vanity, or indulge false confidences of their victory bec. of false divinations. upon the necks, by reason of such lying divination the Ammonites would meet a common fate with the princes of Judah, upon whose dead bodies their own would be flung. have an end, or reach its doom. (30) shall . . sheath? R. V., "cause it to return into its sheath!" not a question addressed by Jehovah, but an imperative addressed to the Ammonites. in the place, i.e. thou shalt be destroyed in thy land; all ideas of conquest abroad are vain. (31) blow . . wrath,^a see ch. xxii. 20—22. brutish, wild and savage men. So in xxv. 4 it is the men of the East, the children of the desert, who are to execute judgment on Ammon. (32) no more remembered, ch. xxv. 10. They should, as a nation, be consigned to oblivion.^b

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-SECOND.

1—4. (2) judge, or pronounce judgment on. Comp. ch. xx. 4, xxiii. 36. bloody city, lit. "city of bloods,"^c shew her, or make her to know. (3) time may come, of her chastisement, ch. vii. 7.^d (4) thy blood, i.e. child sacrifice and judicial murders. unto thy years, i.e. thy years of visitation and judgments. "Thou hast filled up the measure of thine iniquities, and brought the time of vengeance upon thyself." reproach, etc., De. xxviii. 37.

Guilt Cannot be Hidden.—In the reign of Louis XIV. a brilliant abbé was one of a large party who had assembled round the royal supper-table. There were clever talkers, sharp dealers in epigram, skilful bandiers of compliment and repartee. The abbé added to the mirth of the evening, by telling the adventures of a memorable career. "I remember," he said, "very well the first penitent who came to my confessional. I was young then, and little accustomed to hear the secrets of court life. It was a murderer, who told me the story of his crime." The abbé was pressed to tell the tale, or to give a clue to the culprit; but he kept a guarded and wary silence. Presently in came one of the most trusted of the king's favorites. "Ah, M. l'Abbé," he said, recognizing an old friend. "Gentlemen, I was the first penitent whom the abbé ever shrived, and I promise you when I told him my story he heard what astonished him." That night the nobleman was carried to the Bastile, and the evidence of a crime committed thirty years before was complete, and the culprit detected.

5—8. (5) Those, i.e. those countries,^a infamous, or defiled in name, much vexed, R. V., "and full of tumult," i.e. great moral disorder. (6) princes, including the king's family, and the chief officers. to their power, or up to the measure of their ability, each was guilty of violence and bloodshed.^b (7) they, said generally, not confined to the princes. light . . mother, so transgressing the foundation-law of social morality,^c stranger, who should have been the object of kindly hospitality and charity. (8) holy things, those connected with sacred worship; whole range of Divine ordinances.

Corporate Guilt.—Such a conception of corporate guilt undoubtedly appeals more directly to our ordinary conscience of public morality than the more poetic representations where Jerusalem is compared to a faithless and treacherous woman. We have no difficulty in judging of any

^a An image taken from the smelting of metals.

^b "Justly is their name blotted out who would have Israel's name for ever lost."

—Mat. Henry.
"No cheating nor bargaining will ever get a single thing out of nature's 'establishment' at half-price. Do we want to be strong?—we must work. To be hungry?—we must starve. To be happy?—we must be kind. To be wise?—we must look and think."

^c 2 Ki. xxi. 16; Eze. xxiii. 37, 45, xxiv. 6, 9.

^d "Instead of deriving advantage from her bloody sacrifice to idols, she only thereby brought on herself the time of her punishment."

—Fausset.
"We often do more good by our sympathy than by our labors, and render to the world a more lasting service by absence of jealousy, and recognition of merit, than we could ever render by the straining efforts of personal ambition." — Archdeacon Farrar.

^a Eze. xvi. 57.

^b Eze. ix. 9, xvi. 38, xxiii. 37, 45.

^c De. xxvii. 16.
"He who comes from the kitchen smells of its smoke; the college air pursues the student." — Lavater.

^d Le. xix. 16.

"Alas, for the misery which is caused by a long tongue! The quantity of the gossip could not be kept up if it were restricted to truth, and so evil inventions are added thereto. These at first are a sort of spice and flavoring; but in time they become the principal ingredient.

—Spurgeon.

^a Eze. xxi. 14, 17.

^b "Thou shalt by thine own fault forfeit the privileges of a holy nation."

—Spk. Com.

"I warn every aspirant for wealth against the infernal canker of selfishness. The heart of avaricious old age stands like a bleak wilderness, and there is no rod of authority, nor incantation of pleasure, which can draw from it one crystal drop to quench the raging thirst for satisfaction."

—Beecher.

^c Also Isa. iv. 4; Je. vi. 29; Zec. xiii. 9.

"Great vices are the proper objects of our detestation, smaller faults of our pity; but affection appears to be the only true source of the ridiculous."

—Fielding.

^a Le. x. 10.

"The kite is a bird which" delights in the free air, and soars aloft, as if it would fain approach to heaven. All the while, however, it keeps its sharp eye continually directed to the earth, if haply it may modern city in the very same way as Ezekiel here judges Jerusalem; and in this respect it is interesting to notice the social evils which he regards as marking out that city as ripe for destruction.—Exp. Bib.

9—12. (9) carry tales, bear false witness so as to bring others into judgment.^d (10) In thee, etc., an execrable form of incest against which even the heathen protested. Comp. ch. xviii. 6. (11) committed abomination, reference is to sins related to the social and moral relationships, which are carefully defined in the laws of Moses. (12) taken gifts, bribes, Ex. xxiii. 8; De. xvi. 19. extortion, R. V., "oppression."

The Reproach of Jerusalem.—It certainly seems strange, all but incredible, that the highly favored Jerusalem should be famed among the very heathen for degradation in iniquity and moral debasement. But the language of Ezekiel is explicit; and he would be more likely to soften than to exaggerate the charge. Jerusalem a reproach, a mocking, infamous, defiled, full of tumult! How are the mighty fallen! The city of the great King, the seat of the temple of Jehovah, the home of the consecrated priesthood,—infamous among the surrounding idolaters for flagitious violation of those very moral laws which the city was consecrated to conserve!—Thomson.

13—16. (13) smitten my hand, as an expression of my indignation.^a

(14) Can, etc., ch. xxi. 7. (15) consume, by the fires of national calamity, but Israel is not to be destroyed by this chastisement. Only the filthiness is to be consumed. (16) shalt take, better, "Thou shalt be profaned by thyself in the sight of the heathen."^b "No longer enjoy the privileges of a city called by My name."

The Fruit of Sin.—Many are the lessons deducible from our subject. We mention three. 1. The fearful growth of sin. Forgetfulness of God may develop into idolatry, adultery, murder. 2. The essential ruinousness of sin. It is of its very nature to blight and destroy everything that is true and beautiful, wise and good, right and strong, both in individuals and communities. "Sin, when it is full-grown, bringeth forth death." 3. The righteous judgment of God against sin. (Rom. ii. 2—11.)—W. Jones.

"Can thine heart endure?"—The question of the text is not answered; but the doleful silence with which it is received suggests the misery that is to follow. If heart and hand fail, the ruin and wretchedness must be complete. While a good man fighting against adversity is said to be a sight for the admiration of gods as well as men, a bad man crushed by misery is only an object of horror. The stout heart of honest intentions can bear up against unmerited woes and find in its own fortitude a certain solace. But this solace will be wanting in the collapse of the false hope of the sinner. Then will follow the deepest misery, the sense of being confounded, the helplessness of being swept away in a flood of destruction. Pain is not the worst evil. The depth of hell is reached when heart and strength fail, and the sinner loses all power to withstand his fate. Hence the supreme need of a Saviour (Rom. viii. 1).—W. F. Adeney.

17—22. (18) dross, comp. Is. i. 25; Mal. iii. 3.^c (20) midst of the furnace, the terrible trials imminent upon Jerusalem would be like the furnace for the purifying away of the national dross. (21) I will gather, "the city is compared to the crucible in which all the refuse of Israel's national life is to undergo its final trial by fire. The prophet sees in imagination the terror-stricken provincial population swept into the capital before the approach of the Chaldeans." blow upon you, to raise high the heat. (22) my fury, or Divine vengeance, which is like a purifying fire.

23—26. (24) rained upon, Is. v. 6; Am. iv. 7. Temporal and spiritual blessings are withheld from the rebellious land. (25) prophets, etc., Cam. B., "whose princes in the midst of her are like," etc. devoured souls, by their deceptions. taken the treasure, making gain by violence. (26) violated, offered violence to, by misrepresenting it. profane, R. V., "common." hid .. Sabbaths, i. e. were blind to the essential need and value of holiness of the Sabbath.

Hypocrisy Easy, but Dangerous.—The counterfeit will always have some admirers, from its cheapness in the market. One must dig deep in dark mines for gold and silver; the precious treasure must be brought from far across the seas; it must be melted down; it must pass through many assays, and the dies must be worked with ponderous engines before the coin can be produced: all this to the sluggish many is a heavy disadvantage. Hush! hearken! steal silently upstairs; the spirit of Deceit invites you to her chamber; a little plaster of Paris, a fire, a crucible, molten lead, the mould, and there is your money, sir, without troubling Peru, Potosi, California, or the Mint. Slink out and change your fine new shillings, and your fortune's made without the ignoble waste of sweat and labor. But be quiet, for a detective may be near, a coarse-minded minion of unpoetic law, who may cruelly block up your road, or even lead you into prison. Short cuts to wealth have brought many to the hulks; and, let me add, there are short cuts to godliness which have brought many to perdition.—Spurgeon.

27—31. (27) princes, etc., Mic. iii. 11; Zep. iii. 3. (28) daubed, R. V., "daubed for," i. e. have seconded the princes in their cruelty, etc. Polychr. B. reads "daub walls with whitewash." untempered mortar, ch. xiii. 10. (29) oppression, even the masses are filled with greed—like rulers like people. The moral energies of the nation as a whole were completely spent. (30) hedge, or wall. gap, or breach, Ps. cvi. 23. "This was a proof of the general corruption, that there was among them no faithful servant to stand in the gap, and build up the hedge."

The Influence of One Man May be Enormous.—Had one real man been found to reprove the people, restore religious worship, and plead with God, Israel might have been spared its overthrow. One man may save a nation or plunge it into perdition. Paul, on board ship, obtained the lives of all the crew. The intercession of Moses brought a deed of pardon for the Hebrew host. For David's sake God conferred large favors on the nation. Luther's firm faith brought deliverance both spiritual and temporal to all Europe. What one man can do no language can portray, imagination can scarce conceive. A man of wisdom, piety, and faith may quietly revolutionize the world.—Davies.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-THIRD.

1—4. (2) two women, viz. Samaria and Jerusalem.^b Israel and Judah were branches of the same stock. (3) in Egypt, the 2 kingdoms are represented ideally as already existing in Egypt. In fact, the great tribes of Judah and Ephraim from the first stood apart; ch. xvi. 7, xx. 8. (4) Aholah, R. V., "Oholah, Oholibah," meaning, "Her tent or tabernacle," and applied to Samaria, which had a temple and worship, but not Jehovah's. Aholibah, denotes, "My tabernacle is in her." It is applied to Jerusalem, magnifies her privilege, aggravates her guilt. they were mine, became my wives.

Aholah and Aholibah.—These names stand respectively for Israel and Judah, and suggest certain traits of national character. I. Independence. Israel is named Aholah. This national independence has its counterpart in individual independence. There are special opportunities, duties, and dangers in having one's own tent. II. Divine fellowship. Judah is named Aholibah. This represents high privileges, with corresponding guilt when God is forsaken. No sinners are so guilty as apostatized Christians. Mark:—It is possible to be Aholibah and to enjoy God's presence, and yet to turn against Him, fall, and be ruined.—Pul. Com.

5—8. (5) when . . mine, while she was mine; before the days when the separate worship was set up. doted . . lovers, i. e. her foreign alliances. her neighbours, Polychr. B., "high dignitaries." The Assyrians could hardly be called neighbors. (6) blue, or purple. Garments dyed with the expensive purple dye. horses, these were scarce in Judæa. The first intimate contact of North Israel with Assyria was in the reign of Menahem (2 Kings xv. 19), and the explanation of it given in these words of Ezekiel must be historically true. It was the magnificent equipment of the Assyrian armies, the imposing display of military power which there spy some prey to seize. And like it are hypocrites; they love to speak of heavenly and spiritual things; they go to church and take the holy supper; they read, and pray, and sing; but, nevertheless, their heart retains its earthly inclination, and they seek that which is temporal more than that which is eternal." — Gotthold.

"The Sabbath is profaned, not only when the shops are open and when crowds through the public resorts of amusement, but when the congregations at church play the part of ostentatious Pharisees, and mock God with pretentious prayers while their hearts and thoughts are far from him." — Pul. Com.

^b Je. iii. 7, 8, 10.

"Paltry affectation, strained assumptions, and disgusting finery, are easily attained by those who choose to wear them; they are but too frequently the badges of ignorance or of stupidity, whenever it would endeavour to please." — Goldsmith.

"A Christian's conscience and character are his white garments. The conscience is the inner, hidden garment. The character is the outer, visible garments. Sin is what defiles them both." — Bolton.

their appearance suggested, that impressed the politicians of Samaria with a sense of the value of their alliance.—Exp. B. (7) defiled herself, her idolatry being figured as spiritual immorality. (8) left she, but added new idolatries to those brought from Egypt. Samaria intrigued with Egypt and Assyria alternately, all the while increasing her idolatry.

Idolatry.—1. When people embrace false worship they are violent and strong in their affections towards it. 2. What evil persons have practiced in their youth that they affect in their age. 3. Idolatry may continue long in a nation, but shall at last be severely punished by the Lord. 4. God makes places and persons remarkable by the judgments He executeth upon them.—Greenhill.

Blue.—Blue was a sky color in great esteem among the Jews, and other Oriental nations. The robe of the ephod, in the gorgeous dress of the high priest, was made all of blue; it was a prominent color in the sumptuous hangings of the tabernacle; and the whole people of Israel were required to put a fringe of blue upon the border of their garments, and on the fringe a riband of the same color. The palace of Ahasuerus, the king of Persia, was furnished with curtains of this color, on a pavement of red, and blue, and white marble; a proof it was not less esteemed in Persia than on the Jordan. And from Ezekiel we learn that the Assyrian nobles were habited in robes of this color. It does not appear, however, that the Jews ever wore garments wholly of this color; and perhaps they abstained from it as sacred and mysterious, than which none was more used about the tabernacle and the temple, in the curtains, veils, and vestments, belonging to these sacred edifices.—Paxton.

9—12 (9) R. V. "I . . delivered," etc., ref. to overthrow of Samaria by Assyria 722 B. C. hand . . Assyrians, 2 Ki. xvii. 23." (10) nakedness, those carried into captivity were usually stripped bare. famous, R. V., "a by-word." Spoken of as a striking example of the judgments that came upon the idolatrous. (11) sister Aholibah, vs. 4. inordinate love, passionate and wilful service of the idols. (12) doted . . neighbours, Ahaz began the alliance with Assyria, and encouraged the adoption of the Assyrian idolatries. horsemen, vs. 6.

Doting on the Assyrians.—I. God's people are required to separate themselves from the world. II. The world endeavors to ensnare the people of God. Its fascinating influence comes through various means. 1. Proximity; 2. Earthly attractiveness; 3. Natural inclination. III. The snares of the world are fatal to those who are entangled in them. 1. Religious ruin; 2. Moral ruin; 3. Life ruin.—Pul. Com.

The Tempter a Scourge.—The neighboring nations, whose idolatries she had conformed to and whose friendship she had confided in, and in both had affronted God, are now made use of as the instruments of her destruction. The Assyrians, on whom she doted, soon spied out the nakedness of the land, discovered her blind side, on which to attack her, stripped her of all her ornaments and all her defences, and so uncovered her, and made her naked and bare, carried her sons and daughters into captivity, slew her with the sword, and quite destroyed that kingdom and put an end to it. . . . And that the Assyrians, whom they had been so fond of, should be employed in executing judgments upon them, was very remarkable, and shows how God, in a way of righteous judgment, often makes that a scourge to sinners which they have inordinately set their hearts upon. The devil will for ever be a tormentor to those impenitent sinners who now hearken to him and comply with him as a tempter.—Matthew Henry.

13—17. (13) defiled, in heart and purpose. one way, and that a bad way. "Both alike forsaking God for heathen confidences." (14) men pourtrayed, pictures, or bas-reliefs, representing deified heroes. The mere recital of Babylonian greatness was sufficient to inflame Aholibah to seek an alliance. In later times (604 B. C.) the rivalry of Babylon and Egypt brought Israel under the dominion of Babylon. vermilion, or red ochre.⁴ Vermilion seems to have been the peculiar color of the Chaldeans, as purple was of the Assyrians. (15) girdles, these were the mark of dignity, and to this part of the dress much care was given. dyled attire, or "in ample dyed turbans;" lofty and richly adorned head-dresses. princes, "heroes." manner of, R. V., "likeness of." (16) doted, this word a "God made these very Assyrians the executioners of His judgments upon the ten tribes: many of them being carried away by Pul. 1 Chr. v. 25, 26; afterward by Tiglath-Pileser, 2 Ki. xv. 29; and at length the whole country was subdued and depopulated by Shalmaneser, 2 Ki. xvii. 6."—Lowth.

b "The report of her infamy went abroad to all women, i.e. to all provinces."—Kimchi.

c 2 Ki. xvi. 7, 11; 2 Chr. xxviii. 16—23; Isa. vii. 20, lvii. 9.

d 'In striking agreement with this vs. is the fact that the Assyrian sculptures lately discovered have painted and colored bas-reliefs, red, blue, and black."

—Fausset.

indicates a kind of love that is passionate and foolish; trans. "she doted upon them after the sight of her eyes;" i. e. with delight and desire. (17) alienated, i. e. she soon grew weary of the alliance, and turned from Babylon to Egypt.*

Vermilion.—The nature of those images, and the practices, may be seen from the context, and the portraying was of the color of vermilion. In the Hindoo temples and vestibules, figures of the most revolting descriptions are portrayed on the walls.—Roberts.

18—21. (18) discovered, i. e. uncovered, revealed. my mind, i. e. (God's. (19) calling to remembrance, Judah being situated between the two great empires of Babylon and Egypt and coveted by both, was naturally a hotbed of intrigue by partisans on both sides. The influence of the Egyptian party was great even in the Assyrian age (Is. xxx.—xxxii.), and the imposing and pretentious power of the Nile valley continued to delude the politicians of Judah throughout the period of Chaldaean supremacy (ch. xxix.—xxxii.; Jer. ii. 18, xxxvii. 5 seq.; Lam. iv. 17).—Cam. B. (20) paramours,* or lovers of either sex. horses, "The horse was made by the Egyptians the hieroglyphic for a lustful person." (21) callest to remembrance, Cam. B., "didst recall," i. e. renew.

22—27. (22) raise .. lovers, i. e. the Babylonians, whose alliance had been given up for the sake of Egypt. These would become the agents for the destruction of Jerusalem. (23) Pekod, and Shoa, and Koa, names of peoples lying East of the Tigris. (24) chariots, R. V., "weapons." set judgment before, R. V., "commit judgment unto." their judgments, with their accustomed fury and cruelty. (25) jealousy, God here speaks as a grieved husband concerning an unfaithful wife. nose .. ears, this was an Egyptian form of punishment for an adulteress. (27) Thus, i. e. by severe and terrible judgments. remember Egypt, i. e. in exile Israel would not think of Egypt or cultivate the worship of Egyptian idols.

28—31. (28) alienated, vs. 18. (29) hatefully, R. V., "in hatred." take .. labour, i. e. the fruits of thy labor. naked, as female captives were served. (31) thy sister, Oholah, or Samaria. her cup, that which she drank. Is. li. 22, 23; Jer. xxv. 15, 16.

A Bad Example.—I. The evil influence of a bad example. Consider how this fell power is exerted. 1. By the fascination of suggestion; 2. By the attraction of sympathy; 3. By the delusion of a false excuse. II. The sin of following a bad example. Inexcusable. 1. Because the evil of the way is known; 2. Because of the freedom of the will; 3. Because of one's own advantages. III. The fatal consequences of following a bad example.—Pul. Com.

An Old Author on Sin.—God needs no other light to discern our sins by but the light of his own face. It peereth through the darkest places; the brightness thereof enlighteneth all things, discovers all things; so that the sins that are committed in deepest darkness are all one to Him, as if they were done in the face of the sun. For they are done in His face, that shines more, and from which proceeds more light, than from the face of the sun. So that this, it ought to make us the more fearful to offend; He sees us when we see not Him, and the light of His countenance shines about when we think ourselves hidden in darkness.—W. Bradshaw (1621).

32—35. (32) deep and large, R. V., "which is deep." Is. li. 17; Re. xiv. 9, 10. it containeth much, i. e. the cup of judgment. (33) filled with drunkenness, God's judgments are often compared to a cup of intoxicating liquors.* (34) suck it out, so as to drain every drop. sherds, or pieces.* R. V., "gnaw the sherds." (35) cast back,* as if determined not to see me: a sign of contempt and aversion. bear, i. e. endure the punishment of.

Forgetting God.—I. Forgetting God implies that He has formerly been known. 1. Men have a natural knowledge of God; 2. They who have seen the Jewish and Christian revelations have a larger knowledge of God; 3. The people of God have the fullest knowledge of God. II. There are many inducements to forget God. 1. He is invisible; 2. Earthly interests distract our thoughts; 3. Sinful inclinations rouse an aversion to the thought of God. III. Forgetting God is itself a great sin. 1. God

* 2 Kl. xxiv. 7; Je. xxxvii. 5, 7.

"God commonly employs tempters to punish those who listen to them."

—Scott.

"God excites those against us for punishment to please whom we sinned."

"The exact historic reference is uncertain. It cannot be to the compact between Merodachbaladan and Hezekiah, since at that time the initiative seems to have been taken by the rebel prince, whose sovereignty over Babylon proved to be of short duration. It may rather be some transaction about the time of the battle of Carchemish (604) that Ezekiel is thinking of; but we have not as yet sufficient knowledge of the circumstances to clear up the allusion.

—Exp. Bib.

"Smead thinks that the illustration is explained by the secluded life of females in the East which makes it quite intelligible that a woman might be captivated by the picture of a man she had never seen, and try to induce him to visit her."

a Je. xxv. 15, xlviii. 26; Hab. ii. 16.

b "Thou shalt behave thyself as drunken people do, who first throw away, or break in pieces, the cup, and then are angry with themselves as the cause of their own misfortunes."

—Lowth.

c 1 Kl. xiv. 9; Ne. ix. 26.

a "On the very day that they had burned their children to Moloch in the valley of Gehenna, they shamelessly and hypocritically presented themselves as worshippers in Jehovah's temple."—Fausset.

b "This Kohl consists of a collyrium of antimony, or other substance, considered beneficial to the eye as well as ornamental, which is kept in a small bottle, and applied with a probe of silver, ivory, or wood to the edges of the eyelids, for the purpose of blackening them, and thus enhancing the brightness of the eye, which is usually large, shaded by long lashes, and decidedly the finest feature of Oriental women."—Van Lennep.

a Le. xx. 10; De. xxii. 22; Jno. viii. 5.

"We are not practical unless good. Nothing so visionary, impolitic and absurd as vice."

b 2 Ki. xxv. 1; Je. lili. 4.

"That Ezekiel on the banks of the Chedar knew what was taking place at Jerus. on the very day of its occurrence, may be a difficulty to those expositors who deny that God can make any prophetic communication, but need not incline us to discontinue, with them, in this passage a prediction after the event."

—Killefoth.

has never forgotten us; 2. God claims our attention and obedience. IV. Forgetting God is hurtful to man. 1. This is the loss of the best blessings of heaven; 2. This incurs a fatal doom. V. God mercifully interposes to save us from forgetting Him. 1. He reveals Himself in His Word; 2. God comes to us in His Son; 3. God rouses us by His providence.—Adeney.

36—39. (36) judge, comp. ch. xx. 4, xxii. 2. yea, declare, R. V., "then declare," i. e. what follows is the prophet's judgment. (37) That, "For." pass . . . fire, this Moloch worship was regarded as the very height of their idolatrous iniquity. (38) same day, i. e. at the very time of making their offerings to Moloch, they immediately entered the temple of Jehovah and offered him other sacrifices, see vs. 39.^a (39) profane it, by the hypocritical show of worshipping Me, when their hearts were gone after their idols.

40—49. (40) ye have sent, embassies to Egypt, Assyria, and Babylon courting alliances. wash thyself, etc., these were the usual preparations made by an Eastern bride for her husband's coming. paintedst thine eyes, with Kohl.^b "Orientals admire eyebrows that meet over the nose, presenting the appearance of a bow; and when nature has denied them this ornament, they imitate it by artificial paint." (41) bed, "divan." table, fig. for the idol altar. (42) voice of a multitude, etc., Polychr. Bib., "and there was the sound of music; they sent for men of the common sort, drunkards from the Wilderness, on whose hands they put," etc. (43) now commit, or still keep on in these wicked ways, even with so old an adulteress; yet the sin is of too long standing to be cured even if the heathen nations shun her. (44) Aholah, etc., ch. xxiii. 4. (45) righteous men, the Chaldeans as instruments of God's righteous judgments. Ref. may, however, be to the Prophets, who are sometimes said to execute the judgments which they foretell. (46) removed, into captivity. (47) stone them, this was the Mosaic punishment of the adulteress.^a (48) Thus, by great judgments. women . . . taught, after such an exhibition of Divine chastisement idolatry would be eradicated. (49) bear the sins, i. e. the proper punishment of the sinful. "God is known by the judgment which He executeth."

Madness of Sinners.—A recent traveler, relating the incidents of his voyage to India, writes:—"Flocks of greedy albatrosses, petrels, and Cape pigeons, crowded round the ship's stern. A hook was baited with fat, when upwards of a dozen albatrosses instantly rushed at it, and as one after another was being hauled on deck, the remainder, regardless of the struggles of the captured, and the vociferations of the crew, kept swimming about the stern. Not even did those birds which were indifferently hooked and made their escape, desist from seizing the bait a second time." Thus to the letter do ungodly men rush at the baits of Satan; they see others perish, but remain careless, and even when they are all but destroyed themselves they persist in their infatuation.—Spurgeon.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-FOURTH.

1—5. (1) ninth year, of Jehoiachim's captivity, Jan., 587 B. C. The prophet's last oracle against Judah. (2) this same day, i. e. though Ezekiel is far away fr. Jerus., he is to tell his fellow-exiles that on the very day when he spoke to them, Nebuc. had commenced the siege.^b (3) parable, or illustrative teaching. pot, or caldron for boiling flesh. "The caldron is Jerusalem; the pieces of flesh the inhabitants; the fire and boiling the siege with its terrible severities. The pieces of flesh shall be pulled out of the caldron indiscriminately, symbol of the universal dispersion when the siege is over." Ironically reminding them of their boast that they were the choice members of the community. (5) bones, better, "wood."

The Boiling Caldron (vs. 1).—From the vision and its first fulfilment we gather—I. That the sins of any city are an offence to God. They are—I. Seen by Him; 2. With anger. II. That the sins of any city will ensure its doom. 1. History illustrates this; 2. Prophecy predicts this; 3. The law of causation involves this. III. That the sins of any city concern every individual inhabitant. 1. They bring sorrow on all; 2. They give a misison to all. Learn:—(1) Seek to evangelize the entire city, so as to save it; (2) Seek to convert individuals, that at least they may be saved.—U. R. Thomas.

6—9. (6) scum, R. V., “rust,” not what floats on the top in process of boiling, but the “deeply-grained verdigris and rust in the pot itself.” piece by piece, i. e. bring out the contents piece by piece. Ref. is to the chief men of the city. no lot, taken usually to decide which should go into captivity, and which remain. All would go forth to captivity or death. (7) top .. rock, R. V., “bare rock,” i. e. the sin of Jerusalem is open and cries unto heaven for vengeance. (8) fury .. vengeance, the blood crying as Abel’s did.^a (9) pile, fig. for the preparations for the city’s destruction.

Arab Camel-feast.—The following account of a royal Arab camel-feast will afford some illustration of the parable contained in this chapter: “Before midday, a carpet being spread in the middle of the tent, our dinner was brought in, being served up in large wooden bowls between two men, and truly, to my apprehension, load enough for them. Of these great platters there were about fifty or sixty in number, perhaps more, with a great many little ones; I mean, such as one man was able to bring in, strewed here and there among them, and placed for a border or garnish round about the table. In the middle was one of a larger size than all the rest, in which were the camel’s bones, and a thin broth in which they were boiled. The other greater ones seemed all filled with one and the same sort of provision, a kind of plum-broth, made of rice and the fleshy part of the camel, with currants and spices, being of a somewhat darker color than what is made in our country.”—Philosophical Transactions Abridged.

10—14. (10) spice it well, R. V., “make thick the broth. (11) set it, i. e. the very pot itself. scum, “rust,” a fig. of the burning of Jerusalem, and the purifying judgments which were to be continued. (12) As the words stand they seem to read: “she hath wearied my labors, and her great rust goeth not out from her; let her rust be in the fire!” Previous efforts to purify Jerusalem have been in vain, her uncleanness will go out only by fire (vs. 13).—Cam. B. not forth, by the previous admonitions of the Prophets, or providential dealings.^a (13) caused .. rest, R. V., “satisfied my fury upon thee.” (14) according .. doings, ch. xxiii. 24.

Punishment of Sin.—What a diabolical invention was the “Virgin’s kiss,” once used by the fathers of the Inquisition! The victim was pushed forward to kiss the image, when, lo, its arms enclosed him in a deadly embrace, piercing his body with a hundred hidden knives. The tempting pleasures of sin offer to the unwary just such a virgin’s kiss. The sinful joys of the flesh lead, even in this world, to results most terrible, while, in the world to come, the daggers of remorse and despair will cut and wound beyond all remedy.—Spurgeon.—Sin: the Toil of It.—There was a man in the town where I was born who used to steal all his firewood. He would get up on cold nights, and go and take it from his neighbors’ wood-piles. A computation was made, and it was ascertained that he spent more time and worked harder to get his fuel, than he would have been obliged to if he had earned it in an honest way, and at ordinary wages. And this thief is a type of thousands of men who work a great deal harder to please the devil than they would have to work to please God.—Beecher.

15—18. Vss. 15—27: “A symbol of the stupefaction of the people at the news of the fall of the city.” (16) desire .. eyes, i. e. Ezekiel’s wife. She is to represent the sanctuary in which the Jews so much gloried; vs. 21. mourn, etc., to indicate that there would be no time for the ordinary lamentations over the dead.^b (17) Forbear to cry, R. V., “Sigh, but not aloud.” tire, ref. to the high priest’s mitre, wh. he might not put off.^c In times of mourning* the head was often shaved, or dust was cast on it. cover .. lips, a usual sign of mourning.^d bread of men, or of mourners. Food was usually supplied for the comfort of mourners. (18) wife died,

^a Ge. iv. 10.

“By retaining any branch of our own wills or desires unrenounced, as not resigned up into God’s hand, we give him hold of us, who will never let hold go, unless we cut off the member which offendeth us. For, as one very well observes, so the snare be strong and hold sure, a bird, though caught but by one claw, shall as certainly be the fowler’s portion, as if she had been taken by both wings.”—Jackson.

^a “I did what was requisite on my part towards thy conversion, but thou refusedst to comply with those frequent calls and exhortations I gave thee.”—Lowth.

“In plain terms, the Lord was no longer going to deal with them by half-measures; their condition called for the greatest degree of severity compatible with their preservation as a distinct and separate people, and so the indignation of the Lord was to rest on them till a separation was effected between them and sin.”—Fairbairn.

^b “The times that were coming were so extraordinary as to leave no room for the quiet lamentation for the dead according to the usual forms of mourning.”

—Spk. Com.

^c Le. xxi. 10.

^d Le. xiii. 45; 2 Sa. xv. 30; Je. xiv. 4; Mic. iii. 7.

"The path of sorrow, and that path alone, leads to the land where sorrow is unknown; no traveler ever reached that blest abode, who found not thorns and briars on his road."

—Cowper.

"There are occasions when a good man can do little in the way of directly benefiting or influencing the ungodly by whom he may be surrounded. But even in such circumstances he may be a witness to God, and he may render service to his fellow-men, by his own life, and especially by his demeanor in times of affliction and trial." —Thomson.

How do you know whether you are pure gold, or base metal? Gold, if pure, must bear the royal stamp to give it currency. If you lack the impress of Christ, you cannot pass current in the kingdom of heaven.

"He praiseth God best that serveth Him most: the life of thankfulness consists in the thankfulness of the life." — W. Burkitt.

note the submissive obedience of the Prophet. The death of the Prophet's wife was no doubt an actual occurrence. And there is nothing improbable in his demeanor after it, with the view of attracting the attention of his fellow-captives. At the same time his tendency to idealize occurrences precludes absolute certainty.—Cam. B.

"The Desire of Thine Eyes."—I. A picture of domestic love. 1. The blessedness of wedded love is a solace in trouble; 2. Wedded love is a type of Divine love; 3. Such a great blessing should be tenderly guarded. II. A stroke of fearful trouble. 1. "The desire of his eyes" is taken from Ezekiel; 2. This trouble comes by a sudden stroke; 3. The trouble comes from God. III. A requirement of unnatural reticence. 1. Public men must repress private emotion; 2. Private sorrow is buried in public calamity; 3. Divine judgments are not to be gainsaid; 4. God has consolations for patient sorrow.—W. F. Adeney.

19—23. (19) people, i. e. the fellow-exiles. (21) excellency .. strength, or object of your boasting; the temple of which you were so proud. soul pitieth, or "spareth," i. e. holds dear. (22) cover .. men, comp. vs. 17. (23) pine away, bec. forbidden to find the usual relieving expressions of grief; left to a secret, inward, heart-consuming sorrow. "While their sorrow will be too deep for words, it will not yet be the godly sorrow that worketh repentance. It will be the sullen despair and apathy of men disenchanted of the illusions on which their national life was based, of men left without hope and without God in the world."—Exp. B.

Sin the Worst Sorrow (vss. 15—24).—It is so because—I. Other sorrows may have no evil, but even good in them; this is essentially and eternally evil. II. Other sorrows are remediable; this leads to destruction. III. Other sorrows may come direct from God; this is ever in direct antagonism to Him. IV. Other sorrows have to do with men in their relation to others; this with his own inner being and his relation to God. Learn:—1. Rightly weigh your own sorrows; 2. Rightly deal with the world's sorrows; 3. Rightly value the Saviour's mission.—U. R. Thomas.

24—27. (24) a sign, typical representation of what would befall them. this cometh, the destruction of the temple. (25) strength, stronghold, vs. 21. (26) in that day, this phrase is used with some latitude, to indicate the period marked by any great event and following it. escapeth, as a fugitive, to carry the terrible tidings. (27) mends, R. V., "heart." mouth .. him, R. V. marg., "together with him." The messenger does not come till nearly three years afterwards (ch. xxxiii. 21); and we must infer that there was no spoken message during the interval, but that from ch. xxv. onward we have the written words of the Lord that came to Him from time to time, not as messages to Israel, but as bearing on the fate of the surrounding nations. We have, i. e., what is, strictly speaking, a parenthesis in the prophet's work.—Pul. Com. sign, portent, or wonder. When the event has happened, they shall be convinced that your action and experience had been a prophetic sign for them.

The Preacher.—

The pulpit

Must stand acknowledged, while the world shall stand,
The most important and effectual guard,
Support and ornament of virtue's cause.
There stands the messenger of truth: there stands
The legate of the skies. His theme divine,
His office sacred, His credentials clear.
By Him the violated law speaks out Its thunders; and by Him, in strains as sweet
As angels use, the Gospel whispers peace.
He 'stablishes the strong, restores the weak,
Reclaims the wanderer, binds the broken heart,
And, armed Himself in panoply complete
Of heavenly temper, furnishes with arms

Bright as His own, and trains, by every rule
Of holy discipline, to glorious war,
The sacramental host of God's elect!—Cowper.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-FIFTH.

In ch. xxv.—xxxii. Ezekiel prophecies against the Nations. These were not uttered, they unfold the significance of the prophetic activity during the years of Ezekiel's silence. They form the proper intro. to the positive oracles of Israel's return. But this restoration of Israel cannot be without great judgments on the nations who have hitherto harassed or seduced her. These judgments will awaken the nations to the knowledge who the God of Israel is—they shall know that He is Jehovah; and they will ensure that in the future his people shall not be troubled or led astray.—Cam. B.

1—4. (2) Ammonites," ch. xxi. 28. "In the fifth year after the destruction of Jerusalem, Nebuchadnezzar subdued the Ammonites and Moabites." (3) Aha, the expression of contempt. They insolently exulted over the fall of the temple, regarding it as the triumph of heathenism over the claims of Jehovah. This is the first of the two sins for wh. God chastises the heathen. desolate, "made desolate." (4) men of the east, the wild Eastern tribes who should distress the Ammonite country after it had been conquered by the Chaldeans. palaces, better, "encampments." thy milk, Ammon was a pastoral country.

5—7. (5) Rabbah, De. iii. 11. couching-place, place for resting and feeding the sheep. "It is a proverbial expression for utter destruction to say that grass grows where a town has stood,"^b know, etc., object of all this chastisement. Jehovah is to be recognized everywhere as the one, only God. The scorn of the heathen was not directed against a mere tribal god. Does not mean that Ammon is to be converted to the worship of Jehovah. (6) clapped, etc., signs of gladness at the destruction of Jerusalem, but in God's sight proofs of envy and malice; a savage kind of joy. (7) spoil, or portion to be devoured. heathen, R. V., "nations." people, R. V., "peoples."

The Dirge Over the Nations (chapters xxv.—xxxiii.).—The universal and permanent lessons of all this are clearly—1. The interest of a true man in other nations beside his own; 2. The universality of God's dominion; 3. The similarity in the laws of moral history in all lands and times; 4. The degress in retribution according to the degrees of sin.—U. R. Thomas.

8—11. (8) Moab, the neighbor country of Ammon. Kindred people of Israel, Gen. xix. 30; bet. Reuben and Moab there was continual rivalry for the fertile district of the former. The Moabite Stone is evidence of a fair degree of civilization. Seir, the Septuagint omits "and Seir." If retained it must refer to the inhabitants of Mount Seir. Elsewhere Ezekiel uses the term to designate Edom. house . . heathen, signifies the proud and boastful spirit of Moab. (9) open the side, or shoulder: expose them to the attacks of the invaders. frontiers, defence-cities, in which the people placed the utmost confidence. Beth-jeshimoth, etc., Nu. xxxii. 38; Jos. xiii. 20; Je. xlviii. 25; situated in Israel's territory. (10) Put a period after Kinathaim and read vs. 10, "Unto the children of the East will I give it for possession together with the children of Ammon;" i. e. both Moab and Ammon were to be inundated by Arabs.^c (11) judgments, deserved and long called for, now to be executed.

The Revengeful Nation.—I. The wicked revenge. 1. Vengeance is presumptuous; 2. Vengeance is cruel; 3. Vengeance is unchristian; 4. Vengeance is mean-spirited. II. The natural punishment. 1. Revenge does not end a quarrel; 2. Revenge provokes the most bitter punishment.—Adeney.

12—14. (12) Edom, Nu. xxiv. 18, 19. The descendants of Esau kept up their grudge against the descendants of Jacob. taking vengeance, manifesting a most implacable resentment.^d They joined the Chaldeans in the capture of Jerusalem; they cut off the fugitives; they occupied portions of Israel during the exile. John Hyrcanus finally defeated them

^a Ammon, descended from Lot, held the region E of Jordan, separated fr. the Amorites on the N. by the river Jab-bok, and from Moab on the S. by the river Arnon.

"Your few things may be very few, and small things; but he expects you to be faithful over them."—Havergal.

^b Is. xvii. 2, xxxii. 14; Zep. ii. 14, 15.

"The meteor, if it once fall, cannot be re-kindled." When those who once flashed before the eyes of the religious public with the blaze of a vain profession, fall into open and scandalous sin, it is impossible to renew their glory. Once break the egg of hypocrisy, and who can repair the damage?"

—Spurgeon.

^c "Upon the children of Ammon, i. e. I will open Moab to the men of the East, who, having overrun the children of Ammon, shall then fall upon Moab."—Fairbairn.

"The happiness of life is made up of minute fractions, — the little, soon-forgotten charities of a kiss, a smile, a kind look, — and the countless other infinitesimals of pleasant thought and feeling."—Coleridge.

^d The subduing of Edom by David further deepened the ill-feeling, 2 Sa. viii. 14.

b "Teman and Dedan were districts, the former in the S., the latter in the N. Hence from Teman to Dedan means 'over the whole country.'" —Spk. Com.

"How great a mischief one unguarded point of character may cause us! One spark blew up the magazine and shook the whole country for miles around. One leak sunk the vessel and drowned all on board. One wound may kill the body; one sin destroy the soul."

—Spurgeon.

a Comp. Is. xi. 14, xiv. 29—32, etc.

b 1 Sa. xxx. 14; Je. xlvii. 4; Zep. ii. 5.

"The growing good of the world is partly dependent on unhistoric acts; and that things are not so ill with you and me as they might have been is half owing to the number who have lived faithfully a hidden life, and rest in unvisited tombs."

—George Elliot.

"Let us be content to do little, if God sets us at little tasks. It is but pride and self-will which says, 'Give me something huge to fight, and I should enjoy that; but why make me sweep the dust?'" —Charles Kingsley.

c Nebuch.'s siege of Tyre lasted thirteen years.

and restored their land to Israel, 126 B. C. (13) Teman, Ge. xxxvi. 11—15. Dedan . . they of Dedan, R. V., "even unto D. shall they;" Ge. x. 7.^b (14) know my vengeance, that it is I who take v. upon them.

The Judgment of Edom.—Not in one event alone may we trace the fulfillment of this prediction, but in several. In the time of the Maccabees, Judas the Maccabee slew more than forty thousand Edomites (1 Macc. v. 3; 2 Macc. x. 15—23). About thirty years afterwards, John Hyrcanus turned his forces against Edom, completely subdued the country, and compelled the people to submit to circumcision and to conform to the Jewish religion, or to suffer expatriation. And they were so desirous of remaining in the country of their forefathers, that they yielded to his conditions, and, as Josephus says, "they were hereafter no other than Jews" (Josephus, 'Ant.,' xiii. 9. 1). So complete was their incorporation with the Jews "that the name of Idumæa appears no more in history as a separate kingdom." As Schröder remarks, "The vengeance of God could not in a more marked retribution manifest itself upon Edom than by the extirpation of his nationality, and that precisely in the form of an absorption by Israel." The desolation of the land was at length accomplished by the Mohammedans. "In the seventh century," says Dr. J. L. Porter, "the Mohammedan conquest gave a death-blow to the commerce and prosperity of Edom. Under the withering influence of Mohammedan rule, the great cities fell to ruin, and the country became a desert. The followers of the false prophet were here, as elsewhere, the instruments, in God's hands, for the execution of His judgments." And so "the Edom of prophecy—Edom considered as the enemy of God and the rival of Israel—has perished for ever: all, in that respect, is an untrodden wilderness, a hopeless ruin; and therein the veracity of God's Word finds its verification."—Pul. Com.

15—17. (15) Philistines,^a ancient foes of Israel, dwelling in the plains towards the coast, S. W. of Judah. old hatred, carrying on into later times the early hatred of the races. for . . hatred, R. V., "with perpetual enmity." (16) Cherethims, R. V., "Cherethites," another name for the Philistines, representing prob. one of the immigrations which formed the nation.^b remnant, etc., they were at this time a mere "remnant," having been exhausted by the Assyrian and Egyptian wars. Their fate is not precisely indicated in the prophecy. They were in point of fact gradually extinguished by the revival of Jewish domination under the Asmonean dynasty.—Exp. B. Am. i. 8. (17) furious rebukes, or heavy judgments.

National Character.—1. There is such a thing as national morality. Apart from the character and conduct of individuals, a nation by its collective action proves itself to possess a certain moral unity. 2. There is such a thing as national responsibility. The people sin, and the people suffer; the people repent and call upon God, and the people are saved. 3. There is especial scope for the display of national virtues, and for the right use of national opportunity and probation, in the relations which subsist between different and sometimes rival communities. 4. National pride, power, and prosperity are of no avail in God's sight, if injustice and malevolence are exhibited by nations in their intercourse and transactions with each other. "The righteous Lord loveth righteousness."—Thomson.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-SIXTH.

1—6. (1) eleventh year, that in which Jerusalem fell, on the 10th day of the fifth month. Tyre had already heard of this catastrophe before Ezekiel utters this prophecy. first . . month, wh. precise month is not stated; prob. the eleventh or twelfth. (2) Tyrus, the Latin form of the word Tyre,^c Jos. xix. 29; 2 Sa. xxiv. 7. gates, etc., trans. "the gate (door) of the peoples is broken, it is turned unto me." "The satisfaction with which the fall of Jerusalem was regarded in Tyre showed how completely she was debased by her selfish commercial policy, how oblivious she was to the spiritual interests bound up with the future of Israel." Jerusalem had long been a center-place on the highway of commerce, and Tyre was jealous of its prosperity.⁴ (3) many nations, alluding to the composite character of the Bab. army. as the sea, in its storm-time. A suitable fig. in a message to a sea-port town. (4) scrape her dust, i. e. sweep away her soil. top . . . rock, R. V., "make her a bare rock." Tyre was situated on a rock-island. (5) spreading of nets, travelers say that this is literally fulfilled. (6) daughters, or dependent towns and cities on the mainland.

Destruction of Tyre.—One of the most singular events in history was the manner in which the siege of Tyre was conducted by Alexander the Great. Irritated that a single city should alone oppose his victorious march, enraged at the murder of some of his soldiers, and fearful for his fame—even his army's despairing of success could not deter him from the siege. And Tyre was taken in a manner, the success of which was more wonderful than the design was daring; for it was surrounded by a wall one hundred and fifty feet in height, and situated on an island half a mile distant from the shore. A mound was formed from the continent to the island; and the ruins of old Tyre, two hundred and forty years after its demolition, afforded ready materials for the purpose. Such was the work, that the attempts at first defeated the power of an Alexander. The enemy consumed and the storm destroyed it. But its remains, buried beneath the water, formed a barrier which rendered successful his renewed efforts. A vast mass of additional matter was requisite. The soil and the very rubbish were gathered and heaped. And the mighty conqueror, who afterwards failed in raising again any of the ruins of Babylon, cast those of Tyre into the sea, and took her very dust from off her.—Keith.—Mockery.—That "Aha" cost Tyrus her life. No mockery, no taunting of man against man on religious or solemn subjects! Controversy if you will; sneering none. We were not made to sneer. Sneer at no man's prayers. They may be very imperfect as compared with ours, but they are not to be sneered at. Do not sneer at the idolater in the jungle. He is worshiping a fetich, some poor stone or branch of wood; or mayhap he is a little higher, and is worshiping the dawn and paying homage to the evening star. Do not laugh at him; any man who can fall down on his knees worshipfully before any object is not far from the kingdom of God. Your business is not to sneer at him, but to show him a more excellent way, and to show that way by walking it.—Parker.

7—10. (7) king of kings, one who has subdued other kings, and holds them in subjection. (8) fort, etc., movable tower fr. which the archers shot. mount, "embankment," in this instance a huge mole bet. the mainland and the island. buckler, the "testudo or roof of shields under cover of which the besiegers operated." (9) engines, battering rams. axes, i. e. grappling irons, with which to pull down the city walls. (10) dust, etc., when they rush in through the breaches to sack the city.

National Selfishness.—Tyre should have sympathized with her old ally in the time of adversity. But her commercial greed bears down all thoughts of friendship and all feelings of commiseration. She only looks at the direful event as an opportunity for enlarging her trade. The same miserable mercantile selfishness is even witnessed in ecclesiastical regions, when one Church takes pleasure in the misfortunes of a neighboring Church. In this case there is far less excuse, for Christians profess brotherhood, and a true Church exists for the glory of God, not for the pomp and aggrandizement of its members. God is not glorified when one Church fattens on the wreck of another Church.—Adeney.—History of Tyre.—This history of the city is most affecting. It was probably a colony of the Sidonians, as it is called "the daughter of Sidon." From its present name appears to have been taken the general name of Syria. Its first mention is in Joshua, where it is called "the strong city Tyre." At an early period it became the mistress of the seas; traded even to Britain, and planted colonies in different parts of the Mediterranean, among which Carthage became the most celebrated. It was also referred to by our Saviour, when He pronounced woe upon the inhabitants of Chorazin and Bethsaida, because they had seen His mighty works and repented not.

4 "In the true spirit of mercantile competition, Tyre exulted on the thought that the trade of Jerusalem would now be diverted into her markets."

—Spk. Com.

"The disappointments of worldly confidence drive us to Christ. When earthly friends 'fall or leave us,' we need the true Friend who 'sticketh closer than a brother.' If Christian ministers have been unworthy, Christ abides faithful. Perhaps too much confidence was given to the human instruments; then the shock of discovering this to be misplaced may not be wholly hurtful; it may help the Church to look away from men and trust only in Christ."

—Pul. Com.

Tyre, as is well known, suffered two memorable sieges: one from Nebuchadnezzar, the other from Alexander the Great. "Alexander the Great was much offended with those who refused the presents that he offered them. So with Christ to His children. He is not pleased with us when we do not expect large things from Him, and accept the large things that He offers us."

"All the glory and beauty of Christ are manifested within, and there He delights to dwell; His visits there are frequent, His condescension amazing, His conversation sweet, His comforts refreshing; and the peace that He brings passeth all understanding."—Thos. a Kempis.

a "The number of granite columns that lie in the sea, particularly in the north of the island, is surprising. The east wall of the inner harbor is entirely founded upon them, and they are thickly spread over the bottom of the sea on every side."

—Thomson.

b "Alexander, as Arrian relates, scraped off the very dust of old Tyre to build his causeway and now you can find none of the remains except by digging below the surface."—Ibid.

"I know of a surety that the diligent Christian is the only happy Christian. True religion is above all other things a business which is not only worth doing but is worth doing well. High farming in the fields of the soul is the only farming which pays."

—Spurgeon.

"If you can laugh over your trial, it is half conquered; if you can pray over it, it is wholly conquered."

"Trade and intercourse cease where God sends His judgments. The Lord destroys nations that delight in war."—Lange.

"Late repentance should be carefully distinguished from delayed repentance. True repentance is never too late, but late repentance is seldom true. The penitent thief's was late repentance, but we have no evidence that it was deferred repentance."

—Anon.

11—14. (11) tread down, the people in the streets. strong garrisons, lit. pillars of strength. "The multitude and strength of the pillars of Tyre are attested by its ruins." (12) pleasant houses, the homes of the merchant princes were palatial. in . . water, where they can even to this day be seen." (13) noise . . cease, Tyre was the operative city of the ancient world. Culture and commerce go hand in hand. Is. xxiv. 8; Je. vii. 34, xvi. 9. (14) like the top of a rock,^b R. V., "make thee a bare rock."

Tyre.—No great city which has played so important a part for centuries has left fewer traces than Tyre. Ezekiel was a true prophet when he said of Tyre, "They shall seek for thee, and thou shalt be no more" (ch. xxvi. 21). A traveler who was not informed of its existence might pass along the whole coast, from La Kasmie to Ras-el-Ain, without being aware that he was close to an ancient city. . . . Tyre is now the ruin of a town built with ruins.—Rénan.

15—18. (15) isles, the coast-lands. shake, by a strong hyperbole the prophet appears to represent the crash of the city's fall and the cries of the wounded as being heard in the neighboring coasts, ch. xxvii. 28. xxxi. 16; cf. Jer. xlix. 21. (16) princes of the sea, the merchant rulers of Carthage, and other colonies founded by Tyre. These would be in extreme distress on account of the fall of Tyre. (17) lamentation, comp. Re. xviii. 9. of seafaring men, or of the seas. "Tyre was an inhabited city rising out of the sea that surrounded her." haunt it, R. V. marg., "inhabited her." (18) isles, or colonies on the Mediterranean islands and shores.

19—21. (19) bring . . deep, the sea did actually come to cover the ruins. (20) When, R. V., "then." The prophet regards Tyre's sinking beneath the waters as her entrance upon the descent into the pit, the place of the dead, just as frequently elsewhere (ch. xxxii.) he makes the grave the entrance into the underworld of the dead. Cf. Is. xiv. 11, 19. down, etc., comp. Is. xiv. 9. and I shall set thy glory, R. V. marg., "nor set thy glory." (21) terror, will utterly destroy thee. The Bible is silent concerning the fulfillment of this prophecy. Ch. xxix. 17—21 suggests that Nebuc. was not fully successful. be no more, as a great commercial city. "As to old Tyre the prophecy was literally fulfilled, not a vestige of it being left."

The Ruins of Tyre.—Relentless desolation seems to brood over this devoted region. Fragments of clustered columns and broken walls, at the south-east extremity of the town—the only visible remains of the structures even of the Middle Ages—perhaps mark the site of the magnificent metropolitan church, once the conspicuous ornament of Christian Tyre. In that splendid edifice of rich Gothic architecture, distinguished by three spacious naves and two lofty towers, where councils were held and princes and prelates assembled, the bones of the Emperor Frederick Barbarossa were deposited in a sumptuous sepulchre. Every trace of the mausoleum of Origen, raised in the third century, and still existing in the twelfth, has now disappeared. Broken shafts thrown into a narrow creek awkwardly serve the purpose of a bridge; others piled in the sea, form a barrier against hostile approach. A few columns of marble, of granite, and of porphyry lie unheeded round a small cove, now the only landing-place, while mounds of sand, thinly strewn with architectural fragments, alone point out the ancient circuit of the town.—Hogg.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-SEVENTH.

Apart from its poetic or prophetic interest this chapter is for us almost the locus classicus as to the geography and commerce of that old world of which Tyre was in some sense the centre. We may compare it, from that point of view, with the ethnological statements in Gen. x.—Pulp. Com.—He compares her to a stately vessel riding at anchor near the shore, taking on board her cargo of precious merchandise, and ready to start on the perilous voyage from which she is destined never to return.—Exp. B.

1-6. (2) lamentation, or funeral dirge.^a (3) entry, lit. entries. Ancient Tyre had two ports. It was a harbor to and from which ships went from all parts of the Mediterranean, and connected seas. perfect beauty, completely fitted, and grandly adorned. (4) midst . . seas, lit. "in the heart of the sea."^b builders, ship-builders. (5) ship boards, R. V., "planks." Senir, the Amorite name for Mt. Hermon.^c (6) Bashan, a district celebrated for its oaks. company . . ivory, Polychr. Bib., "thy deck they made of ivory inlaid in cedar-wood from the isles of Chittim." isles of Chittim,^d or Cyprus.

A State of Sin is a State of Death (vs. 3).—1. We are all destitute of spiritual life; 2. The Word of God is the appointed means of communicating spiritual life; 3. The influence of the Holy Spirit is indispensable to the production of spiritual life. 4. The influence of the Holy Spirit is to be obtained through prayer; 5. We have every encouragement to pray for the influence of the Holy Spirit; 6. The consequences of the outpouring of the influence of the Holy Spirit will be beneficial and glorious.—G. Brooks.

Ancient Tyre.—The Saracens and Turks were the unconscious instruments who carried these prophecies into their fulfilment: they utterly destroyed Sidon and Tyre, that they might not afford further refuge to the crusaders. There were two harbors, formed by the island—one towards the north, and the other towards the south; and there was a passage between the island and the shore from the one to the other. The island is represented by Pliny as having been four miles in circumference, but the peninsula upon which the present town is situated is of much less extent. It would therefore appear that it is built, for the most part, upon the mole thrown up by Alexander, including a small portion of the original island.

7-11. (7) Fine linen,^a Ge. xli. 42. blue and purple, i. e. material dyed with costly murex-dyes.^b isles of Elishah, "Ionia or Grecian Asia," Ge. x. 4. that which covered thee, R. V., "thine awning." The whole picture signifies the great architectural beauty of Tyre. (8) Arvad, Ge. x. 18. mariners, rowers. (9) Gebal, a province of Phenicia, near Tyre.^c calkers, stoppers of chinks; it was their business to make the vessels water-tight. occupy, R. V. marg., "exchange." (10) Lud and Phut, prob. in Africa, Nah. iii. 9. hanged . . thee, it was customary to ornament the walls with weapons. (11) Gammadims, an unknown nation.

12-16. (12) Tarshish, prob. Tartessus in Spain, Ge. x. 4. Spain was rich in metals. Ezekiel in speaking of the vast area of territory subject to the commercial spirit of Tyre begins farthest west. traded in thy fairs, R. V., "traded for thy wares." (13) Javan, Greece. Tubal, and Meshech, "the Moschi and Tibareni, whose habitation was near the Euxine Sea. persons of men, i. e. slaves. in thy market, R. V., "for thy merchandise." (14) Togarmah, Armenia Ge. x. 2. (15) Dedan, Lxx., "the Rhodians," i. e. the coasts of the Mediterranean sea. for a present, i. e. rendered as thy tribute. The representation is not that Tyre is traded with by the nations, though this is the fact lying under the figures employed. The nations are not customers of Tyre. Tyre neither buys nor sells, nor does she exchange one article for another. The nations are her merchants, who bring to her wares from every land; or they are her dependents, and the merchandise which they bring is a tribute which they render her.—Cam. B. (16) Syria, lxx., "Edom," Ge. x. 7. emeralds, or carbuncle. coral, poss. precious stones, are meant by the word. agate, R. V., "rubies."

17-21. (17) wheat of Minnith, 1 Ki. v. 9-11. Minnith is in the country of the Ammonites, wh. was famous for its cornlands.^a Pannag, R. V., "pannag," perhaps some kind of gum. balm, for wh. Gilead was famous.^b (18) Damascus, the chief city of Syria. wares . . making, R. V., "thy handy works," not Tyre's own making, but the wares which the nations brought to her, all of which are hers. multitude . . riches, Cam. B., "because of every kind of riches." Helbon, or Chalybon,^c a district in Syria famous for its wine. (19) Dan, poss. should be Vedan, the modern Aden. Javan, poss. a Greek settlement in Arabia. Dan . . Javan,

^a "This alludes to the mournful ditties used at funerals, where, in the mourning women recounted everything that was valuable or praiseworthy belonging to the deceased, and then lamented his loss." — Lowth.

^b "Tyre, in consequence of her sea-gut position, separated by a strait of half a mile from the mainland, is described as a ship built of the best materials, and manned with the best mariners and skilful pilots, but at last in tempestuous seas wrecked." — Fausset.

^c De. iii. 9. Virgil mentions the fir tree as especially useful for ships, the cedar and cypress for houses.

^d Je. ii. 10.

^a Caligula, the extravagant Roman emperor, furnished his pleasure-boats with costly sails and other expensive ornaments. — Suetonius.

^b This was used for awnings over the deck.

^c Ps. lxxxiii. 7. "The domestic utensils of the Orientals are nearly always brass; and to these they often refer as a sign of property. 'He is a rich man; his house is full of brass vessels.' 'Begone! fellow, I have more brass in my house than would purchase all thy property.' 'The miserable man has not a brass dish in his house.'" — Roberts.

^a 2 Chr. xxvii.

^b Je. viii. 25.

^c Now Aleppo.

"If you stand half a mile off from a man and throw the gospel at him, you will miss him; but if you go close to him and lay hold upon him, giving him a hearty grip of the hand, and show that you have an affection for him, you will, by God's blessing, lead him in the right way."

—Spurgeon.

a 2 Ki. xix. 12.
b "Still fine clothes are kept in large chests of cypress-wood, whose odor preserves them from the ravages of moths. Ezekiel speaks of such made of cypress."

—Van Lennep.

"Our business must be the main drain of our intellectual activities day by day. It is the channel we have chosen for them: they must flow in it with a diffusive energy, filling every nook and corner."—Tulloch.

"There is no such wholesome air—there is no such kindly physic—there is no such sovereign cordial—as the fear of the Lord. That makes the days of the godly as long as the years of the wicked."—Jermin.

"Let your light shine. Revolving flash-lights are all right on the sea coast, but all wrong in the Christian life. Shine, keep shining!"—Carlos Martyn.

a Eze. xxvi 15, 16.

"There is both folly and weakness in those who love and seek after pleasure, for it cannot satisfy the soul nor give the heart repose."—Thomas a Kempis.

Camb. B., "Wedan and Javan of Uzal furnished thy wares; bright iron, cassia and calamus were among thy goods." bright iron, i. e. wrought iron. cassia, Ex. xxx. 24. calamus, "sweet cane," which supplied one of the ingredients for the anointing oil of the priests, Ex. xxx. 23. (20) precious clothes, perhaps "saddle-cloths for riding." (21) Kedar, Ge. xxv. 13.

Business.—This account of the trade of Tyre intimates to us that God's eye is upon men, and that he takes cognizance of what they do when they are employed in their worldly business, not only when they are at church, praying and hearing, but when they are in their markets and fairs, and upon the exchange, buying and selling, which is a good reason why we should in all our dealings keep a conscience void of offence, and have our eye always upon him whose eye is always upon us.—M. Henry.

22—25. (22) Sheba, in Arabia, Felix. Raamah, on the Persian Gulf. (23) Haran, Carrhoe, in N. W. Mesopotamia. Canneh, prob. a town on the Tigris. Eden, in Mesopotamia.^a Asshur, here prob. the town Sura or Essurieh on the Euphrates. Chilmad, prob. Kalwada, near Bagdad. (24) all sorts, or in excellent wares. bound with cords, Cam. B., "with cords twined and durable," i. e. the cords were articles of merchandise. made of cedar, to give the clothes a fine scent.^b (25) did sing of thee, R. V., "were thy caravans." The ships of Tarshish, i. e. deep-sea ships, those trading with the distant ports. "Beneath all her opulence and refinement the prophet's eye detected that which was opposed to the mind of Jehovah—the irreligious spirit which is the temptation of a mercantile community, manifesting itself in overweening pride and self-exaltation, and in sordid devotion to gain as the highest end of a nation's existence."

Lessons from Old Tyre.—There is no security out of heaven. He builds too low who builds beneath the skies. All other security is partial, relative, good as far as it goes; but so long as old Tyre lies in ruins, a rock on which fishermen dry their nets, let us believe that the proudest gold store may be a barren place and the very city of poverty and chagrin in the working out of the evolution of providence. We should learn from ruins. O vain man, poor boaster, you shall beg to-morrow! You that steep your arms to the elbows in gold shall write a begging letter ere the year closes. Riches make to themselves wings and fly away, and the great Babylon which you have builded is but a bubble in the air. Lay not up for yourselves riches where moth and dust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal: have riches in heaven; have riches in the word of God. Then you can never be poor; yea, though there be not one penny-piece in all your fortune, you may be richer than you ever were. There is a poverty that is unconscious of need; there is a poverty that can pray and hope.—J Parker.

26—30. The vessel steered by her pilots into dangerous waters, is shipwrecked and her cargo and crew cast into the sea. Dismay and lamentation of all seafaring men. (26) great waters, scenes of peril. east wind, Tyre's fall was due to a force and a wisdom above men, Ps. xlviii. 7. (27) riches, etc., "All who have been enumerated as sharing in and constituting the glory of Tyre are now recounted as partakers in her wreck."—Spk. Com. fairs, R. V., "wares." occupiers, "exchangers." (28) suburbs, perhaps "waves." (29) stand . . land, "being cast out of the ships wherein they prided themselves," or in fear of the sea in view of the wreck of the gallant ship of Tyre. (30) against thee, better, over thee: on account of thy wreck and ruin. cast . . ashes, the signs of intense and hopeless mourning.

31—36. (31) utterly bald, ch. vii. 18. (33) wares, or merchandise. (34) R. V. marg., "Now thou art broken . . are fallen." (35) isles,^a including cities on the neighboring coasts. (36) people, "peoples." hiss, with astonishment. terror, i. e. utterly destroyed. In the new world inaugurated by Israel's Restoration, the prophet sees no place for this arrogant, proud commercial city. Tyre is irrevocably doomed.

A Celebration of Remarkable Prosperity.—I. A celebration of remarkable prosperity. 1. Her advantageous situation; 2. The grandeur of her buildings; 3. Her great riches, important handicrafts, and extensive commerce; 4. Her strong fortifications. II. A celebration of remarkable prosperity inordinately gloried in. III. A celebration of remarkable prosperity with a significant omission. IV. A celebration of remarkable prosperity disastrously terminated. V. The disastrous termination of remarkable prosperity variously regarded. 1. With lamentation; 2. With affright; 3. With scoffing.—W. Jones.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-EIGHTH.

1—5. (2) prince, or king; prob. Ithobal II. But he is regarded here as the impersonation of the spirit of a prosperous commercial system. Tyre is the representative of commercial greatness, and the truth which Ezek. here seeks to illustrate is, that the abnormal development of the mercantile spirit had in her case destroyed the capacity of faith in that which is truly divine.—Exp. B. lifted up, in self-confidence and pride. This ungodly pride and self-deification is the second sin for which the heathen nations were chastised, cf. xxv. 12, 15; xxvi. 2. They must know that Jehovah is God. a God, comp. Da. iv. 30,^a better, "I am God," the prophet speaks fr. his own point of view, wh. makes such a statement, blasphemy. seat, i. e. Tyre, bec. of its great wealth and renown. midst . . seas, ch. xxvii. 4. man, and only a man. heart . . God, self-apotheosis; comp. the action of the Roman Emperors (3) than Daniel,^b spoken in irony, ch. xiv. 14. (4) thy wisdom, etc., this represents the prince's boasting and self-esteem, not the actual facts. (5) because . . riches, the usual consequence of riches swiftly gathered is inordinate pride, and carnal reliance on mere temporal wealth.

Worldly Religion.—We have, indeed, a nominal religion, to which we pay tithes of property and sevenths of time; but we have also a practical and earnest religion, to which we devote nine-tenths of our property, and six-sevenths of our time. And we dispute a great deal about the nominal religion; but we are all unanimous about this practical one; of which I think you will admit that the ruling goddess may be best generally described as the "Goddess of Getting-on," or "Britannia of the Market." The Athenians had an "Athena Agoraia," or Athena of the Market; but she was a subordinate type of their goddess, while our Britannia Agoraia is the principal type of ours. And all your great architectural works are, of course, built to her. It is long since you built a great cathedral; and how you would laugh at me if I proposed building a cathedral on the top of one of these hills of yours, to make it an Acropolis! But your railroad mounds, vaster than the walls of Babylon; your railroad stations, vaster than the temple of Ephesus, and innumerable; your chimneys, how much more mighty and costly than cathedral spires! your harbor-piers; your warehouses; your exchanges!—all these are built to your great Goddess of "Getting-on;" and she has formed, and will continue to form, your architecture, as long as you worship her; and it is quite vain to ask me to tell you how to build to her; you know far better than I.—Ruskin, "The Crown of Wild Olive."

6—10. (6) Lord God, note that, in the use of this full name is given the assertion that Jehovah is the only God. (7) strangers, even the Babylonian army, made up of people from unknown regions. beauty . . wisdom, i. e. all the magnificence wh. the commercial spirit has produced. defile, R. V. marg., "profane," bec. the prince has assumed divinity for the city and himself. (8) the pit, or bottom of the sea. The fig. of this vs. is taken from a sea-fight, where the dead are cast overboard without burial. (9) a man, R. V., "thou art man, and not God," and so entirely in the power of the foe. You shall show no Divine powers in the time of trouble, so as to be able to deliver yourself. (10) uncircumcised, heathen idolaters as opposed to the covenant people.^a This ignominious death was one of the severest punishments of wh. a Jew was cognizant. Deprivation of burial did not hinder the dead persons from descending into Sheol, the place of the dead, but the dishonor done them here followed them there, and they were subject to reproach.—Cam. B.

The Prince of Tyre.—The proud boast of the Tyrian prince is partly accounted for by the situation of the island-city, full of luxury and beauty, ^a Also Ac. xii. 21—23; 2 Th. ii. 4.

"The words are put in the mouth of the speaker to denote his arrogant pride; but the situation of the island city, full of luxury and beauty, in the midst of the blue water of the Mediterranean, gives force to the expression."

—Spk. Com.

^b Da. i. 17, vi. 3.

"My father bought for me, in childhood, a golden seal-ring. A pedler, in exchange for a date, carried off the ring from my hand. For a little child cannot estimate the value of a ring, and will easily part with it for anything sweet. And thou, too, dost not estimate the value of a life, who throwest it away in luxurious indulgences."

—Saadi.

^a "Thou shalt die by such a remarkable judgment as God usually inflicts upon notorious offenders."

—Lowth.

"In ways of greatness think on this — that slippery all ambition is."

—Herriek.

Towns turned to ashes, fanes involved in fire! These deeds the guilt of rash ambition tell.

—Fawkes.

"The knowing of God, that we may serve Him, and the serving Him, that we may enjoy Him, take up the whole duty of man's obedience." — Herle.

b "Thou art the consummation of the model of perfection. The king of Tyre, who was the head of the Tyrian community, and completed and crowned its organization, was like a seal which gave perfection to it." — Wordsworth.

"As the union of the branch with the vine is one of growth, never-ceasing growth and increase, so our abiding in Christ is a life process in which the divine life ever takes fuller and more complete possession of us." — Andrew Murray.

in the midst of the blue water of the Mediterranean. Moreover, Tyre was regarded by many as a sacred island. Fairbairn says that "Sanchoniathon expressly calls it 'the holy island,' and it is known that the Tyrian colonies all revered it as the mother-city of their religion, not less than the original source of their political existence. It was only in the spirit of ancient heathenism to conclude that a state which was not only strong by natural position, and by immense maritime resources, but also stood in such close connection with the Divine, might be warranted in claiming, through its head, something like supernatural strength and absolute perpetuity of being." — W. Jones.

11—15. Vss. 11—19 are very difficult to explain bec. of obscure expressions and unintelligible allusions. The simple thought is that there was sin enough in Tyre to hurl the most radiant celestial fr. heaven to hell. (12) sealest . . sum, or completest the perfect pattern.^b "Thou settest the seal to thy perfection. Thou deemest that thou hast attained the consummation of all beauty and wisdom." — Pulp. Com. (13) in Eden, no doubt the prophet has in mind the story of Paradise (Gen. ii, iii). Not unlikely he was in possession of traditions more ample than those in Genesis. — Cam. B. tabrets, or drums. (14) anointed cherub, trans. "with the cherub with spreading wings overshadowing I set thee." covereth, as the cherub in the holy of holies overshadoweth the mercy-seat. The cherub was a symbol of perfection. stones of fire, i. e. bright jewels, such as named vs. 13. (15) perfect, to all appearance, and in thine own estimation.

Note on vss. 12-16. — The passage presents certain obvious affinities with the account of the Fall in the second and third chapters of Genesis; but it also contains reminiscences of a mythology the key to which is now lost. It can hardly be supposed that the vivid details of the imagery, such as the "mountain of God," the "stones of fire," "the precious gems," are altogether due to the prophet's imagination. The mountain of the gods is now known to have been a prominent idea of the Babylonian religion; and there appears to have been a widespread notion that in the abode of the gods were treasures of gold and precious stones, jealously guarded by griffins, of which small quantities found their way into the possession of men. It is possible that fragments of these mythical notions may have reached the knowledge of Ezekiel during his sojourn in Babylon and been used by him to fill up his picture of the glories which surrounded the first estate of the king of Tyre. — Exp. Bib.

a Comp. Re. xvii. 10, xviii. 9.

"It is bad for an age to die rusting in its error, or even rusting in its truth." — Fairbairn.

b Joel iii. 4.

c Ge. x. 19.

"Accurate and careful detail, the minding of the common occasions and small things combined with general scope and vigor, is the secret of all the efficiency and success in the world. It is only thus that any disciple will become efficient in the service of his Master." — Horace Bushnell.

16—19. (16) filled . . violence, swift prosperity often leads to violence, cheating, and extortion. In haste to be rich, virtue and charity are often put aside. This is the only allusion in the three chapters to the wrong and oppression and the outrages on humanity which were the inevitable accompaniments of that greed of gain which had taken possession of the Tyrian community. will I cast, R. V., "have I cast," as profane, no longer to be regarded as sacred. I . . cherub, prob. "the cherub with spreading wings hath destroyed thee, driving thee from," etc. — Cam. B. The meaning seems to be that the prince of Tyre had his place in the abode of God until he defiled by the lust of riches the perfection in which he was created, then the cherub destroyed him, driving him from the mount of God. (17) brightness, or splendor, alluding to the luxuries wh. wealth encourages. lay . . kings, R. V., "have laid," as an example of the end of presumptuous pride. (18) iniquity . . traffic, wh. had become dishonest and overreaching. (19) astonished, at thy ruin.^a Note on vs. 18. — By a sudden change of metaphor the destruction of the city is also represented as a fire breaking out in the vitals of the prince and reducing his body to ashes—a conception which has not unnaturally suggested to some commentators the fable of the phoenix which was supposed periodically to immolate herself in a fire of her own kindling. — Exp. Bib.

20—23. (21) Zidon,^b the neighboring, but older^c Phœnician city. It was famous for its fishery, and increased in wealth after Tyre was humbled. (22) against thee, bec. of the idolatries wherewith the Zidonians had corrupted Israel. glorified, i. e. get me glory in the light of the peoples by the righteousness executed. (23) pestilence, another agent used in executing the Divine vengeance on nations. wounded .. judged, R. V., "wounded shall fall."

Pestilence and Blood.—This judgment by pestilence and sword can hardly be said to have been executed in the invasion by Nebuchadnezzar, seeing that Zidon submitted to him apparently without offering any serious resistance. But this threatening of pestilence and sword may point to the sufferings of the Zidonians at a later period of their history, in consequence of their revolt against the Persians, to whom they were then subject. Zidon was at that time a wealthy and flourishing city; and the revolt would probably have been successful but for the treachery of Tennes, their king, who, in fulfilment of a compact with Artaxerxes Ochus, the Persian monarch, betrayed into his "power one hundred of the most distinguished citizens of Zidon, who were all shot to death with javelins. Five hundred other citizens, who went out to the king with ensigns of supplication, shared the same fate; and by concert between Tennes and Mentor, the Persian troops were admitted within the gates, and occupied the city walls. The Zidonians, before the arrival of Ochus, had burnt their vessels to prevent any one leaving the town; and when they saw themselves surrounded by the Persian troops, they adopted the desperate resolution of shutting themselves up with their families, and setting fire each man to his own house (B. C. 351). Forty thousand persons are said to have perished in the flames."—Smith.

24—26. (24) pricking brier, "first ensnaring the Israelites to sin, and then being made the instrument of punishing them." See Nu. xxxiii. 55. The hostile nations are all to be removed for the benefit of Israel after the Restoration. (25) gathered .. scattered, here the Lord's mercy to Israel is set in contrast with His dealings with the surrounding nations. sanctified in them, i. e. in their return to Palestine. (26) build houses, Is. lxxv. 21. know .. God, this oft-repeated phrase is not a mere formula. The prophet's idea is that Jehovah does all, brings all calamities, causes all catastrophes and revolutions in states, and guides the fortunes of Israel in the sight of the nations, with one great design in view—to make himself, the true and only God, known to all mankind.—Cam. B.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-NINTH.

1—7. (1) tenth year, i. e. of the captivity. Jerusalem had, at this time, been besieged, but not taken, seven months were yet to elapse. (2) Pharaoh, the common name of the Eg. kings. This Pharaoh was Hophra, or Apries, in the Greek.^b (3) great dragon, Heb. tannim, prob. the crocodile,^c the chief creature of the Nile made a symbol of the king, suggests sluggish and unwieldy strength. midst .. rivers, the royal city, Sais, was situated in the Delta, among the many branches or streams of the Nile. river .. myself, the expression of Hophra's boastful pride.^d The Nile is the life and wealth of Egypt. The arrogance of Pharaoh, who is but the impersonation of the consciousness of the people, is blasphemy against Jehovah the one only true God. cf. xxviii. 2. (4) hooks, Job. xli. 2. fish .. rivers, a fig. for the people of the land. (5) thrown, etc., this was the fate of Hophra's army. gathered, i. e. buried. (6) staff of reed, a staff wh. proved but a reed when leaned upon. The two sins for which Egypt, represented by Pharaoh, is chastised are, first, pride of heart which recognizes no God above it, which says, My River is mine, I have made it (xxix. 3); and second, the deceptive fascination which the imposing and pretentious power of the Nile valley exerted on the people of God, seducing them away from trust in Jehovah alone (cf. Is. xxx. 1—5, xxxi. 1—3), and proving always a delusive support (xxix. 6, 7)—Cam. B. (7) break, and so utterly fail the Jews in the hour of their need. be at a stand, better, "to shake."

Egypt.—Egypt was famous for her learning and her science. Long before the Babylonian and Persian astronomical science arose by the Euphrates, there were schools of literature, philosophy, and physical science on the banks of the Nile. It was a help in the training of Israel's great deliverer that he was educated in the greatest centre of light of

"He preaches Christ best, who lifts Him up most."

Christianity is itself a living breathing presence, not a mere dull, dead thing; a life, not a book; a Person, and that Person our Friend and Saviour, our Reconciliation and our Rest, our hope and our Victory.

—Hom. Com.

a "This transition from the enemies to the people of God is made to close the portion of the prophecies against the heathen, which concerns the nations in the immediate vicinity of the Israelites, 'them that despise them round about them, before passing to the more distant Egypt.'"—Spk. Com.

b "The most powerful king of Egypt next to Psammetichus, whose great grandson he was. He besieged and captured Gaza (Jer. xlvii. 1), and attacked Sidon, and encountered the king of Tyre in an engagement by sea, and recovered much of the influence wh. Eg. had lost since its defeat at Carchemish by Nebuchadnezzar, in the fourth year of Jehoiakim (2 Kl. xxiv. 7; Je. xli. 2)." —Wordsworth.

c On Roman coins the crocodile is the emblem of Egypt.

d Herodotus says that this king persuaded himself that even the gods could not dispossess him of his kingdom.

a "Prob. Nebuc. was encouraged by the revolt of Amasis against Pharaoh and Hophra, to invade Egypt, and was thus enabled to subdue it with greater ease."
—Wilkinson.

b Ge. x. 14; Is. xl. 11.

c "Upon its revolting from the Persians it was finally subdued by Ochus, the Persian emperor, and has been governed by strangers ever since."
—Lowth.

"On the failure of the Persian empire, it became subject to the Macedonians, after them to the Romans, then to the Saracens, then to the Mamelukes, and it is now a province of the Turkish empire."
—Prideaux.

"Accurst ambition, how dearly have I bought you!"—Dryden.

"Liberty is not the right to do what one wills but freedom to do what one ought."
—Fairbairn.

"A little religion makes us afraid."—J. H. Newman.

his age (Acts vii. 22). Yet the great intelligence of ancient Egypt did not preserve its sons from gross moral corruption, and no worldly wisdom was able to provide against the descending arm of judgment. Culture will not dispense with the need of conscience. University honors are not passports to heaven. Knowledge and thought will not shield the sinful against the wrath of future judgment.—Pul. Com.

8—11. (8) a sword, fig. for invasion of Chaldæan army.^a (9) because, etc., i. e. it must be distinctly understood that the judgment will come upon him for his impiety and his insolence. (10) tower of Syene, or modern Assouan, near to which are the First Cataracts. (11) forty years, an ideal number, signifying that the time was to be short. (12) scatter, etc., "the scattering was to be mainly the dissipation of their power."

Egypt's Desolation.—Egypt could still be a country, though shorn of the glory and power which had made her a snare to the people of God. The geographical isolation of the land made it impossible that she should lose her individuality amongst the nations of the world. Accordingly the prophet does not contemplate an utter annihilation of Egypt, but only a temporary chastisement succeeded by her permanent degradation to the lowest rank among the kingdoms.—Exp. Bib.

13—16. (13) gather, etc., comp. Je. xlvi. 26. (14) land of Pathros, the Thebaid, or Upper Egypt.^b habitation, R. V., "birth." base kingdom, in a depressed or low state: poss. meaning a tributary kingdom. (15) basest of kingdoms, travelers still attest the "deplorable and debased state of this country."^c (16) confidence, etc., referring to the disposition to trust Egypt in the conflict with Nebuchadnezzar. look after, or seek aid from. they shall know, i. e. the house of Israel.

The Meager Restoration of Egypt.—I. God has mercy on the heathen. II. There are irreparable losses which are brought about by sin. 1. The temporal consequences of sin are unavoidable; 2. Without a return to God the worst consequences of sin must continue. III. It is well that false grounds of confidence should be exposed. 1. When the nature of false hopes is exposed we are driven to the truth for refuge; 2. The ruin of false hopes is a perpetual warning.—Adeney.

Egyptian Splendors.—The great temple of Karnak has twelve principal entrances, each of which is composed of several propyla and colossal gateways, besides other buildings attached to them, in themselves larger than most other temples. One of the propyla is entirely of granite, adorned with the most finished hieroglyphics. On each side of many of them there have been colossal statues of basalt and granite, from twenty to thirty feet in height, some of which are in the attitude of sitting, while others are standing erect. A double range of colossal sphinxes extends across the plain from the temple at Luxor (a distance of nearly two miles), which terminates at Karnak in a most magnificent gateway, fifty feet in height which still remains unimpaired. From this gateway the great temple was approached by an avenue of fifty lofty columns, one of which only now remains, leading to a vast propylon in front of the portico. The interior of this portico presents a coup d'œil, which surpasses any other that is to be found among the remains of Egyptian architecture. Twelve columns, sixty feet high, and of a beautiful order, form an avenue through the centre of the building, like the nave of a Gothic cathedral, and they are flanked on each side by sixty smaller ones, ranged in six rows, which are seen through the intervals in endless perspective.—Horner.

17—21. (17) seven and twentieth, see vs. 1. This is a later prophecy. 570 B. C., sixteen years after the destruction of Jerusalem, inserted here to show that Nebuchadnezzar would fulfil the previous threatenings on Egypt. (18) serve, etc., not merely to carry out a great undertaking, but to fulfil a Divine commission against Tyre. It was a long and exhausting siege of thirteen years. head . . peeled, figs. to express the hard service of the soldiers, who carried on their heads and shoulders rock and rubbish to build a causeway to the city. no wages, bec. the inhabitants succeeded in removing their treasures. (19) give . . Egypt, compensating Nebuc. with the spoils of Egypt. take, etc., i. e. deport, carry away. (20) his labour, R. V., "recompence," i. e. as the hire for his labor in the siege of Tyre. for me, as agents in fulfilling My purposes. (21) that day, of Egypt's overthrow. horn, Ps. cxxxii. 17,^a R. V., "an horn to bud forth unto the house of Israel;" "horn" a symbol of power. bud forth, i. e. to increase, to show itself. opening, etc., i. e. freedom to speak.^b The prophet was ready now to resume his labors after a silence of many years.

Service Done for God Rewarded (vss. 17—20).—These words furnish us with three reflections. I. The disposal of states and nations is the work of Divine providence. II. That men may serve God really, when they do not serve Him by design. III. We shall never be losers by anything we do for God.—W. Jay.

CHAPTER THE THIRTIETH.

1—5. This prophecy was uttered with ch. xxix. 1—16, about seven months before the fall of Jerusalem. (2) Howl ye, i. e. ye Egyptians. woe worth,^a or alas! (3) near, a time for the manifestation of the divine judgments, Joel ii. 2, 3. cloudy day, darkened with calamities. time.. heathen, or for judging the nations. (4) pain, R. V., "anguish." (5) Ethiopia, etc., Heb. Cush, Phut, and Lud.^b mingled people,^c the mercenary forces of Egypt from various nations. Chub, the site is unknown.^d men.. league, i. e. all allied lands in league with Egypt.

A Cloudy Day.—I. Prognostications of a cloudy day. 1. The laws of God are changeless and eternal; 2. Clouds do not come without causes. II. The experience of a cloudy day. 1. A cloudy day is dark; 2. A cloudy day obscures the heavens; 3. A cloudy day blots out the beauty of the earth. III. The consequences of a cloudy day. 1. The cloudy day may usher in a storm; 2. The cloudy day may break in refreshing showers; 3. The cloudy day may be followed by a bright day.—Adeney.

Egypt.—Egypt was one of the most ancient and one of the mightiest of kingdoms, and the researches of the traveler are still directed to explore the unparalleled memorials of its power. While the vestiges of other ancient monarchies can hardly be found amid the moldering ruins of their cities, those artificial mountains, visible at the distance of thirty miles, the pyramids of Egypt, without a record of their date, have withstood, unimpaired, all the ravages of time. No country ever produced so long a catalogue of kings. The learning of the Egyptians was proverbial. The number of their cities, and the population of their country, as recorded by ancient historians, almost surpass credibility. Nature and art united in rendering it a most fertile region. It was called the granary of the world. Yet the knowledge of all its greatness and glory deterred not the Jewish Prophets from declaring that Egypt would become "a base kingdom, and never exalt itself any more among the nations."—Keith.

6—9. (6) They.. uphold, perhaps a ref. to the idols of Egypt. pride.. down, travelers tell how impressive are the ruins of Egypt.^e tower, etc., see ch. xxix. 10. (7) desolate, etc., ch. xxix. 12. (8) set a fire, a fig. of Divine judgment.^f (9) messengers, etc., Is. xviii. 1, 2. Egypt being the chief embodiment of secular power on the basis of pagan religion, the sudden collapse of her might is equivalent to a judgment on heathenism in general, and the moral effect of it conveys to the world a demonstration of the omnipotence of the one true God whom she had ignored and defied.—Exp. B. careless Ethiopians, they were dwelling in fancied security.^g

Egypt.—Egypt became entirely subject to the Persians about three hundred and fifty years previous to the Christian era. It was afterwards subdued by the Macedonians, and was governed by the Ptolemies for the space of two hundred and ninety-four years; until about thirty years before Christ, it became a province of the Roman empire. It continued long in subjection to the Romans—tributary first to Rome, and afterwards to Constantinople. It was transferred, A. D. 641, to the dominion of the Saracens. In 1250 the Mamelukes deposed their rulers, and usurped the command of Egypt. A mode of government the most singular and surprising that ever existed on earth was established and maintained. Each successive ruler was raised to supreme authority, from being a stranger

^a 1 Sa. ii. 1; Job xvi. 15.

^b "When thy predictions shall have come to pass, thy words shall be more heeded."

—Fausset.

^c "The eagle-winged pride of sky-aspiring and ambitious thoughts."

—Shakespeare.

^d Comp. Sir W. Scott's "Woe worth the chase; woe worth the day, that cost thy life, my gallant grey."

^e Je. xli. 9.

^f Je. xxv. 20.

^g The Cubli are mentioned by Ptolemy as a people of Marcotis, a province of Egypt.

"He only is advancing in life whose heart is getting softer, whose blood warmer, whose brain quicker, whose spirit is entering into living peace. And the men who have this life in them are the true lords or kings of the earth—they, and they only."—John Ruskin.

"The pleasure that we cannot enjoy to the glory of the Lord will leave the ashes of bitterness behind it."—W. T. Ellis.

^e "Thebes appeared to me like entering a city of giants, who, after a long conflict, were all destroyed, leaving the ruins as the only proofs of their former existence."

—Belzoni.

^f Ps. lxxviii. 63; Je. vii. 20; Am. i. 4.

^g "The cataracts interposing between them and Egypt should not save them."—Fausset.

Je. viii. 11; Zep. ii. 15.

"He who would avoid sin must not stand at the door of temptation."—Anon.

a "I will destroy the strength of Egypt; the metaphor is taken from the decrease or falling of the Nile, upon whose overflowing all the plenty and prosperity of Egypt depended."

—Lowth.

"Did you ever feel the joy of winning a soul for Christ? I tell you there is no joy out of heaven which excels it—the grasp of the hand of one who says, 'By your means I was turned from darkness.'" — C. H. Spurgeon.

a Zec. xiii. 2.

b "Famous for the temple of Ptah (the god of fire), and for the worship of Osiris and Apsis (from the conjunction of which came Osiri-apis, or Serapis), and the centre of Egyptian idolatry."—Wordsworth.

Comp. Is. xix. 3; Je. ii. 16; Ho. ix. 6.

c Ps. lxxviii. 12.

d Je. xli. 25.

e Ex. xvi. 1.

f Ge. xli. 45; Je. xliii. 13; Ho. iv. 15.

"What is meant by our neighbor we cannot doubt; it is every one with whom we are brought into contact, he or she, whosoever it be, whom we have any means of helping." — Dean Stanley.

and a slave. No son of the former ruler—no native of Egypt succeeded to the sovereignty; but a chief was chosen from among a new race of imported slaves. When Egypt became tributary to the Turks in 1517, the Mamelukes retained much of their power, and every pacha was an oppressor and a stranger.—Keith.

10—12. (10) multitude, or large population. Egypt was noted for the swift increase of her people. (11) terrible .. nations, ch. xxviii. 7. (12) rivers dry, i. e. the artificial canals constructed for purposes of irrigation, and threading the whole land. This indicates a time of drought which would prepare the way for the invaders."

A Divine Instrument.—The power that was to crush Egypt was already hovering over the fated nation. The vast populations of the Nile were to be opposed by a multitude of strangers whose warlike exploits had made them "the terrible of the nations;" the military genius of Pharaoh-Hophra was to come into conflict with Nebuchadnezzar, a still more able and victorious warrior. It was not the first time the great Babylonish monarch had come in contact with the arms of Egypt. Before his accession, while Crown Prince, he had fought the great battle of Carchemish, which expelled Pharaoh-Necho from Western Asia. During the siege of Jerusalem he had been disturbed by the attempt of Pharaoh-Necho to relieve that city, and during the siege of Troy, Egypt again interfered to help the Phoenicians. Nebuchadnezzar chafed under these annoyances; the proud prestige and pretensions of Egypt roused his envy and wrath, and he vowed to be revenged. All the time Jehovah was preparing him to be the agent to punish Egypt, and a rebellion against Pharaoh-Hophra by Amasis, one of his officers, presented a favorable opportunity. Gathering his army of veterans, inured to warfare and flushed with recent victories, Nebuchadnezzar invaded Egypt and utterly subdued it from Migdol to Syene, the extreme frontiers of the kingdom, creating a horrible devastation, from which it did not recover for forty years. The Babylonish king knew not that he was simply the instrument of Jehovah in inflicting well-merited punishment, and thus fulfilling the words of the Divinely-inspired prophet. Whenever a nation reaches the crisis of its infamy, Divine justice fails not to provide the means of adequate retribution.—Hom. Com.

13—19. (13) destroy their idols, a idolatry is the great sin wh. calls for Divine vengeance on nations. Noph, or Memphis, a prince, i. e. one of a native dynasty. (14) Pathros, Upper Egypt; ch. xxix. 14. Zoan, or Tanis, No, or Thebes. (16) Sin, or Pelusium. (17) Aven, or Heliopolis. Pi-beseth, the Bubastis of Herodotus, the seat of one of the annual festivals. Egyptian "Pa Bast," house of Bast or Pasht, the goddess to whom the cat was sacred, and who herself was represented under the aspect of the cat. The cat mummies were here preserved. The place lay on the Pelusiac arm of the Nile; the ruins, bearing the name Tell Basta, are not far from the modern Zagazig.—Cam. B. (18) Tehaphnehes, or Tahpanhes, about 30 miles S. W. of the ancient Pelusium, Je. ii. 16. break .. yokes, i. e. those imposed by Egypt. cloud, vs. 3. daughters, literally, or said figuratively of her towns. (19) Thus, in this thorough and complete manner.

Pharaoh-Hophra, the king of Egypt referred to in this paragraph, was a man of considerable capacity and enterprise. During the first years of his reign he subdued the island of Cyprus, besieged the city of Sidon by land and sea, and took it and made himself master of Phœnicia and Palestine. Elated with success, his pride knew no bounds, and he insanely boasted that it was not in the power of the gods to dethrone him. Libya, harassed by the Greeks, appealed for assistance. He despatched an army for their deliverance, but the Egyptians were disastrously defeated. It was whispered he had sent the Egyptian army into Libya to destroy it, and by surrounding himself with Greek mercenaries he was seeking to rule Egypt as a tyrant. His subjects rose in rebellion. Hophra sent Amasis, one of his officers, to quell the revolt; but the soldiers crowned him with a helmet and made him king. Hophra was compelled to retire into Upper Egypt, where he defended himself for some years, and Amasis made himself master of the rest of his dominions. The army of Nebuchadnezzar, taking advantage of these intestine troubles, swept down upon Egypt and wrecked it from end to end. Egypt was made tributary to Babylon, and Nebuchadnezzar, having appointed Amasis as his viceroy, returned to his capital laden with the spoils of victory. As soon as the great king had departed Hophra emerged from his obscurity, and gathering an army of 30,000 mercenaries, made war against Amasis. The royal army was routed, Hophra taken prisoner, and was strangled by the populace.—Hom. Com.

20—23. (20) eleventh year, four months before fall of Jerusalem, comp. ch. xxix. 1, xxx. 1. (21) broken the arm, by a defeat in war, a repulse to the defeat of Pharaoh by the Chaldeans when he undertook to aid the Jews during this last siege. Pharaoh, i. e. Hophra, as in ch. xxix. roller, or bandage. (22) arms, both of them,* to render him utterly helpless. (23) scatter, ch. xxix. 12.

Self-destruction.—As Noah was drunk with his own wine, Goliath beheaded with his own sword, the rose destroyed by the canker bred in itself, the apple by the worm, Agrippina killed by Nero to whom she gave breath, so we are undone by ourselves, our destruction is of ourselves. The bitter waters of Marah and Meribah that we drink so deep of are of our own mingling and embittering; the rods that scourge us are of our own making. Sin, like a friar, whips itself; punishment is connate, innate to sin. We may thank our own folly for our own bane.—Spencer.

24—26. (24) strengthen, so that he may fully execute My mission. groan, as one dying of his wounds. (25) know . . Lord, bec. God has a high spiritual purpose, even in His judgments of heathen nations. scatter, ch. xxix. 12.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-FIRST.

1—9. (1) third month, rather more than a month before Jerus. was taken.^a (2) multitude, or people over whom he reigns. Like king like people. (3) Assyrian, the word "asshur" here is the name of a tree. We should therefore read, "Behold a T'asshur, a cedar in Lebanon," etc.; and the answer to the question of vs. 2 is that the position of Egypt is as unrivalled among the kingdoms of the world as this stately tree among the trees of the forest.—Exp. B. cedar, the kingly among trees. shadowing shroud, or garment of leaves casting a wide shadow. thick boughs, better as LXX., "the clouds." (4) waters, the Nile and its canals. deep, i. e. deep river; with its shallower streams and canals. With Egypt the river was the source of fertility. (5) therefore, bec. so well nourished.^b shot forth, "shot them forth." (6) fowls, etc., comp. Da. iv. 12. The figs. of this vs. intimate that other nations sought the protection of Egypt. (7) fair, or beautiful, as a tree, and as a nation. (8) garden of God, paradise.^c hide him, i. e. or "equal him." chestnut, or plane tree. (9) envied him, reference is to the feeling of surrounding nations towards Egypt. "All the kings of the East envied him and his greatness."

The Mighty Cedar in Lebanon.—Pharaoh, the impersonation of the spirit and might of Egypt, was a lofty cedar, with spreading branches, and its top in the clouds. The allegory is easily read. The mighty cedar burying its head in the clouds, is the proud king and his powerful state, aspiring to a greatness that belongs to heaven. The fowls and beasts lodging under the shadow of the tree are the nations of the earth seeking his protection and subject to him (Dan. iv. 12). The trees in the garden of God are other mighty states impersonated in their rulers. The universal meaning which was given to the judgment on Egypt by representing it as the day of the Lord in ch. xxx. is suggested here in other ways, by the imposing height of the cedar, unapproachable by other trees in the garden of God; by the fowls and beasts of the field lodging in the tree—all nations seeking the protection of the Pharaoh; and by the shock which all nature receives when the great tree is cut down and flung upon the ground; and finally by the commotion occasioned in Sheol when Pharaoh descends among the dead (ch. xxxii.; Is. xiv.).—Cam. Bib.

10—14. (10) thou . . he, observe the blending of reference to the tree and the king. thick boughs, "clouds." heart is lifted up, herein lay the sin that brought the judgment. God did not visit for the prosperity,

* The king of Babylon had previously dispossessed the king of Egypt of all his new conquests. This was the breaking of one arm. The attack on Egypt itself was the breaking of the other.

"Infallibility is the inability to confess error."—Fairbairn.

Two things are enough: 1. Never to set a bad example, and thereby never to be ashamed of Jesus Christ and His gospel. 2. To do whatever a real love of God requires without affectation or display."—Fenelon.

"Ambition is the mind's immodesty."—Davenant.

^a Je. xxxix. 2.

^b Comp. Ps. 1. 8.

^c Ge. ii. 8; Ps. lxxx. 10.

"Beneficence, justice, protection, encouragements that subjects need and good princes disperse among them. So the deep filled this king, and he sent out his streams to all his subjects in his kingdom."—Pool.

"We should ask to be free from temptations of pleasure and comfort, no less than those of pain and sorrow."—Mary Lyon.

a Pr. viii. 13, xl. 2, xvi. 18.
 b "Called the 'mighty one' (El, a name of God), bec. he was God's representative and instrument of judgment."
 —Fausset.

c "Thy destruction shall be a warning to other kings and potentates, to deter them from priding themselves in the time of their prosperity."
 —Lowth.

d "The deep, the source of Egypt's prosperity (vs. 4) was made to mourn, being dried up, instead of giving forth its waters, its glad abundance."
 —Spk. Com.

e "As circumcision was an object of mocking to thee, thou shalt lie in the midst of the uncircumcised, slain by the sword."
 —Grotius.

a "Jerusalem was by this time overthrown, and Amasis was beginning his revolt against Pharaoh Hophra."
 —Fausset.

b "Pharaoh should have been like the king of beasts, but he is a mere sea-monster. There is strong irony here, bec. the Eg. king was proud of the comparison between himself and the mighty crocodile."
 —Spk. Com.

"The first step in the art of painting is to learn the value of shadow; the first step in the art of living is to learn the value of misfortune."
 —Ivan Panin.

a Carrying on the figure of the crocodile.

but for the pride which the prosperity engendered.^a I have delivered, R. V., "I will even deliver." (11) mighty one, here referring to Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon.^b heathen, "nations." (12) strangers, the Chaldean invaders. his shadow, vs. 3, 6. (13) ruin, i. e. fallen trunk and branches. remain, R. V., "dwell." (14) to the end, i. e. this is the design of the Divine judgments.^c stand . . . height, rely on themselves, on their own height.

Conceits of Pride.—When a proud man thinks best of himself, then God and man think worst of him; all his glory is but like a vapor, which climbeth as though it would go up to heaven, but when it comes to a little height, it falls down again, and never ascends more. So Adam thought that the fair apple should make him like his Maker, but God resisted his pride, and that apple made him like the serpent that tempted him with it. Absalom thought that rebellion would make him a king, but God resisted his pride, and his rebellion hanged him on a tree.—H. Smith.

15—18. (15) went down, ch. xxvi. 15. covered the deep, as a mourner covers himself with sackcloth.^d great waters, or flood-waters. Lebanon to mourn, (16) shake, with fear. to hell, "to Sheol;" note the sense in wh. a nation can be said to go down to Sheol; it is a fig. of shameful and hopeless desolation. comforted, ref. is to tributary peoples, or other great nations already overthrown in measure comforted bec. this great nation shares their fate. (17) into hell, vs. 16. his arm, auxiliaries, used for his purposes. (18) thou like, comp. vs. 2. The application is now made to Egypt. uncircumcised,^e the term is applied to those slain w. the sword and buried indiscriminately w. no funeral rites. ch. xxviii. 10, xxxii. 19, 20.

"Caused Lebanon to Mourn."—The prophet's representation naturally is not quite consistent. The home of Pharaoh, as a cedar, is Lebanon, but it is the waters of Egypt, magnified here into the "deep" absolutely, that nourish him. Hence both the deep and Lebanon, with all the trees thereon, mourn and faint (Is. li. 20) over his fall. What the language primarily expresses is the idea of the world-wide importance of the Egyptian power, so that, as the greatest forces of nature minister to its growth, all creation is affected by its fall. Cf. xxxii. 9, 10.—Camb. Bible.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-SECOND.

1—5. (1) twelfth year, etc., prob. one year and seven months after the destruction of Jerusalem.^a (2) lamentation, or dirge. Thou art, etc., R. V., "Thou wast likened unto" i. e. flatterers, and courtiers made Pharaoh think himself to be the king of beasts, whereas he was in reality only a crocodile in his own river.^b camest forth, etc., R. V., "brakest forth." Ewald translates, "thou didst spout with thy nostrils." The thought suggested is Egypt's activity in war. troubledst . . . feet, as a crocodile on landing and going forth. (3) spread . . . net, ch. xii. 13. with a company, i. e. the Chaldeans. Their invasion was God's net, i. e. God's judgment. (4) leave, etc., comp. ch. xxix. 5. (5) thy height, fig. taken from the high cedar, wh. when prostrate, shall seem to fill up the valleys.

Princes Compared to Lions (vs. 2).—Nothing is more common, in the East, than the comparing princes to lions; but the comparing them to crocodiles, if possessed of naval power, or strong by a watery situation, has hardly ever been mentioned. D'Herbelot, however, cites an Eastern poet, who, celebrating the prowess of Gelaeddin, surnamed Mankberni, and Khovarezme Shah, a most valiant Persian prince, said, "He was dreadful as a lion in the field, and not less terrible in the water than a crocodile." The power of the ancient kings of Egypt seems to be represented after the same manner, by the Prophet Ezekiel, ch. xxix. 3, "Behold I am against thee, Pharaoh, king of Egypt, the great dragon (the great crocodile) that lieth in the midst of his rivers, which hath said, My river is mine own, and I have made it myself."—Harmer.

6—10. (6) water . . . blood, indicating the abundance of the slain. land . . . swimmest, or the land of thy swimming.^a The land watered by the Nile. (7) put thee out, R. V., "extinguish," as a candle is put out. Pharash is figured here as a star. comp. Isa. xiv. 12, "How art thou fallen from heaven, O shining one, morning star!" (8) set darkness, so that everything shall look dark and dismal.^a (9) vex, etc., trouble terribly by the story wh. the exiles shall carry of Egypt's utter desolation. (10) amazed at thee, ch. xxvi. 16, xxvii. 35, xxx. 9. brandish, or flourish.

Darkness. 1. A symbol of destruction and mourning. 2. A proof of the awfulness and completeness of the destruction. 3. Suggests how all the forces of nature are subservient to the purpose of an avenging Deity.—Horn. Com.

11—16. (11) sword, emblem of the destructive power. (12) pomp, the splendid temples, palaces, etc., for which Egypt was famous. (13) destroy .. beasts, comp. ch. xxix. 11.^b "Henceforth Pharaoh was no longer to flood other peoples with his overwhelming forces." (14) deep, R. V., "make their waters clear" like oil, i.e. smoothly, peacefully.^c "The waters of Egypt, no more troubled by the foot of man or beast, shall run smooth like oil." (15) then .. Lord, i.e. this shall be the gracious issue of My judgments. (16) lamentation, vs. 2.

Unhappiness of Ambition.—Look at the tender climbing plant of summer: it takes hold of some object, and creeps along upward till its tendrils shoot high and beautifully into the air; but the prop is taken away, and there it stands, reaching out its fingers for something to fasten upon: full of life and vigor still, but sinking because its support is taken away, and falling like a worthless weed to the ground. Such, even at the very moment of its greatest vigor, is often the state of those who seek worldly greatness. Look at all history: when were its great men so wretched, as when they had attained the highest point of exaltation! "He has gained everything," said a companion of Napoleon, when he was in the zenith of prosperity, "and yet he is unhappy."—Lewis.

17—21. vss. 17—32, Dirge of the Vision of Hades, which is the most weird in all literature. (17) the month, prob. the twelfth month,^d a fortnight later than vss. 1—16. (18) wail comp. vss. 2, 16; cast .. down, i.e. foretell its destruction. nether parts .. pit fig. for utter and hopeless destruction.^e (19) pass, or surpass. Other nations have perished, so shalt thou.^f uncircumcised, i.e. those dishonored and profaned in death, slain by the sword and deprived of proper burial. (20) delivered .. sword, better, "the sword is put forth." draw her, like carcasses to the grave addressed to the warders of Sheol. (21) The strong, etc.: this vs. represents the great tyrants in Sheol coming to meet and welcome the king of Egypt and his auxiliaries.^g

Sympathetic Sorrow.—I. Sympathetic sorrow is called for by the troubles of our fellow-men. II. It is especially required by the world's sin. 1. We should grieve more over sin than over external calamity. 2. We should grieve over sin rather than coldly condemn it. III. Sympathetic sorrow is a ministering angel of mercy. 1. It is a source of consolation. 2. It is an inspiration of deliverance.—Pul. Com.

Dirge Over Egypt and Its Multitude (vss. 17—32).—It is a funeral dirge primarily over the multitude or nation of Egypt; and so in the case of the other nations referred to, Asshur, Elam, and the rest. These peoples are all gone down to Sheol, uncircumcised, slain with the sword. There in the world of the dead each people has an abode to itself. Around one chief grave the graves of the general mass are gathered. The chief grave is probably that of the prince, though the prince is considered the genius, the embodiment of the spirit and being of the nation. The prophet regards the nations, even when no more existing on earth, as still having a subsistence in the world of the dead (cf. on Sodom, ch. xvi.). They are beings, who, having once lived, continue throughout all time. Though passed from the stage of history they still subsist in Sheol.—Camb. Bib.

22—25. (22) Asshur, i.e. the king of Assyria. his graves, the masc. or fem. gender is used as the king or country is thought of. (23) sides .. pit,^a R. V., "uttermost parts," i. e. the depths of the pit. terror, which Asshur caused among the nations by his might. (24) Elam,^b in Persia; an auxiliary of Assyria, conquered by Nebuchadnezzar.^c borne their shame, "the just retribution of their lawless pride." (25) bed, a final bed, or a grave.

^a So brilliant is the shining of the stars in the East that a great horror of darkness is represented by their being covered.

^b "The picture is ideally true, not to be interpreted by the letter; the political ascendancy of Egypt was to cease with the Chaldaean conquest."
—Fairbairn.

^c "No longer shall they descend violently, as the overflowing Nile, on other countries, but shall be still and sluggish in political action."
—Fausset.

^d vs. 1. The LXX. say the first month.

^e Eze. xxxi. 14; Is. xiv. 15.

^f "What reason hast thou now to prefer thyself before others? Since thou shalt undergo the same fate with the worst of them,"
—Lowth.

^g Is. xiv. 9.

"Vaulting ambition which o'erleaps itself."—Shakespeare.

"Genuine humility brings to elevation its only corrective. It fixes the eye on the lowliness which in all human greatness is present with the greatness," —Hengstenberg.

^a Is. xiv. 15.

^b Ge. xiv. 1; Is. xxii. 6.

^c Je. xlii. 34—38.

"The Elamites were a fierce and warlike people. In the records of Assurbanipal we have a detailed account of five campaigns against Elam, and his final triumph over Elam seems to have been one of his proudest boasts."

—Spk. Com.

d "Northern nations; the Moschi and Tibareni, between the Black and Caspian Seas."

—Fausset.

To live in the presence of great truths and eternal laws, to be led by permanent ideals—that is what keeps a man patient when the world ignores him, and calm and unspoiled when the world praises him.—Balzac.

a Is. lviii. 1; 1 Cor. xiv. 8.

"It is the duty of each to be ever in a wakeful, listening attitude. The look-out on board the ocean steamer and the advanced night-picket of a slumbering army has each a responsible post. The safety of both vessel and army depends upon their keenness of vision and delicacy of hearing. The duties of the civil and spiritual watchman are alike in demanding a highly sensitive alertness and heroic fidelity."

Hom. Com.

b "Think not that bec. the walls and gates of Jerus. may be destroyed, thy duty as a watchman to the house of Israel will cease. No; from that very time it will have new obligations, and thou wilt have new admonitions, consolations, and promises to give. The fall of Jerusalem will be a renewal of thy commission." — Wordsworth. c Je. ii. 25.

Companionship in Woe.—I. Duty oftentimes is exceedingly painful. II. Sin always leads to terrible degradation. III. Self-esteem is no safeguard against just retribution. IV. Association with others will be determined by moral affinities. V. The ruin of others is impotent to deter from sin. VI. Self-inflation is the prelude to eternal shame. VII. God's terror is supreme over man's.—Davies.

26—29. (26) Meshech, ch. xxvii. 13. Tubal, ch. xxvii. 13.^a (27) hell, Sheol, the Underworld... iniquities... bones, comp. expression "with their sins upon their heads." (28) thou, i.e. Pharaoh himself must prepare himself broken, by a violent death. (29) Edom, ch. xxv. 12. with their might, R. V., "in their might."

The Burial of Warriors (vs. 27).—The ancients, in every part of the world, were accustomed to inter their warriors in complete armor. We are informed by Chardin that the Mingrelian soldier sleeps with his sword under his head, and his arms by his side; and he is buried in the same manner, his arms being placed in the same position. The allusion of Ezekiel to this ancient custom is extremely clear.—Paxton.

30—32. (30) princes.. north, i.e. of Syria. Zidonians, who shared the fate of Tyre. their terror, R. V., "in the terror wh. they caused by their might they are ashamed." (31) comforted, with the miserable comfort that others have to suffer even as he. (32) my terror, God making these nations marked examples of His vengeance on iniquity. Cam. B. "for he caused his terror."

A Vision of the Unseen World.—I. The prophet's vision itself. II. Its historical parallel. III. Its personal application. 1. A common impending fate. 2. A poetical consolation. 3. The real redeeming thought, viz. that the future to which we look forward, as the disciples and followers of Christ, is neither the dark grave in the cemetery nor the little less inviting Sheol of Hebrew thought, but the home of the blessed in the near presence of God, where life is free and full and pure, the mansions of the Father's house.—Clarkson.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-THIRD.

Ch. xxxiii—xxxix. form a section of the Prophecy which deals with Israel's Restoration and Eternal Security. The greatness of the blow had stunned them, and, as the prophet had foreshewn (xxiv. 23), a stupor had fallen on them. Yet the Lord had not made a full end of Israel. The old era was closed, but a new era was about to open, and a new Israel about to arise. It is of this new era that the prophet has now to speak, and of the hopes of the new Israel and of the conditions of being embraced in it.—Cam. B.

1—6. (2) the sword, God's judgment by a hostile army. coasts, or borders; put generally for "their country." R. V., "from among them." watchman, to warn of the enemy's approach. Watchmen were placed in turrets on the city walls, or in outposts. (3) blow, etc.,^a this was the appointed signal. (4) blood.. head, i.e. he must bear the responsibility himself, and cannot accuse the watchman. (5) deliver his soul, i.e. preserve his life, by adequate defence, or by timely flight. (6) taken.. iniquity, so comes under judgment. blood.. require, i.e. the watchman must answer to me for his unfaithfulness and its consequences.

The True Watchman (vs. 6).—I. The true watchman's vision of his work. He sees—I. It entails great responsibility on himself; 2. Involves the greatest results to his hearers; 3. Utters the emotions of God; 4. Proclaims both the hope and the method of man's improvement. II. The true watchman's vision of the conduct of others. He sees—I. The gross sins of many of them; 2. The hypocrisy of many more.—W. R. Thomas.

7—11. (7) thee a watchman, ch. iii. 17.^b (8) surely die, i.e. by a violent death. "The qualification, if thou dost not repent, is supposed." (9) delivered thy soul, from the responsibility of his doom. (10) If our, etc. R. V., "Our transgressions are upon us." pine.. them, ch. xxiv. 23. These are the words of persons despairing of God's mercy, and thence taking encouragement to go on in sin,^c while they harden their heart against the prophet's instructions. The chief task for Ezek. was to change this attitude of sullen impenitence into hopefulness and submission as they learn the possibility and conditions of Divine forgiveness. (11) no pleasure, etc., 2 Sa. xiv. 15; Eze. xviii. 32. God desires men to live; the past is not irrevocable.

A Solemn Question.—"Why will ye die?" The death to which this question relates is not temporal death, which is unavoidable; it is death eternal. 1. Do you think that it is imaginary? 2. Do you think that it is a trivial evil? 3. Do you think that it is uncertain in its occurrence? 4. Do you think that it is imposed upon you by an unalterable decree? 5. Do you think that the Divinely-appointed method of escape from it is not satisfactory? 6. Do you think that on a view of the whole circumstances it is to be preferred?—G. Brooks.

Mercy Divine and Human.—I have seen the life-buoy spun out to a drowning man, and, amid the crowd on the pier that gazed in horror, there was none, as they watched its course over the roaring waves, but wished in his heart that it might reach its mark. Nor is it only that God is "willing that all should come to Him, and live." What mother but would open her door who heard the knocking, and recognized the well-known voice of some poor, fallen child, that had sunk down there amid the winter drift, and cried, with failing breath, O mother, mother dear, open and let me in. And who thinks so ill of God as to believe that when He hears such a cry at the door of mercy, He will not rise to let us and to welcome us in!—T. Guthrie.

12—16. (12) righteousness, etc., ch. xviii. 24, 26, 27. The past life does not of necessity determine the future either in itself or in the judgment of God. Man is free to repent and live; to this end God punishes sin. (13) live, i.e. "enjoy the favor of God and have this favor reflected in outward felicity." This principle of individual responsibility is not to prevail in the old order, but in the new epoch wh. is just about to be inaugurated. trust to, or lean upon, think the good will outweigh his evil. (14) lawful and right, or judgment and justice. (15) restore the pledge, ch. xviii. 7. give . . robbed,^a make the full restitution which is the sign of a true penitence. walk . . life, ch. xx. 11. (16) mentioned, R. V., "remembered against" ch. xviii. 22.

Past Righteousness will not Excuse Present Sin.—We are judged chiefly, at all events, by what we are, rather than by what we were. Moreover, there is no possibility of our having acquired an extra stock of merit in the past which we can set off against our present failings. We never have a balance on the credit side of our account with Heaven. An employer cares little for old testimonials. He must see a certificate of character up to date. If a man has borne an excellent reputation for years, and at last breaks down and disgraces himself, he is said to have "lost his character." His good name in the past now counts for nothing. It is utterly gone. Now, the practical warning that issues from these considerations is that we must take good heed to our present life. We need to be on our guard against falling, even to the last.—Pul. Com.

17—20. (17) not equal, or fair. (18, 19) when, etc., comp. vss. 13—16. (20) way . . equal, ch. xviii. 25. Every one, etc., "the time was come to call for personal decisions, to appeal to each man to embrace for himself the offer of pardon and salvation." This is the supreme aim of the prophet in this chapter—to create a consciousness of the worth and responsibility of the individual: to point out that the new Israel must be composed of individuals who enter it on the condition of repentance. Character not birth is to count in the new epoch.

21—24. (21) captivity, i.e. Jehoiachin's. one . . escaped. There is something suspicious, in the date of the arrival of the fugitives, a year and a half after the fall of the city. The Syr. read or suggested "eleventh year," which would leave about six months for the news of the city's fall to be carried by messengers to the exiles in Babylon, and this date is now very generally accepted.—Cam. B. city is smitten, comp. 2 Ki. xxv. 4. (22) hand, etc., the expression prob. indicates a state of trance. opened, to speak to the people, who were stricken dumb, with the sad tidings. This was the turning point of Ezekiel's prophecy, no longer silent he enters upon his ministry of consolation and hope. (24) wastes, so recently

^a Le. vi. 5.

"God's seed will come to God's harvest."

—Rutherford.

"Even when the preacher's conscience is free from guilt in regard to the ungodly who perish in their sins, what a sorrow does it occasion in the life of the preacher when he has to see the impenitent die in their sins! 'I would not willingly be saved,' said Augustine, 'without you.'"

"We may talk of the best means of doing good, but, after all, the greatest difficulty lies in doing it in a proper spirit; 'speaking the truth in love,' 'in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves,' with the meekness and gentleness of Christ. I have known anxious sinners drop the subject of religion in consequence of a preacher addressing them in an angry tone."—Nettleton.

"Ignorance is always obstinately one-sided. Reminds one of the Irish juryman who had never met eleven such obstinate men as his fellow-jurors; and of the recruit who maintained he was the only man of his company who was keeping step. The sinner is ready to blame any one but himself, and even dares to impugn the equity of the great Judge of all the earth. The reckless audacity of such a charge reveals his own condemnation."—Hom. Com.

a See Ge. ix. 4; Le. iii. 17, vii. 26, xvii. 10—14; De. xii. 16; Ac. xv. 29.

"Perhaps the phrase should be trans. 'near the blood,' in allusion to the idolatrous rite of pouring the blood of the slain beast into a vessel or pit, and then eating part of the sacrifice just by it."—Spencer.

"We are the basket of the sower—that is, of Christ. He has deigned to put the seed in us, which we must scatter among our ignorant brethren."—St. Augustine.

a "The ruling race take great pride in their fine and lofty gates, whose double doors stand open all day long, revealing the refreshing shade within of the peacock tree, etc. . . On the carved benches, each side of the gate, lounge the gaily-clad retainers of the great man. And he himself often takes his seat there."—Van Lennep.

b "They praise thy eloquence, but care not for the subject of it as a real and personal thing; just as many do in the modern Church."—S. Jerome.

desolated by the conqueror. one, a single person; yet he found God faithful to His promise; much more shall we, who are many. The words of the infatuated men who exulted in the havoc they were making on the mountains of Judæa may sound to us like a blasphemous travesty of this argument; but they were no doubt seriously meant. They afford one more instance of the boundless capacity of the Jewish race for religious self-delusion, and their no less remarkable insensibility to that in which the essence of religion lay.—Exp. B.

The Fallacy. 1. The descendants of Abraham may not be his true children. They are Abraham's children who inherit Abraham's faith. 2. Where no right exists, the number of claimants will not create it. 3. Each individual must seek individual grace. We cannot be made citizens of the kingdom of heaven en masse. We must go single file through the strait gate. 4. There is room in the grace of God for the greatest number. The multitude of applicants can never be too great for infinite bounty. Christ came to give his life a ransom "for many."—W. F. Adeney.

25—29. (25) eat . . blood, i.e. flesh slaughtered in such a way that the blood remains in it. This was prohibited by the Levitical law. (26) stand . . sword, i.e. rely on your own power. Might is your right. (27) they . . wastes, prob. referring to Gedaliah's party, wh. hoped to settle in Jerusalem, and re-establish the kingdom. The hope of Israel was not this lawless remnant, God will surely destroy it. (28) most desolate, by the destruction of the remaining remnant. pomp, etc., ch. xxiv. 21. (29) Then, i.e. when the judgments are complete.

Fear of Judgment.—Jerome used to say that it seemed to him as if the trumpet of the last day was always sounding in his ear, saying: "Arise, ye dead, and come to judgment." The generality, however, think but little of this awful and important period. A Christian king of Hungary being very sad and pensive, his brother, who was a gay courtier, was desirous of knowing the cause of his sadness. "O brother!" said the king, "I have been a great sinner against God, and know not how to die, or how to appear before Him in judgment." His brother, making a jest of it, said: "These are but melancholy thoughts." The king made no reply; but it was the custom of the country that if the executioner was to sound a trumpet before any man's door, he was presently led to execution. The king, in the dead hour of the night, sent the executioner to sound the trumpet before his brother's door, who, hearing it, and seeing the message of death, sprang into the king's presence, beseeching to know in what he had offended. "Alas! brother," said the king, "you have never offended me. And is the sign of execution so dreadful, and shall not I, who have greatly offended, fear to be brought before the judgment-seat of Christ?"—Biblical Treasury.

30—33. (30) against thee, R. V., "of thee." The character of his last utterance, vindicating, as it might seem, the claim of the exiles to "possess the land," as against that of the remnant "in the wastes," may even have made him popular.—Pulp. Com. Yet while they listened self-interest hindered the reception of God's word, their conduct was not altered. in the doors, where the people often sit. (31) as the people, as if they meant to listen and obey, but with no real intention of doing what you enjoin. (32) lovely song, of wh. they like the sound, not the words. (33) this . . pass, esp. what Ezekiel had been saying about the remnant left amid the desolations of Jerusalem.

On Hearing Sermons.—I. The Gospel may be heard with pleasure but without profit. 1. When the mind only is gratified; 2. When the affections are merely excited. II. The converse is true. 1. Does the Word make you watchful? 2. Prayerful? 3. Lead you to obedience? III. It is desirable that the Gospel should be heard both with pleasure and profit. 1. The pleasure should arise from the message, not from the rhetoric; 2. From our felt sense of participation in the benefits of which the message speaks; 3. From our determination to obey the message.—Stems and Twigs.

Careless Hearers.—We crossed and recrossed the river several times by the ferry-boat at Basle. We had no object in the world, but merely amusement and curiosity, to watch the simple machinery by which the same current is made to drift the boat in opposite directions from side to side. To other passengers it was a business, to us a sport. Our hearers use our ministry in much the same manner when they come to it out of the idlest curiosity, and listen to us as a means of spending a pleasant hour. That which should ferry them across to a better state of soul they use as a mere pleasure-boat, to sail up and down in, making no progress after years of hearing. Alas! it may be sport to them, but it is death to us because we know it will ere long be death to them.—Spurgeon.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-FOURTH.

1—6. (2) shepherds, or unfaithful rulers and princes.^a feed themselves,^b comp. 2 Cor. xii. 14; Ph. ii. 21. (3) fat, the Sept. has "the milk." These figures imply the levying of exorbitant taxes. (4) diseased, or convalescent: those, weak while recovering from disease. broken, as by wolves. driven away, by force, lost, i.e. wandered away. sought .. lost, contrast Lu. xv. 4. force, etc., comp. Ex. i. 13, 14^c (5) meat, or a prey; bec. not defended. (6) mountains, etc., i.e. the nation weakened by misrule loses its power of defence, its national spirit, and falls an easy victim to foreign powers.

The Divine Shepherd (chapter xxxiv.)—I. All rulers have great responsibilities, they are shepherds. II. The failure of rulers is ever a great misfortune to subjects. III. All misrule will only come to an end in the proportion that God Himself reigns over a people. 1. What is the method by which God will become consciously the ruler of man? 2. What will be the results of such rule?—W. R. Thomas.

Rulers.—The ruler is raised to a lofty dignity and endowed with special resources in order to watch over and protect the interests of his people. The wants and even the luxuries of life are secured to him that he may be free to devote his powers to the general good. He is keenly alive to any act of treachery on the part of his people; but he is none the less treacherous when he abuses his high trust in seeking only his own advantage. He has basely abdicated the highest functions of his kingdom. The king should be a father to his people, providing for, watching over, and protecting them. It is a severe strain on the loyalty of a people when their sufferings win no pity from their selfish ruler. It is a blot on the brilliant reign of Queen Elizabeth that the brave seamen who defeated the Spanish Armada were left to rot in their ships or die in the streets of the naval ports because there were no hospitals to receive the wounded. "It would grieve any man's heart," wrote Lord Howard, the High Admiral of that day, "to see men that have served so valiantly die so miserably." Modern hospitals and infirmaries are the practical outcome of an enlightened Christian philanthropy.—Geo. Barlow.

7—10. (8) became meat, vs. 5. search for, so as to be sure that none were missing, and so as quickly to bring back the wandering. (10) require my flock, or demand an account of My flock from them, and punish them if there are any missing.^a cease, or remove fr. the office in wh. they have proved unfaithful.

Tyranny and Wrong cannot last for ever: the reckoning-day comes on apace. In all wickedness there is weakness that will soon or later be fatal to its reign. It is related of Lord Ampthill, British Ambassador to the Court of Berlin, that during his mission in Rome he possessed a huge boa-constrictor, and interested himself in watching its habits. One day the monster escaped from the box where he supposed it was asleep, quietly wound itself around his body, and began gradually to tighten its folds. His position became extremely perilous; but the consummate coolness and self-possession which had enabled him to win many a diplomatic triumph befriended him in this dangerous emergency. He remembered there was a bone in the throat of the serpent which, if he could find and break, he would save himself. He was aware that either he or the snake must perish. Not a moment must be lost in hesitation. He deliberately seized the head of the serpent, thrust his hand down its throat and snapped the vital bone. The coils were relaxed, the victim fell at his feet, and he was free. So one day the weak place in wrong-doing is sure

"A true prophet will always leave behind him the impression of a true prophet."

^a Je. xlii. 1.

^b "It was characteristic of the last kings of Judah that while the distress and misery of the people daily increased the kings exacted more and more of their subjects, and lavished more and more on personal luxury and show."

—Spk. Com.

^c Le. xxv. 43, 46.

"A magistrate should look upon himself as sustaining the office of a shepherd, that makes it his chief business to take care of his flock, not as if he were going to a feast to satiate himself and all his appetite, or to a market to make what gain he can to himself."

—Plato.

^a Comp. Je. iii. 9—11.

"Rather than the work shall be undone, I will do it myself, and then it is sure to be well done. Aristotle tells of a certain Persian who, being asked, 'What did most of all feed the horse?' answered, 'The master's eye;' and of a certain African who, when it was demanded, 'What was the best manure or soil for a field?' answered 'The owner's footsteps'—that is, his presence.

Shepherds should reside with their flocks; the Arch-shepherd will not fail to do so."—Trapp.

^b "Of sin, error, and unbelief."—S. Augustine.

^c Is. lxxv. 9, 10; Je. xxlii. 3; Eze. xxviii. 25, xxxvi. 24, xxxvii. 21, 22.

^d "The pastures of the mountains of Israel on which the sheep feed, and the rivers of which they drink, may be interpreted to mean the spiritual pastures and stream of Holy Scripture, which have flowed into all lands."—S. Augustine.

"When things are at the worst God himself will set in: He reserveth His holy hand for a dead lift."—Trapp.

^a Lit. "Between the small cattle and the cattle of rams and he-goats." A fig. for "between the poor and the rich."

^b "The flock was obliged to eat what they had trodden into the dirt, and drink that which they had muddled. . . The great men were so vexatious to the poor that what little coarse food they had was submitted to them."—Mat. Henry.

"It is a consolation to the suffering that deliverance from the highest source will come, and will come at the best possible moment. Men will not be judged (as they are often now) in classes, but as individuals. A rich man may be saved in spite of the encumbrance of riches; some poor men will be outcasts eternally to be smitten and it must succumb. Over the head of every tyrant there hangs the sword of retributive justice.—Geo. Barlow.

11—14. (11) search . . out, God Himself will do what the shepherds neglected. He is the proper Owner of the flock, they were only under-shepherds. The repetition of the pronoun I makes it emphatic. (12) cloudy . . day,^b of national calamity and humiliation. (13) people, "peoples." . . gather them, this would be the first sign of returning favor.^c (14) good pasture, Ps. xxiii. 2. high mountains, R. V. "upon the mountains of the height of Israel," ch. vi. 2, 3.^d good fold, secure and pleasant under the just and beneficent rule of God.

"I will seek out my Sheep and Deliver Them."—1. The restoration of the exiled Jews may be one part of the fulfilment of this promise. 2. The coming of the Son of man "to seek and to save that which was lost" was a later and better fulfilment. And we find a further, a perpetual Divine redemption of this ancient word of promise in: 3. The putting forth by the Church of Christ of all its redeeming energies. Whenever and however any one that, filled with the spirit of his Saviour, seeks to raise the fallen, to bring back to truth and piety those that have gone away in the darkness, to heal the stricken and suffering spirit and to enrobe it with "the garment of praise," there God is himself "searching out his sheep," and "delivering them from the places whither they have wandered." How excellent is the portion of those who are his agents in this gracious work!—Clarkson.

15—19. (15) lie down, the sign of their being satisfied and secure, Ps. xxiii. 2. (16) I will seek, etc., marks the individualizing pity of the good Shepherd over each particular sheep. destroy the fat, i.e. those who have made themselves fat at the expense of the sheep. judgment, or discretion; treating each one according to his deserts: see vs. 17. (17) between . . cattle, i.e. bet. weak and strong cattle^a even among the people the strong shall no more crush the weak. (18) tread down, etc., spoiling so that others cannot use, what they do not want themselves.^b deep R. V., "clear" (19) my flock, wh. for My sake ought to be so carefully tended.

A Poor but Good Preacher.—

A good man ther was of religioun,
That was a poure persone of a toun:
But riche he was of holy thought and werk.
He was also a lerned man, a clerk,
That Cristes gospel trewely wolde preche.
His parishens devoutly wolde he teche.
Benigne he was, and wonder diligent,
And in adversite ful patient:
And swiche he was yprevend often sithes.
Ful loth wer him to cursen for his tithes,
But rather wolde he yeven out of doute, Unto his poure parishens aboute,
Of his offring, and eke of his substance.
He coude in litel thing have suffisance.
Wide was his parish, and houses fer asonder,
But he ne left nought for no rain ne thonder,
In sicknesse and in mischief to visite
The ferrest in his parish, moche and lite,
Upon his fete, and in his hand a staf.
This noble ehsample to his shepe he yaf,
That first he wrought, and afterward he taught.
Out of the Gospel he the wordes caught,
And this figure he added yet thereto,
That if gold ruste, what shuld iren do!
For if a preest be foule, on whom we trust,
No wonder is a lewed man to rust:
Wel ought a preest ensample for to yeve,
By his clenenesse, how his shepe shulde live.

He sette not his benefice to hire,
And lette his shepe acombred in the mire,
And ran unto London unto Saint Poules,

To seken him a chantere for soules,
Or with a brotherhede to be with old;
But dwelt at home, and kepte wel his fold,
So that the wolfe ne made it not miscarie.—Chaucer.

20—23. (20) judge between, so as to relieve the sufferers and punish the oppressors. The fat stands for the rich and arrogant rulers; the lean for the humble poor of the people. (21) thrust, etc., fig. taken from the rough ways of rams and he-goats.^a (22) save, out of the hand of such self-seeking oppressors. (23) one shepherd, the full and final reference must be to Messiah.^b servant David, a second and a greater David.^c "All that the word means is that the Messiah will be one who comes in the spirit and power of David, a representative of the ancient family who carries to completion the work so nobly begun by his great ancestor."—Exp. B.

24—27. (24) their God, i.e. I will be in manifest and gracious relations with them as their God. a prince, or living representative and agent of God. God manifest. (25) covenant of peace, one that shall ensure peace for them. evil beasts, fig. expression for heathen foes. sleep .. woods, a sure sign of security. The peopling of a country results in driving the wild beasts from the woods and forests. (26) showers, periodical rains, on which the fruitfulness of the land depended.^d a blessing, i.e. altogether blessed. So the last words of the vs. imply. showers of blessing, i.e. bringing blessing. (27) safe, ref. prob. is to the harvest of land and tree, wh. should be secured to the people, not stolen by marauders.^e bands, R. V., "bars."

Showers of Blessing (vs. 26).—I. We are to observe that this communication is needed by the world. 1. The condition of the heathen world; 2. The slow progress of religion among men. II. That this communication is promised by God. 1. Its nature is defined by His promise; 2. Its extent is also defined; 3. His purpose defines the result of this communication. III. It must be sought by the Church. 1. By removal from the world; 2. By the cultivation of union and love; 3. By the employment of zealous and vigorous exertions; 4. By the offering of fervent and importunate prayer.—J. Parsons.

28—31. (28) prey, reference to the perils of foreign invasions. dwelt safely, Je. xxiii. 6. (29) plant of renown, R. V., "plantation for renown;" i. e. in the Messianic days the earth will yield abundant crops, no more danger fr. scarcity at home. Comp. Is. lx. 21, lxi. 3. shame .. heathen, refers to the reproaches of the heathen on account of the national humiliation. (30) I the Lord, vs. 24. (31) my flock, Jno. x. 11. men, only men, so remember the contrast, "ye are men, I am God."

The Plant of Renown (vs. 29).—I. Some plants are renowned for their rareness; 2. For their beauty; 3. For their fragrance; 4. For their healing virtue; 5. For their shelter from the sun; 6. For their excellent fruits. The person, work, blessings, and promises of the Lord Jesus considered under each of these representations.—J. Laird.

Ezekiel's Gospel.—God's condescensions are never any abdications of his majesty. When He stoops it is with the stoop of a King; He is never less than King, never less than God. He knoweth our frame, He remembereth that we are dust; He knoweth that we are of yesterday and know nothing; He describes us as "a wind that cometh for a little time, and then passeth away," but He pledges His Godhead that manhood is precious and shall not be lost if love can save it. Here is the gospel before the incoming of the historical Christ. But Christ was always in the world. Christ is the God of the Old Testament, according to Christian interpretation. He was in the world, and the world knew Him not. Abraham, He says, rejoiced to see His day; He said, "Abraham saw My day, and was glad," and beginning at Moses and all the prophets He expounded to two auditors in all the Scriptures the things concerning Himself. When therefore we preach an Old Testament gospel, we are in reality preaching a New Testament gospel. There is only one Testament—old as God, new as the present day.—J. Parker.

because destitute of faith and love. The balance of God is an even balance, and in his presence the smallest deception is impossible."

—Davies.

^a Da. viii. 3, 5.
^b Is. xl. 11; Jno.

x. 11.

^c Is. lv. 3, 4;
Je. xxx. 9; Ho.

iii. 5.

^d Mal. iii. 10.

^e "The literal fulfilment is the primary one, though the spiritual also is designed. In correspondence with the settled reign of righteousness internally, all is to be prosperity externally, fertilising showers, and productive trees and lands."

—Fausset.

"He shall guide you into all the truth." That is not a promise of omniscience, but the assurance of gradual and growing acquaintance with the spiritual truth revealed in Jesus. Not today, nor to-morrow, will it all be known, but step by step we shall be led."—Alexander McLaren.

"A wall of crystal is a safe defence against the force of fire, yet it is no obstruction to the beams and cherishing light of the sun. Such a crystal wall is Christ; He keeps off God's fiery indignation from us, but yet conveys to us the cherishing and reviving influences of His love."—Bishop Hopkins.

"Only by the way do the pilgrims of God doubt; not at the beginning, and at the end not at all. At first they proceed in faith, at last they shall see face to face."—Lange.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-FIFTH.

a De. 11. 5; Eze. xxv. 12—14.

"It is only in their national character of foes to God's people that the Edomites are to be utterly destroyed."—Fausset.

"This is the law of benefits between men—the one ought to forget at once what he has given, and the other ought never to forget what he has received."—Seleca.

a Comp. Is. xxxiv. 1—15.

"From Mount Hor, a part of Mount Seir, nothing is to be seen but ruggedness and desolation."—Gadsby.

b Ps. lxxxiii. 12.

"One thing wh. contributed to make Caesar's soldiers invincible was their seeing him always take his share in danger, and never desire any exemption from labor or fatigue. We have a far higher incentive in the war for truth and goodness when we consider Him who endured such contradiction of sinners against Himself."—Spurgeon.

—Spurgeon.

a "When all the land of the living rejoices, and when the land of the saints and all other lands are converted to the service of God, then thou, O Mount Seir, and all Idumaea, that is, all ye powers of this world which delight in blood, shall be desolate, and shall know that I am the Lord."—S. Jerome.

1—6. (2) Mount Seir, the country of Edom, inhabited by the descendants of Esau.^a (3) stretch . . hand, the usual fig. of Divine judgments. (4) waste, as cities overrun by hostile armies. (5) perpetual hatred, hast kept up thy hatred from of old. This effort of Edom to help destroy the Israelites is one of the causes of the nation's downfall. iniquity . . end, or received its just doom, ch. xxi. 29. (6) prepare thee, i. e. give thee over to universal slaughter. Edom showed experience the great law of Divine retribution, blood for blood. There seems to be a play on the name, "I will change thee from Edom into Dam (blood). sith, or since. not hated, but rather taken delight in."

Not Far from the Kingdom.—There was one reason why Edom should receive exceptional treatment. She was not only a near neighbor to Israel, she was a blood-relation. Her people were the descendants of Esau, the brother of Jacob. Though a foreign nation, her cousinly relationship with Israel was like that of America with England. She could reckon two—the two best—of the patriarchs as her ancestors. Like Israel, she was descended from Abraham and Isaac. Might not she, then, expect the blessings of the patriarchs? Esau had begged for a blessing with bitter tears, and he had received one, but not the best blessing (Gen. xxvii. 38—40). The young man whom Christ loved was "not far from the kingdom of God" (Mark xii. 34). Yet for all we know, he did not enter it. The members of Christian families are favored with great religious privileges. It is much to be able to claim godly ancestors. But these advantages will not serve as substitutes for personal piety. Nay, they will make the guilt of the godlessness greater. We may be like Edom, very near to Israel, yet like Edom we may be cast aside and lost, if we have not really entered ourselves into the Divine covenant.—W. F. Adeney.

7—11. (7) most desolate, vs. 3. Heb. "desolation and desolation." passeth . . returneth, i. e. such shall be the peril of the country that no traveler will go through it. (8) mountains, Edom is characteristically a mountain district, ch. xxxii. 4, 5. (9) cities . . return, R. V., "shall not be inhabited."^a (10) two nations, Israel and Judah, whereas, or "although Jehovah dwelt there." "The invasion of Israel did not cease to be an act of aggression because there were no human defenders to bar the way. It was still Jehovah's land, although it was unoccupied; and to intrude upon it was a conscious defiance of His power." This sacrilege was the second cause of Edom's destruction. When once the relation existing bet. a Deity and His territory as conceived by the ancients is understood, then the heinousness of Edom's sin appears. (11) known . . them, i. e. among My people, whom I will surely defend against thee.

The Presence of God.—1. A reality though unrecognized. 2. A comfort in the midst of desolation and suffering. 3. The hope and guarantee of deliverance and future prosperity. 4. A startling revelation to His enemies.—Geo. Barlow.

12—15. (12) blasphemies, evil things said against Israel are regarded as blasphemies against Israel's God. (3) against me, not against the nation merely. "You boast as if I could not assert My right in Judaea." (14) rejoiceth,^a prob. we should read, "to the rejoicing of the whole earth will I make thee desolate." This gives the requisite antithesis to vs. 15: as Edom rejoiced over the destruction of Judah, the whole earth will be overjoyed at her desolation. desolate, the Edomites never recovered their country. (15) didst rejoice, this malicious exultation over the downfall of the chosen nation was the third sin for wh. Edom must be punished. all Idumaea, i. e. all the several tribes and divisions of it.

Edom's Condemnation.—As Edom had been active in the destruction of Judah, their own desolation must follow. The great empires which brought destruction upon Jerusalem were acting under commission from Jehovah and the work was according to His will. But in the first place there is a difference between the work itself and the spirit in which it is done. Jehu received commendation for his act in cutting off the seed of Ahab, but later his house was extirpated for the guilt of this same "blood of Jezreel" (Hos. i. 4). The Assyrian was entrusted with a commission against the ungodly nation; but he meant not so, it was in his heart to cut off nations not a few (Is. x. 7), and the decree that he should be broken upon the mountains of Israel went out against him (Is. xiv. 25). Nebuchadnezzar was the "servant" of the Lord, but because Babylon laid her yoke heavily on the aged of the people, not considering the issue of such things, bereavement and widowhood shall come upon her in one day (Is. xlvii. 6—8). Here the prophet reprobates both the actions and the spirit of Edom, and threatens that Jehovah will recompense it into their bosom. In truth they knew Jehovah only as the God of Israel, but it was he whom they knew, though they might not have such knowledge of Him as Ezek. had attained to. But it was possible to be guilty of great sins against God, even though they are done unwittingly and without full knowledge of that which He is.—Camb. Bib.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-SIXTH.

1—4. (1) mountains, ch. vi. 2. (2) the enemy, Edom, as in the previous chapter. Aha, a scornful and exulting expression. ancient high places, comp. "everlasting hills," Ge. xlix. 26. Not used here in the ordinary religious sense referring to rural sanctuaries. in possession, ch. xxxv. 10. (3) Because they, R. V., "because, even because, showing the intense emotion of the prophet as the beloved mountains rise before his vision. Five times Ezek. tries to speak to the mountains of Israel, but stops to breathe out prophecies against the heathen. residue, i. e. those of the surrounding nations that had survived the fall of Jerusalem. infamy, or treated as infamous. (4) rivers, lit. wadies or watercourses.

Premature Triumph.—We have not yet reached the end of the story. The battle is still raging; it is too early for the foe to sing his pæans of victory. All along the dark recitals of victories of evil there has been the alternative picture of Divine deliverance. We make a mistake when we dwell only on the gloomy side of history. God has been revealing Himself in history. Not only did He save the eight in the ark. He delivered all Israel from Egypt. He gave Canaan, and He gave restoration from the Captivity. He sent His Son to save the world. In the darkest hour when Christ hung dying on the cross while evil seemed to be most triumphant, victory was really being won by that very death of the world's Saviour. We have not seen the end yet. Perhaps we are on the fringe of a great contest between the servants of Christ and His foes. By the grace of God we may trust that, though the battle is still fierce, we are moving on to victory under the Captain of our salvation.—Pul. Com.

5—7. (5) fire . . jealousy, or fervent zeal for the honor of My name. Idumaea, ch. xxxv. 12, 15. despiteful minds, the bad feeling of Edom towards Israel is the thing specially noticed. to cast it out, Polychr. Bib., "that they might possess it." (6) my fury, active indignation. borne the shame, cast upon them by the heathen; ch. xxxiv. 29, xxxv. 12, 13. (7) lifted . . hand, the sign of taking an oath. bear their shame,^a wh. would be the disgrace of perpetual irremediable desolation.

The righteous God, to whom vengeance belongs, will render shame for shame. Those that put contempt and reproach on God's people will sooner or later have it turned upon themselves; perhaps in this world, either their follies or their calamities, their miscarriages or their mischances, shall be their reproach; at farthest, in that day when all the impenitent shall rise to shame and everlasting contempt."—M. Henry. —The Better Future.—I. The better future of the world. There is a natural tendency among men to say, "The former times were better." Nations cherish legends of an ancient golden age. People talk about "the good old times." But when we search history we cannot find these happy days. Waiving the point, however, as to whether the past history of our race has been characterized by progress or by a process of degeneration, we have still to ask whether the future may not be better than anything that has been experienced in the past. Now, it is the distinct teaching of the Bible that it will be so. "The earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." The New Testa-

"The profane swearer is compared to a fish who bites at the naked hook."

"We are ourselves the children of foreign missions. Foreign missionaries from Rome brought Christianity to England, and England sent it across the sea in Huguenot and Pilgrim to America."—The Outlook.

"There is no dispute managed without a passion, and yet there is not a dispute worth a passion."—Shelley.

^a The shame which they cast on you shall recoil on themselves."—Wordsworth.

"A most interesting relic of Cromwell has just come to light—a Bible given by Oliver Cromwell to his son-in-law Fleetwood. On the first page is a Latin motto, signed 'O. C.', which runs as follows, 'Qui cessat esse melior, cessat esse bonus.'—He who ceases to be better ceases to be good."

"The happiness of life depends very much on little things; and one can be brave and great and good while making small sacrifices and doing small duties faithfully and cheerfully."—L. M. Alcott.

"It is a blessing to the earth to be made serviceable to men, especially to good men that will serve God with cheerfulness in the use of those good things which the earth serves up to them."—M. Henry.

ment points to a redemption and more than a restoration, to a perfection of humanity never attained in the past. II. The better future of the Church. The Church, which has the seed of Divine life in her, should be continually growing in grace. We think we can see progress in our own day—a wiser thought, a larger charity, a more practical activity in the service of man. But we are far indeed from realizing Christ's great ideal. That ideal, however, is the picture of the future, and the pattern after which we are to toil with the utmost hopefulness. The New Testament promises a glorious future to the people of God (Eph. ii. 21). III. The better future of the soul.—In our melancholy moods we yearn after the old sweet days of childhood—their innocence, their simplicity, their joyousness. We forget their limitations, their fears, their infantine distresses. The victorious Christian, with all his scars, and even with his memory of shameful unfaithfulness, stands higher than the unfallen because untried child.—W. F. Adeney.

8-11. (8) shoot forth, in the time of your restoration. they . . hand," these restored days were really near, though no signs of them then appeared. God's promise is ever near, it does not really tarry. (9) for you, acting on your behalf. tilled and sown, after the time of captivity, during which the land shall keep her Sabbaths. (10) multiply men, contrast ch. xiv. 17. (11) old estates, "former condition." better . . beginnings, i. e. give you more secure and lasting possession of the land, and prosperity in it.

a Will soon come under Zerubbabel.

"To see Jesus clearly with the eye of faith is to see the deep opening away from Egypt's shore—is to see the water gush sparkling from the desert rock—is to see the serpent gleaming on its pole over a dying camp—is to see the lifeboat coming when our bark reels among foaming breakers—is to see a pardon when the noose is on our neck and our foot is on the drop."—Guthrie.

b "The neighboring people raised this ill character upon the land of Judea, because of the severe judgments of the sword, famine, and pestilence, which had destroyed the greater part of its inhabitants."—Lowth.

c "The land of Israel will receive an outpouring of grace. Its idolatry will be removed from its high places. This was fulfilled at the return from Babylon, and how much more by the restoration in Christ!"—Wordsworth.

"Painted deceit, tyrannical ambition. Chase these far from you."—Bowring.

The Land of Canaan was an Important Factor in Israel's Past Renown.—This land has been specially selected by God as the most fitting scene for the training of the Hebrew nation. It was the glory of all lands, the envy of surrounding nations. Compared with the territory north, or east, or south, it was splendidly fertile, while its mountains made it a secure fortress. According to the known law, that the physical features of a country mold unconsciously the character of the inhabitants, Canaan had been a benefit to the Jewish tribes. The relaxing climate of Lower Egypt, together with the wondrous facility of obtaining large crops, made the people indolent and effeminate—impatient of arduous exertion. In Palestine a totally different condition of things prevailed. The sides of the hills required to be built in terraces in order to retain the soil. It was a territory in which it was scarcely possible for one to grow rich; it was a territory eminently suitable for the development of hardy and industrious peasants. Especially the land was singularly dependent upon the periodic rainfall. For, devoid of rain and dew, the olives dropped withered and unripe, the vines were blighted, the young corn was shriveled. Hence, in an eminent degree, the people hung in constant dependence on the good will of God.—Davies.

12-15. (12) upon you, i. e. upon the mountains of Israel, vs. 1. bereave, R. V., "bereave them of children," i. e. destroy the citizens. (13) devoured up men, it was represented as a land exposed to famine and pestilence.^b Comp. Nu. xiii. 32. nations, R. V., "nations," i. e. the population. (15) shame, or contemptuous speeches, vs. 6. cause . . fall, better, "bereave thy nation."^c

Human Works.—In the age succeeding the flood, they piled old Babel's tower, and said, "This shall last for ever." But God confounded their language: they finished it not. Old Pharaoh and the Egyptian monarchs heaped up their pyramids, and they said, "They shall stand for ever:" and so, indeed, they do stand, but the time is approaching when age shall devour even these. The most stable things have been evanescent as shadows and the bubbles of an hour, speedily destroyed at God's bidding. Where is Nineveh? and where is Babylon? Where the cities of Persia? Where are the high places of Edom? Where are Moab and the princes of Ammon? Where are the temples of the heroes of Greece? Where are the millions that passed from the gates of Thebes? Where are the hosts of Xerxes? or where the vast armies of the Roman emperors? Have they not passed away? And though in their pride they said, "This monarchy is an everlasting one, this queen of the seven hills shall be called the eternal city," its pride is dimmed; and she who sat alone, and said, "I shall be no widow, but a queen for ever," she hath fallen; and in a little while she shall sink like a millstone in the flood, her name being a curse and a byword, and her site the habitation of dragons and of owls. Man calls his works eternal; God calls them fleeting: man conceives they are built of rock; God says, "Nay, sand; or, worse than that, they are air." Man says he erects them for eternity; God blows out for a moment, and where are they? Like baseless fabrics of a vision, they are passed and gone for ever.—Spurgeon.

16—20. (17) defiled it, making it unclean, and unfit to be regarded as God's holy land. removed woman, R. V., "a woman in her separation," Le. xv. 19. (18) blood . . shed, esp. in idolatrous sacrifices, such as the worship of Moloch.^a (19) according to, or with judgments proportioned and fitted to their wickedness. (20) profaned, i. e. dishonored, disgraced. Give a false and unworthy impression of Jehovah, the God of their land. when they said, R. V., "in that men said of them;" i. e. the heathen had an idea that the exile revealed the weakness of Jehovah, who was acknowledged by all to be the god of Palestine. The heathen argued from the exile th. Jehovah was not able to protect His people.

The Messenger (vss. 16—28).—I. This portion of Scripture, from vs. 16, presents an epitome of the Gospel; vs. 17, man sinning; vs. 18, suffering; vs. 21, an object of pity; vs. 24, his salvation resolved upon; vs. 26, 27, renewed and sanctified; vs. 28, restored. II. Who is commissioned to deliver God's message? not an angel, but a man. Observe.—The kindness of God to man; the honor conferred by God on man; the wisdom of God.—Guthrie.

Grief.—

Weep not for broad lands lost; Thine and the best loved heart:
Weep not for fair hopes crossed; Yet weep—weep all thou can—Weep not when limbs wax old; Weep, weep, because thou art Weep not when friends grow cold; A sin-defiled man.

21—24. (21) had pity, or a pitiful regard to;^b ch. xx. 9. (22) not . . sakes,^c i. e. not for what Israel has been or deserved. The ref. is to Israel's past history; such a meaning as that it is not for any interest which he has in Israel or in order to benefit them that Jehovah delivers them, but only to magnify His own name, is entirely extraneous to the passage and a distortion of its sense. Cf. Is. xliii. 22—28, xlviii. 9—11.—Cam. B. (23) sanctify my great name, to sanctify is the opposite of to profane. As the latter term means to detract from the power, majesty, or purity of Jehovah, or from any of those attributes which belong to His godhead, to sanctify is to manifest or make these attributes conspicuous. be sanctified, have My name cleared and honored by My operations in Israel, which can be appreciated by all the nations. (24) take you,^d after enduring the judgments and chastisements.

Man an Act of Divine Mercy.—I. The doctrine that God is not moved to save man by any merit or worth in him, is a truth of the highest importance to sinners. II. It is important for the saint also. III. While it keeps the saint humble, this doctrine will help to make the saint holy.—Guthrie.

25—28. (25) sprinkle, etc., the sign of the recovered remnant being separated as priests unto the Lord.^a filthiness, the moral evils always associated with idolatry. (26) new heart, the sign of changed feelings and views; ch. xi. 19; Je. xxxii. 39. stony heart, so long unimpressible by teachings and by judgments. heart of flesh, impressible and docile. (27) my spirit,^b as a spirit of obedience. to walk in my statutes, being endowed with the spirit of God they will walk in His statutes, for these are expressions of His spirit. The spirit of God will appear both as an inward impulse to fulfill God's will, and as a power to do it. In the Old Testament the spirit of God, even the prophetic spirit, is usually a dynamic influence, an elevation of the natural human faculties.—Cam. B. (28) dwelt, permanently and securely, and in the full covenant relations.

The New Heart (vs. 26).—I. The heart of man is by nature a heart of stone; it is impervious to religious impressions. Try it—1. By the beauties of nature; 2. By the wonders of Providence; 3. By the joys and sorrows of common life; 4. By the solemnities of the future world; 5. By the disclosures of the Bible; 6. By the attractions of the cross. II. It is the prerogative of God alone to change the heart. 1. This may be argued from the explicit testimony of Scripture; 2. From the nature and extent of human depravity; 3. From the figures which are employed by ^a Eze. xvi. 36, 38, xxiii. 37.

^b "God His own justification in this world. God sanctifies His name among men by benefits as well as by his judgments and punishments." — Lange

^c "No one will know how much he ought to give unless he has a strong desire to know."

^b "And a thousand and pities it was that that should be trampled on and abused. He looked with compassion on His own honor, who lay bleeding among the heathen on that jewel which was trodden into the dirt." — Matt. Henry.

^c De. ix. 6.

^d Eze. xxxiv. 13 xxxvii. 21, xxxix. 25.

^a Nu. viii. 5—22; Is. lxi. 6; He. x. 22.

"The rite thus prescribed by the Law and explained by the Prophets, gave occasion to the use of water at the admission of proselytes in later days, and to its adoption by John in his baptism unto repentance."

—Spk. Com.

^b Is. xxxii. 15, xlv. 3; Joel ii. 28; Zec. xii. 10; Jno. vii. 38; Ac. ii. 17, 18.

^c Eze. xvi. 61.

^d "The Prophet repeats this sentence on purpose to check all vain presumption in the Jews, and confidence of their own intrinsic worth or merit, a fault they have been very prone to in all ages."

—Lowth.

^a Is. II. 3.

^b "What is the matter of God's promises must be the matter of our prayers. By asking for the mercy promised we must give glory to the donor, express a value for the gift, own our dependence, and put honor upon prayer which God has put honor upon."

—Mat. Henry.

"Grace works shame, and so much the more as it makes the wilderness a paradise, the beggar a king, and the sinner a priest. We boast or nothing in Christ and we boast of all things."

—Lange.

the sacred writers to represent the change; 4. From the frequent inefficiency of the most abundant and best-assorted means. III. The new heart is a heart of flesh. Try it—1. By the law of God; 2. By the Gospel; 3. By affliction; 4. By the sins of others; 5. By the glories of heaven.—G. Brooks.

29—32. (29) save .. uncleannesses, Cam. B., "save you out of," i. e. save you by purifying you from. corn, type of both material and spiritual prosperity and increase. Material prosperity was part of the Divine pledge given in the Mosaic covenant. (30) reproach of famine, see vss. 13—15. (31) remember, with due penitence and humility. ^c lothe yourselves, omit "in your own sight," ch. vi. 9. (32) your sakes,^d vs. 22.

Ezekiel's Prophecies.—The present and the future of Ezekiel's prophecies are illustrated by two works of art in Rome. Israel was then like the Laocoon in the famous statue of the Vatican, after the description of Virgil. He and his sons are being crushed in the folds of the serpent, writhing in agony, unable to escape. But Ezekiel saw in his vision a time represented by the picture of St. Michael and the dragon—the dragon beneath the saint and being slain by his victorious sword.—Peloubet.

33—38. Vss. 33—36: The lessons wh. Israel's restoration will teach the surrounding nations. (33) cleansed, this was the gracious issue of the chastisement of the captivity. The Jews have never since then relapsed into idolatry. (35) garden of Eden, a fig. of rich and perfect beauty. (36) I the Lord, the signs of My power and grace will be so manifest, that in your blessing and prosperity My name will be glorified. build .. plant, R. V., "have builded" .. "planted." (37) for this, as usual "this refers to what follows. inquired of, i. e. sought in prayer." It will be characteristic of the restored conditions that God will then be ready to answer prayer. flock, the multiplication of the people is dwelt upon with great joy. The remembrance of the sacrificial flocks that used to throng the streets leading to the Temple at the time of the great festivals, supplies Ezekiel with an image of the teeming population that shall be in all the cities of Canaan when this prophecy is fulfilled; ch. xxxiv. 23, 31. (38) holy flock, the great flock of choice animals for sacrifice.

Note on Verses 16—38.—The passage is remarkable and deserves to be studied almost more than any other part of Ezek. when one is seeking to understand his general conceptions. It exhibits his philosophy of history (cf. ch. xx.), and also describes with great beauty the principles of Jehovah's redemption of his people, and how step by step this shall be accomplished. The prophet reviews the history of the people from the beginning, running it out till it is lost in its eternal issues, and shewing how it will read to all the nations of the earth the true lesson of that which Jehovah, the God of Israel, is, and leave ineffaceable impressions on the mind of His own people. Probably no passage in the Old Testament of the same extent offers so complete a parallel to New Testament doctrine, particularly to that of St. Paul. It is doubtful if the Apostle quotes Ezek. anywhere, but his line of thought entirely coincides with his. The same conceptions and in the same order belong to both—forgiveness (vs. 25); regeneration, a new heart and spirit (vs. 26); the spirit of God as the ruling power in the new life (vs. 27); the issue of this, the keeping of the requirements of God's law (vs. 27; Rom. viii. 4); the effect of being "under grace" in softening the human heart and leading to obedience (vs. 31; Rom. vi, vii); and the organic connection of Israel's history with Jehovah's revelation of Himself to the nations (vss. 33—36; Rom. xi.). The prophet's idea of the Divine pedagogic is not precisely the same as that of the Apostle, and the present passage has in some particulars to be supplemented from ch. xvi. As put here it is Israel's historical experiences, their dispersion and restoration, with the thoughts which these suggest, that impress the nations and teach them what Jehovah is.—Camb. Bible.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-SEVENTH.

The last step in the reconstruction of the new Israel is the resurrection of the people. The nation is dead, and its bones scattered and dry. But it shall rise from the dead; the bones shall come together and the spirit of life from Jehovah shall enter into them and they shall live.

1-4. (1) hand, etc., prophetic ecstasy; ch. i. 3. in the spirit, meaning, in a vision. This was one mode of Divine communication with Ezekiel. valley, prob. the valley mentioned ch. iii. 22. (2) very dry, representing the Israelites dispersed abroad, destitute of life, national and spiritual." (3) thou knowest, the words imply, "it seems impossible to me." (4) Prophecy, in sense of "preach," "proclaim." O . . bones, etc., the whole house of Israel, as individuals alive, as a nation dead, and hopeless of revival; comp. Jno. v. 28, 29.

Can These Bones Live? (vs. 3).—I. All men are spiritually dead. 1. Destitute of the principle of spiritual life; 2. Insensible to the beauty and attractions of the spiritual world; 3. Incompetent to discharge the functions of holy beings; 4. Under the dominion of sinful propensities. II. No created power can communicate spiritual life to man. 1. Not the diffusion of knowledge; 2. Not external reformation; 3. Not civil government; 4. Not ecclesiastical rites; 5. Not moral suasion. III. It is the prerogative of the Holy Spirit to quicken the spiritually dead. 1. His influence is obtained in answer to prayer; 2. It operates through the instrumentality of the Word; 3. It produces faith in Christ; 4. The mode of His working is inscrutable. Apply:(1) Prophecy unto the bones; (2) Prophecy unto the winds.—G. Brooks.

The Vision of the Dry Bones.—The vision seems suggested by the saying current among the people, "our bones are dried, our hope is lost; we are wholly cut off." This idea and feeling of the people takes form in the vision which the prophet saw in the valley. The language of the people is figurative: they speak of the nationality, which is no more,—it is dead and its bones scattered and dry. And this idea regarding the nationality, figuratively expressed by the people, is embodied to the prophet in a vision. Hence the passage is not a literal prophecy of the resurrection of individual persons of the nation, dead or slain; it is a prophecy of the resurrection of the nation, whose condition is figuratively expressed by the people when they represent its bones as long scattered and dry. Perfect consistency is not maintained by the prophet; in vss. 1, 2 the dry bones are represented as lying on the face of the valley, very many and very dry; in vs. 12 they are represented as buried and brought up out of their graves. Hosea had already used the figure of resurrection for the resuscitation of the nation (vi. 2, xiii. 14); but, though the language used both here and by Hosea shews familiarity with the idea of the raising again of individuals, this is not what is prophesied. In Is. xxvi. 19; Dan. xii. the actual resurrection of individual members of Israel is predicted, cf. Job xiv. 13 seq.—Camb. B.

5-8. (5) cause breath, the sign of returning life, Ge. ii. 7. God Himself the real Agent in this resurrection of the nation. (6) sinews, etc., the parts which corruption speedily and completely destroys. A fig. for the reviving and restoring of a nation. (7) noise, of movement; symbol of the gathering of Israelites from different parts. shaking, R. V., "earthquake. bone to his bone, each fitting into the proper place and relation. (8) no breath, so only as yet the forms of life.^a

No Breath, No Life (vs. 8).—I. Our creed may be sound and yet we may not be Christians. II. Our religion may be externally complete and yet we may not be Christians. III. Our good works may be numerous and praiseworthy, yet we may not be Christians. IV. Our life may be exemplary, and yet we may not be Christians. A life with no breath must be—1. A very imperfect life; 2. A very unhappy life; 3. A very unsuccessful life.—H. Bonar.

9, 10. (9) wind, or breath, symbol of the spirit of life. four winds, "the universal life-giving spirit of God." (10) lived, showed signs of movement and expression. great army, to indicate the large numbers who will gather for the return and restoration.

Life is the Breath of God.—Still, under Divine direction, the prophet invokes the help of the life-giving Spirit. A mysterious breath passes over the prostrate forms; they move and leap to their feet, "an exceeding great army." The Spirit that renews the face of the earth, robing it with velvet verdure and decorating it with nodding flowers, can alone raise the dead to life and adorn the soul with spiritual beauty. A lady

^c "Faith leaves the question of possibility to rest with God, with whom nothing is impossible."—Fausset.

^d "Resurrections of communities have been seen more than once in history. But while this material form of national resurrection is not infrequent, a moral resurrection is more rare. A true national restoration is only possible as a work of God. Degenerate nations need more than liberation from external tyranny—they need national regeneration."—Pul. Com.

"First the inward and then the outward change is God's order, while we men always proceed in the reverse order. What good a man does is not his, but God's work in him."—Starke.

^a "This was fulfilled when, upon Cyrus' proclamation of liberty, those whose spirits God had stirred up began to think of making use of their liberty, and getting ready to be gone."—Mat. Henry.

A man without Christ is a world without a sun.

"Divine grace even in the heart of weak and sinful man is an invincible thing."—Leighton.

"God's gifts are seldom in man's currency. 'Happiness is not perfected until it is shared.'"—Jane Porter.

who recently visited the Fijian Archipelago writes:—"As I lived for two years in the midst of this kindly, courteous people, and marked the reverent devoutness of their lives and the simple earnestness of their bearing at the never-failing morning and evening family worship and frequent church services, I found it hard to believe the facts related to me by reliable eye-witnesses of the appalling scenes of carnage, fighting, human sacrifices, debasing idolatry, and loathsome cannibal feasts which five, ten, or fifteen years previously formed the incidents of daily life in districts where now English ladies and their children may travel or settle in perfect security." What had wrought this change? The breath of the Divine Spirit had blown through those lovely islands and transformed the moral wastes.—Hom. Com.

11—14. (11) are, i. e. they represent the deplorable and forlorn condition of the house of Judah and Ephraim, cut off, hopelessly. We shall never be a nation again. our parts, or for our lot; as far as we are concerned. Indicating a condition of extreme despair. (12) open your graves, the opening of Israel's graves could only signify the re-awakening of the politically and religiously dead people to national and spiritual life. This was the first step in the restoration of the future held up before the minds of the despairing people.—Pul. Com. (13) know, by a great and impressive proof and persuasion. The process has three stages: (a) the political awakening; (b) the higher spiritual consciousness; (c) the return to and occupation of Canaan. "The passage teaches with striking clearness the continuity of God's redeeming work in the world, in spite of hindrances which to human eyes seem insurmountable."

Despair is called by the Catholics one of the six sins against the Holy Ghost, and certainly any Protestant will be equally emphatic in banishing it from the neighborhood of the spiritual graces.—H. C. Trumbull.

15—17. (16) one stick, comp. Nu. xvii. 2. One rood, or rod, equivalent to sceptre, Num. xvii. 2; so vs. 17, 19, 20. Judah, with Benjamin^a (17) join them, as a symbol that in the restoration they should alike share, and from that time only one nation occupy the Holy Land.

Joining the Sticks (vs. 15—17).—I. The sad condition of the people of Israel at the time the prophet wrote. It was—I. Contrary to nature; 2. Displeasing to God; 3. Disastrous to themselves. II. The happy condition to which the people were about to be restored. 1. It is of great importance to the Church itself; 2. It is an immense advantage to the surrounding community; 3. It is well-pleasing and highly honoring to God. III. The agency by which this delightful change has to be effected. 1. He breathed into them the principle of spiritual life; 2. He sent them wise advisers and earnest intercessors; 3. He visited them with a sore trial; 4. He appointed them a common work; 5. He makes His residence in their midst.—F. Morgan.

18—23. (18) shew us, this would seem to be unnecessary, but the question may be asked in a contemptuous spirit. (19) hand of Ephraim, regarded as the ruling tribe.^a fellows, allies. put them, perhaps the meaning is they miraculously grew into one. (20) before their eyes, "as a visible token or pledge of the truth of what I enjoin thee to speak to them." (23) idols,^b as we have already seen, this has been fulfilled to the present day. No people witness more simply and purely to the Divine unity than do the Jews. dwelling places, their backslidings.

A Common Religion.—Religion, which should be the great bond of union, has become the great divider of men. People who could agree to live together peaceably on all other accounts fall out about their religion and stand apart in hopeless divisions on this one ground. Thus Israel and Judah were divided by their religion. Israel was jealous of the temple privileges of Jerusalem, and Judah was indignant at the calf-worship of Israel. But now the idolatry is over, and a new temple is to be built at which all parties can work. Christ is our Peace (Eph. ii. 14). He breaks down distinctions of race and party. It is the Christlessness of religion that makes religious differences. If we all had more of Christ we should all be more united; for he is the one center of union in the Christian Church.—Pul. Com.

24—28. (24) David, etc., Is. xl. 11; Je. xxiii. 5, xxx. 9; Eze. xxxiv.

^b Add, however, Levi, and part of Simeon, and the Jehovah-worshippers from the northern nation, who settled in Judea.

^a Je. iii. 18, 1. 4; Zec. x. 6.

^b 2 Co. vi. 16.

"Politically speaking, they never had a king from that day to this, and the grand junction and government spoken of here must refer to another time—to that in which they shall be brought into the Christian Church with the fullness of the Gentiles, when Jesus, the King of kings and Lord of lords, shall rule over them."—A. Clarke.

23. (25) dwell, securely and permanently.^a servant David, the type of the Messiah's kingdom. (26) covenant of peace, ch. xxxiv. 24.^b my sanctuary, fulfilled in the spiritual sense. The Church is God's earthly temple. (27) tabernacle, or earthly dwelling-place.^c Zerubbabel's temple was a partial fulfillment. (28) santify, in sense of setting apart, and consecrating.

Confessing Christ.—It cost something to acknowledge Christ in those early days of His Church. When Symphorianus, a young Roman, acknowledged himself a believer in Jesus, he was seized and scourged nearly to death, and then dragged away to a place of execution. His heroic Christian mother walked by his side, not shrieking and bewailing his terrible fate, as her mother's heart prompted, but encouraging and cheering him with such words as these: "Son, my son, remember life eternal! Look up to heaven! Lift up thine eye to Him that reigneth there! Life is not taken from thee, but exchanged for a better." At these words, the young man's heart was wondrously cheered, as if God had sent an angel to strengthen him. He went to the block with a face all glowing with holy joy. What power but that of a "living God" could sustain a mother and son in such an hour? What a glorious exchange was such a belief for the dead system of heathen worship in which they had been born!

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-EIGHTH.

1—7. (2) Gog, a symbolical name,^a the impersonation of the powers of the north. the land, R. V., "of the land." Magog, Ge. x. 2. Meshech and Tubal, R. V., "prince of Rosh, Meshech and Tubal;" ch. xxvii. 13, xxxii. 26. (4) hooks etc., ch. xxxix. 2. The fig. is taken from the mode of securing the Nile crocodiles. (5) Persia, etc., ch. xxvii. 10, xxx. 5. (6) Gomer, the Cimmerians of Crim-Tartary, Ge. x. 2. Togarmah, Armenians. The northern parts of Asia Minor, ch. xxvii. 14. (7) Be thou prepared, this is God's challenge to a contest. "In it there is a strain of irony, as if it were foolish indeed to measure strength with Jehovah." guard, etc., R. V. marg., "commander." Lxx trans. "unto me" for "unto them," i. e. Gog is summoned to hold himself in reserve against the day when God shall reveal to him the purpose for wh. he was raised up.

The nations lying in the outskirts of the earth, as another prophet expresses it, "have not heard Jehovah's fame, neither have seen His glory" (Is. lxvi. 19), and He who is God alone must reveal Himself to all flesh, for He has sworn by Himself that to Him every knee shall bow (Is. xlv. 23). Such is the meaning of this last act in the drama of the world's history. As it is Jehovah's final revelation of Himself to all the nations of the earth, it is accompanied by all those terrors and convulsions in nature which in earlier prophets usually signalize the day of the Lord (xxxviii. 19—23).—Cam. B.

8—17. (8) visited, Polychr. Bib., "mustered for service." latter years, beyond the historical events with which Ezekiel has been dealing. Comp. the conflict in the Bk. of Rev. always waste, i. e. for a long time. (9) storm, suddenly, and with a great show of terror. (10) think an evil thought, better, "conceive an evil purpose. (11) unwall'd villages, unmolested bec. of the moral effect of Jehovah's name upon all the nations wh. know Israel's history; but Gog is ignorant and greedy. Comp Zec. ii. 4, 5. safely, securely, without thought of approaching danger. (12) take a spoil, easily, without any conflict. midst, etc., R. V., "navel of the earth," i. e. Israel is regarded as the center of the world, ch. v. 5. (13) Sheba, etc., merchant nations aroused to cupidity by this vast expedition against so prosperous a country.^b young lions, i. e. smaller tradesmen who were rapacious for gain. (14) know it, and try to take advantage of such prosperity and security.^c (16) sanctified in thee, i. e. honored in thy overwhelming destruction. Gog is, by his defeat, to procure honor to the God of Israel. (17) thou he, etc., the final opposer of God, represented by the Pharaohs and Sennacheribs of former times. "Gog is the person in whom the substance of previous oracles is to be accomplished."

^a Is. lx. 21; Joel iii. 20; Am. ix. 15.

^b Ps. lxxxix. 3, 4; Is. lv. 3; Je. xxxii. 40.

^c Am. ix. 11; Jno. i. 14; Re. xxi. 3.

"The truest dignity and sacredness of this earthly life consists in the opportunity it offers of communion with the unseen but ever-present God and Saviour. The strongest attraction of the life to come lies in the prospect of a closer approach to God, a more uninterrupted fellowship with God, and a nearer assimilation to his perfect and glorious character. — Thomson.

^a Standing for the world regarded as antagonistic to God.

"Thus God is a heart-searcher: He knows the evil purpose in the man himself." — Starck.

"He loves not Christ at all who does not love Christ a bove all." — Austin.

^b Merchants from these nations are represented as coming to Gog's camp to see if they can buy the spoil.

^c Comp. Re. xvi. 13, 14.

Love Christ not for what He has, or gives simply, but love Him for His own sake.

"When we find ourselves ready to give up even lawful pleasures and possessions, how happy is our life!"

"Everything has been told before: they who hold to the Word have to fear no surprises."

4 "The Prophets offer describe God's judgments upon particular countries or persons, as if it were a dissolution of the whole world, because His particular judgments are an earnest of the general judgment."—Lowth.

"Thus undeniably prove that I am the mighty, just, faithful, wise, holy and merciful God toward My people; and that I am the great, just, and terrible One against Mine and My church's enemies."—Pool.

"I will disarm thee. As Herodotus reports of Sennacherib and his Assyrians in Egypt, that their quivers, bow-strings and targets were gnawed to pieces by mice and rats in one night, so that they were forced to fly for their lives. And as our chroniclers tell us that in the battle between Edward III. of England and Philip of France there fell such a piercing shower of rain as dissolved their strings and made their bows useless."—Trapp.

b Joel ii. 11, 31; Zep. i. 14; Re. vi. 17, xvi. 17, xxi. 6.

c "The features of the prophecy show clearly that it is not so be understood literally but spiritually."—Wordsworth.

d "The burning of the foe's weapons implies that nothing belonging to them should be left to pollute the land. The seven years spent on this work implies the completeness of

The Final Uprising of Evil.—The invasion and overthrow of the Chaldeans, the conflict of the Maccabees with Antiochus Epiphanes, the temporary successes and defeat of the Turks—to each of which historical events some interpreters would limit the application of the prophecy—were but feeble prototypes of a coming struggle with a powerful embodied Antichrist.—Geo. Barlow.

18—23. (19) jealousy, etc., ch. xxxvi. 5, xxxix. 25. shaking, the terrible overthrow of Gog would produce within the heathen mind a great tremor as if the fabric of the earth were being ruined. (20) fishes, etc., the figs. of the verse are taken from the effects of a terrible earthquake.¹ steep places, or Polyc. Bib., "cliffs shall topple over." (21) sword, comp. ch. xiv. 17. against his brother, the sign of intestine quarrels, which are fatal to any enterprise. (22) plead, urge my cause by the agency of pestilence and fighting. hailstones, ch. xiii. 11. (23) magnify myself, ch. xxxvi. 23, xxxvii. 28.

The Invasion of Gog.—The prophet is not the author of the idea of this invasion. It has been predicted of old by the prophets of Israel, prophesying over long periods (xxxviii. 17, xxxix. 8). Neither is it probable that the idea was one read out of certain prophecies merely by Ezekiel. More likely it was an idea widely entertained. The former prophecies on which the belief was founded are not to be supposed to have contained the name of Gog, any more than the prophecies applied by the author of Is. xl. seq. to the career of Cyrus need have referred to him by name. The conception is rather shadowy and vague. The time is indefinite, it is far into the years to come; the nations who cluster around the standard of Gog, himself a somewhat nebulous personage, are those lying in the uttermost regions of the world, which had been heard of but never seen.—Camb. Bib.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-NINTH.

Chapters xxxviii., xxxix. give the impression of having been intended to stand at the close of the book of Ezekiel. Their present position is best explained on the supposition that the original collection of Ezekiel's prophecies actually ended here, and that the remaining chapters (xl.—xlviii.) form an appendix, added at a later period without disturbing the plan on which the book had been arranged. In chronological order, at all events, the oracle on Gog comes after the vision of the last nine chapters. It marks the utmost limit of Ezekiel's vision of the future of the kingdom of God.—Exp. B.

1—7. (1) Gog, ch. xxxviii. 1. (2) chief prince, "prince of Rosh." leave . . thee, R. V., "turn thee about and will lead thee on and will cause," etc. (3) thy bow, chief of the war weapons. (4) fall, smitten and defeated. ravenous birds, that crowd battle fields. (5) open field, where shall be no shelter from the ravenous creatures. It was a great indignity to leave dead bodies exposed. (6) fire, comp. Re. xx. 9. carelessly, R. V., "securely." isles, including coast lands. (7) So, i. e. by this manifestation of power in the discomfiture of My people's enemies. pollute, profane.

Note on vs. 7.—Israel's sins constrained Jehovah to cast them out of His land, and thus to profane His holy name. Now they are another people, a new heart has been given them, and His signal protection of them in their defenceless condition (xxxviii. 11) from so extreme a danger (xxxviii. 4—6) will reveal both to Israel and the nations what Jehovah is, and what are the principles on which He rules His people (vs. 23). Thus shall His name be sanctified—He shall be known to be God alone, all powerful and righteous.—Cam. B.

8—10. (8) it is come, i. e. the time of the great threatened destruction.^b The Prophet declares it to be so certain that it is "as good as done." (9) dwell . . cities, the people of the land would find a supply of fuel for seven years in the multitude of weapons left on the battle-field. This is to be regarded as a poetical figure.^c handstaves, or javelins. burn . . fire, R. V., "make fires of them." seven years,^d the number seven is here used as the ideal or perfect number. (10) spoil, etc., Is. xiv. 2, xxxiii. 1.

The Signal of Defeat of God's Enemies.—In this chapter we have a prophetic description of the ultimate fate of Gog, the ideal impersonation of the power of evil, and the utter destruction of his vast armies. The embattled hosts march to the conflict with proud ostentation and confident of victory. Their swords shall soon provide a banquet for the birds of prey that hover over them, and for the wild beasts whose hungry growls are heard around them, little dreaming that the stricken bodies of the invaders must furnish the feast. An unseen and irresistible power lures them on to their ruin; they are smitten with paralysis, their weapons drop from their hands and cover the ground like corn newly cut with the reaper; they perish in myriads on the mountains and the open fields, the birds and beasts are summoned to gorge themselves on the human carrion, and the only remnants of the once formidable warriors of Gog are found in innumerable graves. In this boldly conceived vision we have a realistic picture of the final and utter destruction of all the enemies of God's people.—Hom. Com.

11—16. (11) place . . graves, where he expected a triumph he shall find a grave. Valley, etc., this may be an imaginary valley, seen in the Prophet's vision, or a place on the high road, E. of the Dead Sea,* the highway between Syria and Petra, and Egypt, passengers, Cornill, "valley of Abarine," E. of the Dead Sea, stop the noses,^b R. V., and it shall stop them that pass through i. e. the valley shall be so filled with the graves, that the way of passers through shall be barred. Hamon-gog, or "the multitude of Gog." (12) seven months, during all this time they would be finding scattered corpses.^c (13) to them, i. e. to Israel. A day of joy and triumph. (14) sever out, set apart to this work. Men . . employment, dedicated entirely to this work until it was completed.^d With the passengers, i. e. with the help of the passers by, as next vs. (15) set . . sign, to direct the attention of the buriers to it. (16) Hamonah, or "the multitude."

The Rival Armies.—I. The enemies of the Lord. 1. Their character. (1) The idolater; (2) The forgetful; (3) The indifferent; (4) The undecided; (5) The reckless. 2. Their doom. They perish—(1) Without God, and so cut off from the only source of true life; (2) Without hope; (3) Fighting against God. II. The friends of the Lord. The course of the sun is—1. Very quiet; 2. Gladdening; 3. Regular and sure; 4. One of increasing brightness.—H. G. Parrish.

Continual Employment (vs. 14).—Men of continual employment! and women also. These are the persons everywhere needed to originate and sustain Christian enterprise throughout the world. From those who come forward to offer themselves for the work it is not easy to discriminate at first, but on making a farther selection from those who have undergone a measure of testing or probation, it is on those who have shown themselves to be "men of continual employment" that we would rely.

17—22. (17) feathered fowl, all carrion birds. sacrifice, the heaps of slain are regarded as a sacrificial feast provided by God for them. (18) rams, etc., prob. here figures of the various classes of people in the slain armies. fatlings of Bashan,^a De. xxxii. 14. (19) drunken, or satiated. (20) my table, poetical carrying out of the figure of the sacrificial feasts. chariots, i. e. charioteers.^b (21) set . . heathen, ch. xxxviii. 16, 23. (22) know, or fully apprehend and realise. . . Israel shall no more recall their former rejection with fear of its repetition.

Heathenism Doomed.—Some of the most interesting pages in history are those which describe the siege of cities. The walls of the beleaguered city are surrounded on all sides by men trying to force an entrance. Some make sudden onsets on the gates. Some batter the walls with rams and engines. Some plant ladders against the walls and fight hand to hand with the defenders. Everywhere there is noise, and tumult, and capture, and death, the shouts of the fighters and the moans of the dying, yet still the city is not taken. But all the while there is, unknown to the defenders, a body of men digging and mining under the very wall of the city. They are undermining the foundations of the city ramparts—the city is doomed. I sometimes think that this is the work which our the cleansing, and the people's zeal for purity." —Fausset.

a "A place frightful in its physical character, and admonitory of past judgments." — Spk. Com.

b Comp. the same Heb. word, trans. muzzle, in De. xxv. 4.

c "Usually the survivors of an army bury their own dead; but here the rout is so complete that the house of Israel bury the corpses of their foes." — Wordsworth.

d Is. lxi. 24.

"The conclusion is, that the result of everything is to magnify and sanctify God. We ought, therefore, to begin all our affairs with God." — Lange.

a "The cattle of Palestine are generally small, and decidedly inferior to those of more northern climes. The cause is doubtless to be found in the scanty pastures of a land laid waste for many centuries by ever-returning foes, and many of whose springs of water have been drying up; but there are districts in which the cattle are finer, and in a far better condition. There are probably as fine 'bulls of Bashan' now grazing on the plains of the Hauran as there were in king David's time." — Van Lennep.

b Comp. Ps. lxxvi. 6.

e "They were not carried away by their enemies bec. I wanted power to rescue them, but as a just punishment of their sins."—Lowth.

"After they have become sensible of their guilt, and ashamed of it."—Fausset.

e "The pouring out of His spirit is a pledge that He will hide His face no more."—Fausset. "St. Peter distinctly appropriates these prophecies to the outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost, and the inauguration of the Church of Christ by that miraculous event."—Spk. Com.

In this and the remaining chapters of Ezekiel, is given an ideal picture of the restored Jewish temple.

a Zec. ii. 1.

b Re. xxi. 15.

"The words describe the situation of the temple on the south side of Mount Zion, wh., with all its courts, buildings and walls encompassing the courts and the whole area, or holy mountain, resembled a city for bigness."—Lowth.

Christian schools and colleges in heathen lands are doing. We are sapping the foundations of heathenism. The city is strong and ancient; its walls are thick and ugly and deep. But it is doomed. In our hands God has put an ax, and we are digging, digging; and in the end, through the darkness we shall reach the light.—John Lendrum.

23—26. (23) hid I my face,^c the character of Israel's captivity, as Divine chastisement for sin will be made plain when God has restored and sanctified them. (24) uncleanness, by reason of their idolatry. (25) bring again, ch. xxxiv. 13, etc. whole house, the entire covenant people. (26) after . . borne R. V., "and they shall bear," i. e. be conscious of their unworthiness. dwelt safely, R. V., "shall dwell securely." made, "shall make."

Note on vss. 23, 24.—Jehovah's dealing with his people Israel is the great lesson which he reads to the heathen; it is the history of Israel in the hand of Jehovah their God that reveals to the nations what Jehovah is. For the nations knew Jehovah only as God of Israel, and it was thus only through Israel that he could reveal himself to them. This last great event in the history of Israel, Jehovah's signal defence of them now that they are his people in truth, casts light on his former hiding of his face from them. Deeper elements than mere power enter into his rule of his people; a conception of God is suggested to the nations unlike any they had hitherto entertained—there is a God who is omnipotent and who rules the nations in righteousness, the God of Israel.—Cam. B.

27—29. (27) am sanctified, ch. xxxvi. 23. (28) read, "and they shall know . . in that I caused them . . and will gather . . and will leave." (29) poured . . spirit,^d Joel ii. 28.

The promise of the Spirit.—1. The constant theme of Old Testament prophets. 2. Blessedly realised in the history of the Church in all ages. 3. Fulfilled in the remarkable advances of the Gospel in the present day. 4. The guarantee of future universal victory.—Hom. Com.

CHAPTER THE FORTIETH.

Ch. xl.—xlviii.—"It remains to sketch the outline of a perfect theocracy—in other words, to describe the permanent forms and institutions which shall express the ideal relation between God and men. To this task the prophet addresses himself in the chapters now before us. That great New Year's Vision may be regarded as the ripe fruit of all God's training of His prophet, as it is also the part of Ezekiel's work which most directly influenced the subsequent development of religion in Israel."—Exp. B.

1—5. (1) In . . captivity, B. C. 572, beginning of the year, of the ecclesiastical year i. e. in the month Abib (Mch.—Apr.) hand . . me, ch. i. 3. thither, i. e. to Jerusalem. (2) visions of God, or Divinely-sent visions. high mountain, fr. which a broad and general view could be obtained. Reference may be to Mount Zion, from wh. a good view of Mt. Moriah could be obtained. frame, Com. B., "upon wh. was as it were a building of a city," i. e. a city—like building. The pre-exile temple occupied the south slope. (3) man, not Jehovah, but a living symbol of Jehovah. brass, i. e. brightly shining. line of flax,^e for measuring the ground. measuring reed,^b for the walls. (4) No one can study the detailed measurements of the buildings without being convinced that the prophet is working from a ground plan which he has himself prepared; indeed his own words leave no doubt that this was the case.—Exp. B. (5) wall, i. e. boundary wall. and an handbreadth, or the cubit used by the man in measuring was one handbreadth over the cubit used in Chaldaea.

Reverence for the House of God.—

"When once thy foot enters the church, beware!

God is more there than thou; for thou art there

Only by His permission. Then, beware;

And make thyself all reverence and fear.

Kneeling ne'er spoil'd silk stocking: quit thy state;

All equal are within the church's gate.

"Let vain or busy thought have there no part;
 Bring not thy plots, thy plough, thy pleasure thither;
 Christ purged His temple—so must thou thy heart.
 All worldly thoughts are but thieves met together
 To cozen thee: look to thy actions well,
 For churches either are our heaven or hell."

—G. Herbert.

6—10. (6) gate . . east, the east-gate building is described as a model for all the buildings at the other gates. stairs, for their number see vs. 22. threshold, the whole structure was in the form of a triple terrace, each rising above the others inward, the outer court, the inner court and the temple proper. The threshold refers to the space bet. the step and the guardrooms. the other threshold, R. V. marg., "even one threshold," i. e. the first as distinguished fr. the second (vs. 7). (7) little chamber, or "guard room" prepared for the Levitical guard, who attended to and kept the gate. within, R. V., "toward the house." Beyond the three lodges on each side there was a second space like the first threshold of equal size. (9) inward, i. e. towards the court of the temple. (10) posts, prob. the wall-fronts or spaces bet. the guardrooms.

"The Jews called the east the fore part of heaven; the west the back-part: by the first they denote spiritual things; by the second temporal and earthly things. Those that come into this Temple must mind spiritual things; they must not let out their hearts to the world and worldly delights—they are western things, and there was no door in the west. They must go upwards, not downwards; keep within, not go out."—Greenhill.

The Gate which Looketh toward the East.—I. An Oriental outlook. II. An outlook towards the light. III. An outlook towards the new day. IV. An outlook towards Christ.—Pul. Com.

11—15. (11) length of the gate thirteen cubits, it seems impossible to explain this. (12) space, a limit, or barrier, to protect the guard-rooms projecting into the passageway one cubit each side in front of the guard-room thus contracting passage fr. 10 to 8 cubits there. (13) from the roof, etc., i. e. across the gate-building from north to south. From the roof of one chamber to the roof of the corresponding opposite one. (14) He made also posts, etc., Polyc. Bib., "He measured the vestibule (porch) 20 cubits and adjoining the vestibule of the gateway was the court round about." (15) face, or outside front.

Entrance to the Kingdom.—I. There is one way into the kingdom. II. There are many approaches to the kingdom. III. Men come from all quarters to the kingdom. IV. The gate is too narrow for some. V. It is broad enough for all earnest seekers.—Clarkson.

16—19. (16) narrow, Heb. closed^b posts, i. e. the 5 cubit wall fronts bet. the guard-rooms. arches, Cam. B. suggests, "and to the porch thereof," i. e. of the gate. (17) outward court, R. V., "outer" answering to the Court of the Women in Herod's temple. The first on passing the gate. pavement, of mosaic work. (18) lower pavement, on the outer court, wh. was lower than the inner court. R. V., "and the pavement was by the side of the gates, answerable unto the length of the gates, even the lower pavement." (19) without, marg., "from without."

The outer and inner courts of the Temple.—"In the outward court the people stood; and it represented the nations outside the Church. The inward court represented the Church, where the Word of God enlightens and nourishes us, and Christ is our altar of perfumes. The Holy of Holies represented heaven; into it the high priest only entered—typifying our High Priest, the Lord Jesus, His entrance in there alone by His own power, to bring us thither. So that the first signified the state of nature; the second the state of grace; the third the state of glory. Hereby the greatness of the Church in the time of the Gospel, and especially in the time of the New Jerusalem, is pointed out. These courts were of great compass, and had gates looking to the several parts of the world."—Greenhill.

20—23. (20) that looked, Heb. "whose face was." (21) arches, vs. 16. (22) seven steps, vs. 6. "There was the same number of steps, no doubt,

a. "Along the wall of the porch were chambers, three on each side; vs. 10. —Lowth.

These chambers were about 10ft. 6in. square.

"The porch reminds us of the peace and repose connected with the consciousness of the grace of God."—Oecolampadius.

"If we know ourselves, we shall love others."

"We literally lay down our lives for our worthless and ungrateful selves."

"Cruelty is universal — more from lack of imagination than love."

b "Closed windows, with shut lattices, the bars of which, being let into the wall, could not be opened or shut at pleasure." — Gesenius.

"In the Church of God darkness has no place, but the light of truth and faith shines everywhere; yea, believers themselves are a light in the Lord, whose works shine before men."

—Lange.

"May not taste be compared to that exquisite sense of the bee, which instantly discovers and extracts the quintessence of every flower, and disregards all the rest?—Greville.

"Why should not the strong be beautiful as well as helpful? Why should they not add grace to power? It is a serious mistake men make when they think that they may dispense with the finer excellences of Christian character and life because they contribute an efficiency which others cannot render. The uncultivated rudeness of many a pillar in the Christian "temple" detracts most seriously from its worth; on the other hand, the palm trees upon the posts constitute a very appreciable addition. Be beautiful as well as strong. "Whatever things are lovely and of good report" should be "considered well, and should be secured as well as 'whatsoever things are true, honest, just and pure.' Strive after, pray for, carefully cultivate, all that is beautiful in the sight of man, in temper, in bearing, in spirit, in word and deed; so shall the value of your strength be greatly enhanced in the estimate of Christ."

—Clarkson.
"A thing of beauty is a joy for ever. Its loveliness increases; it will never pass into nothingness." — Keats.

"If the gate-building projected with its porch forward on to the pavement of the inner court, the tables were fitly placed for carrying out the directions of the law."—Spk. Com.

"Taste and elegance, though they are reckoned only among the smaller and secondary morals, yet are of no mean importance in the regulation of life. A moral taste is not of to each of the gates from the precincts to the outer court." (23) over against, better, proportionable with.

His share.—Standing in front of the noble cathedral of Cologne, a lady overheard some one behind her say, "Didn't we do a fine piece of work here?" Turning quickly, she saw that the speaker was a man in the plainest of working clothes, and on a sudden impulse she said to him, "Pray, what did you do about it?" "O, I mixed the mortar for two years across the street," was his reply.—The Well Spring.

24—31. (24) according measures, i. e. to those previously given. (25) windows, vs. 16. (26) seven steps, vs. 22. (27) gate to gate, or the distance between the gates.

(28) by .. gate, or through the south gate. (29) little chambers, guard-rooms. (30) this vs. is not easily explained—It is omitted in the Sept. (31) read: "and the porch thereof was toward the outer court," etc.

Old Cathedrals.—When we enter one of those antique piles in southern Germany, or in Spain—for there only can a Catholic Gothic cathedral be seen in all its glory,—I know not that it is possible for the heart of man to desire any addition to the magnetic solemnity of the whole scheme. The tall, narrow windows, quite dark with the long purple garments of pictured martyrs, apostles, and kings, tinge every ray that passes through them with the colors and the memory of a thousand years of devotion.—Washington Irving.

32—34. (32) into, before, they were looking at the inner court, now they actually entered it. (33, 34) the arches thereof, etc. "the porch thereof was toward the outer court." eight steps, comp. the seven steps of the other gates: vs. 22, 26.

Wonders of the Bible.—If you ever tried it, you must have been struck with the few solid thoughts, the few suggestive ideas which survive the perusal of the most brilliant of human books. Few of them can stand three readings; and of the memorabilia which you have marked in your first reading, on reverting to them, you find many of those were not so striking or weighty or original as you thought. But the Word of God is solid: it will stand a thousand readings; and the man who has gone over it the most frequently and carefully is the surest of finding new wonders there.—James Hamilton.

35—38. (35) north gate, similar in all respects to the others. (36, 37) chambers, etc., see vs. 7, 16. (38) chambers, etc. R. V., "and a chamber with the door thereof. there they washed." washed offering, Le. i. 11—13.

39—43. (39) porch, "not under the covered portico, wh. was only ten cubits broad, but in the angles formed by the porch and gate-front. These tables were blocks for killing and preparing the sacrifices." (40) at the side, R. V., "on the one side without, at the stairs of the entry." was at the porch, "belonged to the porch." (41) eight tables, these were prob. of wood. (42) four tables, Cam. B., "and there were four," etc., i. e. four others. (43) within, in the porch. hooks, to wh. the beasts might be fastened: or perhaps on which the carcasses might be hung, the tables, prob. the stone tables.

Sacrifices in the new Temple.—As we read the dry details of the city that is to be rebuilt and its new temple, we are suddenly pulled up by a startling item. Among the various arrangements of the ancient temple that are to be revived, provision is made for the sacrificial rites. Then sacrifices will be needed after the restoration. It might have been supposed that these would now be dispensed with, since sin was put away and the people were re-dedicated to God. I. We need repeated re-dedication of our lives to God. The sacrament of baptism, which signifies the first dedication, is taken but once; but it is followed by that of the Lord's Supper, which suggests renewal of dedication in deliberate intention, as when the Roman soldier took the oath of allegiance to his general. This sacrament we repeat many times. II. We need repeated cleansing from sin. There were to be sin and trespass offerings in the new temple. Even while the people are returning, penitent and restored, provision has to be made for future falls and sins. 1. Christian people sin. We know that this is only too true of all Christian people. 2. God has provided for the recovery of Christians when they sin. It is a shame that they who have once washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb should again stain them with the ruin of sin. Yet as this is done, God provides even again for cleansing—not now by repeated sacrifices, but by the eternal efficacy of the one perfect Sacrifice.—Pul. Com.

44—49. (44) "And without the inner gate were two chambers in the inner court, one at the side of the N. gate, and its prospect was toward the S.; and one at the side of the S. gate, having its prospect towards the N." (45) prospect or outlook. charge of the house,^b Nu. iii. 25, etc. (46) charge of the altar, Le. vi. 12, 13. Zadok, 1 Ki. ii. 27, 35. (47) court, i. e. the inner court. (48) porch . . house, i. e. of the sanctuary, or temple itself. Comp. Sol.'s porch, 1 Ki. vi. 3^d. post, "jamb of the advancing wall on each side of the entrance." breadth . . gate, "and the side pieces of the entrance of the porch." (49) Eleven cubits, "twelve cubits." pillars . . posts,^a "meaning that upon the bases (posts) stood shafts (pillars)." These shafts were prob. in the form of palm trees."

Note on chs. 40—48.—This section gives a picture of the people in their final condition of redemption and felicity. It does not describe how salvation is to be attained, for the salvation is realized and enjoyed; it describes the people and their condition and their life now that their redemption has come. This accounts for the strange mixture of elements in the picture—for the fact that there is "so much of earth, so much of heaven" in it. To us who have clearer light the natural and the supernatural seem oddly commingled. But this confusion is common to all the prophetic pictures of the final condition of Israel redeemed, and must not be allowed to lead us astray. Ezekiel of course expects a restoration in the true sense, but it is a restoration which is complete, embracing all the scattered members of Israel, and final, being the entrance of Israel upon its eternal felicity and perfection, and the enjoyment of the full presence of Jehovah in the midst of it. The restoration expected and described by the prophet is no more the restoration that historically took place than the restoration in Is. lx. is the historical one. Both are religious ideals and constructions of the final state of the people and the world.—Cambridge Bible.

CHAPTER THE FORTY-FIRST.

1—6. (1) temple, the actual sanctuary, the holy place:^a 1 Ki. vi. 17. posts, i. e. the piers, or door-cases on each side of the entrance. tabernacle, Com. B., "posts." (2) sides etc. i. e. the side pieces of the entrance. (3) inward, or inside. post, etc., R. V., "each post of the entrance." (4) before, in front of. measured, etc., comp. the holy of holies of Sol.'s temple.^b most holy, the Oracle as distinguished fr. the temple or holy place. (5) wall, or outer wall, wh. was of immense thickness. side chamber, comp. 1 Ki. vi. 5—10. (6) three, i. e. there were 3 stories of 10 chambers in each. hold . . house, i. e. the beams were made to rest, not on the actual wall, but on rests projecting from the wall.

The Spiritual Temple.—If we diligently attend to the instructions given us in the plainer parts of religion, and profit by them, we shall be led further into an acquaintance with the mysteries of the Kingdom of God. They that are willing to dwell in God's courts shall at length be brought into His Temple. Ezekiel was himself a priest, but by the iniquity and calamity of the times was cut short of his birthright privilege of ministering in the Temple; but God made up the loss to him by introducing him into this prophetic, evangelical, celestial Temple, and employing him to transmit a description of it to the Church, in which he was dignified above all the rest of his order.—M. Henry.

7—12. (7) enlarging, what the verse means to say is that the side-chambers widened in the second and third stories through the retreating of the wall of the house. increased . . midst, R. V., "so one went up fr. the lowest chamber to the highest by the middle chamber."^a (8) saw . . about, R. V., "the house had a raised basement round about." six great cubits,^b ch. xl. 5. (9) that . . left,^c i. e. that wh. was left of the raised platform unoccupied by the temple buildings. (10) between, etc., from the force to turn vice into virtue; but it recommends virtue, with something like the blandishments of pleasure."—Burke.

^b "The priests who keep watch as guards of the temple." — Vulgate.

^c The breadth does not agree with that of Sol.'s porch, the length does.

^d Comp. 1 Ki. vii. 21; 2 Chr. iii. 17.

"Beauty was lent to nature as the type of heaven's unspeakable and holy joy, where all perfection makes the sum of bliss." — Mrs. Hale.

^a "The holy place, to which we have come from the forecourt. The measurement begins from the east wall, where the entrance was. this wall had pillars six cubits broad, and bet. the pillars a door ten cubits broad, with doorposts five cubits broad on each side; so that the whole breadth of the wall was thirty-two cubits." — Kell.

^b 1 Ki. vi. 20.

^c "Winding stairs, which enlarged as the rooms did, went up between each two chambers from the bottom to the top; and there were two doors at the top of each pair of stairs, one door opening into one room, the other into that over against it." — Lowth.

^b Lit. "Six cubits to the arm-pit."

^c "Rather, 'and so also was what was left free to the side chambers of the house.'" — Wordsworth.

4 "As the rows of chambers ran E. and W. one set of chambers opened to the south, another set to the north." — Spk. Com.

• 1 Ki. vi. 15, 16.

"The higher we build up ourselves in our most holy faith, the more should our hearts, those living temples, be enlarged."—M. Henry.
"The Lord Christ will measure Christians of what height, breadth and depth they are; their actions, affections, and graces will be measured (Rev. xi. 1)."—Greenhill.

2 "The altar here is a cubit higher, and double the breadth to that of Moses, which is supposed to be agreeable to the dimensions of the altar made by Solomon who did not exactly observe the proportions prescribed to Moses, in making the cherubim and other furniture of the temple."

—Lowth.

b Mal. i. 7.

c The altar of incense was before the veil of the holy of holies, where was the Divine presence over the ark." — Wordsworth.

"Let every man examine himself by this measuring-rod how far he has advanced."—Gregory.

"Friendship may be to us merely a cut flower that graces our ban-outer wall to the wall of the court.^d (12) building, behind the sanctuary, in the vacant space, and prob. used for receiving the offal, etc., of the sacrifices.

The Spiritual Temple.—Ezekiel never intended that a structure should be reared precisely according to the plan and measurements he furnishes, otherwise he would have been still more minute in his delineations. He has given enough, however, for his great object, which was chiefly to show that in the Divine purpose respecting the future there was to be a full and every way complete reconstruction of the House of God, if not in the outward and material sense, yet in the higher things, which that represented and symbolised, and with the effect of securing a far purer and more elevated condition for the covenant-people. It is this last point which throughout he seeks to render prominent by the nature of his descriptions.—Fairbairn.

13—17. (13) house, or sanctuary proper, the holy place, separate place, "the court of 20 cubits broad wh. ran round the house" building, that mentioned in vs. 12. (14) face, or front. (15) which was behind it, rather "behind which it was." galleries, terraces-buildings; poss. the word means the side-chambers, vss. 6, 7. (16) cieled with wood, or overlaid with woodwork.^e covered or hidden from view from below. Or the meaning may be, covered with lattice-work. (17) by measure, i.e. even this woodwork was done by careful measurement.

The Spiritual Temple.—"The spiritual lesson to be learned by us from the description here is, that the Church of God, the Temple of the Holy Ghost, as it shall hereafter be manifested on earth, shall be on a scale of grandeur such as has never yet been witnessed, and its worship shall be on a corresponding scale of glory, beauty, and blessedness. Not till then shall the Lord be worshiped visibly in the beauty of holiness by the whole congregation of earth, led on by Israel as the leader of the mighty choir. None of the defects which attend our present liturgical worship shall alloy the perfection of the public services of God which shall then be rendered to Him through Christ. There shall be no divisions. Now the catholicity of the Church is but partially seen, though it is a blessed reality, and its unity is hardly to be recognised at all, split up as it is into a hundred denominations with varying confessions of faith and different forms of worship; then all shall be one in outward worship, as well as in inward unity of the spirit, and the world will in consequence be attracted to believe the Divine mission of Messiah (John xvii. 21)."—Fausset.

18—22. (18) made, or ornamented with carved work, in the wood, wh. took shape of cherubim, palm trees, etc. two faces, comp. ch. i. 10. As carved on the flat they could not show four faces. (19) made through, or the design was repeated all through the house. (20) unto . . door, comp. up to the windows, vs. 16. (21) posts, or side pilasters. squared, not round, nor arched. face of the sanctuary, the clause is to be connected with vs. 22. Perhaps: "and in front of the sanctuary (the holiest) was the appearance as the appearance 22 of an altar of wood, three cubits the height thereof," etc. So the Sept. In the holy place in front of the holiest there stood an object having the appearance of an altar of wood. —Cam. B. (22) altar, of incense, Ex. xxx. i, etc.^a table, another word for an altar.^b The only article mentioned in the holy place before the Lord, in front of the holy of holies.^c

The Magic of the Inner Life.—The Arabs have a saying about the palm-tree, that it stands with its feet in salt water and its head in the sun. They often cannot drink of the brackish water found in the oasis where the palm grows; but they tap the tree and drink the sweet palm wine. The palm-tree, by the magic of its inner life, can so change the elements found in the unkindly soil around it that they minister to its growth and strength and fruit-bearing.—J. B. Johnston.

23—26. (23) two doors, 1 Ki. vi. 31. The holy place and the holy of holies "each had one door composed of two turning (or, folding) leaves, ornamented, like the walls of the house, with carvings of cherubim and palms." (24) turning leaves, the leaves in turn had two leaves, each door therefore had four small leaves like a screen. (25) made, or carved, thick planks, made to form a kind of landing of wood in front of the porch on the outside. (26) narrow windows, ch. xl. 16. thick planks.

The Ideal Sanctuary.—What are the chief impressions suggested by this description of the ideal sanctuary. The prophet has no care for the element of ecclesiastical architecture; aesthetics do not appeal to his idea of worship. His conceptions of true worship are conveyed to us by the mathematical precision with wh. he outlines the ground plan. It is obvious enough that the design is influenced by certain ruling principles, of which the most conspicuous are these three: separation, gradation, and symmetry. And these again symbolise three aspects of the one great idea of holiness, which the prophet desired to see embodied in the whole constitution of the Hebrew state as the guarantee of lasting fellowship between Jehovah and Israel. What Ezekiel did was to carry out the idea of separateness with a thoroughness never before attempted, and in such a way as to make the whole arrangements of the sanctuary an impressive object lesson on the holiness of Jehovah.—Exp. B.

CHAPTER THE FORTY-SECOND.

1-4. (1) utter, or outer. This would be the priests' court; some prefer to regard these chambers as connected with the separate building, ch. xli. 12, and so in the outer court of the people. chamber, better, block of chambers.^a (2) Before, etc., better, "unto the place whose length was," etc. (3) gallery, or row of chambers. (4) vss. 4-6 may be read: "And before the chambers was a walk of 10 cubits breadth inward, with a length of 100 cubits; and their doors were toward the north. (5) Now the upper chambers were shorter; for the galleries took away from them compared with the lower and middle (chambers) in room. (6) For they were in three stories, and they had not pillars like the pillars of those in the outer court; therefore" etc.—Cam. B. [For an adequate description of these buildings of the inner court compare the Pulp. Com. or the Cam. B. where diagrams of the temple may be found.] walk, or cloister, dividing the building into two sets of rooms, one half of wh. looked into the outer court, the other into the inner. one cubit, no doubt should be "100 cubits."

Note on vss. 1-4.—These chambers were intended for shelter, rest, and refreshment for those who waited on God in worship; every necessary comfort and convenience was provided. The priests were wholly devoted to their sacred calling; they renounced the world and all its most tempting prizes, and gave themselves up body and soul to a life-long consecration to the work of the Temple. The law of worship demanded this complete self-renunciation; and at the same time it secured to the servant of God everything that was essential to his well-being and to help him in his hallowed work. The minister of the Divine Word must be relieved from the fret and care of worldly things, that he may be free to apply himself with a whole-hearted abandon to the study and interpretation of spiritual things (1 Tim. iv. 15).—Geo. Barlow.

5-9. (5) shorter, or shortened.^b were higher, R. V. "took away from these, more than from the lower," etc. (6) not pillars, "the two upper stories had balconies standing out of them, the breadth of which was taken out of the rooms themselves, and made them so much narrower, bec. the weight of the balconies was not supported by pillars, as the rooms over the cloisters of the outward court were, but only by the wall." (7) wall, or fence... (8) length, from N. to S. (9) entry, or passage into the court.

The Chambers, though near the Temple, were separate from it, were strictly private, placed in the midst of stillness and retirement favorable to meditation and prayer. The power of the worker for God in public is acquired by diligent devotion in private. God is known in the greatness and glory of His character and the wisdom and righteousness of His ways; not in the midst of noise and uproar, but in quietness and solitude. The thinker must isolate himself for the time being from all distraction, and quietly and prayerfully wait on God. "Be still, and know that I am God" (Ps. xlv. 10). Not in the wild commotion and brazen clangor of the battlefield, not in the whizzing hurricane of national strife and uproar, not in the rush and worry of excessive worldly care, are the holy secrets of Divine things divulged to the soul, but in the solitude of retirement, in quiet for a day and then dies a natural death; or it may be a live plant, dally unfolding its blossoms with sweetness and beauty that all may share." — Lucy Larcom.

^a "There were two equal clusters of chambers on the north and south of the Gizzrah, or separate place. These two clusters of chambers were one hundred cubits from east to west, and fifty cubits fr. north to south, and they had three stories." — Wordsworth.

^b "The building rose in terraces, as was usual in Bab. architecture, and so each of the two upper stories receded from the one below it." — Spk. Com.

"The Bible, without a spiritual life to interpret it, is like a trellis on which no vine grows—bare, angular, and in the way. The Bible, with a spiritual life, is like a trellis covered with a luxuriant vine—beautiful, odorous, and heavy with purple clusters shining through the leaves."—Beecher.

"Dependable people!—their price is above rubles. The world would be a dreary place, if there were not some Christians who need no prodding nor watching, who can be told and then trusted. A wise old Roman once said, 'I do not like a soldier who moves his hands in marching and his feet in battle.'"—S. S. Times.

"Hold fast to the Bible as the sheet-anchor of our liberties; write its precepts on your hearts and practice them in your lives. To the influence of this book we are indebted for the progress made in true civilization, and to this we must look as our guide in the future." — U. S. Grant.

a Le. xvi. 23.

"What a pin is when the diamond has dropped from its setting, that is the Bible when its emotive truths have been taken away."—Beecher.

a Here meaning, devoted to only common uses.

b "The lowness of the wall renders it unfit for the purpose of defence. But its square form is the emblem of the kingdom that cannot be shaken, resting on Prophets and Apostles, Jesus Christ being the chief cornerstone."—Fausset.

"Thus every way it exhibits to the eye of faith the true ideal of that pure and the hush and stillness of some meditative retreat, where the tocsin of war is never heard and the peal of cannon and crash of arms never penetrate. Not that we are to indulge in a life of useless quietism and inactivity. We must silence our meaningless clamor and pause in our demonstrative activities in order that God may speak and may work His purpose in us: then we receive our commission and are inspired to speak and work for Him.—Geo. Barlow.

10—12. (10) building i.e. "the wall of the outer court with its stories of cells." (11) way before them, appearance to one looking at them from the front. appearance, lxx. "measure." The thought is that the chambers on the N. and S. side of the temple were just alike.

The Bible.—As in Beethoven's matchless music there runs one idea, worked out through all the changes of measure and of key, now almost hidden, now breaking out in rich, natural melody, whispered in the treble, murmured in the bass, dimly suggested in the prelude, but growing clearer and clearer as the work proceeds, winding gradually back until it ends in the key in which it began, and closes in triumphant harmony; so throughout the whole Bible there runs one great idea: man's ruin by sin, and his redemption by grace; in a word, Jesus Christ, the Saviour. This runs through the Old Testament, that prelude to the New, dimly promised at the fall, and more clearly to Abraham; typified in the ceremonies of the law; all the events of sacred history paving the way for His coming; His descent proved in the genealogies of Ruth and Chronicles; spoken of as Shiloh by Jacob, as the Star by Balaam, as the Prophet by Moses; the David of the Psalms; the Redeemer looked for by Job; the Beloved of the Song of Songs. We find Him in the sublime strains of the lofty Isaiah; in the writings of the tender Jeremiah; in the mysteries of the contemplative Ezekiel; in the visions of the beloved Daniel; the great idea growing clearer and clearer as the time drew on. Then the full harmony broke out in the song of the angels, "Glory to God in the highest; on earth peace, goodwill towards men." And Evangelists and Apostles taking up the theme, the strain closes in the same key in which it began; the devil, who troubled the first paradise, for ever excluded from the second; man restored to the favor of God; and Jesus Christ the key-note of the whole.—H. W. Beecher.

13—16 (13) eat, etc., Le. iii. 3, 10, vii. 9—11, x. 12, vi. 30, vii. 6. (14) there, i.e. in these appointed places, within the specially holy precincts of the inner court.^a those things which are for, R. V., "that wh. pertaineth to" i.e. the outer court. (15) gate . . east, i.e. the eastern gate of the outer court. (16) measuring reed, whose length is given in ch. xli. 8.

Sacerdotal Sanctity.—I. Ceremonial holiness. This is described as affecting. 1. The priests. 2. Their residences. 3. Their food. 4. Their garments. 5. Their offerings. II. The spiritual significance of ceremonial holiness. A complete explanation is perhaps not possible. But it is evident that it was intended to convey to Israel and to mankind: 1. A conception of the holiness of God. 2. A conception of the holy character of acceptable worship. 3. A conception of the holy services of obedience and praise.—Thomson.

17—20. (17) round about, i.e. including the precincts (20) profane place,^b i.e. Jerusalem itself only called profane, as not being specially consecrated.^b

The Grandeur of the Divine Temple.—1. It is of vast extent. He measured the east, north, south, and west sides, each side being 500 reeds, —in all a square of 1 1-7 of a mile—exceeding the limits of all ancient Jerusalem. This signifies the great enlargement of the Church of God in future times. 2. It is immovably secure. "He measured by the four sides." Its square form betokened the strength and solidity of the whole—an emblem of the kingdom that cannot be moved. 3. It marks off an unmistakable distinction between the holy and profane.—Hom. Com.

The Bible to be Learned by the Heart.—Bring down from the dusty garret an old file of papers, and while the venerable old dame sits near the fire, almost unconscious of passing things, read there the simple names of two that long years ago were married. They are nothing at all to the antiquarian reader, a stranger, seeking more lore; but how much they are to the aged one, who feels as if resurrection had dawned upon her mind, and before whom all the long past rises up, brighter and clearer the further it goes back towards childhood! For a moment she sees all this in the reading of those words, and but for a moment; then they sing again under the ashes, and go out. Even thus it is with the passages of God's Word. On the surface they are smooth and simple; but if your heart knows how to plumb them, great depths, and often unsearchable, there are in them. But as the Bible is but a record of life, and as it addresses itself to life again, so, for its comprehension, there must have been life-experience. Dictionaries and grammars are like keys to a house. A key can unlock the outward door, but cannot introduce you to the people that live there, nor tell you what they are. And so, though dictionaries and grammars, and exegetical and hermeneutical helps can introduce you into the books of the Bible, your own heart must be your teacher after that, or you will have none. If you have no depths, no wants, no joys, no sorrows, with which to read, and through which to understand, then you cannot interpret this world-book. For the Bible is the heart-book of the world. Only the heart can ever tell its secret meanings; for "with the heart man believeth unto righteousness."—Beecher.

CHAPTER THE FORTY-THIRD.

1-6. (1) gate . . east, the eastern gate of the priests' court. (2) glory, etc., the visible token of God's coming to dwell in this new temple. See for His forsaking the temple, ch. x. 19, xi. 23. voice . . waters, see Re. i. 15.* (3) vision, ch. i. 3, iii. 23. to destroy, i.e. to prophesy the destruction of. (4) came . . house, returning to His place in the holy of holies. (5) filled the house, comp. Ex. xl. 34, 35; 1 Ki. viii. 10, 11. (6) heard him speaking, R. V., "heard one speaking. . . and a man," etc. The man is merely the divine voice and word personified and interposed between the Lord and the prophet, hence though Ezekiel appears to hear one speaking from the house, the voice immediately takes the shape of a man beside him.—Com. B.

The Revelation of the Glory of Jehovah.—I. It was a revelation of the Divine Word. 2. It was a revelation of visible splendor. 3. It was a revelation of overwhelming majesty. II. It was a revelation of the glory of Jehovah consecrating His temple. III. It was a revelation requiring spiritual help to see and understand. 1. The help of the spirit is necessary to see the visions of God. 2. The help of the spirit is necessary to interpret the Word of God.—Geo. Barlow.

7-9. (7) he said, this was the voice the Prophet heard from the Glory. the place, better, "this is the place." throne . . feet, comp. Is. lxvi. 1, 2. defile, by yielding to idolatries, and bringing into it idolatrous rites. in . . places, R. V., Marg. "in their death" i.e. the sepulchres* of the Kings had been placed so near the temple that defilement had taken place. Contact with a dead body produced under all circumstances the highest degree of ceremonial uncleanness, and nothing could have been more abhorrent to Ezekiel's priestly sense of propriety than the close proximity of dead men's bones to the house in which Jehovah was to dwell. In order to guard against the recurrence of these abuses in the future it was necessary that all secular buildings should be removed to a safe distance from the Temple precincts.—Exp. B. (8) their thresholds, ref. to the fact that the royal palace and Solomon's temple virtually occupied the same enclosure.

Seeing God.—A wise answer was that given by a humble young Hindoo convert when met by one of those enemies of truth that are found in heathen and Christian lands alike, and whose objections are much the same wherever met. "My god can be seen by every one," said a Hindoo who wanted to confuse and deride him; "for he is there at the end of the street. What is the use of a god you can't see?" Then the boy asked a question in turn. "Have you ever seen the tax-collector?" "Yes, often," said the Hindoo. "The governor?" "Well, rarely." "Have you ever seen the great queen empress?" "No; how should a poor villager like me ever see her?" "Ah,!" rejoined Vadivelu triumphantly, "the little people glorious Temple which, resting on the foundation of the eternal Son and glrt round with all the perfections of God-head, shall shine forth the best and noblest workmanship of Heaven."

—Fairbairn.

"It is in the desert and on the mount that God speaks to man face to face. The desert is the weaned heart, the mount is the lowly spirit."

e "The noise of purling streams is grateful, of a roaring sea dreadful."

—Mat. Henry.

"The glory of the God of Israel must take possession of the new Sanctuary, as in time past of the Tabernacle and of Solomon's Temple. But it is in a different form."

The glory was of old veiled in a cloud resting on the mercy-seat, as though the mercy and the power of God were in some sort restricted to the material building and the people to whom it belonged. Now a personal and living God enters the Sanctuary, condescending to occupy it, not merely as a fixed dwelling-place, but as a centre from whence His power and mercy radiate freely to the utmost ends of the earth. Hence amidst the detailed preparations of the house no mention is made of mercy-seat, so important a part in the former Sanctuary."

—Spk. Com.

^a Is. ii. 2, 3; Mi. iv. 1, 2.

"Conscience is not free from hallucinations—we aim at personal righteousness, for instance, and hit the target of bigotry, hypocrisy and pharisaical conceit."

^b "The altar regarded as to its height is called Har-El, the Mount of God; and in its area, or upper surface, is called Arie, the lion of God, or as some render it, the hearth of God, as consuming the sacrifices."—Wordsworth.

^a Le. iv. 12; He. xlii. 11.

^b Le. iv. 27, 28, 30.

"He who has given us our work to do, can easily commit it to other hands."

^c "In the second temple no sacrifice was complete without the use of salt, and the Rabbis tell us that there was a great heap of salt close to the altar, always ready for use, and that the inclined plane to the altar was kept covered with salt."—Eder-sheim.

^d "Under the guidance of the Epistle to the Hebrews we cannot fail to recognise in this vision the symbol of the purification of the Church of God by the cleansing blood of Christ, Victim and Priest, Heb. viii. ix., x."—Spk. Com.

you can see any day, but the great people seldom or never. We can see your gods in street-corners, because they are such little ones, but Christ, our God, the great and true, is in the heavens. We cannot see him now, but those who love him here shall see him hereafter."—C. E. World.

10—12. (10) measure the pattern, so as to prove their returning obedience by exactly carrying out the directions given. (11) write it, so that they may carefully study it. (12) whole limit, all embraced within the enclosing walls, and even the mountain itself.^a

The Temple of the Future (vs. 10).—This vision illustrates for us—I. The characteristics of the kingdom of God; it is sacred, it is conspicuous, it is vast, it is complete, it is sacrificial, it is beautiful, it is God-inhabited. II. The qualification for having to do with this kingdom.—U. R. Thomas.

13—17. (13) cubit, the bottom was the basement in wh. sat the altar; it was a cubit in height and extended a cubit beyond the altar itself, see ch. xl. 5. higher place, or back. The edge was arranged to keep the blood from running on to the pavement. It formed a kind of shooting and led into a drain. (14) settle, or stage. "The narrowings, or in-benchings, of the altar are here called settles." (15) four horns, Ex. xxvii. 2.^b (16) squares, sides, see Ex. xxvii. 1; Re. xxi. 16. (17) settle, the higher one, vs. 14. stairs, or steps.

18—22. (19) young bullock, Le. viii. 14. The statement in vss. 19, 20 is somewhat elliptical, the writer's object being to advert specially to the difference between the sin-offering on the first day and that on the following days. Hence he describes the ritual of the sin-offering on the first day fully, omitting to refer to the burnt-offering, which he mentions only in connexion with the second and following days.—Cam. B. (20) four horns, vs. 15. cleanse, purify fr. sin. purge, to make atonement for. (21) appointed place, comp. Ex. xxix. 14^a (22) kid.. goats, R. V., "he-goat" cleanse, by sprinkling the blood.^b

Consecration.—The consecration of the altar corresponds to the consecration of the people to Jehovah, their entire surrender and presentation of themselves to Him. The burnt-offerings usher in the class of offerings which obtain in the state of grace. The justified man lives henceforth not to himself; the service of the Lord which is ministered in the Church is symbolized by this purpose of the altar of burnt-offering; hence there is no act of worship without burnt-offering. The self-surrendering reliance on grace continues to be taken into account, as in the past so for the future, and so the burnt-offering may be called the perpetual offering of the Church of God.—Lange.

23—27. (23) ram, comp. Ex. xxix. 31; Le. viii. 22. (24) cast salt, Le. ii. 13; Mk. ix. 49.^c (25) Seven days, the same sacrifices were to be offered on each of these days, except that a bullock was offered on the first day. (26) consecrate themselves, R. V., "consecrate it," i.e. the altar. The above passage deals entirely with the consecration of the altar, according to Mosaic regulations. (27) peace offerings, or thank offerings.^d Mal. i. 11. accept you, ch. xx. 40, 41; Ro. xii. 1; 1 Pe. ii. 5.

Acceptance.—The purpose of the temple is the establishment and maintenance of harmonious relations between God and the sons of men. By sin those relations have been interrupted; by religion they are restored. What was symbolized by the material temple at Jerusalem—its priesthood and services and sacrifices.—is realized in the spiritual temple of the new covenant, in which Christ is the Sacrifice and the Priest, and in which the Holy Spirit sheds the Shechinah-glory through the holiest of all. Acceptance thus takes the place of estrangement. I. Acceptance is of God's grace, and is undeserved. II. Acceptance is in virtue of the high priest's mediation and intercession. III. Acceptance is for the obedient, the compliant, the submissive. IV. Acceptance is alike of the person and of the service. V. Acceptance involves the enjoyment of all the manifestations and consequences of the Divine favor. Application.—1. One aim of a spiritual ministry to men is to convince them that in their sinful state they are without acceptance with God. 2. Another aim of such a ministry is to exhibit the divinely appointed method of obtaining and enjoying acceptance with God. 3. Yet another aim is to expose false and delusive representations of the way of acceptance.—Thomson.

CHAPTER THE FORTY-FOURTH.

Ch. xliv.—xlv. The Priesthood, Revenues, Ritual of this New Sanctuary. Temple and priesthood are so related that a reform of the one implies of necessity a reform of the other. It is therefore not in itself surprising that Ezekiel's legislation should include a scheme for the reorganization of the Temple priesthood. But these general considerations hardly prepare us for the sweeping and drastic changes contemplated in the forty-fourth chapter of the book.—Exp. B.

1-3. (1) outward sanctuary, R. V., "outer," or court of the priests. "Only a prince of the house of David might sit down in the priests' court." (2) shall be shut, i.e. usually shut, and only opened for one person, and on special occasions for him. Lord . . . entered, by the symbol of His presence passing in that way." (3) the prince, ch. xxxiv. 24. The head of the nation regarded as the vicegerent and earthly representative of God. eat bread, a custom connected with sacrifices.^b "A religious feast made of the remainder of a sacrifice."

Shutting the Gate Through which the King has Entered.—Caron, in his Account of Japan, tells us that whenever any of the chief nobles builds a new palace, he causes an entrance to be made for common use, and also one which is more elegant, adorned with carvings from top to bottom, varnished and gilt. This is covered over with planks, in order that it may not be damaged either by the sun or by the rain; and it remains thus covered till the emperor goes to feast in the new-built palace. As soon as he has passed in and out of it, it is again shut and covered up, nor is it either opened or uncovered again, except upon a like occasion, because no one may enjoy the honor of treading on the same threshold with the emperor; whilst at the same time it would be considered as derogatory to his majesty to pass over one that had been worn. In the words of the text "This gate shall be shut. It is for the prince."

4-8. (4) north gate, ch. xl. 20. glory, etc., comp. 1 Ki. viii. 10, 11. (5) entering . . . going forth, these were carefully arranged so as to secure that nothing profane or idolatrous should be admitted within the temple precincts. (6) let it suffice,^a let the past suffice; don't repeat it any more. (7) strangers R. V., "aliens," 2 Ki. xi. 7; 1 Ki. xiv. 27, 28. Here we have historical evidence of the admission to the sanctuary of a class of foreigners answering in all respects to the uncircumcised aliens of Ezekiel's legislation. That the practice of enlisting foreign mercenaries for the guard continued till the reign of Josiah seems to be indicated by an allusion in the book of Zephaniah, where the prophet denounces a body of men in the service of the king who observed the Philistine custom of "leaping over the threshold."—Exp. B. my bread, the fat and the blood were regarded as peculiarly appropriated to God.^b because of, R. V., "to add unto." (8) set keepers, i.e. set them, the aliens, as keepers without solicitude for the holiness of God's house. charge, Le. viii. 35. for yourselves, i.e. at your own pleasure, not according to the revealed will and law.^c

The Attempt to Satisfy the Claims of Religion by Proxy.—There are now many Jews in Jerusalem kept in idleness by their more wealthy brethren in Europe, who hope by this expedient to secure for themselves the merit of living and dying in the Holy City, without undergoing the irksome experience of actual residence. In Roman Catholic countries it is common to devote a sum of money to the payment of the priest who is to say so many Masses on behalf of a person. Among ourselves there is an unconfessed but common notion that the minister in some way perform the offices of religion on behalf of the people, who stand by as idle spectators, and yet enjoy the religion on behalf of the people, who stand by as idle spectators, and yet enjoy the fruits of his vicarious service. There is a common feeling that the mere attendance at church when a service is being conducted is of some religious efficacy, the officiating minister carrying on the real worship on behalf of the congregation, which may be listless and indifferent, so long as he discharges his duty faithfully. Or perhaps the religion by proxy is attempted in the way of ^a Eze. xliii. 2.^b Ge. xxxi. 54; Ex. xviii. 12, xxiv. 11; 1 Co. x. 18.^c "A difference is to be put between common and sacred things, between God's name and other names, between His day and other days, His Book and other books, His institutions and other observances; and a distance to be put between our worldly and religious actions, so as still to go about the worship of God with a solemn pause."—M. Henry.^a 1 Pe. iv. 3.^b Le. iii. 16, xvil. 11.^c "Or, 'Ye have not yourselves kept the charge of My holy things, but have set others as keepers of My charge in My sanctuary for yourselves.'"—Maurer.

"The more diligently I pursue my search into these oracles of eternal truth, the Scriptures, I perceive a wider, a deeper, an ever-increasing fund of spiritual treasures."—Hervéy.

"My practice, since I was thirty years old, has been to read in the Bible the first thing I do every morning. This practice I have followed, with but few interruptions, for fifty years."—John Quincy Adams.

"That Book is the rock on which our republic rests."—Andrew Jackson.

"The Bible furnishes the only fitting vehicle to express the thoughts that overwhelm us when contemplating the stellar universe." — O. M. Mitchell, the astronomer. 2 Chr. xxxv. 11.

* Very few Levites returned from the captivity. See Ezra ii. 40—42; Neh. vii. 43—45; comp. Ezr. ii. 36—39, and viii. 15, 18, 19.

"The gap in the number of Levites was filled up by 220 Nethinim (given ones), prob. original strange and captives, who were held by the Jews in lowest repute." — Eder-shelm.

f "To perform the servile offices belonging to My temple and worship." — Lowth.

a "The material of wh. the four vestments of the ordinary priests were made was 'linen,' or more accurately, 'byssus,' the white shining cotton stuff of Egypt. These two qualities of the byssus are especially marked as characteristic, and on them part of the symbolic meaning depended."

—Spk. Com.

b "Wool soon induces perspiration in the sultry east, and so becomes uncleanly." — Faustus.

c "Jerome supposes that the Jewish priests were forbidden to shave their heads, thereby to distinguish them fr. several of the heathen priests, particularly the Eg. priests of Isis and Serapis." — Lowth.

d "Long hair was a sign of effeminacy." 1 Cor. xi. 14. — Wordsworth.

* 2 Sa. xiv. 26.

money payments. Lastly, living in a Christian land, belonging to a Christian home, and having Christian associates are regarded as matters of some religious value by people who possess no real religion of their own. Thus they too would be religious by proxy.—W. F. Adeney.

9—14. (9) shall enter, to perform service. (10) gone . . me. R. V., "But the Levites that went." The exclusion of the Levites is founded on the unquestioned moral ground that their unfaithfulness to the basic principles of the national religion deserved this permanent degradation. By yielding themselves to the popular clamor for impure and idolatrous worship the Levites had caused Israel to stumble and profane Jehovah. 2 Chr. xxxvi. 14. bear their iniquity, i.e. the due consequence of their iniquity. (11) ministers, or attendants at the gates; porters. slay, etc., this was the work of Levites.^d The Levites mentioned were to minister to the priests.^e (12) caused, better, were an occasion to; they led the people by their bad example. (13) near, so as to be in actual contact with the holy things. (14) keepers, i.e. doorkeepers and attendants.^f

Gone astray.—You cannot stop one inch away from God; one inch means two, and two inches mean a foot, and the foot soon grows into furlongs and miles. When some men do not pray it is as if there were silence in the whole universe; their voices seem necessary to the completeness of things; a great awful breach or rupture has been made in the music of creation when such voices cease their adoration and the utterance of their desires. Here, then, is a wonderful difference in men. Sometimes one man is as a thousand. If that one man be found true he will bring the thousand right, if they can be brought right; but if that one man be gone astray and far away from God, who can set the thousand in their places? It is as if a section of the stars had been shattered.—Parker.

15—19. (15) sons of Zadok, ch. xl. 46, xliii. 19. fat and the blood, vs. 7. (16) sanctuary, the first chamber, known as the holy place. table, or altar of burnt offering. (17) linen garments,^a including the linen breeches, the coat, the girdle, and the bonnet. no wool, regarded as unclean,^b vs. 18. (18) bonnets, or caps. sweat, regarded as unclean. (19) utter court, or outer court of the people. with their garments, i. e. while having on their special priestly garments.

The Use of a Bible.—It was customary in Cromwell's time for his soldiers to carry each a Bible in his pocket. Among others, a profligate young man was ordered to attack some fortress. During the engagement a bullet had perforated his Bible, and gone so far as to rest opposite these words in Ecclesiastes: "Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth, and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thy heart, and in the sight of thine eyes; but know thou, that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment." The words, so appropriate to his case, powerfully affected his mind, and proved by the blessing of God the means of his conversion. He used to observe that the Bible had been the happy means of saving both his soul and body.—J. Evans.

20—35. (20) shave, etc.,^c Le. xxi. 5. grow long,^d wh. was an ordinary sign of mourning. poll,^e cut and trim. (21) drink wine, Le. x. 9. The prohibition refers to times when the priests were actually engaged in holy service. (22) widow, Le. xxi. 13. The Levitical law for the high priest is extended to all priests. her . . away, i.e. a divorced woman. (23) teach, etc., Le. x. 10, xi.—xvi.; Mal. ii. 7. (24) controversy, i. e. when controversies or disputes arise among the people. in judgment, R. V., "to judge." (25) dead person, Le. xxi. 1, 11. (26) cleansed, fr. the defilement ensuing in relation to a dead body, Nu. xix. 11. The relations of these requirements to the corresponding parts of the Levitical law are somewhat complicated. The great point of difference is that Ezekiel knows nothing of the unique privileges and sanctity of the high priest.—Exp. B. (27) his sin offering, Le. iv. 3. (28) it shall be, etc., Cam. B., "they shall have no inheritance;" while the remaining tribes had portions of the promised land, the priests received none. (29) eat, etc., for their necessary support. dedicated, or devoted thing, Le. xxvii. 21, 28. (30) first, chief, or best. oblation, or offering; gift from the produce of the ground.

dough, made from the new corn. Nu. xv. 20. (31) dead of itself,* Ex. xxii. 31; Le. xxii. 8.

Infidels and the Bible.—No matter how infidel philosophers may regard the Bible; they may say that Genesis is awry, and that the Psalms are more than half-bitter imprecations, and the prophecies only the fantasies of brain-bewildered men, and the Gospels weak laudations of an impostor, and the Epistles only letters of a mad Jew, and that the whole book has had its day; I shall cling to it until they show me a better revelation. The Bible emptied, effete, worn-out! If all the wisest men of the world were placed man to man, they could not sound the shallowest depths of the Gospel of John. O philosophers! break the shell, and fly out and let me hear how you can sing. Not of passion, I know that already; not of worldly power, I hear that everywhere; but teach me, through your song, how to find joy in sorrow, strength in weakness, and light in darkest days; how to bear buffeting and scorn, how to welcome death, and to pass through its ministration into the sphere of life; and this not for me only, but for the whole world that groans and travails in pain; and until you can do this, speak not to me of a better revelation. —H. W. Beecher.

CHAPTER THE FORTY-FIFTH.

1-5. (1) by lot, or allotment, apportionment. Reference here is to the portion assigned to Jehovah, and used for His sanctuary, priests and Levites. oblation, Heb., heave-offering.^a reeds, this word is supplied by the translators, prob, incorrectly; "cubits" is much better. ten thousand, R. V. marg., "twenty thousand." (2) sanctuary, including the entire temple-area. suburbs, void places; ground immediately about the temple-walls, wh. might not be built on. (3) this measure, vs. 1. (4) for the priests, for their work, dwellings, and maintenance. (5) twenty chambers, LXX. trans. better, "for cities to dwell in."^b Devotement and Consecration.—In the ideal kingdom there was to be a certain portion of the land devoted to sacred objects—to the sanctuary of Jehovah and to the residence of his ministers. This was called "a holy portion;" it was "an oblation unto the Lord." Thus in the very heart of the metropolis, in the most commanding situation, on the very best possible site, there was an abiding witness of the presence and the claims of God, and a continual recognition of and response to those claims on the part of the nation. In a country as Christian as ours the towers and spires of our sanctuaries, rising heavenward under every sky, standing strong and even thick among the homes and the shops and counting-houses of town and city, bear their testimony that God is remembered, that Jesus Christ is honored and worshiped by the people of the land. But better than this devotement of land and this building of sanctuaries, good as that is, is the consecration of heart and life to the Person and the service of the Redeemer.—Clarkson.

6-8. (6) possession. city, or the portion to be occupied by the city. for the whole house, i. e. it was to be regarded as belonging to the nation, and free for the use of the entire people. (7) for the prince, for his palace and private estate.^c His portion is thus carefully defined to prevent future encroachments such as there had been in the past.^d length . . portions, R. V., "in length answerable to one of the portions." (8) oppress, by seizing on private property.

Supposed Loss of the Bible.—[The late Henry Rogers, in his Eclipse of Faith, records a dream which he entitles "The Blank Bible," in which it appeared that every copy of the Bible had in a single night become blank paper. The following is an extract from his description.] It was very early suggested that the whole Bible had again and again been quoted piecemeal in one book or other—that it had impressed its own image on the surface of human literature, and had been reflected on its course as the stars on a stream. But alas! when lost, on investigation it was found as vain to expect that the gleam of starlight would still remain mirrored in the water when the clouds had veiled the stars themselves, as that the bright characters of the Bible would remain reflected in the books of men when they had been erased from the book of God.

* "The Mohammedans are forbidden to eat that wh. dieth of itself or killed by the horns of another beast; and that which hath been torn by a wild beast, and that which hath been sacrificed unto idols." —Gadsby.

"In God's service there is no filthy lucre. The Lord purifies everything for them who eat with Him." —Diedrich.

^a "So called bec. when anything was offered to God, the offerer raised the hand." Ex. xxv. 2, xxix 24, 27.

^b Nu. xxxv. 2. "Forgiveness that waits for repentance is a thing to be repented of."

^c "On either side of the 25,000 reeds a strip of land, running westwards to the sea, eastwards to the Jordan, formed the possession of the prince." —Spk. Com.

^d 1 Sa. viii. 14, etc.; 2 Ki. xxiii. 35; Je. xxii.

A proverb Indian na bob going along the streets one day, was attracted by the sounds proceeding from a mission school, and he drew near to listen. The boys were reading the fifth chapter of Matthew. The eyes of the prince flashed with unwonted fire; and when they had finished their lesson, he exclaimed, "Well, if you only live that chapter as well as you read it, I will never say another word against Christianity."

During the persecution of the Nonconformists, in the reign of James II., one of them copied out the whole Bible in shorthand for his own use, fearing the re-establishment of popery, and the suppression of the Holy Scriptures.

a "Your ejections of My people."

—Wordsworth.

b 1 Ki. vii. 26, 38; 2 Chr. ii. 10, iv. 5; Is. v. 10.

c 1 Ki. x. 17; Ezr. ii. 69; Ne. vii. 71.

The following lines are said to have been found in Lord Byron's Bible:

"Within this awful volume lies the mystery of mysteries; O, happiest they of human race to whom our God has given grace to hear, to read, to fear, to pray, to lift the latch and force the way! But better had they ne'er been born who read to doubt or read to scorn."

d 1 Ki. v. 11; 2 Chr. ii. 10, xxvii. 5.

"The surest way to reveal your weakness is to hide your motives." — Ivan Paulin.

"To find Christ is to lose selfishness and find yourself."

On inspection, it was found that every text, every phrase which had been quoted, not only in books of devotion and theology, but in those of poetry and fiction, had been remorselessly expunged. Never before had I had any adequate idea of the extent to which the Bible had molded the intellectual and moral life of the last eighteen centuries, nor how intimately it had interfused itself with habits of thought and modes of expression; nor how naturally and extensively its comprehensive imagery and language had been introduced into human writings, and most of all where there had been most of genius. A vast portion of literature became instantly worthless, and was transformed into so much waste-paper. It was almost impossible to look into any book of merit, and read ten pages together, without coming to some provoking erasures and mutilations, some "hiatus valde defendi," which made whole passages perfectly unintelligible. Many of the sweet passages of Shakespeare were converted into unmeaning nonsense, from the absence of those words which his own all but divine genius had appropriated from a still diviner source. As to Milton, he was nearly ruined, as might naturally be supposed. Walter Scott's novels were filled with perpetual lacunæ. I hoped it might be otherwise with the philosophers, and so it was: but even here it was curious to see what strange ravages the visitation had wrought. Some of the most beautiful and comprehensive of Bacon's aphorisms were reduced to enigmatical nonsense.

9—12. (9) suffice, ch. xlv. 8. exactions,^a lit. ejections, such as Ahab's, 1 Ki. xxi. 19. These minute details regarding the crown lands, etc., show the prophet's concern for the rights and welfare of the common people. (10) just . . bath, Le. xix. 35, 36; Pr. xi. 1. Just as later sovereigns were wont to meet their deficits by debasing the currency, so the kings of Judah had learned to augment their revenue by a systematic falsification of weights and measures. The taxes were surreptitiously increased by the use of a large shekel (for weighing out money payments) and a large bath and ephah (for measuring tribute paid in kind).—Exp. Bib. (11) bath, a measure for fluids.^b homer, distinguish from omer, Ex. xvi. 36. (12) gerahs, Ex. xxx. 13. maneh, or pound.^c The Sept. reads: "And the shekel shall be twenty gerahs; five (shekels) shall be five, and ten shekels ten, and fifty shekels shall be your maneh (mina)." The statement that "five shekels shall be five," etc., does not imply that there were five and ten shekel pieces but means that just weighing of money shall prevail, and five go for five, no more and no less.—Cam. B.

Insincere Reform.—I happened to reach Paris the day after the Czar of all the Russias left the city, and the whole gay metropolis was several degrees gayer than usual by reason of the wonderfully elaborate decorations in his honor. Walking along the Champs Elysées, the most magnificent avenue, which leads from the Tuilleries to the Arc de Triomphe, I was almost startled to see that many of the trees by the roadside were putting forth buds and blossoms in those bleak October days as if it were genial springtime. But upon looking a little more closely, I saw that the cherry blossoms and peach blows and apple buds were all made of tissue paper, and were skilfully wired to the trees in countless thousands, evidently to give the Czar the impression that in his honor the seasons had been reversed, and spring for once had come in October. But even while I looked at these unnatural glories of the autumn, an army of workmen came along and began to strip the streets of their decorations; and I suppose that after a day or two scarcely a paper blossom could be found on one of the wind-swept trees.—F. E. Clark.

13—17. (13) oblation, the tribute to be given to the prince. (14) cor, prob. a synonym for homer;^d the due in oil was one hundredth part. (15) lamb, or kid. peace offerings, or thank-offerings. (17) prince's part, his special duty as the prince. prepare, i. e. provide. reconciliation, R. V., "atonement." solemnities, R. V., "stated feasts."

System in Benevolent Giving.—Systematic giving is less difficult than irregular giving. II. Systematic giving is generous giving. People who give without method or consideration rarely know how little they give. III. Systematic giving should be wise giving. Spasmodic charity may be very generous, but it is likely to be foolish and misdirected. A more thoughtful method would lead to a more just apportioning of the funds that are contributed. It is not right that the cause of Christ should depend on irregular gushes of liberality.—Pul. Com.

xlvi. 18—xlvi. 24. The offerings appointed for the stated seasons. 18—21. (18) first month,^a see Le. xvi. 16. cleanse, Polychr. B. "Make atonement for." (19) upon the posts, etc., comp. ch. xliii. 20. (20) seventh month, Polychr. B. "in the seventh month on the first day of the month." Not for any one person in particular, but for the people bec. there may be among them one that erred through ignorance and thus caused Israel to profane God. (21) passover, Ex. xii, etc.

The Bible.—You find the Bible the patriot's charter-book, the child's delight, the old man's comfort, and the young man's guide. In its pages the sick and weary find the solace which they need, and the tempted meet with timely succor. Its words whisper hope and peace to the dying, and minister daily food to the healthy and vigorous household. With the pious music of its sublime or plaintive songs echo the roofs of ten thousand times ten thousand Christian temples, and the child's prayer, night and morn, is lisped forth in the simple and comprehensive words which were dictated by Him who is its central light.—Beard.

22—25. (22) prepare, or provide. (23) seven, etc., comp. Nu. xxviii. 19—24. kid of the goats, "he-goat." (24) meat offering, etc., vs. 11, 15. hin, sixth part of an ephah or bath. (25) feast .. days, Nu. xxix. 12. shall .. days, R. V., "in the feast, shall he do the like the seven days." This has ref. to the feast of the tabernacles, "the feast par excellence of the year."

The Feasts.—This order of solemn services does not follow exactly the order of Moses, of Solomon, or of Ezra, who, on the return from captivity, rearranged the festivals on the Mosaic pattern. Familiar as Ezekiel was with every detail of the Levitical law, this deviation can scarcely have been accidental, and we may herein recognise fresh indications that the whole vision is symbolical, representative of the times when, after the oblation of the one Sacrifice, reconciliation and sanctification were effected for man through the presence of God dwelling in the midst of the people.—Spk. Com.

CHAPTER THE FORTY-SIXTH.

1—4. (1) gate, etc., ch. xlv. 2, 3. "The system of external observances which he foreshadows in his vision was not meant to be the life of religion, but it was, so to speak, the trellis-work which was necessary to support the delicate tendrils of spiritual piety until the time when the spirit of filial worship should be the possession of every true member of the Church of God."—Exp. B. (2) worship .. gate,^b comp. Sol.'s position at the dedication, 2 Chr. vi. 12, 13.^c (3) people .. land, standing behind their prince, and represented by him. (4) burnt offering, comp. Nu. xxviii. 9.

Worship.—I. The object of worship is God only. II. The worshippers are the Church of the living God. III. The seat of acceptable worshippers is the heart. IV. The character of true worship corresponds with the nature and need of the worshippers. 1. There must be acknowledgment of the Divine attributes, contemplated with reverence. 2. There must be humiliation and confession of sin. 3. There must be the presentation of the due offering of gratitude to him from whom all blessings proceed. 4. There must be petitions and intercessions for, needed good. V. The expression and form of worship must vary with the individual worshiper and his circumstances. VI. The seasons for worship are both occasional and continuous.—Thomson.

5—8. (5) able to give, i.e. the amount is to be settled by his own ability and willingness. (6) new moon, Nu. xxviii. 11, 15, (7) meat offering, vs. 5. as his hand .. unto, R. V., "as he is able." (8) that gate, vs. 1.

Choose Your God.—I. What will you live for if not for God? 1. Pleasure. And what does this promise you? Live as you like, it says; but will it last? 2. Wealth. But will your wealth make you happy? Is a miser happy? 3. Praise. Fame says, I will blow my trumpet loud over ^a "The offerings here, and the manner of offering as to the sprinkling of the blood, etc., differ in many respects from the injunctions of the Levitical law." — Wordsworth.

"Do I cast away the Bible? No. But the Bible is like a telescope. If a man looks through his telescope, then he sees worlds beyond; but if he looks at his telescope, then he does not see anything but that. The Bible is a thing to be looked through to see that which is beyond; but most people only look at it; and so they only see the dead letter." Beecher.

^b "This worship was offered by bowing his head, and bowing down his face to the earth, or falling down upon the ground, as the posture of Dios worship is elsewhere described."

—Lowth.

^c "The prince occupies an analogous position, standing in front of the porch of the eastern gate of the inner court, while the priests are sacrificing before him." — Spk. Com.

"Pleasant is it to entertain the picture of ourselves in some future scene, planning wisely, feeling nobly, and executing with the holy triumph of the will; but it is a different thing—not in the green avenues of the future, but in the hot dust of the present moment—to do the duty that waits and wants me." —Anon.

"We do not know when we have given enough—let us give a little more. We can only give what is given us if we give all we have."

"The Bible will not be less, but rather more, prized by our occasionally turning from it to open another and equally divine volume, to read some pages of the Book of Nature."—Guthrie.

* Sons may have freehold rights, but servants only leasehold rights. "The Jubilee year was restored after the captivity."—Josephus.

"There is a pleasure in accumulating, but there is a nobler pleasure in giving. Gonsalvo, the great Spanish captain, used to say, 'Never stint your hand. There is no way of enjoying one's property like giving it away,' and he acted up to his own precept."—Geo. Barlow.

* "The Prophet Joel, taking occasion of the fact in nature, that there was a fountain under the temple at Jerusalem, wh. carried off the blood of the sacrifices, speaks of a fountain flowing forth from the house of the Lord, and watering the valley of Shittim, whither by nature its waters could not flow."—Pusey.

your grave. Over your gravel! Will you hear it then? Will you sleep the sweeter for it? At God's bar it may be a heavy curse. 4. Affection: friendship. Now, this in itself is beautiful. But earthly friends must die; and then they are not perfect. No, you want something better than this. II. Why you should live for God. In Him—1. You have what nothing else can give. 2 You may have all the other portions, too, as far as they are worth having.—J. Edmonds.

9—15. (9) over against it, i.e. by the gate on the opposite side. (10) in the midst, as their representative. go forth, R. V., "they shall go forth together." (11) solemnities, appointed seasons. able to give, vs. 5. (12) voluntary, etc., as an act and expression of personal piety. (13) daily, etc., Ex. xxix. 38. (14) continually, a daily solemn recognition that all things they had were the Lord's. temper, R. V., "moisten," i.e. mix with. (15) prepare, or provide.

Proportionate Giving.—The offerings mentioned here are on a scale of liberality exceeding anything known under the Mosaic regimen. The prince set an example in generous giving, which the people cheerfully imitated. Our gifts to God's cause should not be more nor less than our circumstances justify. A missionary was staying with a wealthy Christian philanthropist, whose house was richly ornamented with paintings and sculpture, and was eulogising an exquisite marble statue of Silence—the figure of a boy with his finger to his lips. They had known each other from boyhood, and were free and confidential in conversation. "Do you admire that statue?" asked the friend of the missionary. "I never saw anything in my life equal to it for grace," replied he. "What do you think I gave for it?" "I cannot imagine." "I gave ninety guineas." "And what did you give at the collection to-night?" asked the missionary. "Oh, I gave five pounds." "Five pounds!" said the missionary. "Shame on you! Here you give ninety guineas for a marble statue of Silence and five pounds towards sounding the Gospel all over the earth. That is badly laid out money."—Geo. Barlow.

16—24. (16) give a gift, it could only be from his allotted portion; and to his sons, not to his servants. He must not alienate any portion from his family. (17) year of liberty, jubilee year, when property was restored.^a The object of this regulation apparently is to prevent the formation of a new hereditary aristocracy between the royal family and the peasantry. A life peerage, so to speak, or something less, is deemed a sufficient reward for the most devoted service to the king or the state. —Exp. B. (18) take .. oppression, ch. xlv. 8. (19) a place, for cooking the priests' food. on .. westward, R. V., "the hinder part." (20) boil, 2 Chr. xxxv. 13. bake, Le. ii. 4, 5, 7. (21) every corner .. a court, for cooking the flesh of the peace-offerings, of wh. the people partook along with the priests. (22) courts joined, Polyc. B. "small courts." (23) row of buildings. The "row" is probably not a series of separate buildings running round the court, but a continuous course of building, in which at the bottom ("under" the row) were recesses in which were the hearths where the pots were set in which the sacrifices were cooked. (24) ministers, the Levites.

Ezekiel's System succeeded in the important object of infusing a new spirit into the celebration of the feasts, and impressing on them a different character. The ancient Hebrew festivals were all associated with joyous incidents of the agricultural year. The tendency of the post-exilic ritual was to detach the sacred seasons more and more from the secular associations which had once been their chief significance.—Exp. B.

CHAPTER THE FORTY-SEVENTH.

1—5. (1) waters, there was a fountain under the temple of Jerusalem, and this suggests the fig. here used.^a toward the east, looking eastward. The inner sanctuary was placed toward the west. (2) on the right side, the prophet is conducted round to the E. gate via the N. gate and there beholds the stream emerge at the south side of the gate. (3) waters .. ancles, stated as indicating their depth. (4) knees, gradually increasing in depth. (5) river, symbolical of the full gifts of the Spirit in the later days.

The Vision of the Holy Waters (vss. 1—12).—I. This river in the place and character of its origin, in the gradual increase of it, and also in the healing, vitalizing properties of its waters, may be regarded as a type of the gradual development of the plan of salvation. II. They may be regarded as a figure of the rise and progress of religious Christianity in its origin, diffusion, and general results.

6—8. (6) seen this, taken full and careful observation of this. (7) many trees, the natural accompaniment of a fresh flowing stream. (8) desert, or plain of the Jordan. sea, the Dead Sea, R. V., "into the sea shall the waters go wh. were made to issue forth; and the waters shall be healed" i.e. the putrid waters of the Dead Sea shall be rendered salubrious. healed,^b typical of the gracious work of God's Spirit.^c

The Trees of Life.—On the cover of one of his books Ingersoll placed three crosses and under them the legend, "For the glory of God," and three telegraph poles with their cross-bars which bore a resemblance to crosses, and under them the legend, "For the good of man." But without the crosses there would have been no telegraph poles. All the blessings of civilization are from the trees that grow upon the banks of the river of life.—Peloubet.

Living Waters.—There is an Oriental legend of a fountain into whose waters a good angel infused a mysterious power, such that a new fountain rose and gushed wherever some drops fell on the barren plain, so that a traveler, carrying a portion of this water, could safely traverse any desert, because he took with him the secret of unfailing springs; and he could impart their water to others.

Beneath the cross those waters rise, and he who finds them there
All through the wilderness of life the living stream may bear;
And blessings follow in his steps, until wher'er he goes
The moral wastes begin to bud and blossom as the rose.

—Peloubet's Notes.

9—12. (9) rivers, R. V., Marg. "two rivers," a Heb. dual of intensification sig. the greatness and power of this life-giving current. shall live, or, there shall be abundance of life. (10) fishers, the sign of its being known as a river full of life. En-ge-di,^a Ge. xiv. 7. En-eglaim, on the E. side of Dead Sea, where the Jordan falls into it. great sea, or Mediterranean. (11) marishes, or marshy places; from these salt was obtained for commerce. These will not be healed because the living stream will not reach them. (12) fruit, etc., comp. Re. xxii. 2. waters, etc., R. V., "waters thereof issue." Jehovah himself is the giver of all blessings to men, and from his presence all blessings flow. He was now present in his fulness and for ever in his temple. Hence the prophet sees the life-giving stream issue from the sanctuary. Another current idea was that in the regeneration of men, when the tabernacle of God was with them, external nature would also be transfigured. Then every good would be enjoyed and there would be no more evil nor curse. The desert would blossom like the rose, and the field that aforetime was thought fruitful should be accounted no better than bush.—Com. B.

13—17. (13) border, or, arrangement. A new allotment of the land was necessary on the return from captivity. two portions, Ge. xlviii. 5; Jos. xiv. 4, this made good the loss of Levi's portion and maintained the twelve tribes. (14) one as . . another, each receiving an equal portion. lifted, etc., ch. xx. 5, 6. fall unto you, by Divine arrangement, so that about it you need have no disputings. (15) Hethlon, a place near Damascus; ch. xlviii. 1.^b Zedad, Nu. xxxiv. 7, 8. R. V., "unto the entering in of Zedad." (16) Hamath, at the foot of Mt. Hermon.^c Berothah, 2 Sam. viii. 8. Sibraim, unknown. Hazar-hatticon, or the middle Hazar, to distinguish it from Hazar-enan. Hauran,^d the district S. of Damascus. (17) Hazar-enan, or village of fountains.

Additional note on vss. 1—12.—But "good" to the Israelite was not exclusively spiritual. it was also material. It would be an error to regard this fertilizing, healing stream in the light of a mere symbol for blessings which we call "spiritual." It is well fitted in other connexions to be such as symbol; but to take it so here would be to overstep the limits of the ^b"The waters of the sea will be sweetened by the stream flowing into them." — Mosheh Ben She-sheth.

^c"In its bituminous waters no vegetable or animal life is said to be found. But now death is to give place to life, in Judea, and throughout the world, as symbolised by the healing of those death-pervaded waters covering the doomed cities." — Fausset.

^e"We find in it only a spiritual allegory, which foreshadows miracles of mercy in store for the whole world far more stupendous." — Thomson.

^a"South of Engedi the sea is contracted, by a peninsula jutting into the sea northwards, so as to give to the whole southern part of the sea the appearance, not of a broad sheet of water, but rather of a long winding bay, or the estuary of a large river when the tide is out and the shoals are left dry." — Robinson.

An Irish boy being commanded by a priest to burn his Bible, reluctantly complied; but at the same time said, "I thank God, that you can't take from me the twenty chapters that I have in my mind."

^b"Prob. the defile between the ranges of Libanus and anti-Libanus, from the sea to Hamath." — Spk. Com.

^c 1 Ki. viii. 65; Am. vi. 2, 14.

^d Aurantius.

"The Christian graces are like perfumes, the more they are pressed by affliction the sweeter they smell; or, like the stars, they appear best in the darkness of trouble."—J. Beaumont.

Old Testament and anticipate a later revelation. As yet the Israelite had no conception of a transcendent sphere of existence for men in the fellowship of God, such as we name heaven. Man's final abode even in his perfect state was considered to be still on the earth. God came down and dwelt with men; men were not translated to abide with God. But God's presence with men on earth gave to earth the attributes of heaven. —Camb. Bible.

The Division of the Land.—I. The division was into separate allotments. The land of Israel was not held in common by the whole people. Certain dues were attached to it, and certain regulations governed the treatment of it by its owners. Thus it was forbidden for any one to make an absolute sale of his estate. God divides our lives out severally. Each must live his own separate life and discharge his individual duty while he receives his personal grace. II. The division was clear and definite. We ought to have no doubt as to our portion in life. In the region of personal religion each should see what is his portion and mission for the world. III. The division included a portion for every Israelite. It was so carefully made that the most insignificant family should not be overlooked. There should be a share for every one in the produce of our great fruitful earth. This holds good also in the spiritual world. There is room in the kingdom of heaven for all. There is a portion in Christ's redemption for every soul of man.—Adeney.

^a Nu. xxxiv. 5. "No one ever found Christ that was merely willing that Christ should find him."

^b "Foreigners never before had the privilege of purchasing or possessing any inheritance among the Jews."—Lowth.

Le. xxv. 10; Nu. xxxvi. 7; De. xliii. 3.

"When we feel ourselves defective in the glow and operative driving power of love to God, what is the right thing to do? When a man is cold he will not warm himself by putting a clinical thermometer into his mouth and taking his temperature, will he? Let him go into the sunshine and he will be warmed up. So do not think about yourselves and your own loveless hearts so much, but think about God, and the infinite welling up of love in his heart to you, a great deal more. 'We love Him because He first loved us.' Therefore, to love Him more, we must feel more that He does love us."—McLaren.

18—21. (18) east sea, i.e. the Dead Sea. (19) Tamar, or Engedi. strife, or Meribah. De. xxii. 52. river of Egypt, Wady-el-Arish.^a R. V. "to the brook of Egypt, unto the great sea" i.e. the line follows this Wady fr. Kadesh to the Mediterranean. (20) from . . . Hamath, Cam. B., "fr. the (south) border as far as over against where one goeth . . ." (21) So, according to this outline.

22, 23. (22) strangers, foreigners dwelling with them as proselytes.^b (23) sojourneth, or settles down.

The Stranger's Portion.—I. Strangers should receive a brotherly welcome from Christian people. Hospitality is an Eastern habit; it should be a Christian grace. 1. In the church. 2. In the home. 3. In the world. II. Strangers are welcomed by Christ into the kingdom of heaven. 1. Gentiles. 2. Heathen. 3. Sinners. III. Strangers must become true citizens in order to enjoy the privileges of the kingdom of heaven.—Pul. Com.

CHAPTER THE FORTY-EIGHTH.

1—7. (1) Dan, taking the first allotment, with border to Damascus. (2) border of Dan, i.e. on his south side. (3—7) These tribes are all to be on the northern side of the holy portion.

The Arrangement of the Tribes.—All the tribes are now settled on the West of the Jordan. The land is divided into zones running from E. to W. of the country, one of which falls to the lot of each tribe. The dimensions of the zone are not mentioned, neither is there any indication whether the greater or less breadth of the country from the Jordan to the sea was taken into account. The oblation of land given to the priests and Levites lay not strictly in the middle of the country, but in the neighborhood of Jerusalem, and therefore more toward the south; hence seven tribes are located to the north of the oblation and five to the south of it. Of the tribes beyond Jordan the half of Manasseh is now united with the other half, forming one tribe, and receiving one portion; while Gad and Reuben are provided with new settlements, the former in the extreme south, and the latter in the northern half of the country. Judah and Benjamin change places, the former lying to the north of the oblation and the city, and the latter to the south. In other respects the position of the tribes remains nearly what it was, except that Issachar and Zebulun have to be provided for in the south. It is perhaps accidental that the children of Leah and Rachel occupy the centre, while the sons of the handmaids are placed at the extremities.—Camb. Bible.

8—14. (8) offering, or portion devoted to God. reeds, better, "cubits." (9) oblation, ch. xlv. 1. of ten thousand, Sept. "of twenty thousand." (10) for them, for their maintenance. (11) sons of Zadok, the lawful line of priests...charge, ward or ordinance. (12) and this oblation, etc. R. V., "and it shall be unto them an oblation from the oblation of the land, a thing most holy," etc. (13) over against, i.e. along side of on the north. Levites, as previously narrated, ch. xlv. 7. (14) alienate, devoting any of it to common purposes.

Religion the Nucleus of Human Life. I. Religion fills a central place in a renovated world. As the light of truth permeates men's minds, they shall discover the supreme excellence of piety. II., Religion provides a graduated scale of excellence. God leads us step by step from a lower to a loftier life, from one stage of holiness to another. III. Religion promotes unity amid diversity. The several tribes of Israel were allotted their territory (in Ezekiel's ideal sketch) in relation to the holy place. IV. Religion brings God equally near to all. V. Religion has ample reward for faithful services. VI. Religion is supremely valuable. God's friendship is treasure which no arithmetic can express. All comparisons fail.—Davies.

15—20. (15) profane, common, unsanctified; ch. xlii. 20. (16) the measures, or measurements. (17) suburbs, or outskirts of the communal land.^a (18) the increase, or produce, unto them that serve the city, Polychr. B. "of the inhabitants of the city." (19) Polyc. B. "the inhabitants of the city shall come from all the tribes of Israel." (20) four-square, a square fig. is the emblem of perpetuity; strength, and solidity.^b

The Holy City.—"The description of the Temple does not correspond with the plan of the Tabernacle, or that of the first Temple. These were real buildings, and were erected according to the patterns shown by God Himself to Moses and to David; but this is an ideal communicated, not to a leader or king in order to be actually carried out, but to a seer, who wrote down his vision for the consolation of the captives of Babylon. It cannot even have been meant that this ideal structure should have been built by the Jews after the return from captivity, or at any subsequent period. Plainly the Temple is ideal, and so is the city. The vision was given to keep before the minds of the exiles the duty of rebuilding Jerusalem and the Temple on their restoration to their own land. The stupendous scale of the vision was, we presume, intended to project the thoughts of devout readers into far-distant times—not the times of the present Church of God, but those of the future glory and blessing on the earth, centering at Zion and Jerusalem, when the Lord shall be King over all the earth, and the Holy City shall be named Jehovah-Shammah, "The Lord is there."—Donald Fraser.

21—24. (21) for the prince, ch. xlv. 7. (22) from the possession, i.e. measuring from.^c (23, 24) a portion, better, "one portion." Comp. Joseph's double portion.

Company of the Bible.—By opening this volume we may at any time walk in the garden of Eden with Adam; sit in the ark with Noah; share the hospitality or witness the faith of Abraham; ascend the mount of God with Moses; unite in the secret devotions of David, or listen to the eloquent and impassioned address of Paul. Nay, more, we may here converse with Him who spake as never man spake; participate, with the spirits of the just made perfect, in the employment and happiness of heaven; and enjoy sweet communion with the Father of our spirits through His Son Jesus Christ. Such is the society to which the Scriptures introduce us; such the examples which they present to our imitation.—Payson.

25—29. And by, etc., these tribes were located on the further or southern side of the Holy Portion. Ezekiel's arrangement is manifestly an ideal rather than a practical one...river...sea, R. V., "to the brook of Egypt, unto the great sea."

The City of God.—"It is a great thought which presents itself unadorned to our view in the prophetic-symbolic Temple: God henceforth dwells in perfect peace, revealing Himself in the unbounded fullness of His glory, making Himself known in the living Word of progressive, saving, and sanctifying redemption. Everything is placed upon the ample circuit of the Temple, whose extended court receives all people, and through whose high and open gates the King of Glory is to enter in (Ps.

^a "The city being 4,500 cubits square, leaves 250 north, 250 south, for suburbs; the like are marked off on the east and west fr. the city land." — Spk. Com.

^b Re. xxi. 16.

"No one can ask honestly or hopefully to be delivered from temptation unless he has himself honestly and firmly determined to do the best he can to keep out of it."

"Whoever finds Christ seeks to help others to find Him."

^c "The prince's portion shall extend from the boundary of Judah, on the north of the Holy Portion, to the border of Benjamin on the south, so as to flank the Holy Portion on the E. and W., and to fill up what lies between it and the Jordan on the E., and bet. it and the Medit. on the W." — Wordsworth.

"Kind listening leads to kind speaking."

The occasions for kind actions are manifold. No one passes a day without meeting with these fortunate opportunities. They grow around us even while we lie on a bed of sickness, and the helpless are rich in a power of kindness toward the helpless." — F. W. Faber.

xxiv. 7—9), and then upon the order and harmony of the Divine habitations, the well-proportioned building (chap. xlii. 10); and the revelations of the holiest are stored up in the pure deep water of His Word, which in life-giving streams issues from the Temple. The stone tables of the Law are consumed, and the fresh and free fountain of eternal truth streams forth from the Temple of the Spirit, quickening and vivifying in land and sea, awakening by its creative and fructifying power a new and mighty race on earth. And thus hast thou, much-misjudged yet lofty seer, in the unconscious depth of thy mysteriously flowing language, set up upon the great undistinguishing, well-proportioned, and beautifully compacted building a type of the simple yet lofty Temple of Christ, from which flows the spiritual fountain of life."—Umbreit.

30—35. (30) goings out, not the gates but the boundary lines of the city. Measures, Cam. B. "cubits." (31) after the names, called after the names of the several tribes.^a (32—34) Joseph, the name covers the tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh. (35) the Lord is there, Heb. Jehovah-Shammah.^b The prophet beheld the Lord forsake his temple (xi.), and he beheld him again enter it (xliii.); now he abides in it among his people for ever. The covenant ran that he should be their God and they his people; this is perfectly fulfilled in his presence among them. The end in view from the beginning has been reached.—Cam. B.

The Apex of Glory.—"The name of the city from that day shall be, The Lord is there." The final words of the prophet are golden, and deserve to be written in largest capitals. The architecture of the holy city is ideally complete; its finial shines out with immortal lustre. The city is baptized with a new name. Instead of "Jerusalem," it shall be "Jehovah-Shammah." Names are often labels which falsify the reality. A worthless mine may be named "El Dorado." A rotten ship may still bear the name Impregnable. But this name shall express the distinctive feature of the renovated city. Its glory shall not appear in chiselled marble and in burnished gold. In the new kingdom Christ shall set up, all the materials shall be spiritual, therefore impervious to decay. The charm and enchantment of the place will be this.—"The Lord is there." It shall be nothing less than heaven in miniature.—Davies.

^a Re. xxi. 12.

^b "Not that the city will be called so in mere name, but that the reality will be best expressed by this descriptive title."

—Fausset.

Je. lili. 17, xxxlii. 16; Zec. li. 10; Re. xxi. 3, xxii. 3.

"I have found in my own life that there is a very close proportion between the time I spend in communion with God and the amount of power that I have in dealing with men." —R. A. Torrey.

Introduction.

I. Author. Daniel, whose name sig. "Judge of God," was of the tribe of Judah, and prob. of the royal house (i. 3). In the fourth year of Jehoiakim (B.C. 606) he was carried to Babylon; i.e. eight years before Ezekiel, and probably about the twelfth (Ignatius) or the eighteenth year (Chrysostom) of his age (i. 4). There he was placed in the court of Nebuchadnezzar, and became acquainted with the science of the Chaldees, compared with whom, however, God gave him, as he records, superior wisdom. By this king he was raised to high rank and great power, and, with some interruptions, he retained his position both under the Babylonish and Persian dynasties. He died at an advanced age, having prophesied during the whole of the captivity (i. 21), and his last prophecy being delivered two years later, in the third year of the reign of Cyrus (Angus). II. Language. From ii. 4. to end of vii. was written in Chaldee, the remainder in Hebrew. III. Contents. The book has commonly been divided into two parts, consisting of six chapters each. The first six are regarded as historical, and the remaining six as prophetical; or the first part is called the "Book of History," the second the "Book of Visions." IV. General Character. Quite apart from the significance of these predictions are many of the moral and spiritual lessons of this book. It was written in the darkness of the most terrible captivity which the people of God had ever known, and yet it contains some of the grandest revelations of the future glories of the Church. Everywhere, moreover, the providence of God is seen working or overruling all for her good. The predictions of the book extend from the establishment of the Medo-Persian monarchy to the general resurrection, the faith of believers being confirmed by the fulfilment of intermediate predictions foretelling the speedy punishment of two proud and impious kings. The history of the temptation of Daniel and his companions, their constancy and deliverance, is highly instructive, illustrating at once the mystery of the Divine dispensations and the spirit of fidelity and patience with which good men submit to them (Angus).

In recent years the opinion has been gaining ground among Biblical scholars, that the book of Daniel was written in the second century before Christ, some centuries later than the reigns of Jehoiakim, king of Judah, Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon (ch. i. 1), Cyrus, king of Persia (ch. x. 1) and other sovereigns named in the book. The theory is that an unknown writer, living when the infamous Antiochus Epiphanes was persecuting the Jews, composed the book in order to encourage his countrymen to stand firm in their faith in the midst of the cruelties to which they were exposed. The writer makes use of the traditions respecting Daniel which were current among the Jews. In the age in which according to this view the book was written, such moral and religious treatises were common and were styled Haggadoth. In these treatises, though traditions and historical facts were treated freely and embellished with imaginative details, there was no deception. "They were in all probability never intended for anything but what they are—Haggadoth, which, like the parables of Christ, convey their own lessons without depending on the necessity for accordance with historic fact."

As to the bearing of the new view upon the religious value of the book, Archdeacon Farrar says: "Though I am compelled to regard the book of Daniel as a work which, in its present form, first saw the light in the days of Antiochus Epiphanes, and though I believe that its six magnificent opening chapters were never meant to be regarded in any other light than that of moral and religious Haggadoth, yet no words of mine can exaggerate the value which I attach to this part of our canonical Scriptures. The book has exercised a powerful influence over Christian conduct and Christian thought. Its right to a place in the Canon is undisputed and indisputable, and there is scarcely a single book of the Old Testament which can be made more richly 'profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work.' "

Synopsis.

(According to Kell.)

Historico-Biographical Introduction.....chap. 1.

PART I.—The Development of the World-Powerii.—vii.

Sec. 1. Nebuchadnezzar's Vision of the World-Monarchies, and its Interpretation by Danielii.

Sec. 2. Daniel's Three Friends in the Fiery Furnaceiii.

Sec. 3. Nebuchadnezzar's Dream and his Madnessiii. 31—iv.

Sec. 4. Belshazzar's Feast and the Hand-writing of Godv.

Sec. 5. Daniel in the Den of Lions.....vi.

Sec. 6. The Vision of the Four World-Kingdoms, the Judgment, and the Kingdom of the Holy God.....vii.

PART II.—The Development of the Kingdom of Godviii.—xii.

Sec. 1. The Enemy arising out of the Third World-Kingdomviii.

Sec. 2. The Seventy Weeksix.

Sec. 3. The Revelation regarding the Affliction of the People of God on the part of the Rulers of the World till the consummation of the Kingdom of Godx.—xii.

CHAPTER THE FIRST.

1, 2. (1) third year, comp. 2 Ki. xxiv. 1; 2 Chr. xxxvi. 5, 6; Je. xxy. 1.^a Jehoiakim, i.e. "Jehovah raises up." Nebuchadnezzar, "prince of the god Nebo." besieged it, this actually took place in the fourth year; but Nebuc. had taken away some of the nobles, prob. as hostages, in the end of the third year, and before the battle of Carchemish. (2) part . . God, as the temple had been previously spoiled, only part of its treasures could be taken by Nebuc. land of Shinar, Ge. x. 10, xi. 2. The older name of Babylonia, which was preserved in the district. his god, Bel-Merodach, as a thank offering for his successful campaign.

Punishment for Deseccration.—The Church that shed the blood of the Huguenots like water saw its communion vessels seized and melted down to be coined into money for the payment of revolutionary armies, its bells converted into cannon, and the ancient cathedral of Notre Dame at Paris desecrated by the ownership of the Goddess of Reason in the person of a prostitute. Such desecration was often the chastisement of abused privileges and rejected truth. The warning addressed to Oriental Churches is still applicable to those of the West, "Repent, or else I will come to thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of its place, except thou repent" (Rev. ii. 5). Matthew Henry remarks: "See the righteousness of God; His people had brought the images of other gods into His Temple, and now He suffers the vessels of the Temple to be carried into the treasuries of those other gods.—Hom. Com.

3—5 (3) master . . eunuchs, comp. the Kislar-aga of the Turkish sultans.^b bring away from Jerusalem. king's seed, Josephus says that Daniel was of the family of Zedekiah. princes, parthemim, not a Semitic word, poss. Persian.^c (4) blemish, of body. wisdom, learning. cunning, or showing signs of quickness and intelligence. They were to be youths, not mere children. understanding, i.e. power to discern properties and relations. learning . . Chaldeans, "The Chaldees were the depositories of the philosophy and learning of the East at that time."^d (5) daily provision, wh. all the members of the court shared. meat, R. V. marg. "dainties."

The Janissaries were originally Christian youths who had been taken captive by the Turks and brought to the Ottoman court, after which they were placed under the care of the chief of the white eunuchs, under whom they were trained and educated, taught some trade, and brought up in the religion of their masters. Those most gifted were employed about the ruler's person, and in due time advanced to high and suitable offices in the state, to military commands, and to the government of provinces. Their Christian names were changed for such as their Moslem masters delighted in.—Kitto. Comeliness. Curtius says, that in all barbarous or uncivilised countries, the stateliness of the body is held in great veneration; nor do they think any capable of great services or actions to whom nature has not vouchsafed to give a beautiful form and aspect. It has always been the custom of the Eastern nations to choose such for their principal officers, or to wait on princes and great personages. Sir Paul Ricaut observes, "that the youths that are designed for the great offices of the Turkish empire must be of admirable features and looks, well shaped in their bodies, and without any defects of nature; for it is conceived that a corrupt and sordid soul can scarce inhabit in a serene and ingenuous aspect; and I have observed not only in the seraglio, but also in the courts of great men, their personal attendants have been of comely, lusty youths, well habited, deporting themselves with singular modesty and respect in the presence of their masters; so that when a pacha aga spahi travels, he is always attended with a comely equipage, followed by flourishing youths, well clothed and mounted, in great numbers."—Burder.

6, 7 (6) Daniel, meaning, "God is my judge."^a Hananiah, "God is gracious." Misrael, "Who is as God." Azariah, "God is a helper." (7) names, wh. were adaptations of the names of the Bab. gods, as their previous names had been adaptations of the names of Jehovah. Nebo, and Beltis, the goddess wife of Bel, were objects of Bab. worship. Sac also

^a "Nebuc. started fr. Bab. in Jehoiakim's third year and arrived at Jerus. in his fourth."

—Wordsworth.

"Nebuc. is called king by antipathesis. He was for two years associated with his father in the government, before he became sole king."—Josephus.

^b "There are 3,000 goolans (slaves) who live in the palace and attend the person of the Shah wherever he goes. At Constantinople this class is called "ishoglan," they are promising boys, stolen or forcibly taken from their Christian parents and brought up as Muslims. They are kept in the seraglio, under strict discipline, receive a good education, and then have appointments in the civil and military service."—Van Lennep.

^c "The plural of a Persian word."—Max Muller.

Est. i. 2. vi. 9.

^d "Besides the study of politics and the art of war, the learning chiefly valued among them was astrology, or the knowledge of the heavenly motions, the interpretation of dreams and architecture."—Lowth.

^a One that kept his station in the greatest of revolutions, reconciling policy and religion, business and devotion, magnanimity and humility, authority and affability, conversation and retirement, interest and integrity, heaven and the court, the favor of God, and the favor of the king."—Bishop Ken.

b Comp. Ex.
xxxiv. 15; 1 Co.
x. 20; Ho. ix. 3.

c Le. iii. 17, vi.
28, xvii. 10—14,
xix. 26.

One result of communion with God is to make us tender of all that respects God's honor. Moses forgot himself; he had no room for thought of self, hence God was able to clothe him with a halo of glory.
An earthly king likes to clothe his servants in fine robes, and God is pleased when we enable him to bless us.
—Andrew A.
Bonar.

"Hold fast the belief that Daniel made not this request rashly, or as if it originated with himself, but because he was moved so to do by the Holy Spirit."—Calvin.

"O madness! to think use of strongest wines and strongest drinks our chief support of health, when God, with these forbidden, made choice to rear
His mighty champion, strong above compare, whose drink was only from the liquid brook!"—
Milton.

a "Dried dates pressed into cakes, gourds, melons and cucubers formed the ordinary diet and goat's milk the ordinary drink, among the Babylonians of Daniel's day."— Rawlinson.

was a Chaldean idol. Belteshazzar, or Bel's prince. Shadrach, "Inspired by the sun-god." Meshach, "who is as Shak," the Venus of Bab. mythology. Abed-nego, "Servant of the shining fire."

The new Name of Favoritism.—"When any Indian subject stands so fair in the eye of his prince as to be raised to some advanced degree of trust or honor, he acquires at the same time a new name according to the prince's fancy. Thus the preceding governor of Surat was named Muck-teu-chan (Lord after my own heart); the present is styled Anamat-chan (Conscientious lord) because of his fidelity and integrity."—Ovington.—The Change of Names.—Still in modern times this is continued in the head of Roman Catholic Christendom, who has for the last twelve centuries always assumed another than his original name on ascending the papal throne. With members of a monarch's court this is easily intelligible. The desire was to have names of good omen; a foreign name might either be meaningless or suggest anything but thoughts full of good omen.—Pulp. Com.

8—10. (8) defile himself, by partaking of food which had been offered to idols^b and also killed with the blood.^c wine, offered in libation to idols; and doubtless having also intoxicating properties. (9) tender love, R. V., "compassion," intimating that the officer had a personal affection for him. Comp. case of Joseph, Ge. xxxix. 11. (10) worse liking, Heb. "sad," "troubled," i.e. looking less healthy and comely, so indicating that you have been underfed. sort, of the same age among the rest of your party. endanger my head, Eastern kings at once order the execution of servants who they think are proving unfaithful.

Jewish Adherence to Principle.—In the days of Antiochus Epiphanes the ordinary feeling on this subject was very different, for the religion and nationality of the Jews were at stake. Hence we read: "Howbeit many in Israel were fully resolved and confirmed in themselves not to eat any unclean thing. Wherefore they chose rather to die, that they might not be defiled with meats, that they might not profane the holy covenant; so then they died." And in the Second Book of Maccabees we are told that on the king's birthday Jews "were constrained by bitter constraint to eat of the sacrifices," and that Eleazar, one of the principal scribes, an aged and noble-looking man, preferred rather to be tortured to death, "leaving his death for an example of noble courage, and a memorial of value, not only unto young men, but unto all his nation." . . . The brave Judas Maccabæus, with some nine companions, withdrew himself into the wilderness, and "lived in the mountains after the manner of beasts with his company, who fed on herbs continually, lest they should be partakers of the pollution."—Exp. B.

11—13. (11) Melzar, R. V., "the steward," an officer under Ashpenaz, who had the special care of these four young men, whose food was to differ from that of the others. (12) Prove, test us: experiment for a short time and watch the result. pulse, a general term for a vegetable diet. (13) as thou seest, these words were spoken with quiet confidence in the righteousness of Jehovah.

Resolution—Gives a man moral strength, energy, backbone, constitutes force of character, makes a man strong, forms the hero; the scholar, the statesman, the artist, makes the successful merchants, the man of science, the philanthropist, and the benefactor of his kind. "I will be a hero," was the turning-point in Nelson's history. Reynolds resolves at Rome to study the works of the old masters till he has understood their excellence, and becomes a master himself. Paley at college resolves to shake off his habitual indolence and rise at four o'clock to his studies, and produces works that cannot die. Daniel's resolution in regard to his diet is one of the means of strengthening his character and fitting him for future greatness. Each resolution carried out in spite of difficulty or natural reluctance makes a man stronger.—Hom. Com.

14—16. (14) consented, bec. the test was a very fair one. (15) fairer, complexion healthier and clearer. (16) Melzar, vs. 11. pulse, vegetable diet, including fruits.^a De. viii. 3.

Youthful Piety.—This is one great lesson which dominates the historic section of this Book: "Them that honour Me I will honour, and they that despise Me shall be lightly esteemed." It is the lesson of Joseph's superiority to the glamor of temptation in the house of Potiphar; of the choice of Moses, preferring to suffer affliction with the people of God rather than all the treasures of Egypt and "to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter;" of Samuel's stainless innocence beside the corrupting example of Eli's sons; of David's strong, pure, ruddy boyhood as a shepherd-lad on Bethlehem's hills. It is the anticipated story of that yet holier childhood of Him who—subject to His parents in the sweet vale of Nazareth—blossomed "like the flower of roses in the spring of the year, and as lilies by the water-courses." The young human being who grows up in innocence and self-control grows up also in grace and beauty, in wisdom and "in favor with God and man." The Jews specially delighted in these pictures of boyish continence and piety, and they lay at the basis of all that was greatest in their national character.—Exp. B.

17. learning and wisdom, prob. in those things which appertain to politics and government, wh. would fit them to become able diplomatists and wise counsellors. understanding, i.e. "ability to discern the significance of: "God thus rewarded the pious resolve of these 4 Hebrews. visions and dreams, by which in ancient times God was pleased sometimes to reveal His will.

Youthful piety (vss. 17—19).—In the example of Daniel we have—I. Youthful piety possessed. II. We have youthful piety tried. III. We have to observe youthful piety honored. IV. We have also to contemplate youthful piety useful.—J. Parsons.

Genius of Youth.—Almost everything that is great has been done by youth. For life in general there is but one decree. Youth is a blunder; manhood a struggle; old age a regret. Do not suppose that I hold that youth is genius; all that is genius, when young, is divine. Why, the greatest captains of ancient and modern times both conquered Italy at five-and-twenty! Youth, extreme youth, overthrew the Persian empire. Don John of Austria won Lepanto at twenty-five—the greatest battle of modern times. Gaston de Foix was only twenty-two when he stood a victor on the plain of Ravenna. Every one remembers Condé and Rocroy at the same age. Gustavus Adolphus died at thirty-eight. Cortes was little more than thirty when he gazed upon the golden cupolas of Mexico. When Maurice of Saxony died at thirty-two, all Europe acknowledged the loss of the greatest captain and the profoundest statesman of the age. Then there is Nelson, Clive;—but these are warriors, and perhaps you may think there are greater things than war. I do not; I worship the Lord of hosts. But take the most illustrious achievements of civil prudence. Innocent III., the greatest of the popes, was the despot of Christendom at thirty-seven. John de Medici was pope as Leo X. at thirty-seven. Luther robbed even him of his richest province at thirty-five. Take Ignatius Loyola and John Wesley; they worked with young brains. Ignatius was only thirty when he made his pilgrimage and wrote the Spiritual Exercises. Pascal wrote a great work at sixteen, and died at thirty-seven. Was it experience that guided the pencil of Raphael when he painted the palaces of Rome? He died at thirty-seven. And Acquaviva—Acquaviva was general of the Jesuits, ruled every cabinet in Europe, and colonised America, before he was thirty-seven. What a career! It is needless to multiply instances. The history of heroes is the history of youth.—J. D'Israeli.

18—21. (18) end . . days, vs. 5, three years. (19) communed, talked with them, to find out which of them might be best suited for his purposes. stood . . king, were appointed to offices in direct relation to the royal person. As they had been admitted to the class of magicians and astrologers, it would seem they were admitted to the number of those who were royal magicians and astrologers—those whom the king consulted.—Pul. Com. (20) wisdom, practical skill and judgment. better, the Jews are still remarkable for their business gifts. (21) continued, "held his post through all changes, bec. found both skilful and faithful." The earliest in exile, he still lived to see the end of it.—Stuart.

Recompense for Fidelity.—Dr. Cox remarks that the king's preference of the four young Jews was all the more remarkable from the fact that the Chaldeans boasted of their literature and science, and deemed all other nations to be barbarians; their superiority, which thus so greatly attracted the royal favor, being certainly from the Lord, who exalts and depresses according to His own good pleasure, and to subserve the pur-

"Amid innumerable false, unmoved, unshaken, unseduced, unterrified, their loyalty they kept, their faith, their love." —Milton.

"The retrospect on youth is too often like looking back on what was a fair and promising country; but is now desolated by an overwhelming torrent, from which we have just escaped. Or it is like visiting the grave of a friend whom we had injured, and are precluded by his death from the possibility of making him an atonement."—J. Foster.

a "Daniel's reputation for wisdom and sanctity became proverbial in the East." —Wordsworth.

b "Sim. le words, but what a volume of faithfulness is unrolled by them! Amid all the intrigues; amid all the envy towards a foreign captive in high office as a king's councillor; amid all the trouble incidental to the insanity of the king, or the murder of two of his successors; in that whole critical period for his people, Daniel continued." —Pusey.

Wisdom does not show itself so much in precept as in life—in a firmness of mind and mastery of appetite. . . . It teaches us to do, as well as to talk; and to make our actions and words all of a color.—Seneca.

^a The second year of Nebuc.'s sole sovereignty. About the sixth year of Jeholaim." — Spk. Com.

^b For word "dream," as used in a prophetic sense, see 1 Sa. xxviii. 6; Nu. xii. 6.

^c "The absence of his sleep was heavy upon him." — Pusey.

^d "Prob. a certain order of priest-magicians, who wore a peculiar dress, like that seen on the gods and deified men in Assyrian sculptures." — Fausset.

^e the use of this dialect continues to the end of the seventh chapter.

^f What Nebuc. did was this—he tried the wise men of Babylon by two tests: 1. Whether they could tell him his dream; 2. Whether they could tell him the meaning of it. See v. 9." — Wordsworth.

^g There is prob. a reference to the notion of the Chaldees, as among the Persians, that some days were more pose of His universal government. Keil observes that Daniel needed to be deeply versed in the Chaldean wisdom, as formerly Moses was in the wisdom of Egypt (Acts vii. 22), so as to be able to put to shame the wisdom of this world by the "hidden wisdom" of God. Gausson notices that four benefits were bestowed by God on these faithful youths as a recompense for their fidelity: knowledge, skill in all learning, wisdom in the conduct of themselves, and, in the case of Daniel at least, something supernatural, prophetic gifts, a miraculous knowledge of the secrets of the Lord. Matthew Henry quaintly remarks that the king was soon aware that a little of their divinity was preferable to a great deal of the divinations he had been used to—Hom. Com.—God's Gifts.—A Scotch-woman who received kind letters from her son found bank-bills inside them, but having never seen such money, thought they were only pretty pictures and put them aside. Many people think the promises found in the Bible are very pretty pictures, and perhaps some of you have put them away in an old tea-pot. Is it not time to understand that they are drafts on the bank of heaven that will be honored night and day? God make us ashamed that we have such a poverty-stricken spiritual life, when all the resources of the Holy Ghost are ready to supply our need.—A. J. Gordon.

CHAPTER THE SECOND.

1-3. (1) second year, perhaps by Bab. computation, fourth year by the Scripture computation; but there are many hist. events fr. wh. reckonings were made of wh. we have now no record. Hence seeming contradictions.^a dreams,^b or a continued dream. "The plural form marks the vastness of the subject of these dreams." brake, or "was gone away from him."^c (2) magicians, etc., there seem to have been three distinct classes of Chaldean doctors, the Chartummim, or conjurers, "sacred scribes," Stuart; the Chakamim, or physicians; R. V., "enchanters;" and the Asaphim, or theosophists. These were distinct from the Kasdim^d and Gazrim, the astrologers and divines. (3) spirit . . . troubled, R. V., "is troubled." know the dream, i. e. to remember it, and to have it interpreted.

Astrology.—A supposed art of foretelling future events from the positions and aspects of the heavenly bodies, originating in the notion that the stars have an influence for good or evil on the affairs of men; which influence may be discovered. This art originated in Chaldæa, and was from thence transmitted to the Egyptians, Greeks, and Romans. Astrologers were in high esteem among the Babylonians, Dan. i. 20, ii. 2, iv. 7, v. 7, 11, 15, and other nations, Dan. ii. 10, and also with the ungodly Jews, Isa. xlvii. 13-15. The Scripture styles them star-gazers, monthly prognosticators, magicians, sorcerers, Chaldæans, soothsayers, and wise men. Astrology was intimately connected with Sabæism, or the worship of the stars; it, in effect, denies God and His providence, and is therefore ranked in Scripture with practices most offensive to Him.—Green's Dict.

4-6. (4) Syriack, R. V., "in the Syrian language," or Aramaic, the popular language of Babylon.^e O king, etc., ch. iii. 9; Ne. ii. 3. (5) gone from me, passed from my memory.^f dunghill, or heaps of rubbish. The houses being made of only sun-burnt bricks, were easily destroyed. (6) rewards, fee, largess; comp. vs. 48.

Oriental Cruelty.—The language was that of brutal despotism such as had been customary for centuries among the ferocious tyrants of Assyria. The punishment of dismemberment, dichotomy, or death by mutilation was common among them, and had constantly been depicted on their monuments. It was doubtless known to the Babylonians also, being familiar to the apathetic cruelty of the East.—Exp. B.

7-9. (7) again, R. V., "a second time." tell . . . dream, they could do the easy part of making up an interpretation; but they would readily be found out if they attempted to make up the dream. (8) gain the time, or buy the time;^g i. e. make longer delay and thus postpone the fulfillment of the king's decree, or find some way to extricate themselves fr.

a very difficult situation. (9) one decree. R. V., "law;" that given in vs. 5. corrupt, or deceitful. time be changed, i. e. till there be a change in the relations of the heavenly bodies.

Coleridge's Dream.—An interesting incident in Coleridge's life refers to the composition of his metrical fragment, entitled "Kubla Kahn," which, he says, came to him during sleep, into which he fell while reading in "Purchas's Pilgrims." He continued for about three hours, apparently in sleep, during which he had the most vivid impression that he had composed between two and three hundred lines. "The images," he says, "rose up before me as things with a parallel production of the correspondent expressions, without any sensation or consciousness of effort." On awaking, he had so distinct a remembrance of the whole, that he seized his pen and wrote down the fragment, which is still preserved. Unfortunately, however, he was called away to attend some business. The interruption lasted more than an hour, and, on his return to his study, he found, to his intense surprise and mortification, that though he still retained some vague and dim recollection of the general purport of the vision, yet, with the exception of some eight or ten scattered lines and images, all the rest had passed away, like the images on the surface of a stream into which a stone has been cast. Thus the thing had gone from him as in the case before us.—Taylor.

10—13. (10) not a man, quite true; but there might be a Divinely-inspired man. king, lord, ruler, R. V. marg., "no king be he never so great and powerful hath," etc. These wise men claim that the king's test is unfair, he is asking for an impossibility. (11) rare, unusual; never-before-heard-of. Or, a heavy, hard, unreasonable thing. whose . . flesh, ref. to the dii majores, and indicating their immortal nature, in opposition to the frailty of humanity: it is not likely that these Magi had correct notions of pure spirit, such as are now common with us.—Stuart. (12) furious, overborne with passion, he instantly commanded the execution of his tyrannous decree. wise . . Babylon, i. e. the city rather than the province of B. (13) wise men, it seems that, being under the instruction of these wise men, Daniel and his companions were in danger of being classed with them.

The Helplessness of Heathenism.—Babylon's wise men, with all their learning and science, unable either to find direction in their difficulty or deliverance from their danger. Like the mariners in the storm, they are "at their wit's end." They believed the gods could tell the king his dream, but they had no access to them. Their "dwelling is not with flesh." Their gods do not dwell with them, and they confess that they have no converse with them. Thus heathenism, by its own confession, is powerless. Sorry gods, indeed, that cannot approach men, nor be approached by them! Even the great Bel of Babylon is unable to help his royal and devoted worshiper. Contrast with this the God of the Bible, "a very present help in trouble," and "near to all who call upon Him in truth." Blessed are the people who know the "mystery of godliness, God manifest in the flesh;" and that, having been "made flesh" Himself, He can and does dwell with men on the earth. Matthew Henry notices the righteousness of God in causing men who imposed on others by pretending to do what they could not, to be threatened with death for not doing what they did not even pretend to do.—Hom. Com.

Lessons in Dreams.—

Some dreams were useless—moved by turbid course
Of animal disorder; not so all:
Deep moral lessons some impressed, that naught Could afterwards deface. And oft in dreams
The master passion of the soul displayed
The huge deformity, concealed by day,
Warning the sleeper to beware, awake,
And oft in dreams, the reprobate and vile, Unpardonable sinner—as he seemed Toppling upon the perilous edge of Hell—
In dreadful apparition, saw before His vision pass the shadows of the damned.
And sometimes, too, before his fancy passed lucky than others. The day then present was an ill-omened one and they would gain one more propitious to their own destiny."—Wordsworth.

Is. xli. 22—24.
Is. 29; Zec. x. 2.

"The days are made on a loom, whereof the warp and woof are past and future time."—Emerson.

"To the true teacher, time's hourglass should still run gold-dust."—Douglas Jerrold.

"God makes the heathen, out of their own mouth, condemn their impotent pretensions to supernatural knowledge, in order to bring out in brighter contrast His power to reveal secrets to His servants."—Fausset.

"A man that is young in years may be old in hours, if he have lost no time. Generally, youth is like the first cogitations, not so wise as the second; for there is a youth in thought as well as in ages, and yet the invention of young men is more lively than that of old and imaginations stream into their minds better, and as it were more divinely."—Bacon.

"Glory is due to those only who dare to associate with pain, and have trampled pleasure under their feet."—Fenelon.

a "The word trans. 'wisdom' is very frequent in the Assyrian inscriptions, in the sense of judgment, advice, and also in the sense of command, will, decree."

—Spk. Com.

b Ge. xxxvii. 36, marg.

a Mat. xviii. 19; Ac. xii. 5—12.

b "It involves the recognition of the supreme sovereignty of Him whose handiwork—the moon, the sun, the planets—were the principal objects of Bab. worship."

—Spk. Com.
"Thy will be done" is the key-note to which every prayer must be tuned.—A. J. Gordon.

c Job xxxiii. 15, 16.

d "Of the four vss. of this thanksgiving, two are, for cadence and language, as remarkable as any in Hebrew. . . . The simplicity of the narrative, the pathos of the prayer, the simple stateliness of the prophetic style, and the vivid condensation of this historical prophecy, combined in one, are no slight evidence of the grasp which the writer had of the language wherein he wrote in styles so varied."—Pusey.

e "This officer, according to the manner of courtiers, takes this opportunity of ingratiating himself with the king, as if the discovery of Dan's abilities in this kind were owing purely to his diligence."

—Lowth.

The Worm that never dies, writhing its folds
In hideous sort and with eternal Death Held horrid colloquy; giving the wretch Unwelcome earnest of the woe to come.—Robert Pollok.

14—16. (14) answered . . . wisdom, R. V., "prudence," Vulg. trans. "Daniel inquired concerning the law and decree,"^a captain . . . guard, or chief of the executioners. Comp. Potiphar.^b This indicates that these Hebrews were not with the Magi when they had an interview with the king. (15) hasty, R. V., "so urgent," comp. Ha. i. 6. (16) time, comp. vs. 8; R. V., "appoint him a time." Daniel while asking for time, promised to provide both the dream and the interpretation. Daniel wanted the time that he might engage, with his companions, in earnest prayer. would shew, R. V. marg., "that he might;" the language of confident faith.

17, 18. (17) his house, not necessarily his own, but that in wh. he lived. (18) That . . . desire, an example of united prayer.^a God of heaven, who dwells or reigns in heaven, is exalted over all; a decided assertion that this God is the only God,^b Ge. xxiv. 7. secret, De. xxix. 29. fellows, R. V., "companions."

Prayer of Friends for Divine Help.—We are reminded of an interesting episode, in the history of the Westminster Assembly of Divines: When that learned company was engaged in the composition of the shorter catechism, and had come to the question "What is God?" no one would attempt to furnish an answer. At length, as a way out of the difficulty, and without knowing who the person was that might be appointed, they agreed that the youngest man present should be required to write the answer. When they discovered who he was, there was still the same shrinking in his heart, but at length he agreed to do as his brethren wished, provided they would permit him to retire, and would promise that all the time he was away, they would pray for the Divine assistance to be accorded to him. They did so, and in a short while he returned with that answer with which we are all familiar and the comprehensive brevity and clearness of which have awakened the admiration of every thoughtful mind.—W. M. Taylor.

19—23. (19) night vision,^e in wh. he saw just what Nebuc. had seen, and had given to him the key of the meaning of the dream. blessed, offered worship and thanksgiving for this gracious answer to prayer. (20) said, etc.,^a comp. Ps. cxiii. 2, cxv. 18. name of God, this expression due to man's consciousness that he could not comprehend what God in Himself is, and so "name" is designed to comprehend all that is known and unknown of Him.—Stuart. (21) changeth, etc., suitable to the vision he had seen, wh. concerned the changes of kingdoms.—Jerome. (22) in the darkness, i. e. things whose causes are yet quite hidden from human sight. light . . . him, God is the source of all progress and advancement. (23) thank thee, heartily ascribing all the honor to God.

Joseph and Daniel.—Joseph and Daniel were, alike in that they were both men of incorruptible fidelity and devout humility; and they stand out in Jewish history—one at its beginning and the other near its close—as men in whom few, if any, defects of character or blemishes of conduct appear. As Auberlen has beautifully said, "They were both representatives of the true God and His people at heathen courts; both were exemplary in their pure walk before the Lord; both were endowed with the gift of bringing into clear light the dim presentiments of truth which express themselves among the heathen in God-sent dreams; both were gifted with marvelous wisdom and insight, and, for this reason, highly honored by the powers of this world."—W. M. Taylor.

24—26. (24) Destroy not, the execution of the king's decree had been delayed; now, Daniel says, it may be abandoned. bring, etc., none could enter the royal presence without distinct permission. (25) I have found, etc., this may be the only formal language of the courtier.^e (26) Art thou able, this question enabled Daniel to turn the king's thoughts from himself to his God.

The Mission of a Captive.—That interpreter was found in unexpected places, as all interpreters are found. Said Arioch, "I have found a man of the captives of Judah." That is God's inscrutable way. It was not a brother-king that told Nebuchadnezzar what had troubled him; nor was it some man that drove to the king's house in a chariot of gold, with steeds of fire, whose scarlet nostrils were distended as if in pride that they were called upon to enter such lofty service: it was a man among the captives of Judah. How wondrously events touch and interrelate in life! Thus captivity is made true freedom, and thus men far from home established a second nativity, and thus persons who suppose themselves to be instances of humiliation find that those circumstances are but a stairway up to primacy, to sovereignty.—Peop. B.

27—30. (27) The secret, of the dream and interpretation. (28) God in heaven, vs. 18, who dwells in heaven, as distinguished fr. the idols of Babylon. latter days, the after-times. Nebuc., as great founder of a nation, would be deeply interested in its future history.^a (29) thoughts, meditations during his wakefulness: dropping asleep this meditation becomes a dream. (30) revealed to me, the language of piety as well as modesty. their sakes, better intransitive; R. V., "but to this intent that the interpretation may be made known to the king."

God as a Revealer of Secrets (vs. 28).—Looking at the Great One as the Revealer of secrets we observe—1. That He makes no omissions; 2. That He commits no mistakes; 3. That He has no unkindness. God is constantly revealing the secrets of men now. 1. Through the dictates of human conscience; 2. And through the unguarded actions of human life.—Thomas.

Humility.—There is always a modesty about true greatness, and you may know whether or not piety is genuine by inquiring if it be characterized by humility. The good man will never seek to hide God from the view of his fellow-men. He will endeavor to make his light shine, but he will not make it shine so as to draw attention to himself. He will arrange it so that its rays will all converge in God, and men shall glorify the Father in heaven. See how beautifully John the Baptist was clothed with that humility. When the Jews came to him, asking, "Who art thou?" he would not yield to their desire, but said, "I am not the Messiah, but I am sent before Him to prepare His way;" and when afterwards men sought to provoke his envy of Jesus by telling him how the prophet of Nazareth was attracting more followers than he, his only answer was, "He must increase but I must decrease!"—W. M. Taylor.

31—33. (31) great image, one great image, made up of four parts.^a "The dream was evidently such as might be born of the waking thoughts of one accustomed to Bab. magnificence, God using the mental associations as the vehicle of Divine predictions."—Robjohns. brightness, fr. the burnished gold and silver. form, R. V., "aspect." (32) fine gold, lit. "good," i. e. pure. thighs, or sides. (33) iron, iron and brass are the emblems of strength in the prophetic writings. iron and clay, rep. a kingdom of very heterogeneous peoples, very weak and brittle, and so of most unstable dynastic power.

The Prophecy of Daniel (vs. 31).—Regarding the four great dynasties fulfilled in the successive rise and overthrow of the Babylonian, Persian, Macedonian, and Roman monarchies. I. Notice the objects which Nebuchadnezzar saw. 1. A colossal image, its head of gold—Babylon called by Isaiah "the golden city,"—breast and arms of silver (Persia), belly and thighs of brass (Greece), legs of iron (Rome); 2. The wondrous stone. II. The collision between these two objects which the Prophet witnessed. III. The result which the Prophet predicted.—J. Blackburn.

A Picture of Evil.—The image is a picture of all evil—"gold," "silver," "brass," "iron," "clay." That is the difficulty of the case. If evil were only evil we could easily get rid of it; it is when evil has a head of gold that we are bewitched or bewildered by it. It is true personally. Men are not always instances of black evil, all over, from head to foot; in and out, through and through. Some evil men have heads of gold, tongues of silver, looks that are fascinations, tones that importune the soul with the solicitude of music. If you look more clearly and closely at them you see that they are not all gold.—Peop. B.

34—36. (34) stone. hands, the Jews agree that this is a figure of the Messiah and His kingdom. The fig. declares the stone to have been ^a "Nebuc. had but lately become the sole and undisputed monarch of the empire he was destined to raise to such greatness. The past was to him full of glory of success, of triumph, . . . what would the future be?"—Spk. Com.

Ac. iii. 12.

"Happy season of virtuous youth, when shame is still an impassable barrier, and the sacred air-cities of hope have not shrunk into the mean clay hamlets of reality; and man, by his nature, is yet infinite and free."—Carlyle.

"What God wants is men great enough to be small enough to be used."—H. W. Webb-Peoploe.

^a "The world-power in its totality appears as a colossal human form, Bab., the head, of gold; Medo-Persia, the breast and two arms, of silver; Graeco-Macedonia the belly and two thighs, of brass; and Rome the legs, of iron, and feet of iron and clay; the fourth still existing."—Fausset.

"Proprietors rear strong fences round young trees. Permit not the immortal to be twisted, at the very starting of its growth, for the want of such protection as it is in your power to afford."—Arnott.

a "The kingdom of Christ, a kingdom of God's own creating, shall break to pieces the fourth and last monarchy, in which the remainders of the other three were comprehended."—Lowth.

b "Grain was winnowed in the E. on an elevated space in the open air, by throwing the grain into the air with a shovel, so that the wind might clear away the chaff."—Fausset.

c Eze. xxvi. 7. "Let fools and cowards start at fancy's visions; thy well-taught spirit knows these dreams are bred from fumes and indigestions that oppress the mind, which thus o'erloaded, still throws off these crudities, these ordures of the soul: as such despise them."—Madden.

"Count nothing small. The smallest thing may be a link in the golden chain which binds a man to the Divine Master himself."—A. F. Schauflier.

"On fleckle wings the minutes haste, and fortune's favors never last."—Seneca.

a "Not united, organized, compacted, and consolidated within like thine; and not so capable of resisting and repelling attacks from without; as was proved by its sudden fall beneath the arms of Alex. the Great."—Wordsworth.

b "The Rom. empire to be the fourth kingdom of Daniel, was prepared without human agency, i. e. by Divine power. smote . . feet, "the blow is struck during the existence of the fourth empire." a brake, i. e. crushed the feet to powder. The four monarchies are not rep. as coexisting. They follow one another successively so that the last became the rep. of the whole. Note in particular that an end of all is made when the fifth kingdom begins to be set up.—Stuart. (35) chaff, Ps. i. 4; Is. xli. 15. Ancient threshing floors were on the tops of hills. b great mountain, R. V. marg., "rock," fig. for the way in which the Messiah's kingdom would grow. (36) we will tell, speaking in the name of the companions who had shared in the prayer.

Small Beginnings.—The language of the vision indicates that the stone grew from a small size until it became a huge mountain. Frequently earthly kingdoms have had very insignificant beginnings; but usually that which has given them the last accession of greatness has been some mighty movement of its armies or some grand achievement of its statesmen. Thus, to take an instance, every one is familiar with the almost contemptible sovereignty of the first of the Hohenzollern dynasty; but when, a few years ago, while yet he was laying siege to the first city on the continent of Europe, the king of Prussia caused himself, in the palace of a conquered monarch, to be proclaimed Emperor of Germany, the pomp and ceremonies of the occasion were so great that the correspondent of the leading English journal finished his description of the event with these high-sounding words: "This will live in history." That is how empires are founded among men.—Taylor.

37, 38. (37) king of kings, c the high-flown style in wh. the Persian king is still addressed. It was true of Nebuc., who ruled over subject kings. God . . thee, Daniel wished to impress upon Nebuc. that all his greatness was the gift of Jehovah, who was supreme above the Bab. monarch. (38) men . . beasts . . fowls, comp. the dominion originally given to man, Ge. i. 28, ii. 19, 20. he given, i. e. the God in heaven. Thou . . gold, not Nebuc. personally, but as rep. of the Babylonian dynasty. There is no attempt here to flatter the king, but the fig. required that the Bab. dynasty should rep. the beginning of the prophecy.

The King's Dream.—In the dream of the king and its interpretation by Daniel, we see how God prepared the world for the coming of Christ. 1. These successive monarchies, by aiming at universal dominion, did much to destroy the mutual estrangement and antagonisms of nations. The "walls of partition" between the nations were thrown down. "To that resolute king of Babylon, Nebuchadnezzar, may this proud and magnificent notion" of a universal empire be first ascribed (Luthardt). It was taken up by Alexander and the Romans. When our Lord appeared the nations were so far united that old jealousies were far too weak to arrest the progress of Christianity. 2. By these successive empires the vitality of the ancient religions was greatly weakened, if not destroyed, and with it faith in their truth. These were the religions of nations, of races; their deities could only be worshiped in particular places. The old religions languished, lost their hold upon the minds of men, until in the age of Augustus scepticism prevailed. 3. In the wide diffusion of the Greek language we see another effect of the rise of these empires, and a preparation for the advent of our Lord. Alexander's conquests spread it in the East, Rome's victories in the West; this contributed marvelously to the spread of Christianity. 4. These are a few of the ways in which God brought about "the fulness of time" when the world was ripe for the work of our Lord.

Nebuchadnezzar's Kingdom.—Dr. Rule observes that "this great king could not have forgotten that his father was only a satrap at first, a successful rebel, who perfidiously allied himself with his master's enemies, and by that means overthrew Nineveh and set up as king at Babylon. By a suddenly acquired sovereignty over all the servant-kings, he became king of kings; and thus Nebuchadnezzar, as son of Nabopolassar, was the first Babylonian king of kings by inheritance."—Hom. Com.

39, 40. (39) inferior, in duration, in antiquity, in power, and in wealth. Prob. this represents the Medo-Persian kingdom. a third kingdom, the Greek monarchy. (40) fourth, the Roman. b and as iron, etc., Stuart,

"even as iron which dashes in pieces—all these will it crush and dash in pieces."

Divulgements of Dreams.—

"In thy faint slumbers, I by thee have watch'd,
And heard thee murmur tales of iron war;
Speak terms of manage to thy bounding steed;
Cry, Courage!—to the field! And thou hast talk'd
Of sallies, and retires; of trenches, tents,
Of pallisadoes, fortins, parapets;
Of basilisks, of cannon, culverin;
Of prisoners' ransom, and of soldiers slain,
And all the currents of a heady fight.
Thy spirit within thee hath been so at war,
And thus hath so bestirr'd thee in thy sleep,
That beads of sweat have stood upon thy brow,
Like bubbles in a late-disturbed stream:
And in thy face strange motions have appear'd,
Such as we see when men restrain their breath
On some great sudden haste."—Shakespeare.

41-43. (41) toes, ten, representing ten sub-kingdoms, or kings.^a clay .. iron, things wh. will not properly blend. In the very constitution of this kingdom should be the certainty of its ultimate failure and ruin. (42) broken, or brittle.^b (43) mingle, etc., this would seem to refer to mixed marriages, wh. were doomed to meet with disappointment, comp. xi. 6, 7, 17.

The Rise and Dominion of Roman Empire.—Asia had been for ages the seat of power, the mightiest and most populous region of the globe. Europe was buried in darkness, and its western tribes were like outcasts from the family of nations. Greece itself had scarce risen into notice, and presented only a confused multitude of feeble and jarring tribes. That an empire was thus born among the barbarians of Latium which would extend its power over Judæa, Syria, and Babylon itself, was an event which no human wisdom could possibly divine. That this empire, like iron, should be endued with a political firmness beyond the mightiest monarchies of the East, was a prediction no less surprising, and would nowhere seem less credible than amidst the proud courtiers of Babylon. Two centuries later, in his various accounts of every region of the earth and of innumerable towns and rivers, Herodotus never once mentions the Tiber or the city of Rome. Yet here, amidst the splendor of Babylon, the prophet announces the rise and dominion of this fourth and greater empire.—Birks.

44, 45. (44) these kings, the ten represented by the toes. break .. kingdoms, not by the force of arms, but by the permeation of Christ's principles. never .. destroyed, Christ's kingdom is called an everlasting kingdom, bec. as a spiritual kingdom it is not subject to change and dissolution. not .. left, or pass from hand to hand in the generations. (45) stone .. hands, fig. of Divinely-founded spiritual kingdom.^a known .. king, thus assuring the publicity of these great truths. certain .. sure, the correctness of the account of the dream proved the fidelity of the interpretation.

The Glorious Consummation of Christ's Kingdom.—

"The time of rest, the promised Sabbath, comes.
Six thousand years of sorrow have well nigh Fulfilled their tardy and disastrous course
Over a sinful world; and what remains
Of this tempestuous state of human things,
Is merely as the working of the sea
Before a calm, that rocks itself to rest.
For He whose ear the winds are, and the clouds
The dust that waits upon His sultry march,
When sin hath moved Him and His wrath is hot,
Shall visit earth in mercy; shall descend
Propitious in His chariot, paved with love;
And what His storms have blasted and defaced
For man's revolt, shall with a smile repair."

believed by the Church of Israel before our Saviour's time; and this belief was received by the disciples of the Apostles, and the whole Christian Church for 300 years."
—Jos. Mede.

^a Comp. Da. vii. 2; Re. xvii. 12.

^b "Some explain thus. 'The chief power in these ten kingdoms shall be partly secular, and partly ecclesiastical, and the encroaching of the one upon the other shall endanger their existence.'"
—Lowth.

"Fellowship does not mean uniformity of work, it means uniformity of purpose. It takes many different workmen to build a house, but it is the same house they are building."

^a "A stone from the holiest of mounts — the heavenly Zion — looses itself and falls. If it destroys the earthly material that it strikes, it brings also with it that new, pure heavenly spirit and material wh. shall fill again the earth with a stronger mount, and found a new and better city, Zion."—Ewald. Lu. xx. 17, 18; Mat. xxi. 44.

We are workers together with God; do not let us forget God.
—Francis Murphy.

b Comp. Ac. xxviii. 6. The senses are the cinque-ports by which sin is let out and taken in.—Manton.

46—49. (46) worshipped, offered reverent homage to, as to a superior being. oblation, etc., we may be sure that Daniel would only allow these offerings to be made to his God.^b "He was the medium of worship rather than the object of it." (47) Of a truth, the excited expression of the king's wonder and delight. (48) ruler, or prince-president. chief, etc., ch. iv. 9. (49) over the affairs, i. e. he gave them important political offices. in the gate, where the court business was done.

The Prophet's Self-forgetful Spirit.—He has but one request to make of the king, and this request was not for himself, but for others. Having been highly exalted, he seeks gifts for men. Nowhere does the nobility and magnanimity of the man come more into view than here. His sudden elevation to rank and riches and rule have not spoilt him. In him lurks no ambitious pride. He has no thought of invidious rivalry. He is unwilling to enjoy his honors alone. In that hour of unexpected triumph he does not forget his fellow-captives who had joined their prayers to his in the hour of exigency. It may seem a bold petition: it may imperil his reputation with the king. To ask that the native Chaldeans—the officers who had gained illustrious honor by the conquest of Jerusalem—should be displaced to make room for three obscure and captive Jews: truly, this was a large request. Does not Daniel jeopardize all his gain by this daring proposal? Come what will, he will serve his nation, he will serve his God. And if, by sagacious foresight, he can diminish the oppressions of his countrymen, or pave the path for their return to Palestine, he will do it. The sacred fire aglow in his heart is revealed. Self is obliterated. To do good to Jew and Gentile alike—this is his sweet ambition! O man, "beloved of God," thy name shall be embalmed in fragrant remembrance.—Pul. Com.

a "Prob. a bust upon a pedestal, and not solid, but of some material covered with plates of gold."

—Arch. Rose.

b "Nebuc. had just returned fr. finishing the Jewish and Syrian wars, the spoils of which would furnish the means of rearing such a colossal statue."

—Prideaux.

c "Oppert has identified the spot, and found a large square pedestal of brick, which may be the remains of the pedestal."

—Wordsworth.

d "Whatsoever part of the empire ye come from, and whatever language you speak,"

—Lowth.

e "Such harps are found in Egyptian and Assyrian monuments."

—Layard.

f "The division of the day into twelve hours was received by the Babylonians, and passed fr. them into Greece."

—Herodotus.

g Je. xlix. 23.

CHAPTER THE THIRD.

1—3. (1) image of gold,^a either representing Bel, the Bab. god; or, perhaps, Nebuc. himself. If the latter the king's purpose was political. threescore cubits, prob. the fig. was thirty-six and the pedestal twenty-four cubits.^b Dura, prob. only a little distance from Bab., and convenient for assembling a great multitude.^c (2) princes, satraps. judges, R. V. marg., "chief soothsayers," sheriffs, Arab. mufti; men learned in the law.—Gesenius. (3) stood before, in front of; ready for the act of devotion required.

Nebuchadnezzar's God.—"We commonly observe, as peculiar to Nebuchadnezzar, a disposition to rest his fame on his great works rather than in his military achievements; and a strong religious spirit, manifesting itself especially in a direction which is almost exclusive to one particular god, though his own tutelary deity and that of his father was Nebo (Mercury), yet his worship, his ascriptions of praise, his thankgivings, have in almost every case for their object the god Merodach. Under his protection he placed his son Evil-Merodach. Merodach is his 'lord,' his 'great lord,' the 'joy of his heart,' the 'great lord who has appointed him to the empire of the world, and has confided to his care the far-spread people of the earth.' He was to him 'the supreme chief of the gods.'"—Rawlinson.

4—7. (4) nations and languages, intended to intimate the vast and varied extent of the Bab. empire;^d including both Semitic and Aryan people. (5) cornet, or horn. flute, or pipe. harp, cithara, or guitar. sackbut, Lat. sambuca, a four-stringed instrument with a shrill tone. psaltery, kind of harp with strings below the sounding board.^e dulcimer, Chaldee sumponya, a kind of bagpipe. fall down, prostrate themselves in the attitude of adoration. (6) same hour,^f or at once. furnace, or oven; a kind of punishment peculiar to the Babs.^g (7) fell down, yielding prompt obedience.

Religious Persecution.—In the matter of religion, the State has no authority, and it ought, therefore, to leave every man to his own conscience. The kingdoms and communities of the world have been long in learning these principles; and there is hardly a nation or even a religious denomination now existing which has not at some point in its past history been guilty of practicing, or of advocating, persecution for the holding of some peculiar religious opinions. The Protestants may not imagine that Roman Catholics alone have indulged in it; nor are the hands of the Puritans themselves clean in this matter.—W. M. Taylor. —The Fiery Furnace.—This mode of putting to death was not unusual in the East in more modern times. Chardin, in his Travels, after speaking of the most common modes of punishing with death, says, "But there is still a particular way of putting to death such as have transgressed in civil affairs, either by causing a dearth, or by selling above the tax by a false weight, or who have committed themselves in any other manner. The cooks are put upon a spit and roasted over a slow fire (see Jer. xxix. 22), bakers are thrown into a hot oven. During the dearth in 1668, I saw such ovens heated on the royal square in Ispahan, to terrify the bakers, and to deter them from deriving advantage from the general distress."

8—12. (8) certain Chaldaean, prob. court officers, who were jealous of the Jews, who had been advanced to places of trust. the Jews,^a those three Jews who had refused to render the required worship. Daniel does not seem to have been present. (9) O king, ch. ii. 4. (10) a decree, an expression of the king's will. (11) whoso, without any exceptions. (12) not regarded, note how skillfully the accusation is framed so as to excite Nebuc.'s anger. It is made out that the Jews offered personal insult to Nebuc., as well as to his gods.^b

Pliny's Letter to Trajan.—Soon after the emperor Trajan's great persecution, beginning A. D. 100, Pliny, the author, wrote a letter to the emperor, concerning the Christians who were brought before him, and he was perplexed to know what to do on account of the great number of persons, "who are in danger of suffering; for many of all ages and every rank, of both sexes likewise are accused. They refused to worship the image of the emperor. They affirmed that the whole of their fault or error lay in this, that they were wont to meet together on a stated day, before it was light, and sing among themselves, alternating, a hymn to Christ as God, to bind themselves by sacramentation, not to the commission of any wickedness, but not to be guilty of theft, or robbery, or adultery, never to falsify their word, nor to deny a pledge committed to them."—Peloubet.

13—15. (13) rage, etc., this indication of Nebuc.'s character, shows his lack of self-control. (14) true, R. V., "of purpose;" is it designed? His rage does not prevent his seeking to be just, by making careful inquiries. (15) Now, etc., Nebuc. would give them the opportunity of correcting their mistake. that God, R. V., "god," a distinct challenging of the power of Jehovah, whom the three Jews served.^c In his rage Nebuc. forgot what Jehovah had done through Daniel.

Nero's Persecutions.—There were no persecutions of Christians by the Romans till a year after Paul was released, when, "on the night of the 18th of July 64, a fire broke out in the city and raged six days and seven nights before it could be extinguished." It broke out again in another quarter and raged three days more. Two-thirds of the city, its homes and its temples were laid in ashes. The people accused Nero of setting the fire and to ward off the accusation he charged it upon the Christians and began a terrible persecution. They were crucified. They were sewed up in skins to resemble wild animals and hunting dogs tore them to pieces. They were covered with tow, smeared with pitch, chained to posts, and set on fire to illuminate Nero's gardens. It was a very carnival of hell.—Peloubet.

16—18. (16) not careful, R. V., "we have no need to"^a i.e. we need not take any time for deliberation: our mind is fully made up: we commend the matter to our God, whom you challenge. (17) will deliver, the language of firm faith, that gives calmness and courage. (18) if not, this shows that they had no knowledge of what God would do for them, only their faith in Jehovah as sure to stand by the right.

Active Religious Principles (vs. 18).—I. The principles for which we contend should be true. II. True principles should be maintained against all opposition. 1. They had to contend against the authority of the king; 2. They were under great obligations to the king; 3. Universal example was against them; 4. Disobedience was to be followed by tremendous punishment. III. Truth should be maintained in the spirit of ^a "The word trans. 'accused' is a singular one, lit. meaning, 'ate the pieces of the Jews,' i. e. they c a l u m n i a t e d, they slandered, they informed against them." —Spk. Com.

^b "The Bab. and Assyr. exacted from the nations, which they conquered, submission to their own gods." —Wordsworth.

^c Ex. v. 2; 2 Ki. xviii. 35.

The fires of persecution begin to kindle when the fires of the Spirit begin to burn. — A. T. Pierson.

"The fairest flower in the garden of creation is a young mind, offering and unfolding itself to the influence of Divine wisdom, as the heliotrope turns its sweet blossoms to the sun."—Sir J. E. Smith.

^a "They keep their temper admirably well, do not call the king a tyrant or an idolator, but, with an exemplary calmness, and sedateness of mind, they deliberately give in their answer, which they resolve to abide by."—Matthew Henry.

2 TI. iv. 17.

^b "Passion overdoes and defeats its own end, for the hotter the fire, the sooner were they likely to be put out of pain."—Fausset.

^c Some render, "Their shirts, their tunics, and their mantles."

According to Herodotus the dress worn in Babylon consisted of an under linen garment reaching to the feet, a woollen garment over it, and a woollen mantle.

"Zinzendorf, when a boy, used to write little notes to the Savior, and throw them out of the window, hoping that He would find them; such were his thoughts of Jesus and his love to Him."—Phelps.

^a "The Chaldaeans believed in families of gods: Bel, the supreme god, accompanied by the goddess Mylitta, being the father of the gods; thus by the expression Nebuc. meant one sprung from and sent by the gods."—Fausset.

"The king saw in that flame fed by human sacrifice the greatest and most active of the gods with whom the priest had direct communication by sacred rites, and magic incantations; and he recognized the intervention in favor of his victims."—Spk. Com.

"The more your religion costs you, the richer returns it will bring you."—T. Cuyler.

"The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church."—Ter-tullian.

love. If we fail in this—I. We injure our cause before men; 2. We deprive ourselves of Almighty help. IV. There are abundant encouragements for us thus to maintain true principles. V. Glorious results will follow the consistent maintenance of right principles.—E. Thompson.

19—21. (19) visage, face; the expression of his countenance. seven times, seven is here used as the ideal number. The furnace was to be heated as hot as it could be heated.^b (20) most mighty, R. V., "certain mighty," it required brave men to venture near enough to cast them in. The flames, driven by the wind, would put in peril those who ventured near. (21) coats, or mantles. hosen, not stockings, wh. are seldom worn in the East; but inner tunics. hats, or turbans,^c i.e. they were taken just as they stood before Nebuc.

Palissy and Henry III.—Bernard de Palissy, a native of Agen in France, was a maker of earthenware at Saintes, and distinguished himself by his knowledge and talents. He was a Calvinist; and the French king, Henry III., said to him one day, that he should be compelled to give him up to his enemies unless he changed his religion. "You have often said to me, sire," was the undaunted reply of De Palissy, "that you pitied me; but as for me, I pity you, who have given utterance to such words as 'I shall be compelled.'" These are unkingly words; and I say to you, in royal phrase, that neither the Guises, nor all your people, nor yourself, are able to compel a humble manufacturer of earthenware to bend his knee before statues."

Martyrs.—

Who lived unknown till persecution

Dragged them into fame, and chased them

Up to heaven; whose blood was shed

In confirmation of the noblest claim—

Our claim to feed upon immortal truth,

To soar, and to anticipate the skies.

22, 23. (22) urgent, requiring instant obedience. flame, roaring from the furnace, and driven against them. (23) fell down, they had been hurriedly flung in, so they fell right into the very midst of the flames. bound, and so helpless to deliver themselves, or each other. Every point makes the miraculous deliverance more wonderful.

24, 25. (24) astonied, see Ezr. ix. 3. three men, Nebuc.'s surprise seems chiefly to have concerned the presence of the guardian angel. (25) no hurt, from the fire. Son of God, R. V., "a son of the gods,"^a comp. vs. 28.

True Souls (vs. 25).—Here we have true souls.—I. Immensely tried. II. Morally unconquerable. III. Essentially uninjurably. IV. Divinely accompanied.—Thomas.

The Martyr not Alone.—In the ecclesiastical history of Socrates, there is mention made of one Theodorus, a martyr put to extreme torments by Julian the Apostate, and dismissed again by him when he saw him unconquerable. Ruffinus, in his history, saith, that he met with this martyr a long time after his trial, and asked him whether the pains he felt were not insufferable. He answered, that at first it was somewhat grievous, but after a while there seemed to stand by him a young man in white, who, with a soft and comfortable handkerchief, wiped off the sweat from his body (which, through extreme anguish, was little less than blood) and bade him be of good cheer, inasmuch as then it was rather a punishment than a pleasure to him to be taken off the rack, sith when the tormentors had done the angel was gone.—Spencer.

Christ's Presence.—

Dying with Jesus, his death reckoned mine;

Living with Jesus a new life divine;

Looking to Jesus till glory doth shine

Moment by moment, O Lord, I am thine.

Never a trial that He is not there;

Never a burden that He doth not bear;

Never a sorrow that He doth not share

Moment by moment, I'm under his care.

Never a heart-ache and never a groan,
Never a tear-drop and never a moan
Never a danger, but there on the throne Moment by moment, He thinks of His own.

Never a weakness that He doth not feel;
Never a sickness that He cannot heal;
Moment by moment, in woe or in weal, Jesus my Savior abides with me still.

—D. W. Whittle.

26—27. (26) mouth, or door. servants, etc., acknowledging thus that their God had proved Himself mightier than all the gods of Babylon. come forth, he recognizes that it was reality, not a vision, which he had seen in the furnace. (27) saw, etc., so the miracle became a witness for Jehovah to all the vast nation. Jehovah manifested himself as Master of one of the gods high in the Babylonian pantheon—Iz-bar, fine,—consequently the Jews in exile could maintain their faith unchallenged.—Pul. Com.

Polycarp's Martyrdom.—When Polycarp was brought to the tribunal before whom he was tried, the pro-consul asked him if he was Polycarp; to which he assented. The pro-consul then began to exhort him, saying, "Have pity on thine own great age: swear by the fortune of Cæsar; repent; say, 'Take away the Atheists'" (meaning the Christians). Polycarp, casting his eye solemnly over the multitude, said, "Eighty and six years have I served Him, and He hath never wronged me, and how can I blaspheme my King, who hath saved me?" "I have wild beasts," said the pro-consul, "and will expose you to them unless you repent." "Call them!" said the martyr. "I will tame your spirit by fire," said the Roman. "You threaten me," said Polycarp, "with the fire which burns only for a moment, but are yourself ignorant of the fire of eternal punishment, reserve for the ungodly." Soon after, being bound on the burning stake, he exclaimed, "O Father of Thy beloved and blessed Son, Jesus Christ! O God of all principalities and of all creation! I bless Thee that Thou hast counted me worthy of this day, and of this hour, to receive my portion in the number of the martyrs, in the cup of Christ. I praise Thee for all these things; I bless Thee, I glorify Thee, by the eternal High Priest, Jesus Christ, Thy well-beloved Son, through whom, and with whom, in the Holy Spirit, be glory to Thee, both now and for ever. Amen."

28—30. (28) Blessed, etc., comp. ch. vi. 26. changed . . word, "transgressed the commandment of the king and gave up their bodies."—Stuart. (29) amiss, etc., Jehovah was to be reverently acknowledged, not, however, to be worshiped;^a Nebuc. does not intend to change the national religions. cut in pieces,^b ch. ii. 5. (30) promoted, to higher and more responsible state offices.^c

God's Miracles.—"On the one side was the world-monarchy; irresistible, conquering, as the heathen thought, the God of the vanquished. On the other, a handful of the worshipers of the one only God, captives, scattered, with no visible centre or unity, without organization or power to resist save their indomitable faith, inwardly upheld by God, outwardly strengthened by the very calamities which almost ended their national existence; for they were the fulfilment of His Word in whom they believed. Thrice during the seventy years human power put itself forth against the faith; twice in edicts which, if obeyed, would have extinguished the true faith on earth; once in direct insult to God. Faith, as we know, 'quenched the violence of fire, stopped the mouth of lions.' In all cases the assault was signally rolled back; the faith was triumphant in the face of all the representatives of the power and intelligence of the empire; in all, the truth of the one God was proclaimed by those who had assailed it. Unbelief, while it remains such, must deny all true miracles and all superhuman prophecy. But, if honest, it dare not designate as objectless miracles which decided the cause of truth in such battlefields."—Hom. Com.—Following Christ.—When Garibaldi was raising his army he said, "I have no money, no food, nor clothing, no stores, no resources: let every man that is willing to suffer poverty, shame, hunger,

"A broken fortune is like a falling column; the lower it sinks, the greater weight it has to sustain." — Ovid.

^a Ps. lxxxix. 8, xciv. 3, cxlii. 5.

^b "This decree promulgated throughout the vast empire of Nebuc. must have tended much to keep the Jews from idolatry in the captivity and henceforth."

—Fausset.

^c "It is the wisdom of princes to prefer and employ men of steadfastness in religion; for those are most likely to be faithful to them who are faithful to God, and it is likely to be well with them when God's favorites are made theirs."

—Mat. Henry.

^a "This royal decree was doubtless preserved in the archives of Bab. It was a State paper; and the accuracy of this transcript could therefore easily be tested." — Wordsworth.

^b Ps. x. 16, ciii. 19.

^a "The king's request was a fair one when addressed to men whose elaborate system of augury contained tables of omens from dreams, as well as the interpretation of every possible dream." — Spk. Com.

"I shall see the winged vengeance overtake such children." — Shakespeare.

^a "The language of the king constantly vacillates bet. polytheism and monotheism, but he never admits one God to the exclusion of all others; his monotheism only implies that one God is supreme among many." — Arch. Rose.

According to a tradition current among the natives of Puerto Rico, there was an island of the Bahama group which had upon it a marvellous fountain, whose waters produced perpetual youth. For this marvel of nature, Juan Ponce de Leon, the Spanish navigator, sought long and earnestly, yet in vain.

disease and death, and who loves Italy, follow me." It is the measure of our suffering that will enable us to be like the Master. It has been said that when he died he left his purse to Judas, his clothes to the soldiers, his mother to John, his pardon to the dying thief and his peace to the disciples. Someone has said, "I look for the world and I find it in the church and I look for the church and find it in the world." You may try all you please for the Baptism of the Holy Ghost, and unless you are willing to present your bodies a living sacrifice to God you cannot be filled with the Spirit.—D. W. Whittle.

CHAPTER THE FOURTH.

1-3. (1) Peace, etc., the usual form of E. salutation. This is an abbreviated copy of the royal decree, or proclamation.^a (2) thought it good, or "it was seemly before me." signs, "tokens significant of God's omnipotent agency." (3) everlasting,^b as comp. with the perishing nature of a reign like his own; see ch. ii. 44.

The Use of Dreams.—"Dreams become significant when they are the concentrated essence of the main stream of the waking thoughts, and picturesquely exhibit the tendency of the character. This is precisely the use of dreams: our tendencies unbridled by reason and fact run on to results; and we see the character unimpeded by social checks, and as it would be were it unmodified by the restraints, and efforts, and external considerations of our conscious hours. Our vanity, our pride, our malice, our deceit, our every evil passion has free play, and shows us its finished result, and in so vivid and true, though caricatured, a form, that we are startled and withdrawn from our purpose."—Marcus Dods.

4-7. (4) at rest, having finished his wars, and holding undisputed possession of the world. Ewald suggests by comp. with the lxx., that this was the 28th yr. of Nebuc.'s reign. flourishing, like a tree. At full ease and prosperity. (5) afraid, though he did not understand it, he felt that there was something ominous about it. thoughts . . . bed, i.e. "the reflections of his mind upon the dream after he had awaked."—Stuart. (6) made . . . decree, or issued a command. wise men, a part of whose profession it was to interpret dreams.^a (7) magicians, ch. ii. 2. Chaldeans, in much later ages the name was used, as it was among the Roman writers, for wandering astrologers and quacks.—Exp. B.

Tartini's Devil's Sonata.—"Tartini a distinguished violin player, is said to have composed his 'Devil's Sonata' under the inspiration of a dream, in which the devil appeared to him and invited him to a trial of skill upon his own instrument, which he accepted, and awoke with the music of the Sonata so vividly impressed upon his mind that he had no difficulty in committing it to paper."—Amer. Cycl.

8, 9. (8) came in, or was called in. Prob. as president of the province he was no longer classed with the magicians, and so had to be specially called in the emergency. name . . . god, Bel, or Beltis. holy gods, this is Nebuc.'s view. Daniel would say, "the spirit of the one and only God."^a (9) master, not in office, but in the sense of being able to do what they could not do.

Youthful Piety.—You will make a terrible mistake if you suppose that piety unfits you for life, or imagine that its existence in youth is an abnormal thing that indicates the presence of disease. Believe me, there is nothing so healthy, or so wholesome, as to give yourselves early to the Lord. It will lay in you the foundation of a vigorous and energetic character. It will bring the highest of all motives to bear alike upon education, recreation, and business, and enable you to make the very best of yourselves for God and for your fellowmen. It will secure for you all that is best worth having in the world, while along with that, you will have the enjoyment of God's favor, and the prospect of heaven's happiness. For the case of Daniel is not exceptional. You have the same things illustrated in the lives of Joseph and Moses and Samuel, and in some degree also, in that of Timothy; while, if you care to look around you and inquire into the histories of many of those among ourselves who are most loved and trusted by their fellow-citizens, you will discover that they also have "feared God from their youth."

10—12. (10) a tree, for the fig. comp. Ezek. xxxi. 3. The reference here may be to the sacred tree of the Assyrians, the symbol of life, which is so perpetually introduced into the sculptures of Nineveh, and seen also in some Babylonian cylinders, especially in connection with royal acts of worship.—Pul. Com. midst, middle, or centre; perh. Babylon was considered as the middle point of the earth. (11) grew, etc., symbol of the rise of Nebuc.'s own power. unto heaven, a strong fig. for a great height. (12) meat, or food, a general term. beasts, etc., symbol of the subjects of Nebuc.'s kingdom.

Trees.—Trees of the pine and fir tribes, when cut down, do not send up fresh stems, like broad-leaved trees in general; but their roots immediately begin to decay. . . . The magnificent cedar of Lebanon might have been looked upon by Nebuchadnezzar as a suitable emblem of his own glory and power, but it cannot have been this tree that he saw in his dream,—a tree that grew "and was strong, and the height thereof reached unto heaven, and the sight thereof to the end of all the earth." Had it been a resinous tree, a cedar, pine, or fir, it would have been in vain to have left the "stump of his roots in the earth," until "seven times" would "pass over him," expecting that vitality would again show itself. It must, therefore, have been a broad-leaved tree, having the power, which trees of the fir tribe do not possess, of forming fresh buds, and putting forth fresh branches at any part of the stem, and at any time when the flow of sap has been accidentally stopped. This idea is confirmed by the statement that it was a fruit-producing tree, affording "meat for all." Bearing fruit, and growing afresh when cut down, are properties that apply conjointly to some trees, and there are other trees to which neither of them can properly apply.—Gorrie.

13—15. (13) watcher, etc., i.e. a holy watcher, an angel. (14) aloud, or "with might." (15) stump, so that he may yet sprout again. with a band, to be put round the trunk to prevent it fr. cracking open in the sun. A symbol of the care with wh. the germ of the tree would be preserved until the time for sprouting.—Stuart. in . . grass, in the midst of. portion . . beasts, of whom, in his lunacy, Nebuc. would fancy himself one.

Prosperity and Reverses.—It was a common method in olden time to represent a prosperous man under the image of a flourishing tree. "The righteous shall prosper as a palm tree; he shall grow as a cedar in Lebanon." The greatness and splendor of Nebuchadnezzar resembled such a tree. He reigned in Babylon—well-nigh the centre of the then known world. His power among earthly kings was supreme. Neighboring monarchs were his vassals. In all his wars he had been successful. Israel and Syria, Egypt and Arabia, lay at his feet. His throne was strong, and his fame reached, as it seemed, to heaven. Nor did his rule appear, on the whole, injurious. The peoples found protection under his sceptre. He encouraged the growth of art and science. But this military glory fed and pampered his pride. He deemed himself something more than man. He imagined himself a demi-god. The prosperity was outward, material, plausible. . . . He who had "set his heart as the heart of God," who had aspired to a place among the stars, was to fall below the level of a man—was to have the heart of a beast, abject weakness instead of imperial might, imbecility in place of boasted wisdom. This disaster is said to be proclaimed by a holy watcher. This language was an accommodation to prevalent beliefs. The unfallen angels watch our course, grieve over our declensions, and correct us for our follies. So did an angel scatter the hosts of Sennacherib. So did an angel smite Herod with a fatal disease. "Are they not all ministering spirits?" "Excelling in strength, they do his commands, hearkening to the voice of his word."—Pul. Com.

Angels.—

The good one, after every action, closes
His volume, and ascends with it to God.
The other keeps his dreadful day-book open Till sunset, that we may repent, which doing,

"Pleasure has been the business of my life, and every change of fortune easy to me, because I still was easy to myself." —Dryden.

"It is with youth as with plants; from the first fruits they bear, we learn what may be expected in future." —Demophilus.

"Angels for the good man's sin, weep to record, and blush to give it in." —Campbell.

"Intemperate youth, by sad experience found, ends in an age imperfect and unsound." —Denham.

Youth scatters its affections with a liberal hand, like a young heir, ignorant as yet of the value of his possessions.

"The youth . . yielding like wax, th' impression folly bears; rough to reproof; and slow to future cares." —Horace.

"Youth is not like a new garment, which we can keep fresh and fair by wearing sparingly. Youth, while we have it, we must wear daily and it will fast wear away." —Poster.

^a“It is now conceded that the madness of Nebuc. agrees with the description of a rare sort of disease called Lycanthropy, of which our earliest notice is in a Greek medical writer of the 4th century after our Lord, in which the sufferer retains his consciousness in other respects, but imagines himself to be changed into some animal and acts, up to a certain point, in conformity with that persuasion.” — Pusey.

^b 1 Sa. II. 8; Lu. 1. 52.

^c“Being amazed and distressed by the dreadful calamity wh. he saw was portended by the vision, he felt tender compassion for his king and benefactor.” — Wordsworth.

“Youth is ever apt to judge in haste, and lose the medium in the wild extreme.” — Aaron Hill.

“It requires greater virtues to support good than bad fortune.” — La Rochefoucauld.

The young should be spared from sorrow as much as possible. Never dim the sunshine of hope and joy, so as to leave them without even the memory of its glory.

“O, I have ta'en too little care of this! Take physic, pomp; expose thyself to feel what wretches feel; that thou mayst shake the superflux to them, and show the heavens more just.” — Shakespeare.

The record of the action fades away.
Now, if my act be good, as I believe,
It cannot be recalled. It is already Sealed up in heaven as a good deed accomplished.
The rest is yours. — Longfellow.

16—18. (16) heart, thoughts or ideas. beast's heart, the notions, and feelings, and tastes of a brute beast.^a seven times, not a definite period, but the complete time Divinely allotted to him. Most commentators give the word “time” the meaning of “year.” (17) decree, or sentence. The view seems to be that the Almighty had a council of angels, and before them was every question discussed ere it was decreed. In short, that there was a heavenly sanhedrin, corresponding to that on earth.—Pul. Com. basest, or lowest in condition.^b (18) thou . . able, the king's confidence is based on Daniel's former success.

Nebuchadnezzar's Insanity.—“My opinion is that of all mental powers or conditions the idea of personal identity is but rarely enfeebled, and that it is never extinguished. The ego (self) and non ego (not self) may be confused. The ego, however, continues to preserve the personality. I have seen a man declaring himself the Savior, St. Paul, yet sign his own name James Thomson, and attend worship as regularly as if the notion of Divinity had never entered into his head. I think it probable, therefore, because consistent with experience in similar forms of mental affection, that Nebuchadnezzar retained a perfect consciousness that he was Nebuchadnezzar during the whole course of his degradation.” — Browne. If Dr. Browne's idea that the king kept all thro' the consciousness that he was Nebuchadnezzar be correct, his agony must at times have been most acute. What an anguish it was now and then to Robert Hall, with that noble intellect of his, to awake to the fact, as he sometimes did after a paroxysm of madness, that he had become so irrational! And similar shocks must have gone thro' the heart of Nebuchadnezzar during his time of affliction.—Taylor.

19—22. (19) astonied, as one rapt, or entranced. He seems to have feared to tell the interpretation.^c one hour, R. V., “for a while.” hate thee, such only as they will be pleased to hear; or Daniel wishes that what this dream indicates might fall upon the king's enemies. (20) tree, vs. 10. (21) leaves, etc., vs. 12. (22) thou, the tree was the symbol of the king himself.

Personal Reproof.—God's prophet is bold as well as skilful; fearless as well as affectionate. Being God's messenger, he is bound to represent God; and, with all God's might for his defence, nothing can really harm him. Beside, his very eagerness to promote men's welfare inspires him with courage. He is conscious that he has no other end in view, except to please his Master and to benefit men; hence he proceeds straightway to put his finger upon the plague-spot of men's disease, and to prescribe the remedy. In dealing with those who desire their guidance, God's prophets cannot be too plain, too pointed, or too faithful. If a wanderer seeks guidance through a perilous wilderness, his guide cannot be too plain in his instructions, nor too persistent in requiring a faithful following of his words. Fearless vindication of the truth is a mark of a genuine prophet.—Pul. Com.

23—25. (23) watcher, etc., vs. 13, 14. (24) most High, Daniel does not call it a decree of the “watcher” or of the gods of Nebuc., but the One God of Daniel, who was Nebuc.'s God also, though unacknowledged. (25) drive, etc., indicating force, used against the king's will. dwelling . . beasts, this was prob. done to humor his mania. eat grass, man cannot live on grass, so that other food must have been provided for him.

Failure of Worldly Things to Satisfy.—Solomon tried all that the world can give, and under the most favorable circumstances, yet found all to be vanity and vexation of spirit. Byron, with rank, and wealth, and all manner of pleasure, failed of content and happiness. Alexander conquered the world, but it did not satisfy his soul; and if he could have conquered all worlds that stud the heavens, he would still have wept for more. For God has not created a single human soul so small and poor that all the material universe can fill it. All literature is full of expressions of the failure of worldly things to satisfy the soul.—Peloubet.

26, 27. (26) sure, i.e. kept for thee, when the great lesson shall be learned, pride is broken down, and the living God acknowledged. heavens, mentioned for God, bec. His dwelling place. (27) acceptable, so that you at once give practical heed to it. break, etc., make an end of thy sins by a change of life. mercy . . poor, these Nebuc. may have crushed by exactions of forced labor. lengthening, bec. God may, if He will, delay judgment when there are signs of repentance.^a Necessity of Contrition.—Take the cold iron, and attempt to weld it, if you can, into a certain shape. How fruitless the effort! Lay it on the anvil, seize the blacksmith's hammer with all your might, let blow after blow fall upon it, and you shall have done nothing; but put it in the fire, let it be softened and made malleable, then lay it on the anvil, and each stroke shall have a mighty effect, so that you may fashion it into any form you may desire: so take your heart, not cold as it is, not stony as it is by nature, but put it into the furnace; there let it be molten, and after that it can be turned like wax to the seal, and fashioned into the image of Jesus Christ.—Spurgeon.

28—30. (28) came, not at once, but when, having forgotten the warning, his heart was lifted up in pride.^b (29) twelve months, prob. a time of peace during wh. Nebuc. was concerned with the adornment of the capital. palace, R. V., "royal palace of," to this the king's special attention had been given.^c (30) spake, giving actual expression to the proud thoughts he cherished. built,^d here not meaning "founded," but "restored and enlarged." In this vs. the words "I, my," are emphatic.

The Pride of Nebuchadnezzar (vs. 30).—Three things I note in this saying. 1. What a glorious opinion Nebuchadnezzar had of his vain building. 1. Out of these words, "Is not this great Babel?" 2. Out of these words, "Which I have built by the might of my power:" wherein he termeth himself the founder of it, as if he had done it all without a helper; 3. That in all his work he sought nothing but vainglory. Out of these words, "For the honor of my majesty." These three sins Nebuchadnezzar doth bewray in one brag; and in all these three we are so like, that the beasts were not so like him when he became a beast.—H. Smith.

Walking on the Roof.—The custom of walking upon the roof in the cool of the day, to inhale the refreshing breeze, and to survey the surrounding scenery, may serve to explain a Scripture incident of considerable interest. If Nebuchadnezzar walked upon the roof of his palace, which proudly rose above the surrounding habitations, and surveyed the vast extent, the magnificence, and the splendor of that great city, the mistress of the world—its walls of prodigious height and thickness—its hanging gardens, reputed one of the most astonishing efforts of art and power—its glittering palaces; the Euphrates rolling his majestic flood through the middle of the place, shut in on both sides by strong bulwarks and doors of brass; it was quite natural for such a man to feel elated with the sight, and indulge his pride and arrogance in the manner described by the Prophet.—Paxton. Pride and its Fall.—The Bible always represents to us that pride and arrogant self-confidence are an offence against God. And something like this we see again and again in what the late Bishop Thirlwall called the "irony of history"—the very cases in which men seem to have been elevated to the very summit of power only to heighten the dreadful precipice over which they immediately fall. He mentions the cases of Persia, which was on the verge of ruin, when with lordly arrogance she dictated the Peace of Antalcidas; of Boniface VIII., in the Jubilee of 1300, immediately preceding his deadly overthrow; of Spain, under Philip II., struck down by the ruin of the Armada at the zenith of her wealth and pride. He might have added the instances of Ahab, Sennacherib, Nebuchadnezzar, and Herod Antipas; of Alexander the Great, dying as the fool dieth, drunken and miserable, in the supreme hour of his conquests; of Napoleon, hurled into the dust, first by the retreat from Moscow, then by the overthrow at Waterloo.—Exp. B.

31—33. (31) While . . mouth, the moment of pride becoming the moment of judgment.^a fell a voice, of the watcher; this must have been heard by others. It did but recall the judgment of wh. Daniel had given warning. (33) body was wet, he persisted in going naked like the beasts.

^a 1 Ki. xxi. 29. How near we are to each other when we are all united to God!—Fenelon.

^b "The influence upon Nebuc. of the dream, as interpreted by Daniel is not indicated in Scripture. Very poss. Nebuc. was offended and annoyed."

^c "The 'Stand. Inscription' contains the following: 'I have adorned no part of Babylon—that city wh. is the pupil of my eye—as I have the palace. That is the house which commands the admiration of men; it is the central spot of the country, high and elevated; it is the house of royalty in the country of Babylon.'—Spk. Com.

^d "The words 'I have built' occur again and again in the inscription which is preserved in the British Museum."—Wordsworth.

^a Comp. Ac. xii. 23.

b "The nails, so long as they are cut, grow unremittlingly: when this is omitted, their growth is confined. In this case, as may be observed in the sick when long bedridden, the nails become 1 or 2 inches long and curve round the fingers and ends of the toes."—Kolliker.

a "I recovered the use of my reason, and became sensible of my dependence upon God, and lifted up mine eyes to heaven in a devout acknowledgment of His sovereign majesty, whose dominion alone is unchangeable, and endures for ever."—Lowth.

b "It is a mark of true contrition to condemn oneself, and justify God."—Fausset.

hairs, etc., a natural growth of hair covering his body. nails, etc.,^b they had a tendency to curve round.

Antiochus and Nebuchadnezzar.—The madness of Antiochus was recognized in the popular change of his name from Epiphanes to Epimanes. But there were obvious points of resemblance between these potentates. Both of them conquered Jerusalem. Both of them robbed the Temple of its holy vessels. Both of them tried to dictate the religion of their subjects. What happened to the kingdom of Babylon during the interim is a point with which the writer does not trouble himself. It formed no part of his story or of his moral. There is, however, no difficulty in supposing that the chief magis and courtiers may have continued to rule in the king's name—a course rendered all the more easy by the extreme seclusion in which most Eastern monarchs pass their lives, often unseen by their subjects from one year's end to the other. Alike in ancient days as in modern—witness the cases of Charles VI. of France, Christian VII. of Denmark, George III. of England, and Otho of Bavaria—a king's madness is not allowed to interfere with the normal administration of the kingdom.—Exp. B. Standard Inscription.—The monarch himself seems to have recorded an event to which profane historians make no allusion. In an inscription known as the 'Standard Inscription' of the great Babylonian sovereign, occurs a remarkable passage, which is thus translated by Sir H. Rawlinson: "Four years (?).... the seat of my kingdom in the city . . . which . . . did not rejoice my heart. In all my dominions I did not build a high place of power; the precious treasures of my kingdom I did not lay up. In Babylon, buildings for myself, and for the honor of my kingdom, I did not lay out. In the worship of Merodach, my god, the joy of my heart(?) in Babylon, the city of his sovereignty, and the seat of my empire, I did not sing his praises(?) and I did not furnish his altars (with victims), nor did I clear out the canals."

34—37. (34) end . . days, the "seven times" of the judgment. lifted . . eyes, the uplook is a sign of returning reason. Designates the posture of prayer. understanding,^a or power of mental control; relation of will to the ordering of the mental associations. everlasting, etc., ch. vii. 14. (35) all . . nothing, Is. xl. 15, 17. what doest thou? no human power able to stand against the irresistible dominion of Jehovah. Job ix. 12; Is. xlv. 9. (36) brightness, prob. alluding to the proper feeling and sentiment of a man. sought, to receive directions for the government of the kingdom. (37) King of heaven, the characteristic name for Jehovah in this book. pride . . abase, this was the lesson wh. his humiliation was designed to teach.^b

There is a Spiritual Insanity in which Men Renounce the Privileges and Duties of Their Higher Nature, and Live as if They Had Nothing above the Animal in Them.—The degradation of Nebuchadnezzar finds its spiritual counterpart in the voluntary behavior of multitudes. They have human souls, yet they live as though they should perish like mere animals. They are made in the image of God, yet they act after the manner of brutes. They have spiritual faculties which they blind and deaden with animal passions. If we were not so familiar with such people, and did not all of us, more or less, share their faults, it would be difficult not to regard them as the worst of madmen. While we shudder at the calamity of Nebuchadnezzar, should we not be far more appalled at the awful depravity of so large a part of the human world which calmly accepts a fate in all moral respects its equivalent?—Pul. Com. Light at Eventide.—It is a perilous thing to abuse any of God's gifts. Thereby we interfere with the order of the government, and justly provoke his anger. The darkening of intellect with prejudice is no mean offence. Bribing reason with sensual delights not to recognize God—this is a serious injury to one's self, and daring rebellion against God. Such was the aggravated sin of Nebuchadnezzar; yet the judgment of God was tempered with mercy. The abuse of reason resulted in its loss, yet the loss was temporary. The deplorable darkness was designed as a prelude to clearer light.

CHAPTER THE FIFTH.

1-4. (1) Belshazzar,^a prob. joint king with his father. great feast, kept an annual festival season, and regardless of the presence of an active enemy outside the walls. drank wine, this was usually after the feasting. before, prob. the king's seat was a separate one, at the head of the table, so that his guests might have a full view of him.—Stuart. (2) whiles . . wine, or when excited with wine. bring, etc., ch. i. 2. drink therein, not only putting sacred things to secular use, but intentionally insulting the God whose vessels they were. (4) praised, etc., in their drunken insolence offering public insult to the King of heaven.

The Fiery Inscription.—In this chapter again we have another magnificent fresco-picture, intended, as was the last—but under circumstances of aggravated guilt and more terrible menace—to teach the lesson that “verily there is a God that judgeth the earth.” The truest way to enjoy the chapter, and to grasp the lessons which it is meant to inculcate in their proper force and vividness, is to consider it wholly apart from the difficulties as to its literal truth. To read it aright, and duly to estimate its grandeur, we must relegate to the conclusion of the story all worrying questions, impossible of final solution, as to whom the writer intended by Belshazzar, or whom by Darius the Mede. All such discussions are extraneous to edification, and in no way affect either the consummate skill of the picture or the eternal truths of which it is the symbolic expression. To those who, with the present writer, are convinced, by evidence from every quarter—from philology, history, the testimony of the inscriptions, and the manifold results obtained by the Higher Criticism—that the Book of Daniel is the work of some holy and highly gifted Chasid in the days of Antiochus Epiphanes, it becomes clear that the story of Belshazzar, whatever dim fragments of Babylonian tradition it may enshrine, is really suggested by the profanity of Antiochus Epiphanes in carrying off, and doubtless subjecting to profane usage, many of the sacred vessels of the Temple of Jerusalem.—F. W. Farrar.

5, 6. (5) fingers, perhaps the semblance of a hand. over . . candlestick, i.e. just where the light shone fully on the wall. the plaister, the word means “plain stucco.”^b (6) countenance, Chal. brightness, his excited look.^c joints, etc., “prob. his hip-joints, or the joints in the lower part of the spine. The meaning seems to be that he was unable to keep his standing by reason of these natural supports being rendered tremulous.”—Stuart.

The Awakening Hour of Conscience (vss. 5, 6).—I. It is an hour that must dawn on the most obdurate natures. II. It is an hour introduced by a Divine manifestation. III. It is an hour associated with great mental distress. IV. It is an hour which is sometimes the harbinger of eternal retribution.—Thomas.

Conscience.—Everyone knows Victor Hugo's beautiful poem, “La Conscience,” the story of Cain, fleeing away before the eye of God. He walks thirty days and thirty nights, until he reaches the shores of the ocean. “Let us stop here,” says he. But as he sits down his face turns pale; he has seen in the mournful skies the Eye in the same place.” His sons, full of awe, try to erect barriers between him and the Eye; a tent, then a wall of iron, then a tower and a city; but all is vain. “I see the Eye still,” cries the unhappy man. At last they dig a tomb. The father is put into it. But,—

Tho' overhead they closed the awful vault,
The Eye was in the tomb and looked on Cain.

—Reuben Saillens.

7-9. (7) aloud, or with impatient instancy. read, so as to understand. scarlet, the color of honor and high rank. chain of gold,^a emblem of high office. third ruler, or “one of a board of three.”^b—Exp. B. (8) king's wise men, those belonging to the court. not read, not decipher. (9) lords . . astonished, R. V., “perplexed;” there was a “panic of the assembled spectators as they find themselves in the presence of an enigma which they cannot decipher.”—Stanley.

^a “Bil-shar-uzar, on the monuments, the son and colleague of Nabunahid. The Chaldean list of kings is Nebuc., Evil - Merodach, Neriglissar, Labaros carchod, and Nabunahid. In Herodotus the interval is filled up by the one name of Labyntus.”—Stanley.

^b “Rationalists must now retract the assertion that the last king of Babylon has a false name in Daniel, since it is now an admitted fact that the name of Belshazzar occurs on Bab. cylinders, as the eldest son of Nabunahid, the Nabonidus of Berossus, the Labyntus of Herodotus.”—Pusey.

^c “The great candlestick wh. lighted up the pale stucco on the wall of the palace “in which the banqueting hall was attached.”—Stanley.

^d “His color and the flush of wine left his cheek, and a deadly paleness came over him.”—Arch. Rose.

^e Ge. xli. 42.

^f Xenophon narrates that the Babylonians thought themselves secure and laughed at the measures of the besiegers; therefore we need not be surprised that Belshazzar made this promise.”—Wordsworth.

c "The Sultana Valde; very possibly the great Nitocris, the daughter of Nebuc., herself the architect of some of the great art works of the city."

d Da. iv. 8, 9, 18.

e "As Daniel was prob., according to Oriental custom, deprived of the office to wh. Nebuc. had promoted him, at the king's death, Belshazzar might easily be ignorant of his services."

—Fausset.

"In the wildest anarchy of man's insurgent appetites and sins, there is still a reclaiming voice; a voice which, even when in practice disregarded, it is impossible not to own; and to wh., at the very moment that we refuse our obedience, we find that we cannot refuse the homage of what ourselves do feel and acknowledge to be the best, the highest principles of our nature." — Chalmers.

"Trust that man in nothing who has not a conscience in everything." — Sterne.

Conscience.—Upon the coast of France, the sailors say there is a buried city; and on quiet nights, as they are rocked upon the deep, they think they can hear the tones of the buried bells, coming up from the steeples far down in the ocean depths, with muffled sound. So in the hearts of men of the world who have lived lives of self-indulgence and evil, there are muffled tones from the depths of their nature, ringing in the steeples of conscience, that tell them to choose what is right, and to shun what is wrong.—F. B. Meyer.

10—12. (10) queen, prop. queen-mother.^c reason . . words, this may mean, a message from the king, or a report of the excitement in the banqueting house. O king, the established mode of publicly addressing the royal person. (11) a man, etc., one within thy reach. holy gods, this represents the common idea about Daniel.^d He was possibly at this time in retirement, bec. out of favor at court.^e father, forefather. master, etc., ch. iv. 9. (12) doubts, or knots; intricate and difficult things.

Doubts (note on vs. 12).—The margin (Chald.) has, instead of "doubts," "knots." A very difficult subject is called a mudiche, a knot! Thus the explaining of a riddle is called "untying the knot." Of a talented man it is said, "Ah! he is very clever, he can tie or untie any knot." Of a dream, it is asked, "Who can loose this knot?" Of any mysteries, or of deep plans, it is asked, "Ah! who can untie these knots?" "How difficult that passage was, but he soon unravelled the knot."—Roberts. True Wisdom Gains her Ends at last.—She has often to hide her head for a time, while Folly is jingling her bells and is making a blustering noise; but her occasion is sure to come. Her voice will prevail at last, and men will chide themselves bitterly that they had not followed her counsels at an earlier day. Wisdom is always patient, because she knows that, sooner or later, her presence will be sought and her guidance followed. Belshazzar had "sown the wind;" now he was "reaping the whirlwind;" and, dismayed with the menacing storm, he became a docile pupil of Wisdom. Without hesitation or delay, he sent for the counsellor whom he had long neglected, and confessed his need of the prophet's service. Even the king is dependent on his subjects for a thousand things. Supercilious pride is the sure forerunner of disaster.—Pul. Com.

13—16. (13) that Daniel, the man to whom the queen-mother referred. It is curious that the king should address him by his Jewish name. (14) heard of thee, the words plainly prove that Daniel was not an acting official in the court or kingdom of Belshazzar. light, intelligence. (15) read, decipher. (16) dissolve doubts, see note on vs. 12.

God and a Guilty Conscience.—Alcibiades thus expresses himself in speaking of Socrates:—"I stop my ears, therefore, as from the syrens, and flee away as fast as possible, that I may not sit down beside him and grow old in listening to his talk; for this man has reduced me to feel the sentiment of blame which I imagine no one could readily believe was in me; he alone inspires me with remorse and awe, for I feel in his presence my incapacity of refuting what he says, or of refusing to do that which he directs; but when I depart from him, the glory which the multitude confers overwhelms me. I escape, therefore, and hide myself from him, and when I see him I am overwhelmed with humiliation, because I have neglected to do what I have confessed ought to be done; and often have I wished that he were no longer to be seen among men." If such were the feelings excited by a near view of the character of Socrates, how much more overwhelming must be the feelings created by a view of the infinite purity of God by a guilty conscience? Hence the conduct of sinners who have any sense of Him. They will not abide in His presence. They escape away from Him in the forgetfulness of this world; but when, alas, they do get a view of Him through the eye of a guilty conscience, how do they wish there was no such a Being! And some of them, prevailed upon by their wishes, really say in their hearts, "There is no God."—McCook.

The King's Despair.—Washington Allston spent more than twelve years attempting to paint the scene of Belshazzar's feast, and then left his work unfinished. It is said that the chief difficulty which the artist's genius could not overcome, was that of depicting the despair of the doomed king. Well it might be so; for it was the despair of a lost soul brought suddenly face to face with the retributive judgment of God, written by a mysterious hand from another world.—Phelps.

17—19. (17) Let . . . another, as one who had openly insulted Jehovah Daniel would have nothing whatever to do with him or his gifts.^a "There is more of respectful than of indignant pity in the words of his protest." (18) O thou king, a solemn direct address. most high God, whom Daniel proclaimed as the only God. Nebuc. had to learn in bitter humiliation whence his power really came.^b (19) whom he would, the description of irresponsible authority.

Tyranny not Essential to Kingly Power.—At the court of France, whilst Louis XIV. was yet in his youth, some abject courtiers were entertaining the prince in public with the policy of the Turkish government. They observed, that the Sultan had nothing to do but to say the word, whatever it was, whether to take off a great man's head, or strip him of his employment or estate, and that there was a train of servants they called mutes, who executed it without reply. "See," said the prince, "what it is to be a king!" The old Count de Grammont, who heard the corrupters of the youth with indignation, immediately interposed: "But, Sire; of these same sultans I have known three strangled by their own mutes within my memory." This silenced the flatterers; and the Duke de Montausier, the French Cato, who was lolling in a chair behind the circle that surrounded the prince, forced his way through the crowd, and publicly thanked the Count de Grammont for his noble and seasonable liberty.—Whitecross. Nebuchadnezzar and Babylon.—Nebuchadnezzar is the great monarch of the Babylonian empire, which, lasting only eighty-eight years, from B.C. 625 to B.C. 538, was for nearly half the time under his sway. The chief works ascribed to him by the ancient writers are the following: He built the great wall of Babylon, which, according to the lowest estimate, must have contained more than 500,000,000 square feet of solid masonry, and must have required three or four times that number of bricks. He constructed a new and magnificent palace in the neighborhood of the ancient residence of the kings. He made the celebrated "hanging garden," for the gratification of his wife, Amyitis. He repaired and beautified the great temple of Belus, at Babylon. He dug the huge reservoir near Sippara, said to have been 140 miles in circumference and 180 feet deep, furnishing it with floodgates, through which its waters could be drawn off for purposes of irrigation. There are said to be at least a hundred sites in the tract immediately about Babylon which give evidence, by inscribed bricks bearing his legend, of the marvelous activity and energy of this king.—Rawlinson.

20, 21. (20) hardened in pride, R. V. "spirit was hardened that he dealt proudly," ch. iv. 30. deposed, made to come down. This occurred not by the rebellion of his people, but by the direct visitation of God. (21) driven, etc., ch. iv. 32. appointeth, R. V. "setteth up."

Loss.—Sometimes a Means of Salvation.—An artist was once frescoing the lofty ceiling of a church and gradually stepping back on the scaffolding to watch the effect of his work; he was so absorbed in his picture that he did not notice that he was about to step off the edge, and fall upon the pavement far below. A brother artist, seeing his danger, and knowing that a word would but hasten his fall, threw his brush at the picture. The painter, indignant, rushed forward and was saved. Sometimes our pictured hopes, and visions of happiness, must be destroyed in order that we may be able to realize the evil of sin and be turned away from our own ruin.—Peloubet.

22—24. (22) not humbled, but instead hast only changed Nebuc.'s haughty pride for an insolent and utterly offensive form of pride. (23) praised . . . gods, this was the insult which could not be passed over.^a in whose hand, etc., "at whose disposal thy life is." whose . . . ways, Je. x. 23. (24) Then, i.e. just then; in the very moment when your insolent pride reached its climax.

The God of Our Life (vs. 23).—I. Our dependence on God.—I. For our existence; 28. For our well-being. II. The duty we owe to God in consequence of this dependence. 1. We ought to believe in Him and to love Him; 2. We ought to worship Him; 3. We ought to obey Him; 4. We ought to consult for His glory. III. Our neglect of this duty.

^a "Daniel's address to Belshazzar is in a very different tone fr. that of his language to Nebuc. Belshazzar was at this time guilty of profane sacrilege against God and the Prophet, as His minister, pronounced sentence upon him." —Wordsworth.

^b Da. iv. 35—37. Cynanthropy, Lycanthropy, and similar names, are given to the various hallucinations of this form of disease. The patient howls like a wolf, or attempts to bark like a dog, and to imitate the gestures and habits of the animal he believes himself transformed into. In such a condition of mind the natural food of that animal would be preferred.

^a "The language of Daniel here evidently implies that Belshazzar's use of these holy vessels in unholy revels was in the highest degree sacrilegious." —Arch. Rose.

a "The whole passage is an instance of the early mode of exegesis. The explainer took each word, and added to it his comment."

—Ewald.

"Mene, the days of the kingdom were numbered and ended; Tekel, it was weighed and found light; Peres, it was divided, and given to the Persians." — Stanley.

b "Belshazzar desired to conciliate Daniel, and Daniel's God." — Wordsworth.

"As the capture of the city by Cyrus was not till near daylight, there is no want of time in that eventful night for accomplishing all that is here recorded." — Fausset.

a "Two deserters, Gadatas and Gobryas, having assisted some of the Persian army to kill the guards and seize upon the palace, they entered into the room where the king was, whom they found standing up in a posture of defence; but they soon despatched him, and those that were with him." — Xenophon.

Je. ii. 89, 57.

1. In some it is total; 2. In some it is partial; 3. In all it is heinous.—Brooks.

25—28. (25) Mene, etc., lit. "numbered, numbered, weighed, broken." (26) finished, R. V. "brought it to an end." (28) Peres is singular, Pharsin is plural. "U" in Upharsin is "and." "divided," "broken" is the better meaning here, for "divided," etc., would convey the idea that the Medes and Persians were each a separate and independent power; which was not the fact when Babylon was captured.—Stuart.

Weighed in the Balance.—Roberts remarks that this striking form of speech is much used in the East at this day. Thus, should two men be disputing respecting the moral character of a third person, one will say, "I know the fellow well; I have weighed him, and he is found wanting." "He found wanting! you are much lighter than he." "What, miscreant; do you wish to weigh against me." "Thou art but as one part in a thousand." "Begone, fellow, or I will soon weigh thee." "Yes, yes, there is no doubt about it; you have weighed me; I am much lighter than you." "What kind of times are these? the slaves are weighing their masters." "The judge has been weighing the prisoners, and they are all wanting."

29. clothed, etc., prob. Daniel submitted bec. he knew what would happen before the night was over.^b scarlet, i.e. with a robe of scarlet color.

Rewards of Virtue.—We are to be careful not to confound outward rewards with the real reward of virtue. As "Love in loving finds its joy;" as the Savoyard singer, neglected and forgotten, declares that "The song itself shall yet reward

The labors of the Savoyard," so virtue contains in itself, in the approval of God, in peace of conscience, in spiritual life and character, in helpfulness and service, its best reward. And yet the reward is not perfect without outward conditions to match the inward grace. So shall it be in heaven.—Peloubet.

30, 31. (30) In that night, etc., the reading of the Sept. is here very different: "and the interpretation came upon Belshazzar, the king, and the kingdom was taken from the Chaldeans, and given to the Medes and the Persians." slain, in his palace.^a (31) and Darius the Median, etc., the Sept. reads: "And Artaxerxes of the Medes received the kingdom, and Darius was full of days and revered in old age." Some think Darius was "a viceroy set up by Cyrus. took, R. V. "received."

Belshazzar's Death (vs. 30).—Consider—I. The time of Belshazzar's death. It was the night—1. Of his feasting; 2. Of his impiety; 3. Of his warning. II. The instruction to be gathered from it. Learn—(1) Not to provoke the Lord to jealousy; (2) Not to despise the warnings you receive; (3) Not to delay the great work you have to do.—C. Simeon.

The Conquest of Babylon.—In October of the year 538 B.C. Cyrus at last turned his victorious armies towards the tottering capital of southwestern Asia. Persian intrigue, favored by the resentment and suspicion aroused among the Babylonians by the strange conduct of their king, Nabonidus, had prepared the way for an easy conquest. On the northern borders of Babylonia, a battle was fought between the Persians and Babylonians. The army of the latter was defeated and Nabonidus fled. A few days later, the north Babylonian town of Sippar surrendered to Gobryas, the commander of the forces of Cyrus. Within two days more the Persian general was in possession of Babylon. As the recently discovered Nabonidus-Cyrus chronicle distinctly states, the gates of the city were opened to the Persians without a battle (Nab.-Cyr. Chr. ii. 8—16). In the clear light of the inscriptions it is evident that the elaborate tale of Herodotus to the effect that Cyrus turned the waters of the Euphrates into the great basin made by Nebuchadnezzar and entered the city while its inhabitants were so engaged in a feast that they neglected to close the water gates, has been given a wrong setting. It must refer rather to the second capture of Babylon by Darius about twenty years later.—Kent, Hist. of the Jewish People, 1899.

CHAPTER THE SIXTH.

1-3. (1) set . . princes, or satraps; rulers who were like petty kings in their respective districts.^a "Their duties—both civil and military—consisted, broadly speaking, in the supervision of the whole kingdom." (2) presidents, Chal. sarac., prob. head-man.^b first, R. V. "was one." The three presidents would constitute a kind of privy council. damage, fr. loss of revenues either withheld or pilfered. (3) preferred, R. V. "distinguished," much to the disgust of the ruling classes. excellent spirit,^c ch. v. 12. thought . . realm, i.e. the province of Babylon of wh. this so-called Darius was ruler under Cyrus; some indication of this purpose excited the jealousy against Daniel.

Success Due to Work.—All primacy has to be paid for. Do not understand that men go forward to any possessions they please up banks of glory, slopes of flowers, fancy work written in imaginary paradises. A Burmese student has lately been contesting with European claimants and candidates, and he has taken everything before him. He said the other day, "Everything is possible here to a man who works." That is an old English word. What a rebuke to those who do not toil! If the Burmese student so successful had used a long word, how many thousands of English youths would have found that long word a grand opening for a thousand excuses! But he explained his position by a very simple term, that term being none other than the good old English term "works." His primacy was paid for. Some men pay for it by work, and others pay for it by work and suffering too.—Peopl. B.

4, 5. (4) occasion, something of wh. they might take advantage so as to secure Daniel's destruction.^a faithful, the first political virtue of government officials. (5) concerning . . God, in relation to his religion.^b

The Character of Daniel (vs. 5).—Let me—I. Open to you the constituent parts of this character. Here we behold, in combined and unintermittent exercise—I. Piety; 2. Wisdom; 3. Consistency; 4. Firmness. II. Urge you all to the attainment of it. Let me invite you to consider—I. How it honors God; 2. How it disarms prejudice; 3. How it tends to the welfare of your own soul.—C. Simeon.

Envy.—Eschylus, in "Agamemnon," says:

"Envy at others' good is evermore
Malignant poison sitting on the soul;
A double woe to him infected with it.
Of inward pain the heavy load he bears,
At sight of joy without, he ever mourns."

—Taylor Lewis.

Envy is the daughter of Pride, the author of Murder and Revenge, the perpetual tormentor of virtue. Envy is the filthy slime of the soul; a venom, a poison, a quicksilver, which consumeth the flesh and drieth up the bones.—Socrates.

6-9. (6) assembled, marg. "came tumultuously;" as if the matter was one of instant and pressing importance.^c Daniel knew nothing of their plot, and prob. he could not interfere as the matter did not belong to his department. (7) establish, i.e. get the king to establish. decree, or interdict. save of thee, this shows that they represented the necessity for thus securing a universal acknowledgment of Darius's authority and rights.^d den of lions, a kind of punishment not previously mentioned in the Bible. (8) altereth not, Esth. i. 19. (9) signed, etc., Stuart, "Because of this King Darius wrote down a writing even a prohibition."

Evils of Flattery.—

A man I knew who lived upon a smile,
And well it fed him; he look'd plump and fair,
While rankest venom foamed through every vein;
Living, he fawn'd on every fool alive;
And, dying, cursed the friend on whom he lived.—Young.

Religious Homage.—The Persian kings were regarded as incarna-

^a "When Cyrus was at Bab. it pleased him to send satraps to rule the conquered nations. Darius acted as the representative of Cyrus." —Xenophon.

^b "Prob. descriptive of an office peculiar to the Medo-Persian government." —Wordsworth.

^c "Daniel had gained great experience in the public affairs, it being now 65 years ago since he was first advanced by Nebuc." —Lowth.

^d Comp. the efforts of the Pharisees to find occasion against our Lord.

^e "We shall find 'occasion' against him concerning the law (Thorah) of his God if we can obtain from the king a decree which will make him transgress that law; he will not obey the king's command; and that will be our occasion." —Rashi.

^f "Had they come more deliberately the king might have refused their grant; but they gave him no time for reflection, representing that their test decree was necessary for the safety of the king." —Fausset.

^g In Persia the king is regarded as the image of the good god, Ormuzd.

"Flatterers are as inseparable from prosperous princes, as flies are from fruit in the summer; whom adversity, like cold weather, drives away." —Elkon Bas.

^a "On the roof of his house there was a chamber, with windows whose cross-bars or lattices could be shut or opened at pleasure." — Spk. Com.

^b "Daniel did not court persecution; he did not run recklessly into danger, and tempt his enemies to the sin of accusing him. He retired to his upper chamber, his private oratory; and his accusers pressed in upon his privacy violently and tumultuously." — Wordsworth.

"A man is running as if for life, looking fearfully behind him. He has let his sword drop in his haste to escape; the scabbard only remains in his hand. Nothing but a harmless rabbit follows in pursuit. sinister bird, the owl, sits in a tree above, screeching and adding to the terror of the poltroon. This is Cowardice."

^c "Having too late discovered that the princes, in procuring him to sign this decree, had no other aim but to take advantage of it to the prejudice of Daniel." — Lowth.

^a "We often so that, through in consideration, which afterwards we see cause a thousand times to wish undone again, which is a good reason why we should ponder the path of our feet." — Mat. Henry.

"Yet show some pity.—I show it most of all when I show justice; for then I pity those I do not know, which a tions of the deity. Gausson observes that Nebuchadnezzar claimed divine honors. Alexander the Great pretended to be a god, and the son of a god. The Roman emperors required themselves and their images to be worshiped. And in our own day the Pope lays claim to religious homage, being at his consecration fumed with incense and placed on the altar of God, while the people kiss his feet, and all the cardinals cry, Venite adoremus, "Come let us adore him!" — Hom. Com.

10-12. (10) knew, was informed. His enemies would be ready enough to give him such information. windows, etc., this is stated to indicate that he made no change whatever in his habits. towards Jerus., 1 Ki. viii. 48. three times, Ps. lv. 17.^b as . . . aforetime, showing that when in full work, he had been a man of prayer. (11) assembled, see note on vs. 6. "The spy-system was well organized among the Medo-Persians." (12) Hast, etc., these men sought a confirmation of the decree before they mentioned Daniel's name.

Persistent, Fearless Prayer.—Some time ago, a law was passed in the House of Assembly at Kingston, which contained several clauses highly injurious to the missionary cause in Jamaica. No time was lost in carrying its oppressive enactments into effect. A Wesleyan missionary was thrown into prison for the alleged "crime" of preaching till after eight o'clock in the evening. Two persons connected with the congregation at Montego Bay, had their houses levelled with the ground—their feet made fast in the stocks—and were sent in chains to the workhouse, charged with the heinous offence of praying to the God of heaven. One of these, however, proved so incorrigible, that they were obliged to give him up in despair. Having nothing to do besides in the jail, he spent his time—morning, noon, and night—in singing, and in calling upon God; which so annoyed the jailor, that he repeatedly went into his cell and beat him, till at length the jailor brought him again before the court for this sin. The man, however, resolutely declared his purpose to pray. "If you let me go," said he, "me will pray—if you keep me in prison, me will pray—if you flog me, me will pray; pray me must, and pray me will!" The jailor was fairly confounded; and, rather than be annoyed any longer by this "praying fellow," he gave up his fees, and a part of the fine was remitted; and so the man was dismissed, to go and pray elsewhere.—Whitecross. Touching God in Prayer.—There is an old story of mythology about a giant, named Antæus, who was born by the earth. In order to keep alive, this giant was obliged to touch the earth as often as once in five minutes, and every time he thus came in contact with the earth he became twice as strong as before. The Christian resembles Antæus. In order to be a living Christian, he must often approach his heavenly Father in prayer; and every time he thus approaches, he becomes stronger and more able to resist the wiles and assaults of the adversary.—Old Test. Anec.

13, 14. (13) That Daniel, this expression seems to let out their spite. children . . . Judah, some time ago a mere captive. regardeth not, simply bec. he regarded God, and he could not both obey God's law and the king's, and there could be no question which of the two he must choose. (14) sore displeased,^c vexed at thus being overreached, for he saw that it was enmity towards Daniel, and not anxiety for the maintenance of his authority which had led to the plot. laboured, etc., to find some pretext for not executing the decree.^a Protection of Prayer.—Communion with God kept Daniel pure in Babylon. Nothing else can keep us safe in London. In the "secret of God's presence" you might tread these giddy streets, and your eyes never view the vanity. You might pass theatres and taverns, and never dream of entering in. You might get invitations to noisy routs and God-forgetting assemblies, and have no heart to go. Golden images, public opinion, with its lion's den; and fashion, with its fiery furnace, would never disturb you. A man of prayer in this mart of nations, you could pass upon your way unseduced and undistracted, a Christian in Vanity Fair, a pilgrim in a paradise of fools, a worshiper amidst idolaters, a Daniel in Babylon.—Hamilton. Mr. Moody and Gen. O. O. Howard, with many others, were passengers on the steamer Spree, in the autumn of 1892, when the great shaft broke, and the whole company were in momentary danger of sinking. There was a great prayer meeting on board, led by Mr. Moody, and while they were praying, help came. General Howard thus speaks of the relation of prayer to their rescue: "Did the people of the Spree receive help miraculously from the Heavenly Father? In these things, that is in extreme dangers, it has been my good fortune to have had abundant experience. But I cannot tell where the natural and ordinary helps of Providence end or where the supernatural begins. The finite will never be allowed to know this dividing line. I only know this, at this time, on this ship, as on other times in my life, the demonstration is as clear as daylight that the Lord is a hearer and is an answerer of the prayers of his children. He evidently loves so to arrange his blessings as he does our daily bread so as to make them come as much as possible through common-sense ways and human instrumentality. There was one blessing on the wrecked steamer that was beyond human procuring. It was the almost universal lifting up of human souls into the very sunlight of God's presence."

15—17. (15) assembled, vs. 6, 11. Know, O king, their tone was masterful now, for they felt able to compel the king to work their will. (16) he will, the king means, "I hope he will." (17) den, lit. "pit." sealed it, to secure that none opened it without due authority. signet, a ring wh. contained the engraving of the king's name.

Benevolence Impotent Before Law.—A similar conflict between justice and mercy occurred when Major André, the British spy, was condemned to death by the American court-martial. Probably Washington never set his hand to a document which cost him a more severe struggle than that caused by the death warrant of André. But the safety of our young republic would not permit the deed of mercy. Its very life hung in a trembling scale. Twenty Arnolds might have been the fruit of pardoning one André. "Therefore," said the commander-in-chief, "he is a spy. By the laws of war, his life is forfeit. He must die." And die he did.—Phelps.

18—20. (18) instruments, etc., Gesenius trans. the word "concubines;" R. V. marg. "dancing girls." "Nothing could divert the king's thoughts from the prisoner in the den." (19) very early, lit. in the glimmer of morning. (20) lamentable voice, full of fear and sorrow. living God, in comp. with the lifelessness of heathen idols.

Religion a Thing for Every Day.—Henry Ward Beecher, speaking of taking religion into the week, says, "The tides come twice a day in New York harbor, but they come only once in seven days in God's harbor of the sanctuary. They rise on Sunday, but ebb on Monday, and are down and out all the week. Men write over their store-door, 'Business is business,' and over the church door, 'Religion is religion,' and they say to religion, 'Never come in here,' and to business 'Never go in there.' Let us never have secular things in the pulpit. Here we want repose, and sedatives and healing balm. We have enough of knives and probes and lancets in the week. Here let us have poetry; we want to sing hymns and to hear about heaven. God's law is not allowed to go into the week. If the merchant spies it in the store, he throws it over the counter. If it is found in the street, the multitudes pursue it, pelting it with stones, as if it were a wolf, escaped from a menagerie, and shouting, 'Back with you; you have got out of Sunday.' There is no religion in all this. It is mere sentimentalism. Religion belongs to every day."

21—23. (21) said Daniel, the sound of his voice was the all-sufficing assurance. (22) innocency, purity, straightforwardness. no hurt, no wrong; nothing that could damage the king's authority. Daniel had only disobeyed to preserve a good conscience. (23) glad, his regard for Daniel was sincere. believed . . . God, showing faith by the act of allegiance.

Daniel in the Lion's Den (vs. 22).—I would take these words—I. Literally, as regards Daniel, and as it regards the king. 1. As regards the king, look at the positivity of his conduct, unhappiness; 2. As regards Daniel, captivity, beauty, learning, piety, devotion, persecution, age, society, name. II. I come now to take it spiritually, his portion, my God, the messenger, the lion's mouth shut, the law, the world. III. Taking the text mediocrally. 1. Daniel a type of Christ; 2. The lion, like the world, rough: like sin, sudden in attack.—Andrews.

The Agency of God.—The story of the lions in the den recalls inci-dismissed offence would aftergall; and do him right that, answering one foul wrong, lives not to act another."

—Shakespeare.

"Accuse not Heaven's delay; if loth to strike, —its judgments, like the thunder-gather'd storm, are but the greater."—Webster.

a "For Darius it was a wretched night. He was sad and horror-stricken. He was a prey to remorse. Perhaps he was beginning to see how he had been the dupe of his lords, and furious indignation was rising like a storm in his soul." —Rob-johns.

"Reputation oft got without merit, and lost without deserving." — Shakespeare.

"Many as the waves, but one as the sea," is the motto of the true Church of Christ. But equally true is it of the works of God and the Word of God." — Peloubet.

a "It was in accordance with Oriental notions of justice, and was in keeping with Persian precedent, that all their kindred should perish with the guilty."
—Robjohns.

Ps. ix. 16; Pr. xxvi. 27.

"Conscience as a faculty includes a moral sense, or the power of discerning the distinction between right and wrong; which, combining with the understanding, or faculty of comparing and judging, judges of the right or wrong of our own moral dispositions and voluntary actions and of the dispositions and voluntary actions of other free agents." — A. A. Hodge.

b Comp. Da. iii. 29, iv. 3, 34.

"In Rome no temple was so low as that of honor built to show how humble honor ought to be, though there 'twas all authority."

—Butler.

"Honor's a fine imaginary notion, that draws in raw and unexperienced men to real mischiefs, while they hunt a shadow." — Addison.

"Heaven's gate is shut to him who comes alone; save thou a soul, and it shall save thy own!"

dents very like it in the experience of African travelers. Mungo Park once found himself confronted by a raging lion, against which he had no other available weapon than the look of his eye. Yet the beast which had, a moment before, come bounding and roaring towards him, stopped suddenly, looked abashed upon the ground, and then turned and slunk away. Another traveler in African wilds was once actually seized by a hungry lion, thrown to the ground, and had begun to feel the mysterious anæsthesia which the magnetism of wild beasts is said to produce in their victims, when suddenly opening his eyes and fixing them steadily on the eye of the beast, he saw that its bloodshot look wavered. The soul of the beast recognized the soul of its natural lord. He let go his hold on the prostrate man, turned with tail between his legs, and fled. Marvel or miracle, it matters little what we call it, the agency of God in such events is beyond question.—Phelps.

24. accused Daniel, prob. the leaders of the malicious party; the death of these plotters is a remarkable instance of retribution. children, etc.^a comp. Est. ix. 13, 14. broke . . den, this sudden attack by the lions proved that Daniel's escape was due to divine power.

Retribution.—Rev. H. G. Keene states, in his Persian Stories, that the following narrative was related by a person of authority and reputation, who was one of the party. A vessel set sail from Bassorah to Bagdad, with several passengers on board. In the course of the voyage, the sailors, by way of a joke, put a man in irons as he lay asleep, and he became a subject of diversion to the whole party till they drew near to the capital. But when the sailors wanted to let him loose, the key was nowhere to be found, and after a long and fruitless search, they were compelled to send for a blacksmith to knock off the fetters. When, however, the blacksmith came, he refused to do what they wanted, till he had the authority of the magistrate; for he thought the man might be some criminal whom the officers of justice had laid hold of, and that his friends wished to favor his escape. To the magistrate they accordingly went, who sent down one of his attendants to see into it. But the officer, when he had heard the story, and had taken the evidence of some of the most respectable among the passengers, shook his head, and with a look of solemnity, said it was much too serious a case for him to decide. So they repaired in a body to the magistrate, and carried the poor captive with them. So strange a procession was sure to attract notice; and a crowd soon collected about them, each curious to know the prisoner's offence, and to catch a sight of him: till at length one man, springing forward, seized the captive by the throat, and exclaimed: Here is the villain I have been looking for these two years; ever since he robbed and murdered my poor brother." Nor would he quit his hold till they came before the magistrate; and the murder being clearly proved, the man, who had been confined in joke only, was given up to death, as a punishment for the blood that he had shed.

25—28. (25) wrote, etc., this may have been necessary bec. the previous edict had been widely circulated, and this new decree practically acted as a reversal, or withdrawal, of the former one. (26) fear, etc., this is simply a warning, like unto that of Nebuc's, against showing any disrespect to Jehovah, who had so signally proven his power; it does not involve any worship of Him.—Pul. Com. God of Daniel, i.e. the God whose claim to universal recognition has been proved by His deliverance of Daniel.^b (28) prospered, was restored to his rank and honor, and held his position securely.

Dangers of Prosperity.—The ancient Greeks fancied that on a certain shore dwelt the beautiful sirens who sang so charmingly that the seamen sailing by were attracted almost irresistibly to the shore, where their vessels were wrecked on the hidden reefs. Even the wise Ulysses did not dare to sail past these islands without binding himself to the mast, altho' he could see that the shores were lined with wrecks and the bleaching bones of those who had yielded to the sirens' seductions. But Orpheus took the wiser plan. With his own lyre he made sweeter music than the sirens' songs, a music that saved both himself and the sailors from the deadly attraction of the charmed song, to which—

"Everyone that listens, presently Forgetteth home, and wife, and children dear
All noble enterprise and purpose high,
And turns his pinnace here."

The safe-guard against temptations of wealth and prosperity is found in the greater attractions of righteousness, and love, and duty, and God, which fill the soul with heavenly music.—Peloubet.

CHAPTER THE SEVENTH.

"This ch. begins the second and peculiarly prophetic part of the book of Daniel."—Stuart.

1-3. (1) first year, when the Bab. kingdom was apparently stable.^a the sum, i.e. the summary, or general outline. matters, better, words. (2) four winds, emblems of commotions of nations. strove, R. V. "broke forth upon." great sea, the sea is to be regarded as the great mass of Gentile nations, and the winds are, therefore, the spiritual agencies by which God carries on the history of the world.—Pul. Com. (3) beasts, symbols of nations. "The symbolization of kings and kingdoms under the form of 'beasts' was a most ancient practice; and in Egypt and Assyria the practice was prevalent."—Ewald.

Daniel Seventh.—The present chapter, in its matter as well as its position, the central portion of the book. It is in both respects to the Book of Daniel what the eighth chapter of the Epistle to the Romans is to that epistle. Next to the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah, and perhaps the ninth chapter of this same book, we have here the most precious and prominent portion of the sure word of Messianic prophecy. The chapter is worthy of the most careful prayer and study. Referred to directly or indirectly by Christ and His apostles perhaps more than other portions of the Old Testament of similar extent. Appears to have been regarded by the Old Testament Church, in the centuries preceding the Messiah's first advent, as pre-eminently the "word of prophecy."—Hom. Com. "The Great Sea."—The mind, in its infantile state, is most impressed with visible and tangible things. "The great sea" is a significant picture of the mobility and restlessness of the multitude. The masses of men, having no settled beliefs, no fixed principles of action, are as fickle, and as easily wrought upon, as the unstable sea. As the briny waters are promptly driven hither and thither by every wind that blows, so the multitudes are moved and tossed by every passing passion—by the faintest prospect of self-advantage—or by the fevered ambition of a stronger will than their own. The Jews, having relinquished their safe anchorage, viz. faith in God, were driven helplessly north and south, east and west, by the wild passions of unscrupulous conquerors. It seemed as if the four winds of heaven strive at one and the same time upon this Hebrew sea. "The wicked are like the troubled sea."—Pulp. Com.

4-6. (4) like a lion, comp. the colossal figures of winged lions, with human heads, and eagle's wings, in Assyrian sculptures. This beast stands for the Bab. monarchy. wings, "additional image of swiftness and strength." plucked, reference may poss. be to Nebuc.'s illness. man's heart, or understanding. The animal character of the kingdom was changed, and the higher powers of intellect ruled; represents "the greater moderation and humanity wh. the Babylonish dominion exhibited after Nebuc.'s malady and restoration."—Stuart. (5) bear, prob. standing for the Medo-Persian empire. raised, etc., the fig. may symbolize how one race was stronger than the other. This done by putting one of its forelegs into an erect posture. three ribs, signifying the conquest by Medo-Persia of those countries, poss. Lydia, Babylon, and Egypt. These were its prey, or booty. Arise . . . flesh, i.e. make extensive conquests. (6) leopard,^b the Græco-Macedonian kingdom. four wings, denoting the swiftness of its victories. four heads, not four kings, but fig. for universal dominion in the four corners of the earth.

Cruelty of Oriental Princes.—Bishop Newton says: Cambyases, Ochus, and others of their princes, were indeed more like bears than ^a "The time is 17 years before the incidents narrated in ch. vi.

^b "The earth itself is a sea, the sea is an emblem of the world, swelling with human pride and passion, and troubled with political agitations and popular revolutions."

—Wordsworth.

"As the mother bird shrieks when the hawk is in the sky, that her young ones may hide themselves under her wings, so God, the Father of men, utters His voice of warning against sinners, that they may rush to His mercy's protection, before the devouring lion of Hell overtake them in destruction."

—John Bate.

^a "The king of Bab. was a lion in strength and an eagle in swiftness; and in his variegated feathers, we may recognize an emblematical symbol of the plume of many tributary nations in his armies, with which he flew to victory in all lands."—Wordsworth.

^b "A leopard is a creature of extraordinary swiftness and jumps upon its prey."—Lowth.

c "To an Oriental mind there is nothing unnatural or improbable in the Prophet Daniel's beast." — Van Lennep.

The world will never believe that Jesus is the Lord till it sees its end; nor will it ever pray, till it is forced to utter the cry of despair, saying "to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us and hide us from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb."

a "Lit. 'They (the attendant ministers) set the seats.' The Prophet here describes the last great assize as a regular proceeding, like the preparations made for holding a judicial assembly or royal court." — Wordsworth.

b "This title appears to have a Bab. origin. It is one of the titles of the God Ann, who during the earliest period of the religion of the Euphrates, represented the idea of a cosmic (earthly) duration (heavenly) god, one who was at once heaven, earth and time." — Biblical Things.

men. Instances of their cruelty abound in almost all the historians who have written of their affairs, from Herodotus down to Ammianus Marcellinus, who describes them as proud, cruel, exercising the power of life and death over slaves and obscure plebeians. "They pull off the skin (says he) from men alive, in pieces or altogether." The cruelty of their modes of punishment indicative of the cruelty of their character. Rollin relates that one of the royal judges, condemned to death for receiving a bribe, was to have his skin taken off and fastened on the seat where he used to sit and give judgment, to be a warning to his son, who was to occupy it after him. Witness also the lions' den.—Hom. Com.

7, 8. (7) fourth beast, the Roman empire, comp. ch. ii. 40. great iron teeth, i.e. it had great destructive power: it was not marked by swiftness but by its ability to crush and destroy. ten horns,^c or was divided into ten principalities, or sub-kingdoms. (8) among them, Stuart says that this little horn is "the symbol of Antiochus Epiphanes, on his first accession to the throne." After he became strong and secure he persecuted the Jews beyond measure, comp. vs. 20. three . . roots, ref. to the overthrow of three kings by this little horn. eyes of man, denoting great cunning and foresight. speaking . . things, words of boasting, haughtiness and rebelliousness.

The Four Great Monarchies.—It has been satisfactorily proved by the best writers on the subject that the vision refers to the four great monarchies—the Babylonian, the Medo-Persian, the Macedonian or Grecian, and the Roman; and that the second beast, which was like to a bear, symbolizes the empire of the Medes and Persians. All the four monarchies are represented by beasts of prey, to intimate their agreement in the general character of fierceness and rapacity; and by beasts of different species, to intimate the existence of important differences in their character and mode of operation. The Babylonish empire is symbolized by a lion with eagle's wings, because it was strong and fierce as a lion; it was swift and rapid in its movements, as a lion with eagle's wings; rising in a few years, under the conduct of Nebuchadnezzar, to the highest pinnacle of power and greatness. The third kingdom is represented by another beast, "like a leopard, which had upon the back of it four wings of a fowl; the beast had also four heads; and dominion was given unto it." This is the Grecian monarchy; the distinguishing characters of which are great variety of disposition and manners, undaunted boldness, and rapidity of conquest, never before or since exemplified in the history of nations. The fourth beast was so great and horrible that no adequate name could be found for it; this nondescript was the symbol of the Roman empire, which differed from all others in the form of its government, in strength, in power, in greatness, in length of duration, and in extent of dominion. The Persian monarchy, symbolized by the bear, has also certain specific differences, which are to be learned from the natural history of that animal. Such was the empire of the Medes and Persians: weaker and less warlike than the Babylonian, and less rapid in its conquests than the Macedonian. But the bear surpasses them in ferocious cruelty and insatiable voracity; and such was the empire of the Medes and Persians. They are stigmatized by ancient historians as the greatest robbers and spoilers that ever oppressed the nations.

9, 10. (9) cast down, R. V. "placed." The thrones were set for the heavenly assessors at the great judgment.^a Ancient of days,^b the Divine Being, who can only be apprehended by man under some form. Comp. John's vision, Re. i. garment . . snow, "indication both of dignity and purity." hair . . wool, prob. an exceeding splendor, "like the white heat of a metal in the fire."—Stuart. throne . . fire, sym. either of splendor, or of a destroying power. (10) fiery stream, Ps. i. 3, xcvi. 3. thousand, etc., De. xxxiii. 2; Ps. lxxviii. 17; He. xii. 22; Re. v. 11. judgment . . set, better, "the assize began." The court was now open. "We find that this description of the judgment in the first Apocalypse reappears, modified and made yet more solemn, in the last Apocalypse. We are, however, not to regard this as the final judgment. Daniel is rather admitted into the presence of God in the heavens, and sees his judgment continually being prepared against the wicked."—Pul. Com. books, Re. xx. 12. "The books both of God's laws and men's actions."

Christ Unveiled.—A Spanish artist was once employed to paint "The Last Supper." It was his object to throw all the sublimity of his art into the figure and countenance of the Lord Jesus; but he put on the table in the foreground some chased cups, the workmanship of which was exceedingly beautiful. When his friends came to see the picture on the easel, every one said, "What beautiful cups." "Ah!" said he, "I have made a mistake; these cups divert the eyes of the spectator from the Lord, to whom I wished to direct the attention of the observer." And he forthwith took up his brush and blotted them from the canvas, that the strength and vigor of the chief object might be prominently seen and observed.

Opening of the Book of Life.—

Almighty Judge! how shall poor wretches brook

Thy dreadful look,

Able a heart of iron to appall,

When thou shalt call

For every man's peculiar book?

But I resolve, when thou shalt call for mine,

That to decline;

And thrust a Testament into thy hand;

Let that be scanned;

There shalt thou find my faults are thine.—George Herbert.

11, 12. (11) great words, vs. 8.^c (12) dominion, their characteristic world-wide authority. lives, national lives, or existence. season .. time, not any definite period.

"The Little Horn."—When the three horns had thus fallen before him, the little horn—Antiochus Epiphanes—sprang into prominence. The mention of his "eyes" seems to be a reference to his shrewdness, cunning, and vigilance. The "mouth that spoke very great things" alludes to the boastful arrogance which led him to assume the title of Epiphanes, or "the illustrious"—which his scornful subjects changed into Epimanes, "the mad"—and to his assumption even of the title Theos, "the god," on some of his coins.—Exp. B.

Pride.—

He that is proud, eats up himself. Pride is

His own glass, his own trumpet, his own chronicle;

And whatever praises itself but in

The deed, devours the deed in the praise. —Shakespeare.

13, 14. (13) like the Son of man, R. V., "a son of man." The sequel plainly points to the king Messiah. Why is he then called "a son of man"? I reply, prophecy had declared that the Messiah would be a son of David, Isa. xi. 1; Mic. v. 1, etc. The new kingdom is on earth; Christ is to appear and act as the head of it; and to do this he must assume a human form.—Stuart. clouds, etc., Mat. xxvi. 64; Re. i. 7. brought him near, etc., with the destruction of the four great empires, the new kingdom of God is now ushered in, not in the form of a beast but of a man. (14) given him, etc., ch. iii. 4, iv. 3, 34, vi. 27.^a Everlasting dominion, i.e. as comp. with the perishing earthly dynasties.

The Son of Man.—As to the question of the reference of the title, it has been doubted whether it is to be held as applying to the Messiah, the Messianic kingdom, or to the people of Israel. From 1 Pet. i. 10 we see that prophets did not necessarily know the meaning of their own prophecies. It might well be, then, that to Daniel the distinction between the Messianic King and the Messianic kingdom was not one clearly apprehended. We see in the prophecies of the second Isaiah that the "servant of the Lord" is first the holy people, then the prophetic order. If latterly a person. There probably was a similar uncertainty here. If we grant this indefiniteness, the next question that rises is—What is the special aspect of the Messianic kingdom that is intended to be portrayed when this title is given to its King? If we are guided by what is incomparably the oldest interpretation, that of the second Book of Enoch, this title implies an incalculable dignity. When we come to our Lord's use

"It is quite clear that if I am to enter heaven no outward reform will ever do it, for if I wash my face, that does not change my heart." — C. H. Spurgeon. <

^c Proud and blasphemous language.

"Oh, the wasted hours of life that have drifted by; oh, the good we might have done, lost without a sigh."

"The owner ought to be more honorable than his estate." — Xenophon.

^a Eph. 1. 20, 23; He. 1. 3, 4.

"Be patient with every one, but above all with yourself. I mean do not be disturbed because of your imperfections, and always rise up bravely from a fall. There is no better means of progress in the spiritual life than to be continually beginning afresh, and never to think that we have done enough." — Francis de Sales.

"The glory of Christ shone as the lightning, brighter in the depths of night than in the glory of day." — Guthrie.

"Just as the Church cannot have two heads, so the one Head cannot have two bodies; for as that body were a monster which had two heads, so the head which had two separate bodies." —Guthrie.

b "Each of the four kings represents a dynasty. Nebuchadnezzar, Alexander, Antiochus, and Antichrist."

—Fausset.

Our instinct tells us that we are not to live simply to acquire; society does not want mere effigies, whether stuffed with bran or brains; but the world wants men, living, working, serving others, who acquire in order to impart, who have at heart the good of the race." —A. T. Pierson.

Not: Hercules himself could resist such odds.—Latin. Three helping each other are as good as six.—Spanish.

of it in the Gospels, there is nothing to oppose this. Thus John v. 22, "And hath committed all judgment unto him, because he is the Son of man;" so Matt. ix. 6, "The Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins."—Pulp. Com.—But who is the "one even as a son of man," who "comes with the clouds of heaven," and who is brought before the Ancient of Days," to whom is given the imperishable dominion? We should naturally answer, in accordance with the multitude of ancient and modern commentators both Jewish and Christian, that the Messiah is intended; and, indeed, our Lord alludes to the prophecy in Matt. xxvi. 64. That the vision is meant to indicate the establishment of the Messianic theocracy cannot be doubted. But if we follow the interpretation given by the angel himself in answer to Daniel's entreaty, the personality of the Messiah seems to be at least somewhat subordinate or indistinct. For the interpretation, without mentioning any person, seems to point only to the saints of Israel who are to inherit and maintain that Divine kingdom which has been already thrice asserted and prophesied. It is the "holy ones," "the holy ones of the Most High," upon whom the never-ending sovereignty is conferred (Dan. iv. 3, 34; vi. 26); and who these are cannot be misunderstood, for they are the very same as those against whom the little horn has been engaged in war (Dan. vii. 16, 22, 23, 27). The Messianic kingdom is here predominantly represented as the spiritual supremacy of the chosen people. Neither here, nor in ii. 44, nor in xiii. 3, does the writer separately indicate any Davidic king, or priest upon his throne, as had been already done by so many previous prophets. This vision does not seem to have brought into prominence the rule of any Divinely Incarnate Christ over the kingdom of the Highest. At any rate, it seems that, if truth is to guide us rather than theological prepossession, we must take the significance of the writer, not from the emblems of the vision, but from the divinely imparted interpretation of it; and there the figure of "one as a son of man" is persistently (vss. 18, 22, 27) explained to stand, not for the Christ Himself, but for "the holy ones of the Most High," whose dominion Christ's coming should inaugurate and secure.—F. W. Farrar.

15—18. (15) body, lit. sheath; the spirit is thought of as being like a sword in its sheath. (16) the truth, or the explanation. (17) kings, or kingdoms: or perhaps dynasties. (18) the saints, under Messiah. take, R. V. "receive."

The Reign of the Saints (vs. 18).—I. The event predicted. 1. How they will take possession of the kingdom; 2. How they will administer it. II. The advantages that will accrue from it. 1. Those of a temporal nature; 2. Those of a spiritual nature. Address:—(1) Let none be ashamed of being accounted saints; (2) Let all endeavor to help forward the expected day.—C. Simeon.

Grief for God's Cause.—Daniel was grieved in spirit, not because of personal ill, nor from fear of the lions' den, but because of the obscurity of the vision; in other words, because of the uncertain fortune of God's kingdom. The symbol of the fourth beast seemed to betoken disaster, suffering, yea, even destruction, for the people of God. That under the violence of this unnatural monster the saints of the Most High should be worn out with oppression, and that rude wickedness should prevail; this distressed and overwhelmed the heart of Daniel. He lived for one object. His life, from the early days of youth, had been directed towards one end—viz. the reversal of Israel's overthrow—the restoration of the Hebrews to Canaan. If this end seemed nearer, he was content; if this event was shrouded in doubt, he grieved. In his case self was repressed—kept down. He was consumed with pious zeal for others' good—for God's honor. Never once do we find him plotting for his own elevation or for his own interests. He did not live for fame. Yet he had it. He thought mainly of God, and God set his thought and care upon him. He had so completely identified himself with God's cause on earth, that all his interest and happiness were indissolubly bound up with it. Herein God observed his promise, "Them that honor me I will honor." To him heaven was open. He moved in the society of angels. And, when his mind was enveloped with difficulty, he gladly sought counsel and instruction from one of the heavenly host. A wise man will ever seek to increase his wisdom. He welcomes light from every quarter.—Pul. Com.

19—22. (19) fourth beast, vs. 7. (20) look . . more stout, or his appearance was more excellent than his fellows. He ultimately claimed superiority over them all. Stuart and Farrar apply this symbol to Antiochus Epiphanes: Pul. Com. to the Roman emperors; in particular Titus, 70 A.D. (21) war . . saints, comp. Re. xi. 7, 9, xiii. 7, xvii. 14.* (22) came, manifested himself for judgment. saints . . kingdom, 2 Ti. ii. 11.

The Fourth Empire.—The fourth empire is symbolized by "a dreadful and terrible beast," for which the Prophet found no name in the kingdom of nature. It resembled the fabulous monsters which poetic imagination sometimes delights to portray; for in the Book of Revelation John describes it as compounded of the three which preceded it: "The beast which I saw was like unto a leopard, and his feet were as the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion." It possessed all the qualities which render beasts of prey a terror to man and other animals; the swiftness and cunning of the leopard, the ferocity of the bear, and the boldness and strength of the lion. The Roman empire, which it symbolized, resembled no state of society known among men; it displayed, in its character and proceedings, the vigor and courage of the Babylonians, the various policy and alacrity of the Greeks, and the unchanging firmness of the Medes and Persians: qualities which have been equally conspicuous in the papal state of that empire.—Paxton.

23—25. (23) diverse, perh. in its system of gov't. The Roman Law was infinitely superior to the absolutism of Babylon, Persia and Greece. the whole earth, Stuart claims that this has reference to Palestine. "For the history of the whole world is not intended to be given, but only of that part of it which had to do with the people of God." (24) rise after them, ref. to line of succession. The precise historical references depend upon the school of prophecy to which the commentator belongs. (25) speak, etc., blasphemy, Re. xiii. 5, 6. wear out, by persecutions. change times, etc., by interfering with existing and established governments. time . . time, i.e. three times and a half, or three years and a half of prophetic time. No explanation of the period can be more than conjectural.

Wearing Out the Saints.—Josephus is authority for the statement that Antiochus Epiphanes "made war against the saints," with the aid of "Jason and Menelaus, those ungodly wretches," and "prevailed against them." He "wore out the saints of the Most High," for he took Jerusalem by storm, plundered it, slew eighty thousand men, women, and children, took forty thousand prisoners, and sold as many into slavery, B.C. 170. "As he entered the sanctuary to plunder it, under the guidance of the apostate high priest Menelaus, he uttered words of blasphemy, and he carried off all the gold and silver he could find, including the golden table, altar of incense, candlesticks, and vessels, and even rifled the subterranean vaults, so that he seized no less than eighteen hundred talents of gold." He then sacrificed swine upon the altar, and sprinkled the whole Temple with the broth. He made also a determined attempt to put down the Jewish feasts, the Sabbath, circumcision, and all the most distinctive Jewish ordinances.—Exp. B.

26—28. (26) judgment, etc., the assize shall convene, vs. 9. (27) kingdom, Lu. i. 27. whose kingdom, etc., Stuart, "their k. shall be an ev. k. and all dominions shall serve and obey them." all dominions, or rulers. (28) Hitherto, R. V., "here." cogitations, R. V., "thoughts." countenance changed, "was sickled o'er with the pale cast of thought." kept . . heart, often pondering over it.* but communicating it to no one.

The Reign of the Saints (vs. 27).—I. The doctrine of the text does not require us to believe that the Lord Jesus Christ is at some future time to return in person to our world, and set up a visible and theocratic empire upon these continents. II. The Scriptures do not require us to teach or to believe this doctrine even in any absolute, extreme, and unexceptionable sense. III. As to the way in which this great conquest is to be achieved. IV. According to all Scriptural allusions it will be a very gradual conquest. V. It is to be, and in a twofold sense, complete and universal.—W. Clarke.

Prevalence of Christ's Kingdom Against Opposition.—The bush burns, but is not consumed, because the Lord Himself is in it. The

* Da. viii. 10, 24, xl. 32, 33, 35.

"The pleasures of the world are not like the waters of the Nile, which leave when they are gone, the germs of beauty and fertility, to bud and blossom and cheer the heart of man; on the contrary, they are like those streams polluted by the washings of poisonous minerals, depositing the seeds of death and disease to all who drink them." —Anon.

"What art thou? Have not I an arm as big as thine? A heart as big? Thy words, I grant, are bigger, for I wear not my dagger, in my mouth."

—Shakespeare.

"An old English author says that there are four parts to repentance, which makes a ladder whereby we may climb from the pit of perdition up into the castle of endless salvation. The rounds of this ladder are contrition, confession, faith and amendment. If a single round is missed, we fall through." —A. R. Wells.

"Waldus, a rich merchant in Lyons, seeing one drop down dead in the streets, went home, and repented, changed his life, and became a preacher, and was the father and the founder of the people called Waldenses. 'Tis good to take warning by others' harms, and by the sight of their death, to look after our own life." —Venning.

* Lu. ii. 19, 50, 51.

gates and power of hell are unable to prevail against the Church of Christ, because founded on the Rock of Ages. "If this counsel or work be of men, it will come to nought; but if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it." "Although," says Sismondi, himself a Roman Catholic, "for two hundred years the fires were never quenched, still every day saw Catholics abjuring the faith of their fathers, and embracing the religion which often guided them to the stake. In vain Gregory IX., in 1231, put to death every heretic whom he found concealed in Rome."—Pul. Com.

CHAPTER THE EIGHTH.

1-4. (1) third year, two years after the vision of the preceding chapter. The last year of Belshazzar's reign, wh. he exercised in conjunction with his father, vision, etc., esp. referring to the rise of Antiochus, king of Syria." (2) was at Shushan, or seemed in my trance to be at S. Susa, "the city of lilies," now Shuster.^b Elam, western portion of Persia, wh. was either at this time subject to Babylonia, or a province of Media. Ulai, now the Kera, or Karasu.^c (3) ram, fig. for the Medo-Persian monarchy.^d two horns, representing the Medes and the Persians. higher .. last, the Persian power came to overtop the Median. (4) pushing, fig. for extending its conquests. became great, R. V. "magnified himself," i.e. became proud.

The Light Side of the Triumph of Evil.—1. It is foreseen and predicted. Therefore it should not surprise us. It was foreknown by God from the Creation. It was known when the promises of Divine blessing were given. All the plans of Providence were made in view of it. Yet they are bright and hopeful (Rom. viii. 19-23). 2. It is converted into a chastisement for sin and a means of purifying those who suffer by it. Though wicked men may only intend harm to God's people, the wrong they do may be the means of the highest good. 3. Its duration is limited. A period is named for the termination of its sway (vss. 13, 14). Evil is but for a time, and this is short compared with eternity. God holds power over it and fixes its limitations. 4. Ultimately evil shall be entirely cast out. Then the triumph of goodness will be the greater by its contrast with the sway of evil. The glory of Christ in redeeming from sin and restoring the world to God is only possible after evil has had an opportunity of asserting its power (2 Thess. ii. 7, 8).—Pul. Com.

5-7. (5) he goat, fig. of Alexander the Great.^e touched .. ground, indicating the swiftness with which he marched.^f Comp. ch. vii. 6. notable horn, Heb. "horn of sight," i.e. conspicuous, subject of remark. between his eyes, a formidable position for thrusting. (6) ram .. power, by one sudden thrust overturning the Medo-Persian kingdom. unto, R. V. "upon." power, Stuart, "rage, indignation." (7) moved with choler, concentrated wrath. smote, etc., Arrian tells that, at the river Granicus, Alex. plunged into the stream, swam across it, rushed on the Persians in the fury of his power, and overwhelmed them.

Alexander's Conquests.—The he-goat is Greece. Its one great horn represents "the great Emathian conqueror." So swift was the career of Alexander's conquests, that the goat seems to speed along without so much as touching the ground. With irresistible fury, in the great battles of the Granicus, B.C. 334, Issus, B.C. 333, and Arbela B.C. 331, he stamps to pieces the power of Persia and of its king, Darius Codomannus. In this short space of time Alexander conquers Syria, Phœnicia, Cyprus, Tyre, Gaza, Egypt, Babylonia, Persia, Media, Hyrcania, Aria, and Arachosia. In B.C. 330 Darius was murdered by Bessus, and Alexander became lord of his kingdom. In B.C. 329 the Greek king conquered Bactria, crossed the Oxus and Jaxartes, and defeated the Scythians. In B.C. 328 he conquered Sogdiana. In B.C. 327 and 326 he crossed the Indus, Hydaspes, and Akesines, subdued Northern and Western India, and—compelled by the discontent of his troops to pause in his career of victory—sailed down the Hydaspes and Indus to the Ocean. He then returned by land through Gedrosia, Karmania, Persia, and Susiana to Babylon.—Exp. B.

8-10. (8) broken, Alex. died at the early age of thirty-two, B.C. 323.

^a "This vision is writ in Heb. bec. that part of it wh. relates to the time of Antiochus Epiphanes did chiefly concern the Jews."
—Lowth.

^b "Susa was a royal residence of Persian kings in the days of Cyrus. The ruins of Susa, 300 miles E. of Babylon, are still visible, between the left branch of the Kerkhah and the right branch of the Dizful, wh. flows into the Kuran river."—Wordsworth.

^c Called in Kings, Euloeus, by the Greeks, Choaspes.

^d "The ram was the royal ensign of Persia."
—Marcellinus.

^e "The goat was the acknowledged symbol of Macedonia. Figures of a goat with a single horn are found on ancient Macedonian monuments." — Biblical Things.

^f Alexander over-ran the world in less than twelve years.

"Alexander in his rages, and his wraths, and his furies, and his cholers, and his moods."
—Shakespeare.

As soon may you draw all the rays of light out of the sun, or all the water out of the ocean, as to exhaust all the fulness of blessing there is in Christ.

four notable ones, the four divisions into which the Macedonian kingdom was divided. (9) little horn, Antiochus Epiphanes,^a who sprang fr. one of the four dynasties and became a great conqueror. pleasant land, Palestine.^b (10) to, better, against. host of heaven, prob. referring to the Jewish priests and high officials; the imagery is taken from the Bab. conception of the gods and their satellites forming the heavenly host. cast, etc., prophesying this king's shameful treatment of the Jewish priests, etc. stars, i.e. leaders among the priesthood.

The Conqueror, Conquered.—The strength of one evil habit may overcome even the mightiest conqueror. Very suggestive in this regard is the history of Alexander the Great, and it is not without a sigh of regret that we read of the pupil of the famous Aristotle dying as the victim of his own excesses at the early age of thirty-three. He could conquer the world by his armies, yet intemperance was his master and destroyer. He was filled with rage and disappointment because he was foiled in his efforts to reach the Eastern ocean, yet was he never fired with the nobler ambition of overmastering the world within himself. He had the greatness of taking not cities only, but empires; yet he knew nothing of ruling his own spirit; and the contrast between his life and that of another which lasted only three-and-thirty years cannot but strike every thoughtful reader of ancient history.—Taylor.

11, 12. (11) prince, etc., or against God Himself.^a Some think the reference may be to Onias, the high priest. daily sacrifice, see Nu. xxviii. 3. place . . down, by Antiochus both the altar and the temple were profaned. (12) an host, etc., Stuart: "an host was placed over the daily sacrifice by wickedness (i.e. the wicked one, Antiochus) and it cast down faithfulness (the faithful ones) to the ground, and it accomplished (its desire) and was prosperous."

Antiochus.—Antiochus Epiphanes is described as a king "bold of visage, and skilled in enigmas," vs. 23. His boldness is sufficiently illustrated by his many campaigns and battles, and his braggart insolence has been already alluded to in vii. 8. His skill in enigmas is illustrated by his dark and tortuous diplomacy, which was exhibited in all his proceedings, and especially in the whole of his dealing with Egypt, in which country he desired to usurp the throne from his young nephew, Ptolemy Philometor. The statement that "he will have mighty strength, but not by his own strength," vs. 24, may either mean that his transient prosperity was due only to the permission of God, or that his successes were won rather by cunning than by prowess. After an allusion to his cruel persecution of the holy people, Gabriel adds that "without a hand shall he be broken in pieces," vs. 25; in other words, his retribution and destruction shall be due to no human intervention, but will come from God Himself.—Exp. Bib.

13, 14. (13) saint, holy one, or angel; ch. iv. 13. How long, for what length of time should such awful profanation last? of desolation, R. V. "that maketh desolate."^b Stuart suggests, "the wicked one wh. ought to be destroyed," Mat. xxiv. 15. (14) Unto . . days, these prophetic times are very difficult, and all explanations are conjectural. Poss. 6 yrs., 4 months, and 20 days.^c cleansed, or justified and vindicated from the transgression wh. brought the calamity. This was done by Judas Maccabæus, 165 B.C. Just 6 yrs. before this Menelaus, the priest, appointed by Antiochus, had profaned the Temple.—Stuart.

Angels in the Household.—In one of Murillo's pictures in the Louvre he shows us the interior of a convent kitchen; but doing the work there are not mortals, in old dresses, but beautiful, white-winged angels. One serenely puts the kettle on the fire to boil, and one is lifting up a pail of water with heavenly grace, and one is at the kitchen dresser reaching up for plates; and I believe there is a little cherub running about and getting in the way, trying to help. . . . All are so busy, and working with such a will, and so refining the work as they do it that somehow you forget that pans are pans, and pots are pots, and only think of the angels, and how very natural and beautiful kitchen work is.—just what the angels would do, of course.—Wm. C. Gannett. The Ministry of Angels.—I believe that angels wait on us as truly as ever they waited on Abraham, or Jacob, or Moses, or Elijah, or Mary, or Jesus himself. The

^a "There came out of them (i.e. the successors of Alexander) a wicked root, Antiochus, surnamed Epiphanes, son of Antiochus the king, who had been a hostage at Rome."—Bk. of Maccabees, i. 10.

^b Ps. xlviii. 2; Eze. xx. 6.

^a In the Bk. of Maccabees this Antiochus is described as the man "who thought that he could reach to the stars of heaven."

The Bk. of Maccabees traces all the calamities suffered under Antiochus to the transgression of certain Jews who introduced heathen customs into Jerusalem just before.

^b "There is prob. a special reference to the idol which Antiochus caused to be set up on God's altar, and there to be worshipped."

—Lowth.

^c "Though God hath revealed to His Church the hope of better days, so that no doubt should be entertained of the fact, yet hath He seen fit to keep in His own power the actual times or seasons when those better days shall begin to end no more."

—Spk. Com.

medieval painters were fond of filling the background of the Infancy with countless angels; the representation tho' literally false was morally true. —Geo. D. Boardman.

^a Rev. i. 17.

^b Eze. i. 28, ii. 1, 2; Lu. ix. 22; Re. i. 17.

As the sun is as ready to pour its radiance upon the daisy on a village common as upon the oaks in Windsor Park, so is Christ as willing to visit the home of the poorest and feeblest as that of the richest and noblest of earth.

^c "Alexander was the first who as generalissimo of Greece, subdued the Persian empire." — Fausset.

^d "Cuneiform discovery has made it evident that Ionia was well known to the Assyrians under the name of Yaranu, or Yaonal, long before the Bab. captivity."

—Spk. Com.

The glories of the Possible are ours. — Bayard Taylor.

^a Artifices. — Gesenius.

^b Re. xiii. 5—8.

^c Re. xiv. 12.

The majority of church-members give nothing to missions, in money, prayer, or thought. Many give in small sums, as they can. There are also large givers, who first give themselves to the Lord, and then consecrate all theirs to him. On a wealthy man's desk was seen over one drawer the letters "M. P.," which he said stood for "My Partner;" and God's portion was never lacking. — Bishop Nide.

15—18. (15) sought .. meaning, by earnest studying and thought. a man, the angel for the moment assumed the likeness of a man. (16) Gabriel, ch. ix. 21. This was the name of the man who stood before him. The first instance of naming an angel in the Bible. (17) afraid, struck with fear and astonishment.^a son of man, intended to remind Daniel that he was only man, though to him were thus given great prophetic visions. at the time, R. V. "for the vision belongeth to the time of the end," i.e. "the vision reaches only to the end of those special afflictions that are to come on the Jews before the Messianic period." — Stuart. (18) deep sleep, or trance.^b

Angels.—

"God will deign
To visit oft the dwelling of just men,
Delighted, and with frequent intercourse,
Thither will send his winged messengers
On errands of supernatural grace."

—Milton.

19—21. (19) last end, or "I will explain to thee the whole series of God's judgments upon His people to the end and conclusion of them." time .. end, R. V. "for it belongeth to the appointed time of the end," i.e. when Antiochus is punished and the Temple cleansed. (20) ram, vs. 3. (21) rough, or hairy. first king, not first in order, but first in importance. Philip was the first king of Macedon.^c Grecia, in this vs., is literally Javan,^d Ge. x. 2.

The Future.—When a heavy morning mist veils the beautiful valley and mountain, the landscape is shut out from our vision. But suddenly there comes a breath, or the sun's rays; the mist parts, and the magnificent scenery stands unveiled. So God often parts the mist that hides the future, and shows what a man may be. Young people, especially, seek from God the vision of what your life may be, and then follow out that revelation, because when you catch God's vision, you will always find him responsible for the outworking of it.—F. B. Meyer.

Futurity.—

"Happy he whose inward ear
Angel comfortings can hear,
O'er the rabble's laughter;
And, while Hatred's fagots burn Glimpses through the smoke discern Of the good hereafter."

—Whittier.

22—24. (22) four kingdoms, see on vs. 8. not .. power, not so mighty as he. (23) come to the full, Stuart: "completed the full measure of their iniquity." fierce countenance, indicating an untractable temper. dark sentences,^a practiced in craft and policy. Description suitable to Antiochus. (24) not .. power, that wh. belonged properly to him, or his kingdom; but by craftily gaining over others to his side.^b practise, R. V. "do his pleasure." holy people, Heb. people of the holy ones.^c

Moslem Oppression.—The Caliph Omar, in the seventh century, obtained possession of Jerusalem, and immediately caused a magnificent mosque to be erected on the site of the ancient Temple. In place of the worship of the Triune Jehovah through the one Mediator Jesus Christ and His atoning sacrifice, was substituted the worship of a Being of whom Mahomet taught that it was unbecoming to say that He could have a son, and who was to be approached through no Mediator unless it might be himself, and through no offering except a man's own meritorious actions. The daily sacrifice was taken away in its true sense, as it had been by Antiochus in its typical one. The religion of Jesus, with its one sacrifice for sin, was banished from the precincts of the Temple area. Everywhere Christian churches were either demolished or converted into mosques, and were permitted to remain as such only on the payment of a tribute, the memorials of this profane desolation meeting you everywhere in the East at the present day, as well as in Constantinople itself, where the most splendid mosques, as that of St. Sophia, were originally employed for Christian worship before the Crescent supplanted the Cross. The well-known option to the Christian was between renouncing Christianity, tribute, and death. How Mahomet magnified himself against the Prince of princes, and cast down the truth to the ground, was made only too obvious by the well-known watchword, "There is no God but one, and Mahomet is His prophet;" and by the law, rescinded only a few years ago under British influence, that made it death for a Moslem to become a Christian.—Hom. Com.

25—27. (25) by peace, i.e. by pretending peace and friendship. Prince of princes, Jehovah Himself. broken without hand,^d i.e. without any human invention, by an immediate judgment of God. (26) shut . . . vision, "presupposes that Daniel will write the vision, so he is warned to guard it from interpolation, to preserve its integrity."—Stuart. Comp. ch. xii. 4. many days, R. V. "belongeth to many days to come." (27) sick, with grief at the calamities thus revealed as coming on his nation. did . . . business, intimating that he was in some public office during Belshazzar's reign.^a

The Future Peace.—The day is coming, I think, when the Quaker idea shall have a new interpretation, a larger sphere: when men shall love their enemies, bless those that curse them, do good to those that hate them, and pray for those that spitefully use them and persecute them; when they shall receive injury and not resent it; when they shall requite wrong with love. To one who sees the revengeful, vindictive feelings of men; the volcano heavings which are so common in the most harmonious families; how business is carried on regardless of rectitude; how governments in their course will hardly stop for justice; how in all departments of life the law of might is made the law of right—to such a one it seems almost absurd to hear a minister say that a day is coming when, the world over, the law of love shall be the reigning law. But that day is coming, or else prophecies are false, and Christ came in vain.—Beecher.

CHAPTER THE NINTH.

1—6. (1) Darius, ch. v. 31, vi. 28. 538 B.C.; the 68th yr. of Daniel's captivity. Ahasuerus, the Jewish name given to Astyages. made king, or appointed ruler of Babylon by Cyrus the conqueror. (2) by books, those written by such Prophets as Isaiah, Jeremiah, etc. word . . . prophet, Je. xxv. 12, xxix. 10. seventy years, R. V., "for the accomplishing of the desolations of Jerus., even seventy years;" these are to be dated from the end of the third or beginning of the fourth year of Jehoiakim. (3) set my face, fig. for earnestness of purpose. Perhaps also alluding to the custom of praying with the face looking towards Jerusalem. fasting, etc.,^a signs of penitence. (4) dreadful, worthy of dread, or holy fear.^b (5) We have sinned, Daniel pleads as standing for and representing the Jewish people. (6) hearkened, so as to heed and obey.

Religious Fasting (vs. 3).—I. The duty of religious fasting. 1. The light of nature seems to recognize this duty; 3. We have decisive examples in the Bible; 3. The precepts of the Bible show that it is a Divine institution. II. The benefits that may be expected to result from the proper performance of this duty. 1. An expression of penitence; 2. To keep the body under; 3. Clears the mind; 4. Ministers to bodily health; 5. Aids charity. III. Consider the method of observing a religious fast which will render it profitable. Learn:—1. In vain without the heart is in it; 2. It should be thorough; 3. Retirement is needful; 4. Set times should be observed; 5. There should be no ostentation; 6. Should be associated with benevolence to the poor.—S. Miller.

Faith in Prayer.—When I receive a check from a fellow man, I am not deterred from presenting it at the bank because I know that the money is sure to be forthcoming. Nay, I am only thereby the more encouraged to take it and turn it into money. But the same thing holds good when we take God's promises and present them at the throne of grace. It is not because we do not believe in them or in him that we ask for their fulfilment, but rather because we do put implicit trust in ^d 2 Mac. ix. 9.

^e "Though Daniel was neglected by Belshazzar, yet (such was his faithfulness and loyalty) he did not neglect the king's business."

—Wordsworth.

"As long as we live in this world we must have something to do in it; and even those whom God has most dignified with His favors must not think themselves above their business." — Mat. Henry.

^a "The soul and body are so nearly related, that the humiliation of both is necessary to make our repentance complete."

—Lowth.

"The knowledge of God's merciful intentions to Jerusalem did not supersede Daniel's prayers, but quickened them." — Wordsworth.

^b Comp. prayers of Ezra. Ez. ix. 6—15; Nehemiah, Ne. i. 5—11, ix. 6—38.

After teaching theology for forty years, the elder Alexander said: "The longer I live, the more I incline to sum up my theology in the single sentence, 'Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am chief.'"

c "Some Jews were not cast off so far from Jerusalem as others, but all alike were sharers in the guilt."

—Fausset.

d Ne. ix. 16, 17; Ps. cxxx. 4, 7.

Today
Slips quickly by,
— to-morrow's
but a link,
And while we idly dally, dream, or think,
Our golden opportunity goes
by. — Mrs. E.
V. Hill.

e Le. xxvi. 14,
De. xxviii. 15, xxix. 18.

f Jer. xxxi. 28, xliv. 27.

Jesus never taught his disciples how to preach, but he did teach them how to pray. I would rather be able to pray like Daniel than to preach like Gabriel. If men know how to pray they know how to work for God. — D. L. Moody.

a "In the word trans. 'present' the Heb. 'cause to fall' better preserves the idea. There is an allusion intended to the practice of kneeling or falling prostrate in prayer." — Spk. Com.

b "Defer not the accomplishment of the promise Thou hast made to restore us to our own country, and the free exercise of our religion. So remarkable a turn of providence will very much redound to the honor of Thy name."

—Lowth.

c 'Twas thus upon his fasting day, the 'Man of Loves' was them both; and the firmer our faith is, the more earnest will be our supplication.—W. M. Taylor.

7—10. (7) righteousness, this is the solemn acknowledgment that the national calamities had been deserved and needed. confusion, such as those feel who are convicted of sin. far off, some being found in the most distant countries. trespass, the word means, "covert dealing, deception, and faithlessness." (8) fathers, elders, who are responsible for showing good example. (9) mercies, laws, i.e. instructions. (10) walk, the usual Bible fig. for ordering life and conduct.

Prayer in Emergencies.—In our own civil war, on one occasion, the general in command of certain forces broke out with the exclamation, on the eve of battle, "We have got them now, and they know it. God Almighty cannot save them." So he had "got them" by all human reckoning of the chances. His staff responded, "Yes, we are sure of them." But it happened,—how much it had to do with the fortunes of the day, we will not presume to say, but it happened,—that the commander-in-chief on the other side was a praying man. He had that morning spent an hour in his tent, invoking Divine interposition in the coming conflict. The close of the day found him again in his tent, offering thanksgiving for a victory, while the presumptuous general who thought that "God Almighty could not defeat him" was in ignominious flight down the valley of the Shenandoah.—Phelps.

11—15. (11) curse, etc., that threatened in the law. oath, or imprecation. (12) confirmed, lit. made to stand; comp. Is. xlv. 26. judges, Heb. Shofetim. Here used generally of the princes and rulers. (13) understand, R. V. "have discernment in." thy truth, or revealed word, in wh. God conveyed the knowledge of His will. (14) watched upon, observing carefully, and waiting the opportunity for corrective judgments. (15) gotten .. renown, or made Thee a name.

The Omnipotence of Prayer.—The man of prayer exerts a greater influence over national affairs than even crowned heads. "Prayer moves the hand that moves the world." Daniel on his knees was a mightier man than Darius on his throne. Daniel was in the service of the King of kings; was admitted to the audience-chamber of the Most High; and received the announcements of the Divine will. Darius now mainly serves as a landmark on the course of time to indicate a date; Daniel is still the teacher and molder of men.—Pul. Com.

16—19. (16) righteousness, wh. ensures the fulfilment of Divine promises, as well as of Divine threatenings. thy city, chosen as Thine in the election of grace which changes not. Daniel is solicitous for the honor of God and religion wh. the sins of the Jews have reproached. (17) prayer .. servant, who pleads as an intercessor. Lord's sake, the Sept. reads: "for thy servant's sake lift up thy countenance upon thy holy mountain which is desolate, O Lord." (18) our righteousness, on the ground of personal merit. (19) defer not, tarry not. "Observe the fervor of the prayer in the triple repetition of the holy name Adonai." for thine own sake, i.e. in order to vindicate thine own power and truthfulness.

A Humble Cry.—Fishermen of Brittany utter this simple prayer when they launch their boats upon the deep: "Keep me, my God; my boat is small and the ocean is wide." How very beautiful the words, the thought. Might not the same petition be uttered night and morning by God's children journeying on the sea of life? My boat is small, I am so weak, so helpless, so forgetful of thy loving kindness. Tossed to and fro at the mercy of the world, except thou dost help me, I perish. Keep me, my God, for "thy ocean is so wide."

Greatness of Mercy.—

Had not the milder hand of mercy broke
The furious violence of that fatal stroke Offended justice struck, we had been quite Lost in the shadows of eternal night.
Thy mercy, Lord, is like the morning sun,
Whose beams undo what sable night had done;
Or, like a stream, the current of whose course,

Restrained awhile, runs with a swifter force.
 Oh! let me glow beneath those sacred beams,
 After bathe me in those silver streams;
 To Thee alone my sorrows shall appeal;
 Hath earth a wound too hard for heaven to heal?

—Quarles.

20—23. (20) whiles, etc., at the very time. Even before the prayer was actually complete. (21) Gabriel, ch. viii. 16. being caused . . . swiftly, Stuart: "having been hastened in a swift course." touched, Stuart: "approached." evening oblation, three o'clock in the afternoon. (22) skill, etc., or ability to understand. (23) greatly beloved, Heb. a man of desires. "The object of God's delight."

God's Mysterious Answers to Prayer.—A few years ago there appeared in our skies the most brilliant comet of the century. It was six millions of miles distant from our globe. Such was the speed of its movement, that, if it had been aimed hither in its march, it would have come crashing upon us in less than two days, with the momentum of a 150,000 miles an hour. Yet God held that blazing meteor in its appointed groove, worn by millions of years of travel, so that it glided gently across our world's orbit with motion imperceptible. It had the stillness of a painting. Our infant children looked out upon it, and bade it good-night as a beautiful plaything in the sky, without so much as the closing of an eyelid, at the eternal rush of its progress. So calm, so facile, so beautifully silent are God's wonder-workings in answer to prayer. Mysteries so vast and so anomalous that astonished angels desire to look into them, occur with the ease of a summer twilight.—Phelps.

24—27. (24) Seventy weeks, for a discussion of this expression comp. Stuart, p. 264; Exp. B., p. 268; Pulp. Com., p. 266. The clearest view is that 70 times 7 yrs. are to pass by before the coming of the Messiah consummates the hopes of the Jews. holy city, still so called, though in ruins and desolate. finish, R. V. marg. "restrain." make . . . sin, or seal up the sins. everlasting, or abiding; perhaps with the full meaning of spiritual, and so referring to Messianic times. seal . . . prophecy, i.e. confirm, authenticate by fulfilment. most Holy, lit. "holy of holies," i.e. a sanctuary such as is appropriate to the new state of things. Comp. Heb. ix. 11, 12.—Stuart. (25) the Messiah, the Prince, R. V. "the anointed one, the prince." Stuart confesses himself unable to say to whom reference is here made. troublesome times, Ne. ix. 36, 37. (26) Messiah, Stuart: "an anointed one." R. V. "the anointed one." Many commentators, including Stuart and Farrar, suppose Onias III. to be referred to here. cut off, by a violent death. not for himself, R. V. "shall have nothing." Stuart, "shall be none for it," i.e. no anointed one for the people." prince that shall come, Stuart and Farrar understand Antiochus. (27) he, i.e. Antiochus. for the overspreading of abominations, R. V. "upon the wing of abominations shall come one that maketh desolate;" few modern commentators doubt that the allusion is to the smaller heathen altar built by Antiochus above the "Most Holy," i.e. the great altar of burnt sacrifice, overshadowing it like a wing.^b—Farrar.

Prayer Opens Wider Horizons of God's Kingdom (vss. 20—27).—We have here a signal instance of the fact that God not only answers human prayer, but gives "more than we ask" or conceive. The thing which Daniel asked was small compared with what God bestowed. I. Prayer is the best preparation for receiving larger revelation. The exercise of real prayer develops humility, dependence, self-forgetfulness; and these states of mind are favorable to ingress of light. "The meek will God show his way;" "To that man will he look, who is of humble and contrite heart." Prayer brings the soul near to God; it lifts us up to heavenly elevations; it clears the eye from mist and darkness. The Apostle John was engaged in lonely worship, when the final revelation of Scripture was made to him. Our Lord was in the act of prayer when heaven came down to earth, and his whole Person was enwrapt in glory. The response to Daniel's prayer was immediate. He had not ceased to pray when the answer came. Swifter than the electric current came the oracle's response. II. Larger revelation comes by a pure and personal fain to pray, his lattice open toward his darling west, mourning the ruin'd home he still must love the best." — Koble.

"Hezekiah prays, and an angel destroys the host of the Assyrians. Cornelius prays, and an angel directs him to send for Peter. The Church at Jerusalem prays, and an angel opens the doors of Peter's prison. At Elisha's prayer his servant's eyes were opened."

—Hom. Com.

^a "The common Oriental name of Jerusalem at the present day, given to no other city even by Muslims, is El-Kuds—the Holy. The Heb. shekel bore the inscription, 'Jerusalem Kadusha, or Jerusalem the Holy.'" — Van Lennep.

^b "Prophecies are of the nature of the Author, with whom a thousand years are as one day; and therefore are not fulfilled punctually at once, but have a springing and germinant accomplishment through many years, though the height and fulness of them may refer to one age." — Lord Bacon.

"If I can put one touch of a rosy sunset into the life of any man or woman, I shall feel that I have worked with god." — George Macdonald.

"Where there is little practical outcome in the life, there has been but little incoming of the Spirit into the heart. Outflow and inflow will always correspond." —James M. Campbell.

spirit. We may fairly conclude that angels have larger knowledge of God's will than have we, because they are free from the darkness and the doubt which sin generates. If they are not counsellors in the heavenly court, they are heralds, ambassadors, couriers. What God wills should happen they know is wise and right and good. In their estimation it is an incomparable honor to be engaged on Divine errands. Swift as their natures will allow, they fly to convey instruction or help to men. It is consonant, no less with reason than with Scripture, that there are ranks and orders of intelligent beings with natures more ethereal than ours, and that communication between us and them is possible. Every form of service is attributed to the angels. An angel ministered to our Saviour's bodily hunger. An angel strengthened him in the garden. An angel rolled the stone from his sepulchre. An angel released Peter from prison. Gabriel interpreted the vision to Daniel. Gabriel announced to Zacharias and to Mary the approaching advent of a Saviour. III. Larger revelation is an evidence of God's special love. The despatch of a special messenger from the court of heaven was in itself a signal token of God's favor. Not often in the history of our race had such a favor been shown. Further, Gabriel was well pleased to assure the man of prayer that, in heaven, he was "greatly beloved." Every act of devotion to God's cause had been graven on the memory of God. His character was an object of God's complacency. On account of God's great love for Daniel he gave him larger understanding, and disclosed to him the purposes and plans for man's redemption. God's intention was that Daniel should enlarge the area of his vision, and look with solicitude, not on Israel after the flesh, but on the true Israel of God. Yet all revelation is a mark of God's love to men. Because men are "greatly beloved" of God, therefore he has given them this complete canon of Scripture, therefore he gives them understanding to discern the meaning, therefore he leads them further into the truth.—Pul. Com.

c "The reason of Daniel's fasting and mourning seems to be, because the adversaries of the Jews began to obstruct the building of the temple. Eze. iv. 4, 5."—Lowth.

d Mat. vi. 17.

Nothing has ever shown the real state of the world like the cross of Christ.

"Christ is willing to save us from our sins, but He will not save us in our sins."

a Eze. i. 26-28, ii. 1, 2; Re. xix. 11-16; i. 13-15.

"His voice attention still as midnight draws; his voice more gentle than the summer's breeze, that mildly whispers through the waving trees, soft as the nightingale's complaining song, or murmuring currents as they roll along." — Dryden.

CHAPTER THE TENTH.

1-3. (1) third. Cyrus, B.C. 535. Daniel must at this time have been ninety years old. was long, R. V. "and the thing was true, even a great warfare," i.e. the message discloses very severe trials and great sufferings for the Jews. (2) mourning, with the grief induced by the visions. (3) pleasant bread, Heb. bread of desire, the food of the wealthy. He lived on the coarse bread the fare of the poor. anoint, the body after bathing with highly perfumed oils; a great luxury.^a

4-6. (4) Hiddekel, i.e. Tigris, Ge. ii. 14. (5) clothed in linen, the usual dress of priests, as the symbol of sanctity. girded, etc., Re. i. 13. fine, R. V. "pure." Uphaz, a place unknown, Je. x. 9. (6) beryl, topaz, yellowish hue.^a Visions.—Our brightest visions often come in our hardest trials. The valley of the shadow of death is often the way to the land of Beulah and Delectable Mountains. Often from a pillow of stones come, as to Jacob at Bethel, the brightest visions of the soul. From weariness and pain and trouble arise the steps that lead to heaven. Life's Pisgahs and Mounts of Transfiguration are built of the hardest rocks of affliction and trial.—Peloubet.

Voice of God.—

There is a voice, a mighty voice, that everywhere doth come,
Or in the hum of multitudes or the solitude of home;
A voice that whispereth to the soul of a viewless presence nigh
As the murmurings of the leaflets tell that a breeze is passing by.

It cometh in the breath of morn, and in the noon-tide glow,
Where the torrent stream in its rock-bed swells, where the babbling brooklets flow;

Upborne upon the parting sigh of the evening from the hill
It whispereth, and in the black-browed night, when the tongue of man is still.

Amid the war of the tempest rage that thrilling voice we hear,
Summoning many a silent sigh, and many a thought of fear;
And in the thunder-peal it comes, like a warning from the sky,
Telling to trembling man of death and desolation nigh.

In the turbulent tumult of the waves, woke by the whirlwind's sweep,
When the giant might of the winter storm doth revel on the deep;
And in the breath of the soft south wind it comes—that varying voice—
Now bearing doubt and terror, now making all things rejoice.

In visible characters is it writ upon the heaven-vault high,
In the daystar, and the morn, and all the travelers of the sky,
In the sunbeam and the lightning flash that fadeless form I see,
That in the noon-day or the night cometh unceasingly.

Oh! know ye not what is that voice that wandereth everywhere,
That tongue whose soothing melody or fearful wrath you hear Oh! know ye whence it cometh, where it maketh its abode?
Its dwelling-place is in all space, it is—the Voice of God!—Edw. W. Coxe.

7-9. (7) quaking, the sign of fear of some unknown thing or presence. (8) no strength in me, comp. Re. i. 17.^c comeliness, the bright color of the skin of a healthy person. corruption, the yellow pallor of death. (9) deep sleep, or trance. He saw nothing with his bodily eyes, but much with his awakened spiritual vision.

Human Loneliness (vs. 7).—Though men are gregarious, they have an individuality. A man feels himself to be alone—I. In his profoundest thoughts. II. In his moral convictions. III. In his greatest sorrows. IV. In his dying moments.—Thomas.

Man in His Loneliness.—

Thou must go forth, alone, my soul, thou must go forth alone,
To other scenes, to other worlds, that mortal hath not known.
Thou must go forth alone, my soul, to tread the narrow vale;
But He whose word is sure hath said His comforts shall not fail,
His rod and staff shall comfort thee across the dreary road,
Till thou shalt join the blessed ones in heaven's serene abode.

10, 11. hand, etc., comp. Re. i. 17. set me, "placed me in a tottering state upon," etc. (11) greatly beloved, ch. ix. 23. "The angel calls him Daniel, not Belteshazzar; he gives him the name by which he was known to the saints of God."—Spk. Com.

Angels are Employed to Increase Our Strength.—It is noteworthy that as Daniel's needs arose one after the other, the angel was prepared to meet each one. Daniel was prostrate; the angel set him upright. Daniel was so stunned with the intelligence, that he was dumb; the angel opened his mouth, and gave him speech. Daniel fainted under a sense of awe and wonder; the angel imparted new strength with his touch. We are impressed with the considerateness, the tenderness, the thoughtful sympathy, of this angelic visitor. There was strength imparted to his physical nature by a touch; there was strength imparted to his soul by the angel's words. According to the constitution of man's nature is the agency employed by God. The angel who strengthened Christ Jesus in the garden of suffering can also strengthen us.—Pul. Com.

12-14. (12) from . . day, showing that if there had seemed to be any delay in the answer to prayer, there had not been one moment's inattention or neglect. chasten, R. V. "humble." (13) prince, etc., poss. here meaning the guardian angel of Persia; figurative of the hindrance to the Div. purposes offered by national and political movements. Michael, see Jude 9; Re. xii. 7. remained, to resist political movements that might be prejudicial to the interests of the Jews. R. V. marg. "was not needed." lxx, "I left him (Michael) there to continue the contention with the guardian angel of Persia." "We can have little idea what is meant by this conflict in the heavens between angelic beings."—Pul. Com. (14) many days, covers a long stretch of time.

Conflict of Good with Evil.—It is difficult to know whether this is meant to be ideal or real—whether it represents a struggle of angels

You go to Christ for justification, that the condemning power of sin may be taken away; but do you go to Christ for sanctification, that the reigning power of sin may be taken away?

"Hope nothing from luck, and the probability is that you will be so prepared, forewarned, and forearmed, that all shallow observers will call you lucky."

—Bulwer.

Christianity removes the attraction of the earth; and this is one way, in which it diminishes men's burden. It makes them citizens of another world.—Drummond.

^b Comp. Ac. ix. 7.

^c Comp. Job xiii. 5, 6; Is. vi. 5.

"We love Him because He first loved us." No one of the Apostles loved Christ more than he who is called the "beloved" disciple.

To obey instant orders of the living God, is the highest qualification for command. This is the meaning of that great saying of Cromwell's "One never mounts so high as when one knows not whither one is going"—a saying which the wise and prudent scorned as a confession of blindness, but which reveals to simpler minds the deepest truth. — Martineau.

a "I gained my point against the adverse angel of Persia, so as to influence the Persian authorities to favor Israel's restoration." — Fausset.

"Divine power in man is like the electric current in a piece of steel." — Peloubet.

"In one of England's great cathedrals rests one whose grave-stone, according to his own direction, bears but the single word Miserri-mus 'most miserable.' He was a man of wealth and position, or his sepulchre could not have been there." "A spiritual giant buried under a mountain of gold."

Peloubet.

b Comp. Re. 1. 17, 18.

c "How can thy servant, a poor mortal man, maintain a discourse with a person of your rank and dignity?"

—Lowth.

a Ju. xiii. 21, 22.

b "The hostility towards God's people which 'the prince of Persia and the prince of Grecia' showed, is illustrated historically in the opposition and hindrances endured by the Jews at Jerusalem, not only during the reigns of Darius Hystaspes, Xerxes, and Artaxerxes, but also, if in a less degree, in that of Alexander and his successors."

—Spk. Com.

c "In the secret book of God's decrees, which are truth."

—Fausset.

against demons, or is merely meant for a sort of parable which represents the to-and-fro conflicting impulses which sway the destinies of earthly kingdoms. In any case the representation is too unique and too remote from earth to enable us to understand its spiritual meaning, beyond the bare indication that God sitteth above the water-floods and God remaineth a king for ever. It is another way of showing us that the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing; that the kings of the earth set themselves and the rulers take counsel together; but that they can only accomplish what God's hand and God's counsel have predetermined to be done; and that when they attempt to overthrow the destinies which God has foreordained, "He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh them to scorn, the Lord shall have them in derision."—Exp. B.

God's Promises.—

As the deep blue of heaven brightens into stars,
So God's great love shines through in promises
Which, falling softly through our prison bars,
Daze not our eyes, but with their soft light bless.

Ladders of light God sets against the skies,
Upon whose golden rungs we step by step arise,
Until we tread the halls of Paradise. —A. E. Hamilton.

15—17. (15) face... ground, in humble reverence. dumb, as one over-awed. (16) touched my lips, so restoring the power of speech." my sorrows, comp. for the words 1 Sa. iv. 19. "It expresses the overpowering grief which masters mind as well as body."—Spk. Com. (17) how... lord? meaning "How can I who am so feeble talk with one who is so majestic?"^c

The Ministry of Angels.—

"O the exceeding grace
Of highest God, that loves his creatures so,
And all his works with mercy doth embrace,
That blessed angels he sends to and fro
To serve to wicked men, to serve his wicked foe!
How oft do they their silken bowers leave
To come to succor us that succor want!
How oft do they with golden pinions cleave
The flitting skies like flying pursuivant, Against the foul fiends to aid us militant!
They for us fight, they watch and duly ward,
And their bright squadrons round about us plant;
And all for love, and nothing for reward.
Oh, why should Heavenly God to man have such regard!"
—Spencer.

18—21. (18) again, see vss. 10, 16. (19) peace, etc., this is the assurance that no evil would result from the vision of angels, wh. seems always to have awakened fear in men.^a (20) Knowest, etc., vs. 14. fight... Persia, intimating that new difficulties in the way of the restoration of the Jews had arisen, and would have to be overcome. prince of Grecia, R. V. "Greece," another subsequent world-power, whose evil influence would have to be resisted.^b prince, i.e. the guardian angel of Persia and Greece. The angel of the Greek nation began to stir up his people. Then came the Ionian revolt, and the successive invasions of Greece, which compelled the Persians to leave the "holy people" alone.—Pul. Com. (21) noted, R. V. "inscribed." scripture of truth,^c i.e. in the book of God's designs. Comp. Ps. cxxxix. 16. holdeth, Stuart, "putteth forth his strength with me against, etc." in these things, better, "against these princes."

Confidence in Strong Leadership.—"You remember the story of Henry of Navarre. It was just before a battle. Riding in front of his troops he thus addressed them: 'You are Frenchmen; yonder is the enemy; I am your king.' Then, pointing to a white plume that he had fixed in his helmet, he said to them: 'My children, look well to your ranks; if your standard falls, rally around this white plume; it shall lead you to victory.' His soldiers fought like heroes, and the enemy was routed."—Anon. The True Majority.—Suppose a young composer of music should say, The world has rejected my compositions; there is no sale for my books; there is only one man who has uttered a word of promise or comfort to me; there is none that stands by me in all these endeavors but Beethoven! What a noble "but"! The very singularity of the exception creates a majority in the young man's favor. Where Beethoven has contributed his signature it is of but little consequence what the rest of the world may have done as to the merit of the music which has been submitted for criticism.—Peop. B.

CHAPTER THE ELEVENTH.

1-4. (1) This vs. should have concluded ch. x. "It seems to furnish the reason why Gabriel could rely on the help of Michael, and therefore may delay for a few moments his return to the scene of conflict with the Prince of Persia and the coming King of Javan. Michael will for that brief period undertake the sole responsibility of maintaining the struggle, because Gabriel has put him under a direct obligation by special assistance which he rendered to him only a little while previously in the first year of the Median Darius."—Exp. B. first year, when it would be uncertain what position Darius would take with regard to the people of Israel. I stood, i.e. Gabriel stood. him, prob. Michael is intended." (2) yet, i.e. after Cyrus. three kings, Cambyses, son of Cyrus, B.C. 529; Pseudo-Smerdis, B.C. 522; Darius Hystaspes, B.C. 521. fourth, Xerxes, whose riches were proverbial. against .. Grecia,^b wh. Xerxes invaded, B.C. 480. He was defeated at Salamis, and from that time Persia is viewed as politically dead. (3) mighty king, Alexander the Great. (4) broken, comp. ch. viii. 8, 23. posterity, Alex.'s sons did not live to succeed him.^c

His Kingdom shall be Broken.—Soon after the death of Alexander the Great, his kingdom was divided, but not to his posterity: four of his captains, Ptolemy, Antigonus, Lysimachus, and Cassander reigned over Egypt, Syria, Thrace, and Greece. The kingdoms of Egypt and of Syria became afterwards the most powerful; they subsisted as independent monarchies for a longer period than the other two; and as they were more immediately connected with the land of Judæa, which was often reduced to their dominion, they form the subject of the succeeding predictions.

5-9. (5) south, or Egypt.^a strong, and one, etc., R. V. marg. "strong; but one of his princes," etc. The king of the south is Ptolemy Soter, the first Grecian king of Egypt and one of Alexander's generals. "One of his princes" is Seleucus Nicator. (6) end of years, i.e. some half century later, about 250 B.C. join .. together, fulfilled in the union of Ptolemy Philadelphus and Antiochus Theus, the grandson of Seleucus Nicator. daughter, etc., Berenice, daughter of Ptolemy, married Antiochus Theus. agreement, R. V. marg. "equitable conditions," i.e. by marriage the two nations hoped for peace. retain the power, Antiochus subsequently divorced her. he stand, i.e. Antiochus. "The agreement was that Antiochus Theos should divorce his wife and half-sister Laodice, and disinherit her children, and bequeath the throne to any future child of Berenice, who would thus unite the empires of the Ptolemies and the Seleucidæ. But there was overwhelming disaster. Berenice's escort, her father, her husband, all perished, and she herself and her infant child were murdered by her rival, Laodice, B.C. 246, in the sanctuary of Daphne, whither she had fled for refuge."—Exp. B. (7) out of, etc., ref. is to Ptolemy Euergetes.^b king of the north, i.e. of Syria. (8) gods, etc., for the spoil he brought back, the Egyptians called him Euergetes, or Benefactor. princes, R. V. "molten images." continue, R. V. "refrain some years fr." after this success. (9) so the king of the south, etc., R. V. "and he (Seleucus Kallinikos, king of Syria) shall come into the realm of the king of the south, but he shall return," etc.

Power in Union.—Dr. Wood, the naturalist, tells us that there is a race of very small ants in Africa, who travel in great armies, covering ^a Da. x. 21.

^b "These wars, carried on by Xerxes' successors, ended at last in the conquest of the Persian monarchy by Alexander the Great."

—Lowth.

^c "Alex.'s son, Alexander Aegus, was slain, by Cassander; his other son, Hercules, was soon after murdered by instigation of Cassander."

—Wordsworth.

"A lonely man is insulated from the eternal — inaccessible to the subtle currents which ought to be flowing hourly into his soul."

—Drummond.

^a Egypt was conquered by Alexander in B.C. 332, and placed under the Heutenancy of Ptolemy who assumed the title of king about B.C. 304. "It is not the design of the Scripture to give us an historical narrative or the actions of heathen princes any further than the affairs of the Jewish nation were concerned in them."

S. Jerome.

^b "He avenged the death of Berenice by overrunning Syria, even to the Euphrates."

—Fausset.

"A great commentator on the Psalms says that it is not unity with one another (Ps. 133:1) that is meant, but unity with the great Head which makes unity with one another." — A. J. Gorgon.

c "The author of the Third Book of Maccabees ascribes this victory to the passionate importunity of Arsinoe, Ptolemy's sister, who ran about her shoulders, and by promises and entreaties engaged the soldiers to fight with more than ordinary resolution."—Lowth.

a "The phrase is usually taken to describe those who set law and right at defiance when these come in conflict with their own supposed interests." —Spk. Com.

b Ez. xx. 6, 15; Da. viii. 9.

c "Josephus shows that the meaning is not that the Jews should be utterly consumed; for Antiochus favored them for taking his part against Ptolemy, but that their land should be subjected to him.

d Prob. referring to his proposals for a contract of marriage between his own daughter Cleopatra and king Ptolemy.

a All countries lying upon the sea coasts are called islands in the Heb. dialect.

b "When attempting to rob the temple at Elymais, to raise money to pay the Romans, as several miles, and that, as they go, every living creature flies before them. The elephant rushes off into the wilderness. The lion, who flies from nothing else, plunges into the forest with a cry of terror. He well knows that if he once got into that crowd, he would never get out. Millions and millions of little teeth would fasten upon him, and millions more would surround him on every side, and devour every fragment of his flesh. The most powerful wild beast of Africa—the king of the great forest—is a little ant. The secret of his power lies in one little word, —union,—the union of a great multitude of little beings, all moving together.—Gospel for all Lands.

10—13. (10) his sons, those of Seleucus. stirred up, R. V. "shall war." one shall . . come, Antiochus the Great. overflow, representing the passing of a mighty army as a devastating flood. (11) king of the south, a weak and profligate prince, Ptolemy Philopater. his hand, that of Ptolemy, c at the battle of Raphia. (12) lifted up, so that he tried to force his way into the holiest part of the Jewish temple. He did not follow up his victory, but made a hasty peace, that he might return to his licentious pleasures. (13) after . . years, 12 yrs. later, upon the death of Philopater; in the interval Antiochus was otherwise engaged in the East.

Christian Warfare.—As long as the soldier slinks outside the battle he carries a whole skin; but let him plunge in and follow the captain, and he will soon have the bullets flying about him. Some have had a good time because there was no use in the devil wasting powder and shot upon you; you haven't been doing him any harm; but directly you begin to wake up and set to work for God, the devil will set a thousand evils to worrying you, or he may come himself to see you.—F. B. Meyer.

14—16. (14) many . . south, Philip of Macedon being one. robbers . . people, or law-breakers. a "Sons of violent ones of thy people." Factious and seditious adventurers among the Jews, who broke the treaty between Egypt and the Jews by aiding Antiochus. They destroyed the Egyptian garrison placed in Jerusalem. shall exalt themselves, etc., Stuart: "will lift themselves up, so as to establish prophetic vision." In thus rising up they do but establish the prophecies respecting the troubles of the Jews under the fourth dynasty, ch. vii. 19—25; viii. 9—11. (15) king . . north, Antiochus. fenced cities, such as Zidon, Gaza, Abila, Samaria, Gadara, etc. chosen people, or choicest troops. (16) glorious land, i.e. Judæa. b consumed, lit. perfected, i.e. perfectly brought under his sway. c

Reward of Apostasy.—However much any of the Jews may have helped Antiochus under the hope of ultimately regaining their independence, their hopes were frustrated. The Syrian king came, besieged, and took a well-fenced city—perhaps an allusion to the fact that he wrested Sidon from the Egyptians. After his great victory over the Egyptian general Scopas at Mount Panium, B.C. 198, the routed Egyptian forces, to the number of ten thousand, flung themselves into that city. This campaign ruined the interests of Egypt in Palestine, "the glorious land." Palestine now passed to Antiochus, who took possession "with destruction in his hand."—Exp. B.

17—19. (17) set his face, the sign of a formed purpose on the part of Antiochus to have predominance in Egypt and thus check and resist the power of Rome. upright ones, better, "he shall make agreements with him." a daughter of women, Cleopatra is so called on account of her great beauty. corrupting her, or with the intent to corrupt her, by making her use her influence against her husband's interests. neither . . him, Cleopatra took her husband's, not her father's side. (18) isles, or the maritime cities of Lesser Asia. a prince, R. V. omits "for his own behalf;" the ref. is to Lucius Scipio, the Rom. consul, who utterly routed Antiochus at Magnesia, 190 B.C., forcing him to make ignominious terms. without, etc., R. V. "yea, moreover." (19) not be found, ref. to his sudden and violent death. b

Failure.—Did you ever notice that when some of the strongest men in the Bible failed, they almost always failed on the strongest point of their character? Moses was renowned for his meekness, humility and gentleness; yet he became angry and killed the Egyptian; he was angry and said, "Must I bring water out of this rock, ye rebels?" God kept him out of the Promised Land because he lost his temper. If you think you are meek, it is a good sign you are not. Peter was one of the bold-est of all the disciples, but when one little maid looked at him and said, "You are one of his disciples," he began to curse and to swear and to say that he was not, and down he fell. John and James were noted for their meekness and gentleness, and yet they wanted to call fire down from heaven to consume a town in Samaria. Do you not see that man is a complete failure away from God? But he that is in you is greater than he that is in the world. When Jesus Christ on the cross said, "It is finished," it was the shout of a conqueror. He had fought and overcome the world. Now if I have Christ in me, I will overcome the world, and if I have not, it is the height of madness for me to undertake to overcome the world.—D. L. Moody.

20—22. (20) raiser of taxes, Seleucus Philopater is so called bec. he seized the treasures of the temple at Jerusalem. glory kingdom, i.e. in the temple at Jerusalem. few days, his reign was comparatively short, reaching only to twelve years. neither .. battle, he was poisoned by Heliodorus, his treasurer, who designed to usurp the kingdom. (21) vile person, R. V. "contemptible," Antiochus Epiphanes. to .. kingdom, i.e. he had no rightful claim to the royal dignity of succession. peace-ably, R. V. "in time of security." He gained the kingdom by craft and flattery. (22) flood, fig. for an overflowing army. prince, prob. Ptolemy Philometor.

Successful Dissimulation.—I. Dissimulation is often more successful than violence. The successful usurper grasps the honors of royalty for himself; he perpetrates no violence to obtain them. He wins power by dissimulation. 1. Dissimulation is most common in an age of advanced civilization. As life becomes more complex, evil becomes more subtle. 2. It has most power at a time of moral corruption. 3. It is most successful under circumstances of material prosperity. Then we are off our guard. II. The success of dissimulation is more injurious to the world than the success of violence. The greatest enemies to a state are its traitors. III. Though dissimulation may succeed for a time, truth will ultimately triumph. There is "an end" at "the time appointed." 1. By its own nature evil ultimately declares its true character. By dissimulation power is won, which in being used casts off the mask. 2. When evil is declared, it is seen to be hateful and weak. Once fairly known, it loses its attraction and becomes a despicable thing. 3. God will finally interfere to destroy all false appearances, and judge the world in truth according to real character and conduct.—Pul. Com.

23—26. (23) league .. him, i.e. with Ptolemy Philometor. small people, his forces were but small in this first expedition. (24) peace-ably, R. V. "in time of security," i.e. by deceit and chicanery. fattest, etc., the rich tracts of Cœle-Syria and Palestine. scatter, etc., by this unusual generosity he sought to win favor, and secure his throne. fore-cast, etc., or think his thoughts: plan for the future by keeping his hold on the chief places of strength, esp. Pelusium, the key of Egypt. (25) south, Egypt. not stand, history records that at this battle Ptolemy was deserted and his power treacherously undermined by his own generals, so that his army was destroyed. (26) feed, etc., his own trusted courtiers, Eulacus and Lennæus. overflow, Stuart: "rush on like a flood," to its own ruin.

Result of Wrong.—It is recorded of Marius, that after his overthrow by Sylla, he was always in consternation, as if he heard the sound of the trumpets, and the noise of the victorious army pursuing him. His fears were no longer quiet than whilst charmed with wine or sleep: he there-fore was continually drunk, that he might forget himself, his enemy, and his danger. Thus men make a pitiful shift to forget their latter end, and, whilst they are following their secular affairs or sensual pleasures, are unconcerned for what is to be hereafter.—Bates.

27—29. (27) one table, they met at Memphis. Antiochus pretended to take care of the interests of his nephew Philometor, and he seemed to confide in his uncle's protection. Both were trying to deceive. shall not prosper, the Romans interrupted the progress of Antiochus in Egypt. (28) Then, when he had taken the spoils of Egypt. heart, or purpose.

agreed, he was slain by the in-habitants."

—Lowth.

Christian faith is a grand cathed-ral, with di-vinely pictured win-dows. Stand-ing without, you see no glory, nor can possibly im-agine a ny; stand-ing within, every ray of light reveals a har-mony of un-speakable splen-dors.

—Hawthorne.
c So Applan re-lates.

d "The younger son of Antiochus the Great. He was a hostage at Rome, from whence he escaped. He was brother and successor of Seleucus, and a usurper, for he supplanted his nephew Demetrius, the son of Seleucus and lawful heir to the throne."

—Wordsworth.

"'Tis wrong to sleep in church; 'tis wrong to borrow what you can never pay; 'tis wrong to touch with un-kind woru the heart that pines in sorrow; 'tis wrong to scold too loud; to eat too much; 'tis wrong to put off acting 'til to-morrow." —J.T. Watson.

"No adulation; 'tis the death of virtues; Who flatters is of all mankind the lowest Save he who courts the flat-tery." — Han-nah More.

"Do you find it hard to work with others? Re-member how hard God must find it to work with you!"

a "The bent of Antiochus was towards Hellenism; and the surest way to his favor was to decry the laws and ceremonies of Moses, and to encourage the gymnasium and other foreign introductions. The patriotic Jews were compelled to witness what they had no power to prevent."

—Spk. Com. "Hateful to me, as are the gates of hell. Is he who, hiding one thing in his heart, utters another." —Bryant.

b "The Roman Senate sent an envoy who met Antiochus near Alexandria, and demanded that he should retire fr. Egypt, which was an ally of Rome. Antiochus said he would consider the mandate, whereupon the envoy drew a circle round him with his staff on the sand of the shore, and commanded him not to go forth of it till he had given an answer to the message. Antiochus was confounded, and after a little hesitation, obeyed, and evacuated Egypt."

—Wordsworth. "Self-sacrifice is at the root of all the blossoms of goodness that have survived the wreck of Paradise."

—Gekkie.

a "Some were found, after their death, with idols consecrated under their clothes."

—Lowth.

b 1 Pe. i. 7.

"Peace for the past, grace for the present, and glory for the future; nothing before the true believer that isn't glory." —D. L. Moody.

against . . covenant, or covenant people, who, he understood, showed signs of revolting." exploits, R. V. "his pleasure," esp. the massacre of the Jewish people, and despoiling the temple. (29) return, for a third expedition, wh. did not result so gloriously as the former one. Rome interfered on behalf of Ptolemy, 168 B.C.

The Self-Seeking Spirit leads to Satan's kingdom, not to Christ's. It is the spirit of hell, not of heaven. It begets evils innumerable and sorrow unspeakable. "Fling away ambition; by that sin angels fell. 'Aut Cæsar aut nullus,' 'to be first or nothing,' leads to crimes and wars. It was Milton's Satan who said, 'Better to reign in hell than to serve in heaven.' 'How like a mounting devil in the heart rules the unreined ambition!' But distinguish between the strong desire to improve, to have large usefulness, to grow in holiness and love, and the desire to have more honor and power, or even to be better than others. To do the very best we can in everything is our duty.—Peloubet.

30—32. (30) Chittim, Ge. x. 4; Rev. xxiv. 24. Ships of Macedonia,^b the Roman fleet. intelligence with, R. V. "regard unto," i.e. an understanding with. forsake, etc., i.e. renegade Jews, who joined Antiochus. The king used these deserters to work out his schemes. (31) arms, "he shall set physical forces in motion."—Pul. Com. pollute, etc., profaning the temple, and stopping the sacrifices. of strength, R. V. "even the fortress." abomination, idol, wh. was set on God's altar. Prob. an image of Jupiter, to whom the temple was dedicated. (32) corrupt, or corrupted. Ref. is to such apostates as Jason and Menelaus. know their God, and keep faithful to Him. do exploits, as illus. in the career of the Maccabees.

Christian Seamen, Strong in Valor.—"I have had the honor," said Capt. Parry, at a public meeting in 1826, "and I may truly say the happiness, of commanding British seamen under circumstances requiring the utmost activity, implicit and immediate obedience, and the most rigid attention to discipline and good order; and I am sure, that the maintenance of all these was, in a great measure, owing to the blessing of God upon our humble endeavors to improve the religious and moral character of our men. In the schools established on board our ships during the winter, religion was made the primary object, and the result was every way gratifying and satisfactory. It has convinced me, that true religion is so far from being a hindrance to the arduous duties of that station in which it has pleased Providence to cast the seaman's lot, that, on the contrary, it will always incite him to their performance, from the highest and most powerful of motives; and I will venture to predict, that in proportion as this spring of action is more and more introduced among our seamen, they would become such as every Englishman would wish to see them. The very best seamen on board the "Hecla" were, without exception, those who had thought the most seriously on religious subjects; and if a still more scrupulous selection were to be made out of that number, the choice would fall, without hesitation, on two or three individuals possessing dispositions and sentiments eminently Christian."—Whitecross.

33—35. (33) understand, R. V. marg. "the teachers of the people," comp. ch. xii. 10. instruct, so as to keep them from being corrupted by the flatterers. fall, etc., in time of persecution, and of patriotic warfare. (34) little help, ref. to the Chasidim,—"the Pious,"—a sect wh. rallied round the Maccabees, most of them were sincere but some were wavers. cleave . . flatteries, i.e. not sincerely.^a (35) them of understanding, i.e. some of the patriot party. try them, R. V. "refine," test and prove them,^b and call out more energy and effort. time of the end, i.e. end of Antiochus' reign. time appointed, the evils will not go beyond the set time of God's appointment.

Every Christian a Teacher (vs. 33).—Taking these words as applicable to every Christian man and woman, let us see what they teach us. 1. A Christian is one among the people; 2. He is one that has understanding; 3. He is one who does not keep his knowledge to himself; 4. A Christian is an instructor; 5. He is an instructor of many.—Bonar.

Flatteries and Persecutions.—"The Roman magistrates and officers, it is well known, made use of the most alluring promises, as well as the most terrible threatenings, to prevail upon the primitive Christians to renounce their religion, and offer incense to the statues of the emperors and images of the gods." He quotes an old commentator, who says: "There are some who think that the prophet here had respect to the Christians whom the wicked idolaters endeavored, from the beginning of the rising Church, to seduce by flatteries; but the persecution of tyrants raged chiefly against the apostles and holy teachers." Times of persecution will doubtless have much in common; and Christians, suffering as they did, and so long and often so severely under the Roman emperors and magistrates, would naturally find much in the description of the times of Antiochus applicable to their own. The word of prophecy was intended to be a "light shining in a dark place," in the New as it had been in the Old Testament dispensation. "These things happened unto them (the Old Testament Church) for ensamples; and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come" (1 Cor. x. 11). The bishop adds: "It may, too, with the strictest truth and propriety be said of the primitive Christians that, being dispersed everywhere, and preaching the Gospel in all the parts of the Roman empire, they 'instructed many,' and gained a great number of proselytes to their religion: yet they fell by the sword, etc., 'many days;' for they were exposed to the malice and fury of ten general persecutions, and suffered all manner of injuries, afflictions, and tortures, with little intermission, for the space of three hundred years."—Pul. Com.

36—39. (36) the king, Antiochus. indignation, i.e. till God's anger should be turned away from Israel. that that, R. V. "that which." (37) god, better, gods. Antiochus desired to Hellenise everything. desire of women, poss. referring to the Syrian Venus, who was esp. worshiped by women. (38) estate, R. V. marg. "office." God of forces, or fortresses. "Prob. a general and purposely indefinite title." Indicating that he would only honor war, brute force. pleasant things, or jewels. (39) strange god, new even to his own people. R. V. "And he shall deal with the strongest fortresses by the help of a strange god"—namely, the Capitoline Jupiter—and shall crowd the strongholds of Judæa with heathen colonists who worship the Tyrian Hercules.—Exp. B. cause them, i.e. those who join him in worshipping this god of his own.

Self.—In looking at the stars thro' a great telescope, it is necessary first to put out every light until you are left in total darkness. Every light sets the air in motion, and disturbs the focus, and blurs the vision of the stars. How often our vision of God is blurred, and dimmed by the flames of self-consciousness that float about us! How many times we have to put out the light of self-seeking, earthly ambition and false pride of position in order to look upward, and in the clear, still air know whither God's lights are leading us and what God will have us do.—W. H. P. Faunce.

40—42. (40) push at him, this may refer to Antiochus's third expedition; we have no record of a fourth; but the historical explanation of this vs. cannot be assured. (41) glorious land, i.e. Palestine. chief, lit. firstlings.^a (42) stretch, etc., fig. for putting forth power.

The Last Expedition.—"Antiochus in the course of his march shall pass through Palestine, 'the glorious land,' with disastrous injury; but Edom, Moab, and the bloom of the kingdom of Ammon shall escape his hand. Egypt, however, shall not escape. By the aid of the Libyans and Ethiopians who are in his train he shall plunder Egypt of its treasures." How far these events correspond to historic realities is uncertain. Jerome says that Antiochus invaded Egypt a third time in B.C. 165, the eleventh year of his reign; but there are no historic traces of such an invasion, and most certainly Antiochus towards the close of his reign, instead of being enriched with vast Egyptian spoils, was struggling with chronic lack of means. Some therefore suppose that the writer composed and published his enigmatic sketch of these events before the close of the reign of Antiochus, and that he is here passing from contemporary fact into a region of ideal anticipations which were never actually fulfilled.—Exp. B.

43—45. (43) Libyans, etc., allies of Egypt. at his steps, i.e. among his followers. (44) tidings, etc., concerning Artaxias, king of Armenia, who revolted in the N., and Arsaces, leader of the Parthians in the E. Stuart: "to lay waste many." (45) plant, etc., sign of entire conquest.^a

"Oh blindness to the future! kindly given, That each may fill the circle marked by heaven." — Rope.

"Learning without thought is labor lost; thought without learning is perilous." — Confucius.

"Knowledge is proud that he learned so much;

Wisdom is humble that he knows no more." — Comper.

"Learning maketh young men temperate, is the comfort of old age, standing for wealth with poverty, and serving as an ornament to riches." — Cicero.

"He that is proud, eats up himself; pride is his own glass, his own trumpet, his own chronicle; and whatever praises itself but in the deed, devours the deed in the praise." — Shakespeare.

a "Any invader on his way to Egypt through Palestine would leave untouched the tribes to the E. of the Jordan, esp. if rapid progress were his object." — Spk. Com.

"We let go the present, which we have in our power, and look forward to that which depends upon chance — and so quit a certainty for an uncertainty." — Seneca.

^a His palace-like military tents.

b "The most brilliant of the Syro-Macedonian kings died in the mountain-town of Tabal, consumed in body by a loathsome ulcer, afflicted in mind by horrible apparitions and remorse of conscience."—Milman.

2 Th. ii. 8.

"Midas longed for gold, and insulted the Olympians. He got gold, so that whatever he touched became gold, and he, with his long ears, was little the better for it. Midas had insulted Apollo and the gods; the gods gave him his wish, and a pair of long ears, which also were a good appendage to it. What a truth in these old fables!"—Carlyle.

"At a revival meeting, a little lad who was used to Methodist ways, went home to his mother and said, 'Mother, John So-and-so is under conviction an seeking for peace, but he will not find it tonight, mother.' 'Why, William,' said she, 'Because he is only down on one knee, mother, and he will never get peace until he is down on both knees.' Until we are completely humbled, we cannot find the Saviour."

a Comp. Joel ii. 2; Je. xxx. 7; Mat. xxiv. 21.

b "The phrase alludes to the registers that used to be kept of the members of any city or corporation; the privileges of wh. society none can lay a claim to but those whose names are found in such registers."—Lowth.

between the seas, R. V. "betw. the sea and the glorious holy mountain," i.e. betw. the Mediterranean and Jerusalem. come to his end,^b on his return from the expedition indicated in vs. 44.

Napoleon's Conquests and End.—Notwithstanding the expressed presentiment of the first Napoleon that his nephew should be the ultimate representative of the Napoleonic dynasty, and the profound conviction of that nephew, even from early life, that he had a great mission and destiny to fulfil in relation to France; notwithstanding that, singularly, after becoming president of the French Republic in 1851, he became emperor of France in 1852, being crowned on the anniversary of the battle of Austerlitz and the coronation of Napoleon I., thus restoring the Napoleonic dynasty, when the French people inscribed on an arch erected in his honor the remarkable words, "The uncle that was, the nephew that is," as if in literal fulfilment, of Rev. xvii. 8, 11; notwithstanding that from 1849 to 1870 he maintained military occupation of Rome, and declared that the temporal power of the pope was incompatible with the advance of civilization and must be put down, being termed the "modern Augustus, nephew and heir of Cæsar;" and finally, notwithstanding that he succeeded in acquiring an almost paramount influence over Spain and Italy, while he extended his power in Algeria, and the northern coast of Africa, and appeared determined to possess himself of Palestine, and that, as in the case of the first Napoleon, Great Britain appeared to be the only impediment to his attainment of uncontrolled dominion over the Roman world; yet he passed away, broken apparently in the zenith of his prosperity and power, and left the prophecy still unfulfilled.—Hom. Com. Retribution for Sin.—A royal tyrant may as well knock his head against a granite wall—and better—than to work against God, or to fling himself on the bosses of the Almighty's shield. In the midst of apparent success, such a man feels oftentimes that fate (as he calls it) is against him. Strangely are his ends defeated, as were Napoleon's, by a snowstorm. The mightiest warrior is working, with his blustering noise, within a very tiny circle; and all imperial and martial events are embraced within the supreme purpose and administration of God. Let appearances be as they may, "God has prepared his throne in the heavens;" "His kingdom ruleth over all." At last, reward and retribution shall be distributed by royal and impartial hands. Every one shall "receive the due reward of his deeds." God's end may be far off, humanly speaking, yet it shall "surely come." Though it tarry, childlike faith will wait for it.—Pulp. Com.

Gold.—

"Commerce has set the mark of selfishness;
The signet of its all enslaving power
Upon a shining ore and called it gold:
Before whose image bow the vulgar great,
The vainly rich, the miserable proud,
The mob of peasants, nobles, priests and kings,
And with blind feelings reverence the power
That grinds them to the dust of misery.
But in the temple of their hireling hearts
Gold is a living god, and rules in scorn
All earthly things but virtue."

—Shelley.

CHAPTER THE TWELFTH.

1-4. (1) that time, about 163 B.C., ch. xi. 40-45. Michael, regarded as the protector of the Jewish nation, ch. x. 13, 21. time of trouble, prob. refer. to the last struggle against Antiochus.^a in the book, the book of the living; God's book, in which thou who are to outlive the Antiochean persecutions stand recorded as survivors.^b—Stuart. (2) many, i.e. "multitudes," not a contrast with "few" who do not rise, sleep, in death. awake, in the general resurrection. While vs. 1 seems to refer to the time of Antiochus, vs. 2 passes on to the scenes of the last day. life, etc., Matt. xxv. 46. (3) wise, or teachers: ch. xi. 33, 35. These had been great lights in the world, so their reward is to shine for ever in more glorious spheres. (4) shut . . words, ch. viii. 26. "The charge is one of caution, not of absolute reservation: they only should see the words who were fit to see them."—Spk. Com. run to and fro, Stuart: "many shall make diligent search," etc.

The Good in the Future (vs. 3).—I. Their present character and conduct. 1. They are wise; 2. They turn many to righteousness; 3. The means they use for this end; 4. The ends accomplished are valuable; 5. This work is not confined to ministers. II. Their future reward. 1. They shall shine as the firmament; 2. Glory of the stars that of reflected light; 3. Stars of different magnitudes; 4. The glory of heaven will endure; 5. The obvious sense of the text is that the good will be exalted to high honor in the future. Learn:—(1) Study wisdom; (2) Study usefulness; (3) Be encouraged by the prospect of a vast reward.—Sigma in 400 Sks.

The Light of Eternity.—Michelangelo once went into the studio of a young artist who had just executed a statue to stand in the public square. Angelo saw its grave defects, and pointed them out to his young friend. The exultant artist did not appreciate the criticism of his work, and supposed the greater man to be moved with envy. So he told him, in the dim obscurity of his workshop he could not see the defects which were so apparent to the aged critic, and in passion sneered at the opinion given. "Well," said Angelo, not the least disturbed, "the light of the public square will test it. The light of the public square will test it." Ah, yes! The light of the public square is to test every human life. Eternal blaze shall pour upon it, and defects unseen by the poorer light of earth will grow to ghastly deformities. The light of the public square will test it! Some to Everlasting Life.—There is an Eastern story of the "Amreeta water of Immortality," which, when drunk by the impure, ran through their veins in the liquid fire of unspeakable agony; but, when drunk by the pure, this water spread through their whole being the glow of eternal life and peace.—Old Test. Anec.

5—7. (5) other two, i. e. two other angel forms. river, the Hiddekel. (6) clothed in linen, ch. x. 5. upon the waters, R. V., "above the waters," who had made the communication. An angel asks the question for Daniel. (7) held, etc., comp. Re. x. 5. time . . half, comp. ch. vii. 25. scatter, R. V., "when they have made an end of breaking in pieces the power," etc.; i. e. when Israel is, as it were, crushed, then the death of Antiochus shall take place, and the fulfillment of the preceding prophecy shall begin to be accomplished.—Stuart.

The Signs of the End (vs. 6).—I. Signs of the end in the world. 1. Progress of false religion; 2. A rampant infidelity; 3. Persecution of the good; 4. Unbelief of the world. II. Signs in the Church. 1. Increased activities—missions; 2. Quickened zeal—personal effort; 3. New appliances—education, art, inventions.—W. W. Whythe.

Working for Eternity.—It is told of Zeuxis, the famous painter, that he was remarkable for the pains which he bestowed upon his works, and that on one occasion, when he was accused of being long in drawing his lines and slow in the use of his pencil, he replied, "I am long in doing what I take in hand, because I want to do it with care; for what I paint, I paint for eternity."—Wm. Taylor.

Destiny.—

"The tissue of the life to be, we weave with colors all our own,
And in the field of destiny we reap as we have sown;
Still shall the soul around it call, the shadows which it gathered here,
And, painted on the eternal wall, the past shall reappear."

8—9. (8) understood not, i. e. the time was only told him in prophetic form, he could not translate it into actual years. (9) Go thy way, i. e. do not press this question; let all be until God shall please to unfold it. till the time, or nearer the time.

Premonition of the End.—"My next undertaking," said Hogarth to a company of friends around his table, "shall be the 'End of all Things.'" "If that is the case," replied one of his friends, "your business will be finished; for there will be an end to the painter." "There will be so," answered Hogarth, sighing heavily; "and therefore the sooner my work is done the better." He began the next day, by grouping everything "Gain may be temporary and uncertain; but ever while you live expense is constant and certain; and it is easier to build two chimneys than to keep one in fuel."—Franklin.

"'Tis the divinity that stirs within us, 'tis heaven itself that points out an hereafter, and intimates eternity to man."—Addison.

"The end of learning is to know God, and out of that knowledge to love Him, and to imitate Him, as we may the nearest, by possessing our souls of true virtue."—Milton.

"God is the author, men are only the players. These grand pieces which are played upon earth, have been composed in heaven."—Balzac.

"Sooner or later that which is now life shall be poetry, and every fair and manly trait shall add a richer strain to the song."—Emerson.

"The contented mind wants nothing that he hath not; the covetous mind wants not only what he hath not, but likewise what he hath."—J. Beaumont.

a "The time is from the profanation of the temple by Antiochus in the month Ijar of the year 168 B. C. to the restoration of the worship by Judas Maccabeus on the 25th of Chisleu, 165, and was, according to the Seleucid era, 1,290 days; 45 days more elapsed before Antiochus' death in the month Shebat, so ending the Jews' calamity."—Maurer.

"It is through the deeper sense of the holy love of God that repentance grows deeper also."—S. S. Times.

b "That the words contain a reference to and a belief in the resurrection is self-evident; his lot would fall to him in the heavenly Canaan." — Spk. Com.

"When I see the heavenly sun buried under earth in the evening of the day and in the morning find a resurrection of his glory, why (think I) may not the sons of heaven, buried in the earth in the evening of their days, expect the morning of their glorious resurrection? Each night is but the past days funeral, and the morning his resurrection; why then should our which denotes the end of all things,—a broken bottle; an old broom worn to the stump; the butt-end of an old fire-lock; a cracked bell; a bow unstrung; a crown tumbling into pieces; towers in ruins; the sign-post of a tavern called the "World's End," tumbling; the moon in her wane; the map of the globe burning; a gibbet falling, the body gone, and chains which held it falling down; Phœbus and his horse dead in the clouds; a vessel wrecked; Time, with his hour-glass and scythe broken, a tobacco-pipe in his mouth, the last whiff of smoke going out; a play-book open, with exeunt omnes stamped in the corner; an empty purse; and a statute of bankruptcy taken out against Nature. "So far so good," cried Hogarth: "nothing remains but this," taking his pencil in a sort of prophetic fury, and dashing off the similitude of a painter's palette broken. "Finis!" exclaimed Hogarth, "the deed is done, all is over." He never again took the palette in hand; and he died in about a year after he had finished this extraordinary tail-piece.

10, 11. (10) made white, the sign of purity. This is the design of persecution and trial. wise . . understand, "an honest and good heart is a necessary qualification for the receiving and understanding of Divine truths." (11) daily sacrifice, etc., ch. xi. 31.^a

The Blessedness of Sanctified Trouble.—Trouble is sanctified and blessed in two different ways, and to two different classes. It is sanctified to the ungodly, and to those still out of Christ; and it is so when, accompanied by God's quickening and convicting Spirit, it leads the troubled one to a consideration of sin and its baneful effects, and to an earnest desire to be saved from it, and to be reconciled to God. Such a case was that of Manasseh, who in his captivity and affliction sought the Lord and found Him. Of such sanctified trouble the prodigal son is a standing and divinely given picture. The conversion of Israel in the great tribulation probably to be a distinguished example of the same thing. But trouble is also and especially sanctified to the godly, who are already in Christ.—Hom. Com.—Everlasting Life.—Archbishop Ussher, in his declining years, had a room built with windows facing the east, south, and west, so that he could warm himself by the rays of the sun. In the morning he stationed himself at the east window, at noon at the south window, and in the evening at the west window, where he could watch the setting of the sun. The west window as at that time symbolical of the setting of his sun of life. But sunrise follows the setting of the sun, and the sunset of life is the sunrise of immortality.—A. T. Pierson.

12, 13. (12) waiteth, watchingly, expectantly. thousand . . days, i. e. to the death of Antiochus Epiphanes 45 days after the cleansing of the Temple. Profane hist. does not tell us when Antiochus died, but it was after the reconsecration of the Temple by Judas Maccabæus. (13) rest, in the grave. in thy lot, as one of the glorified saints by-and-by.^b The image is taken from the allotment of the earthly Canaan. The Prophet Daniel was at this time at least ninety years of age.

The Way and the End (vs. 13).—I. Describe the way Daniel was exhorted to walk in. 1. Self-denial and mortification; 2. Humility and prayer; 3. Faith; 4. Holiness. II. Point out the necessity of walking in that way. 1. God commands it; 2. Our salvation depends on our obedience; 3. It will redound to the glory of God. III. The advantages of obedience. 1. Thou shalt rest from a war with Nature, with Satan, with the world, from toil; 2. And stand in thy lot, among the holiest of the ransomed, a conqueror of the first order, near the throne of God.—W. Stevens.

The Torn Bible Leaf.—In Providence, R. I., there lived two young men, who were intimately acquainted. The one was godly; and the other, a fellow-clerk, paid no attention to Divine things. On one occasion the latter took up a leaf of the Bible, and was about to tear it in pieces, and use it for packing some small parcel in the shop, when the other said, "Do not tear that: it contains the word of eternal life." The young man did not relish the reproof, and put it in his pocket. Shortly after this, he said to himself, "Now I will see what kind of life it is of which this leaf speaks." On unfolding the leaf, the first words that caught his eye were the last in the book of Daniel: "But go thou thy way till the end be: for thou shalt rest, and stand in thy lot at the end of the days." He began immediately to inquire what his lot would be at the end of the days, and the train of thought thus awakened led to the formation of a religious character. By means so various are the purposes of Divine grace accomplished.—Contrast in the Death of the Righteous and Ungodly.—Dying beds often bear witness to a contrast; and dying beds do not generally tell lies. Dying circumstances, when the approach of eternity opens men's eyes, usually discover the wise man and the fool. "My principles," said Altamont when in those circumstances, "have poisoned my friend; my extravagance has beggared my boy; my wickedness has murdered my wife: and is there another hell? Oh thou blasphemed, yet most indulgent Lord God, hell itself is a refuge if it hide me from Thy frown." "Give me more laudanum," said Mirabeau, "that I may not think of eternity and of what is to come." "I would give worlds," said Thomas Paine, "that the Age of Reason had never been written." Let us hear from the other side. "I have pain," said Richard Baxter—"there is no arguing against sense—but I have peace; I have peace." "The battle is fought," said Dr. Payson, "and the victory is won for ever: I am going to bathe in an ocean of purity, and benevolence, and happiness, to all eternity." "My soul," said John Brown of Haddington, "hath found inexpressibly more sweetness and satisfaction in a single line of the Bible, nay, in two such words as these, Thy God and My God, than all the pleasures found in the things of the world since the creation could equal."—Hom. Com.

funeral sleep be otherwise than our sleep at night? Why should not we as well wake to our resurrection as in the morning? I see night is rather an intermission of day than a deprivation, and death rather borrows our life of us than robs us of it. Since, then, the glory of the sun finds a resurrection, why should not the sons of glory?" —Warwick.

Introduction.

Hosea was no doubt a native of the Northern kingdom. The moral condition of that kingdom was exceedingly corrupt. This moral degradation the prophet visits with unsparing rebuke and denunciation. "As Stanley has said, he was the Jeremiah of Israel; no wonder, therefore, that he met Jeremiah's fate of opposition and contempt (ix. 7, 8, comp. Jer. xxix. 26, 27)." The time covered by his prophecies was probably about 750 to 725 B.C. "Amid all his threats and denunciations his tender love for Israel beams forth. He rejoices when he has a message of mercy to deliver; and his style loses its stern abruptness, and he dwells with placid delight on the prospect before him; his impetuous boldness sobers down into the gentle flow of calm confidence. But this happier aspect of his prophecy is rarely seen. His message is generally full of mourning and woe. The prophets of Judah could look forward to a restored people and a repaired polity. The ten tribes had no separate future. Their temporal punishment was irreversible. It was only as associated with, and absorbed in, Judah that they could hope for restored vitality. This feeling colors all the prophet's language and darkens his mental view. His love is disquieted and saddened by the prospect; yet his trust in Jehovah triumphs over all. His confidence in the spiritual mercies which are in store for Israel is unshaken, and abides with him as a living certainty. To this confidence he is guided by his unalterable conviction of the Lord's love for his people; he has learned that 'God is love.' Hosea's wedded life is the outward symbolizing of this truth, and taught that man should in like manner love his fellow. Those who were embraced in the arms of one Father should love as brethren; they should have that filial affection to Jehovah which none could feel for a heathen deity, and that affection for one another which can reign only in a united family. These ideas will be found to run through the whole book, and to underlie each rebuke, prophecy, and expostulation."—Pulpit Com.

Synopsis.

(According to Angus.)

This Book may be divided into Two Parts:

- I. A Symbolical Narrative....chaps. 1.—iii.
- II. Prophetic Discourses.....chaps. iv.—xiv.

(According to Horne.)

Into Five Sections or Discourses:

- Discourse I.i.—iii.
- Discourse II.iv.—vi. 3.
- Discourse III.vi. 4.—viii.
- Discourse IV.ix.—xiii. 8.
- Discourse V.xiii. 9.—xiv.

CHAPTER THE FIRST.

I. word, etc., the common formula for prophetic inspiration.^a Hosea, the name means deliverance, safety. He was prob. an Israelite.^b "His rough Aramaising diction indicates the north as his residence."^c Beer, an unknown name, not the same as Beerah in 1 Chr. v. 6. Uzziah, etc., "the kings here mentioned are the same as those in Isaiah i. 1, with the addition of Jeroboam, the son of Joash (comp. 2 Ki. xiv. 23-28), a very prosperous but wicked king who greatly promoted idolatry in Israel."—Barrows. Jeroboam, the second, in whose reign the kingdom of the Ten Tribes rose to the highest pitch of prosperity. After Jeroboam a period of anarchy ensued.

Scripture, Kings, and Truth (vs. 1).—This verse leads us to consider them. I. The essence of Scripture. 1. It is a word; 2. A Divine word; 3. Concerning men; 4. A Divine word concerning man coming through man. II. The mortality of kings, kings die. 1. This fact is a blessing; 2. A lesson. III. The perpetuity of truth. 1. Adapted to all generations; 2. Is necessary for all generations.—Thomas.

The Prophecies of Hosea.—The prophecies of Hosea were addressed immediately to the kingdom of the Ten Tribes, yet so that he did not overlook Judah; for he considered the two kingdoms of Judah and Israel as constituting together the covenant people of God. As it is generally agreed that Isaiah began to prophesy in the last year of Uzziah's reign, or but a few years before his death, while Hosea prophesied in the reign of Jeroboam II., the great-grandson of Jehu, who died about twenty-six years before Uzziah, it follows that Hosea, though partly contemporary with Isaiah, was called to the prophetic work at an earlier period. If we suppose him to have commenced prophesying two years before the death of Jeroboam, and then add the remaining twenty-six years of Uzziah's reign, the sixteen of Jotham, the sixteen of Ahaz, and two of the first years of Hezekiah, we shall have a period of sixty-two years. To Israel this was a calamitous period, embracing four usurpations and murders of the reigning sovereigns, and three invasions of the Assyrians. In the last of those Hosea, king of Israel, became tributary to Shalmaneser, king of Assyria; but he proved unfaithful to his master, and sought the alliance of So, king of Egypt. For this the Assyrian king besieged him in Samaria, and after a siege of three years took him with the city, and put an end to the kingdom of Israel in the fifth year of Hezekiah, king of Judah. Hosea seems to have closed his writings when Hoshea was seeking the help of Egypt, while he had, at the same time, a covenant with Assyria, consequently somewhere early in Hezekiah's reign.—Burrows.—Condition of Israel.—This is the darkest period in the history of Israel. The obligations of the law were relaxed and the claims of religion disregarded. Baal was a rival to Jehovah, and in the dark recesses of groves were practiced the cruel rites of idolatry. The land was distracted by domestic broils and foreign invasion. Might was marshalled against right. Princes and priests were accused of bribery and impiety. Murder and bloodshed were steps to the throne; stream met stream and deluged the land like a flood. Remonstrance was useless; the knowledge of God was wilfully rejected; the people hated rebuke; the more they were called the more they refused; they forbade their prophets to prophesy; and their false prophets hated God greatly. All attempts to heal this disease only showed its incurableness.—Pusey.

2, 3. (2) beginning . . . Hosea, better, "the beginning of the Lord's talking with Hosea." wife . . . whoredoms, i. e. one who will be faithless to thee, and so represent the Israelitish nation as unfaithful to God.^d "His wife is brought before us throughout as a type of Israel; she must at first have been innocent in act to symbolize what Jehovah elsewhere calls 'the kindness of thy (Israel's) youth, the love of thine espousals' (Jer. ii. 2). Upon this view it follows that the language employed is dictated by Hosea's subsequent experience. He could not, of course, know that Gomer had an inclination to infidelity, until it had been exhibited in act." children of whoredoms, i. e. either children inheriting

^a Comp. Joel 1. 1; Mic. 1. 1; Zep. 1. 1.

^b "He prophesied before the captivity of the ten tribes, to whom he chiefly directs his prophecy, and threatens them with a sudden destruction for their great and crying sins, which, in all probability, lived to see brought upon them."—Lowth.

^c "The phrase 'spoke with Hosea' in the Heb. is somewhat peculiar; it seems to denote the internal converse which the Divine Spirit held with one who was intended to impart the communications he received to others."—Spk. Com.

"There is no teacher of divine truth to be compared for one moment for excellence so deep and great as trouble. You can learn but little in the schools. Information, except for temporary purposes, is worthless. A well-informed man may be a nuisance; his information may tend to the increase of his vanity; but when information is followed by a sanctified moral excellence it becomes valuable and helpful for educational and religious purposes."—Peop. Bib.

^d Poss. not externally acted, but internally, and in vision, as a pictorial illus. of Israel's unfaithfulness."—Hengstenberg.

their mother's evil tendencies, or the offspring of an adulterous union. (Comp. ii. 4.)—Camb. B.

Gomer's Unfaithfulness.—

"Now I sit
All lonely, homeless, weary of my life,
Thick darkness round me, and the stars all dumb,
That erst had sung their wondrous tale of joy.
And thou hadst done it all, O faithless one!
O Gomer! whom I loved as never wife
Was loved in Israel, all the wrong is thine!
Thy hand hath spoiled all my tender vines,
Thy foot hath trampled all my pleasant fruits,
Thy sin hath laid my honor in the dust."—Dean Plumptre.

4, 5. (4) Jezebel,^a after the place where Ahab and Jezebel had committed their crimes. The word means, "God will scatter." avenge, visit in judgment.^b house, or dynasty, see 2 Ki. xv. 12. cease the kingdom, it lasted only some forty or fifty years after the overthrow of Jehu's house. (5) that day, or season.^c bow, the chief weapon of the warrior in those days, and the symbol of power.^d valley of Jezreel, "it seemed fitting that this 'battlefield of Palestine' (as the valley of Jezreel had already become) should be the scene of so momentous an event, fitting also that where Jehu had sinned, Jehu's house should be punished. There would have been a 'poetical justice' in such an arrangement, had such been the will of Providence. But there can be no doubt that Hosea had an accurate knowledge of the Assyrians as the destined instruments of Israel's overthrow."—Camb. Bib.

Retribution (vs. 5).—I. God's retribution takes away the power of its victim. II. God's retribution despises the prestige of its victim. III. God's retribution defies the opposition of its victim.—Thomas.

Responsibility of the Care of Children.—It is a very solemn and serious matter for you to be entrusted with the care of God's little children. One would think, to see the mating that goes on in society—and it is a beautiful thing in its way—that butterflies were let loose, so light and gay and happy are the hearts that sail together and play around each other. One would think, to hear the cheerful congratulations that accompany the putting out of a young life in the family state, that there was no responsibility connected with the event. And when there begin to be "angels unawares" coming into the household, one after another, how joyous it is! And the silver cups and little congratulatory notes are plenty. But how few there are who feel that, from the time the door of life opens, and a child is born, God has drawn His hand out from near to His own heart and lent something of Himself to the parent, and said, "Keep it till I come; take this, My own child, and educate it for Me, and bring it to heaven, and let its improving and profiting appear when ye and it stand together in the last day."—Beecher.

6, 7. (6) "And she conceived again, and bare a daughter; and He said to him, Call her name Un-Loved, or That-never-knew-a-Father's-Pity; for I will not again have pity—such pity as a Father hath—on the house of Israel, that I should fully forgive them."—G. A. Smith. Lo-ruhamah,^e meaning, "Not pitied." utterly . . . away, R. V., "that I should in any wise pardon them." (7) mercy, in prolonging her day of grace, and restoring her as a nation. by the Lord, by special Divine intervention, not by mere human instrumentalities. not . . . by bow, "Judah, then, was in danger of trusting in warlike equipments, as Isaiah afterwards describes it as doing (Isa. ii. 7). And yet, if Israel, with all his natural strength, could not resist the Assyrian attack, it was clear that the weaker kingdom could only do so by supernatural aid. Comp. Isa. xxxi. 8, xxxvii. 33. 'Battle' should be equipment of war."—Camb. Bib.

Help in God Alone (vs. 7).—Here we learn—1. That all human and material succors are alone and by themselves inadequate; 2. That Divine succors are alone and by themselves adequate; 3. That in all cases such Divine succors are therefore to be solely trusted.—Clark.

8, 9. (8) weaned, in the E. children are usually nursed by the mother for nearly three years.^a (9) Lo-ammi, i. e. not my people. Observe the

^a "No child in the E. receives more than one name at its birth, and this name is generally given in accordance with some particular circumstance existing at the time."—Gadsby.
^b 2 Ki. x. 11.

^c "The express day in the Prophets signifies a season marked out by Providence for some extraordinary act of God's justice or mercy."—Lowth.

^d Ge. xlix. 24; Job xlix. 20. Comp. 1 Sa. ii. 4; Ps. xviii. 34; Je. xlix. 35.

"If your crossness makes some one else bear a cross, you will not be the one to wear the crown."

^e "The birth and naming of this child mark a further phase of the northern kingdom: it is now presented in the character of a daughter who by her own shameless profligacy has utterly lost her father's affection."

—Spk. Com.

^a "I am a missionary in my nursery," once observed a Christian mother. "Six pair of little eyes are daily watching mamma's looks, and listening to her words, and I wish my children never to see in me that which they may not imitate." "The mother lives again," says Smiles, "in her children. They climax in the names. 'Jezreel' announces the judgment; Lo-ruhamah, the withdrawal of Jehovah's affection; Lo-ammi, the treatment of Israel as a foreign people."

10, 11. "The correct arrangement combines vss. 10 and 11 of ch. i. with vs. 1 of ch. ii., and concludes the first chapter with these three verses, which are so closely joined together in sense."—Pul. Com. (10) Yet . . . sea, the threatenings apply to their national life. Their actual numbers would be preserved. Some think the assurance refers to the ingathering from all nations to the Church of Christ.^a in the place, Israel would return with Judah from captivity, but would not exist as a separate people. The return was the Divine recognition of penitence and conversion. (11) gathered together, thus the schism of north and south shall be healed. one head, or prince.^b out of the land, i. e. the captive land.

The Destiny of the Race (vss. 10, 11).—I. The race is destined to an indefinite increase in the number of good men. II. The race is destined to a transcendent privilege. 1. To a general conversion to God; 2. To a general adoption into the family of God. III. The race is destined to a common leadership—1. Which shall unite the most hostile; 2. Be by common appointment; 3. And be glorious.—Thomas.

The Future.—

For I dipt into the future, far as human eye could see, Saw the vision of the world, and all the wonders that would be:
Saw the heavens fill with commerce, argosies of mighty sails,
Pilots of the purple twilight drooping down with costly bales,
Heard the heavens fill with shouting, and there rained a ghastly dew
From the nation's airy navies grappling in the center blue:
Far along the world-wide whisper of the south wind rushing warm,
Were the standards of the peoples plunging through the thunder-storm,
Till the war-drum throbbed no longer, and the battle-flags were furled,
In the Parliament of man, the federation of the world.
There the common sense of most shall hold a fretful realm in awe,
And the kindly earth shall slumber, lapt in universal law.

—Tennyson.

CHAPTER THE SECOND.

"In this second chapter the same cycle of events recurs as in the first, with this difference, that what is expressed by symbol in the one is simply narrated in the other."—Pul. Com. 1—5. (1) Ammi . . . Ruhamah, the names of the children without the Heb. negative lo. The not would be removed from their names in the day of restoration: ch. i. 11. (2) mother, i. e. the nation collectively.^a not my wife, Is. i. 1. breasts, Eze. xxiii. 3. (3) Lest I strip her naked, "so far the punishment of the adulteress agrees with that customary among the Germans. But the punishment of the Hebrew adulteress is not intended to stop here; death was the penalty she had to fear—death by strangling, according to the Rabbinical explanation of Lev. xx. 10, Deut. xxii. 22, death by stoning, according to Ezekiel in a passage which alludes to the present (Ezek. xvi. 39, 40, comp. John viii. 5). But the prophet speaks here of neither form of punishment, but of death by thirst in the desert. The meaning of the allegory is, that the people of N. Israel shall be put to open shame, and deprived of the rich temporal blessings vouchsafed to them."—Camb. Bib. born, Eze. xvi. 4. wilderness, comp. Is. lviii. 11; Je. xxxi. 12.^b thirst, as one in a parched desert: Je. ii. 6. (4) children, who were devoted to the service of idols. (5) after my lovers,^c away from God, her true and only husband. bread, etc., i. e. my food, clothing, and luxuries.

Lot of Woman.—Woman's is comparatively a fixed, a secluded, and a meditative life. She is more the companion of her own thoughts and feelings; and if they are turned to ministers of sorrows, where shall she look for consolation? Her lot is to be wooed and won; and if unhappy in her love, her heart is like some fortress that has been captured, and sacked, and abandoned, and left desolate. How many bright eyes grow dim—how many soft cheeks grow pale—how many lovely forms fade unconsciously mold themselves after her manner, her speech, her conduct, and her method of life. Her habits become theirs, and her character is visibly repeated in them."

—Hom. Com.

^a Ro. ix. 25, 29;
¹ Pe. ii. 10.

^b Most perfectly fulfilled in Messiah, the Christ. "A Jewish rabbi regards the good as the sand, not only in relation to number, but to usefulness. As the sand keeps the sea from breaking in and drowning the world, so the saints keep the world from being drowned by the waves of eternal retribution."

—Pulp. Com.

"O, if this were seen, the happiest youth—viewing his progress through what perils past, what crosses to ensue, — would shut the book and sit him down and die."

—Shakespeare.

"All that time is lost which might be better employed."

—Rousseau.

^a "The Prophet urgently calls upon all who in the northern kingdom still remained firm in their allegiance to Jehovah to come promptly forward, and make an earnest and public protest against the idolatry and wickedness which so widely prevailed."

—Spk. Com.

^b Je. vi. 8; Zep. ii. 13.

^c "The idols with whom the Israelites committed spiritual fornication; and the idolatrous nations, whose alliance the Israelites courted, and in order to it practised their idolatries."—Lowth.

Je. xxii. 20, 22; Eze. xvi. 33, 36, 37, xxiii. 5, 9.

"During seventeen years I kept an accurate record concerning those who united with the church under my ministry leaving out eleven whose record is unknown, of the remaining 374 one or both parents of 327 were religious, and forty-seven had neither parents pious; seven to one."—Peloubet.

a "I will obstruct the roving vagrancy after thy idols; I will stop it up by afflictions and banishment into a far-off land; and thus I will show the vanity of thy idols, who cannot save thee in thy distress."—Wordsworth.

Job xix. 8; Le. iii. 7, 9.

b "Her afflictions will bring her to a sense of her duty, and the happiness she enjoyed as long as she cleaved steadfastly unto God."—Lowth.

c These had been arranged by Jeroboam I.—1 Ki. xii. 32.

"When men will not know God as the giver of all their temporal blessings, they shall be compelled to know him as the withholder of them."—Fausset.

a Baal, in the plural Baalim, denotes Baal as worshiped under different characters.

"The tinsel glare upon a sinner is too apt to offend the weak eyes of a saint. Alas! why should he envy him a little light who is away into the tomb, and none can tell the cause that blighted their loveliness? As the dove will clasp its wings to its side, and cover and conceal the arrow that is preying on its vitals, so it is the nature of woman to hide from the world the pangs of wounded affection. The love of a delicate female is always shy and silent. Even when fortunate, she scarcely breathes it to herself; but when otherwise, she buries it in the recesses of her bosom, and there lets it cower and brood among the ruins of her peace. With her, the desire of her heart has failed—the great charm of her existence is at an end. She neglects all the cheerful exercises which gladden the spirits, quicken the pulse, and send the tide of life in healthful currents through the veins. Her rest is broken, the sweet refreshment of sleep is poisoned by melancholy dreams; "dry sorrow drinks her blood," until her enfeebled frame sinks under the slightest external injury. Look for her, after a little while, and you will find friendship weeping over her untimely grave, and wondering that one, who but lately glowed with all the radiance of health and beauty, should so speedily be brought down to "darkness and the worm." You will be told of some casual indisposition that laid her low; but no one knows the mental malady that sapped her strength and made her so easy a prey to the spoiler.—Washington Irving.

6-8. (6) hedge, etc., reference is to "the hindrances which the captivity interposed bet. Israel and her idols."^a find her paths, by which she had been wont to go to her lovers, or idols. (7) follow, eagerly. I will go, or let me now go. "Her language at present is hardly that of penitence; she is only casting about to be rid of her misery."^b (8) I, Jehovah, the true and the only source of all good. prepared, R. V., "used;" bestowed, as offerings, on Baal; the grossest insult to Jehovah. They gave Jehovah's gifts to Baal.

Divine Restraints (vs. 6).—God puts restraints on the sinner here. I. These restraints are manifold. 1. Affliction; 2. Public sentiment; 3. Conscience. II. These restraints are necessary. 1. For the sinner himself; 2. For the world; 3. For the Church.—Thomas.

A Return to God.—A popular and successful young minister in America became entangled in the meshes of infidelity, left the pulpit, joined an infidel club, and derided the name he had preached to others as the Saviour of the world. But he sickened, and came to his death-bed. His friends gathered round him, and tried to comfort him with their cold and icy theories, but in vain. The old thought came back to him—the old experience came before him. He said, "Wife, bring me my Greek Testament." Upon his bed he turned to the fifteenth chapter of the First Epistle to the Corinthians. When he had finished the chapter, great tears of joy rolled down his cheeks. He closed the book, and said, "Wife, back again at last upon the old rock to die."—Spurgeon.

9-II. (9) return, R. V., "Therefore will I take back my corn," etc. recover, or take back. (10) lewdness, R. V. marg., "shame." The figure of a faithless female being continued, the calamities of Israel are pictured in the extreme deplorableness of her condition. sight. lovers, the idols who will be wholly helpless to deliver her. (11) mirth, etc., the characteristic of her festal times.^c

Royal Continency.—Antiochus, the third king of Macedon, perceiving a growing passion for the priestess of Diana, a young lady of incomparable beauty, left his palace and retired for some time into Ephesus; lest the sight of such an alluring object might tempt him to transgress against the piety due to her order.—L. M. Stretch.

12, 13. (12) destroy, marg. make desolate. my rewards, vs. 5. forest, "a frequent feature in descriptions of desolation (comp. Isa. v. 6, vii. 23, xxxii. 13; Mic. iii. 12). 'A forest,' however, is misleading; the word often means low, tangled brushwood. The idea in the prophet's mind is inaccessibility, not stateliness (like that of forest-trees)." beasts, i. e. wild beasts. (13) visit upon, the usual term for bringing judgments upon: I will punish her. days of Baalim, time of her wilful service to the various forms of Baal.^a burned incense, intended to stand for, and include, all offerings and worship, the entire heathen cult. earrings, or nose-rings, Ge. xxiv. 47.

Forgetfulness of God.—Such is the character of all engrossing passion, such is the source of sin to which the soul gives way, in avarice, ambition, worldliness, sensual sin, godless science. The soul at last does not rebel against God; it forgets him. It is taken up with other things, with itself, with the subjects of its thoughts, the objects of its affections, and it has no time for God, because it has no love for him.—Pusey.

14—17. (14) Therefore, because without Jehovah's help, Israel will never come to herself and reform. allure, Keil thinks that Israel is to be led into the wilderness, not for punishment, but for deliverance from bondage.^a comfortably, lit. to her heart; i. e. tenderly, persuasively.^b (15) vineyards, etc., i. e. make the land that had become a wilderness again fruitful for her. valley of Achor, a rich pasture ground near Jericho; classed with Sharon.^c sing, in the joy of deliverance and restoration.^d (16) Ishi, my husband; the term of endearment, and of pleasant relations. Baali, my lord; the term of fear and slavery. (17) Baalim, see vs. 13. remembered, R. V., "mentioned."

The Valley of Trouble a Door of Hope (vs. 15).—I. The soul was at first betrothed and espoused of God; each several soul ought to be so. II. Here you have the case of a soul that has strayed from God and its rest. III. It has deserted God and gone after its lovers—and what are the results? 1. There is the discipline of disappointment; 2. There is the discipline of deprivation; 3. There is the discipline of desolation.

The Allurement of Love.—Some years ago an affecting incident was reported in reference to the ex-Empress Charlotte, an Austrian princess, whose husband was for a short time Emperor of Mexico. In the year 1867 he was shot by the revolutionists, and his unhappy widow became the victim of melancholy madness, which her physicians gave up all hope of curing. As in similar cases, she returned to the tastes and habits of childhood, one of which was a passion for flowers, and she spent most of her time over them. Their attractiveness for her was touchingly manifested on the occasion in question, when, having eluded the watch of her attendants, she had fled from the castle. When overtaken it was found impossible to induce her to return, except by the use of means which would certainly have proved hurtful. One of her physicians happily bethought himself of her intense affection for flowers; and by showing them from time to time before her, she was gradually lured on her way back to her home. May not this story be taken as an illustration of the way in which God allures wandering souls back to himself by the invitations and promises of the gospel?—Spurgeon.

18—20. (18) covenant, etc., Job v. 23. "The language reminds us of Zech. xi. 10, where Jehovah 'breaks his covenant which he has made with all the peoples,' restraining them from injuring the Israelites, and still more of Ezek. xxxiv. 25 (evidently based on this passage). The 'covenant' (Heb. b'rith) is in fact an ordinance imposed by Jehovah; it is not correct to say that it is a 'treaty' between Israel and the wild beasts. Probably 'ordinance' is the original meaning, which was afterwards widened into 'covenant.' Comp. vi. 7; Deut. xxxiii. 9; 2 Kings xi. 4; Jer. xi. 6; Job xxxi. 1; Ps. cv. 10."—Camb. Bible. break the bow, indicating security from surrounding enemies. lie down safely, Eze. xxxiv. 25. (19) betroth, the formality that was preliminary to marriage, and regarded as quite as binding. The new covenant is likened to a marriage covenant bec. there would be so much love and grace in it.^a righteousness, etc., terms assuring the sincerity of the bond, and the deep feeling expressed in it: (20) faithfulness, or fidelity.

God's Loving Forgiveness.—A young girl who had run away from home was living a life of sin, and her mother wanted a friend to find her daughter. This friend took a number of photographs of the mother and wrote beneath the sweet face these words: "Come back." Then he took those pictures down into the haunts of sin, and the mission stations, and left them there. Not long after, this daughter was going into a place of sin, and there she saw the face of her mother. The tears ran down her face, so that at first she could not see the words beneath; but she brushed away the tears and looked, and there they were: "Come back." She went out to her old home, and when she put her hand on the latch, the door was opened, and when she stepped in, her mother, with her arms about her, said, "Why, dear child, the door has never been fastened since you went away." The door of God's great heart of love has never to be shrouded in everlasting darkness?

—Pulp Com.

a "As used here the verb strikingly illus. the difficulty which the Almighty has in persuading the guilty conscience to believe in His love."

—Spk. Com.

b Is. xl. 1, 2.

c Is. lxx. 10.

"The valley of Achor runs up fr. Gilgal towards Bethel. There Achan was stoned, and the Divine indignation removed. The word Achor means trouble, affliction, and it is just possible that from it we get our word ache. The Lord promises to lead Israel to peace and rest through the valley of trouble."

—Bib. Things.

d Ex. xv. 1, 20.

a "A marriage covenant wherein I will display My attributes of righteousness, and equity, of loving-kindness, mercy, and faithfulness."

—Lowth.

"So binding is the betrothal engagement that any improprieties committed by the girl are visited with the severities due to unfaithfulness after marriage."

—Bib. Things.

"It is better to be nobly remembered than nobly born."

—Ruskin.

"Hope is a heavenly bird of passage, with faith and love as its wings."—Munhall.

^b "God would hearken to the skies, as it were supplicating Him to fill them with rain to pour on the earth; and the skies again would hearken to the earth begging for a supply of the rain it requires; and again, the earth would hearken to the corn, wine, and oil, begging it to bring them forth; and these again would hear Jezreel, i. e. would fulfil Israel's prayers for a supply of them."

—Fausset.

^c "They seem to symbolize the voluptuous and self-indulgent character of idolatrous rites in general."

—Spk. Com.

"Nonsense! there needs no satire on men's rage for gold, their nature is the best one, and excuse."

—Bailey.

^a "Tutelary household gods, in the shape of human busts cut off at the waist."

—Maurer.

"For gold the hireling judge distorts the laws; wealth heap'd on wealth, nor truth nor safety buys, the dangers gather as the treasures rise."

—Johnson.

been closed against his sinning and erring children; it is wide open.—J. Wilbur Chapman.

21—23. (21) will hear, R. V., "will answer," and so throughout. This and the following vs. indicate the union of the whole people and land in supplication.^b (22) Jezreel, here used not in its meaning, "God will scatter," but in its meaning, "God will plant." (23) sow, the idea in the word Jezreel, sow or plant. have mercy, etc., "and I will have a father's pity upon Un-Pitied; and to Not-My-People I will say, My people thou art! and he shall say, My God!" The circle is thus completed on the terms from which we started. The three names which Hosea gave to the children, evil omens of Israel's fate, are reversed, and the people restored to the favor and love of their God.—G. A. Smith. will say, etc., Rom. ix. 26; 1 Pe. ii. 10.

God and His Universe (vss. 21—28).—I. That the operations of the universe are under the intelligent direction of the great God. This will—I. Account for the unbroken order of nature; 2. Should impress us with the sanctity of nature. II. That the operations of the universe are generally conducted upon the mediatorial principle. III. That they are mercifully subordinated to the interests of the good.—Thomas.

CHAPTER THE THIRD.

1—3. (1) Go yet, or again. woman, prob. the same Gomer, who had been removed from the Prophet. friend, the Heb. term means husband. flagons of wine, R. V., "cakes of raisins," comp. Isa. xvi. 7; 2 Sam. vi. 19; a superior kind of cake used in royal and sacrificial feasts;^c a special offering made to idols. (2) bought her, why Hosea had to buy his wife back, does not appear; had he lost his rights over by her flight and adultery? (3) abide, etc., "rather, 'shalt sit still' (as Isa. xxx. 7; Jer. viii. 14 in A. V.). Gomer is to lead a quiet secluded life; her licentious course is cut short, and her conjugal intercourse may not yet be resumed. This is to last for 'many days,' i. e. as long as is necessary to assure Hosea of Gomer's moral amendment."—Camb. Bib.

The Wife's Return.

"Weeping blinding tears,
I took her to myself, and paid the price (Strange contrast to the dowry of her youth
When first I wooed her); and she came again
To dwell beneath my roof. Yet not for me
The tender hopes of those departed years,
And not for her the freedom and the love
I then bestowed so freely. Sterner rule Is needed now. In silence and alone,
In shame and sorrow, wailing, fast, and prayer,
She must blot out the stains that made her life
One long pollution."—Plumptre.

4, 5. (4) children of Israel, the ten tribes. without . . teraphim,^a even as Hosea's wife was separated for a while from her wifely privileges. "The teraphim were the household gods and the domestic oracles, like the Roman penates. The first mention of them is in Gen. xxxi. 19, and the name occurs fifteen times in the Old Testament. They appear to have been of Syrian or Chaldaean origin."—Pul. Com. (5) David, comp. Je. xxx. 9; Eze. xxxiv. 23. latter days, Is. ii. 2. The times of Messiah.—S. Kimchi.

God's Grace.—A sinner, telling of his conversion, may at one time say, "If it had not been for that sermon, I should have been a sinner still." Another time, "If it had not been for that person." Another time, "If I had not turned." But when he looks solemnly into the whole case, he says, "Unless He who is exalted a Prince and a Saviour had called me, and the Holy Spirit had brought home the Word, I should have been a lost sinner still."—Bonar.

CHAPTER THE FOURTH.

1-5. This chapter "states God's general charge against the people." —G. A. Smith. (1) "Hear the word of Jehovah, sons of Israel! Jehovah hath a quarrel with the inhabitants of the land, for there is no troth nor leal love nor knowledge of God in the land. (2) Perjury and murder and theft and adultery! They break out and blood strikes upon blood." —G. A. Smith. controversy, Mic. vi. 2. A judicial ground of complaint, an accusation to make.^b no truth, etc., Pr. iii. 3;^c Mic. vi. 8. (2) swearing, i. e. false swearing. break out, or through. Scorning all reasonable bonds and limitations. blood, etc., one violent deed follows close on the heels of another. (3) languish, Is. xix. 8, xxiv. 4; Joel i. 10, 12. sea, used in the Bible of all bodies of water. (4) strive, against the prevailing evil. strive . . priest, the guilt is not that of the whole people, but of their religious guides. "Let none find fault and none upbraid, for My people are but as their priestlings. O Priest, thou hast stumbled to-day: and stumble to-night shall the prophet with thee." One order of the nation's ministers goes staggering after the other! "And I will destroy 'hy Mother," presumably the nation herself.—G. A. Smith.

The Fruit of Sin.—"The fruit of sin in time," says Chalmers, "when arrived at full and finished maturity, is just the fruit of sin through eternity. It is merely the sinner reaping what he has sown. It makes no violent or desultory step, from sin in time to hell in eternity. The one emerges from the other, as does the fruit from the flower."—Hom. Com.

6-8. (6) lack of knowledge, of the true principles of religion,^a due to the ignorance of the priests. no priest, though God regarded them before as a nation of priests.^b forget, or purposely ignore. (7) increased, or Divinely blessed.^c sinned, etc., employing their influence in accelerating the religious degeneracy of the nation." (8) eat, etc., fig. for seeking their own advantage from the idolatries of the people. set . . iniquity, they encourage the people in their idolatry.

Knowledge.—Some years ago a vessel sailing on the northern coast of South America was seen to make signals of distress. When hailed by another vessel, they reported themselves as "dying for water!" "Dip it up, then," was the response; "you are in the mouth of the Amazon river." There was fresh water all around them, they had nothing to do but to dip it up, and yet they were dying of thirst. How often are men ignorant of their mercies! How sad that they should perish for lack of knowledge! Jesus is near the seeker even when he is tossed upon the oceans of doubt. The sinner has but to stoop down and drink and live; and yet he is ready to perish, as if salvation were hard to find.—Spurgeon.

9-11. (9) like . . priest, Is. xxiv. 2. punish them, i. e. both of them, those that go astray and those that lead astray. (10) eat, vs. 8. not increase, licentiousness places limits on the natural increase of a population. (11) new wine, or drunkenness.^a Such vicious self-indulgences always deprive men of their judgment, and darken their understanding.^b

The Reciprocal Influence of Priesthood and People (vs. 9).—"Like priest, like people." I. There is sometimes a disgraceful reciprocal influence. 1. When the true priest becomes like the people; 2. When the people become like a bad priest. II. There is sometimes an honorable reciprocal influence. 1. When people become like a true priest; 2. When the true priest has succeeded in making the people like him.—Thomas.

12-14. (12) stocks, Je. ii. 27; Ha. ii. 19. By the "stocks" is meant an idol carved out of wood; while the staff may likewise have an image carved at the top for idolatrous purposes, or it may denote a mode of divination by a staff which by the way it fell determined their course.—Pul. Com.^c (13) sacrifice, etc., Is. i. 29, etc.^a (14) I will not, this is an emphatic statement that it is to be expected that the daughters of such people would sin. themselves, i. e. the fathers of Israel, or perhaps even the priests.

Divination by Rods.—During our stay in Constantinople we were fortunate in meeting with one specimen of great antiquity and of con-

b "The expression is taken from the actions or pleas wh. one man hath against another for injuries or damages received." —Lowth.

c "Integrity and mercy or compassionate sympathy make up the sum of man's duty to man." —Spk. Com.

"Christ never gave any one the command to march until he had first shouldered arms—the cross."

a See 2 Chr. xl. 14.

b Ex. xix. 6.

c "The greater were the favors I heaped upon them, the more presumptuously they sinned against Me." —Lowth.

d Is. xxviii. 1, 7, 8.

e "A moral truth applicable to all times. The special ref. here is to the licentious orgies connected with the Syrian worship, wh. lured Israel away from the pure worship of God." —Fausset. Am. iv. 1.

f "The false prophets of old often pretended to divine and even perform miracles with their staves, . . . just as our sleight of hand men with their wands pretend to do so many wonderful things, though it is the quickness of their hands and not their wands at all." —Gadsby.

g Is. lvii. 5, 7; Eze. vi. 13, xx. 28.

"Think what it would be if all our men had the earnestness of Wesley and the faith of Gordon, if all our women had the saintliness of Hilda and the self-devotion of Elizabeth Fry." —A re n-deacon Sinclair.

siderable Biblical interest. This was a beautiful alabaster bas-relief, in excellent preservation, representing the ancient practice of shabdomancy, or divination by rods. There is one allusion to this form of superstition in Hosea iv. 12, from which it appears that the revolted Israelites had adopted it, in common with so many other heathen practices: "My people ask counsel at their stocks, and their staff declareth unto them." One mode of divining by this means was to set up a number of rods in the earth, and when they fell, during the muttering of certain verses and incantations, to derive the wished-for passages from the direction of the fall. But another method was for a person to take a rod and measure its length by spans, saying each time alternately, "I will go: I will not go;" or, "I will do: I will forbear;" and then he decided, according to the alternative which was associated with the last span. It is this second method that is represented in the bas-relief we are describing. A woman is the diviner, and two persons are consulting her, and waiting her decision with an interest evidently not unmixed with fear. This alabaster was drawn up a few years since by some fishermen from the Bosphorus, near its entrance to the Black Sea, opposite the sacred promontory of Jupiter Oarios, on which was a temple to which mariners used to resort and pray for favorable winds. It is supposed to date five hundred years before Christ.—A. Thomas.

a "Despairing of Israel, the Prophet has still some hope of Judah, whom, therefore, he will fain save from becoming involved in Israel's sin."

—Spk. Com.

b Comp. Ho. ix. 15, xii. 11; Am. iv. 5, v. 5.

c "Leave him to his fate."

"Fellowship does not mean every fellow in his own little sectarian rowboat. It means fellows, comrades, on the old ship of Zion." —J. F. Cowan.

15—19. (15) G. A. Smith says "this obvious parenthesis may be either by Hosea or a later writer; the latter is more probable." Judah offend, this is a gracious warning for the kingdom of Judah, wh. was in danger of being led away into the idolatries of the sister-kingdom.* Gilgal, noted for the worship of idol-gods.^b Beth-aven, same as Bethel, where Jeroboam's calf-worship was established. The Lord liveth, comp. Am. v. 5. There seems to be a ref. to going to Beersheba, the well of the oath. (16) heifer, "Yea, like a wild heifer Israel has gone wild. How now can Jehovah feed them like a lamb in a broad meadow?"—G. A. Smith. (17) joined to idols, wholly devoted to idols. let him alone, cease attempting to restrain or to change him.^c (18) Their drink . . continually, "When their carousal is over they indulge in lewdness." When tired of one sin they plunge into another.—Camb. B. her rulers, etc., R. V. "her rulers dearly love shame." (19) wind, etc., "the Assyrian tempest," the storm-wind of Divine judgment.

Retributive Justice.—

Nature has her laws,
That will not brook infringement; in all time,
All circumstances, all states, in every clime,
She holds aloft the same avenging sword;
And, sitting on her boundless throne sublime,
The vials of her wrath, with justice stored,
Shall, in her own good hour, on all that's ill be poured.
—Percival.

CHAPTER THE FIFTH.

d "Ye have laid snares for others, just as hunters spread their nets upon mountains and hills to catch their prey." —Lowth.

e "Trans. 'Therefore humbled shall be the pride of Israel in his own sight.'" —Spk. Com.

1, 2. (1) Hear, etc., see Joel i. 2; Mic. i. 2; Is. i. 2. house of Israel, the northern nation. house . . king, the royal court, including the court officers. judgment, or sentence. snare, or such a snare as may be found on Mizpah, spread to catch birds, etc.^d Mizpah, prob. a hill in Gilead. Tabor, Jer. iv. 6, 12, 14. (2) profound, "are gone deep in corrupting."—Camb. B. a rebuker, "but I am bent upon chastisement for them all."—Pul. Com.

National Depravity (vss. 1—3).—1. Priests and people are involved in it; 2. Unfaithfulness to God is a proof of it; 3. The Judge of the world is cognisant of it.—Thomas.

3—5. (3) know Ephraim, have full understanding of all his wilfulness and sin. not hid, Ps. lxxix. 5. (4) R. V. "Their doings will not suffer them to turn." (5) pride, self-will, and self-conceit, which are the secret force of idolatry. This pride should be openly humbled.^e

Necessary Preliminaries to a Godly Life (vs. 4).—How are men to frame their doings as to turn to God? I. By thinking on certain subjects. II. By thinking of those subjects in a certain way. 1. With concentration; 2. With persistency; 3. With devotion. III. By thinking on certain subjects with a practical intent. Apply:—Thoughtlessness is the curse of humanity; think on the right subjects; think in the right way.—F. W. Robertson.

6, 7. (6) with their flocks, i.e. prepared to offer large and valuable sacrifices. not find, bec. the day of grace will be past, and the day of judgment will be come. withdrawn, 1 Sa. xxviii. 15. (7) treacherously, as a wife false to her husband. month, R. V. "Now shall the new moon devour them with their fields."^a "The time for punishment has arrived. Instead of watching gladly for the new moon to fix the various hallowed festivals (comp. i. 11), they should have a 'fearful looking for of judgment' increasing as each new moon arose. If not this, then perhaps the next would bring with it a slaughtering, plundering horde of invaders."—Camb. Bib. portions, i. e. portions of land they inherited.^b

Judgments of God.—Mercy, in this the day of her reign, sovereignly seizes judgment before its time, and works that mighty lever to move mankind. The terrors of the Lord are not permitted to sleep unnoticed and unknown, till the day when they shall overwhelm and overflow all his enemies; they are summoned forth in the interval, and numbered among the all things that work together for good.—Arnot.

8—12. (8) Gibeah, four miles N. of Jerus. Ramah, two miles further N. The trumpet was to be blown to summon the tribes to repel the Assyrian invader. after thee, etc., probably the ancient war-cry of the clan." (9) day of rebuke, "time when the sinner's doings are laid bare." (10) remove the bound,^c De. xxvii. 17. like water, in full flood. (11) "Ephraim is oppressed, crushed is his right, for he wilfully went after vanity."—G. A. Smith. (12) moth, to garments. rottenness, to wood.

The Moth, or God's Quiet Method of Destroying (vs. 12).—I. He works decay thus sometimes in the bodies of men. II. And in the enterprises of men. III. And in the kingdoms of men.—Thomas.

13—15. (13) sickness, political adversity. went.. Assyrian, seeking alliances.^d Jareb, "King Combative, King Pick-Quarrel,—a nickname for the Assyrian monarch. The verse probably refers to the tribute which Menahem sent to Assyria in 738."—G. A. Smith. not heal, bec. no political aid could touch the national moral evils, which were the real cause of calamity. (14) lion, roaring and devouring. young lion, or strong lion. (15) go, etc., waiting until judgment shall effectually humble.^e early, the fig. for earnestly.

God's End and Design in Affliction (vs. 15).—I. The procuring cause of God's afflicting His people. 1. We see how unwilling God is to afflict His people; 2. Whence the many sufferings of the Church arise. II. God's way of afflicting His people: the withdrawing of His gracious presence is the source of greatest suffering to the Church. III. The end of God in thus afflicting His people, "till they acknowledge," etc. 1. God's intention to bring them to sorrow for sin; 2. The power of these means for accomplishing it; affliction concentrates the thoughts of a man upon himself; drives a man off from worldly comforts, and brings him back to God.—Leighton.

A Personal God.—A leader of thought in Germany, famous as a poet, famous as a man of letters, who had through his long literary career fought against the idea of a personal God, when poor in purse, paralytic in body, and in his last week of life, wrote thus to one of his old class-mates, and under its style of banter there is a pathetic minor tone of earnest feeling: "A religious reaction has set in upon me for some time. God knows whether the morphine or the poultices have anything to do with it. It is so. I believe in a personal God. To this we come when we are sick to death and broken down. Do not make a crime of it. If the German people accept the personal king of Prussia in their need, why should not I accept a personal God? My friend, here is a great truth. When health is used up, money used up, and sound senses used up, Christianity begins."—Old Test. Anec.

Punishment of Vice.—Vice is sometimes punished instantly and sometimes gradually. This seems to be the method of Divine procedure.

"Bearing crosses daily might be a play-spell, but bearing the same old cross day in and day out is heroism."

^a "By a month's devouring — is meant a speedy and sudden destruction."

—Lowth.

^b "The ancient tenures should be brought to an end by the general captivity of the people, and the desolation of the country."—Kell.

^c "In various parts we saw stakes driven into the ground, and in others large stones placed to divide the fields, instead of hedge-rows, of which there were none."—Gadsby.

^d 2 Ki. xv. 19.

^e "I will withdraw My presence from them, and will retire from their earthly temple into My heavenly sanctuary; and by making them feel the need of My help in their distress, I will bring them to repentance."—Targum.

"Certain animals have a mysterious sense by which they discern the coming-on of an earthquake, or the presence of death, before the dull eyes and ears of human kind detect them. So there seems to be in man a spiritual sense which under certain conditions feels the presence of God as it cannot at other times."—Phelps.

a Ps. lxxi. 20, lxxxv. 6, cxxxviii. 7; Is. lvii. 15.

b De. xvi. 20; Ps. xxxiv. 14.

c Comp. Ps. lxxii. 6; Pr. xvi. 15; Is. lv. 10.

"The climate of Palestine differs from our own. There are 'early' rains at sowing-time. Rain continues from autumn until spring. That which swells the corn and prepares for harvest is the 'latter' rain. Deficiency of rain is fatal to the hopes of the husbandman; regular and abundant rains ensure his crops. Accordingly these rains serve as figures of the spiritual influences of God in producing and perfecting spiritual life and fruitfulness."

—Pulp. Com.

b "Bright was the promise of innocent dawn, but the promise was unfulfilled."—F. Jacox.

"The Eden stamped upon our hearts in childhood 'chafes and rubs' in our rough struggles with the world, and soon wears away; too often to leave nothing but a mournful blank remaining."—C. Dickens.

We have slow and rapid consumption in the bodies of men. We have the gradual decay and the sudden overthrow of empires, the seed-time of evil and the harvest of judgment. The changes of circumstances are so various and frequent, so great and sudden, that the same person, the same people, afford an example of the greatest prosperity and the greatest misery. Henry the Fourth of France was despatched by a sacrilegious hand in his carriage, in the midst of popular applause and the triumphs of peace. Like Herod, the grandson of Herod the Great, he found but one step between adoration and oblivion. The ruin which God inflicts upon the impenitent and presumptuous sinners is often beyond precedent most sudden and most fearful. What folly, then, to trust in man, when God can easily destroy him!—Hom. Com.

CHAPTER THE SIXTH.

1-3. (1) Come, etc., the language of the humble and penitent. The Prophet indicates what they will say, by-and-by. he hath torn, acknowledging judgment to be chastisement from God, and not mere calamity. (2) two days, a fig. for a little while. revive, quicken from the death of calamity. (3) R. V. "and let us know, let us follow on to know the Lord; his going forth is sure as the morning; and he shall come unto us as the rain, as the latter rain that watereth the earth." latter . . former, rain falls in Palestine at two special periods—March and November. "The Israelites count upon the return of God's favor with the same confidence with which, at the autumnal and vernal equinoxes, a farmer counts upon the former and latter rain. Their confidence is excessive; they presume on God's forgiveness without complying with His conditions."—Camb. Bib.

Perseverance.—Arago says, in his Autobiography, that his master in mathematics was a word or two of advice which he found in the binding of one of his text-books. Puzzled and discouraged by the difficulties he met with in his early studies, he was almost ready to give over the pursuit. Some words which he found on the waste leaf used to stiffen the cover of his paper-bound text-book caught his eye and interested him. "Impelled," he says, "by an indefinable curiosity, I dampened the cover of the book and carefully unrolled the leaf to see what was on the other side. It proved to be a short letter from D'Alembert to a young person disheartened like myself by the difficulties of mathematical study, and who had written to him for counsel. 'Go on, sir, go on,' was the counsel which D'Alembert gave him. 'The difficulties you meet will resolve themselves as you advance. Proceed, and light will dawn and shine with increasing clearness on your path.' That maxim," says Arago, "was my greatest master in mathematics. Following out those simple words, 'Go on, sir, go on,' made him the first astronomical mathematician of his age. What Christians it would make of us! what heroes of faith! what sages in holy wisdom should we become, just by acting out that maxim, Go on, sir, go on!—Old Test. Anec.

4-7. (4) morning cloud, quickly dispelled by the sunshine. early dew, wh. evaporates with the warmth of the day." (5) hewed, or cut down. thy judgments, "and My judgment goeth forth like the lightning. For leal love have I desired, and not sacrifice; and the knowledge of God more than burnt-offerings."—G. A. Smith. (6) desired mercy, 1 Sa. xv. 22; Mic. vi. 6-8. (7) like men, R. V. "like Adam." there, in the holy Canaan country.

Inconstancy in Religion (vs. 4).—I. Consider the causes of this wretched inconstancy. 1. Men do not consider as they ought the nature of the great change; 2. Are not sufficiently enlightened on the reasons on which they should act; 3. Do not consider the pains they must take and the time they must spend; 4. Are but half resolved; 5. Do not watch against temptation; 6. Neglect the means of grace and duties of religion. II. The certainty that ineffective purposes of amendment will not be accepted instead of true repentance and holiness of life. 1. The Gospel requires these; 2. Transient goodness is not Gospel repentance; 3. No mercy except on Gospel terms. III. What methods we should take if we would not only begin in the ways of religion, but continue to the end. 1. Avoid the errors before mentioned; 2. Meditate on the great truths of religion; 3. Often renew holy resolutions; 4. Bend our chief force against besetting sins; 5. Reflect on the shortness and uncertainty of life. IV. Consider instances of inconstancy in good men. 1. They are apt to change as to diligence and activity in the Christian life; 2. Relax vigilance and circumspection; 3. Decline of sensibility of conscience; 4. Stronger worldly affections; 5. A spirit of devotion not maintained.—H. Grose (1740).

Transitoriness.—When Daguerre was working at his sun-pictures, his great difficulty was to fix them. The light came and imprinted the image; but when the tablet was drawn from the camera, the image had vanished. Our lamentation is like his, our want the same, a fixing solution that shall arrest and detain the fugitive impressions. He discovered the chemical power which turned the evanescent into the durable. There is a Divine agency at hand that can fix the truth upon the heart of man, —God's Holy Spirit.—J. Stoughton.

8—11. (8) Gilead, prob. ref. to Ramoth-Gilead, chief town of the hilly country beyond Jordan, see ch. xii. 11. It seems to have been peculiarly licentious, and so taken as a representative. blood, lit. filled with bloody foot tracks, comp. the striking expression used of Joab in 1 Kings ii. 5. The Gileadites, half-civilized mountaineers, seem to have been distinguished for their ferocity (comp. 2 Kings xv. 25). From the next verse we may perhaps infer that at Gilead too the priests were foremost in lawlessness. (9) by consent, R. V. "in the way toward Shechem," "long notorious for the highway robberies committed by its inhabitants." lewdness, or enormity. (10) horrible thing, "such an apostasy from God as cannot be mentioned without horror." (11) set an harvest, R. V. "there is an harvest appointed for thee when I bring again the captivity of my people." "It is as though God said, 'Let not Judah claim superiority over Israel, nor expect to escape Divine judgment more than Israel.'"

Best and Worst.—The best things when abused become the worst: there is no devil like a fallen angel; no enemy to the gospel like an apostate Christian; no hate like the "theological hate," no war like a religious war; and no corruption like religious corruption. The reasons are not far to seek. The best things are the strongest: they can do most always, most evil when used in an evil way. Bad men know this: Simon the magician was not the only one that has cast a covetous look at Christianity and said, "Give me also this power."—A. J. Morris.

CHAPTER THE SEVENTH.

1—7. The moral degradation of Israel, especially of its ruling class, which, so far from stemming the tide of corruption, applauds and encourages its progress. (1) "When I turn the fortunes of my people, when I heal Israel, then will be manifest Ephraim's guilt and Samaria's wickedness, how they practice falsehood, and the thief cometh in, and bandits roam abroad without."—Ewald. healed Israel, i.e. restored the prosperity of the nation.^a Ephraim, the chief of the ten tribes composing the northern nation. Samaria, the capital and royal city.^a falsehood, comp. ch. iv. 2.^b thief .. robbers, indicating the prevalence of sins of violence. spoil, or strippeth, alluding to highway robbers. Neither the roads nor the towns were safe. (2) remember, observe and keep count, so as in due time to punish. beset them, gathering round them like so many witnesses against them, or "entangled them." (3) king glad, instead of sorry, as he should be. (4) as an oven, a fig. of heated passion.^c ceaseth, etc., when he knows that it is well heated, he ceases from stirring it till the dough is leavened. (5) day, "on the day of our king"—some coronation or king's birthday—"the princes were sick with fever from wine. He stretched forth his hand with loose fellows," presumably made them his associates. "Like an oven have they made their hearts with their intriguing. All night their anger sleepeth: in the morning it blazes like a flame of fire. All of them glow like an oven, and devour their rulers:

"What is this prosperity? What this pleasure? Ah! what are my riches, and what my glory? Alas! 'tis like the dew, which flies off at the sight of the morning sun." —Roberts.

"No action, whether foul or fair, is ever done, but it leaves somewhere a record, written by fingers ghostly, as a blessing or a curse, and mostly in the greater weakness or greater strength of the acts which follow it." —Longfellow.

^a "The gleam of prosperity wh. Jehovah had accorded His people had only been attended by growing corruption, which, under the princes and usurpers that succeeded (Jeroboam II.) burst forth into the most frightful disorders." —Spk. Com.

^b Is. lix. 3, 13.

"The transgressions which we see and confess are but like the farmer's small sample which he brings to market, when he has left his granary full at home." —Spurgeon.

^c "The expression may be metaphorical, implying that they were apostates from God, to whose service they were engaged by the most solemn bond and covenant." —Lowth. Comp. Je. ix. 2; Mat. xlv. 4; Ja. iv. 4.

"An unclean heart is like an oven heated; and the unclean lusts and affections of it are as the fuel that makes it hot."—Mat. Henry.

a "The simplest form of the oven is that of a hole dug in the earth; the sides being coated with clay, and the bottom laid with pebbles. The bread is placed against the sides, and is soon prepared. A rougher way still was to kindle a fire and let it burn fiercely, then to clear away the embers and lay the cakes on the heated spot, covering them up again with the hot ashes which had just been removed." — Bib. Things.

b Compare Arab prov., "Thy grey hairs are the publishers of thy death."

"It is every Christian's duty not only to do his own work, but to help other Christians do their work. Often this last is more important than the first. Think of those that helped Paul!"

c "No doubt it was a policy constantly in the minds of Hebrew statesmen in both kingdoms, how they might secure themselves against either one of these two empires by calling in the assistance of the other."—Spk. Com.

d Le. xxvi. 14—39; De. xxviii. 15—68.

e 2 Ki. xvii. 13. 14.

all their kings have fallen, without one of them calling on Me."—G. A. Smith. (6) lie in wait, as the baker waits when his oven is hot and ready, so these bad men wait to destroy the king when their plans are fully made. burneth, stirred up, it then flames forth into action. (7) kings are fallen, comp. 2 Ki. xv.

Poison in the Cup.—Cyrus, when a youth, being at the court of his grandfather Cambyses, undertook one day to be a cup-bearer at table. It was the duty of this officer to taste the liquor before it was presented to the King. Cyrus, without performing this ceremony, delivered the cup in a very graceful manner to his grandfather. The king observed the omission, which he imputed to forgetfulness. "No," replied Cyrus, "I was afraid to taste, because I apprehended there was poison in the liquor; for not long since, at an entertainment which you gave, I observed that the lords of your court, after drinking of it, became noisy, quarrelsome, and frantic. Even you, sir, seemed to have forgotten that you were a king."—Whitecross.

8—10. (8) not turned, and therefore burned to ashes on one side, and useless." (9) Strangers, etc., "by heavy tribute and desolating invasions," for historical truth of this statement see 2 Ki. xiii. 7, xv. 19, 20, 29. gray hairs, etc., "expressive of a reckless people's unconscious decline, whose lapses were taken account of on high." (10) pride, etc., ch. v. 5.

Spiritual Declension (vs. 9).—I. The condition here deplored. II. The causes in which it originated. III. The prevention and cure.—Forgetfulness of God (vs. 10).—I. The duty. It is to seek God. 1. Because with Him we have principally to do; 2. We are to seek to enjoy Him; 3. To obey Him; 4. To resemble Him. II. The neglect of this duty. Of neglecters there are—1. Infidels; 2. The careless; 3. The profligate; 4. The moralist; 5. Backsliders and apostates. III. The aggravation of all this neglect. 1. God's benefits to draw; 2. The Bible to instruct; 3. The preaching of the Gospel; 4. The power of conscience; 5. The various associations in life; 6. Public judgments. Appeal—(1) On the ground of gratitude; (2) Danger.—W. Jay.

The Cake not Turned.—The Book of Hosea contains strains of poetry of surpassing splendor; yet here is an illustration from the cottager's kitchen. Let us look at this cake. It is burnt to a cinder on one side, and remains damp and doughy on the other. It is partly underdone, partly overdone; and thus, being neither dough nor bread, it is quite spoiled, and fit only to be thrown away. The metaphor reminds us of the English legend of good King Alfred, when a wanderer in the forest of Selwood: the royal fugitive kept mending his bow and arrows, and forgot to turn the cakes which the neat-herd's wife had committed to his care.—Pulp. Com.

The Natural State of Mankind.—

Low, but majestic, though most strangely formed
Of contradictions and antitheses,
With head of gold and feet of miry clay,
One-half of dust, one-half of deity;
Touching the angel here, and there the brute.
Here, thoughts that wander through eternity;
There, passions sounding all the sties of time;
His rooted selfishness and lofty love,
His little life, his princely intellect,
His pure desires, his hateful selfishness,
His deeds of darkness, and his thoughts of light.—Gilfillan.

11, 12. (11) silky dove, an Arab prov. says, "There is nothing more simple than a dove." "The prophet compares Ephraim to a dove which gets caught in a net owing to its simplicity, because it has no sense to perceive that, when it goes to gather grains of corn, a net is spread there to catch it. So Ephraim, when they went and asked help from Assyria or from Egypt, (did not perceive) that they went to their hurt, when they sought help from the foreign nations and not from God, in whose hand all is."—Kimchi. without heart, or understanding. Egypt, etc., by turns Israel sought the aid of these rival nations, and so secured its own ruin." (12) net, the symbol of ruin. as the fowls, as the fowler does the birds. hath heard, in the Pentateuch,^a and from the Prophets.^e

The Silliness of Sin (vs. 11).—I. It is too silly to defend its own. II. It is too silly to feel its loss. III. It is too silly to escape danger. Apply:—Sin is a folly. The fool and sinner are, in God's vocabulary, convertible terms.—Thomas.

13—16. (13) Woe, etc., as Is. iii. 9; Je. xiii. 27. redeemed them, "While I would have redeemed them, they spoke lies about Me. And they have never cried unto Me with their heart, but they keep howling on their beds for corn and new wine." No real repentance theirs, but some fear of drought and miscarriage of the harvests, a sensual and servile sorrow in which they wallow. They seek God with no heart, no true appreciation of what He is, but use the senseless means by which the heathen invoke their gods: "they cut themselves, and so apostatize from Me! And yet it was I who disciplined them, I strengthened their arm, but with regard to Me they kept thinking only evil!"—G. A. Smith. lies, see Ro. i. 25.¹ (14) cried, comp. Jer. iii. 9, 15, vi. 6, 7. howled,² assemble, should be "cut themselves."—Camb. Bib. for corn, i.e. to cry and pray for it in famine time. (15) bound, the fig. is that of a surgeon's binding to strengthen the sinews. (16) deceitful bow, or a slack bow; see Ps. lxxviii. 57. "An ill-contrived bow, which never directs the arrow to the mark." rage, etc., Ps. lxxiii. 9.

Ingratitude.—At the battle of the Alma, in September, 1854, a wounded Russian was piteously calling for water. Captain Eddington, whose heart was kind and charitable, ran up to him, and stooping, gave him the much-desired beverage. The wounded man revived. The captain ran forward to join his regiment, when the wretch who had just been restored by his kindness fired and shot him who had been his friend in time of need. So many seek to injure God by returning him evil for good.—Bib. Treasury. Bowstrings (vs. 16).—The strings of African bows are all made of the entrails of animals, a kind of catgut. Moist weather renders it so soft that they cannot shoot with it; should they try it, the string would either instantly break, or it would stretch to such a length that it could not impel the arrow. In consequence of this being the case, I have heard the remark made in Africa that the safest time to travel among the wild bushmen is in wet weather, for then they cannot shoot you.—Campbell. Apostasy of Bricconet.—When those who stand in a commanding position at a time when society is agitated by a great moral struggle, fail to do and suffer what duty requires, their influence, even after death, is often signally mischievous. A noted and pertinent example is that of Bricconet, Bishop of Meaux in France, in the sixteenth century. Catching the spirit of reform at that time pervading Germany and Switzerland, he zealously opposed some grosser errors and views of the Romish Church. Having been twice ambassador to Rome—a bishop, a noble—an intimate friend of the reigning and preceding monarch, he was looked upon as one of the great pillars of the Reformation. A change of government comes, the Inquisition is set up, and Bricconet becomes the first object of their vengeance. "The poor bishop," says D'Aubigné, "who had been so sanguine in the hope to see the Reformation gradually and silently winning its way in men's minds, trembled in dismay when he found at the eleventh hour that it must be purchased by life itself. No alternatives were presented him but death or recantation, and to the latter the minions of the Pope urged him by the most plausible prettexts. Bricconet heard, considered, his resolution was shaken; he staggered under the cross—he stumbled—he fell! The day of his recantation was a dark day for France. What might not have been the consequence if Bricconet had possessed the courage of Luther? If one of the most eminent of the French bishops had ascended the scaffold, and there, like the poor of this world, sealed by martyrdom the truth of the Gospel, would not France herself have been put upon reflection? Would not the blood of the Bishop of Meaux have served, like the blood of Polycarp and Cyprian, as the seed of the Church? And should we not have seen these provinces emancipating themselves in the sixteenth century from the darkness in which they are still enveloped?—Cheever.

¹"Pretending to be My worshippers when they all the while worshiped idols; also defrauding Me of the glory of their deliverance, and ascribing it and their other blessings to idols."—Calvin.

²"When they were bemoaning their calamities, as sick men bewail themselves upon a bed of sickness."—Lowth.

"As some eagle pierced with a shaft feathered from its own wing, so many a sufferer, even in this present time, sees and cannot deny that it was his own sin that felled the arrow of God's judgment, which has pierced him and brought him down."—Trench.

"Whether I chastised them, or strengthened their arms, they imagined mischief against Me."—Grotius.

"Not power I blame, but power obtained by crime. Amidst the glare of courts will not the apostate feel the pangs of guilt, and wish too late for innocence and peace? curst as the tyrant of the infernal realms with gloomy state, and agonizing pomp."—Johnson.

"The canon law denes apostasy to be a wilful departure from that state of faith which any person has professed himself to hold in the Christian Church."—J. Farrar.

^a Heb. neshet, the griffon vulture.

^b Ps. cxix. 68.

^c "Terob oam, during his sojourn in Egypt, saw Apis worshipped at Memphis, and Mnevis at Heliopolis, in the form of an ox; this, and the temple - cherubim, suggested the idea of the calves set up at Dan and Beth-el."—Fausset.

"When children get high notions and despise home, when they throw off parental authority and restraint, they become wayward and self-willed; make the path of life difficult, which their parents had pioneered and made easy. So one who casts off the fear of God and sets up his own, or the authority of others, insults his Maker and injures himself, makes his future miserable, and may be cast off himself at last."—H o m. Com.

CHAPTER THE EIGHTH.

1-7. (1) thy mouth, to give notice of the approaching judgment. as an eagle,^a swiftly and fiercely. (2) cry, etc., their language right enough, their hearts and their actions far from right. (3) good, i.e. the service of God, which alone is true good.^b (4) made . . idols, abusing their wealth to idolatry. cut off, rushing thus upon their own destruction. (5) Thy calf, R. V. "He hath cast off thy calf, O Samaria," refers to the golden bull, symbol of Jehovah, set up in Samaria and other places."^c innocency, "How long will they be incapable of innocence?" i.e. be unable to clear themselves of guilt.—G. A. Smith. (6) from Israel, i.e. he himself made the idol which he calls his G^d. workman made it, a frequent scornful expression of the Prophets. broken in pieces, lit. "for chips for firing." (7) sown, etc., a proverbial expression to signify that as men's works are, so must their reward be. it . . stalk, i.e. no standing corn; the harvest fails. bud, or flower. strangers, foreign enemies, who shall reap Israel's harvests.

Idolatry (vss. 5-7).—These verses present to us idolatry in five aspects. 1. As abhorrent to Jehovah; 2. As antagonistic to moral purity; 3. As an outrage on reason; 4. As doomed to destruction; 5. As productive of great evil.—Thomas.

Growth of Sin.—An Eastern apologue tells us of Abdallah, to whom an evil spirit came at first as a fly, sipping an atom of syrup. He did not drive away the creature, and to his surprise it increased to the size of a locust. Being further indulged, the creature went on growing, and made such rapid increase that it became an enormous monster, devoured his substance, and in the end murdered him, leaving in the garden, where it slew its victim, a foot-print six cubits long. Thus does sin grow upon men, till it becomes a giant habit, and slays them.—Beecher. Reaping the Whirlwind.—The history of the Rev. Caleb Colton, M. A., the author of "Lacon," may serve as a striking illustration of the truth of our text. He was a clergyman at Tiverton, popular and clever, but very fond of field-sports. One day, however, a friend suddenly expired while uttering most impious language. The awe-struck minister abjured dogs and guns, and vowed to live henceforth for his sacred calling. For months his preaching was earnest, but at the end of that time he resumed the sporting life. He had, moreover, acquired a love for gambling. A presentation to the vicarage of Kew and Petersham brought him to London, and while numbers were reading with delight his "Lacon; or, Many Things in Few Words; addressed to those who think," the wretched author was sitting far into the night among swindlers. His passion for play involving him in pecuniary difficulties, he was forced to abscond, and his living was declared void. After leading a vagabond life, he perished by his own hand at Fontainebleau, in 1832.—Spurgeon.

8-14. (8) swallowed up,^d it was Israel's fate to be so absorbed by other nations as never again to have a separate national existence. vesel . . pleasure, which is of no use, Je. xlviii. 38. (9) wild ass,^e "like a runaway wild ass."—G. A. Smith. Lonely and wilful, forcing its own way, and swayed only by passion. (10) hired, i.e. paid for foreign allies and helpers. gather them, i.e. now will I restrain their roving propensities. sorrow a little, "and then shall they have to cease a little from the anointing of a king and princes."—G. A. Smith. (11) unto him to sin, i.e. to him as a ground of punishment. The many altars were the plain and open proof of his idolatry. (12) written, R. V. "Though I write for him my law in ten thousand precepts they are counted," etc. De. iv. 6, 8. (13) flesh, mere flesh. They do not put their hearts into their sacrifices. to Egypt, not literally. Going into Egypt was a proverbial speech for extreme misery. (14) fire, "referring to both Israel and Judah." Remarkably enough, we find these words repeated seven times in Amos as a refrain to as many denunciations (Am. i. 4-ii. 5). It seems hardly likely that so original a prophet should have quoted these words; perhaps they were a well-known prophetic commonplace."—Camb. Bib.

^d Ps. cxxiv. 3; Pr. i. 12; Je. li. 34.

^e Job. xxxix. 5; Je. li. 24.

^a "Judah, though less idolatrous than Israel betrayed want of faith in Jehovah by trusting more to its fenced cities than to Him."—Fausset.

The Divine Letter Neglected by Man (vs. 12).—I. God has written to man. II. The great things in the law are the things which God has written to man. They are great—1. In the matters to which they refer; 2. In the manner in which they are addressed to us; 3. In the influence which they are fitted to exert over us; 4. In the results with which they are followed both here and hereafter. III. Men often count the great things of His law, which God has written to them, as a strange thing. They think them unauthoritative, unintelligible, unsuitable, or uninfluential.

CHAPTER THE NINTH.

"Hosea now turns to describe the effects of exile upon the social and religious habits of the people. It must break up at once the joy and the sacredness of their lives. Every pleasure will be removed, every taste offended. Indeed, even now, with their conscience of having deserted Jehovah, they cannot pretend to enjoy the feasts of the Baalim in the same hearty way as the heathen with whom they mix. But, whether or no, the time is near when nature-feasts and all other religious ceremonies—all that makes life glad and regular and solemn—shall be impossible."—G. A. Smith. 1—4. (1) Rejoice not, addressed to the people prob. at harvest thanksgiving-time. loved a reward, lit. harlot's hire.^a every cornfloor, alluding to the various local festivals. (2) winepress, or vat into wh. the juice of the grape was pressed. fail in her, i.e. disappoint her expectations. (3) dwell, or permanently abide. to Egypt, comp. ch. viii. 13. unclean things, "ceremonially unclean, as it would be impossible to conform to the requirements of the Law, according to which the eating of certain animals was prohibited." (4) not offer, etc., lit. pour as a libation.^b bread of mourners, wh. was regarded as unclean.^c bread . . soul, R. V. "for their bread shall be for their appetite," i.e. to satisfy their hunger, they will not be able to pay tithes of their harvest, etc.

Bitterness of Sin.—"Life, they say, is sweet; I have found it bitter," said a young artist in the closing scenes of death. Lord Chesterfield echoed the sentiment, when he said, "I have run the silly rounds of business and of pleasure, and have done with them all. I have enjoyed all the pleasures of the world and know their futility, and do not regret their loss. I appraise them at their real value, which is very low; whereas those who have not experienced them always overrate them. They only see the gay outside, and are dazzled with their glare; but I have been behind the scenes. I look back on all that is passed as one of those romantic dreams which opium commonly produces, and I have no wish to repeat the nauseous dose." "Everything that I love, everything that belongs to me, is stricken," cried Napoleon. "Heaven and mankind unite to afflict me." Lord Byron declared that his days were "in the yellow leaf"—"the flowers" and the fruits were gone, and "the worm, the canker, and the grief are mine alone." The poet Burns said in dying hours, "I close my eyes in misery, and open them without hope."

5—7. (5) will ye do, in your captivity, when the times of the solemn and joyous festivals come round, and you find that you cannot keep them in the stranger's land. (6) destruction, "from the devastation." Memphis, Heb. Moph; the capital of lower Egypt.^a pleasant . . silver, R. V. "their pleasant things of silver," silver ornaments. nettles, or thistles, the sign of desolation. (7) days, etc., the times of Divine judgment. a fool, this is one of the signs of judgment, a judicial blindness is on the national leaders. great hatred, R. V. "and because the enmity is great."

The Solemn Days of Life (vs. 5).—I. The day of personal affliction is a solemn day. II. The day of social bereavement. III. The day of death. IV. The day of judgment. Apply:—What will ye do in that day?

8—10. (8) R. V. "Ephraim was a watchman with my God: as for the prophet, a fowler's snare is in all his ways, and enmity in the house of his God." watchman, or true prophet. prophet, or false prophet. (9) Gibeah, Ju. xix. 16—22. (10) like grapes, wh. the traveler in a wilderness is delighted to find and quench his thirst with. firstripe . . fig, esteemed

"There are many books which are good, but, like half-pence, there goes a great quantity to a little amount. There are a few silver books, and a very few golden books; but I have one book worth more than all, called the Bible, and that is a book of bank notes." — J. Newton.

^a Je. xlv. 17.

^b Ex. xxx. 9; Le. xxiii. 13.

^c De. xxvi. 14; Je. xvi. 7.

"Or, their bread is for their own soul, for their own self-indulgence, not for God's glory." — Wordsworth.

"Man first makes his God like his own corrupt self, or to some corruption in himself; and then, worshipping this ideal of his own, he becomes the more corrupt through copying that corruption. He makes his god in his own image and likeness, the essence and concentration of his own bad passions, and then conforms himself to the likeness, not of God, but of what was most evil in himself."

^a "It is curious that this city should be spoken of by Hosea as a burying-place; but travelers tell us that throughout the whole district, monuments and ruins of a great city have been, and still are being, constantly found buried in the sand; whilst the rear forms one unbroken cemetery, pyramids, tombs, and mummy pits; so that this vast receptacle for the dead separated the desert from the great city and the cultivated lands." — Bib. Things.

"In the day of prosperity there is a forgetfulness of affliction; and in the day of a affliction there is no more remembrance of prosperity. (Ecclesi. xi. 25)."—Hom. Com.

b "This terrible threat, or rather, perhaps, prediction, of extermination, addressed to the Ten Tribes in general, but applying most esp. to Ephraim, the most populous of them all, serves to explain the fact that there are so few traces left in the world of their continued existence."—Spk. Com.

c 2 Kl. xv. 29; 1 Chr. v. 26.

a great delicacy in the E. Baal-peor, Nu. xxv. 3. and separated, etc., R. V. "and consecrated themselves unto the shameful thing and became abominable like that which they loved." shame, Besheth, a nickname for Baal.

Grapes in the Wilderness.—The Lord is telling of His gladness in finding these lost sheep, His delight in taking them up when they were wayward, sinful, wandering souls. It gave Him great joy to save them. It was as refreshing to Him as is a cluster of grapes to a traveler in the weary wilderness, whose lips are parched, and whose eyes have long rested on barrenness, and who hails with satisfaction and delight the sight of a vine and its juicy grapes. Dr. Livingstone gives an instance of this feeling: "In latitude 18° we were rewarded with a sight which we had not enjoyed for a year before—large patches of grape-bearing vines. There they stood before my eyes." The traveler thus gives utterance to his delight: "The sight was so entirely unexpected, that I stood for some time gazing at the clusters of grapes with which they were loaded, with no more thought of plucking, than if I had been beholding them in a dream."

11—16. (11) from the birth, R. V. "there shall be no birth, and none with child, and no conception." "Such is the retribution for sins against chastity."—Camb. Bib. (12) bereave them, comp. De. xxxii. 25. man left, better, "that mankind shall not be." An entire riddance shall be made of them and their posterity. depart from them, withdrawing My protection and favor.^b (13) Tyrus, or Tyre, Ez. xxvii. 3. (14) Give them, in severe Divine judgment. (15) Gilgal, the principal focus of idolatrous worship. mine house, i.e. the Holy Land. princes .. revolt-ers, in Heb. a play on words: their Sarim are Sorerim. (16) smitten, with blight. (17) wanderers, having no more a settled and permanent home.^c

Value of Home-training.—The destiny of the rising generation and the fate of the nation is in the "Home School." The great German teacher Fröbel declared that the great motto of the people should be, "Let us live for our children." If Simon had thought of what Judas might have been, would not this have affected his treatment of the boy? What if the mother of Napoleon, and of his brother kings and sister queens, had foreseen what became of those around her humble fireside in Corsica? We do not know what part our children may play in life, what joy or sorrow they may cause to millions yet unborn. Think how much depends upon early training!—Hom. Com.

CHAPTER THE TENTH.

a 1 Kl. xviii. 21; Mat. vi. 24; Ja. iv. 8.

b "Instead of justice and fair dealing injustice increases everywhere, as bitter and poisonous weeds grow up in a field, where there is no care taken to destroy them."—Lowth.

1—4. (1) R. V. "Israel is a luxuriant vine, which putteth forth his fruit," alluding to the years of prosperity—perhaps the reign of Jeroboam II. goodness .. images, ch. ii. 8, viii. 4. But the prosperity of Israel only served to increase its idolatry. (2) divided, between Jehovah and idols.^a now, or speedily. (3) no king, i.e. none worthy of the name, for a king should be judge, counsellor, general; hence, they continue. "and the king [whom we have], what can he do for us?" (4) hemlock, De. xxix. 18.^b

The Abuse of Worldly Prosperity (vs. 1).—I. A fruitlessness that makes life worthless. II. A fruitfulness that makes life wicked. 1. When prosperity is used with an exclusive regard to our own selfish ends; 2. For self-indulgence; 3. For self-aggrandizement. III. When it is used without a supreme regard to the claims of God. 1. For the amelioration of human woes; 2. For the dispersion of human ignorance; 3. For the elevation of the human soul. Apply:—(1) How are we, as a nation, using our enormous prosperity? (2) How as individuals?—Thomas.

5—8. (5) Beth-aven, i.e. Beth-el, the house of God, wh. has become Beth-aven, the house of vanity, or idols. "The statement is keenly ironical. So far from being able to help their worshipers, the 'calves of Beth-aven' shall occasion the greatest anxiety to their worshipers. mourn over it, the idol, Jeroboam's calf, the chief of the 'calves' just referred to.

priests, Heb. chemarim, prob. idolatrous priests.* (6) "Yea, himself shall they pack to Assyria; he shall be offered as tribute to King Pick-Quarrel. Ephraim shall take disgrace, and Israel be ashamed because of his counsel. Undone Samaria! Her king like a chip on the face of the waters! This may refer to one of the revolutions in which the king was murdered. But it seems more appropriate to the final catastrophe of 724-1."—G. A. Smith. king Jareb, ch. v. 13. (8) Aven, vanity, iniquity, here for the calf idol. Cover us, seeking death as a relief from their misery and shame.^d Impatient of Life.—A lady once said to Fred. Robertson: "I thought you of all people were like St. Paul, and that you would wish for a heavenlier life as much as he did." He replied in words as true of others as of himself: "First of all, you thought wrong; next, if I do wish to die, it is when I am in pain or out of conceit with life, which happens pretty often, but which I do not consider spirituality. It is only an ungracious way of saying, 'I am dissatisfied with what thou hast given me, and do not like the duties that are mine at all. I am in pain, and want to be out of pain; and I suppose a great many people could say the same piece of sublime discontent.'"

9—15. (9) days of Gibeah, comp. ch. ix. 9. (10) R. V. "when it is my desire I will chastise them." bind . . furrows, "when I chastise them for their two iniquities," viz. their revolt from Jehovah, their God, and David, their king. (11) And Ephraim, etc., rather, "Ephraim indeed is a heifer broken in and loving to thresh, and I have spared the beauty of her neck; (but now) will I make Ephraim to draw." Israel's punishment is enhanced by contrast with her former prosperity.—Camb. B. plow, hard, toilsome work. (12) Sow to yourselves, etc., rather, "Sow to yourselves according to righteousness, and ye shall reap in proportion to love;" employ yourselves in works wh. will bring good fruitage. break . . ground, i.e. remove your superstitions and your vices.* rain righteousness, Ps. lxxii. 6; Is. xlv. 8. (13) plowed wickedness, Job iv. 8. (14) Shalman, etc., 2 Ki. xviii. 34, xix. 13.^e (15) great wickedness, "the phrase seems to come fresh from the mint of Hosea's own indignant feeling."

The Culture of the Heart (vs. 12).—I. The figure employed. 1. Naturally unproductive; 2. Obdurate; 3. Fruitful in weeds. II. The means to be used. 1. Consideration; 2. Repentance. III. The reason assigned. 1. Indecision is inconsistent; 2. It is presumptuous to defer; 3. It is dangerous; 4. Now is God's time.—Whythe.

Reaping.—In the natural world a man expects to reap if he sows; he expects to reap the same kind of seed; he expects to reap more than he sows; and ignorance of the kind of seed sown makes no difference in the reaping. The man who sows "wild oats" will find that the same is true in his experience.—D. L. Moody. Showers of Blessing (vs. 12).—It is said of a good king, "What a blessing is he to the land; he is always raining justice upon us." "You talk to me about the merit of remaining with such a master: he is always raining blessings upon him." A son after the decease of his father, asks, "Where is now the rain of love? alas! I am withered and dry." The figure is also used sarcastically, "Yes, indeed, you are a very good friend, you are always raining favors upon me."—Roberts.

CHAPTER THE ELEVENTH.

From the thick jungle of Hosea's travail, the eleventh chapter breaks like a high and open mound. The prophet enjoys the first of his two clear visions—that of the Past.—G. A. Smith. 1—4. (1) child, or but a nation in its infant beginnings. Referring to patriarchal times. called . . Egypt,^a "called" him, locally, into the land of Canaan, and morally, to set an example of true religion. Like the portraiture of the Servant of Jehovah in the second part of Isaiah, the description of Israel as Jehovah's Son was held to be at least in part applicable to the one perfect Israelite. The national ideal never realized in the nation was realized in the Christ. The divine purpose so often baffled in the one was completed

* Comp. 2 Ki. xxiii. 5; Zeph. i. 4.

"The word is taken fr. a root meaning either the black garment in wh. they were attired; or to resound, referring to their howling cries in their sacred rites."—Calvin.

^d Lu. xxiii. 30; Re. vi. ix. 6.

"Any act is noble that responds to a law of God. Nothing is cheap that an immortal can do, and no sphere common where an immortal toils."—W. K. Davis.

"Be not content with what ye have cultivated, but bring new ground into cultivation. Grow in grace; forget what is behind; reach forward to what is before; add to your faith virtue, and every Christian grace; and do you, who have been brought to God, bring others to Him."—Wordsworth.

^e "As Arbela was chiefly noted for its great temple of the goddess Istar, or Ash-toreth, it is possible that the expression used by the Prophet—Beth-Arbel, or Temple of Arbel has special reference to the destruction of the temple in question."—Lernormant.

^a "Or, From the time that he (Israel) was in Egypt, I called him My son."—Bengel.

Ex. iv. 22, 23; Mat. ii. 15. "St. Mat. apparently quotes these words, not to prove anything, but in order to point out the relation of God's former dealings with the latter, the beginning and the close, what relates to the body and what relates to the head." — Pasey.

^b "Or, images of Baal set up in different places." — Fausset.

Ho. ii. 13, xiii. 1.

^c "As a mother doth teach her child to go, leading it by the arms, protecting him, and providing for him in the wilderness." — Lowth.

^d Jno. xii. 32.

"One backslider will do more harm than twenty Christian men can do good." — W. E. Blackstone.

"Many Christians get cold warming themselves by this world's fires." — A. J. Gordon.

^a The inclination of the people was to seek shelter in Egypt. This God would not permit.

^b "His villages, which are the branches or dependencies of cities." — Calvin.

^c "Are hung and fastened to apostasy from Me, instead of allegiance to Me." — Wordsworth.

^d "This is one of the most pathetic passages in all Scripture, and is accordingly marked with the parallelism which is so characteristic of poetry in Hebrew in a much higher degree than is usual with Hosea." — Spk. Com.

^e "I am not one such as human dwellers in a city, who take cruel vengeance; I save those whom I correct." — S. Jerome.

in the other.—Camb. Bib. (2) As they called, i.e. prophets, etc., sent by God. went from them, turned away, avoiding these advisers. Baalim, a plural word.^b (3) to go, i.e. to walk, to go alone; to use his feet.^c De. i. 31. I healed them, or purposed correction and training by My dealings with them. (4) drew them, Song Sol. i. 4.^d cords . . man, with the persuasions a man might use with his fellow man. yoke, etc., rather, "that lift up the yoke over their cheeks." Jehovah compares himself to a considerate master, who raises the yoke from the neck and cheeks of the animal, that it may eat its food more conveniently. I laid meat, etc., rather, "(dealing) gently with him I gave him food."

Graven Images (vs. 2).—We read frequently of graven images and of molten images, and the words are become so familiar, as names of idolatrous images, that although they are not well chosen to express the Hebrew names, it seems not advisable to change them for others, that might more exactly correspond with the original. The graven image was not a thing wrought in metal by the tool of the workman we should now call an engraver; nor was the molten image an image made of metal, or any other substance melted and shaped in a mold. In fact, the graven image and the molten image are the same thing, under different names. The images of the ancient idolaters were first cut out of wood by the carpenter, as is very evident from the Prophet Isaiah. This figure of wood was overlaid with plates either of gold or silver, or sometimes perhaps of an inferior metal; and in this finished state it was called a graven image (i.e. a carved image) in reference to the inner solid figure of wood, and a molten (i.e. an overlaid, or covered) image in reference to the outer metallic case or covering. Sometimes both epithets are applied to it at once. "I will cut off the graven and molten image" (Nahum i. 14). Again, "What profiteth the graven and molten image?" (Hab. ii. 18). It is on account of this metallic case that we find a founder employed to make a graven image (Judges xvii. 3); and that we read in Is. xl. 19, of a workman that melteth a graven image; and in another place (chap. xlv.) we find the question, "Who hath molten a graven image?" In these two passages the words should be overlayeth, and overlaid.—Horsley.

5—7. (5) not return, literally.^a Previously the Prophet had spoken of such return mystically (ch. viii. 13, ix. 3). refused to return, in penitence to Jehovah. (6) branches, lit. bars, or defenders.^b own counsels, seeking idols, and thinking to rely on Egypt. (7) bent, fully purposed.^c

Shall Consume.—Guilt and punishment are bound together. One should act as a warning to the other. The threat of punishment is a merciful declaration to some, though a terror to others. If there are rocks and shoals in the ocean of life, it is not cruelty to chart them down; it is eminent and great mercy.—Beecher.

8, 9. (8) How, etc.,^d the expression of strong reluctance and deep pain. deliver thee, up to thine enemies. Admah? . . Zeboim? Ge. xix. 24; De. xxix. 23. heart, etc., comp. Is. lxiii. 15; Je. xxxi. 20. my repentings are kindled, even this inaccurate rendering cannot quite conceal the fine intuition of the prophet. By partly humanizing God's nature, he as it were divinizes man's. Human sympathy is but a rill from the mighty stream of God's tender mercy. A closer rendering would be, "I am wholly overcome with sympathy."—Camb. Bib. (9) fierceness, etc., God will not act as a man in uncontrolled rage, but with Divine wisdom and goodness order penalty so that it may prove corrective. enter . . city,^e better. "I will not come to exterminate."

God's Feeling in the Face of Man's Obstinacy (vss. 8, 9).—Three things suggested. I. That man is able to resist God in the dispensation of His mercy. The idea that we are governed by some Divine fate arises—I. From unacquaintance with the nature of the human will; 2. Unacquaintance with God's moral government; 3. Misinterpretation of some particular portions of God's Word. II. That man's resistance renders it necessary on God's part to give him up. 1. The most applicable means is insufficient for recovering him; 2. The only means is insufficient for recovering him. III. That there is an infinite, compassionate reluctance on God's part to give up man. 1. The relation that exists between God and man renders Him reluctant to give him up; 2. God's knowledge of man renders Him reluctant to give him up; 3. God's dealings with man prove that He is infinite in mercy, reluctant to give him up.—J. A. Morris.

10—12. (10) shall walk, by-and-by, in the days of restoration after chastisement. They shall walk, etc., rather, "They shall go after Jehovah as after a lion that roareth; for he himself shall roar and sons shall come hurrying from the west." (11) tremble as a bird, or "fly hastily as a flock of birds." place .. houses, comp. habits of migratory birds, wh. return year by year to the same spot. (12) Ephraim, here standing for the northern nation. Judah, the kingdom of the two tribes. yet ruleth .. saints, "is yet wayward towards God, and towards the faithful Holy One."

The Hypocrite.—

His virtues being o'erdone, his face
Too grave, his prayers too long, his charities Too pompously attended, and his speech
Larded too frequently, and out of time,
With serious phraseology—were rents
That in his garments ope'd in spite of him,
Through which the well-accustomed eye could see
The rottenness of his heart.—Pollok.

CHAPTER THE TWELFTH.

"In chaps. xii. and xiii. Hosea turns upon the now familiar trail of his argument, full of the Divine jealousy, determined to give the people one other chance to turn; but if they will not, he at least will justify God's relinquishment of them."—G. A. Smith. 1, 2. (1) feedeth on wind, a prov. expression, signifying labor in vain. east wind, blighting and desolating: a fig. of the idol helps, and national alliances, wh. Israel sought. lies, by wh. they deceive themselves. desolation, better, "violence." oil .. Egypt, as a present or tribute, to win favor and protection. (2) controversy, or charges to urge against. Jacob, here used for Judah. Worthless Soul-food (vs. 1).—"Wind." I. Sensual indulgences are worthless soul-food. II. So are worldly distinctions. III. And also religious formalities.—Thomas.

Oil (vs. 1).—Syria is a land in which olives abound, and particularly that part of it which the people of Israel inhabited. The Israelites, in the decline of their national glory, carried the produce of their olive plantations into Egypt, as a tribute to their ancient oppressors, or as a present to conciliate their favor, and obtain their assistance, in the sanguinary wars which they were often compelled to wage with the neighboring states. Oil is now presented in the East, to be burnt in honor of the dead, whom they reverence with a religious kind of homage. Mr. Harmer thinks it most natural to suppose that the Prophet Hosea refers to a similar practice, when he upbraids the Israelites with carrying oil into Egypt. They did not carry it thither in the way of lawful commerce; for they carried it to Tyre without reproof, to barter it for other goods. But if they burnt oil in those early times in honor of their idols, and their departed friends, and the Jews sent it into Egypt with that intention, it is no wonder the Prophet so severely reproaches them for their conduct. Oil is in modern times very often presented to the objects of religious veneration in Barbary and Egypt. The Algerines, according to Pitts, when they are in the mouth of the straits, throw a bundle of wax candles, together with a pot of oil, overboard, as a present to the marabout or saint who lies entombed there, on the Barbary shore, near the sea.—Paxton.

3—6. "Two episodes in the history of Jacob are applied to the spiritual wants of his descendants. Jacob in the very womb seemed ambitious of the blessing, and when a grown man, he wrestled with the angel for a still higher blessing than before. But, as we interpret the Prophet's thought, the Israelites, instead of justifying their name, and 'waiting upon their God,' have denied Jehovah, and sought for weak human help."—Camb. Bib. (3) took .. heel, Ge. xxv. 26. A symbol of his spirit

"I will not come in wrath." — Maurer.

"If you've tried and have not won, never stop for crying; all that's great and good is done just by patient trying."

a "Oil was an important article of commerce with Egypt, as the oil-olive does not thrive in that country. Along the Nile the avenues are of mulberry, sycamore and acacia trees. In Palestine the olives were abundant enough to make olive oil an article of export." — Biblical Things.

"No one is strong enough and wise enough to be safe in constant intercourse with persons of wrong principle and false religion, any more than one is healthy enough to be safe physically in a malarial or fever-laden atmosphere. Indeed, one who goes by choice into bad company and loves to remain there is already more than half fallen. The only time when one is safe in bad company is when he is laboring to do them good." — Peloubet.

a. "From bodily wrestling Jacob betook him to spiritual weapons; he poured forth tears with earnest supplications and prayers, and strove not so much for victory as for a blessing."—Lowth.

"The heavenly ladder is changed into steps to hell; and devils are dancing for joy where angels came down from heaven to earth."—T. Fuller.

b "A play on the double sense of the Heb. word Canaan, i.e. a Canaanite and a merchant."—Fausset.

c "It was an ancient custom in the E. parts of the world to convey instructions under symbols and sacred hieroglyphics."—Lowth.

d "Not take away the guilt and penalty of the innocent blood shed by Ephraim in general, and to Moloch in particular."—Fausset.

"Being cross as a bear because you are crossed, is the opposite of bearing the cross."

a "His words were listened to with deference, through the power with wh. he could back them. For the pre-eminence of the tribe of Ephraim see Ge. xlix. 26; De. xxxiii. 17; Ju. viii. 1, xii. 1.

b Da. ii. 35; Ho. vi. 4.

We might be like Bartholomew, who is said to have had a hundred prayers for the morning, and as many for the evening, and all be of no avail. "Fervency of spirit" is that which avails much.—Bp. Hall.

as the supplanter. by his strength, R. V., "in his manhood," when he wrestled with the angel. power with God, Ge. xxxii. 24. (4) angel, who was the manifested Jehovah; God in human form for a man's apprehension. wept, this is not stated in Genesis. found him, or met with him, Ge. xxxv. 9. spake with us, better, "with him." (5) his memorial, Ex. iii. 15. "A name wh. is also a remembrancer of the great characteristic of the Being spoken of." (6) turn thou, from wilfulness and idolatry back to God. keep mercy, etc., Mi. vi. 8.

Beth-el (vs. 4).—1. The most household name of all the villages or towns of the Bible; 2. The home of the patriarchs; 3. Jacob came here; 4. It has come to be one of the most pathetic names in the Bible; 5. Its after-history; 6. What is it now?—Hood.

7—11. (7) He . . merchant, "Canaan! in his hand are deceitful balances; he loveth to extort." balances of deceit, Am. viii. 5; Mi. vi. 11. (8) become rich, Ephraim in this verse boasts of his riches, though procured by fraud and violence, while he maintains at the same time that he has not sinned thereby so as to expose himself to punishment or deserve severe reprehension.—Pul. Com. (9) will yet make thee, etc., "will again make thee to dwell in tents, as in the days of the festal season." A contrast: you have dwelt in booths for festivity, soon you shall do so by compulsion. feast, Le. xxiii. 42, 43. (10) similitudes, comparisons, parables, types, etc. (11) R. V., "Is Gilead iniquity? they are altogether vanity." Gilead, E. of Jordan. Gilgal, W. of Jordan; together representing the whole country. heaps, i.e. no better than heaps. The verse points to the ruin of those two famous centers of idolatry.

God's Method of Teaching the Great Teachers of the World (vs. 10).—I. By visions which serve to show—I. The distinguishing glory of the human mind; 2. The accessibility of the human mind to God. II. By similitude. 1. It makes the spiritual more attractive; 2. It makes the material appear more divine.

12—14. (12) fled, Ge. xxviii. 5. served, etc., Ge. xxix. 20, 28. (13) prophet, Ex. xii. 50, 51, xiii. 3. Hosea contrasts the helplessness and the hardships of Jacob-Israel with the wonderful deliverance and preservation of his descendants. (14) leave his blood,^a or his blood-guiltiness to bring down on him the merited punishment. his reproach, or blasphemy.

CHAPTER THE THIRTEENTH.

1—5. (1) trembling, R. V., "there was trembling," such was the fear inspired, and the deference paid to the authority of that powerful tribe.—Pul. Com. died, i. e. "sealed their doom as a nation," ceased to be a factor in the progress of the world. (2) kiss the calves, comp. 1 Ki. xix. 18. An act of adoration to the golden calves. (3) morning dew, these, in the E., suddenly and utterly vanish when the sun rises. chaff, comp. Ps. i. 4, xxxv. 5; Is. xvii. 13. chimney, or "lattice-work placed under the wall-plate of the roof." (4) Yet, etc., Is. xliii. 11. (5) I did know, an expressive sentence, meaning, "it was indeed I who did it." I took special care of thee in the long wilderness-time.

The Life of the Wicked (vs. 3).—I. It is deceptive. II. It is worthless. III. It is evanescent. IV. It is offensive.—Thomas.

The Vanity of Human Life.—

Like to the falling of a star,
Or as the flight of eagles are;
Or like the fresh spring's gaudy hue,
Or silver drops of morning dew;
Or like a wind that chafes the flood,
Or bubbles which on water stood—E'en such is man, whose borrowed light
Is straight called in, and paid to-night,
The wind blows out, the bubble dies,
The spring entombed in autumn lies,
The dew dries up, the star is shot,
The flight is past,—and man forgot.—H. King.

6—8. (6) According, etc., Camb. B., "when they fed they waxed full," i. e. the more I took care of them, the more perversely they acted towards me. (7) as a leopard, "leopards lurk in thickets, and thence spring on their victims." (8) bear, she-bear, in the time of her most dangerous irritation. caul, or chamber; the pericardium; the membrane enclosing the heart.

Prosperity Injurious (vs. 6).—I. The evils of unsanctified prosperity. 1. Selfish indulgence; 2. Pride; 3. Unmindfulness of God. II. The instruction derived from this example. 1. A very humbling view of human nature; 2. The necessity of caution and circumspection; 3. The perils of prosperity should check our eagerness after worldly ease and affluence; 4. Learn resignation under afflictive dispensations.—W. Jay.

Salvation from God without the Intervention of Saints.—A Protestant who rented a small farm under Alexander, second Duke of Gordon, having fallen behind in his payments, a vigilant steward, in his Grace's absence, seized the farmer's stock, and advertised it to be sold by auction on a fixed day. The duke happily returned home in the interval, and the tenant went to him to supplicate for indulgence. "What is the matter, Donald?" said the duke, as he saw him enter with sad, downcast looks. Donald told him his sorrowful tale in a concise, natural manner: it touched the duke's heart, and produced a formal acquittance of the debt. Donald, as he cheerfully withdrew, was staring at the pictures and images which he saw in the ducal hall, and expressed to the duke, in a homely way, a wish to know what they were. "These," said the duke, "are the saints who intercede with God for me." "My lord duke," said Donald, "would it not be better to apply yourself directly to God? I went to muckle Sawney Gordon, and to little Sawney Gordon, but if I had not come to your grace's self, both I and my bairns had been turned out from house and home."

9—11. (9) O Israel, etc., R. V., "It is thy destruction, O Israel, that thou art against me, against thy help." (10) I will, etc., R. V., "Where now is thy king, that he may save thee in all thy cities? and thy judges," etc.; the now being emphatic. (11) king . . anger, 1 Sa. viii. 5, xv. 23, xvi. 1.

Man His Own Destroyer: God Alone His Saviour (vs. 9).—I. Destruction is possible to us men, even that of the highest, noblest, and divinest part of our nature. II. The only power by which we can destroy ourselves is the power of sinning. III. Every finally destroyed man is self-destroyed. IV. The self-destroyer who is in this perilous position may be saved from self-destruction. 1. A man cannot save himself; 2. No fellow-man can save a sinner; 3. God the only Saviour—what an encouragement to return to him.—S. Martin.

Theocracy.—God is the ultimate foundation of all human society; without Him you can neither cement nor govern society. The mad attempt, if you remember, was made in France. The governing council decreed that there was no God. What was the result? Anarchy, confusion, license, bloodshed, terror. Robespierre, one of the leading spirits of the Revolution, had to declare to his comrades in conclave assembled, "If there be no God, we must make one—we cannot govern France without Him.—J. Cynddylan Jones.

12—14. (12) bound up, laid by in store, and will surely be remembered and punished. (13) The Prophet declares that the troubles which are already closing around Israel, are in reality a last opportunity graciously vouchsafed of repentance. But he in his un wisdom neglects to embrace it, though every moment of delay increases his danger. Notice the two-fold application of the figure of childbirth. Israel is first of all the travelling woman, and then the child whose birth is imperilled by its weak will.—Camb. Bib. sorrows, etc., great calamities are often likened to the pains of childbirth. for he should not, rather, "for now he standeth not in the place where children break forth. The passage is akin to Isa. xxxvii. 2, where Judah's utter incapacity to emerge out of its troubles is compared to the inability of a woman to perform the act of bringing forth. Here, however, to suggest a moral lesson to Israel, the weak will of the child is represented as the cause of the failure. It is a new birth which Israel needs; and if calamity only had its right effect on the conscience, the language ascribed to Israel in vi. 2

"Dew falls insensibly and invisibly. You may be in the field all night, and not perceive the dew falling, and yet find great dew upon the grass. So the operations and blessings of God's Word, and graces thereof, are invisible: we feel the work, but the manner of the working is unknown to us. No man can see the conversion of another, nor can well discern his own. The Word works by little as the dew falls."—B. Keach.

"The mark of a man of probity is in his keeping reason at the head of practice; in being easy in his condition; to live in a crowd of objects, without suffering either in his sense, his virtue, or his quiet; to have a good understanding at home, and to be governed by that Divine principle that is within him; to be all truth in his words; and justice in his actions."—Antoninus.

"In this world, he that is today conqueror may tomorrow himself be defeated. Pompey is eclipsed by Caesar, who then falls by the hands of conspirators; Napoleon conquered nearly all Europe, and was then himself conquered. But the Christian's conquest of death is absolute. The result is final. He has vanquished the last enemy, and has no more battles to fight."—Foster.

* "Applied to Ephraim these strong figures signify, that though they be in never so hopeless and desperate a condition, God will, in due time, deliver them out of it."
—Lowth.

"Christ came to grapple with Death on the cross, and that horrid monarch was armed with all his terrors: he had his full force upon him, and darted his sting with such violence and vengeance into His whole frame, that he struck that sting through His body and soul into the cross, and could never draw it out any more."—Ryland.

"He went down into death's dark dominions, fought him upon his own ground, tore his crown from off his head, broke his sceptre to shivers, and with the triumph of a conquering God He said, 'O death! I will be thy plague. O grave! I will be thy destruction.'"
—F. Ryland, 1786.

"Patient, hopeful waiting is hard work, when it is the only work possible to us in an emergency. But patient waiting is in its time the highest duty of a faithful soul."
—Trumbull.

a 2 Ki. xvii. 6. "S h a Imaneser began the siege of Samaria in 723 B. C. Its close was in 721 B. C., the first year of Sargon, who seems to have usurped the throne of Assyria whilst Shalmaneser was at the siege of Samaria."—Fausset.

b "Our Rabbins say, 'Great is repentance, which maketh (men) reach even the would be verified, 'on the third day .. we shall live in his sight.'"—Camb. Bib. (14) G. A. Smith translates, "From the hand of Sheol shall I deliver them?" etc., implying the negative, and he adds: "This great verse has been very variously rendered. Some have taken it as a promise: 'I will deliver ... I will redeem.'" So the Septuagint translated, and St. Paul borrowed, not the whole Greek verse, but its spirit and one or two of its terms, for his triumphant challenge to death in the power of the Resurrection of Christ. As it stands in Hosea, however, the verse must be a threat. The last clause unambiguously abjures mercy, and the statement that His people will not be saved, for God cannot save them, is one in thorough harmony with all Hosea's teaching." O death, etc., R. V., "O death, where are thy plagues? O grave, where is thy destruction?" Comp. 1 Co. xv. 55.^a repentance, here change of mind and purpose respecting thy recovery and restoration.

Death Conquered.—Death, which sin brought into the world, is now become the only means to destroy and kill sin. Death, which is contrary unto life, is now turned into a port and passage into life. Death, that before was an armed enemy, is now made a reconciled and firm friend, a physician to cure all diseases, and an harbinger to make way for glory. The grave, also, by Christ's lying in it, is become a bed of rest, in which His saints fetch a short slumber until He awaken them to a glorious resurrection. It is the chamber into which He invites His beloved ones, to hide themselves until His indignation be past; the ark into which He shuts his Noahs while he destroys the world with an overflowing deluge of wrath and displeasure.—W. Spurstowe, 1659.—The Chaff and the Corn.—There is an old rabbinical legend which runs thus: "When Joseph was prime minister to Pharaoh, during the famine, he emptied the chaff of his granaries into the Nile. It floated far away on the current, and the people on the banks at a great distance below saw it. It was only chaff, but it meant that there was corn in plenty somewhere. Chaff always means corn; and yet the chaff is worthless. You could not persuade these people that they were mistaken. They were suffering the pangs of hunger, and had supposed that the famine extended throughout the entire country, and that everybody was as hungry as themselves. They were sure that if their strength would hold out they would reach the point at wh. the chaff had been thrown into the river. . . . Adown the stream of time there come floating to our hearts certain dreams of bliss; reunion with those we have loved, and lost; the longing for rest; and the desire for a future life and holiness. The race has enjoyed these hopes since it first began to struggle. They are the chaff; but the corn, which is higher up the stream in the granaries of God, will be ours by-and-by.—Hepworth.

15, 16. (15) east wind, i. e. the Assyrian conqueror, Eze. xix. 12. spring, or cistern. pleasant vessels, He—not the Assyrian, but Menahem, who had to send gold to the Assyrian—"shall strip the treasury of all its precious jewels. Samaria must bear her guilt: for she hath rebelled against her God." To this simple issue has the impenitence of the people finally reduced the many possibilities of those momentous years; and their last prophet leaves them looking forward to the crash which came some dozen years later in the invasion and captivity of the land.—G. A. Smith. (16) become desolate, R. V., "shall bear her guilt." Samaria is here introduced as representing the whole kingdom.

Reverses of Fortune in Human Life (vs. 15).—I. Reverses in human fortune are sometimes very striking. II. They are generally brought about by secondary instrumentality. III. They are under the direction of God. Learn—I. To acquiesce in His dispensations; 2. To look to Him for all that is good.—Thomas.

CHAPTER THE FOURTEENTH.

I—3. (1) return, or "return quite home to the Lord." fallen, into all your troubles as a direct consequence of your sins (ch. xiii. 9). (2) words, "it is one of the most undoubtedly ancient of the religious laws of the Pentateuch that 'none shall appear before Jehovah empty' (Ex.

xxiii. 15, xxxiv. 20). What gift then will be most acceptable from the Israelites to their heavenly King? The answer that will naturally rise to the lips of a half-converted Israelite will be 'sacrifice and burnt-offering;' but the Prophet in his present mood cherishes the belief that Israel's repentance will after all not be as superficial as he once feared (contrast v. 6). He therefore urges his people, after the bitter lessons of experience, to take as their offering, not cattle, but penitent words spoken out of the abundance of the heart."—Camb. Bib. receive us graciously, lit. give good." calves . . lips, i. e. instead of formal and heartless sacrifices we will render the penitent confessions of our lips; He. xiii. 15, praises of our lips. (3) Asshur, or Assyria. With this nation Israel had been in alliance. horses, the type of Egypt, from whence the horses had first been brought. in thee, "for in thee the fatherless findeth a father's pity."—G. A. Smith. Comp. Ps. x. 14, lxviii. 5.

Horses.—It comes to this, that a man must at some point say goodbye to his old ruined self. There were cleansing days in the moral life—days when Assyria must be warned away as a helper that is helpless, as only a name of pride without being an arm of power. Asshur must go. "We will not ride upon horses:" the stables must be cleansed. The horse has always in ancient history, as given in the Old Testament, been regarded as an emblem of pride. Israel at one period bought horses; Solomon committed the folly of having a boundless stable, he would have horses like the Egyptians. The Lord will not have anything to do with such horses in such relations. Men must ride upon His almightiness, and not upon the bared back of some steed of the wilderness; though he fly with the wind, and tear up the desert in the passion of his urgency, it is running itself to death.—Peop. Bib.—Gods.—At the introduction of Christianity into England, a general council was summoned to consider the new doctrines of Paulinus. All present were unanimous as to the utter inefficiency of the gods whom they worshiped. Coifi, the pagan high-priest, in an eloquent harangue, proposed their overthrow, and casting aside his priestly garments, called for arms, which Saxon priests were forbidden to wield, and for a horse, which they were not permitted to mount; and thus accoutred, galloped to the shrine at Godmundham, where the chief idol stood, hurled his lance into the enclosure, and profaned the consecrated shrine. The people, encouraged by the example of their priest, destroyed the sacred temple.—Hom. Com.

4—7. (4) backsliding, i. e. the damage which their backsliding has brought upon them. freely, "with spontaneous, overflowing generosity." (5) dew, comp. Job xxix. 19; Pr. xix. 12; Mi. v. 7. lily, prob. the scarlet lily, growing as freely as our poppy in the E. fields, as Lebanon, i. e. as the cedars of Lebanon. The slender roots of the lily supply no fit image for stability; for this Hosea turns to the "cedars of God" (Ps. lxxx. 10, A. V. "goodly cedars").—Camb. Bib. (6) olive tree, wh. never loses its leaves." smell, the fragrance of the cedars has been noticed by travelers.^a (7) "They shall return and dwell in His shadow. They shall live well-watered as a garden, till they flourish like the vine, and be fragrant like the wine of Lebanon."—G. A. Smith.

The Dew an Emblem of the Holy Spirit (vs. 5).—I. The influences of the Spirit are like dew, early in their descent. II. They are copious. III. Silent. IV. Fertilizing and refreshing. V. Temporary, they need to be renewed.—T. Lee.

The Smell of Lebanon.—The approach to Lebanon is adorned with olive plantations, vineyards, and luxuriant fields; and its lower regions, besides the olive and the vine, are beautified with the myrtle, the styrax, and other odoriferous shrubs; and the perfume which exhales from these plants is increased by the fragrance of the cedars which crown its summits, or garnish its declivities. The great rupture which runs a long way up into the mountain, and is on both sides exceedingly steep and high, is clothed from the top to the bottom with fragrant evergreens, and everywhere refreshed with streams, descending from the rocks in beautiful cascades, the work of Divine wisdom and goodness. These cool and limpid streams uniting at the bottom, form a large and rapid torrent, whose agreeable murmur is heard over all the place, and adds greatly to the pleasure of that romantic scene. The fragrant odors wafted from the aromatic plants of this noble mountain have not been over-very throne of Glory." —Kim-chi.

^c "Whosoever we do any good, God works in us and by us; and whenever He rewards our acts He crowns His own gifts."—S. Augustine.

^d "Consumption, when it once comes to be really consumption, is beyond all doubt utterly incurable by ordinary medicine; and though many remedies may assist the sufferer and prolong his life, yet as a rule, consumption is the herald of death; and so backsliding is incurable by any human means, and would be the forerunner of total apostasy were it not for Divine grace." —Spurgeon.

^e "In the last moment, even at the eleventh hour, for the remnant of your wasted life, there is an opportunity for escape."—Beecher. ^f "No plant is more productive than the lily, one root often producing fifty bulbs."—Pliny.

^g Ju. ix. 9; Ps. lli. 8, cxlviii. 3; Je. xl. 16.

^h "The fresh mountain breezes, filled in early summer with the fragrance of the budding vines, and throughout the year with the rich odors of numerous aromatic shrubs, call to mind the words of Sol. 'The smell of thy garments is like the smell of Lebanon.'" —Porter.

ⁱ "Writing in view of an olivegrove, Thomson says: 'To me this noble grove, spreading like a silver sea along the base of the hills, and climbing the ascending terraces, is perfectly charming; and it speaks of peace and plenty, food and gladness." — Land and Book. In the course of his travels in the East, Dr. Bonar informs us that he came to immense beds of lilies and hyacinths of various kinds. They grew thickly together and covered miles of sand. "They grow," he tells us, "in almost incredible numbers and luxuriance, often where nothing else flourishes, corroborating the Prophet's allusion, 'He shall grow as the lily.' It grows on hill and valley all over this region. Nor is it of one species only, but of several, as we could easily see, though only one species was in flower."

a "Ephraim gratefully acknowledges that he is in a flourishing and thriving condition, and then God puts him in mind that his fruitfulness is wholly owing to the Divine blessing." — Lowth.

"God does not say, I will heal thy backsliding for any certain term of years, but I will heal thy backslidings in general. If you have been a backslider these fifty years—nay, were it possible for you to have been a backslider a thousand years, yet if with hearty repentance and true faith you turn unto Him, He will abundantly pardon you. Oh, dear sir, if any one had need to despair of mercy, I had: but Jesus had washed me in His blood, and I know that my Redeemer liveth." — Whitefield.

looked by the sacred writers. The eulogium which Christ pronounces on the graces of the Church contains the following direct reference: "The smell of thy garments is like the smell of Lebanon." The richness and flavor of the wines produced in its vineyards have been celebrated by travelers in all ages. Rauwolf declares that the wine which he drank at Canobin, a Greek monastery on Mount Libanus, far surpassed any he had ever tasted. His testimony is corroborated by Le Bruyn, who pronounces the wines of Canobin better and more delicate than are to be found anywhere else in the world. In striking allusion to the scenery and productions of that mountain, it is promised in the sixth verse: "His branch shall spread, and his beauty shall be as the olive tree, and his small (or his memorial, as the original term signifies) as Lebanon." His branches shall spread like the mighty arms of the cedar, every one of which is equal in size to a tree; his beauty shall be as the olive tree, which is generally admitted to be one of the most beautiful productions of nature; and his smell, his very memorial, shall be as the wine of Lebanon, which delights the taste, and the very recollection of which excites the commendation of those that have drank it, long after the banquet is over. The meaning of these glowing figures undoubtedly is, that the righteous man shall prosper by the distinguishing favor of heaven; shall become excellent, and useful, and highly respected while he lives; and after his death his memory shall be blessed and embalmed in the affectionate recollection of the Church, for the benefit of many who had not the opportunity of profiting by his example. — Paxton. — Forgiveness. — A dear old woman lay dying, and an infidel came in to scoff at her, and said, "They tell me you are not afraid to die, and are very happy." "Yes, thank God." "Do you believe in a God?" "Yes, I do." "Do you believe God punishes sin?" "Yes, I do." Then the infidel said, "I should like to know how you are happy, for if there ever was a bad old woman, you are one. If what you say could be believed, it would be a great deal too good to be true." She looked him in the face, and said, "It is—it is a good deal too good to be true. But, bless the Lord, it is true for all that!" — H. W. Webb-Peplow.

8, 9. (8) What . . . idols? G. A. Smith understands this verse to be the utterance of God, and translates: "Ephraim, what has he to do any more with idols! I have spoken" for him, "and I will look after him. I am like an ever-green fir; from Me is thy fruit found." I . . . tree, this is the satisfied expression of Israel, rejoicing in God's restoring mercies, and heartily acknowledging that all grace and good has come from God.* (9) "An epilogue or conclusion to the prophecy, unspecializing it, as it were, and extracting, cf. Ps. cvii. 43, the moral which underlies it all. The tone and language of it remind us of the Book of Proverbs (Prov. xi. 5, xv. 19). — Camb. Bib. wise, Da. xii. 3. Comp. "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear."

Destruction of Idols. — On the 8th of September last, the Chief Secretary of State, with others high in rank, were sent to the village where the royal idols were kept, with orders to burn them. They started at about half-past three in the afternoon well armed, and hasted to Ambohimanamboolu, a distance of seven miles, to execute the queen's commands. On arriving at the village, the first thing to do was to read the Prime Minister's letter, and secure possession of the idol's house. This done, a fire was kindled with the materials of the fence which surrounded the house, and had been pulled down by the queen's orders on the day she laid the corner-stone of the Chapel Royal. Then first the long cane, called Tsoutsonaraka, which usually preceded the idol in processions or journeyings, was cast into the fire; then twelve bullock's horns, from which the sacred sprinklings were made; three scarlet umbrellas followed; and the silk lamba or loose-flowing garment which concealed the idol when suspended on the person of its keeper when it traveled. The idol's case succeeded; this case was made of a small tree hollowed, having a lid or cover fitted to it; and lastly the idol itself. This idol consisted altogether of two thicknesses of scarlet silk, about three feet long and three inches wide, having a small piece of wood, about the length and size of a finger to the second joint, inserted in the middle between the silks, in such a manner that, by turning the silks a little way, the point of the wood could be made to touch water, or anything else that was to be sanctified: at either extremity of the silk a silver chain was sewed or fastened, equal in length to the width of the silk. On seeing the idol the people said, "You cannot burn him, he is a god!" to which the Christian officer replied, "If he be a god he will not burn, we are going to try;" and when enveloped in flames one of them held it up on a stick to show it was burning. On the day following, four others were burned, and on the 10th of September two more. One of those burnt was the sovereign's private idol, which was found to consist of a small quantity of sand, tied in a cloth.—W. Pool.

"When two join in the same adventure, one perceives before the other how they ought to act;
while one alone,
however prompt,
resolves more tardily, and with a weaker will."
—Bryant's Iliad.

Introduction.

I. Author. Joel, = Jehovah is his God. Nothing known of him save that he was the son of Pethuel (i. 1). II. Time, and Place. His prophecies give no specifications of time or place; but all the internal indications of the book point to Judæa—probably to Jerusalem, with its temple, altar, priesthood, and solemn assemblies, as the sphere of his labors. Widely diverging opinions have been held as to the date of the book; but most recent scholars would assign it to the fifth or sixth century before Christ. III. Style, and Theme. The writings of Joel bear the full impress of culture in a prophetic school. His Hebrew is of the purest kind; his style is easy, flowing, elegant, and adorned with magnificent imagery; and for vividness and power of description he is not surpassed by any of the Prophets. The immediate occasion of his prophecies is a double plague of drought and locusts, which has already invaded the land, and whose desolating progress he describes in poetic strains of matchless elegance and power. He summons the people of all classes to repentance, and promises upon this condition not only the restoration of the land to its former fruitfulness, but also the outpouring of God's Spirit upon all flesh, the triumph of the covenant people over all their foes, and an era of universal holiness and peace. In this respect he is at one with all the Prophets. They all with one accord look forward beyond the calamities of the present time, and the heavier impending calamities which they are commissioned to foretell in the near future, to the glory of the latter days, when Zion shall be made triumphant over all her foes, and the whole earth shall be given her for her inheritance. The Apostle Peter, in his address on the day of Pentecost, quotes a remarkable prophecy of Joel. (Acts ii. 16—21; comp. with Joel ii. 28—32.)

Synopsis.

(According to Horne.)

This Book consists of three chapters, which may be divided into three discourses or parts.

PART I. Is an exhortation, both to the priests and to the people, to repent, by reason of the famine brought upon them by the palmer-worm, etc., in consequence of their sins (i. 1—20); and is followed by a denunciation of still greater calamities if they continue impenitent.....ii. 1—11

PART II. An exhortation to keep a public and solemn fast (ii. 12—17); with a promise of removing the calamities of the Jews on their repentanceii. 18—26

PART III. Predicts the general conversion and return of the Jews, and the destruction of their opponents, together with the glorious state of the Church that is to follow....iii.

CHAPTER THE FIRST.

1-4. (1) Joel, the name means, "Whose God is Jehovah." Pethuel, not known. In the E. men were thus distinguished by giving their father's name. (2) this . . days, had they any experience of such a calamity as he recounts? (3) Tell, etc., i.e. not only former generations have known nothing so terrible, but the marvel of it will outlast three more generations. (4) palmerworm, etc.,^a by these terms four species or stages of locusts, rather than four different kinds of insects, are probably intended.

The Life-work of an Obscure Prophet.—The literary style of this book deserves the consideration of every student of Scripture. With the exception of Isaiah and (as some think) of Habakkuk, Joel surpasses all his brethren in sublimity. His pictures of the disasters following upon sin are marvelously vivid, and his promise of the coming of the Holy Spirit was still living in the memory of the Jews when Peter, on the day of Pentecost, declared that its fulfillment had come. The first half of the book describes the Divine judgments, and the second half (beginning with the eighteenth verse of ch. ii.) unfolds the promise of Divine favor. Its readers pass from darkness to light, from grief to joy, from estrangement to reconciliation; and in this book, as in experience, the transition hinges on the penitential prayer to which it was the prophet's mission to summon the people. We know scarcely more of Joel than the fact that he was the son of Petruel.—Pul. Com.—Locusts.—"We know," says Burke, "that a swarm of locusts, however individually despicable, can render a country more desolate than Genghis Khan or Tamerlane. When God Almighty chose to humble the pride and presumption of Pharaoh and bring him to shame, he did not effect his purpose with tigers and lions. He sent lice, mice, frogs, and everything loathsome and contemptible, to pollute and destroy the country."

5-7. (5) drunkards, these would be specially affected bec. the locusts would ruin the vineyards. (6) a nation, the locusts are so called because their progress is as orderly as a national army. my land, the prophet speaks in the name of the people. teeth, comp. Re. ix. 8,^b cheek teeth, R. V., "jaw teeth," grinders. (7) barked . . fig, the locust "strips the vines of every leaf, and every cluster of grapes, and of every green twig," white, by the stripping off of the bark.

The Fig Tree.—So valuable is the fig tree in the land of Canaan, and so high is the estimation in which it is held, that to bark and kill it is reckoned among the severest judgments which God inflicted upon His offending people. The Prophet alludes in these words to the destructive progress of the locust, which, with insatiable greediness, devours the leaves and bark of every tree on which it lights, till not the smallest portion of rind is left, even on the slenderest twig, to convey the sap from the root, and leaves it white and withering in the sun, for ever incapable of answering the hopes of the husbandman. Such were the people of Israel, delivered by Jehovah, for their numerous and inveterate transgressions, into the hands of their cruel and implacable enemies.—Paxton.—The Eternal Foundation.—Said the Bishop of Calcutta, on the platform of a native society for the improvement of Hindoo morals, "If you wish to make anything eternal, you must build it on the Christian religion. That is the only thing in this world that is eternal." He was right. No reform is worth its cost, which is not important enough to rise to the level of a religious duty.—Phelps.—Locusts.—The quantity of these insects is a thing incredible to any who has not seen it himself; the ground is covered by them for several leagues. The whole face of the mountain (Lebanon) was black with them. On they came like a living deluge. We dug trenches and kindled fires, and beat and burnt to death heaps upon heaps, but the effort was utterly useless. They rolled up the mountain-side, and poured over rocks, walls, ditches, and hedges, those behind covering up and passing over the masses already killed. For some days they continued to pass. The noise made by them in marching and foraging was like that of a heavy shower falling upon a

^a "The Prophet crowds together a number of locust-names to show that nothing shall remain undevastated by one or the other. The form of the vs. shows it to be poetical."—Spk. Com.

"The marvel is that they all come in one year."—S. Jerome.

^b "A large vineyard and garden adjoining mine was green as a meadow in the morning; but long before night it was naked and bare as a newly-ploughed field or dusty road."—Thomson.

"The jaws of the locusts are excessively hard and strong, capable of devouring not only the leaves, but when these fall, the bark, and even the solid wood of the trees."—Newman.

"These lessons are fit for England, where ancient sobriety hath given place to superfluity, where many such men are as fare daintily day by day. God grant they end be not like his, who riotously wasting here the creatures of God, wanted afterwards a drop of water when he would gladly have had it."—Sandys.

"The judgments of God are often linked together like a chain, each one drawing on the other. Yet, says one, 'at each link of the lengthening chain, allowing space and time for repentance to break it through." —

—Hom. Com.

a Is. xxli. 12.

"On rolls the stream with a perpetual sigh; the rocks moan wildly as it passes by; Hyslop and worm-wood border all the strand, and not a flower adorns the weary land." —Bryant.

Two are more than twice one. There is not only double experience, but the wisdom of each reacts on the wisdom of the other, vivifying it and brightening it.

"If we are to live after death, why don't we have some certain knowledge of it?" said an old sceptic of a clergyman. "Why don't you have some knowledge of this world before you come into it?" was the caustic reply.

"Some years ago, when preaching at Bristol, amongst other notes I received to pray for individuals, one was this: 'A person earnestly desires the prayers of the congregation, who is prospering in trade.' 'Ah,' said I to myself, 'Ah,' 'here is a man who knows something of his own heart, and who has read the Scriptures to some purpose.'" —W. Jay.

distant forest.—Thompson.—The roads were covered with them, all marching and in regular lines, like armies of soldiers, with their leaders in front; and all the opposition of man to resist their progress was in vain. Having consumed the plantations in the country, they entered the towns and villages. When they approached our garden all the farm servants were employed to keep them off, but to no avail; though our men broke their ranks for a moment, no sooner had they passed the men, than they closed again, and marched forward through hedges and ditches as before. Our garden finished, they continued their march toward the town, devastating one garden after another.—Jour. Sac. Lit.

8—10. (8) Lament,^a words addressed poetically to the land. like a virgin, "the interruption of the fellowship between the land and Jehovah through the failure of the sacrifices the Prophet throws into the figure of a young wife bereaved and in mourning. The land is the virgin; the dreary bleak aspect of it is the mourning which she wears. The bereavement lies in this: that through the cutting off of the meal-offering, and the drink-offering, the tokens of Jehovah's presence and favor, manifested in His acceptance of the offerings, have been removed; communications between the land and its God have been removed, and the land is bereaved." —A. B. Davidson. sackcloth, the usual accompaniment of mourning. husband, or betrothed, snatched away before marriage. (9) meat offering, mincha, Le. ii. 1; Ex. xxiv. 40, 42. "The unbloody offering made of flour, oil, and frankincense." the priests mourn, etc., in this passage the same feeling is attributed to men and to the fruits of the land: "the priests mourn," "the land mourneth."—G. A. Smith. (10) wasted, or fallow; or the crop on it is destroyed.

The Fig Tree Peeled.—The Prophet Joel, in describing the ravages of a swarm of locusts, speaks of them as alighting on the fig trees, peeling off the bark with their teeth, and then leaving them entirely white, after completing this work of devastation. From the Prophet singling out the fig tree as exhibiting this appearance, one would suppose the wood of this tree to have a peculiar whiteness, which other trees do not possess in the same degree. On meeting with the fig tree for the first time, I was curious to ascertain whether this expectation was well founded or not. I broke off some of the tender twigs, removed the bark, and was pleased to find that the result confirmed my conjecture. Though I examined several other trees with reference to the same point, I satisfied myself that no one of them would present to the eye so remarkable an object as the fig tree, with its bark stripped off from top to bottom. To look over a landscape and see a multitude of these trees leafless, newly peeled, exposing to view the white wood, so peculiar to them as compared with other trees, would impress the spectator strongly with the idea of the desolating power of the locust; it was a master-stroke of the poet to fix on that circumstance for the purpose of conveying such an idea.—Hackett.—Famine.—When we bear in mind that, in spite of the help given them from this country, one-fourth part of the people of Ireland died in one year (1847) through the failure of a single article of food, we may have some idea of the distress of successive years. Not all the vast wealth of England would restore the withered joy that would result from the failure of the harvest and the destruction of herds for a single year. The blight of a fly might consume cereal crops and prove more terrible than destructive war.—Hom. Com.—Temporal Prosperity.—What reason we have to praise God for bountiful seasons, and for His goodness in filling our hearts with food and gladness! But cleave not too closely to temporal blessings, which may be cut off by judgment, and taken suddenly away. God takes from an ungodly people the means of gratifying their lusts, and will bring them to repentance by deep afflictions. The prosperity of the Church depends not on a grand ceremonial, or crowds of admiring devotees, or the countenance of the State, however desirable these things may be, but only on the favor of God, whose blessings and whose Spirit will be withdrawn, if we defile his sanctuary with superstitious rites.—Robinson.

11—13. (11) ashamed, etc., "Be ye abashed, O ploughman."—G. A. Smith. Comp. Je. xiv. 3. (12) pomegranate, Ex. xxviii 34. palm, wh. long resists drought, because of its deep rooting. the apple tree, Cant.

ii. 3, viii. 5; cf. apples Cant. ii. 5, vii. 8; Prov. xxv. 11. "It has been doubted whether tappuah is really the apple; and Tristram adduces grounds tending to shew that it was more probably the apricot. But the corresponding Arabic word (tuffah) certainly means the apple; and though it is true that the Syrian apple is much inferior in flavor to the European apple, it has nevertheless been long esteemed in the East as a grateful and refreshing fruit, and valued in sickness on account of its restorative properties."—Camb. Bib. (13) Gird yourselves, R. V. adds, "with sackcloth." come, or lead the way; show the example to the nation of bitter grief, distress, and humiliation.

The Advantages of a Bad Harvest (vs. 11).—What do we mean by a bad harvest? Bad as compared with expectation; as compared with former years; as compared with the harvest of other lands. Let us mark some of the advantages. I. It recalls us to a sense of our dependence on God. II. It awakens us to a deeper feeling of the evil of sin. III. It serves as a tie of discipline for the improvement of character and the promotion of the general good. IV. It impresses the soul with a sense of its higher needs and duties. V. It invites us to draw nearer to God, and to regard Him as the only true and supreme God.—W. Forsyth.

14—17. (14) fast, comp. 2 Chr. xx. 3, 4. cry, in penitential pleadings. (15) the day, "the usual designation of the final theocratic judgment is, from Joel i. 15 and ii. 1 onward; 'the day of Jehovah,' comp. Zeph. i. 7, ii. 3; Mal. iv. 5; Amos v. 18. It is the day on which the Lord will humble all the loftiness of man, and will alone be exalted."—Oehler. (16) joy, such as usually prevailed at the vintage feasts. (17) rotten, dried up in the ground."

Granaries.—Dr. Shaw informs us that "in Barbary, after the grain is winnowed, they lodge it in mattamores, or subterraneous magazines, two or three hundred of which are sometimes together, the smallest holding four hundred bushels." And Dr. Russell says, "that about Aleppo, in Syria, their granaries are even at this day, subterraneous grottoes, the entry to which is by a small hole or opening like a well, often in the highway; and as they are commonly left open when empty, they make it not a little dangerous riding near the villages in the night."—Burder.—The Day of the Lord.—It is the day, when Jehovah is conceived as manifesting Himself in His fulness, striking down wrong-doing and illusion, and giving the final victory to righteousness and truth. The origin of the conception as applied by the prophets, is to be found in Amos' transformation of a popular idea (see on Am. v. 18). The presentiment of the approach of Jehovah's Day was often awakened in the minds of the prophets by the prospect of some great political movement among the nations of the earth. In the case of Joel the Day of Jehovah is invested, more distinctly than is the case in the earlier prophets, with an eschatological significance; see esp. ii. 31, iii. 1, 2, 9—17.—Camb. B.—The Practice of Self-Restraint.—"Fasting" is a word which ought to have given to it the widest signification. Generally used to denote abstinence from food, it may be as fairly applied to any refusal of indulgence to animal appetite, however innocent such indulgence, under other circumstances, may be. The keeping of a fast in mere deference to a social custom or to ecclesiastical ordinance is of no great value. But true fasting is inculcated by our Lord Himself, though he personally refused to keep the ecclesiastical fasts of His own day. The restraint of appetite, the curbing of the animal nature, is essential to the doing of great works for Him. Of the lunatic boy Jesus said to His disciples, "This kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting." This has its application to indulgence in strong drink. Total abstinence has a part to play as well as a prayer in driving out the demon of drunkenness. Such fasting would do much to remove a curse which is as terrible as was the devastation of the land of Judah by locusts.—Pul. Com.

18—20. (18) beasts groan, bec. there is no green food left for them." perplexed, "huddle together," lit. "press themselves."—G. A. Smith. "There is a tacit contrast between the sense of the brute creation, and the insensibility of the people."—Fausset. (19) wilderness, or plains. (20) cry, R. V., "put unto thee."

The Influence of National Calamities on the Minds of the Good (vs. 19).—The effect on Joel was to excite him to prayer. I. This was right.

a "Reference is to those priests whose turn it is to keep the night - watches in the temple."
—Lowth.

"The French revolution was not as Wendell Phillips said, 'the greatest blessing of modern times,' but some such terrible upheaval was necessary for the nation. The leaders would not be induced to right the wrongs of the nation in any other way."
—Peloubet.

b "The seed is sure to rot if they sow too long before the rains come."
—Thomson.

"But, to us, probability is the very guide of life."
—Butler.

Seneca says. "The good man God accustoms to hardships, and prepares him for himself. But the luxurious, whom he seems to indulge and to spare, he reserves for evils to come. For you are mistaken if you think any one excepted. The man who has been long spared will at last have his portion of misery; and though he seems to have escaped it, it is only delayed for a time." "Thus ought we always to believe," says Plato, "those ancient and sacred words, which declare to us that the soul is immortal, that judges are appointed, and that they pass the highest sentences of condemnation when the spirit is separate from the body."

a "This is poetic but true. A field over which this flood of desolation has rolled shows not a blade for even a goat to nip."—Thomson.

"When the fruit is yet green, the stem holds tightly to the bough; but when it is ripe it falls with the first wind. So hold on tightly to your plans in life until God shows you that they are ripe, that they have accomplished their purpose; and then let them go—let them go without a murmur."—Beecher.

"At the time the Diet of Nuremberg was held," says Tholuck, "Luther was earnestly praying in his own dwelling; and at the very hour when the edict, granting full toleration to all Protestants, was issued, he ran out of his house, crying out 'We have gained the victory.'"
—Spurgeon.

"There's a power which man can wield,
When mortal aid is vain,
That eye, that arm, that love,
To reach,
That listening ear to gain:
That power is prayer, which soars on high,
And feeds on bliss beyond the sky."
—Anon.

"Anything is favorable to advancement in Christian manhood which tends to counteract that flow of sympathetic action by which the mind is carried away from intercourse with Christ and God."
—Spurgeon.

Dr. Chalmers at Kilmeny preached the law with all the force of his eloquent nature. And he in his farewell address bears this witness: "I never heard of any

1. God requires it; 2. Christ engaged in it. II. This was wise. III. This was natural. Apply:—1. It is well when trial leads to prayer; 2. Trials prayerfully endured become blessings.—Thomas.

Prayer for the Church.—During the troublous times of Scotland, when the Popish court and aristocracy were arming themselves to suppress the Reformation in that land, and the cause of Protestant Christianity was in imminent peril, late on a certain night John Knox was seen to leave his study, and to pass from the house down into an enclosure to the rear of it. He was followed by a friend, when, after a few moments of silence, his voice was heard as if in prayer. In another moment the accents deepened into intelligible words, and the earnest petition went up from his struggling soul to heaven, "O Lord, give me Scotland, or I die!" Then a pause of hushed stillness, when again the petition broke forth, "O Lord, give me Scotland, or I die!" Once more all was voiceless and noiseless, when, with a yet intenser pathos the thrice-repeated intercession struggled forth, "O Lord, give me Scotland, or I die!" And God gave him Scotland, in spite of Mary and her Cardinal Beaton; a land and a church of noble loyalty to Christ and His crown.—Spurgeon.—God's Humanity.—Let us here recall the fact, that it is the Spirit of God who speaks by the mouth of His prophet; for it is to be feared that we do not make enough of the humanity of God, of His intense delight in trees and flowers, in herds and flocks; of His humane care for them, of His tender sympathy with them. The Psalms and Prophecies are full of this Divine humanity, no Prophecy fuller, perhaps, than that of Joel; and in no passage of Joel's is that tender, intense humanity more beautifully and pathetically expressed than in these verses.
—Cox.

Prayer.—

More things are wrought by prayer
Than this world dreams of. Wherefore, let thy voice
Rise like a fountain for me night and day;
For what are men better than sheep or goats,
That nourish a blind life within the brain,
If, knowing God, they lift not hands of prayer
Both for themselves and those who call them friends,
For so the whole round world is every way
Bound by gold chains about the feet of God.—Tennyson.

CHAPTER THE SECOND.

1, 2. (1) trumpet, cornet. The horn which is to be blown is an alarm horn, to warn the people of the approach of the Day of the Lord, and not the Shophar which called the people to a general assembly, as in vs. 15.—G. A. Smith. holy mountain, i. e. Mount Zion. day.. Lord, see on i. 15. (2) darkness, "so Zeph. i. 15. Four synonyms are combined, for the purpose of emphasizing the darkness, which the prophet has in view. Darkness is, in Hebrew poetry, a common figure for calamity (comp. on Am. v. 18); but here, no doubt, the image is suggested by the fact that a flight of locusts, as it approaches, presents the appearance of a black cloud, which, as it passes, obscures the sun, and even sometimes darkens the whole sky."—Camb. Bib. great people, poetical figure, ch. i. 6.

The Need of Revival (vs. 1).—I. From the state of the Church. 1. Ignorance; 2. Conformity to the world; 3. Want of activity; 4. Neglect of prayer. II. From the state of the general community. 1. Indifference; 2. Infidelity; 3. Intemperance; 4. The race for riches; 5. The love of pleasure.—G. Brooks.

Dangers Besetting Reformers.—Lycurgus was the noblest of Spartans; he was a rigorous disciplinarian; in some aspects he was the admired and all but idolized of his country; but when he denounced the misuse of its wealth, when he levelled his guns against the corruption of his day, he was stoned in the city that was proud of him, and had to seek refuge from common ruffianism behind the altar of the temple; his flesh was cut by the ruffians' cane, and whilst the blood ran down his noble face no word of reproach escaped him.—Peop. Bib.—Aim for Revivals.—There are preachers by myriads and majorities, and deeply pious ones too, that never once in all their lives distinctly concentrated their purposes to the single point of converting men. Their efforts are to finish an eloquent sermon, to develop theological or Biblical truth, to thrill aesthetically an audience, to pour forth general religious emotion, to spread a popular fame, to gather crowds, to build a large church, etc. Verily these have often their reward, namely, success in their objects. But here is a lonesome preacher who does not object to all these; but with or without them, by study, by closet, by pulpit, by pastoral work, some or all, he means to convert souls, and just so many as he can. Where this is attained, all the other success is well enough. Where this is not attained, all the other success does not comfort him a penny; he goes off crestfallen and disappointed, indignant at the devil and himself. He will not stay there where Satan has beaten him; but he will go where, please God, he can get some souls.—The Power of a Revival Atmosphere.—Many years ago an eminent officer in the government of Mass. returned from Europe to his home in an inland town in which a powerful work of divine grace was in progress. He had not heard of it. As he passed thro' the streets, the look of things seemed strange to him. The countenances of those whom he met impressed him with a sense of something unusual. The church-bell was tolling at an unusual hour. "What has happened here?" was his inquiry. "Something is in the air. Things seem like the day of judgment." There was no mystery in this. It was like the day of judgment. God was there, deciding the eternal destiny of hundreds of souls. It proved so to that awe-struck man, for he was soon one of the rejoicing converts.—Phelps.

3—5. (3) fire, or like a fire, the effects of a fire on everything before them and behind. Their work is likened to that of spreading fire." as the garden of Eden, "like a park, richly watered, and well stocked with majestic trees (Gen. ii. 8—10): the comparison, as Ezek. xxxvi. 35 (of the restored land of Israel) 'this land that was desolate is become like the garden of Eden'; similarly the garden of Jehovah, Gen. xiii. 10, Is. li. 3 (in the parallel clause, Eden); cp. also the trees of Eden, Ez. xxxi. 9, 16, 18.—Camb. Bib. shall escape, from the ravages of the devouring insect. (4) "The allegory now becomes special and minute in its features, which are selected from the operations of an invading army."—Barrows. horses, the locust's head somewhat resembles that of the horse." (5) noise, "the noise made in marching and foraging was like that of a heavy shower on a distant forest."

Locusts.—I never saw such an exhibition of the helplessness of man, as I have seen to-day. While we were sitting at dinner, a person came into the house, quite pale, and told us that the locusts were coming. Every face gathered darkness. I went to the door—I looked above, and all round, and saw nothing. "Look to the ground," was the reply, when I asked where they were. I looked to the ground, and there I saw a stream of young locusts without wings, covering the ground at the entrance of the village. The stream was about five hundred feet broad, and covering the ground, and moving at the rate of two miles an hour. In a few minutes they covered the garden wall some inches deep, and the water was immediately let into the channel, into which it flows to water the garden. They swim with the greatest ease over standing water, but the stream carried them away, and after floating in it about a hundred paces, they were drowned. All hands were now at work to keep them from the gardens, and to keep them from crossing the streams. To examine the phenomenon more nearly, I walked about a mile and a half from the village, following the course of the stream. Here I found the stream extending a mile in breadth, and, like a thousand rivulets, all flowing into one common channel. It appeared as if the dust under my feet was forming into life, and as if God, when He has a controversy with a people, could raise the very dust of the earth on which they tread in arms against them.—Campbell.

6—8. (6) R. V., "at their presence the people's are in anguish; all faces are waxed pale." blackness, or paleness. (7) run, etc., this is literally true." (8) thrust another, out of rank; each shall preserve its place. and when, etc., R. V., "and they burst through the weapons, and break not off their course."

such reformation being effected among them in this way. I am not sensible that all the vehemence with which I urged the virtues and proprieties of social life had the weight of a feather on the moral habits of my parishioners." Dr. Chalmers while at Kilmenny, was truly converted to Christ; and then when he preached the love and atonement of Christ, he again bears witness that by this he found that men obeyed the moral law, and he declares, "You have at least taught me that to preach Christ is the only effective way of preaching morality in all its branches."—Wayland.

a "Every blade of grass and every leaf is gnawed off as tho' it had been scorched by fire."—Ludolf.

b Re. ix. 7.

Locusts. The head is exceedingly like that of a horse.—Theodore. Their noise is like the rushing of a wind. — Forbes. "They overshadow the sun, the nations looking up with anxiety, lest they should cover their lands."—Pliny.

Nothing in their habits is more striking than the pertinacity with which they all pursue the same line of march, like a disciplined army.—Thompson.

a "When the head of the mighty column came in contact with the palace of the Emeer Asaad in Abelh, they did not take the trouble to wheel round the corners, but climbed the wall like men of war, and marched over the top of it."—Thomson.

* "As they approached, the density of the host obscured the solar rays, cast an awful gloom like that of an eclipse on the garden, and caused a noise like the rushing of a torrent."—Forbes.

b Ho. xii. 6. xiv. 1.

c Ps. xxxiv. 18. ii. 17. cxlvii. 3.

They teach us the necessity of unity, steadfastness, and order. Many prefer an individual course instead of going by bands. They belong to no cohort, and are under no discipline. The strength of the Church lies in united, concentrated action. Every soldier well-disciplined and in his ranks; every officer at his post, and ready for the contest; each under rule, helpful to each other and to the common cause. —Hom. Com.

d De. xxiv. 5.

"We are apt to think our duty done if we are faithful here at home. But our responsibility in carrying out the great commission is not fulfilled as long as we are withholding in the smallest degree of our ability the gospel message from the last man at the 'utmost part of the earth' to whom the gospel has never been preached." — G. F. Pentecost.

Locusts Producing Famine.—The "panic terror" produced by an invasion of locusts on a large scale, can be readily imagined, if we remember not only the immense loss of property, of which they are the cause, but also the terrible destitution, which often follows in their train. In Algiers, after an invasion of locusts in 1866, 200,000 persons are said to have perished from famine. The destruction wrought frequently by the Rocky Mountain locust, over a large area of the United States, is almost incalculable.—Riley, The Rocky Mountain Locust.

9—14. (9) "They course about in the city; they run upon the wall," no sooner have they gained an entrance than they make the city their own, and take possession of the walls. The exact force of the word rendered course about is not certain: it is used of locusts in Is. xxxiii. 4 ("like the attack of locusts, shall they attack it"), of a bear in Prov. xxviii. 15 ("A growling lion, and a ranging bear"), and (in a reflexive form) of chariots charging the suburbs of a city in Nah. ii. 4 ("they jostle one another in the broad places").—Camb. Bib. enter . . windows, "if not carefully watched, they would have devoured the flowers wh. were carried into the inner rooms in pots."—Thomson. (10) earth, etc., Is. xiii. 10; Mat. xxiv. 29.^a (11) utter his voice, Je. xxv. 30. (12) turn, etc., Je. iv. 1.^b (13) rend your heart, fig. for be sincere. Be anxious to secure inward contrition.^c gracious, etc., Ex. xxxiv. 6. slow to anger, etc., "long suffering and plenteous in love."—G. A. Smith. (14) Who knoweth, etc., Jno. iii. 9. blessing, viz., by permitting the earth again to mature its fruits and yield materials for the offerings in the sanctuary (i. 9). The fruits of the earth are a blessing bestowed by God upon man (Deut. vii. 13, xvi. 10, 15, 17).—Camb. Bib.

Repentance Recommended (vs. 13).—I. The important direction given presupposes—1. A state of heedless inattention; 2. Of careless and criminal negligence; 3. Of obstinate disobedience. "Rend your hearts," this implies—(1) Excessive grief; (2) Great loathing and abhorrence; (3) Deep humility and earnest deprecation. II. The cheering assurance afforded, "For He is gracious," etc. 1. This revelation warrants our approach; 2. Requires our return; 3. Encourage our address.—400 Sks.

Inward Piety.—An old Hebrew story tells how a poor creature came one day to the Temple, from a sick bed, on tottering limbs. He was ashamed to come, for he was very poor, and he had no sacrifice to offer; but as he drew near he heard the choir chanting, "Thou desirest not sacrifice; else would I give it: thou delightest not in burnt offerings." The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise." Other worshippers came, pressed before him, and offered their sacrifices; but he had none. At length he prostrated himself before the priest, who said, "What wilt thou, my son? Hast thou no offering?" And he replied, "No, my father, for last night a poor widow and her children came to me, and I had nothing to offer them but the two pigeons which were ready for the sacrifice." "Bring, then," said the priest, "an ephah of fine flour." "Nay, but, my father," said the old man, "this day my sickness and poverty have left only enough for my own starving children; I have not even an ephah of flour." "Why, then, art thou come to me?" said the priest. "Because I heard them singing, 'The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit.' Will not God accept my sacrifice if I say, 'Lord, be merciful to me, a sinner?'" Then the priest lifted the old man from the ground, and he said, "Yes, thou art blessed, my son; it is the offering which is better than thousands of rivers of oil."—World of Prov. and Par., E. P. Hood.

15—17. (15) Blow, etc., vs. 1. sanctify, set apart, or appoint. (16) elders, R. V., "old men," all classes, old and young, none are exempt from the humiliation. bridegroom, who was legally exempt from the necessity of attending the feasts.^d (17) weep, as leading the penitence of the people. porch . . altar, the place where the priests usually stood. heathen, R. V., "the nations."

Repentance.—The Roman Catholic definition of penitence is not a bad one, though they draw bad conclusions from it—"Confessio oris, contritio cordis, satisfactio vite"—that is, for true repentance there should be confession with the mouth, grieving in the heart, and amendment made for our faults as far as possible in our life.—Richard Glover.—Repentance. —Cowper, the poet, in his own memoirs of his early life, describes the time when he reflected on the necessity of repentance. "I knew that many persons had spoken of shedding tears for sin; but when I asked myself whether the time would ever come when I should weep for mine, it seemed to me that a stone might sooner do it. Not knowing that Christ was exalted to give repentance, I despaired of ever attaining it." A friend came to his bed-side, and declared to him the gospel. He insisted on the all-atoning efficacy of the blood of Jesus, and his righteousness for our justification. "Then," says Cowper, "while I heard this part of his discourse, and the Scriptures on which he founded it, my heart began to burn within me; my soul was pierced with a sense of my bitter ingratitude to so merciful a Saviour; and these tears, which I thought impossible, burst forth freely."—Spurgeon.

18—20. "Probably an interval has elapsed between vss. 17 and 18, but in any case, the people having repented, nothing more is said of their need of doing so, and instead we have from God Himself a series of promises, vss. 19—27, in answer to their cry for mercy. These promises relate to the physical calamity which has been suffered. God will destroy the locusts, still impending on the land, and restore the years which His great army has eaten. There follows in vss. 28—32 the promise of a great outpouring of the Spirit on all Israel, amid terrible manifestations in heaven and earth."—G. A. Smith. (18) jealous, word applied to Jehovah's anxiety to preserve His covenant name from insults. "Jehovah is jealous not for Himself alone but also for His holy people. The idea is found in Deut. xxxii. 36 ff. But the expression is here used for the first time, and afterward Lech. i. 14; viii. 2."—Oehler. (19) send you corn, restoring thus the blessings wh., in judgment, had been destroyed. (20) northern army, these locusts probably came from the north, but there may be a further reference to the enemies from the north wh. other Prophets had threatened. east sea, i. e. the Dead Sea. utmost sea, the Mediterranean. "The description of the removal of the locusts is naturally not to be understood with prosaic literalness: it is intended rather as an imaginative representation of their rapid and complete destruction, though a wind rising first in the N. W., and afterwards gradually veering round to the N. E., would produce approximately the effects indicated." stink, from decaying mass of locusts.^b

Interaction of the Divine and the Human (vs. 13).—We learn—I. That the material condition of a people depends upon the Divine operations. 1. The withdrawal of calamities; 2. The bestowment of blessings. II. That the Divine operations are influenced by the moral condition of the people. III. That the right moral conduct of a people will ensure them Divine benedictions.—Thomas.

God's Mercy.—He is a skillful physician indeed who, finding a man sorely afflicted, not only succeeds in restoring him to health, but actually causes him to be better than he was before, dealing with his medicine, not only with the disease which caused pain, but with some other which lay deeper, but had scarcely been perceived by the patient. Such is the medicine of mercy. Thus graciously doth God deal with repenting sinners. He must be worse than a brute beast who would turn this into an argument for sinning. A true child of God feels the water standing in his eyes when he thinks of such superabounding love.—Free as the sun that shineth, and gilds the mountain's brow, and makes glad the valleys, without fee or reward, so free is the mercy of God to every needy sinner. Free as the air which belts the earth, and penetrates the peasant's cottage, as well as the royal palace, without purchase or premium, so free is the mercy of God in Christ. It tarrieth not for thee; it cometh to thee as thou art. It waylayeth thee in love: it meeteth thee in tenderness.—Spurgeon.—God's Love and Pity.—It will give a kind of exaltation to the saint's happiness to look down upon that moral depth from which he was taken. A man on the edge of a precipice, at night, cannot clearly see it; but when the morning dawns, he will be able to see the danger he has been in. So the saint cannot, while on earth, conceive the depth of sin from which he has been raised; but he will be able to measure it by the light of heaven, and he may go down ages before he comes to the place where he once was: and then to think what he is—how deep once, but how high now—it will augment the sense of happiness and glory:—and then to recollect who has been the cause—

"Repentance—the tear dropped from the eye of faith."

—Spurgeon.

^a Ho. ii. 22.

^b "Locusts perish when blown by a storm into the sea, or the desert, and emit from their putrefying bodies such a stench as often breeds a pestilence."

—Fausset.

"The south and east winds drive the clouds of locusts with violence into the Mediterranean, and drown them in such quantities that when their dead are cast on to the shore, they infect the air to a great distance.—Volney. Wonderful image of the instantaneousness, ease, completeness, of the destruction of God's enemies; a mass of active life exchanged, in a moment, into a mass of death."

—Pusey.

"What are all the forms of moral beauty in the Pharisee of religion, compared with the true and holy life of the heart of the devoted Christian?"—Bishop Thompson.

"A few days ago, the heaviest snow storm of the year, came the evening of a special meeting for the good of the church, and spoiled all the plans we had earnestly and hopefully made. Within a week, everyone of the committee was full of gratitude for the storm for a far better plan was inaugurated."

—Peloubet.

"I never was deeply interested in any object. I never prayed sincerely and earnestly for anything, but it came, at some time, no matter at how distant a day; somehow, in some shape, probably the last I should have devised, it came."—Adoniram Judson.

a "The Prophet had declared that the earth and the animal and the vegetable kingdoms are involved in suffering for man's sin; and he now reveals the joyful truth that they will be renewed in God's mercy, on man's repentance and faith. Comp. Ho. ii. 21—23; Ro. viii. 19—22."—Wordsworth.

b Ps. lxxvii. 6; Zec. viii. 12.

"The Holy Spirit is the all-subduing power of the spiritual realm. Obey the laws of the Spirit, and all His power is at your disposal."—A. T. Pierson.

c Comp. Je. x. 23, xxx. 11.

d "The effect of the seasonable rains shall be abundance of all articles of food."—Fausset.

"If we desired more, we should receive more. It is because our prayers are too narrow, because we only want to fill the cup up within an inch of the top that we are poor; when we are willing that the cup shall run over there comes a springing out from heaven, a pouring down from above of that wh. fills the cup from the great wealth and mercy of our God."—Alexander McKenzie.

and every time he looks down at what he was, it will give greater emphasis to the ascription, "Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father: to him be glory and dominion for ever and ever."—John Foster.—Pray.—The gracious God is pleased to esteem it his glory to have many beggars thronging at the beautiful gate of his temple, for spiritual and corporal alms. What an honor it is to our Great Landlord that multitudes of tenants flock together to his house to pay their rent of thanks and worship for all which they hold of him! How loud and lovely is the noise of many golden trumpets! Good Lord, what an echo do they make in heaven's ears! When many skilful musicians play in concert with well-tuned and prepared instruments, the music cannot but be ravishing to God himself.—George Swinnoek.

21, 22. (21) O land, or O earth. Reference is to the fields, etc., wh. had borne the weight of Divine judgment." great things, in the way of deliverance and restoration. (22) do spring, "are springing with new grass."—G. A. Smith. Start growing again after the time of desolation; see ch. i. 19. their strength, in rich and abundant fruitage."

A Change of Moral Character.—It is too clear for either argument or illustration, that if you change the moral character of any country from ignorance to intelligence, from indolence to industry, from intemperance to self-discipline, from sensuality to spirituality, from enmity to love, that the whole material region in which they live may abound with plentifulness and beauty. Such a change throughout the whole human population to-day will give to all a new heaven and earth.—Thomas.

Golden Harvest of Autumn.—

Autumn! and the red sun through mottled clouds,
Like fire-bark through blue waves, his passage cleaves;
In ripening raiment all the orchard shrouds,
And gilds with glory all the saffron sheaves.
The wind, swift handmaid of the harvest field,
Curling the yellow tresses of the corn,
Brings, on the breaking silence of the morn,
The reapers' song. Lo! where they wildly wield
Their glittering sickles, brandish'd high in air,
Ere they begin their merry toil! and now
The shout is hushed into a murmur low:
The sun advancing from his cloud-girt lair,
Chases from sorest hearts sad dreams of night,
For darkest waters will reflect his light.—Campbell.

23—25. (23) children of Zion, or of Judah; for Joel was a prophet of the southern kingdom. moderately, Heb. "according to righteousness;" R. V., "in just measure." former rain .. latter rain, "the rains which marked respectively the beginning and the close of the wet season, coming in Oct.—Nov. and March—April respectively. The 'former rain' moistens the earth and fits it to receive the seeds which are sown shortly afterwards: the 'latter rain' is important for giving fulness and strength to the ripening crops: if either rain fails, the ensuing harvest is seriously damaged. Comp. Deut. xi. 14; Jer. v. 24. The refreshing and invigorating effects of the 'latter rain' are alluded to in Hos. vi. 3; Prov. xvi. 15; Job xxix. 23: in Jer. iii. 3 it is spoken of as having been 'withheld.'"—Camb. Bib. (24) floors, i. e. the threshing-floors. fats, i. e. vats into wh. the wine and oil were pressed." (25) locust, etc., ch. i. 4.

Repentance Necessary to Regain Lost Blessings.—A man upon the way, having accidentally lost his purse, is questioned by his fellow-traveler where he had it last. "Oh!" says he, "I am confident that I drew it out of my pocket when I was in such a town, at such an inn." "Why, then!" says the other, "there is no better way to have it again than by going back to the place where you last had it." This is the case of many a man in these loose, unsettled times; they have lost their love to Christ, and his truth, since their corn and wine and oil have increased; since outward things are in abundance added unto them they have slighted the light of God's countenance. When they were poor and naked of all worldly comfort, then they sought God's face both early and late, and nothing was more dear and precious unto them than the truth of Christ. What, then, is to be done to recover this lost love to Christ? Back again, back again directly where you last had it! Back to the sign of the broken and contrite heart! There it was that you drew it out into good words and better works; and though it be since lost in the crowd of worldly employments, there and nowhere else, you shall be sure to find it again.—Spencer's "Things New and Old."

26, 27. "The future prosperity is characterized in terms which obviously mark the period which succeeded that of the Babylonish captivity."—Barrows. (26) be satisfied, comp. Lc. xxvi. 5, 26. be ashamed, by reason of disappointed hopes of harvest. This caused shame because it was a sure sign of their Lord's displeasure. (27) I am the Lord your God, Cf. iii. 17. "The phrase is a stereotyped one, which occurs (with or without 'your God') often in certain parts of the O. T., usually to denote the conviction produced by some great act of judgment or deliverance upon those who witness it. In Ezekiel (who uses it—with ye, they, or thou, as the case may be—more than 50 times) it is a standing refrain, coming often at the end of a paragraph, or a prophecy."—Camb. Bib. none else, i. e. no other supposed god has any claim to your allegiance."

The Courage and Confidence of God's People (vs. 26).—I. The nature and grounds of that confidence under which they shall never be moved. 1. They rest on the strong arm of Omnipotence; 2. They build on a firm foundation; 3. They have the promises; 4. The anchor of hope. II. The effect of this godly boldness and confidence. 1. Note the effect of the opposite quality; 2. The godly have a state of peace; 3. They stand up for the cause of God.—W. Stone.

Courage in Lowly Places.—Go ask God's angels where they see the most courage. Not at the cannon's mouth; not at the hilted sword. Go see the saintly Christian mother that, for the space of twenty years, has suffered days and nights of pain, in order to give, literally, her life for her children. Left, when her husband died, a widow, in extreme poverty, she determines, by the love she bore him, as well as by the love she bears them, that they shall grow up to intelligence and education; and through toiling pain, as much as martyrs feel at the stake, by day and by night, willingly, in long months—Oh! how long the year is to misery!—she has given herself to these children. And now, one by one, as they have come upon the stage, in answer to her heroic efforts, they are prospered. But the sands are running out. She has used herself up. And at that time when woman should become matron, and, after all her suffering and shattering, should begin to be serene and happy, her forces are failing; and in poverty she is dying. She looks back upon her whole life, and there has never been a day that has not been bitter. There has never been a day in which she could have lived if she had not believed in God; and now she is dying. Ask God's angels if there is any hero on the battle-field that is so heroic as this poor spent Christian, that is dying, and glad to die, that has literally poured her life out like a cup of bitterness and pain for other people.—Bravery in Reproving Sin.—A merchant and shipowner of New York was standing at the entrance of his warehouses, conversing with a gentleman on business. A pious sailor belonging to one of his vessels came to the warehouse to enter it, but observing that the door was occupied, modestly stepped aside, not willing to interrupt the conversation. While waiting there, he heard the name of Jesus profanely used. "Sir, will you excuse me if I speak a word to you?" "Certainly," replied the merchant. "Well, then, sir," said the sailor, with much feeling, "will you be so kind as not to take the name of my blessed Jesus in vain? He took my feet out of 'the horrible pit and miry clay, and established my goings.' He is your Creator as well as mine; and He has made you, and preserves you, and is always doing you good." This was said with so much earnestness and feeling, that the gentleman was quite touched. His eyes filled with tears, and he said, "My good fellow, God helping me, I will never again take the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, the Saviour, in vain." "Thank you, sir," said the honest tar; and, putting on his hat, he went away to his work.

28, 29. (28) afterward, in the last days; in the Messianic times. The immediate temporal blessings were to be the sign of the future spiritual blessings. pour . . spirit, the gift of the Spirit is presented under the fig-

a. Eze. xxxvii. 26, 27, xxxix. 22; Zep. iii. 15, 17.

"He's truly valiant that can wisely suffer the worst that man can breathe, and make his wrongs his outsidings, to wear them like his raiment, carelessly; and ne'er prefer his injuries to his heart, to bring it into danger."—Shakespeare.

"To stand with a smile upon your face against a stake from which you cannot get away—that, no doubt is heroic. But the true glory is resignation to the inevitable. To stand unchained, with perfect liberty to go away, held only by the higher claims of duty, and let the fire creep up to the heart,—this is heroism."—F. W. Robertson.

When the assembled senate of Rome, begged Regulus not to return to Carthage to fulfill an illegal promise, he calmly replied, "Have you resolved to dishonor me? Torture and death are awaiting me, but what are these to the shame of an infamous act, or the wounds of a guilty mind? Slave as I am to Carthage, I still have the spirit of a Roman. I have sworn to return. It is my duty. Let the gods take care of the rest."—O. S. Marden.

a. Ac. ii. 17.

^b Is. xlv. 3; Eze. xxxix. 29.

^c "Prophecy, visions, dreams, are naturally selected by Joel as being the recognised forms of the manifestation of the Spirit under the old Testament." Spk. Com.

^d Ga. iii. 28; Co. iii. 11.

Such a string of pearls, I think, were never put around the neck of any favorite, as Christ put around the neck of His disciples, when He pronounced the Beatitudes.

"Some one asked an Indian how he became converted. He built a fire in a circle round a worm, and then after the worm had crawled round every way and then lay down to die, he reached over and took him out. That is the way in which God saves us." — D. L. Moody.

^a "We have two kinds of sirocco, one accompanied with vehement wind, which fills the air with dust and fine sand. I have often seen the whole heavens veiled in gloom with this sort of sand-cloud, through which the sun, shorn of his beams, looked like a globe of dull smoldering fire. It may have been this phenomenon which suggested that strong prophetic fig. of Joel. The pillars of smoke are probably those columns of sand and dust raised high in the air by local whirlwinds, which often accompany the sirocco." — Thomson.

^b Mat. xxiv. 29; Mk. xiii. 24; Lu. xxi. 25; Re. vi. 12.

ure of refreshing rains,^b wh. is used in the previous verses. "In the O. T. theocracy the guidance of the Holy Spirit was given (Is. lxiii. 11), but it was the prerogative especially of the prophets, effected by an influence, not an indwelling. The church of the future, on the contrary, is founded upon an outpouring of the Spirit upon all flesh." — Oehler. prophecy, "i. e. will have insight into Divine truth, and will be moved to express it, in the manner which is at present confined to such as specially bear the name of prophets. The term is of course not to be misunderstood, as if it referred merely to predictions relating to the future: the reference is in general to inspired instruction in moral and religious truth. Two special modes of consciousness in which Divine truths frequently presented themselves to the prophet (Num. xii. 6) are then particularized, the dream and the vision: in illustration of the former, see Deut. xiii. 2, Jer. xxiii. 25, 32, xxvii. 9, xxix. 8 (in these passages the dream is spoken of in terms of disparagement, on account of its liability to become a source of self-deception); for the latter, see on Am. i. 1 and vii. 1." — Camb. Bib. dreams, etc., the various modes of Divine communication previously given.^c (29) servants, etc., the new grace would be set under no class restrictions. To the poor the Gospel was preached; and upon the slaves the Divine Spirit came.^d

The Gospel Dispensation (vs. 28). — The Gospel dispensation was to be characterized — I. By spirituality. 1. Formerly the Spirit dwelt with men; 2. Now He dwells in them. II. By liberty. 1. The Gospel finds us in chains; 2. It bursts our bonds asunder. III. Power. 1. Marvellous spiritual signs; 2. Stupendous physical wonders. IV. Expansiveness. 1. Its salvation is universally free; 2. Its conditions are level to all capacities; 3. It triumphs over all conventionalities. — J. A. Macdonald.

Unclaimed Blessings. — The Scottish bankers have published the fact that they have lying in their vaults, a sum of £40,000,000 in unclaimed deposits. Some of those who owned a share of this money may have died in the workhouse. Some of them may be living to this moment in direst need, and they might have their money for the claiming, but they do not know it is theirs. What vast unclaimed deposits are lying in God's Treasury! Some of his people have died spiritually poor; some are living today in spiritual penury, a hand-to-mouth existence with such unclaimed riches lying at call, at deposit in their name. What have we done with our deposit? — John McNeil. — Endless Supply of the Holy Spirit. — In driving between Melbourne and my home, I often stop at a wayside trough to give my horse a drink. I notice that the trough is quite full of water, and that there is a box at one end of it. As the horse drinks, the water is lowering, and presently I hear a sound as of a running tap. Yes, the sound is coming from the box. That box is covering a mechanism that needs explanation. Within it, there is a tap, connected by pipes with the Yan Yean reservoir up in the Plenty Ranges. Attached by the lever to the tap is a metal ball which rests on the surface of the water. As the horse drinks, the water on which the ball is floating is lowered, and thus the ball is lowered. The lowering of the ball opens the tap and the Yan Yean begins to pour in; so that although the water is being withdrawn by the thirsty animal, a fresh supply is being poured in. The trough is being filled so that it is always full. Thus may it be with the soul of the believer .. there is the continual inflow so that there may be the constant "fulness." — McNeil.

30—32. "The signs of approaching judgments which will then appear." (30) wonders, etc., these "features of natural phenomena are not to be regarded as poetic coloring but rest upon the scriptural view of the inalienable connection between the course of nature and the progress of the Divine kingdom. Comp. Is. xlii. 9 ff; Zeph. i. 15 ff." — Oehler.^a (31) sun .. blood,^b these figures may denote the melancholy condition of public affairs previous to the destruction of Jerusalem. There may also be intended a reference to the time of general judgment. (32) whosoever, etc., Ro. x. 13. and in Jerusalem, comp. Lu. xxiv. 47. deliverance, etc., R. V., "there shall be those that escape .. and among the remnant those whom the Lord doth call." remnant, "among the fugitives," G. A. Smith, also Camb. Bib., which refers to those scattered in exile summoned to enjoy Jehovah's salvation.

Note on vss. 28—32.—These words are quoted in Acts ii. 17—21 by St. Peter, with reference to the outpouring of the Spirit upon the Apostles on the day of Pentecost. It would be incorrect, however, to regard a particular occasion as exhausting the fulfilment of the prophecy. Joel's words—like Jer. xxxi. 33 f., for instance,—look rather to that fuller illumination to be enjoyed in general by God's people in the future, which is to be a characteristic of the Christian Church throughout the ages; they are “not a prediction of the event of Pentecost, but of the new order of things of which Pentecost was the first great example.”—Camb. B.

—Two Ways of Deliverance.—There are two ways of deliverance. The Christian is not always delivered from sickness and pain and death, as is witnessed by a long train of saints and martyrs. They are delivered like Peter, or delivered like Stephen with his vision of the Son of God. But they are always delivered, delivered from falling, from the power of temptation, from the powers of evil, which can no more touch them than the flames could touch the three men in Nebuchadnezzar's furnace; they were delivered into the roll of heroes and martyrs, into the company who sing the new song. Many a seeming defeat is a victory. So in the seeming victory of Satan and the world when Christ was crucified there was real defeat. The mightiest blow against the kingdom of evil was struck by that apparent victory. Yet often, very often, there is an earthly deliverance too. “Everyone is immortal and invulnerable till his work is done.” Till then “thou shalt tread upon the lion and adder; the young lion and the dragon shalt thou trample under foot.” “They shall take up serpents in their hands; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them.”—F. N. Peloubet.

Hallowing Effects of Daybreak.—

What soul was his when from the naked top
Of some bold headland he beheld the sun Rise up and bathe the world in light! He look'd—
Ocean and earth, the solid frame of earth
And ocean's liquid mass, beneath him lay
In gladness and deep joy. The clouds were touched,
And in their silent faces did he read Unutterable love. Sound needed none,
Nor any voice of joy; his spirit drank
The spectacle; sensation, soul, and form
All melted into him; they swallowed up
His animal being; in them did he live,
And by them did he live; they were his life.

In such access of mind, in such high hour
Of visitation from the Living God,
Thought was not; in enjoyment it expired;
No thanks he breathed, he proffer'd no request
Rapt into still communion that transcends
The imperfect offices of prayer and praise,
His mind was a thanksgiving to the Power
That made him; it was blessedness and love!—Wordsworth.

CHAPTER THE THIRD.

Hitherto Joel has spoken no syllable of the heathen, except to pray that God by His plagues will not give Israel to be mocked by them. But in the last chapter of the Book we have Israel's captivity to the heathen taken for granted, a promise made that it will be removed and their land set free from the foreigner. Certain nations are singled out for judgment, which is described in the terms of Apocalypse; and the Book closes with the vision, already familiar in prophecy, of a supernatural fertility for the land.—G. A. Smith. 1—3. (1) those days, “the outpouring of the Holy Spirit is here conceived of as a single act amid tremendous natural phenomena. In the fulfilment, however (as in the judgment of the world), that which is momentary in the prophetic intuition is accomplished by a process of long and natural development.”—Oehler. bring again, this is usually referred to a restoration of the Jews wh. is yet to be accomplished.^a (2) all nations, hostile nations, enemies of God's Church. val-

“The soil is full of seeds. Darwin found 500 in a single cup of mud. If a forest covers the ground and shades it from the sun, many seeds will never spring up. But cut down the forest, give light and air, and many other-wise unknown plants will come into being, and cover the ground with their luxuriance. So with our souls; if we cut down the prejudices and worldliness, and let the Holy Spirit shine upon our souls, many talents and powers will develop that otherwise would have been unknown.” — Peloubet.

^a “The Prophet comprises the whole redemption, beginning from the return out of Babylon, then continued from the first advent of Christ down to the last day (His second advent) when God will restore His Church to perfect felicity.” —Calvin.

Je. xxx. 3.

b 2 Chr. xx.

"There is no reference to the valley close beside Jerusalem which has been thus named. At what period the name was first applied to that spot is not known; there is no trace of it in the Bible or Josephus."

—Grove.

c "After Hadrian's Jewish war four Jews were sold for a measure of barley at Hebron."

—Spk. Com.

d "These were some of the Jews' evil neighbors, who took all occasions to distress them."

—Lowth.

e Gen. x. 2, 4.

f Eze. xxvii. 13.

"So hideous were the cruelties practised by Oriental victors upon their captives, that, were it not for the most convincing evidence in sculpture and inscription, where the perpetrators glory in their deeds, we should hardly believe it possible for men to treat their fellow-creatures with such barbarity." — Wm. Ewing.

"Corrupted freed-men are the worst of slaves." — Gar-rick.

ley of Jehoshaphat, or the valley of Divine judgment, such as was revealed in the days of Jehoshaphat." plead, see Is. lxvi. 16; Eze. xxxviii. 22. parted my land, this was done by the Chaldeans and Romans. (3) cast lots, Na. iii. 10. boy, etc., "during the Jewish war Titus took 97,000 prisoners, of whom he publicly sold all that were under 17 years of age."

Valley.—In the days of Joel valleys were the usual fields of battle, mountainous and wooded country being unfavorable to the movements, tactics, and strategical combinations of ancient military art. Naturally, therefore, the Prophet would select some valley as the arena of the final conflict. But this conflict was also to be a judgment. Was it possible to select a valley whose very name should convey the idea of judgment and of Divine judgment? Yes; close outside the eastern wall of Jerusalem lay a valley, known as the valley of Jehoshaphat. Jehoshaphat means. "Jehovah judges." Here ready to his hand were the very symbols the Prophet required. The scene of the final conflict and the final judgment would be the valley in which Jehovah judgeth and will judge.—S. Cox.

4—6. (4) what . . Palestine?^a R. V., "Yea, and what are ye to me . . and all the regions of Philistia?" i. e. "Why do ye too, even now, harass my people?" will ye render, etc., "will ye repay a deed of mine, or will ye do aught unto me?" (R. V. marg.) i. e. is there any injustice that I have done to you (through Israel) which you would avenge, or would you even assail me gratuitously? The question is a rhetorical one, to which of course a negative answer is expected: their treatment of Israel has been unprovoked; it is they, and not Israel, who merit vengeance; accordingly the retort follows, "Swiftly and speedily will I return your deed (R. V. marg.) upon your own head."—Camb. B. (5) my silver, Mine because belonging to My people. (6) the Grecians, or people of Javan;^o Ionians, a Greek colony on the coast of Asia Minor, who were the first Greeks known to the Jews. "It is said particularly of Javan (i. e. Greece), that they dealt in that sort of traffic, the buying and selling of slaves."

Persecution.—Oh, if when we oppress and goad our fellow-creatures, we bestowed but one thought upon the dark evidences of human error, which, like dense and heavy clouds, are rising slowly, it is true, but not less surely, to heaven, to pour their after-vengeance on our heads—if we heard but one instant, in imagination, the deep testimony of dead men's voices, which no power can stifle, and no pride can shut out, where would be the injury and injustice, the suffering, misery, cruelty, and wrong, that each day's life brings with it.—Dickens.—Slavery (vs. 3).—Morgan, in his History of Algiers, gives us such an account of the unfortunate expedition of the Emperor Charles V. against that city, so far resembling a passage of the Prophet Joel as to induce me to transcribe it into these papers. That author tells us, that besides vast multitudes that were butchered by the Moors and the Arabs, a great number were made captives, mostly by the Turks and citizens of Algiers; and some of them, in order to turn this misfortune into a most bitter, taunting, and contemptuous jest, parted with their new-made slaves for an onion apiece. "Often have I heard," says he, "Turks and Africans upbraiding Europeans with this disaster, saying, scornfully, to such as have seemed to hold their heads somewhat loftily, 'What! have you forgot the time when a Christian at Algiers was scarce worth an onion?' The treatment of the Jewish people by the heathen nations, which the Prophet Joel has described, was, in like manner, contemptuous and bitterly sarcastic. They that know the large sums that are wont to be paid, in the East, for young slaves of either sex, must be sensible that the Prophet designs, in these words, to point out the extreme contempt in which these heathen nations held the Jewish people."—Harmer.

7, 8. (7) raise them, by restoring either them or their posterity. (8) sell your sons, "you sold the children of Judah into slavery to a nation far off in the North West; I will sell your children into the hand of the Judahites, that they may sell them into slavery to a nation far off in the South East," this was fulfilled when, at the taking of Tyre, Alexander sold 30,000 of the inhabitants for slaves; at the same time Gaza, a town on the coast of Palestine, was sacked, and the women and children sold for slaves. Sabeans, people of Sheba, at the remote extremity of Arabia Felix.*

True Liberty.—Liberty is the fullest opportunity for man to be and do the very best that is possible for him. . . You see a man coming forward and offering himself as one of the defenders of his country in his country's need. You see him standing at the door where men are being received as recruits into the army of the country. He wants liberty. He wants to be able to do that which he cannot do in his poor, personal isolation here at home. He wants the badge which will give him the right to go forth and meet the enemies of his country and he enrolls himself among these men. He makes himself subject to obligations, duties, drill. They are a part of his enfranchisement. They are really the breaking of the fetters upon his slavery, the sending him forth into freedom. . . This, then, is freedom; everything is part of the enfranchisement of a man which helps to put him in the place where he can live his best. Therefore every duty, every will of God, every commandment of Christ, every self-surrender that a man is called upon to obey or to make—do not think of it as if it were simply a restraint to liberty, but think of it as the very means of freedom by which we realize the very purpose of God, and the fulfilment of our life.—Phillips Brooks.—Abraham Lincoln and Slavery.—If ever the face of a man writing solemn words, glowed with a solemn joy, it must have been the face of Abraham Lincoln as he bent over the page where the Emancipation Proclamation of 1863 was growing into shape, and giving manhood and freedom as he wrote it to hundreds of thousands of his fellowmen. . . And as the swarthy multitudes came in, ragged and tired, and hungry, and ignorant, but free forever from anything but the memorial scars of the fetters and the whip, singing rude songs in which the new triumph of freedom struggled and heaved below the sad melody that had been shaped for bondage; as in their camps and hovels, there grew up to their half-superstitious eyes the image of a great Father, almost more than man, to whom they owed their freedom—were they not half right?—P. Brooks.

9, 10. "After the digression on the Phoenicians and Philistines (vss. 4—8), the thought of vss. 1—3 is resumed; and the description of the judgment on the nations, announced in vs. 2 is continued. The heathen are invited to arm themselves, and advance for the great contest with Israel in the valley of Jehoshaphat, vss. 9—12; but once arrived there, they are annihilated, amid celestial portents, by the agents of Jehovah's will, whom He commissions to engage with them, while His own people look on securely."—Camb. Bib.* (9) Proclaim,^b etc., "the words are addressed to those whose duty it would be to make such a proclamation, i. e. the heralds, whom the prophet pictures as ready to carry Jehovah's command to the nations." (10) Beat, etc., comp. Is. ii. 4. pruninghooks, the sickles; not, as marg., the scythe, an instrument quite unknown in the East. am strong, the general rage against God's people would lead even the weak and the aged to join the army.

The Syrian Plough (vs. 10).—The Syrian plough, which was probably used in all the regions around, is a very simple frame, and commonly so light, that a man of moderate strength might carry it in one hand. Volney states that in Syria it is often nothing else than the branch of a tree, cut below a bifurcation, and used without wheels. It is drawn by asses and cows, seldom by oxen. And Dr. Russell informs us, the ploughing of Syria is performed often by a little cow, at most with two, and sometimes only by an ass. In Persia it is, for the most part, drawn by one ox only, and not unfrequently even by an ass, although it is more ponderous than in Palestine. With such an imperfect instrument the Syrian husbandman can do little more than scratch the surface of his field, or clear away the stones or weeds that encumber it, and prevent the seed from reaching the soil. The ploughshare is a "piece of iron, broad, but not large, which tips the end of the shaft." So much does it resemble the short sword used by the ancient warriors, that it may, with very little trouble, be converted into that deadly weapon; and when the work of destruction is over, reduced again to its former shape.—Paxton.

^a Je. vi. 20; Eze. xliii. 42.

"When liberty is gone, life grows insipid, and has lost its relish." — Addison.

The following sentence forms the striking inscription to be found in an inn at Savoy: "Understand well the force of the words, a God, a moment, an eternity; — God who sees thee, a moment which flees from thee, an eternity which awaits thee; a God, whom you serve so ill; a moment, of which you so little profit, an eternity which you hazard so rashly."

^b Zec. xiv. 2, 3.

"The word prepare war, is lit. sanctify war, bec. the heathen always began war with religious ceremonies."—Fausset.

"Here, as in other respects, the predictions and promises are but partially fulfilled in the literal Israel. Their real accomplishment, their awful completion, will be when Zion's King comes in glory and majesty, with a rod of iron, to dash in pieces the great anti-christian confederacy of kings and peoples, and to take possession of his long-promised and dearly-bought inheritance. The signs of the times seem to indicate that the coming of the Lord draws nigh."

—Hom. Com.

* "The Mohammedans have borrowed from the Jews a tradition, which locates the judgment in the Kidron, or valley of Jehoshaphat." — Porter.

"Enslave a man, and you destroy his ambition, his enterprise, his capacity. In the constitution of human nature, the desires of bettering one's condition is the mainspring of effort. The first touch of slavery snaps this spring." — Mann.

"Timorous obeyed Christ through fear, and Christ rewarded him; Faithful with delight, and Christ loved him."

"Without reverence there is no obedience; without obedience there is no reverence."

a Mat. xiii. 30—39.

b "Like sheaves crushed on the threshing-floor by the sharp toothed instrument which was formed with revolving cylinders, and by which they were threshed."

—Wordsworth.

"Nature shall make me careful of myself, but hateful to none: reason shall make me wise for myself, but harmless to all; religion shall make me loving to all, but not careless of myself. I may hear the former, I will hearken only to the latter. I subscribe to some things in all, to all things in religion." — Warwick.

c Je. xiv. 30; Am. i. 2, iii.

11, 12. (11) Assemble, R. V., "Haste ye and come." thy mighty ones, "the prophet suddenly turns aside to address Jehovah: he has bidden the nations assemble, for the contest against Israel, in the valley of Jehoshaphat: he now prays Jehovah to cause His warriors also to descend thither to meet them. The mighty ones are, no doubt, the angelic hosts (Ps. lxxviii. 17; Zech. xiv. 5), whom Joel pictures as the agents of Jehovah's will, and who are called in Ps. ciii. 20 the 'mighty in strength.'"—Camb. Bib. (12) be wakened, R. V., "bestir themselves." there, not in the valley near Jerusalem, but in the ideal spot named in vs. 2 the valley of Jehoshaphat, i. e. of God's judgment.

Valley of Jehoshaphat.—This valley, running from north to south, between Jerusalem and the Mount of Olives, is a little more than a mile long. Its greatest breadth is supposed to be from 150 to 200 yards, but in other places it is only a deep, narrow ravine. The bottom is ordinarily dry, excepting after heavy rains. The valley is rocky on both sides, and abounds in sepulchres of various shapes and sizes, with only a few scattered olives to relieve the eye. For nearly three thousand years it has been used as a place of burial by Jews, Mohammedans, and Christians. In addition to the tombs of kings and patriarchs, there are tens of thousands of stones, the only memorials of the mighty dead. Thither persons repair from all parts of the world, to seek from the Turks a last resting-place for their bodies, even though it be at great cost, believing that Christ will there appear in judgment. "The valley is divided into three parts, of which the northern is called the Valley of Kedron; the middle the Valley of Jehoshaphat; and the southern the Valley of Siloam, from the fountain of that name on the one side, and the village on the other. These three names are also applied, respectively, to the whole extent of the valley, but that of the Valley of Siloam less frequently than the other two." It is also called the King's Dale (2 Sam. xviii. 18), and the Vale of Shaveh (Gen. xiv. 17).—Meen.

13, 14. (13) Put . . sickle, Re. xiv. 15. "The sickles of the East, as represented on Egyptian monuments, resembled ours, only were smaller."—Barrows. harvest is ripe, i. e. the wickedness of the wicked is come to a head, and demands Divine interference. (14) valley of decision, "this and the following verses, instead of expressly narrating the execution of the Divine command, present a picture of it. In one part the prophet sees in vision and shows us pictorially the multitudes of the nations pouring on in one continuous stream into the fatal valley." "Philip, king of Macedon, as he was wrestling at the Olympic games, fell down in the sand; and, when he rose again, observing the print of his body in the sand, cried out, 'O how little a parcel of earth will hold us, when we are dead, who are ambitiously seeking after the whole world whilst we are living!'" — Whitecross.

Valley of Jehoshaphat.—Wilson, in the Lands of the Bible, says: "One of the most picturesque, and, at the same time, deeply interesting scenes, is the Valley of Jehoshaphat viewed from the brow of the hill descending from the high places of Tophet. There is a magnificence in its outlining which lives in the memory. It cannot be forgotten. The bed of the brook Kedron lies along the lowest part of it; and on either side, fig, olive, and pomegranate trees cast a lovely shade; while gardens of melons and cucumbers give an idea of fresh luxuriance. On either side of the valley the heights are terraced, and in some places slightly cultivated, and the breadth of the valley is very bold and striking. Independent of all the heart-stirring associations which Scripture narrative gives rise to, the Valley of Jehoshaphat, viewed from south to north, on the east side of the city, is a scene in which a gifted painter would luxuriate. On the right slope, north of En-rogel, and formed by the meeting of the valleys of Hinnom and Jehoshaphat, are the best cultivated gardens near Jerusalem, and undoubtedly those mentioned in Scripture by the name of King's Garden. The present gardens are watered by channels and streamlets from the Pool of Siloam. Their trees and kitchen vegetables are of the finest quality. Close upon the gardens there is an aged mulberry tree, surrounded by a stone terrace which, it is said, marks the spot where the Prophet Isaiah was sawn asunder."

15—17. (15) sun . . darkened, ch. ii. 31. (16) roar, as a lion.° hope

.. people, R. V. "but the Lord will be a refuge unto his people and a stronghold to the children of Israel." (17) holy, consecrated entirely to God. strangers .. more, comp. Is. xxxv. 8; Je. xxx. 8; Ob. 17; Re. xxi. 27; this refers to the reign of peace, the new city of God is no more to be desecrated by enemies.

Note on vss. 15, 16.—The densely packed masses are already in the valley of decision, awaiting the judgment about to be executed upon them. But before the judgment actually bursts upon them, and in preparation for it, the sky is overcast; darkness, as a portent of the approaching storm, envelops them; the lights of heaven are put out. The pitchy darkness of a night in which neither moon nor stars appear is sufficiently dismal and awful; still more terrible, if possible, is darkness in the daytime, when the light of the sun is turned into blackness. The first accompaniment of the storm is addressed to the eye, and consists in the extinguishing of the greater light which rules the day, and the lesser lights which rule the night. The next accompaniment of the coming tempest is addressed to the ear, and consists in the voice of the Lord rolling in terrific peals along the heavens—the voice of the Lord like the roaring of a lion ready to pounce upon its prey; the utterance of the Divine voice when the God of glory thundereth. The third accompaniment is yet more awe-inspiring, consisting in a convulsion that pervades both earth and sky; the whole frame of nature shakes; the earthquake's shock, so frightful to bird and beast and man, has a corresponding agitation in the heavens.—Pulp. Com. God, the only Judge.—Elizabeth said she felt the blood of a hundred kings in her veins, burning in anger, or rising in pride; we who are not in the line of kings nominally may be in a mysterious line nevertheless. The drunken ancestor; the diseased mind; the relative that died two hundred years ago a raving maniac; the saintly mother and the saintly grandmother, Eunice and Lois; the man that prayed all day, and thought the day too short because he had more to say to God; all these are in a man. What wonder if in the morning he blaspheme, and at night he pray, if this moment he rave like one in whose disordered brain "reason has lost her way," and the next moment be giving himself out in acts of love, in alms of tender pity and all-including charity? Who can judge him? Only the Lord. The Lord knows every drop of blood that is in the fountain of the heart; the Lord, the mighty Judge, presides over that fountain, and says concerning each drop, This tells of five centuries ago: this drop tells of the praying soul that importuned my throne, and took many blessings by gracious violence; this drop has in it bodily disease, poison generated a century since. He knows our frame, he remembereth that we are but dust; let him judge; let no man ascend the judgment seat.—Peop. Bib.

"God's sieve drives away the chaff, and saves the wheat."

Satan's sieve saves the chaff, and drives away the wheat."

—Van Doren.

Safety in God.—The only place of safety in this world is the one in which we are sure to meet God, and to be "under the shadow of his wing." The Bible sets forth, in grand metaphor, this idea, by speaking of a "fortress into which the righteous runneth, and is safe;" and of "a strong tower," and of "the shadow of a great rock." When we were in the Yosemite Valley, lately, our driver told us of a series of terrific earthquakes, which visited the valley several years ago. The few inhabitants who dwelt there were thrown out of their beds in the night. Frail cottages were overturned. Loose rocks were hurled down from the precipices into the valley. These shocks were repeated for several days until the people were panic-stricken and ready to despair. "What did you do?" we inquired. The driver (pointing to the mighty and immovable rock, El Capitan, which rises for three thousand feet on the south side of the valley, and has a base of three solid miles) replied: "We determined to go and camp under old Capitan; for if that ever moved we knew the world would be coming to an end."—Cuyler.

18—21. (18) drop, etc., comp. Am. ix. 13. Figurative for abundance of vines grown on the terraced hill-sides. fountain, "peace is also to pervade nature. The harmony between it and man, which, according to Gen. iii. was disturbed by sin, is to be restored: the Holy Land is to be glorified, and a fountain of life to flow from the Temple (Ezek. xlvi. 6

Awakening the heathen or minds like slaves. "Have you ever heard the gospel before?" asked an Englishman, at Ningpo, of a respectable Chinaman, whom he had not seen in his mission-room before. "No," he replied, "but I have seen it. I know a man who used to be the terror of his neighborhood. If you gave him a hard word, he would shout at you, and curse you for two days and nights without ceasing. He was as dangerous as a wild beast, and a bad opium-smoker; but when the religion of Jesus took hold of him, he became wholly changed. He is gentle, moral, not soon angry, and has left off opium. Truly, the teaching is good!"—Word and Work.

a Zec. xiv. 8; Re. xxii. 1.

If I had the choice of preaching like Gabriel, swaying men at my will, without winning them to Christ, or taking them one by one in private and leading them to the truth, how gladly would I choose the latter!

—D. E. Moody.

If you are beginning to despair of ever emerging from the clouds that overshadow you, search your life for the sin that is devouring that immortal assurance of victory given to every soul that will serve God by obedience to his law; look for the causes of your defeat, not in your inheritance nor in your surroundings, but in yourself. Victory lies within reach of every true life; at all costs set yourself to win it.—Christian Union.

seq.).—Oehler. (19) Egypt .. and Edom, types of the enemies of Israel. (20) Judah .. ever, this is true if regarded spiritually, and Judah be put for the Church of God in the world. (21) cleanse, R. V. marg. "And I will hold as innocent their blood which I have not held as innocent." "By the desolation of Egypt and Edom, Jehovah will shew openly that the murdered Judahites (vs. 19) had suffered innocently. So long, namely, as He permitted their blood to remain unavenged, it might be supposed that they had not been slain unjustly: but by the punishment of the murderers, Jehovah declares (implicitly), what He had not declared before, that their blood was innocent and had been unjustly shed."—Camb. Bib.

God and the Church (vs. 21).—I. The Church is the greatest witness for God. 1. As decidedly opposed to the principles and practices of the great mass of mankind; 2. A great proportion of mankind have in every age opposed the Church; 3. Still the Church has not only existed but increased. II. The Church is the brightest revelation of God. 1. By publishing God's own revelations; 2. By imitating His moral perfections. III. The Church is the highest instrument of God. 1. It ameliorates the outward sufferings of the world; 2. It converts the moral heart of the world.—Caleb Morris.

Safe in God's Hands.—Possibly ye may be hid from punishment, probably ye shall escape sorrow: but pardon of sin ye shall be sure of; mitigation also of sorrow, if not prevention of it. Saved ye shall be, or more gently handled, or so inwardly calmed, that ye shall be able to call your souls to rest when others are at their wits' ends. You shall be safe under the cover of God's wings, and in the hollow of his hand; when others, that are without God in the world, shall be as a naked man in a storm, as an unarmed man in the field of battle, or as a ship at sea without an anchor, subject to dash and split against rocks and quicksands.—Trapp. God's Marvelous Love to Man.—If it would be marvelous to see one river leap up from the earth full-grown, what would it be to gaze upon a vast spring from which all the rivers of the earth should at once come bubbling up, a thousand of them born at a birth? What a vision would it be! Who can conceive it? And yet the love of God is that fountain, from which all the rivers of mercy, which have ever gladdened our race—all the rivers of grace in time, and of glory hereafter—take their rise. My soul, stand thou at that sacred fountain-head, and adore and magnify for ever and ever God, even our Father, who hath loved us.—C. H. Spurgeon.

Introduction.

I. Author. Amos, a native of Tekoah, a small town of Judah, ab. 12 ms. S. of Jerusalem; at least, this was his ordinary dwelling-place. He was not trained in the prophetic schools, and is said to have been among the shepherds of Tekoah (i. 1); he also describes himself as a gatherer of sycomore fruit, and says that he was taken from the flock (vii. 14, 15); but though this seems to indicate a mean condition, and none but the poorest (we are told by travelers) now gather or use sycomore fruit in Palestine, yet it does not follow that Amos was uneducated—a mere working man. David was taken from the sheepfolds; and the word used in Am. i. 1 is the same that is applied to Mesha, the tributary king of Moab (2 Kings iii. 4). II. Time. (B.C. 860-850.) We only know that Amos must have prophesied somewhere during the last part of the reign of Jeroboam II., when he was contemporary with Uzziah. The very specific date, "two years before the earthquake," indicates that his whole mission to Israel was executed within a single year, perhaps within a few months. It seems to have been after his return to Judah, when at least two years had elapsed, that he collected his prophecies and put them into their present form. III. Style. It has not the flowing fulness of Joel, but charms the reader by its freshness and simplicity. His writings abound in images taken from rural scenes and employments, some of which are very unique and striking in their character. The composition would seem to show that Amos was not a coarse rustic, but a person of considerable attainments. His book is cited twice in the New Testament (Acts vii. 42, 43, xv. 15, 17). "Amos is the earliest of the prophets whose writings we possess, and his book is a short one; nevertheless it is surprisingly full of acute observation of men and manner, and of teaching, at once profound and lofty, on the things of God. He is not more conspicuous on account of his literary power than for the breadth of human interest, embracing both acute observation, and wide historical knowledge, which his writings display. 'As a wool-grower, he must have had his yearly journeys among the markets of the land; and to such were probably due his opportunities of familiarity with Northern Israel, the originals of his vivid pictures of her town-life, her commerce, and the worship at her great sanctuaries.' The breadth of Amos' thought is apparent at once in the fundamental element in his theology, his conception of Jehovah. He is Jehovah of Hosts, i.e. the God who has untold forces and powers at His command; in other words, the All-Sovereign or the Omnipotent. There is a note of austerity in the terms in which Amos speaks. With him God is the God of righteousness; he himself is the apostle of righteousness; he is the preacher, whose moral nature is moved by the spectacle of outraged right, but who does not unbend in affection or sympathy: on the contrary, he announces Israel's doom with the austere severity of the judge."—Cambridge Bible.

Synopsis.

(According to the Pulpit Commentary.)

PART I. Approaching judgment: a prelude. i. 11.

- Sec. 1. Summons of the nations bordering on the Holy Land.....i.—ii. 3.
- Sec. 2. Summons of Judah.....ii. 4, 5.
- Sec. 3. Summons and general denunciation of Israelii. 6—16.

PART II. Three addresses particularizing the sins of Israel and announcing imminent punishmentiii.—vi.

- Sec. 1. First addressiii.

- Sec. 2. Second addressiv.
- Sec. 3. Third addressv. vi.

PART III. Five visions, with explanations, vii.—ix. 10.

- Sec. 1. First vision: locusts.....vii. 1—3.
- Sec. 2. Second vision: fire.....vii. 4—6.
- Sec. 3. Third vision: plumb-line.....vii. 7—9.
- Sec. 4. Historical parenthesis.....vii. 10—17.
- Sec. 5. Fourth vision: basket of fruits, viii. 1—14.
- Sec. 6. Fifth vision: the Lord at the altar, ix. 1—10.

PART IV. Epilogue: establishment of the new kingdomix. 11—15.

CHAPTER THE FIRST.

1, 2. (1) words of, comp. Je. i. 1. Amos, = "borne up, or a burden;" perhaps in allusion to the grievous message he had to deliver. Probably the earliest of the written Prophets. Though a native of Judah, his prophecies chiefly bear reference to the northern kingdom. among, i.e. one of, herdmen, or shepherds; the term used appears to indicate his care of a particular breed of sheep.^a Tekoa, six miles S. from Bethlehem, concerning Israel, the Northern kingdom. days of Jereboam, i.e. Jereboam II., whose great military prowess advanced Israel to the acme of its national greatness (775-745 B.C.) earthquake, Zec. xiv. 5.^b (2) The Lord, the prophet uses the word Yohiveh, i.e. Jehovah, the personal name by wh. God was known to the Hebrews. roar, like a lion about to pounce upon his prey. Joel iii:16. utter, etc., like the rolling thunder. habitations, R. V. "pastures," i.e. the south country, the chief part for flocks. top, or headland. The Prophet intimates thus that the whole land from south to north shall suffer under the judgments.

A Sketch of Amos (vs. 1).—I. The sphere of life in which he moved. 1. Worldly pride Divinely rebuked; 2. Human nature Divinely honored. II. The age in which he lived. 1. The political event of this period; 2. The physical event of this period. III. The mission to which he was called,—he announced a judgment as coming. 1. According to his vision; 2. In a terrible form; 3. An issuing from a scene of mercy; 4. As fraught with calamitous results.—Thomas.

Station in Life.—Low station is no obstacle to God's favor. Men great in science, literature, and art, apostles of great thoughts and lords of the great heart,—have sprung indiscriminately from the English farm and the Scotch hill-side, from the workshop and the mines, from the blacksmith's stithy, and the cobbler's stool. The illustrations which present themselves are indeed numerous. Take, for instance, the remarkable fact that from the barber's shop rose Sir Richard Arkwright, the inventor of the spinning-jenny, and the founder of the cotton manufacture of Great Britain; Lord Tenterden, one of the most distinguished of English Lord Chief Justices; and Turner, the very greatest among landscape-painters.—Cardinal Wolsey.

3—5. (3) Damascus, the capital of Syria. The first denunciation lights upon the Syrian kingdom of Damascus, the best-organized and most formidable of Israel's neighbors, with whom, shortly before, during the 80 years of the "Syrian wars" (c. 880—800 B.C.), the dynasties of Omri and Jehu had had many a severe struggle.—Cam. B. for four, in this poetical form Amos declares that the sin punished has been continued and aggravated after warning.^c turn away, so as to prevent it from falling. God "turns away" judgments upon men's repentance, but a time comes when they can be turned away no longer. threshed, etc.,^d typical example of Syrian transgression; ref. to the cruelties of Hazael during his invasions against Gilead. See 2 Ki. x. 32, 33. (4) fire,^e used as a symbol of destructive warfare. house, dynasty. Ben-hadad, either Hazael's son, who continued the paternal cruelties; or the monarch then reigning in Syria. (5) bar, wh. fastens the city-gate, and so lay the city at the command of its enemy. inhabitant, R. V. marg. "him that sitteth on the throne," cf. vs. 8. plain of Aven, Cœle Syria, the country between Libanus and Anti-Libanus.^f house of Eden, this is prob. a proper name; Beth-eden, some town in the N., perhaps the modern Ehden, 20 m. N.W. of Baalbek. Kir, Is. xxii. 6.^g

Ideal Cruelty is Utterly Indiscriminate.—Elisha's prophecy to Hazael (2 Kings viii. 12), of which this horrid butchery was the fulfilment, mentions women and children as the chief victims of the outrage. There is a bloodhound instinct in wicked men which is aroused to fury by the taste of blood. The horrors of the French Revolution and of the Spanish Inquisition reveal it in the infidel and the fanatic respectively. It knows no distinction of age, or condition, or sex. It simply wants to "slay, and slay, and slay." It is a humiliating thought about our species, but it is a fact that must be faced by all who would humanize the race. The tie of ^a "The word is from an Arab root, to mark with pricks, or, as some say, a species of sheep and goats ill-shapen and short-footed, but distinguished by their wool."

—Fausset.

^b Josephus relates it as a tradition among the Jews that this earthquake was sent as a punishment for Uziah's presumption in invading the priest's office. 2 Chr. xxxi. 18, 19.—Lowth.

^c It is a common way of speaking, to use a certain number for an uncertain, e.g. Job v. 19; Pr. xxx. 15, 18, 21, 29.

^d "The threshers was a sort of wain, that moves on iron wheels set with teeth, so that it threshes out the corn, and breaks the straw in pieces." —S. Jerome.

^e Nu. xxi. 28; De. xxxii. 22.

^f "Eden is prob. Beite-l-janne (House of Paradise) situated 8½ hours from Damascus on the way from Banias."—Porter.

^g 2 Ki. xvi. 9.

Defoe, Aken-side and Kirke White were the sons of butchers; Bunyan was a tinker, and Joseph Lancaster a basket-maker. Michel Faraday, the son of a poor blacksmith was in early life apprenticed to a book-binder and . . . he now occupies the very first rank as a philosopher, excelling even his master, Sir Humphrey Davy.—Smiles.

a "Ashdod stood about 3 miles from the Mediterranean, midway between Joppa and Gaza, on the great high road from Egypt into Palestine. It was hence a place of importance, and was frequently besieged."

—Ayre.

"Levity will operate with greater force, in some instances than rigor. It is therefore my first wish, to have my whole conduct distinguished by it." —Geo. Washington.

b Is. xxiii. 1, etc.; Je. xlvii. 4; Eze. xxvi. 2—21, xxvii. 2—36, xxviii. 1—26.

"Cruelty to the helpless, and persecution of God's people, ripen nations and individuals for destruction with great rapidity."

—Hom. Com.

c For the enmity of Edom to Israel comp. 2 Chr. xxviii. 17; Je. xlix. 7; Eze. xxv. 12, xxxv. 2; Joel iii. 19; Ob. 1—11.

d "Edom was a kingdom 500 yrs. before there reigned any king in Israel. Now it is a field of waste desolations. The sand from the Red Sea has absorbed nearly all its springs and streams, and made it one sheet of desert, from Mount Sinai to Moab. The sand is so deep that it is utterly out of the power of man ever again to cultivate the land." (Mal. i. 4).—Gadsby.

blood is perhaps a natural one, and respected more or less by even heathen peoples, as it is by the very beasts that perish. But even this scarcely operates beyond the filial relation and the period of childhood. And then, as for friendship and philanthropy, they have no place in the sphere of mere nature.—Pulp. Com.

6—8. (6) Gaza, Ge. x. 19; Jos. xiii. 3. carried, etc., the Philistines seem, without excuse of war, to have descended upon certain districts and swept the whole of the population before them, for purely commercial purposes. It was professional slave-catching. The Philistines were exactly like the Arabs of to-day in Africa—not warriors who win their captives in honorable fight, but slave-traders, pure and simple.—Exp. B. Comp. 2 Chr. xxi. 16, 17; Joel iii. 6. (7) fire, figure of speech as in v. 4. (8) Ashdod,^a Jos. xv. 46, 47. Celebrated for its worship of Dagon. holdeth the sceptre, i.e. the prince, or lord, of the place.^b Ashkelon, Ju. i. 18. In later times famous for the worship of Derceto, the Syrian Venus. turn mine hand, i.e. bring my hand again upon. Ekron, Jos. xiii. 3. In the plain country, on the N.W. border of Judah. remnant, the last of the people; comp. Eze. xxv. 16; Je. xlvii. 4.

Persecution a Most Cruel Crime.—What ruthless inhumanities are in these verses charged against the various peoples mentioned—those of Damascus, Gaza, Tyrus, etc.! It has often been observed that no anger is so savage as the anger which springs up between relations of blood. A brotherly hate is the chief of hates; and it may be truly said that there is no animosity that burns with a more hellish heat than that connected with religion.—Pulp. Com. Cruelty to the helpless, and persecution of God's people, ripen nations and individuals for destruction with great rapidity.—Hom. Com.

9, 10. (9) Tyrus, represents the kingdom of Phœnicia, Jos. xix. 29.^b delivered, etc., not slave-catchers, but slave-merchants, middlemen. brotherly covenant, see 1 Ki. v. 1, 12, ix. 13. (10) fire, etc., fulfilled when it was taken by Nebuc. after a thirteen years' siege.

The Brotherly Covenant.—The allusion is commonly supposed to be to the league, or "covenant," concluded between Hiram and Solomon, 1 Ki. v. 12 (for "brother" used figuratively of one joined in amity to another, see 1 Ki. ix. 13, xx. 32); but it is scarcely likely that the crowning offence of Tyre should be forgetfulness of a treaty entered into nearly 300 years previously; more probably the reference is to the way in which, repudiating some alliance formed with other Phœnician towns, the Tyrians were the means of procuring slaves from them for Edom. As ii. 1 shews, Amos does not restrict his censure to wrongs perpetrated against Israel: it is the rights common to humanity at large, which he vindicates and defends.—Camb. B.

11, 12. (11) Edom, S. of the Dead Sea, the S. part of the Arabah, Ge. xxv. 30. his brother, see Nu. xx. 14.^c cast . . . pity, Heb. "corrupted his compassions." kept, nursed in a spirit of revenge. (12) Teman . . . Bozrah, two principal cities of Edom.^d See Ge. xxxvi. 11, 33.

Advantage of Pity.—When the Grecians had won Troy, before they fell to plunder it, they gave every man leave to bear his burden out of what he would. And, first of all, Æneas marched out, carrying his household gods; which when they saw, and that he did them no great damage thereby, they bade him take another burthen; which he did, and returned with his old father, Anchises, on his back, and his young son, Ascanius, in hand. Which the Grecians seeing, passed by his house, as Joshua did by the house of Rahab, saying, that no man should hurt him that was so religious. And thus that man that hath his mind set on his God shall receive no hurt by his enemy; for, when a man's ways please the Lord, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him. Nay, he shall be "in league with the stones of the field, and the beasts of the field shall be at peace with him." And, which is yet more, God will break the bow and the sword, and snap the spear asunder: he will make all those terrible instruments of war so unserviceable, that they shall lie down quietly by him, not offering the least hurt that may be.

Casting Off Pity.—"Bonaparte," says Robert Wilson, "having carried the town of Jaffa by assault, many of the garrison were put to the sword, but the greater part flying to the mosques, and imploring mercy from their pursuers, were granted their lives. Three days afterwards, Bonaparte, who had expressed much resentment at the compassion manifested by his troops, and determined to relieve himself from the maintenance and care of 3,800 prisoners, ordered them to be marched to a rising ground near Jaffa, where a division of French infantry formed against them. When the Turks had entered into their fatal alignment, and the mournful preparations were completed, the signal gun fired. Volleys of musketry and grape instantly played against them, and Bonaparte, who had been regarding the scene through a telescope, when he saw the smoke ascending, could not contain his joy."

Radiance of Pity.—

No radiant pearl which crested fortune wears,
No gem that, twinkling, hangs from beauty's ears,
Not the bright stars which night's blue arch adorn,
Nor rising suns that gild the vernal morn,
Shine with such lustre as the tear that breaks
For others' woe down virtue's manly cheeks. —Darwin.

13—15. (13) Ammon, descended fr. Ammon, son of Lot, Ge. xix. 38. Dwelling in the mountainous country round the sources of the Arnon and the Jabbok, Nu. xxi. 24; De. ii. 20. because, etc., "As the Ammonites had been in league with the Syrians in David's time," it is not improbable that they may have joined Hazael in his atrocious cruelty towards the Gileadites."—Spk. Com. (14) Rabbah, De. iii. 11. tempest, etc., figs. of an irresistible destruction. (15) king, Je. xlix. 3.

Persecution a Most Arrogant Crime.—The religious persecutor acts upon the assumption that his ideas of religion are absolutely true, that his theological knowledge is the test by which all other opinions are to be tried. Such a man is represented by the apostle as one that "sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God" (2 Thess. ii. 4). Presumptuous mortal! The proud tyrant who has won his way through seas of blood to the throne, and claims authority over men's bodily movements, shows an arrogance before which servile spirits bow, but from which all thoughtful and noble men recoil with disgust and indignation. But his arrogance is shadowy and harmless compared with the arrogance of him who enters the temple of human conscience, and claims dominion over the moral workings of the soul.—Pul. Com.

CHAPTER THE SECOND.

1—3. (1) Moab, descended fr. Lot: inhabited the land E. of the Dead Sea, S. of the Arnon, Ge. xix. 37. burned .. lime,^a a vindictive spirit wh. was ready to do sacrilege to one of the most sacred religious beliefs of antiquity. (2) Kirioth, Je. xlviii. 24, 41. (3) judge, comp. the office of judge in Israel: chief magistrate; the king regarded under the aspect of his most important office.

Divine Cognizance of Human Sins (vss. 1—8).—This fact—I. Should lead men to great circumspection of life. 1. They should sedulously avoid evil; 2. They should devoutly pursue good. II. It should impress men with the wonderful patience of God. 1. Which implies the greatest power; 2. Implies the greatest compassion. III. It should impress men with the certainty of retribution.—Thomas.

Divine Knowledge of Sin.—

The book is opened and the seal removed,—
The adamantine book, where every thought,
Though dawning on the heart, then sunk again
In the corrupted mass, each act obscure,
In characters indelible remain.
How vain the boast, vile caitiff, to have 'scaped
An earthly forum; now, thy crimson stains
Glare on a congregated world; thy judge
Omniscience, and omnipotence thy scourge!
Thy mask, hypocrisy, how useless here,
When, by a beam shot from the fount of light,
The varnished saint starts up a ghastly fiend. —Bailey.

"There is no Christian so feeble that the strongest Christian cannot learn something from him. There is no Christian so strong that the feeblest Christian should shrink from seeking his fellowship and offering aid to him."

a 2 Sa. x. 6.

2 Ki. viii. 12, x. 32.

c Is. v. 26; Je. xxv. 32; Da. xi. 40; Zec. ix. 14.

"Envy is a littleness of soul, which cannot see beyond a certain point, and if it does not occupy the whole space, feels itself excluded."

—Hazlitt.

Man's inhumanity to man Makes countless thousands mourn."

—Burns.

a "The historical connection of this expression is doubtful. Some think ref. is to the revenge wh. prob. the king of Moab took on the king of Edom, when the forces of Israel and Judah had retired after their successful campaign against Moab, leaving Edom without allies. The Heb. tradition is, that Moab in revenge tore from their grave and burned the bones of the king of Edom, the ally of Jehoram and Jehoshaphat, who was already buried."

—Fausset.

a 2 Ki. xxv. 9; Je. xvii. 27.

b "They sell the precious souls of the poor for the meanest thing, with which they trample on the dust, or in the mire."

—S. Jerome.

c "Extortion, self-indulgence, and hard-heartedness were combined under a show of religion."

—Spk. Com.

The gospel is for the poor; they can worship in the most expensive buildings. Printing has made Bibles so cheap that the poorest can read, and learn to read them in free schools which are better than most private schools of the rich. Colleges are endowed, so that the poor can have the highest education.

"Public libraries and galleries of art are open to all. The poor can ride as fast in railroad cars as the rich, can have their daily papers, can enjoy music and home comforts such as only kings and princes could have had a few hundred years ago."

—Peloubet.

a "The most powerful of all the Canaanite nations, and therefore put for them." —Fausset.

b "For Amos's reference to the drinking habits of his day, see ch. ii. 8, iv. 1, vi. 6."

"And earthly power doth then show likest God's;

When mercy seasons justice."

—Shakespeare.

"The mighty hosts of Persia were no defense at the battle of Arbela. Napoleon

4—8. (4) Judah, the nation having higher privileges, and consequently higher responsibilities. despised the law, R. V. "rejected." Commandments, R. V. "statutes." "The Jews are not accused of violating, in some particular, the unwritten law of God, but of ignoring a distinct and comprehensive revelation of the will of Jehovah."—Mitchell. lies, idols, Ho. vii. 3. (5) fire, in this case the prophecy was literally fulfilled. (6) sold, etc., ch. viii. 6. Prob. referring to the custom of taking bribes in judgment, and betraying the innocent. The indictment (vss. 6—8) consists of four counts: 1. maladministration of justice; 2. oppression of the poor; 3. immorality; 4. inordinate self-indulgence, practiced in the name of religion—all, in view of the signal favors conferred by Jehovah upon Israel in the past, aggravated by ingratitude (vss. 9—12).—Cam. B. poor . . shoes, or sandals. Ref. not to the judge but to the hard-hearted creditor who for a mere trifle would enslave his debtor." (7) pant . . poor, or "tread down the heads of the poor into the dust of the earth." Utterly and shamefully oppress the poor. turn aside, etc., by these legal and commercial hindrances the humble are hindered in the pursuit of their modest aims. profane, etc., this indicates that the reference is to the immorality connected with idolatrous rites. (8) laid to pledge, explained by De. xxiv. 12, 13, R. V. "taken in pledge." condemned, or those wickedly fined or mulcted."

"Clothes Taken in Pledge."—To be understood in connection with the previous clause: the carnally-minded Israelites visit the heathen sanctuaries for the purposes indicated in vs. 7; they lay themselves down there, with their partners in sin (Hos. iv. 14), beside the altars; and to aggravate their offence they repose, not on their own garments, but on garments which they have taken in pledge from men poorer than themselves, and which, in contravention of the Law, Ex. xxii. 26f., they have neglected to return before nightfall. The large square outer garment, or cloak, called the salmah, thrown round the person by day, was used as a covering at night; and hence the provision that, if a poor man (whose sole covering it probably would be) were obliged to pawn it, it should be restored to him for the night.—Camb. B.—Oppression.—To rob and oppress the rich is a great sin; but to rob and oppress the poor is a greater; but to rob and oppress the poor, because he is poor and wants money to buy justice, is the top of all inhumanity and impiety. To oppress any one is a sin, but to oppress the oppressed is the height of sin. Poverty and want should be motives to pity; but oppressors make them whetstones of their cruelty and severity, and therefore the Lord will plead the cause of his poor oppressed against their oppressors without fee or fear.—Brooks.

9—12. (9) Amorite,^a Amos contrasts the goodness of Jehovah with this ingratitude of Israel, Nu. xxi. 24; De. ii. 31; Jos. xxiv. 8. height, etc., Nu. xiii. 32, 33. fruit . . beneath, i.e. root and branch, completely. (10) brought . . Egypt, Ex. xii. 51, xx. 2. (11) Nazarites, R. V. "Nazirites," one set apart or consecrated to God. Luxury, then, and a very sensual conception of religion, with all their vicious offspring in the abuse of justice, the oppression of the poor, the corrupting of the innocent, and the intolerance of spiritual forces—these are the sins of an enlightened and civilized people, which Amos describes as worse than all the atrocities of barbarism, and as certain of Divine vengeance.—G. A. Smith. Nu. vi. 2—21; Ju. xiii. 5; La. iv. 7. (12) gave . . wine, forcing them thus to break their vows. Prophecy not, for illus. of their so doing, comp. i Ki. xxii. 26, 27; 2 Chr. xvi. 9; Is. xxx. 10; Am. vii. 10—13.

God and Nations (vs. 9).—I. He reminds nations of the greatness of His kindness to them. 1. He often sacrifices one people in order to advance the interests of another; 2. The mightiest human powers cannot obstruct Him in His procedure; 3. He fulfils His great purposes with nations by the agency of man. II. He reminds the nations of the abuse of the mercies He has conferred on them. 1. A spiritual ministry; 2. Virtuous young men.—Thomas.

Nazirites.—The Nazirites were men who, when the sensual and self-indulgent habits of the Canaanites threatened to make their way into Israel, endeavored by a vow of abstinence to set an example of moderation and self-denial, which might help to preserve the old simplicity of Israelitish life. The chief obligations of the Nazirite were to abstain from all intoxicating drinks, to eat no "unclean" thing, and (according to Num. vi. 6f.) to avoid the ceremonial "uncleanness" occasioned by contact with a corpse: as a sign of his "separation" (cf. Num. vi. 7 end), also, his hair was not shaved, but suffered to grow in its natural state. The only certain historical example of a Nazirite, mentioned in the O. T., is Samson (cf. Jud. xiii. 5, 7, 14, xvi. 17). But from the present passage it may be inferred that they formed a numerous class. The law regulating the vow of the Nazirite is codified in Num. vi. 1—21: but this, in its present form, springs probably from a later age than that of Amos, and represents the form which the regulations on the subject finally assumed. Samson was dedicated to the life of a Nazirite before his birth; but this, no doubt, was exceptional; it is implied by Amos that "young men," when they felt the inner call, spontaneously dedicated themselves to the ascetic life. The Rechabites (Jer. xxxv.), whose founder was a contemporary of Jehu's (2 Ki. x. 15 ff.), were a sect or guild, established with the same object of maintaining a simple habit of life, in contrast to the laxity and effeminacy too often prevalent in these cities. Amos regards the Nazirites as a living protest against the luxury and sensuality to which Israel was now too much addicted (cf. iv. 1, vi. 3—7); and sees in their appearance, as in that of the prophets, a mark of God's care for the higher welfare of His people.—Camb. B.

13—16. (13) as a cart,° R. V. "I will press you in your place, as a cart presseth," i.e. I will press you with the full force of war, as a loaded wain presses the earth over which it passes. (14) flight, or place of flight; where refuge is sought. strengthen his force, i.e. collect his powers. (15) swift of foot, as Asahel. 2 Sa. ii. 18. (16) naked, in the sense of having thrown away his weapons and looser garments in his hurried flight. "The word naked is used of those who lay aside their upper garments, or the habit proper to their quality or profession."

God's Complaint Against Us (vs. 13).—Let us consider—I. What reason God has for this complaint against us. 1. Our disregard of His laws; 2. Our unmindfulness of His mercies; 3. Our contempt of His blessed Gospel. II. What reason we have to be deeply concerned about our state. 1. God is able to vindicate the honor of His injured majesty; 2. He is determined to avenge Himself; 3. The time of retribution is fast approaching. Infer—(1) What a burden ought sin to be to us; (2) What obligations do we owe to Jesus Christ.—Simeon.

CHAPTER THE THIRD.

1, 2. (1) whole family, including both Israel and Judah, though the context shows that the prophet is thinking chiefly of Israel. (2) known, in the sense of watched over and cared for; they were the people of special Divine privilege." Ex. xix. 5; De. iv. 20. punish you, or "visit upon you." "However severe the punishment, God visited His people in love."

God's Chastisements a Covenant (vss. 1, 2).—I. The grounds for chastisement. 1. Peculiar relationships abused; 2. Distinguishing privileges neglected; 3. Special obligations denied. II. The design of this chastisement. 1. Punishment to purify moral character; 2. Punishment to fit for greater service; 3. Punishment to warn others of danger.—Wolfendale.

Note on vs. 2.—In Eastern language, to say you know a person, means you approve of him. Thus, should a man be well acquainted with two brothers, and should he not approve of one of them, he will say, "I do not know him." But of him he loves, he says, "Ah! I know him well. Jehovah had known, i.e. approved of, Israel, but because of their abominations he had determined to punish them.—Roberts.

3—6. (3) walk together, in the companionship of life. Implying that God cannot walk with man, unless man maintains the fellowship of obedience. The figure is drawn from the wilderness in which two men will hardly meet except they have arranged to do so; but the truth, he would illustrate by the figure, is that two sets of phenomena which co-led more than half a million of men into Russia, but could not escape the danger by retreat. His valiant guards could neither uphold his Empire nor protect his person at Waterloo, when he cried out — "It is all over; save yourselves who can." — Hom. Com.

e "In many portions of the country the sheaves are piled into a rude cart, upon wh. they are kept from falling by a wicker work about four feet high. These carts, or arabas, are prob. similar to those used by the Heb., and drawn by a pair of oxen." — Van Lennep.

a "Their being the elect people of God only heightened their sin." — Calvin.

b "When God's people do not glorify Him, He glorifies Himself by punishing them." — Fausset.

Comp. Mat. x. 15, xi. 21, 22.

"Men are not to be envied simply because they are endowed with special favors. Those very endowments, unless they are faithfully used, only augment responsibility, deepen guilt, and ensure a more terrible retribution. Where much has been given much will be required. It will be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment, &c. —Thomas.

c Ps. xciv. 7, 9, 10.

Two men once took the lease of a hotel. One was a professing Christian, the other not. The enterprise threatened to bankrupt them both. No thing could save them but the secret and illegal sale of intoxicating drinks. The Christian partner's faith was not strong enough to withstand the resolute selfishness of the other. —Phelps.

d "There was a succession of prophets among the Jews from Samuel's time till the captivity; the people commonly consulted them upon extraordinary occasions, and they gave them counsel and direction as to what was proper to be done." —Lowth.

a "The site of Samaria is very remarkable. The fine round swelling hill, or almost mountain, of Samaria stands alone in the midst of a great basin of some two hours in diameter, surrounded by higher mountains on every side." —Robinson.

b Je. iv. 22.

c Hab. ii. 8—10.

d "When a flock was entrusted to the care of a shepherd, or other person, he was expected to make good to the owner the loss of any sheep or goat 'torn of beasts,' unless he could produce the carcass, or some portion of it, to assure the incide must have sprung from a common purpose. Their conjunction forbids mere chance.—Exp. B. Consequently his strange and unexpected prophecy must be the consequent of evil deeds wh. he proceeds to enumerate. agreed, R. V. marg. "made appointment." (4) lion, etc., as the roar is the assurance that he has, or will soon have, his prey, so God's warning by His Prophets is the assurance that He is coming to judge you. (5) gin, better, "bait." shall . . earth, R. V. "shall a snare spring up fr. the ground;" the construction of the snare was such that the flaps would not start up from the ground unless a bird had entered the snare. (6) evil, in the sense of calamity, not of sin. Over all calamities Divine providence presided; the Hebrews took no acct. of secondary causes."

Requisites for Friendship with God (vs. 3).—I. Inquire what it is for men to walk with God. 1. When they have a constant sense of His presence; 2. When they have habitual communion; 3. When they have cordial friendship with God. II. Inquire why there cannot be this walking with God without agreement. 1. There must be a process of reconciliation; 2. There must be correspondence of taste and sentiment.—Brooks.

A Wise Decision.—Eliza Ambert, a young Parisian lady, resolutely discarded a gentleman to whom she was to have been married, because he ridiculed religion. Having given him a gentle reproof, he replied, "that a man of the world could not be so old-fashioned as to regard God and religion." Eliza started, but, on recovering herself, said, "From this moment, sir, when I discover that you do not regard religion, I cease to be yours. He who does not love and honor God, can never love his wife constantly and sincerely."—Cheever.

7, 8. (7) Lord God, or Jehovah God. the prophets, who were called out in each generation. (8) lion hath roared, figure of speech, meaning God has announced His judgment. who . . prophesy? a perfectly clear claim by Amos that his message has divine sanction. His prophecy is the result of God's command. Comp. Je. xx. 9.

Monitions.—I saw a cannon discharged. The men at whom it was leveled fell flat on the ground, and so escaped the bullet. Against such blows, falling is all the fencing, and prostration all the armor of proof. But that which gave them notice to fall down was their perceiving of the fire before the ordnance was discharged. Oh! the mercy of that fire, which, as it were, repenting of the mischief it had done, and the murder it might make, ran a race, and outstripped the bullet, that men (at the sight thereof) might be provided, when they could not resist to prevent it! Thus every murdering-piece is also a warning-piece against itself. God, in like manner, warns before he wounds; frights before he fights. "Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown." Oh, let us fall down before the Lord our Maker! Then shall his anger be pleased to make in us a daily pass-over, and his bullets leveled at us must fly above us.—Thomas Fuller.

9—11. (9) Ashdod, Am. i. 8. Assemble, etc., "the Philistines and Egyptians are summoned to witness the enormities of wh. God's people had been guilty." mountains of Samaria, i.e. those round about the city. tumults, or disorders. oppressed, R. V. "oppressions;" i.e. the civic condition of a state where might rules at the expense of right. (10) know not, the wealthy and powerful are so corrupted as to have lost all sense of the right, and all care for the right. store up, implying that they think they store up wealth and security, but they really store up injustice and oppression, and such stores surely become curses to those who store them. (11) strength, etc., i.e. the city of Samaria, the strong "crown," shall be razed to the earth.

National Calamities (vss. 9—12).—I. National guilt. 1. Moral sensibility impaired; 2. Public justice perverted; 3. Shameless fraud committed. II. National disorder. III. National disgrace. IV. National invasion. 1. Power which they abused shall be taken away; 2. Palaces which they stored shall be destroyed.—J. Wolfendale.

12—15. (12) shepherd . . ear, when a lion is forced to leave his prey the shepherd is seldom able to save more than scraps of the torn. So when God's judgment is wrought on Samaria, there will be only scraps and remnants of it left. corner . . bed, the robbers, vs. 10, that live luxuriously. The bed is the divan, or raised part of the room, covered with cushions. in Damascus in a couch, R. V. "on the silken cushions of a couch," i.e. damask cloth manufactured in Damascus. The fig. is a sign of ease and security. (13) in, R. V. "against." (14) altars of Beth-el,^e the one raised by Jeroboam, and others raised since his day. cut off, destroyed by the enemy. (15) winter . . house, separate buildings, such as the wealthy might be able to indulge in, appear to be intended. Both terms are to be understood collectively, and not confined to the royal palaces alone. Je. xxxvi. 22. great houses, R. V. marg. "many houses." ivory, inlaid with ivory, 1 Ki. xxii. 39.^f

The Destroyer and the Rescuer (vs. 12).—I. There is a destroying power at work in the world. 1. Various represented; 2. His doings described; 3. He possesses mighty power; 4. Supreme subtlety. II. There is a rescuing power at work in the world. 1. Possessed of all power; 2. Possessed of all wisdom. III. God is ready to receive even the fragments. 1. Destruction was very near; 2. None need despair; 3. None may presume.—R. Berry.

Samaria.—They might seem to be secure and at ease in Samaria, but vain would every such remedy against fear and sorrow prove. From the strong city, from the soft couch, they would be dragged to misery and destruction. In about 40 years after the time of this prophecy we read (2 Kings xvii. 3) of a siege of Samaria which lasted three years, at the end of which the city was taken; and after the horrors of war, the spoiling of their palaces and their wealth, the remnant was dragged into a distant land, to endure the miseries of captivity and exile.—Ryan. Punishment Returning on Sinner's Head.—When sin is done it is not done with. Like the dead bird around the Ancient Mariner's neck, an avenging Providence ties the memory of it to our soul. Like the crime of Eugene Aram, it becomes an evil-haunting memory, to dog our steps for ever.—Pulp. Com. The Duke of Wellington once said that he could have saved the lives of a thousand men a year, had he had chaplains, or any religious ministers. The uneasiness of their minds reacted on their bodies, and kept up continual fever, once it seized upon their frames. It is our blessed office to tell of One who can "minister to a mind diseased," whose grace can deliver from "an evil conscience," and through whom all inward fear and trouble are removed.—Spurgeon. National Judgments.—Judgments do not come on men as a matter of necessity; they do not roll on man like the billows of ocean on the shore, by blind force; nor do they come because the Governor of the universe is malevolent, and has pleasure in the sufferings of his creatures. No; he is love. He "desireth not the death of a sinner." They come because of sin. The sins of a nation draw judgment after them as the moon draws after it the billows that beat upon the shore. Let no nation hope to escape judgments until it gets rid of sin. Judgments are but sins ripened into a harvest, subterranean fires breaking into volcanoes. Eternal love requires for the order and happiness of the universe that sins and sorrows, transgressions and troubles, should be inseparably linked together.—Pulp. Com.

CHAPTER THE FOURTH.

1—3. (1) kine of Bashan, a district famous for its fat cattle.^a These kine represent voluptuous, effeminate women. Thoughtlessness and ease are able to brutalize women of gentle nurture. It was the women who urged on the men to cruelty. masters, "lords," i.e. husbands. (2) by his holiness, wh. ensures His keeping His word of threatening. hooks, etc.,^b they shall be dragged violently by the foe out of the luxury of their palaces, like fishes out of the water; invaders and spoilers are elsewhere compared to fishers.^c posterity, R. V. "residue;" none to be left. (3) every cow, etc., R. V. "every one straight before her;" no turning back to save anything. cast . . palace, prob. corrupt text: R. V. "cast yourself into Harmon," i.e. the place of exile.^d But H. is not located.

Sad Pictures of Human Life (vss. 1—3).—I. Indolent abuse of prosperity. II. Might ruling over right—1. In oppressing the poor; 2. In master that his servant had not improperly disposed of it for his own benefit." —Kittó.

^e Ho. x. 15.

^f "Houses whose internal decorations consisted chiefly of ivory—panels of ivory on their walls—couches of ivory on which the inmates reclined, and, if palaces, a throne of ivory for the king."—Bib. Things.

"As the ant-hill, when stirred, sets in motion its living insects in every direction, so the conscience of the sinner, disturbed by the Spirit, or judgments of God, calls up before its vision thousands of deeds which fill the soul with agony and woe." —McCosh.

"It strikes me that our sins arise partly from disdain of others, but mainly from contempt of self, both working the despite of God." —E. D. Blackmore.

^a "The luxury and insolence of oppressors is often compared to the wantonness of full-fed cattle. Ps. xxii. 12, lxxviii. 30."—Lowth.

^b "The modes of catching fish were the same as are still in use in all parts of Western Asia. They were taken with the hook, or with a scoop-net fastened round a hoop and suspended from a pole. And on a larger scale fishing is done by means of a long net."—Van Lennep.

^c Je. xvi. 16; Ha. i. 15.

"Luxury and dissipation, soft and gentle as their approaches are, and silently as they throw their silken charms about the heart, enslave it more than the most active and turbulent vices."

—Hannah More.

"When a finely constituted nature wishes to go into baseness it has first to bribe itself. Evil is never embraced, undisguised as evil, but under some fiction which the mind accepts, and with which it has singular power of blinding itself in the face of daylight." —Harriet Beecher Stowe.

"He who runs from God in the morning will scarcely find Him the rest of the day." —John Bunyan.

a "Want of rain at this critical season is utterly ruinous to the hopes of the farmer; a little earlier, or a little later, would not be so fatal; but drouth three months before harvest is entirely destructive." —Thomson.

b "The Israelites were obliged to leave their cities and homes to seek water at a distance." —Calvin.

"One glance of God, a touch of His love, will free and enlarge the heart, so that it can deny all and part with all and make an entire renouncing of all to follow him." —A French bishop Leighton.

crushing the needy. III. Confederacy in wickedness. IV. Debauchery in social conduct. V. Life terminating in great calamities. 1. Calamities fixed in time; 2. With great sacrifice; 3. From which none can escape; 4. Entailed upon posterity.—Wolfendale.

Evil Influences.—We cannot but notice the insignificance to which Jezebel reduced her husband. She presents the spectacle, so often reproduced in history and reflected in literature, of a strong, fierce woman—a Clytemnestra, a Brunhault, a Lady Macbeth, an Isabella of France, a Margaret of Anjou, a Joan of Naples, a Catherine de Medicis,—completely dominating a feebler consort.—Farrar. Influence of Woman.—"At one time, I was sorely vexed and tried by my own sinfulness, by the wickedness of the world and by the dangers that beset the church. One morning I saw my wife dressed in mourning. Surprised, I asked her who had died. 'Do you not know?' she replied. 'God in heaven is dead.' 'How can you talk such nonsense, Katie?' I said. 'How can God die? Why he is immortal and will live through all eternity.' 'Is that really true?' she asked. 'Of course,' I said, still not perceiving what she was aiming at. 'How can you doubt it? As surely as there is a God in heaven, so sure is it that he can never die.' 'And yet,' she said, 'though you do not doubt that, yet you are so hopeless and discouraged.' Then I observed what a wise woman my wife was and mastered my sadness." —Luther.

4, 5. (4) Beth-el, one centre of idol worship. Amos now addresses the people at large, prob. on some great feast day. transgress, the words of course are ironical. The very worship is offensive to Jehovah, the worshiper a transgressor against the Law. The more altars the more multiplied such transgression. Gilgal, another such centre. after three years, R. V. "every three days," an ironical exaggeration. (5) offer, lit. by burning; comp. Le. ii. 11, vii. 12. with leaven, of that wh. is leavened. The mistaken zeal of Israel offered leavened bread. liketh you, or this you like. "They thought highly of themselves, and of their gifts."

Worship and Sin (vss. 4, 5).—The subject of the text is abounding worship with abounding sin. I. Abounding worship often implies abounding sin. This is the case when worship is—1. Selfish; 2. Formal. II. Abounding worship often springs from abounding sin. From—1. A desire to conceal sin; 2. A desire to appear good; 3. A desire to compensate for evils.—Thomas.

Amos's Irony.—What a sting is there—"this liketh you!" how it should pierce the conscience of every sinner—"for this liketh you, O ye children of Israel!" Far indeed was everything like levity from the prophet's mind in treating such a subject as the sinfulness of the people; far enough was he from making a mock of sin as fools do. It was holy sorrow that prompted the irony; it was with deep solemnity of soul that he wielded that cutting weapon, and withal he could be tender and touching in expostulation.—Stoughton.

6—8. (6) And I also, on my part, in answer to such lawless zeal. cleanness of teeth, by reason of having little or no food to eat. not returned, under the persuasion of former and partial judgments. (7) rain, so essential to the harvest.^a In this case, God sought to give warnings by making the fall of rain partial. (8) wandered, lit. staggered: seeking wherever they could hear that there was water.^b

Unavailing Chastisements (vss. 6—12).—I. The design of God is in all His dispensations to bring men from their wanderings back again to Himself. II. These dispensations often fail to answer the end for which they were intended. III. When such dispensations are disregarded the most disastrous consequences are likely to ensue.

Effect of National Chastisement.—As in the case of Pharaoh, king of Egypt, afflictions may increase insensibility and rebelliousness. There are cases in which chastisements of the kind here described produce national humiliation and repentance. Such was the case with Nineveh, even when Jonah preached and foretold the city's doom; the people repented even before the calamity came, and so averted it. And there were instances in the history of stiff-necked Israel where chastisement led to general abasement and repentance. There are cases in which calamity fails to produce a general reformation, but is nevertheless the means of effecting in individuals a genuine repentance and a sincere conversion unto God.—Pulp. Com. Chastisements.—It cost Him much (oh, how much!) trouble, sorrow, beating, grinding, before He became bread for us. There may be a scarcity of other Bread; there is none of this to those who rightly seek it. It is dear in regard of the preciousness, not dear in regard of the price; we pay nothing for it but faith and love. Though thousands pray at once with the disciples, "Lord, evermore give us this bread," Jesus's storehouse can never be emptied. He only grows not rich with receiving, neither grows poor with giving. Rejoice, then, beloved, the Lord is the giver, the Lord is the gift. Let not your souls be starved with these inferior things, which are few in number, small in measure, bad in nature, "while there is bread enough, and to spare, in your Father's house."—Thos. Adams (1623).

9—11. (9) blasting, etc., injuries affecting the ripe grain and the vineyards. By blasting is meant the "scorching of the poisonous east wind." when your gardens, R. V. "the multitude of your gardens." palmerworm, a species of locust.* (10) pestilence, affecting the people. Is. x. 26. There is here no reference to the plague of Exod. ix. 3, etc., or xii. 29. The allusion is to the plague which was reckoned to be epidemic in Egypt, and to other loathsome diseases for which that country was notorious.—Pul. Com. your horses, 2 Ki. xiii. 7. (11) overthrown, etc., prob. referring to some local destructions by earthquake. Sodom, ref. to the deadly effects rather than the agency of destruction. firebrand,^b Zec. iii. 2. "What concerns us in this passage is the very effective contrast between men's treatment of God and God's treatment of men. They lavish upon Him gifts and sacrifices. He sends them cleanness of teeth, drought, blasting of their fruits, pestilence, war and earthquake. They regard Him as a being only to be flattered and fed. He regards them as creatures with characters to discipline, even at the expense of their material welfare."—Exp. B.

Pestilence.—There are those who will not hear of great pestilences being God's scourges of man's sins, who fain would find out natural causes for them, and account for them by the help of these. They may do so, or imagine that they do so; yet every time they use the word "plague" they implicitly own the fact which they are endeavoring to deny; for "plague" means properly and according to its derivation, "blow" or "stroke," and was a title given to those terrible diseases, because the great universal conscience of men, which is never at fault, believed and confessed that these were "strokes" or "blows" inflicted by God on a guilty and rebellious world.—French.

12, 13. (12) thus, i.e. with severer judgments threatened but unannounced; hence all the more fearful bec. mysterious. meet thy God, in His most terrible aspects, as the just punisher of overwhelming transgressions. (13) formeth, etc.,^c this, and the other similar words in this vs. indicate the ease with wh. God fashions and controls all things. So it is a "fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." declareth, etc., by the prophet, or by conscience. morning darkness, i.e. suddenly darkens the sky with storm-clouds. treadeth, figure of the storm-cloud sweeping along over the hills.

Mountains.—Loveliness of color, perfectness of form, endlessness of change, wonderfulness of structure, are precious to all undiseased human minds; and the superiority of the mountains in all these things to the lowlands is as measurable as the riches of a painted window matched with a white one, or the wealth of a museum compared with that of a simply furnished chamber. They seem to have been built for the human race, as at once their schools and cathedrals; full of treasures of illuminated manuscript for the scholar, kindly in simple lessons to the worker, quiet in pale cloisters for the thinker, glorious in holiness for the worshiper. These great cathedrals of the earth, with their gates of rock, pavement of cloud, choirs of stream and stone, altars of snow, and vaults of purple, traversed by the continual stars!—Ruskin.

God.—

Oh, import deep as life is, deep as time!

^a Joel i. 4.

^b "Those who had escaped had escaped as narrowly as a half-consumed stick snatched from the fire."—Spk. Com.

"The acts of God's providence are as certainly a part of His administration, now, as in former ages, and as directly affect each individual of the race as they did the children of Abraham. It is to those who are subdued under his rebukes that he sends his word to heal them. They who watch the ruling hand of God shall become wiser in leading his purposes and their own necessities." —Duncan.

^c Both God's knowledge and power are infinite, then who can resist His will?

"They say that the truth is not to be spoken at all times; which is the equivalent of saying that truth is an invalid, who can only take the air in a close carriage with a gentleman in a black coat on the box." —Holmes.

"Many live in constant fear of death, quite forgetting Christ's promise and proof of eternal life. They are like the ignorant soldier who lived for years in poverty, carrying around with him an unused certificate, which would have given him a pension."

"I never had a sight of my soul," said the Emperor Aurelius, "and yet I have a great value for it, because it is discoverable by its operations; and by my constant experience of the power of God, I have a proof of His being, and a reason for my veneration." — Whitcross.

Let us incessantly bear in mind, that the only thing we have really to be afraid of, is fearing anything more than God. —Book of the Fathers.

a Je vii. 29; Eze. xix. 1.

b "Or, the term 'virgin' may apply to a state on account of its beauty, and the delights on which it prides itself, its luxuries, power, and wealth." — Calvin.

c De. xxviii. 62; Is. xxx. 17.

d Ge. xxi. 33, xxi. 19.

e Eze. xxxvii. 19.

"The visible is the ladder up to the invisible; the temporal is but the scaffolding of the eternal. Then when the last immaterial souls have climbed through this material to God, the scaffolding shall be taken down, and the earth dissolved with fervent heat, not because it was base, but because its work was done." — H. Drummond.

"The Father gives the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him, not least, but most, when they ask for others." — Andrew Murray.

There is a Something sacred and sublime
Moving behind the worlds, beyond our ken,
Weighing the stars, weighing the deeds of men.

Take heart, O soul of sorrow, and be strong!
There is One greater than the whole world's wrong.
Be hushed before the high Benignant Power
That moves wool-shod through sepulcher and tower!
No truth so low but He will give it crown;
No wrong so high but He will hurl it down.
O men that forge the fetter, it is vain;
There is a Still Hand stronger than your chain.
'Tis no avail to bargain, sneer, and nod,
And shrug the shoulder for reply to God.

—Edwin Markham, 1899.

CHAPTER THE FIFTH.

1-3. (1) lamentation, or funeral dirge, "bemoaning the state of the kingdom of Israel, as dead and irrecoverably lost."^a (2) virgin, Is. xxiii. 12, xxxvii. 22. The term usually stands for a city or kingdom which has not been conquered,^b fallen, as one wounded in battle; not literally, but to the prophet's vision. forsaken, better, "flung, or dashed on the ground;" prostrated upon. Such an announcement during the prosperous times of Jeroboam II. was very startling. (3) went out, etc., or from wh. there used to go forth a thousand armed men. leave an hundred, "have a hundred left."^c

A Prosperous People.—Palestine, their national inheritance, was the very garden of the earth; unique in the combination of the highest agricultural capacities, with the finest commercial situation. The prosperity of an industrious, peaceful nation in it was, so far as favorable circumstances went, a foregone conclusion. But war had devastated, and mildew blighted, and drought laid bare its fertile fields. God saw his gifts abused and made the ministers of sin, and he was driven to destroy these in their hands. When temporal good begins to be made the occasion of moral evil, our tenure of it will soon end.—Pulp. Com.

4-6. (4) Seek ye me, in penitence, prayer, and obedience. Let the people turn to Jehovah Himself—and that means let them turn from the ritual, and instead of it purge their civic life, restore justice in their courts and help the poor. For God and moral good are one.—Exp. B. live, in the sense of being secure and prosperous as a nation. (5) Beth-el, ch. iv. 4. Beer-sheba,^d on the S. frontier of Judah. At this time a great centre of idolatry. Gilgal.. captivity, lit. a play on words, "Gilgal (the place of rolling) shall rolling be rolled away." Beth-el.. nought, i.e. Beth-el, "House of God" shall become Beth-aven, "House of nothingness." The thought is, Bethel shall be a ruin and will bring Israel to ruin. (6) the Lord, the covenant God, Jehovah. house of Joseph, the father of Ephraim, rep. the whole Northern kingdom. Ob. 18; Zech. x. 6.^e

Note on vss. 4-6.—Jeroboam pretended that it was too much for Israel to go up to Jerusalem. Yet Israel thought it not too much to go to the extremest point of Judah towards Idumea, perhaps four times as far south of Jerusalem as Jerusalem lay from Bethel. For Beersheba is thought to have lain some 30 miles south of Hebron, wh. is 22 miles south of Jerusalem; while Bethel is but 12 to the north. So much pains will men take in self-willed service, and yet not see that it takes away the excuse for neglecting the true.—Pusey. Bethel.—During the still evening, when the shadows were deepening in the glens, and the last rays of the declining sun gilding the top of rock and cliff, I explored the site of this the most ancient of Israel's holy places. I looked all round, in the hope of identifying the spot where Jacob slept, and which he consecrated and called the "house of God." I explored the rock sepulchres, too, which dot the sides of "the mount" (2 Ki. xxiii. 16), thinking that one or other of them might be that of "the man of God from Judah," whose bones Josiah respected (vss. 17, 18). Clambering to the top of a shattered tower which crowns the hill of Bethel, I looked long, and in sadness, over that dreary field of ruin, only inhabited by a few shepherds.—Porter.

7—9. (7) wormwood, De. xxix. 18, "Ye that pervert the law which was designed to protect innocence, and under color of it exercise the greatest oppression." leave . . earth, better, "cast righteousness down to the ground;" righteousness here means civil justice. (8) seven stars, the Pleiades; see Job ix. 9, xxxviii. 31. shadow of death, fig. for the night.² the waters, or floods; ref. either to inundations of the lowlands, or long continued rains. (9) spoiled, better, "that causeth devastation to flash forth upon the strong so that devastation cometh upon the fortress."³

Science the Handmaid to Religion (vs. 8).—I. Science exalts our conceptions of our Lord Jesus Christ by enlarging our views of the vastness of the universe. II. Confirms our persuasion of the supremacy of moral and spiritual law by establishing the supremacy of natural law. III. Illustrates the power of love to God and to the Redeemer by revealing the power of the principle of attraction. IV. Points out a guarantee for the safety of the believer by demonstrating the stability of the heavenly bodies. V. Suggests an analogy of the preparation of heaven for the saints in the preparation of the earth for man. VI. Furnishes a parallel to the devising of a plan of salvation before the fall, in the prospective arrangements of the natural world.—Brooks.

Need of Strength from God.—Sir Walter Scott relates in his autobiography that, when he was a child, one of his legs was paralyzed, and when medical skill failed, a kind uncle induced him to exert the muscles of the powerless limb by drawing a gold watch before him on the floor, tempting him to creep after it, and thus keeping up and gradually increasing vital action and muscular force. So God deals with us in our spiritual childhood, and the weakness of our faith. How weak our efforts; how slow our movements! But spiritual vitality is elicited, developed, strengthened by those efforts and movements, slow and weak as they are. Brethren, a Christian's strength can come only by his being strengthened. There is not within the man, as a man, nor within him as a Christian, any stock or store of strength given him at the commencement of his life. Day by day, stage after stage, first as a babe, then as a young man, and then as a father in Christ, does the man need strengthening. And what a glorious thing it is that, instead of our resources being given to us at the beginning of our Christian life, they are supplied to us as we need them. Does not this arrangement keep us in close communion with the Father of our spirits, and with the Source of all energy and wisdom? So that the very application to God, apart from the things which application always secures, tends to strengthen you.—S. Martin.

10—13. (10) gate, chief place of concourse.^a Ref. is to the magistrate who is faithful enough to rebuke the oppressors. (11) take . . wheat, exact presents of wheat.^b built, etc., Zep. i. 13. Comp. the prophecy of Moses, De. xxviii. 30, 38, 39. Hewn stone would be a sign of wealth and luxury. (12) manifest transgressions, R. V. "how manifold . . . how mighty." turn aside, refusing to give due heed to their pleadings. (13) prudent, or judicious, sensible man. He will refuse to take part in magistracy or politics.^c evil time, when one fears for his personal security.

God Knows Our Sins (vs. 12).—Let us consider—I. The information here given to us: He knows our sins—I. In all their extent and variety; 2. In all their heinousness and aggravation. II. The use we should make of it. 1. We should beg of God to discover to us the real state of our souls; 2. We should entreat Him to humble us in the dust before Him; 3. We should look to our Lord Jesus Christ as our hope; 4. We should walk with all possible circumspection before God.—C. Simeon.

Keep Silence.—Euler lived at Petersburg during the administration of Biron, one of the most tyrannical ministers that ever breathed. On the philosopher's coming to Berlin, after the tyrant's death, the late queen of Prussia, who could hardly get a word out of him, asked him

² "God can create the light, and make it spring from darkest night: and when He covers o'er the day, the darkness chases light away." — Pindar.

³ "Maketh devastation (or destruction) suddenly to arise, lit. maketh it to gleam forth like the dawn." — Maurer.

"The Christian life is a going to the Father. Some travel swiftly, some are long upon the road, some meet many pleasant adventures by the way, others pass through fire and peril: but though the path be short or winding, and though the pace be quick or slow, it is a going to the Father." — Drummond.

"The habit of looking at the bright side of things is worth more than a thousand a year." — Samuel Johnson.

^a De. xxv. 7, 1 Ki. xxii. 10.

^b "Burdensome taxes levied in kind from the wheat of the needy, to pamper the lusts of the great." — Henderson.

^c "He will live as much as may be in retirement, taking no part where he can do no good, and may be grievously wronged." — Spk. Com.

the reason of his silence. "Because," said he, "I come from a place where if a man says a word he is hanged."—Whitecross.

Results of Dishonest Gains.—"The rogue cozened not me, but his own conscience," said Bishop Latimer of a cutler who made him pay two pence for a knife not worth a penny. Money, earned by screwing, cheating and over-reaching, may for a time dazzle the eyes of the unthinking; but the bubbles blown by unscrupulous rogues, when full blown, usually glitter only to burst. The Sadleers, Dean Pauls and Redpaths, for the most part come to a sad end even in this world; and tho' the successful swindles of others may not be found out, and the gains of their roguery may remain with them, it will be as a curse and not as a blessing.—Smiles.

Matthew Hale in Disguise.—The younger of two brothers had endeavored to deprive the elder of an estate of £500 a year, by suborning witnesses to declare that he died in a foreign land. Coming into the court in the guise of a miller, Sir Matthew Hale was chosen the twelfth jurymen, to sit on this cause. As soon as the clerk of the court had sworn in the jurymen, a little dexterous fellow came into their apartment and slipped ten gold pieces into the hands of eleven of the jury, and gave the miller five, while the judge was known to be bribed with a great sum. The judge summed up the evidence in favor of the younger brother, and the jury were about to give their assent, when the supposed miller stood up and addressed the court with such energetic and manly eloquence, as astonished the judge and all present; unravelled the sophistry to the very bottom, proved the fact of bribery, evinced the elder brother's title to the estate from the contradictory evidence of the witnesses, and gained a complete victory in favor of truth and justice.—Cheever.

14—17. (14) ye have spoken, R. V. "as ye say."^a (15) Hate, etc., Is. i. 16, 17; Ro. xii. 9. love . . good, instead of mere ceremonial. judgment, upright, honorable magistracy. remnant of Joseph, not a "remnant" at this time, but in the prophet's vision of the future. The passage contains in germ the doctrine of the preservation, through judgment, of a faithful remnant, which became shortly afterwards a distinctive feature in the teachings of Isaiah.—Cam. B. Comp. "house of Joseph," vs. 6. (16) Therefore, bec., that is, of the sins of wh. they were guilty, and of wh. they refused to repent. Wailing, "the orig. word means, smiting on the breast as a sign of sorrow, and esp. in mourning for the dead."—Spk. Com. streets, R. V. "broad ways," i.e. open spaces near the city gates. highways, R. V. "streets." skilful, etc., wailing for the dead was a business for wh. some were trained; these were usually females. (17) vineyards, places where songs were generally heard. pass . . thee, R. V. "pass through the midst of thee." "It is the solemn formula of the Great Passover, when Egypt was filled with wailing and there were dead in every house."

"Establish Judgment in the Gate."—Unjust judgment was a prevalent and crying evil. The Jewish character was prone to it, and the experience of it at the hands of strangers only strengthened the tendency. Perversion of justice is one of the most constant elements in natural corruption everywhere. A corrupt man makes a dishonest trader, an unjust judge, and an oppressive master. Fair and upright dealing between man and man has no natural basis, unless in the fear of God. The fear of God, on the other hand, will naturally co-ordinate itself with regard for man. The man who "does justly and loves mercy" is one who "walks humbly with God."—Pulp. Com.

18—20. (18) Woe unto you, Cam. B., "Ah! they that desire;" commiseration rather than denunciation. desire, etc., reference is to the hypocritical desires and hopes of Israel. what end, or how can it meet your wishes, seeing it must come as national calamity. Jehovah's day meant to the people the day of His judgment, or of His triumph: His triumph in war over their enemies, His judgment upon the heathen. But Amos, whose keynote has been that judgment begins at home, cries woe upon such hopes, and tells his people that for them the day of Jehovah is not victory, but rather insidious, importunate, inevitable death.—Exp. B. (19) lion, etc., representing calamities in such a succession that a

^a Mt. iii. 11.

^b Eccl. xii. 5.

"All funeral processions, except those of the very poorest, are attended by wailing women. There are many women who let themselves out as wallers, at so much for the day, just as charwomen are hired in our own country. Of course those who can utter the most horrid shrieks are the most approved."—Gadsby.

Men do not love to be brought into contact with realities, or be reminded of coming "days of darkness." There is an unwelcome message to the conscience. Art thou ready to meet this solemn — this hastening season? If you regard death as a friend, prepare to entertain it; if an enemy, prepare to overcome it.—Hom. Com.

man may not hope to escape them. leaned . . wall, to support himself from falling." (20) very dark, comp. Ex. x. 22.

Serpents in Eastern Houses.—Serpents sometimes conceal themselves in the holes and chinks of the walls of Eastern houses. This is confirmed by a remarkable story related by D'Herbelot: "Arnadeddulat, who reigned in Persia in the tenth century, found himself reduced to great difficulties arising from want of attention to this treasury. Walking one day in one of the rooms of his palace, which had been before that time the residence of Jacout, his antagonist, he perceived a serpent, which put its head out of a chink in the wall; he immediately ordered that the place should be searched, and the serpent killed. In opening the wall there, they found a secret place in which they could not discover the serpent, but a treasure which was lodged in several coffers, in which Jacout had deposited his most precious effects."

21—24. (21) I hate, etc., the folly and vanity of relying upon their elaborate ritualism. Is. i. 11; Je. vi. 20. smell, fig. applied to the rising incense, and signifying accept." (22) meat offerings, R. V. "meal offerings," and so throughout the O. T. peace-offerings, or thank-offerings. (23) viols, or harps. (24) judgment, with special ref. to righteous administration of the laws. run down, lit. roll, flow abundantly. This is the only condition on wh. sacrifice can be acceptable to God.

The Formalist.—There are some, if you would see their goodness, and be acquainted with their godliness, you must hit the right time, or else you will find none, like some flowers that are seen but some months in the year. This may be in the morning: you may take the hypocrite on his knees in a saint's posture; but when that fit is over, you shall see little of God in all its course, till night brings him again, of course, to the like duty. The watch is nought that goes only at first winding up, and stands all the day after; and so is that heart, sure, that desires not always to keep in spiritual motion.—A Divine of the 17th Century. "Shall Not?"—He appeals to their own consciences, "Is it not so, as I have said?" Men's consciences are truer than their intellects. However they may employ the subtlety of their intellect to dull their conscience, they feel, in their heart of hearts, that there is a Judge, that guilt is punished, that they are guilty. The soul is a witness to its own deathlessness, its own accountableness, and its own punishableness.—Pusey.

25—27. (25) Have ye, etc., R. V., "did ye bring," etc.; the prophet argues, "put not your trust in ritual. It, without righteousness, is vain. Have ye not heard how it was neglected while your fathers wandered in the desert?"—Mitchell. Ac. vii. 42. (26) But ye have borne, etc.. Cam. B., "But ye shall take up Sakkuth your king, and Kaiwan your images, the star of your god, which ye made to yourselves; and I will cause you to go into exile beyond Damascus." You and your idols (cf. Jer. xlviii. 7 b, xlix. 3 b; Is. xlvi. 1—2) will go into exile together; this will be the end of your self-chosen course. But though the general sense of the verse is clear, some of the details are obscure. (27) beyond Damascus, into wild and unknown regions. Comp. Ac. vii. 43.

Forms of Idolatry.—Asia worships the true God, but has false conceptions of Him. This is the land of dreamy intellect, of morbid sensibilities, of stationary civilizations. We see the conception of God variously modified in different nations, and we mark, as we pass over them, a ripening of the human mind in proportion to the approach to a right and perfect conception of the Almighty. Lowest in the scale, perhaps, we may place the Brahmins. They acknowledge a supreme God, Brahm, but they put him afar off, and ascribe creation, preservation, and destruction to inferior divinities. As might be expected, they overthrow his altars, neglect his temple, and leave him nothing but the name, while they give their chief adoration to the god Vishnu and his nine incarnations, of which Juggernaut is one. What is their intellectual state? Next comes Buddhism, which overspreads farther India, the Chinese empire, and Japan. This is a reformation of Brahminism. While it recognizes an eternal First Cause, it represents Him as reposing in profound slumber, from which He only now and then awakes to send down some perfected spirits, that they may make certain necessary alterations in the universe.—Bp. Thomson.

a "Serpents often lurk concealed in the walls of Eastern houses."—Lane.

"One ought to talk only as loud as he lives — a rule wh. would deprive some people of the privilege, of shouting." — Wilbur Chapman.

b Ge. viii. 21.

"In one of the heathen temples of Canton are seen plaster representatives of the transmigration of souls. A boy is changing into a dog; a man has horns growing from his forehead, his feet and hands are changing to hoofs, a tail is sprouting from his back; another is changing into an ass, etc." — B. B. Atterbury.

The Venetian ambassador wrote of Cardinal Wolsey: — "I do perceive that every year he groweth more and more in power." When I first came to England, he used to say, "His Majesty will do so and so;" subsequently, he said, "We shall do so and so;" but now he says, "I shall do so and so." But history records how Wolsey's pride went before destruction, and his haughty spirit before a fall. — Spurgeon.

"As to the evil of being neither one thing nor the other, one finds an illustration in the waterways of Southern China, which in winter-time are quite useless for purposes of commerce. The temperature is most tantalizing, for it is neither cold enough to freeze the canals, so that the ice would be able to leare traffic; nor warm enough to thaw them, so that they could be navigable by boats." — Spurgeon.

CHAPTER THE SIXTH.

As God hath two dwelling-places, heaven and a contrite heart, so hath the devil —hell and a proud heart.—T. Watson.

Poverty of spirit is the bag into which Christ puts the riches of his grace.—Rowland Hill.

"A holy woman was wont to say of the rich: 'They are hemmed round with no common misery; they go down to hell without thinking of it, because their staircase thither is of gold and porphyry.'" —C. H. Spurgeon.

1, 2. (1) at ease, in their self-security, and false political confidence, engendered by such ritualism. trust, etc., better, "and to the self-confident ones in the mountain of Samaria." So both the self-indulgent of Judah and Israel are here addressed. chief, R. V., "the notable men of," i. e. spoken in irony of the exalted opinion of the Jews as a whole. came, R. V., "come," i. e. for judgment. (2) Calneh, Ge. x. 10. Hamath, Nu. xxxiv. 8. Gath, Jos. xiii. 3. border, or territory, continuing the argument of vs. 1, the cities named in it being referred to as examples of prosperity: Can you find, from Calneh and Hamath in the North of Syria to the Philistine border on the South, a single kingdom "better" (i. e. more flourishing) than your own? Thus has Jehovah favored you; and ye requite Him with indifference and neglect (vss. 3—6). Therefore (vs. 7) the sentence is, Ye shall be amongst the first to go into exile.—Cam. B. But Wellhausen conjectures that the places named are examples of fallen greatness, and if God could destroy such cities why should Samaria hope to escape?

Uncomfortableness in Church.—Archbishop Whately related the following anecdote. During his ministry at Halesworth, one of his parishioners told him that he thought a person should not go to church to be made uncomfortable. Whately replied that he thought so too, but whether it should be the sermon or the man's life that should be altered, so as to avoid the discomfort, must depend on whether the doctrine was right or wrong.

3—6. (3) put far away, or have a habit of putting far away. seat of violence i. e. turning the seat of judgment into the seat of oppression, taking advantage of the seeming delay of God's threatenings. (4) beds of ivory, ch. iii. 15. stretch, etc., in listless self-indulgence. lambs, etc., or the very best of everything. (5) chant, marg. quaver, "improvise idly," "babble," like David, who invented or improved the nebel and the kinnor, kinds of harps, the former played with the hand, the latter with the plectrum. (6) bowls, intimating there was no limit to the quantity. ointments, used as scents are with us. affliction of Joseph, the rich are indifferent to it; they have wealth, art, patriotism, religion, but neither heart for the poverty nor conscience for the sin of their people. For the real woes and sores of the people, the poverty, the overwork, the drunkenness, the dissoluteness, which more affect a nation's life than anything else, they have no pity and no care.—Exp. B.

Man's Evil Day (vs. 3).—I. All men have an evil day in their future. II. Some men adjourn in thought this evil day.—I. Not because they have any doubt as to its advent; 2. Nor because they lack reminders of its approach. But because of—I. The strength of our material attachments; 2. Our dread of the mysterious; 3. Lack of interest in the spiritual; 4. A conscious unpreparation for the scenes of retribution. III. None who adjourn this evil day in thought can delay it in fact.—Thomas.

7—11. (7) with the first, better, "at the head of them;" leading the procession. banquet, R. V., "revelry;" luxurious opportunities of self-indulgence. (8) excellency, "pride." (9) ten . . . die, though so many survive the siege, they shall all die in the following pestilence. (10) "A grim episode imagined by the propoet (cf. Is. iii. 6 f.) for the purpose of illustrating vividly the terrors of the time: the relative of the deceased man enters his house to perform the last duties to the corpse: he finds no living person in it except one, secreted in a far corner, who tells him he is the solitary survivor of the household, all the others having perished (cf. vs. 9): so desperate is the outlook that men dread even to mention Jehovah's name, for fear lest it should call down a fresh judgment upon them."—Camb. B. uncle, he will have to act as near relative, bec. the father and the brothers will be dead. he that burneth him, lit. "his burner," perhaps, not of the body, but of spices in his honor. bones, i. e. corpse. sides, R. V., "innermost parts." any with thee, i. e. alive.

(11) commandeth, i. e. the human agents who are to carry out his will, vs. 4. with breaches, R. V., "into fragments."

Pestilence.—"In 1813," says one, "such was the violence with which the plague raged at Malta, such the certain destruction wh. attended the slightest contact with the infected, that at last every better feeling of the heart was extinguished in a desire of self-preservation, and nobody could be found to perform the melancholy offices which make up the funeral train of sickness and death."—Hom. Com.

12—14. (12) upon the rock,^a or cliffs, crags; a very unreasonable thing; so unreasonable is the conduct of Israel towards God, ch. v. 7, and esp. of the corrupt judges. gall, i. e. "poison." hemlock, R. V., "wormwood." (13) thing of nought, their material prosperity. horns, De. xxxiii. 17; Ps. lxxxix. 17. "These boasters attributed all their success to themselves." "By our own strength have we taken to ourselves Karnaim." So Gratz reads the verse. The Hebrew text and all the versions take these names as if they were common nouns—Lo-Debar, "a thing of nought;" Karnaim, "a pair of horns." These two fortresses, with many others, Israel had lately taken from Syria; but not, as they boasted, by their own strength. It was only Syria's pre-occupation with Assyria now surgent on the northern flank, which allowed Israel these easy victories.—Exp. B. (14) river . . wilderness, prob. Wady el Ahsa, on the southern border of Moab.

Pride, the Destroyer.—When a proud man thinks best of himself, then God and man think worst of him; all his glory is but like a vapor, which climbeth as though it would go up to heaven, but when it comes to a little height, it falls down again, and never ascends more. So Adam thought that the fair apple should make him like his Maker, but God resisted his pride, and that apple made him like the serpent that tempted him with it. Absalom thought that rebellion would make him a king, but God resisted his pride, and his rebellion hanged him on a tree.—Henry Smith.—Need of Humility.—A heart full of pride is but a vessel full of air, this self-opinion must be blown out of us before saving knowledge be poured into us. Humility is the knees of the soul, and to that posture the Lamb will open the book; but pride stands upon tip-toes, as if she would snatch the book, and unclasp it herself. The first lesson of a Christian is humility; and he that hath not learned the first lesson is not fit to take out a new.—Thomas Adams.

CHAPTER THE SEVENTH.

The visions recounted in this chapter form the substance of Amos's address at Bethel. The religion of his time—religion as mere ritual and sacrifice—was what God sent him to beat down, and he faced it at its headquarters, and upon one of its high days, in the royal and popular sanctuary where it enjoyed at once the patronage of the crown, the lavish gifts of the rich, and the thronged devotion of the multitude. As Savonarola at the Duomo in Florence, as Luther at the Diet of Worms, as our Lord Himself at the feast in Jerusalem, so was Amos at the feast in Bethel.—Exp. B. 1—3. (1) grasshoppers, or young locusts. latter growth, or the aftermath. king's mowings, so the first crop of grass was called, poss. bec. a proportion of it went for the king's use. (2) I beseech, the true prophet prays for the people to whom he reveals the message of God. by . . arise? R. V., "how shall Jacob stand?" How can he stand and endure, if thus visited? small, bec. of continued judgments and calamities. (3) repented, or granted a respite at the Prophet's entreaty. It, i. e. the final execution of doom upon Israel.

Vision was a frequent mode of prophetic intuition (comp. Hos. xii. 10). The vision is a projection or creation of the mind, analogous to the dream: the subject falls into a state of trance, or ecstasy, in which the channels connecting the brain with external objects are closed; the conscious operation of the senses is consequently in abeyance; the power of the will to guide thought is relaxed: on the other hand, the imagination, or faculty of combining images and ideas, which have been previously apprehended, into new forms, is abnormally active; and the pic-

^a "As horses and oxen are useless on a rock, so ye are incapable of fulfilling justice." Grotius.

There is something intensely amusing, according to our notions, in the name which the Eskimo bestow upon themselves. It appears they call themselves the "Innuut,"—that is, "the people" par excellence. If a man is a perfectionist, and thinks he is sinless, it is a proof not that he is better, but only that he is blinder, than his neighbors.—Richard Glover.

"Australian papers state that in the Riverina district the grasshoppers, or locusts, have been very troublesome recently, not only destroying crops, but filling up wells and water-holes, and even consuming textile fabrics, such as blinds and window-curtains, in the houses."—Pulp. Com.

"Eager clutching at the delights of natural life, and making it one's chief aim, is the sure way to lose all its sweetness and to miss the higher life; while the subordination, and, if needful, the sacrifice, of 'life in this world,' leads straight to the possession of 'life eternal.'"—Alexander McLaren.

"Whitefield often affirmed that he would rather have a church with ten men in it right with God, than one with five hundred at whom the world would laugh in its sleeve."—Joseph Cook.

"Livingstone, as a missionary, was anxious to avoid a large church of nominal adherents. 'Nothing,' he wrote, 'will induce me to form an impure church.' 'Fifty added to the church' sounds well at home, but if only five of these are genuine, what will it profit in the Great Day?"— —Blakie.

Set thine heart upright, if thou wouldst rejoice, And please thyself in thine heart's pleasing choice:

But then be sure thy plumb and level be Rightly applied to that which pleaseth me.—
Ch r i s top her Harvey.

a 2 Kl. xxi. 13; Is. xxviii. 17.

b See 2 Kl. xv. 10.

"One danger of secret sin is that a man cannot commit it without being by-and-by betrayed into a public sin. If a man commit one sin, it is like the melting of the lower glacier upon the Alps, the other must follow in time.—Spurgeon.

It is said of the Areopagites, in Athens, that their sentence was so upright that none could ever say he was unjustly condemned of them. How much more true is this of the righteous judgment of God, who must needs therefore be justified, and every mouth stopped.

—Trapp.

tures created by it stand out the more vividly, not being contrasted with the sharper impressions produced in a waking state by the senses. In other words, the vision may be described as a combination into new forms, under the influence of a determining impulse, of the images and impressions with which the mind, through its waking experience, is stored. In a prophetic vision, the determining impulse will have been due to the operation of the revealing Spirit; in the case of Amos, as we may suppose, the thought of an impending judgment, which, borne in upon him at the time when Jehovah's "hand" seized him, determined the direction taken by his imagination, and took shape accordingly in the concrete forms presented in these visions. It is in agreement with the character of the vision, as thus explained, that its imagery is generally supplied by the surroundings, amid which the prophet who experiences it lived himself; the basis of Isaiah's vision (ch. vi.) is thus the Temple of Jerusalem (though what he sees is not, of course, an exact copy of it); the forms described by Ezekiel (ch. i.) are modelled upon the sculptured figures of Babylonia; and the material imagery in Amos' visions is suggested similarly by objects, or scenes, with which the prophet would himself be familiar. The vision is thus the forcible symbolic presentation of a prophetic truth.—S. R. Driver in Camb. Bib.

4—6. (4) called, etc., G. A. Smith, "was calling fire into the quarrel." Jehovah already had a contention with Israel. fire, "the imagery may be suggested by the conflagrations which in the East break out in field and forest in the dry season, and spread with alarming rapidity." great deep, "the vast subterranean reservoirs whence the Hebrews believed the springs of the earth to be fed" (Gen. i. 7; Ex. xx. 4; Ps. xxiv. 2). did . . part, R. V., "would have eaten up the land;" threatened to destroy the solid earth. (5) by whom, vs. 2. (6) repented, vs. 3.

Human Prayer Leading to a Divine Revelation.—Though we are far enough from holding that human prayer affects any alteration in the ordinances of nature or the purposes of the Almighty, we nevertheless hold with a tenacious faith the doctrine that a man gets from God by prayer that which he would not get without it. Indeed, in every department of life man gets from the Almighty, by a certain kind of activity, that which he would never obtain without the effort. A man has a field which he has never tilled, and on which Providence has bestowed no crop for many a long year. He tills it this year, and in autumn God crowns it with His goodness. Another man has no health; for many years he has neglected the conditions of physical vigor, and he is infirm and afflicted. This year he attends rigorously to the laws of his physical well-being. He takes the proper exercise, the right food, the pure air, and he feels his infirmities and his pains decrease, and new vigor pulsating through his veins. Another man has never enjoyed the light of Divine knowledge; his soul has been living in the region of indolence; he has neglected all the means of intelligence. He alters his course and sets to work; he reads and thinks, studies God's holy book, and prays; he feels his nature gradually brightening under the genial rays of truth. Thus everywhere God reveals to man his goodness in connection with his activity, which never comes without human effort. It is so in prayer. "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." It puts the soul in that angle on which the Divine light falls, in that soil in which its intellectual and moral powers will grow. "Ask, and ye shall receive."—Pul. Com.

7—9. (7) upon, R. V., "beside." plumbline, string with a weight attached, used in securing the straightness of an erection. (8) set a plumbline, i. e. apply a strict moral test, and destroy what does not conform to the standard." pass by, pardon, spare; justice must take its course. (9) high places, like Bethel, Gilgal, etc. Isaac, poetic synonym of Israel. rise . . sword, an army of invasion as the agent of punishment."

The Folly of Sin.—To them who believe another life after this, an eternal state of happiness or misery in another world (which is but a reasonable postulatam or demand among Christians), there is nothing in mathematics more demonstrable than the folly of wicked men; for it is not a clearer and more evident principle that the whole is greater than a part, than that eternity and the concerns of it are to be preferred before time. . . . Is that man wise, as to his body and his health, who only clothes his hands, but leaves his whole body naked? who provides only against the toothache, and neglects whole troops of mortal diseases that are ready to rush in upon him? Just thus does he who takes care only for this vile body, but neglects his precious and immortal soul, who is very solicitous to prevent small and temporal inconveniences, but takes no care to escape the damnation of hell. Is he a prudent man, as to his temporal estate, that lays designs only for a day, without any prospect to, or provision for, the remaining part of his life?—Tillotson.

10—13. (10) priest of Beth-el, so the idolatrous priest. conspired, etc., he considered that Amos's preachings stirred up rebellion, esp. against the established national religion. In Amaziah's eyes he was guilty of "constructive treason." (11) Jeroboam, but Amos's words applied to the house of Jeroboam, not to Jeroboam himself.^a (12) O thou seer, "spoken in a tone of supercilious contempt," "thou visionary." into . . . Judah, from whence Amos came. eat bread, i. e. earn thy living as do the soothsayers. (13) king's chapel, or sanctuary. Bethel means God's house; it had become only the king's house.^b It is a chief shrine of the recognized and authoritative national worship. Amaziah speaks as a thorough Erastian; as if the human authority were everything, and the Lord, of Himself, had no claims on the land.—Pul. Com.

A Faithful Minister.—Bishop Latimer, in preaching before King Henry the Eighth, spoke his mind very plainly; which some of his enemies thought to make their advantage of, by complaining of him to the king, that they might thus get him out of the way. Soon after his sermon, he and several others being called before the king to speak their minds on certain matters, one of them kneeled before his majesty, and accused Latimer of having preached seditious doctrines. The king turned to Latimer, and said, "What say you to that, sir?" Latimer kneeled down, and turning first to his accuser, said, "What form of preaching would you appoint me to preach before a king? Would you have me to preach nothing concerning a king, in a king's sermon? Have you any commission to appoint me what I shall preach?" He asked him several other questions, but he would answer none at all; nor had he anything to say. Then he turned to the king, and said, "I never thought myself worthy, nor ever sued, to be a preacher before your Grace. But I was called to it, and would be willing, if you mislike me, to give place to my betters. But if your Grace allow me for a preacher, I would desire your Grace to discharge my conscience, give me leave to frame my discourse according to mine audience. I had been a very dolt to have preached so at the borders of your realm, as I preach before your Grace." These words were well received by the king, as Latimer concluded, because the king presently turned to another subject. Some of his friends came to him with tears in their eyes, and told him, they looked for nothing but that he should have been sent to the Tower the same night.—Whitcross.

14, 15. (14) no prophet,^a in the sense of properly belonging to the order of the prophets. herdman, ch. i. 1.^b gatherer . . . fruit, a dresser, or cultivator of sycamores.^c The fruit is infested with an insect (the Sycophaga crassipes), and till the "eye" or top has been punctured, so that the insects may escape, it is not eatable. This operation, it is probable, is what is here alluded to.—Cam. B. Only the poor gather and use these sycamore figs. (15) took me, separating him from his common avocation by a special Divine call.

Great Men of Humble Origin.—The common class of day-laborers has given us Brindley the engineer, Cook the navigator, and Burns the poet. Masons and bricklayers can boast of Ben Jonson, who worked at the building of Lincoln's Inn, with a trowel in his hand and a book in his pocket; Edwards and Telford the engineers, Hugh Miller the geologist, and Allan Cunningham the writer and sculptor; whilst among the distinguished carpenters we find the names of Inigo Jones the architect, Harrison the chronometer-maker, John Hunter the physiologist, Romney and Opie the painters, Prof. Lee the orientalist, and John Gibson the sculptor. From the weaver class have sprung Simpson the mathematician, Bacon the sculptor, the two Milners, Adam Walker, John Foster,

"When a building is noticed to bulge a little, our builders hasten to shore it up with timbers; and before long the surveyor bids them take it down. Should we not see great changes in our churches if all the bowing walls were removed? Yet this would be no real loss, but in the Lord's sight an actual gain to the city of God."

—Spurgeon.

a "Had he really predicted the king's violent death, a jealous ruler might have suspected him of treason, of taking measures to make his words good. Hence this perversion of his prophecy by Amaziah."—Spk. Com.

b "Bethel is the place where the king performs his religious worship in person, and often resides there with his court, that he may the better attend upon the service performed at this place."

—Lowth.

a "Not a prophet by profession, nor bred up in the schools of the prophets, as those usually were who took that office upon them."

—Lowth

b Comp. Zec. xiii. 5.

"It is an arduous life, and those alone among the people pursue it who can find no easier mode of support."

—Van Lennep.

c "The sycamore is a large tree, with a leaf like that of the mulberry tree, and fruit like a fig. The fruit is naturally bitter, and to remove this the bark is wounded at the time of budding, and the fruit is slightly scarified with an iron comb as it approaches to ripeness."

—Kittlo.

a "Possibly Amosiah had used this word in ridicule of the prophetic utterances of Amos." —Wordsworth.

"Some people," says Philip Henry, "do not wish to hear much of repentance, but I think it so necessary that, if I should die in the pulpit, I wish to die preaching repentance; and if out of the pulpit, practising it."

"No sin is ever alone. Dr. Macdonald says, 'There is no fault that does not bring its brothers and sisters and cousins to live with it.' —S urgeon.

"Nothing warrants unlawful fear in the performance of duty or neglect of it. Providence must never be construed to sanction flight or withdraw us from our work." —Hom. Com.

Re. xiv. 18.

Wilson the ornithologist, Dr. Livingston the missionary traveler, etc. Shoemakers have given us Sturgeon the electrician, Sam'l Drew the essayist, Gifford the editor of the "Quarterly Review," Bloomfield the poet, and Wm. Carey the missionary.—Smiles.

16, 17. (16) hear thou, addressed to Amaziah, vs. 12. drop . . word, comp. De. xxxii. 2; Job xxix. 22. The expression probably has ref. to the flow of words wh. streamed fr. the prophet's lips." house of Isaac, i. e. Israel. (17) Therefore, as a judgment for trying to silence God's Prophet. wife, etc., reference is to the license and cruelty of the Assyrian conquerors. divided by line, among the Assyrians. polluted land, R. V., "unclean," foreign country defiled by the service of idols.

Recalling Personal History.—Amos always kept good hold of his history. Because we let our personal history slip from the memory we lose a great deal of power. Remember your poverty; remember early hardships; remember through what difficulty you had to fight for every inch of foothold you have secured; remember how you were sustained in weakness; recall the time when men were so savage against you that you were not certain whether you would end your days in the work-house or in the madhouse; recall your history, have it as a daily companion, because keeping fellowship with your memories you can take the next step with the greater ease and grace, and it shall be by the goodness of God a step upward and a step heavenward.—Peop. Bib.

CHAPTER THE EIGHTH.

1—3. (1) basket . . fruit, i. e. of ripe fruit. "Partly the thought of Israel's ripeness for judgment, but chiefly the Heb. word kêtz, 'end,' brings up before the prophet's mental eye in his vision, agreeably with the principles explained on vii. 1, the basket of kaitz, 'summer fruit.' Similarly, in Jeremiah's inaugural vision (Jer. i. 11, 12), the thought of Jehovah's watching (shoked) over His word to perform it, produces by association of sounds the image of the almond tree (shaked), the symbolism of which is afterwards explained, as that of the 'summer fruit' is explained here."—Camb. B. (2) my people, even in judgment God acknowledges His relationship. pass by, ch. vii. 8. (3) temple, i. e. the idol palace, or temple, at Bethel. howlings, of pain and despair. with silence, Camb. Bib., "many the corpses! in all places have they cast them forth: hush!" By the use of the perfect tenses the prophet represents the future vividly as already accomplished. The figures intimate a very great slaughter.

Fruitfulness (vs. 1).—I. Notice the figure of the text as applied to the harvest. 1. Fruit from the earth, God's bounty, not man's production; 2. Summer fruit, seasonable, in due time, ripened; 3. A basket, at man's disposal; 4. The Lord showed, etc., a reminder that thanks are due to the Giver. II. Notice the figure of the text as to its personal lessons. 1. Fruit is the result of cultivation; 2. The ripening fruit points to the coming of the end; 3. Suggestive of inquiries as to our own fruitfulness. —Analyst.

4—7. (4) swallow . . needy, a better, "pant after them to devour them, like a dog or wild beast panting and yelping after his prey." (5) new . . corn? the new moon, the first of the month was observed as a holiday and marked by relig. services (Isa. i. 13, 14; Hos. ii. 11). On the holy days trade was suspended. sabbath, the Sabbath is threatened by the same worldliness and love of money which tramples on the helpless. The interests of the Sabbath are the interests of the poor: the enemies of the Sabbath are the enemies of the poor. And all this illustrates our Saviour's saying, that the Sabbath was made for man. Ne. xiii. 15, 16. ephah, by wh. the merchants sold their goods. shekel, by wh. the money of the purchaser was weighed. falsifying, etc., comp. Le. xix. 35—37. (6) silver, the final issue of the rapacious conduct described in vs. 5 is that the poor are more and more impoverished, and, falling into debt, have in the end to sell themselves—or their children—as slaves (Lev. xxv. 39) to their rich oppressors, who were only too ready to buy the poor for the silver which they owed them, and the needy for the sake of a a "The Prophet again addresses the proud, grasping nobles, and rebukes them for their avarice, their dishonesty, and their meanness." —Spk. Com.

b Isa. v. 8.

c Nu. xxviii. 11.

pair of sandals, i. e. for a trifle (cf. ii. 6), the price of which they were unable to pay.—Camb. B. refuse, making the poor buy what was not fit for human food. (7) excellency of Jacob, ch. vi. 8. Jehovah swears—ironically—by that which, however deeply He disapproves of it, He knows to be unalterable.” never forget, God is said to remember when He punishes.

Avarice (vss. 4—10).—I. It is execrable in spirit. 1. It is sacrilegious; 2. Dishonest; 3. Cruel. II. It is abhorrent to Jehovah. 1. Repugnant to His nature; 2. Hostile to universal happiness. III. It is a curse to society.

Honoring the Sabbath.—In 1633 the town of Taunton had a good Puritan pastor in Mr. George Newton. He was the great light of its Puritanism, and was Vicar of St. Mary Magdalene. Though naturally timid, “strength was made perfect in weakness,” and he was not timid in the assertion of his principles, and soon became a noted “gospeller.” When the “Book of Sports” came out by order of Council, and was commanded to be read in all the churches, Mr. Newton read it, but said immediately to his congregation, “These are the commandments of men.” He then read the twentieth chapter of the book of Exodus, saying, “These are the commandments of God; but whereas in this case the laws of God and the laws of men are at variance, choose ye which ye will obey.” Thus he took the side of the Sabbath against the profane decrees of the king.—Old Test. Anec.

8—10. (8) for this, i. e. for all this wickedness of the nobles and avaricious wealthy. it shall rise, trans. “and it shall rise up, all of it, as the Nile, and it shall be tossed about and sink (again), as the Nile of Egypt.” As the Nile, at the time of its annual inundation, rises, overflows, and sinks again, so will the land of Israel, in all its length and breadth, heave, and be convulsed, as by an earthquake, as it labors to rid itself of its guilty inhabitants.—Cam. B. (9) sun .. noon, the figure of an eclipse is taken to represent public calamity.^o (10) sackcloth, etc., all these terms indicate a time of terrible national trouble.² baldness, artificial, caused by shaving. only son, the greatest of family sorrows.

Some Can Only Do Their Work by Dying.—The errand of Bathsheba’s first child into the world was by its death to bring David to his knees and a right mind (2 Sam. xii. 13—23). And how many an early death in a careless family has been that family’s salvation! Even the minister cut down in his early prime, with a life of usefulness opening out, as it seems, before him, may preach a sermon by his death more potent for good than all he could have said alive. Untimely death may even in certain cases anticipate the loss of influence for good. We know men of influence in the Church who in their erratic age are undoing the good they were honored to do in their earlier years. Such men have only lived too long. If their sun had set at noon their life-work would have been far greater, humanly speaking, than it will now be. Looking as we do at the surface of things, and blind to their deeper relations and far-reaching issues, we are not in a position to criticise the providential arrangements of God. To believe that there is order in the seeming tangle, and ultimate and wider good behind the present partial evil, is the attitude of that enlightened faith which argues that Infinite Wisdom, omnipotent on the one hand and benevolent on the other, being at the helm of things, will steer in character.—Pul. Com.

11—14. (11) famine, etc., this was a just retribution on those who would not hear the word of the Lord as spoken by Amos.⁵ (12) wander, etc., from the Dead Sea to the Mediterranean, i. e. all through the land. Nowhere should any prophet of the Lord be found. (13) fair virgins, from the general suffering not even the loveliest, the strongest, and the best should be exempted. (14) sin of Samaria,^a wh. was its idol calf. Thy god, better put in swearing form, “By the life of thy god, O Dan.” the manner, etc., better, “By the life of the way of Beersheba.” Strange as it may appear to us to speak of the life of the lifeless, this often happens among the Semites. To-day Arabs “swear wa hyât, ‘by the life of,’ even of things inanimate; ‘By the life of this fire, or of this coffee.’” And as Amos here tells us that the Israelite pilgrims swore

Ho. viii. 13, ix. 9; Is. xlii. 25; Je. xxxi. 34.

“After poor Sabat, an Arablan, who had professed faith in Christ by the means of the labors of the Rev. H. Martyn, had apostatized from Christianity, and written in favor of Mohammedanism, he was met at Malacca by the late Rev. Dr. Milne, who proposed to him some very pointed questions, in reply to which, he said, ‘I am unhappy! I have a mountain of burning sand on my head. When I go about, I know not what I am doing!’ It is indeed an evil thing and bitter to forsake the Lord our God.” —Bate’s Cyclopoedia.

e “There were two great eclipses of the sun about eleven years after the time that Amos prophesied. . . . Calamitous times are expressed by the failing of the light of the sun, and the day’s being over-spread with darkness.” —Lowth.

Is. xlii. 10; Mi. iii. 6.

f Is. xv. 2; Je. xlviii. 37; Eze. vii. 18.

“To think we are able is almost to be so; to determine upon attainment is frequently attainment itself. Thus earnest resolution has often seemed to have about it almost a savor of omnipotence.” —Samuel Smiles.

g Pr. xxix. 18; Ps. lxxiv. 9; Eze. vii. 26.

a Ho. viii. 5, 6. b “The god of Dan was the golden calf set up there by Jeroboam. 1 Ki. xii. 29.” —Spk. Com.

° Am. iii. 14.

4 The people are conceived as fleeing from the Assyrians, and seeking protection in the temple at Bethel. There, however, they would perish in the overthrow of the temple.

"God is everywhere, not as the air is everywhere. The air is part in one place and part in another; God is all in every place. God is wholly in the height of heaven, and wholly in the depth of hell; wholly in the length of the earth, and wholly in the breadth of the sea. All God is in all things, and all God is without all things; He is without all things, and not shut out of anything. He is in all things, and not included in anything. So the ancients speak of this wonderful mystery of God's omnipresence."—Caryl.

"The mountains are nature's monuments."

—J. Hamilton.

"Depend upon it it is not the want of greater miracles, out of the soul to perceive such as are allowed us still, that makes us push all the sanctities into the far spaces we cannot reach. The devout feel that wherever God's hand is there is miracle; and it is simply an undevoutness which imagines that only where miracle is, there can be the real hand of God."

by the way to Beersheba, so do the Moslems affirm their oaths by the sacred way to Mecca.—Exp. B.

Vss. 11-14.—When Divine judgments come upon a race which has forgotten and forsaken God, the once despised and hated word is appreciated again. Men "hunger and thirst" for it, but often at first not in the right way. They desire as speedily as possible to hear of promises and consolations, and to these every ear is open. But it is in vain. We now need expect no new revelation from God. We have "His word" in the Scripture. But when this is a long time despised, it follows at last that there is no one to preach it, and without a living preacher it is finally lost. Or if it is preached it has no power to console, and men fail to find what they seek. Thus ensues a longing which is not satisfied.—Lange.

CHAPTER THE NINTH.

1-4. (1) upon, R. V., "beside." altar, prob. that at Bethel.° The Lord doubtless appeared as a fire, or a cloud. he said, to the avenging angel, commissioned to carry out His judgments. Some think that the command was given to the Prophet. Smite the lintel, etc., R. V., "smite the chapters that the thresholds may shake; and break them in pieces on the head of all of them."^a (2) dig into hell, fig. for hiding themselves in the deepest holes and caves. climb . . . heaven, fig. for the most inaccessible heights. (3) Carmel, famous for its thick forests. serpent, a monster supposed to inhabit the deep; fig. for calamity, and punishment. (4) go into captivity, or voluntarily surrender themselves. before, driven like sheep.

Great Sins, Great Calamities, Great Efforts.—I. Under the righteous government of God, great sin exposes to great calamity. II. The consciousness of great calamities will stimulate to great efforts for escape. III. The greatest efforts to escape must prove utterly futile when God has given the sinner up.—Thomas.

Carmel.—Carmel was one of the barriers of the promised land, which Sennacherib boasted he would scale with the multitude of his horses and his chariots: "I will enter into the lodgings of his borders, and into the forest of his Carmel." Ungrateful as the soil of this mountain is, the wild vines and olive trees that are still found among the brambles which encumber its declivities prove that the hand of industry has not labored among the rocks of Carmel in vain. So well adapted were the sides of this mountain to the cultivation of the vine, that the kings of Judah covered every improvable spot with vineyards and plantations of olives. Its deep and entangled forests, its savage rocks and lofty summit, have been in all ages the favorite retreat of the guilty or oppressed. The fastnesses of this rugged mountain are so difficult of access that the Prophet Amos classes them with the deeps of hell, the height of heaven, and the bottom of the sea. The Church, in her most affluent state, is compared to a fugitive lurking in the deep recesses of this mountain: "Feed thy people with thy rod, the flock of thy heritage which dwell solitarily in the midst of Carmel." Lebanon raises to heaven a summit of naked and barren rocks, covered for the greater part of the year with snow; but the top of Carmel, how naked and sterile so ever its present condition, seems to have been clothed with verdure in the days of Amos, which seldom was known to fade: "And he said, The Lord will roar from Zion, and utter His voice from Jerusalem, and the habitation of the shepherds shall mourn, and the top of Carmel shall wither."—Paxton.—Sin Brought to Remembrance.—Not many years since a large steam vessel, crossing the Atlantic Ocean, was caught in a fearful storm, and wrecked. All on board perished except a few, who, clinging to portions of the wreck, were rescued by a passing vessel and brought safely to land. One of the survivors relates that, during the time he was thus floating on the water, lashed to a spar, now engulfed in the roaring waters, then violently cast to the surface, expecting every moment to be his last, there seemed continually ringing in his ears the inquiry, "Tom, did you steal sister's grapes?" The hurricane raged round him, the wind howling in fearful blasts, which blended with crashing peals of thunder; but, loud and clear above the tumult of the storm, again he heard a well-known voice inquire, "Tom, did you steal sister's grapes?" Whilst yet a lad, his sister was dangerously ill, and a neighbor kindly sent some grapes. These his mother put aside for use during the weary watches of the night; but the boy, though well acquainted with the purpose for which they were sent, stole and ate them. They were not missed until required late in the evening; and then, his mother coming to his bedside, gently shook him, and in tones of tender rebuke, asked, "Tom, did you steal sister's grapes?" As he opened his eyes, the light of the candle shining on her face, he saw the tears trickling down her cheeks, and, muttering some partial confession of his fault, lay expecting further reproach, if not punishment; but, without another word, she sorrowfully retired: and now, with nothing in the circumstances by which he was surrounded to recall it—alone—buffeted hither and thither on the waves of the Atlantic, this sin of his boyhood was rising up in judgment against him.

5, 6. (5) toucheth, by cyclone, earthquake, or pestilence. melt, even the stoutest hearts being filled with fear. rise, etc., ch. viii. 8.^a (6) stories, better, R. V., "chambers," i. e. his dwelling. troop in, R. V., "vault upon," i. e. "the starry dome by wh. the earth is overhung," Is. lxvi. 1. calleth, etc., vs. 8, long continued rains.

Note on vs. 6.—The Hebrews pictured the sky as a solid vault (firmamentum), resting at its extremities upon the earth (Job xxv. 11): in this vault the heavenly bodies were imagined to revolve: "in front of it" (i. e. in the open air below its lower surface) the birds flew (Gen. i. 20): above it were reservoirs in which rain was stored (as also snow and hail); and above these "waters above the firmament" Jehovah sat enthroned. The words of vs. 6 are thus intended to illustrate Jehovah's power by pointing to the palace which He has constructed for Himself on high, and firmly secured, by resting its foundations upon the solid earth.—Camb. Bib.—Amos's Spiritual Discernment.—The poor little telescope has raked up more than a hundred thousand worlds, and when the telescope is tired with looking, it says, I have not yet begun to see; beyond is the real life of the worlds; improve me, rub these lenses, burnish them, enlarge them, throw them away and replace them with others, for I have not yet begun to see the stories in God's palace. A few of the under-stories I have seen, and they are entrancingly and inexpressibly lovely and glorious; I cannot get inside them, but their windows are ablaze with light; yet I am sure I have only begun, or hardly begun; the stories are miles, millions at once, higher and higher. He was a singular herdman who saw that thousands of years ago. He had no telescope; he had only the natural vision as an outward instrument, but he had a soul that used that vision to advantage.—Peop. Bib.

7—10. (7) as . . . Ethiopians, i. e. degenerate Israel is no more to God than these despised Kushites. Have not I, the pronoun I is here emphatic. Amos proclaims the universal providence of God. Bec. He is exalted in righteousness He guides all nations. (8) eyes, etc., vs. 4. sinful kingdom, i. e. the separate kingdom of the ten tribes, founded by Jeroboam. saving, etc., i. e. God's chastisement is not doom but discipline. (9) sift, "a beautiful image, representing clearly God's beneficent design in the captivity and dispersion of Israel." (10) sinners, only the sinners, not one grain of the good. overtake us, press on us from behind. prevent, impede us by getting in the way before us.

Judgment and Mercy (vs. 9).—I. The determination avowed. 1. The comparison employed points to the only distinction of character recognized in Scripture—the righteous and the wicked; 2. The character of the individual Christian is not one of unmingled purity; 3. The mixture of character which exists in the Church of God; 4. Consider the process—sifting. II. The security promised. 1. The process has exclusive reference to the wheat; 2. The security arises from God's care over His people in affliction—this care arises out of God's love for them—this love and care extends to all, even the least. III. Inferences. 1. The safety of true believers amidst surrounding troubles; 2. Learn to recognize the hand of God in all events.

Much of the glory of God in creation is hid by a train of second causes, through which few look to the first."—Howe.

The first article in the commission of General Booth and his "army" is re-unciation. Their reward is rescued immortal lives.—Anon.

"In every quarter of the world, and in well-nigh every nation in every quarter, Jews have been found. The whole earth is, as it were, one vast sieve in the hands of God, in which Israel is shaken from one end to the other. . . . The chaff and dust would be blown away by the air; . . . but no solid corn, not one grain, should fall to the earth."

—Pusey.

"Gold in the ore is a treasure; but it is when it has passed through the refiner's hands, and has received the stamp of currency, that it becomes of acknowledged value, and fit for adaptation to all the circumstances and conveniences of life."—W. S. M.

"Fiery trials make golden Christians; sanctified afflictions are spiritual promotion."

—Dyer.

* Comp. Nu. xiv. 18.

Conscience is the unbiased head and heart approving or condemning the will."

"Carlyle, speaking of the changes made by time says, 'How tragic to me is the sight of old friends; a thing I always really shrunk from!' Sin has made still more painful changes in some once numbered amongst the friends of God."

Le. xxvi. 5.

b "The kingdom of the Messiah shall take such deep rooting in the world as never to be rooted out of it."—Mat. Henry.

Is. lx. 21; Je. xxxii. 41; Eze. xxxiv. 28; Joel iii. 20, 21.

"Souls are made sweet not by taking the acid fluids out, but by putting something in—a great Love, a new Spirit, the Spirit of Christ."

—Henry Drummond.

"Nothing good bursts forth all at once. The lightning may dart out of a black cloud; but the day sends his bright heralds before him, to prepare the world for his coming."

—Hare.

11, 12. (11) that day, i. e. after the chastisement of discipline. tabernacle, or house and family of David. The word tent, or booth, indicates the low condition into which Dav.'s house had fallen. breaches, with prob. allusion to the separation of the kingdom of David into two parts, and the evil condition of country under Amaziah. days of old, i. e. of David and Solomon. (12) Edom, ch. i. 12.^a all .. name, Cam. B., "all the nations, over whom thy name has been called," as owner or conqueror. Ref. to David's conquests.

The Epilogue.—Amos closes, as the prophets are wont to close their discourses, with the promise of a brighter future. The dynasty of David, though for the time humbled, will be reinstated in its former splendor and power (vss. 11—12); and the blessings of peace will be shared in perpetuity by the entire nation (vss. 13—15).

Divine Discernment.—Everybody can find a bird's nest in winter when the trees are bare, but in summer the green leaves hide them; so are believers discovered by adversity. One thing, however, should never be forgotten: whether we know believers or not, God knows them. He does not include one hypocrite in the number, nor exclude one sincere trustor, even though he be of little faith. He knows infallibly and universally. Does He know me, even me, as one of those who trust in Him? The Lord knoweth them that are His, and they know Him as their stronghold. Have I such knowledge?—Spurgeon.

13—15. (13) plowman, etc., "There is to be no interval between ploughing and harvest, and the vintage is to last till next year's sowing." hills .. melt, lit. "dissolve themselves:" so abundant will be the produce of the vineyards, that it will be "as though the hills dissolved themselves in the rich streams which they poured down." Comp. Joel iii. 18.—Cam. B. (14) bring again, De. xxx. 3. (15) plant them, etc., it is generally assumed that these promises refer to a yet unfulfilled restoration of Israel.^b

The Golden Age.—Nothing short of inspiration can account for such a close to such a book. Throughout his prophecies Amos has been exposing national sinfulness, threatening Divine chastisement, picturing the degradation, the desolation, the captivity of the kingdoms of Israel and of Judah. How comes it that he is able to transcend this distressing representation? to look beyond these gloomy clouds? to discern, whether far or near, the vision of a smiling earth, a happy people, a splendid prosperity, an eternal joy? It is not the force of human reasoning; it is not the impulse of delusive hope. No; it is the presence of the Divine Spirit that has purged the prophet's spiritual vision, so that he sees the glory yet to be; it is this that touches the prophet's tongue, so that the wail of sorrow and distress is changed into the shout of triumph and the song of joy.—Pul. Com.

Amos—the Prophet of Social Justice.—

No prophet, neither prophet's son, but called

From following the flock to be a voice

For God, a seer of truth for people walled

About with insincerity, a choice

And gifted workman, trained in field, not in school.

Beneath the silent stars he thought by night,

And wrought the livelong day with busy tool.

So measured he to manhood's fullest height.

No golden glamour hides from eyes made keen

By desert air the nation's sure decay.

His plumb-line makes the social structure lean

So far from truth that naught its fall can stay.

He sees the Lord above the altar stand

To smite the temple and to scourge the land.—C. S. Hoyt.

Introduction.

I. Author. Obadiah.—"Of the personal history of Obadiah nothing is known. The contents of his prophecy show that he belonged to the Kingdom of Judah. The name which he bears, 'servant of Yah,' or 'worshipper of Yah,' is a common one in the Old Testament. We are specially familiar with it as borne by the godly chamberlain of Ahab in the time of Elijah (1 Kings xviii. 3—16). But neither with him, nor with any other of the persons who are called by it in the sacred history, can the author of this Book be identified." II. Time. B. C. 588-583. Expositors are not agreed concerning the date. "The probability would certainly seem to be, that Obadiah is commissioned to foretell the punishment of Edom for the recent wrongdoing which he so vividly depicts. His prophecy would thus have been delivered shortly after the destruction of the city, or between its first capture and final destruction, by the Chaldeans." III. Theme. He first denounces judgment against Edom (1—9), then (10—16) dwells upon the special sin committed, the malicious joy with which the Edomites had abetted Judah's enemies, reiterating the threatening; and afterwards (17—21), he describes the restoration of Jewish prosperity, their dominion being largely extended. The accomplishment of the earlier part of the prophecy took place about five years after the taking of Jerusalem, that of the latter in the victories of the Maccabean princes; this has, however, no doubt its fullest completion in the establishment of Messiah's kingdom. IV. Comparison with other Old Testament passages. "It is impossible to lay side by side the denunciation of Edom by Obadiah (vv. 1—9) and the prophecy of Jeremiah on the same subject (xlix. 7—22) without being convinced that they are either derived from the common source or that one of them is a reproduction of the other. The most probable conclusion is, that Obadiah, stirred by the recent wrongs inflicted by the Edomites upon his people, wrongs which perhaps he had himself witnessed, was commissioned to pour forth this brief denunciation against them; while Jeremiah, his contemporary, took up and repeated shortly after in his own more elaborate parable of reproach much of what his brother prophet had uttered. Two other Old Testament denunciations against Edom belong to the same period of Jewish history and serve to throw light upon the prophecy of Obadiah. Compare: Ezekiel xxv. 12—14; xxxv. 2—15; and Psalm cxxxvii."—(Cambridge Bible.) On the Psalm, see selection under verses 20 and 21, of this Book.

Synopsis.

(According to the Pulpit Commentary.)

PART I. (Vers. 1—16.) The destruction of Edom, and the cause thereof.

Sec. 1. (Vers. 1—9.) The heathen nations are summoned to take vengeance on Edom. In spite of her impregnable position, they shall bring her low and strip her of her wealth, being aided and encouraged by her allies.

Sec. 2. (Vers. 10—14.) This punishment falls upon her as the result of the malice and unfriendliness which she has displayed towards Israel in the time of her calamity, in that she rejoiced at her sister's disaster, and took part with her enemies.

Sec. 3. (Vers. 15, 16.) For this cause Edom shall be remembered in the day of the Lord; she shall suffer at the hands of the heathen what she inflicted on others.

PART II. (Vers. 17—21.) The restoration of Israel.

Sec. 1. (Vers. 17—20.) The house of Jacob shall be delivered, and shall add to its possessions, and spread far and wide.

Sec. 2. (Vers. 21.) Salvation shall come to Zion, and "the kingdom shall be the Lord's."

CHAPTER THE FIRST.

The Book of Obadiah.—About 1030 B. C. David, about 130 the Hasmoneans, were equally at war with Edom; and few are the prophets between those distant dates who do not cry for vengeance against him or exult in his overthrow. The Book of Obadiah is singular in this, that it contains nothing else than such feelings and such cries. It brings no spiritual message. It speaks no word of sin, or of righteousness, or of mercy, but only doom upon Edom in bitter resentment at his cruelties, and in exultation that, as he has helped to disinherit Israel, Israel shall disinherit him. . . . Justice, mercy and truth; the education of humanity in the law of God, the establishment of His will upon earth—these things, it is true, are not mentioned in the Book of Obadiah, but it is for the sake of some dim instinct of them that its wrath is poured upon foes whose treachery and malice seek to make them impossible by destroying the one people on earth who then believed and lived for them.—Geo. Adam Smith.

1, 2. (1) Obadiah, "Servant of Jehovah." Lord God, Heb. Adonai Jehovah. "This is the formula claiming Divine authority for the whole prophecy." We, rumour,^a R. V., "tidings." I and my people. is sent, i.e. already sent, to call the nations to execute God's judgments. (2) Arise ye, etc. This is the message of the ambassador. I have made thee small,^b Jehovah is the speaker. Edom is made small and despised in Jehovah's purpose.

3—6. (3) The pride, etc., i.e. in her seemingly impregnable position. dwellest . . . rock, the great Edomite capital Selah, or Petra, is here referred to; one of the most curious and wonderful cities on the earth; consisting exclusively of houses and temples cut in the solid rock.^c (4) exalt, R. V., "mount on high," etc., Je. xlix. 16. among the stars, fig. for seemingly inaccessible height. (5) thieves, etc., so in your case; whatever they wanted your enemies have taken. There are not even any gleanings left behind. Robbers and vine-croppers could not have used you worse. Je. xlix. 9. (6) How . . . searched out! the Prophet sees the hostile soldiers seeking booty.^d

7—9. (7) men . . . confederacy, i.e. thy allies. Probably those Arabian tribes who surrounded Edom and were its frequent confederates, comp. Gen. xxv. 13: xxxvi. 3, 12, etc. Exp. Bib. laid a wound, R. V. "a snare," i.e. dealt treacherously. (8) wise men, Edom seems to have been proverbial for its wisdom.^e "Eliphaz, the chief of Job's friends, the representative of human wisdom, was a Temanite." mount of Esau, Mount Seir. (9) Teman, a district in southern part of Edom, perhaps used here as synonymous with Edom. dismayed, so as to be unable to offer effective resistance. everyone, etc., R. V. "everyone may cut off from the mount of Esau," etc.

Edom's Security.—The purple mountains, into which the wild sons of Esau clambered, run out from Syria upon the desert, some hundred miles by twenty of porphyry and red sandstone. They are said to be the finest rock scenery in the world. "Salvator Rosa never conceived so savage and so suitable a haunt for banditti." From Mount Hor, which is their summit, you look down upon a maze of mountains, cliffs, chasms, rocky shelves and strips of valley. On the east the range is but the crested edge of a high, cold plateau, covered for the most part by stones, but with stretches of corn land and scattered woods. The western walls, on the contrary, spring steep and bare, black and red, from the yellow of the desert Arabah. The interior is reached by defiles, so narrow that two horsemen may scarcely ride abreast, and the sun is shut out by the overhanging rocks. Eagles, hawks and other mountain birds fly screaming round the traveler. Little else than wild-fowls' nests are the villages; human eyries perched on high shelves or hidden away in caves at the ends of the deep gorges. There is abundance of water. The gorges are filled with tamarisks, oleanders and wild figs. Besides the wheat lands on the eastern plateau, the wider defiles hold fertile fields and terraces

^a Je. xlix. 14.^b "Thy reduction to insignificance is as sure as if it were already accomplished. Therefore the past tense is used."—Maurer.^c "Selah was situated on either side of a deep ravine, wh. runs winding like a stream through precipitous and overhanging cliffs, for a distance of not less than a mile and a half. The cliffs are honeycombed with caverns and in these caverns, reached by artificial means of access, the Edomites dwelt."—Spk. Com.^d Je. xlix. 10.^e "Paulinus, when he was told that the Goths had sacked Nola and plundered him of all he had, lifted up his eyes to heaven, and said, 'Lord, thou knowest where I have laid up my treasure.'" —Bib. Museum.^f "The wanderers in that region are now sunk in the grossest folly, regarding the ruins around them as the work of evil spirits. Travelers assert that the minds of the Bedouins are as bare and uncultivated as the deserts they traverse." —Biblical Things.^g "It is in vain to depend upon mighty men for our protection, if we have not an Almighty God for us, much less if we have an Almighty God against us." —Lange.

"Edom is a type of worldly wisdom and secular policy, as well as of unbrotherly enmity to God's people. In both respects the punishment of Edom is a warning to all Machiavellian politicians in these latter days."—Wordsworth.

"He that is not wise will not be taught; but there is a wisdom which multiplieth bitterness."—Eccles. xxi. 12.

"The circumstances of Obadiah's country and family are designedly passed over, that we may not rest and depend upon the outward respectability of men, but derive the authority of such prophecy, and the certainty of its issues, from God alone. Preachers must be, not in name alone, but also in fact, Obadi-ahs, i. e. servants of God (1 Cor. iv. 1).—Starke.

"The words are addressed to Edomites by way of apostrophe on what he sees them doing before his face, not as a warning against their so-doing in future."—Spk. Com.

"Be more glad to see a man's amendment than his punishment. He that is not concerned that his brother should perish, is in danger of perishing himself."—Ep. Wilson.

"For a Turk to oppress a Christian, an infidel a believer, is but a trespass against humanity; for Hebrews to strive, and one Christian to afflict another, woundeth religfor the vine. Mount Esau is, therefore, no mere citadel with supplies for a limited siege, but a well-stocked, well-watered country, full of food and lusty men, yet lifted so high, and locked so fast by precipice and slippery mountain, that it calls for little trouble of defence.

The Edomites.—Esau is a profane person, with no conscience of a birthright, no faith in the future, no capacity for visions; dead to the unseen, and clamoring only for the satisfaction of his appetites. The same was probably the character of his descendants; who had, of course, their own gods, like every other people in that Semitic world, but were essentially irreligious, living for food, spoil and vengeance, with no national conscience or ideals—a kind of people who deserved even more than the Philistine to have their name descend to our times as a symbol of hardness and obscurantism. It is no contradiction to all this that the one intellectual quality imputed to the Edomites should be that of shrewdness and a wisdom which was obviously worldly. The wise men of Edom, the cleverness of Mount Esau were notorious. It is the race which has given to history only the Herods—clever, scheming, ruthless statesmen, as able as they were false and bitter, as shrewd in policy as they were destitute of ideals. That fox, cried Christ, and crying stamped the race.—Exp. Bib. The wisdom of Edom.—If the question now be asked, Is understanding perished out of Edom? the answer, like every response of the prophetic word, may be briefly given: It is. The minds of the Bedouins are as uncultivated as the deserts they traverse. Practical wisdom is, in general, the first that man learns, and the last that he retains. And the simple but significant fact, that the clearing away of a little rubbish, merely "to allow the water to flow" into an ancient cistern, in order to render it useful to themselves, "is an undertaking far beyond the views of the wandering Arabs," shows that understanding is indeed perished from among them. They view the indestructible works of former ages not only with wonder, but with superstitious regard, and consider them the work of genii. They look upon a European traveler as a magician, and believe that, having seen any spot where they imagine that treasures are deposited, he can afterward command the guardian of the treasure to set the whole before him. In Teman, which yet maintains a precarious existence, the inhabitants possess the desire without the means of knowledge. The Koran is their only study, and contains the sum of their wisdom. And, although he was but a "miserable comforter," and was overmastered in argument by a kinsman stricken with affliction, yet no Temanite can now discourse with either the wisdom or the pathos of Eliphaz of old. Wisdom is no more in Teman, and understanding has perished out of the Mount of Esau.

10—12. vss. 10, 11, "give the ground of the preceding denunciation, viz. the violence and outrage of which Edom had been guilty in the day of Jerusalem's calamity." (10) violence, Ge. xxvii. 41; Eze. xxxv. 5; Am. i. 11. brother Jacob, comp. Deut. xxiii. 7 for God's command to the Hebrews. cut off for ever, the Nabathæans drove the Edomites out of their ancient possessions, and these they have never since regained. (11) on the other side, meaning, in a position of hostility, his forces R. V. "his substance." cast lots, "over the population whom they thus distributed to be sold into slavery." Lange. (12) But, etc., better and more forcibly read ... "Do not look ... do not rejoice ... do not enter ... do not deliver." became a stranger, R. V. "in the day of his disaster." to look on, indifferently, then was a sin worthy of some punishment.

God superintending human history.—In all Bible history we find God upon the circle. There is no page dedicated to atheism. God is always there, in shining person, or guiding eye, or directing voice, or celestial effluence; this book is, so far as one world is concerned, the very biography of God! Aye, God himself is the central character, and as he sweeps in majesty across our tiny globe, age by age, we see kings and thrones, and empires and nations attached to his flaming chariot. This sublimest of all historical books is not a mere registry of facts or dates; it is not a mere accumulation of meteorological tables, showing the variations of political or moral climate, or representing the tide-marks of national advancement or recession—it is a chronicle of the one heart of God, and the one heart of humanity; it is the blended story of the heavens and the earth.—Peop. Bib.

13, 14. (13) the gate, i.e. Jerusalem, implying that they not only looked on, but helped themselves to booty in the hour of Judah's calamity. (14) crossway, narrow mountain passes: by wh. the fleeing Israelites hoped to escape. These the Edomites closed, securing and delivering up the fugitives.

Brethren, we are members one of another. Why, then, do we hurt and annoy one another? There ought to be no discord in the home or in the church, because we are called to be one body, and if I wound a brother Christian I am blighting my own life; I am spoiling the body which is one.—H. W. Webb-Peploe.

My neighbor.—

Thy neighbor? 'Tis that toiling slave,
Fetter'd in thought and limb,
Whose hopes are all beyond the grave:
Go thou and ransom him.

Thy neighbor? 'Tis that weary man Whose years are at the brim,
Bent down by sickness, care, and pain:
Go thou and comfort him.

Thy neighbor? 'Tis the fainting poor,
Whose eyes with want are dim,
Whom hunger drives from door to door:
Go thou and cherish him.—Montgomery.

15, 16. (15) heathen, nations surrounding Israel, and at enmity with God's people. as . . thee, Eze. xxxv. 15; Ha. ii. 8. reward, R. V. "dealing." (16) drunk, some understand that the prophet here addresses his own countrymen, "As ye have drunk (who are) on my holy mountain," as ye have tasted the cup of my wrath, "so," etc. But it is better to take the clause as still addressed to the Edomites who had profaned the holy mountain with their idolatrous festival. The drinking in the first clause is literal, in the second, figurative, all the heathen, including Edom. Edom is taken as a type of all nations hostile to God's people. swallow down, "a full draught, and that not because they desire it, because they must."—Lange.

Retribution.—In society men reap as they sow. Kindness begets love, and cruelty begets hatred. The suspicious are suspected, the dishonest robbed, and the tyrants in turn led into captivity. "There is an important element," says a writer, "of the judicial action of God in the retributive instincts of men. It is one of his ways of bringing the self-conceited and the censorious to his bar. He whose hand or tongue is against every man, need not wonder that Divine providence should so balance the scales of justice, that every man's hand or tongue will be ultimately against him. He reaps what he sows."—Hom. Com. To the revengeful God will be robbed in vengeance, and to the merciful he will be a God of love. Thus our own characters, whether good or bad, will be thrown back upon ourselves, with the conscious force of Divinity. What is hell but sin's reflections of the Divine character—the rays of the Eternal falling upon the soul through the combustible medium of the moral corruption, and thus setting all on fire? Let us remember, then, that there is to be a Divine reflection of ourselves, and that exactly with what measure we mete, it will be measured to us again.—Thomas.

17—19. (17) R. V. "But in Mount Zion there shall be those that escape, and it shall be holy." A remnant shall be there, and the place, now polluted shall be made clean—holy. their possessions, i.e. their own. "The perpetual possession of the Holy Land is declared as a feature of the times of Redemption from Joel iii. 20 and Amos ix. 15 onward," with increase even, (as in Obad.) of their territory.—Oehler. (18) Jacob . . Joseph, implying that the restoration would include exiles from both the

Ion. Brethren by nation, brethren by religion, should live as brethren by nature; live as brethren, and our Father will be angry if we do not, and the God of peace will fight against us." — Adapted from Marbury.

"Heaven is above all, yet there sits a Judge that no king can corrupt." — Shakespeare.

"There is a debt of mercy and pity, of charity and compassion, of relief and succor, due to human nature, and payable from one man to another, and such as deny to pay it the distressed in the time of their abundance may justly expect it will be denied themselves in time of want."—Burkitt.

"Faith saves, and grace saves; faith as the instrument, and grace as the Divine efficacy; faith the channel, and grace the heavenly stream; faith the finger that touches the garment's fringe, and grace the virtue that pours from the Saviour's heart. Faith cannot scale the dreadful precipice from which Nature has fallen; but it can lay hold on the rope which grace has let down even into our hands from the top, and which will draw up again with all the burden faith can bind to it. And this is all the mystery of faith's saving. Christ reaches down from heaven and faith reaches up from earth; and each hand grasps the other—one in weakness, the other in power."—Hoge.

"Many souls are being exercised about holiness, but not equally about righteousness. Holiness is the hidden thing we cannot see; righteousness is the manifestation of holiness in act and life."—Andrew A. Bonar.

"Unless our faith is manifested in righteousness, we must beware lest we think it is genuine when it is not; there must be in it the seed of all holy life."—Tenniss S. Hamlin.

"The devil never tempts us with more success than when he tempts us with a sight of our own good actions."—Bishop Wilson.

a "Or we may understand the word in a spiritual sense, for the preachers of salvation, whose office it is to convert unbelievers and aliens to the commonwealth of Israel."—Lowth.

"The world is an old woman, that mistakes any gilt farthing for a gold coin; whereby, being often cheated, she will henceforth trust nothing but the common copper."—Carlyle.

kingdoms of Judah and Israel. stubble, etc., this prophecy was fulfilled in the time of the Maccabees. (19) of the south, the Negeb, or southern district of Judah. plain, low country along the shores of the Mediterranean. Gilead, the region E. of Jordan. Judah and Benjamin are to obtain possession of the ancient inheritance.

Blessed effects of the Gospel in the latter days (vs. 17).—I. The deliverance here spoken of. 1. It has already come to Zion; 2. It is also experienced yet daily; 3. But it will be yet more largely experienced in the latter days. II. Its never-failing attendant—holiness. 1. Found only in Zion; 2. Found there from the time of deliverance. III. Its ultimate effect—rest. 1. Believers do now enter into rest; 2. But the full possession of it is reserved for another world. Address.—I. Those who oppose the Church of God; 2. Those who are looking for redemption in Jerusalem.—C. Simeon.

The beauty of holiness.—What a lustre from the life of one "beautified with salvation"! His outward conduct is attractive in every part, and his inward dispositions of love and humility are well-pleasing to God himself. Man transformed into God's image is more attractive and more durable than natural beauty. "God in the redemption of the soul," says Emerson, "has solved the problem of restoring to the most original internal beauty."—Hom. Com. Holiness.—In order to be the disciples of Christ, there is much that we must instantly renounce. It is a profession of holiness; it therefore demands the immediate renunciation of criminal and forbidden pleasures. The moment we become Christ's disciples, we commence a warfare with the flesh, engaging for its crucifixion, with all its sinful lusts and appetites. "They that are Christ's have crucified the flesh, with its affections and lusts." To the severities of monastic discipline, in which the body is torn in scourges, and emaciated by abstaining from the nourishment required to sustain it in health and vigor, the religion of Christ is a stranger: "For every creature of God is good, if it be received with thanksgiving." But a soft, voluptuous, and sensual life is repugnant, not only to the example of Christ, but to the whole genius and spirit of His institutes. By His Gospel, and by His Son, God has "called us, not to uncleanness, but to holiness;" so that he that despiseth the precepts of purity, despiseth not man but God. However painful the sacrifice of forbidden gratifications may be, however deep and inveterate the habit of indulgence; though it may seem as necessary to us, and as much a part of ourselves, as the right hand, or the right eye, relinquished it must be, or we cannot be Christ's disciples. Some men talk of holiness as if it meant that it was wrong to laugh, be bright, engage in manly sports, play the piano, read any book but the Bible, or follow certain pursuits for which we have natural aptitudes. I believe that God in his word will not contradict the nature which he has given, and that which is wrong in us is not our natural aptitudes, but the self-life around which those aptitudes revolve. The life which God desires his children to live is not a life of denial of anything which God has imparted, but the transference of these from the pivot of self to the pivot of not self which is Jesus Christ, incarnate love. The man who enters this life is still a bright companion, a manly athlete, still enters into all that home and friendship and life may mean; but everything is hallowed, elevated, ennobled, because revolving evermore round the will of Jesus Christ.—F. B. Meyer.

20, 21. (20) captivity, i.e. those restored from the captivity. shall possess that, etc., R. V. "which are among the Canaanites, shall possess even unto," etc. Zarephath, the Sarepta of the N. T. (Luke iv. 26) and in Elijah's history (1 Ki. xvii. 9—24) a considerable town on the coast road between Tyre and Sidon.—Camb. Bib. Sepharad, a district unknown. "Whatever uncertainty attaches to the word Sepharad, the drift of the prophecy is perfectly clear, viz. that not only the exiles from Babylon, but Jewish captives from other and distant regions shall be brought back to live prosperously within the enlarged borders of their own land.—Camb. Bib. (21) saviours, deliverers, "heroes, who should gain for the people their rights."—Lange. "Like the Maccabees."—Camb. Bib. kingdom . . Lord's, Re. xi. 15—17.

Execration of Edom.—There remains a yet later reference to the crowning injury inflicted by Edom upon Israel which it is interesting to notice in this connection. It occurs in the 137th Psalm. Probably the writer was a Levite who had been carried away by the armies of Nebuchadnezzar and who after the edict of Cyrus returns to Jerusalem. He sees again the old familiar scenes, but the change and desolation are terrible. The House of his God is a heap of ruins. His heart is bitter with the memory of wrong and insult from which he has but lately escaped. "He takes his harp, the companion of his exile, the cherished relic of happier days,—the harp which he could not string at the bidding of his conquerors by the waters of Babylon; and now with faltering hand he sweeps the strings, first in low, plaintive, melancholy cadence pouring out his griefs, and then with a loud crash of wild and stormy numbers of his verse, he raises the pæan of vengeance over his foes. . . As he broods over his wrongs, as he looks upon the desolation of his country, as he remembers with peculiar bitterness how they who ought to have been allies took part with the enemies of Jerusalem in the fatal day of her overthrow, there bursts forth the terrible cry for vengeance; vengeance first on the false kindred, and next on the proud conquerors of his race. Deepest of all was the indignation roused by the sight of the nearest of kin, the race of Esau, often allied to Judah, often independent, now bound by the closest union with the power that was truly the common enemy of both. There was an intoxication of delight in the wild Edomite chiefs, as at each successive stroke against the venerable walls they shouted, 'Down with it! down with it! even to the ground.' They stood in the passes to intercept the escape of those who would have fled down to the Jordan valley; they betrayed the fugitives; they indulged their barbarous revels on the Temple hill. Long and loud has been the wail of execration which has gone up from the Jewish nation against Edom. It is the one imprecation which breaks forth from the Lamentations of Jeremiah: it is the culmination of the fierce threats of Ezekiel: it is the sole purpose of the short, sharp cry of Obadiah; it is the bitterest drop in the sad recollections of the Israelite captives by the waters of Babylon: and the one warlike strain of the Evangelical Prophet is inspired by the hope that the Divine Conqueror should come knee-deep in Idumæan blood (Lam. iv. 21, 22; Ezek. xxv. 8, 12—14; Obad. 1—21; Jer. xlix. 7—22; Is. lxiii. 1—4)."—Camb. Bib. quoting Perowne and Stanley.

The Kingdom Shall be the Lord's.—The grand climax is here certainly, however indistinctly, before the prophet's mind. It is this that stamps the writings of the Hebrew prophets with a character which is all their own, and proves them to be inspired with an inspiration of God, other and higher far than that of the most gifted seers and poets of other lands and ages. With them the national and the human reach forth ever to the Divine and the universal. The kingdom of Israel gives place to and is lost in the kingdom of God. Never in any adequate realization even of Jewish idea and conception, could it be said of any period of the history of Israel after the return from Babylon, "The kingdom is the Lord's." Never of any country or any church, much less of the world at large, has so great a word been true, since in the person and the religion of Christ the kingdom of God has come among us. Still the Church prays as for a thing still future, "Thy kingdom come." Still Obadiah's last note of prophecy, "the kingdom shall be the Lord's," vibrates on, till at last it shall be taken up into the great chorus of accomplished hope and satisfied expectation, "Hallelujah! for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth."—Cambridge Bible.

"God never meant that man should scale the heavens by strides of human wisdom. In His works, though wondrous, he commends us in His word to seek Him rather where His mercy shines."—Cowper.

"The true disciples of Jesus are not those who are not satisfied with admiring Him, with praising Him, with celebrating Him, who, externally, or to a certain point, follow Him. His true disciples are those who listen to Him internally and everywhere; who observe His precepts, who deny themselves, who take His cross on them, and follow Him everywhere."—Bossuet.

"The brightest day has not yet dawned, the widest conquests have not yet been achieved. Is not the Church challenged to nerve herself for greater effort, and to array herself in a more imposing habit? 'Put on thy strength, O Zion; put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem!'" —Hom. Com.

"O! scene surpassing fable, and yet true, scene of accomplished bliss, which who can see, Though but in distant prospect, and not feel his soul refreshed with foretaste of the joy?"

Introduction.

The Prophet Jonah is referred to in the second book of Kings xiv. 25. He lived probably about 780 B. C., a generation earlier than Amos. He was evidently a prophet of the Northern Kingdom. The question of the authorship of the book has been much discussed. Was it written by the prophet, nearly 800 years B. C. or by some unknown author after the exile, who makes use of traditional facts connected with Jonah, to illustrate the Divine dealings and purpose? The question cannot be said to have reached a final solution.

The following views have been held as to the object of the book: (1) To set forth the readiness of God to forgive the penitent. (2) To show why Divine warnings and predictions of punishment are not always fulfilled. (3) To correct Jewish exclusiveness and to show God's equal regard for the Gentiles.

Jonah, though a sincere servant of the Most High, is a representation of the narrow bigotry and jealousy of the Jewish people. He fears that God will forgive the Ninevites, believing that such clemency will be dishonorable to God and unjust to his chosen people, who as such, have suffered terribly under the persecution of the heathen, and who have come to regard themselves as the only objects of the Divine favor.

CHAPTER THE FIRST.

1-3. (1) Jonah, (see introduction). Amittai, Heb. truth, or truth-telling. (2) Nineveh, Ge. x. 11. great city, "480 stadia (about 60 miles) in circuit, 150 in length, and 90 in breadth."—Diodorus Siculus. wickedness . . me, Ge. vi. 11, 12, xviii. 20, 21. (3) flee, etc., to get beyond the bounds of the holy land, and so out of God's reach. The reason for this flight is given iv. 2. Not fear of Nineveh, but the instinct that God intended something else than Nineveh's destruction. . . To the natural man in Israel (whom Jonah represents) the idea of the heathen's repentance and forgiveness was abhorrent.—G. A. Smith. Tarshish, Tartessus in Spain, the direction opposite to that of Nineveh. Joppa, 2 Chr. ii. 16; Ac. ix. 43; "now Jaffa, the well-known port of Palestine, one of the oldest cities in the world. It has a very inconvenient and insecure harbor."—Camb. Bib.

Jonah's Flight (vs. 3).—We have here—I. A man collapsing before the great occasions of life. II. A man rebelling against God, and yet strangely favored by circumstances. III. A man dishonest with God, yet prompt and conscientious in observing the laws of social justice and equity. Apply:—1. The word of the Lord still comes to men; 2. When God calls a man to go to Nineveh, there is success or safety nowhere else; 3. To flee to Tarshish is a most terrible mistake, and must end in sorrow and disappointment, no matter how many ships may be waiting for us at Joppa.—T. Kelly.

Wrong-Doing and its Punishment.—We are tied to our duty like horses with a very long tether. So long as we are content with the allotted area, we are not troubled with the rope; but when we try to escape into the surrounding thicket, we are vexed with all kinds of entanglements. Mr. Beecher, in his Life Thoughts, says that "some troubles are God dragging us; and they would cease if we were to stand up and walk where God wishes us."—Flight From Duty.—Many are of Jonah's temper, try his experiment, and feel the presence of God too painful for them. A scholar leaves the Sabbath school to avoid the contact of truth with conscience. A young man brought up under religious influence quits home and native country. An ungodly man feels miserable, shuns godly company, and stifles impressions by fleeing into business, worldly society, and amusements. The believer knows his duty, but will not do it. Such efforts often succeed in spite of the restraints of providence and the voice of conscience. But fear gets hold of men at length, God meets them in the way, and it is impossible to escape. "Lo, they that be far from thee shall perish."—Hom. Com.

4-6. (4) sent out, Heb. cast forth, implying God's absolute disposal of the wind. "Josephus speaks of a violent wind called 'the black North wind,' which he says sometimes visited the sea off the coast of Joppa. And we read of 'a tempestuous wind called Euraquilo' in another part of the same sea, which rushing down the highlands of Crete suddenly caught the ship in which St. Paul was sailing, and brought on a tempest scarcely less severe than that to which Jonah was exposed (Acts xxvii. 14). The modern name Levanter is a witness to the prevalence of such winds in those seas."—Camb. Bib. ship . . broken, Heb. "the ship thought to be broken," or was in great peril of being wrecked.* (5) mariners, they seem to have been of mixed nationalities, as they worshiped different gods.^b wares, or cargo which they were carrying. into the sides, R. V., "into the innermost parts." fast asleep,^c being tired out with his hurried journey from Gathhepher. (6) What meanest thou, an exclamation of indignant surprise at the unreasonableness of Jonah's conduct. The word for sleep here and in vs. 5 means heavy or deep sleep, such as Adam's (Gen. ii. 21), or Sisera's (Judg. iv. 21).—Camb. Bib. God, lit. "the God," seeming to imply a faith in a supreme Being over all the gods.

A Call to Sleepers (vs. 6).—I. Persons to whom this appeal may be addressed in a spiritual sense. 1. The indifferent; 2. The hardened; 3. The procrastinating. II. The considerations by which this appeal may be "The phrase with which this vs. begins seems to represent 'the word of the Lord' as an atmosphere of kindling holy thought, a sphere of spiritual truth encompassing the Prophet, illuminating and moving his whole soul, and finally taking shape in language of exhortation, or prediction, or teaching, or resolve, as the case might be."—Liddon.

a "The living consciousness and apprehension of the ship, fearing to be wrecked in the tempestuous sea, is set in striking contrast to the lethargic stupor of the Prophet, whose conscience was, as it were, entranced in a swoon."

—Wordsworth.
b "Never was the conduct of a heathen crew during a storm more naturally and graphically described than it is in this passage. No sooner does danger appear, than one begins to beat his head, and cry aloud, 'Siva, Siva!' another beats his breast, and piteously shrieks forth 'Vishnoo!' and a third strikes his thigh, and shouts out with all his might, 'Varuna!' Thus do they cry to their gods, instead of doing their duty."—Roberts.

c "Sleep is no necessary proof of innocence; it may be the fruit of carnal security and a seared conscience." —Fausset.

"Sometimes it is necessary to lighten the ship; for our wealth, our cares, our treasures may become burdens, and sink us, as men in the wreck of the Central America tied their belts of gold around them, and sank instead of floating till help could come." — Peloubet.

d 1 Sa. xiv. 42; Pr. xvi. 33.

e "The mariners sailing with Diagoras, an atheist, attributed a storm that overtook them to his presence in the ship." — Cicero.

a "The word occurs in O. T. 33 times; whether in the mouth of heathen or Israelite, it always stands opposed to the notion, expressed or implied, of Gentiles."

—Spk. Com.

"Leave out the fact that Jonah was sinful, and he becomes an eminent type of Christ. Substitution saved the mariners; substitution saves sinners, Jesus dies, and there is a calm. Conscience accuses no longer. Judgment decides for and not against the sinner. Memory looks back with sorrow for sin, but with no dread of penalty to come. Let us enjoy the peace 'that passeth all understanding.' Then go to work for God, not to win life and heaven, for they are ours already; but loved by him, let us love and serve him with perfect heart." — Spurgeon.

enforced. 1. Consider the value of the soul; 2. Consider the imminent hazard to which the soul is exposed; 3. Consider the price which has been paid for the soul. Appeal:—(1) Arise or be for ever fallen; (2) Call upon thy God; (3) Thou shalt be saved.—G. Brooks.

Chinese Superstition.—The amazing velocity with which the Yellow River runs at the place where the yacht and barges of the embassy were to cross it, rendered, according to the notions of the Chinese crews, a sacrifice necessary to the spirit of the river, in order to ensure a safe passage over it. For this purpose the master, surrounded by the crew of the yacht, assembled upon the forecastle, and holding as a victim in his hand a cock, wrung off his head, which committing to the stream, he consecrated the vessel with the blood spouting from the body by sprinkling it upon the deck, the masts, the anchors, and the doors of the apartments; and stuck upon them a few of the feathers of the bird. Several bowls of meat were then brought forward, and ranged in a line across the deck. Before these were placed a cup of oil, one filled with salt, one with tea, and a fourth with some ardent spirit; the captain making, at the same time, three profound inclinations of his body, with hands uplifted, and muttering a few words, as if of solicitation to the deity. The loo, or brazen drum, was beaten, in the meantime, forcibly; lighted matches were held towards heaven; papers, covered with tin or silver leaf, were burnt; and crackers fired off in great abundance by the crew. The captain afterwards made libations to the river, by emptying into it, from the vessel's prow, the several cups of liquids; and concluded with throwing in also that which held the salt. All the ceremonies being over, and the bowls of meat removed, the people feasted on it in the steerage, and launched afterwards, with confidence, the yacht into the current. As soon as she had reached the opposite shore, the captain returned thanks to heaven, with three inclinations of the body.—Sir J. Staunton.

7—10. (7) cast lots, a usual method of referring things to the appointment or discovery of Providence.^d whose cause, "Primitive tradition and natural conscience led even the heathen to believe that one guilty man involves all his associates, though innocent, in punishment."^e (8) What . . . thou? note the hurried accumulation of questions. (9) Hebrew, the name by wh. the Israelites were known to foreigners.^a Lord, better rend. Jehovah. (10) afraid, bec. it was now plain that they were under Divine judgment. Why hast, etc., R. V., "What is this that thou hast done?" Why have you enraged the god who made the sea and then involved us by coming into this ship?

Lots.—Religion even in its rudest forms, has always been faithful to its general principle thus far, that when the anger of the Divinity has been apprehended, it has been understood to be against sins and crimes; and also that the Divinity was believed to know who was the criminal. The mariners, therefore, referred it to the avenging Power to point out the criminal by a common ancient practice. A reference not to chance, but to a superior intelligence. Could our prophet have any doubt where the lot would fall? No; his conscience must have been a prophet to him.—John Foster.

The Storm and Its Effects.—As men have sometimes seen upon a mass of wreckage or on an ice-floe a number of wild animals, by nature foes to each other, reduced to peace through their common danger, so we descry the prophet and his natural enemies upon the strained and breaking ship. In the midst of the storm they are equally helpless, and they cast for all the lot which has no respect of persons. But from this the story passes quickly, to show how Jonah feels not only the human kinship of these heathen with himself, but their susceptibility to the knowledge of his God. They pray to Jehovah as the God of the sea and the dry land; while we may be sure that the prophet's confession, and the story of his own relation to that God, forms as powerful an exhortation to repentance as any he could have preached in Nineveh. At least it produces the effects which he has dreaded. In these sailors he sees heathen turned to the fear of the Lord. All that he has fled to avoid happens there before his eyes and through his own mediation.—Exp. Bib.

11—13. (11) What . . . thee, since it was the God of Jehovah who had brought on this storm Jonah would know how to appease Him. wrought,

R. V., "grew more and more tempestuous." (12) cast . . sea, a glimpse of the fine nature of Jonah not to be overlooked. He prefers to die rather than that these others should perish. (13) rowed, they tried prob. to get the ship back to Joppa.

Hard Rowing (yss. 13, 14).—This unavailing effort of these oarsmen has a counterpart—I. In the efforts we are making to bring souls to the shore of safety, and set their feet on the Rock of Ages. II. To bring this world back to God, His pardon and safety. III. In every man that is trying to row his own soul into safety.—Talmage.

Chinese Superstition.—The following advertisement is copied from a Chinese newspaper: "Achen Tea Chinchin, sculptor, respectfully acquaints masters of ships, trading from Canton to India, that they may be furnished with figure-heads of any size, according to order, at one-fourth of the price charged in Europe. He also recommends, for private venture, the following idols, brass, gold, and silver: the hawk of Vishnool, which has reliefs of his incarnation in a fish, boar, lion, and turtle. An Egyptian apis, a golden calf and bull, as worshiped by the pious followers of Zoroaster. Two silver mammosits, with golden ear-rings: an aprimanes for Persian worship; a ram, an alligator, a crab, a laughing hyæna, with a variety of household gods, on a small scale, calculated for family worship. Eighteen months' credit will be given, or a discount of 15 per cent. for prompt payment of the sum affixed to each article. Direct China-street, Canton, under the Marble Rhinoceros and Gilt Hydra."

14—16. (14) the Lord, i. e. to Jonah's God. innocent blood, "they shrank from being the instruments of his punishment. What a striking contrast is this spirit of the heathen with the impatience and resentment later shown by Jonah because the Divine menace against Nineveh was not fulfilled."—Dale. done . . thee, in sending the great storm. (15) ceased . . raging, Heb. stood. Comp. Lu. viii. 24^b (16) offered, etc., according to their usual custom, but acknowledging Jehovah as a true God. They also vowed to offer sacrifice to Jehovah when they should land.

Prayer Opposed to Sin.—A sanctified soul never goeth to pray, but it desires sin may have some wound, and points by prayer to the place where it is most pained. How doth it bemoan itself with Ephraim, and pour forth grief for sin at the eyes! It never heareth a sermon, but it labors to set its strongest corruption in the fore-front of the battle, that when Christ shoots His arrows, and draws His sword in the preaching of the word, sin may be hit. If God send any affliction, the sanctified soul concludes that some corruption must go to the lions. If there arise any storms, presently it inquires for Jonah, and labors to cast him overboard. A sanctified soul will bear every chastisement cheerfully, even death itself, that sin may die too.—Wm. Jenkin, 1656.

17. prepared, rather: "assigned," or "appointed." The same word and tense are used of the gourd, the worm, and the East wind, ch. iv. 6, 7, 8. They do not necessarily imply any previous or special preparation, much less the creation of these various agents for the purpose to which they were put; but merely that they were appointed to it by Him, whom "all things serve." He sent the fish there to do His bidding.—Camb. Bib. great fish,^a the precise kind is nowhere indicated. "It was prob. a large shark, wh. is common in the Mediterranean, and has so large a throat that it can swallow a man whole." The allegorical interpretation is that Jonah represents Israel, which for its apostasy was swallowed up by the world-pawn Babylon (Jer. li. 34), in exile it sought Jehovah, and was afterwards disgorged uninjured.—Cheyne, Dale, et al. three . . nights,^b the Heb. count the first and third parts of days as whole twenty-four hour days. Comp. Christ's time in the grave.

The Great Fish.—It has been satisfactorily proved that the common or white shark (Carcharias vulgaris) is found in the Mediterranean, and well-authenticated instances have been given of its having swallowed men and other large animals entire. "A natural historian of repute relates, 'In 1758, in stormy weather, a sailor fell overboard from a frigate in the Mediterranean. A shark was close by, which, as he was swimming and crying for help, took him in his wide throat, so that he forthwith disappeared. Other sailors had leaped into the sloop, to help their comrade, while yet swimming; the captain had a gun which stood on the

"He who is false to present duty breaks a thread in the loom, and will find the flaw when he may have forgotten its cause."—H. W. Beecher.

^a De. xxi. 8.

^b "God spares the prayerful penitent, a truth illustrated now in the case of the allors, presently in that of Jonah, and thirdly in that of Nineveh." —Fausset.

"From how many unthought-of, unimaginable situations the Sovereign of the world has drawn devotional aspirations! but never, except once, from a situation like this." —John Foster.

^a "The word ketos, in Mat. xii. 40, is not restricted in its meaning to a whale or a cetacean; it may denote any sea monster, either a whale or a shark, a seal or a tunny of enormous size." —Biblical Things.

^b Mat. xii. 39, 40, xvi. 4; Lu. xi. 30.

"It is faith's work to claim and challenge loving kindness out of all the roughest strokes of God." —S. Rutherford.

"Every duty we omit, obscures some truth we should have known." —John Ruskin.

deck discharged at the fish, which struck it so, that it cast out the sailor which it had in its throat, who was taken up, alive and little injured, by the sloop which had now come up. The fish was harpooned, taken up on the frigate and dried. The captain made a present of the fish to the sailor who, by God's Providence, had been so wonderfully preserved. The sailor went round Europe exhibiting it. He came to Franconia, and it was publicly exhibited here in Erlangen, as also at Nurnberg and other places. The dried fish was delineated. It was 20 feet long, and, with expanded fins, nine feet wide, and weighed 3924 pounds. From all this, it is probable that this was the fish of Jonah."—Camb. Bib.

CHAPTER THE SECOND.

1-3. (1) prayed, not so much in the sense of "offered supplications," as "expressed his trust and thankfulness." (2) cried .. affliction, comp. Ps. xviii. 2. belly of hell, or the grave,^a to wh. he likens his strange resting-place inside the fish. (3) thou, not the sailors. Jonah does not stop with the mere agents; but fully recognizes the hand of God. thy billows, etc., comp. Ps. xlii. 7. He recognizes that the sea in which he is engulfed is God's.

The Cry From the Depths.—You want nothing more than this cry. If you cry to God out of the depths, you will cry yourself out of them. Here is a man at the foot of a cliff that rises beetling like a black wall behind him, the sea in front, the clear upright rock at his back, not a foothold for a mouse between the tide at the foot and the grass at the top there. There is only one thing he can do. Shout! Perchance somebody will hear him, and a rope may come dangling down in front, and, if he has nerve, he may shut his eyes and make a jump and catch it. There is no way for you up out of the depths but to cry; and that will bring the rope down.—Old Test. Anec.

4-7. (4) cast .. sight, comp. Ps. xxxi. 22. yet, or, if nothing else is left me. temple, "one thing is left me still, one resource is still open to me, I will still pray, I will look (mentally) yet again towards Thy holy temple." The phrase "to look towards the temple," denoting prayer, has its origin in the prayer of Solomon at the dedication of the Temple. See 1 Kings viii. 29, 30, 48, and comp. Dan. vi. 10. The fact that Jonah was a prophet of the Northern Kingdom is no valid objection to this view. The Temple on Mount Zion was the only centre of the true worship of Jehovah, and was recognized as such by all faithful Israelites.—Camb. Bib. (5) waters, etc., Ps. lxix. 1. weeds, i. e. sea-weeds. Jonah sank to the bottom before he was swallowed by the fish."—Pulpit Com. (6) The earth with her bars; as for the earth, her bars were about me; "return to it was shut out for me; the gate by which I might return was locked behind me." for ever, so far as his own power of deliverance was concerned. corruption,^d R. V., "from the pit," i. e. from the place of the dead. He is still alive. (7) came in, reached to Thy heaven.

The Resolve of Faith (vs. 4).—Jonah a type of Christ, disciplined but not destroyed. Learn—I. That the darkest day has its particular duty. II. That no true believer ever looked to God's holy temple in vain.—R. Cecil.

Prayer Heard in Heaven.—A man of God, when speaking to a poor sufferer in the Blackrock Convalescent Home, at Brighton, who was bowed down by despairing remorse, inquired, "Have you asked to-day for the pardon of your sins?" "That I have." "And do you think God has written down your prayers in His book?" "I did not know that He kept one for my prayers." "He tells us He has a book of remembrance for our thoughts, when we think upon His name; and elsewhere, that our words are kept account of; and, between the two, do you not think that your prayers are included? And do you think the loving God has written in that book to-day, 'On the 25th of February, 1868, William T— asked Me for the forgiveness of all his sins, for My dear Son's sake, and I refused him?'" "No, sir; I cannot believe that." "What then has He written beside your prayer? It is not with Him, as with you or me, to say, 'I think I may.' There is no uncertainty in His mind." The man

^a "The sentiments of his ode are those wh. he had then felt; the form, into which they here appear cast, and which present a highly finished specimen of Hebrew poetry, we must suppose to have been the production of a later and more tranquil hour."—Spk. Com.

^b Is. xiv. 9.

^c "Upon recollecting myself, I thought it my duty not to despair of Thy mercy, but direct my prayer towards Thy heavenly habitation."—Lowth.

^d Ps. xvi. 10; Isa. xxxviii. 17.

"As God doth plant and actuate grace in the soul, so he is pleased to come in with seasonable supplies and reinforcements to the weak and decayed graces of his people. Thus he feeds the believer's lamp with fresh oil; gives in more faith, more love, more hope and more desires; and hereby he gives power to the faint, and strengthens the things which remain and are ready to die."—John Willison.

"Night brings out stars, as sorrow teaches truth."

"That a sorrow's crown of sorrow is remembering happier things."—Tennyson.

thought deeply for a time, and at length replied, "Then it is more likely He has written, 'Granted,' by its side." From that moment the fetters of his fears were broken; and the man was set free to trample on his sins, and to serve his Saviour.—Shining Light.

8—ro. (8) lying vanities,^a i. e. idols, the purposes of self-will. their . . . mercy, i. e. God, who is the only source of mercy and loving-kindness to all His creatures. The sentiment is similar to that which is figuratively expressed by the prophet Jeremiah: "They have forsaken Me, the fountain of living waters, and hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns, that can hold no water." (ii. 13). So God is called, "my mercy," Ps. cxliv. 2 (margin), the same word being used as here.—Camb. Bib. (9) sacrifice, evidently the voice of hope, expecting deliverance, etc., Ps. i. 14, 23, cxvi. 17; Ho. xiv. 2. Salvation . . . Lord, Ps. iii. 8. (10) spake . . . fish, when the punishment had done its work the Lord ordered release from captivity.^b

Salvation of the Lord (vs. 9).—I. Let us expound the doctrine. 1. The plan of salvation is entirely of God; 2. So it was of the Lord in execution; 3. In the application; 4. As to the sustaining of the Word in any man's heart. II. How God has hedged this doctrine about. III. What is and what should be the influence of this doctrine upon men? 1. It is a great battering-ram against their pride; 2. It is the key-stone of all divinity. IV. The obverse of this truth is that damnation is of men.—C. Spurgeon.

CHAPTER THE THIRD.

1—4. (1) second time, renewing the Divine commission. Jonah would not venture to go to Nineveh without such a new charge. (2) preach, proclaim, as a herald: vs. 4. (3) exceeding great city, lit. "a great city to God," i. e. "great" not only in man's thought but even in the thought of God, comp. iv. 11, Gen. x. 9. three days' journey, in circumference, i. e. some 60 miles around. (4) day's journey, this indicates rather the length of time wh. he spent in preaching, than the distance he traversed. forty days, the usual Scripture time of probation. over-thrown, Ge. xix. 21, 25.

Zeal in Preaching.—Dr. Payson being taken suddenly ill, and, as every one thought, about to die, he remarks: "What gave me most concern was, that notice had been given of my being about to preach! Whilst the doctor was preparing my medicine, feeling my pains abated, I on a sudden cried out, 'Doctor, my pains are suspended; by the help of God, I will go and preach, and then come home and die.' In my own apprehension, and in appearance to others, I was a dying man; the people heard me as such. The invisible realities of another world lay open to my view. Expecting to stretch into eternity, and to be with my Master before the morning, I spoke with peculiar energy. Such effects followed the word, that I thought it was worth dying for a thousand times."—R. T. S.

Verses 1—3.—This is substantially the same commission, and yet different. The "second" call to a man is never exactly the same as the first. The third is never a repetition of the second. Another tone is in the voice of the speaker, firmer or milder. Other shades of meaning are in the message. If it is the "second time," still more if it is the message corresponding with changes which time has wrought in circumstances and in character. It may seem a refinement, but properly understood, it is but a simple truth, that a man never receives exactly the same command or invitation from God more than once. "If slighted once, the season fair can never be renewed."—Raleigh.

5—8. (5) believed God, Ge. xv. 6. "The most amazing thing in this book is, not the story of the fish, but the story of the impression which was at once produced by Jonah's warning on men of all ranks in Nineveh, from the king to the humblest of his subjects."—Dale.^a fast, usual national mode of expressing penitential feeling. sackcloth, the sign of humiliation. (6) For word came, etc., R. V., "and the tidings reached the king." The king did not begin the fast, but yielded to, and directed the

^a Ps. xxxi. 6.

"All who hug a lie, lose God, who is truth and love."—Wordsworth.

^b Ps. viii. 6—9.

"As well try to fill the yawning chasm with a few grains of sand as satisfy the gulf o. the soul's desires with the pleasure of an empty world."—Macduff.

"He must have been the subject of strange and conflicting emotions when he entered the gates of that proud capital. There was enough to shake his faith, and to cowardise his bold, haughty, and scornful spirit; yet he dared not a second time abandon his mission."—J. Blackburn.

Open the door: let in the sun! He hath a smile for every one. He hath made of the raindrops gold and gems; He may change our tears to diamonds. Open the door!

^a "The expression betokens admiration for the simplicity of their faith, not without oblique reference to Israel's unbelief."—Spk. Com.

^b "The king seems to have resided in the royal palace at Khorsabad, in the N. E. corner of the Tetrapolis of Nineveh."—Wordsworth.

^c "Mourners take off their outer clothing, and cover themselves from head to foot with a piece of brown, coarse sackcloth, such as is worn by slaves while offered for sale; and occasionally they throw dust or ashes upon their heads when thus covered, as a token of grief and humiliation."—Van Lennep.

^a "God's sparing Nineveh when in the jaws of destruction, on the first dawn of repentance encourages the timid penitent, and shows beforehand that Israel's doom, soon after accomplished, is to be ascribed, not to unwillingness to forgive on God's part, but to their own obstinate impenitence."—Fausset.

Je. xviii. 7, 8.

^a "Jonah had a character, no doubt, solidly good, and open to conviction, but habitually irascible and morose, and apt, under exciting circumstances, to view things in their worst and most gloomy aspects."—Kitt.

^b "I anticipated by fleeing the disappointment of my design through Thy long suffering mercy."—Fausset.

^c 1 Kl. xix. 4.

national feeling.^b sackcloth and . . ashes, see Est. iv. 1, 3; Is. lviii. 5, etc.^c (7) nobles, lit. great men. beast, heathen nations thus made their cattle share in their mournings. (8) turn, etc., obs. that they recognize the necessity for signs of sincerity, "fruits meet for repentance." the violence, "this was their chief sin, as all we learn of the Assyrians, both from sacred and secular history, shows. Comp. Nahum ii. 11, 12, iii. 1, and Isaiah x. 13, 14. The form of expression, in their hands, the hand being the instrument of violence, is the same as in Ps. vii. 3 (Heb. 4), and elsewhere."—Camb. Bib.

A Great City.—Nineveh covered a great extent of ground. Historians say that its walls were 480 stadia, or 60 miles, in circumference. It was great in population. Jonah mentions 120,000 who could not discern between their right hand and their left. It was great in splendor and power. "The researches in the mounds have astonished Europe with the barbaric grandeur of the statuary, and the full details of life and history sculptured on marble, or stamped in arrow-headed characters upon the bricks. But it was morally great to God on account of the human souls and their spiritual condition. In God's sight, grandeur, territory and architectural beauty are nothing to immortal souls and the influence which they exert. The material worlds, the sun with its satellites are not so great as a man. Try to realize how great you are in the sight of God.—Hom. Com.

9, 10. (9) Who . . repent, Joel ii. 14. The only ground they had for their hope in God's mercy, lay in the fact that He had so graciously sent them warning. (10) works, proving the sincerity of their words. repented, Ex. xxxii. 14. did it not, "Here is shown the main lesson of the whole book of Jonah (in opposition to the narrow exclusive view, popular with the Jews), that God's purposes of grace are not limited to Israel alone but are open to the heathen as well, if only they abandon their sinful courses and turn to Him in true penitence."—Driver.^a God Repented.—When we regard the relations of Almighty God to men and His dealings with them from the divine side, so far as it is revealed to us and we are able to comprehend it, then they are all foreseen and planned and executed in accordance with His perfect foreknowledge. Then there is no place for repentance, no room for change. "Known unto God are all His works from the beginning of the world." But when we alter our stand-point, and regard them from the human side, free scope is given in the aspect in which God then presents Himself to us for human effort and prayer and feeling, then His purpose waits upon our will. Both of these sides are freely and fearlessly set forth in Holy Scripture. On the one side, "God is not a man that He should lie, neither the son of man that He should repent" (Num. xxiii. 19). With Him "is no variableness, neither shadow of turning" (James i. 17). On the other side we read, "It repented the Lord that He had made man on the earth, and it grieved Him at His heart" (Gen. vi. 6); "God repented of the evil that He had said that He would do unto them, and He did it not." Both views are equally true, and they are in perfect harmony with each other, but Holy Scripture never attempts to harmonize them, nor is it wise for us to attempt to do so; we cannot look upon both sides of the shield at once.—Camb. Bib.

CHAPTER THE FOURTH.

1—3. (1) displeased Jonah, "it is clear that the immediate cause of Jonah's anger and vexation was the preservation of Nineveh and the non-fulfillment of the threat which he had been sent to pronounce. It was the anticipation of this result, founded on the revealed character of God, that made him decline the errand at first."—Camb. Bib.^a (2) prayed . . Lord, he did not keep away from God, but took his vexed feeling to Him. fled before, R. V., "hasted to flee." gracious, etc., Ex. xxxiv. 6; Joel ii. 13. evil, i. e. threatened evil.^b (3) take . . life,^c as if he thought it no longer of value, bec. he was made to appear a deceiver. It is the language of morbid feeling.

Anger.—A lady who was somewhat quick-tempered but was very desirous of becoming a Christian, once said to me: "Mr. Peplow, I assure you there is no fault in my case, because I never lose my temper unless I am provoked!" No, and I do not think the devil does! To lose your temper shows that you are out of communion with your blessed Lord. If the peace of Christ ruled in our hearts, we could never again be provoked. Think of that! Moses was so provoked that he spoke unadvisedly, and yet he was the meekest man that ever lived. But Moses had not the risen Christ to dwell in his heart. Be not discouraged, or fear lest you may fall to-morrow. You need only live one moment at a time. Can Christ keep you this minute in good temper? Then he can keep you the next moment, and the next and so on forever. He can keep you in peace amid the severest trials, even such as he had to bear—in loss of friends, in persecution, in death.—H. W. Webb-Peplow.—Temper is significant. It is not in what it is alone, but in what it reveals. It is a test for love, a symptom, a revelation of an unloving nature at bottom. It is the intermittent fever which bespeaks unintermittent disease within; the occasional bubble escaping to the surface which betrays some rottenness underneath; a sample of the most hidden products of the soul dropped involuntarily when off one's guard; in a word, the lightning form of a hundred hideous and un-Christian sins. For a want of patience, a want of kindness, a want of generosity, a want of courtesy, a want of unselfishness, are all instantaneously symbolized in one flash of temper.—Drummond.

4-6. (4) Doest . . angry? God calls him to self-consideration. (5) booth, temporary hut of branches and leaves. become . . city, either the forty days were not expired, or he had some hope that God would yet show some signs of His power, if not actually destroying the city. (6) gourd, "it is an old controversy dating back as far as the times of Jerome and Augustine, whether Jonah's plant was a gourd or not. It is now generally admitted that it was not, but that the plant intended is the ricinus communis or castor-oil plant."—Camb. Bib. his grief, R. V., "his evil case."

God Refreshing Physical Nature.—The gourd was prepared "to be a shadow over his head." The first lesson and cure of despondency is to remove fatigue and bodily weariness from over-work. Elijah's despondency was partly physical, and the angel brought him refreshment. Food and rest are required, and God seeks to quiet the mind by cooling the body. There is an intimate connection between both, and we often get at one through the other. Regard for the body is urged from the lofty nature and the important use of the soul. They are helpmates in God's service now, and will be in his kingdom above. Fretfulness, petulance, and irritability oftener spring from physical weakness than moral unloveliness. If God in providence deals mercifully we should not be harsh with such feelings.—Hom. Com.

7-9. (7) worm, may be a singular or a collective name, in the latter case referring to a species of black caterpillar which is a familiar pest in the region. (8) vehement . . wind, R. V., "sultry east wind." E. hot winds are more suffocating and oppressive than even the sun's rays. wished, R. V., "requested for himself." Comp. 1 Ki. xix. 4. Elijah thought he had failed. Jonah was grieved because he had succeeded. (9) even unto death, i. e. "my anger is so great that it well-nigh kills me, and even in that excess it is justified by the circumstances."

The Gourd.—The gourd which defended the Prophet is said to have been prepared by the Lord. We have no reason to conclude from this expression that the Almighty created it for the special purpose; He only appointed and promoted its growth in that particular spot, raising its stem and expanding its branches and leaves according to the ordinary laws of nature, till it formed a most refreshing shade over the place where the angry seer waited the fulfilment of his prediction. "We may conceive of it," says Calmet, "as an extraordinary one of its kind, remarkably rapid in growth, remarkably hard in its stem, remarkably vigorous in its branches, and remarkable for the extensive spread of its leaves, and the deep gloom of their shadow; and after a certain duration, remarkable for a sudden withering and uselessness to the impatient Prophet."—Paxton.

"Our dispositions will be suitable to that which we most frequently think on; for the soul is, as it were, tinged with the color and complexion of its own thoughts."—Marcus Antoninus.

a "No gourd actually grows up in a single night and the expression, 'wh. was the son of a night,' must be regarded as giving in strong poetic figure the fact of swift growth. The gourd is a climbing vine of rapid growth, always trained to run up trees, trellis and temporary booths, the size of its leaves affording a pleasant shade." — Bib. Things.

"The ricinus grows from 8 to 10ft. high. Only one leaf grows on a branch, but that leaf being often more than a foot large, the collective leaves give good shelter from the heat." — Fausset.

"Anger begins with folly and ends with repentance."

—Maunder.

"Anger and haste hinder good counsel"—Fielding.

"Passions," saith Fuller, "like heavy bodies down steep hills, once in motion, move themselves, and know no ground but the bottom."

"More helpful than all wisdom is one draught of simple human pity that will not forsake us." —George Eliot.

^a Ge. xviii. 23—83.

^b De. i. 89; Is. vii. 15, 16.

"The teachings of Nature may prepare for the Word, and be used to convey it, illustrate it, and fix it in the memory. God schooling Jonah in patient, tender love, and through him preparing instruction for Israel and for us, uses Nature to prepare the way for the lessons of the Word. He will make his pity for the plant explain God's pity for Nineveh, and condemn Jonah's want of pity for that multitude of souls."—Mitchel.

"A merchant that keeps a book of debit and credit, writes both what is owing him, and what he oweth himself, and then casteth up the whole; but God does not so, His mercy is triumphant over his justice, and therefore he wipes out what we owe him, and writes down what he owes us by promise; much like the clouds that receive ill vapors from us, yet returning them to us again in sweet, refreshing showers."—Nath. Shute, 1626.

"Therefore, Jew, Though justice be thy plea, consider this,—That in the course of justice none of us should see salvation: we do pray for mercy, and that same prayer doth teach us all to render the deeds of mercy."—

10, 11. (10) pity . . gourd, wh. was not Jonah's own, and was naturally so shortlived and comparatively worthless. The gourd and Nineveh are to be contrasted: the one in its relation to Jonah, the other in its relation to God. came up in a night, etc., "lit. was the son of a night, and perished the son of a night, i. e. it came into existence and reached maturity in a single night, and no less rapidly (not literally in a single night, for it was when the morning arose) withered away."—Camb. Bib. (11) should not I, "suggesting that the great city had been the object of the Divine thought and care—had not grown up of itself or under the protection of the false gods, but under the guidance and defence of the living God. A startling truth to affirm in an ancient Jewish book."—Dale. discern . . hand, children: these, with the cattle, must have shared in any general destruction of the city. "God has vindicated His love to the jealousy of those who thought that it was theirs alone. And we are left with this grand vague vision of the immeasurable city, with its multitude of innocent children and cattle, and God's compassion brooding over all."—G. A. Smith.

Does God Care for Oxen? (vs. 11).—I. God's care for cattle. 1. He made and preserves the lower creatures; 2. He made them to be happy; 3. Sin has made them a sharer in man's sufferings; 4. God is sorry to see them suffering. II. The lessons for us. 1. If God cares for them, so should we. 2. If God cares for oxen, how much more for us!—Edmond.

Teachings From Jonah.—This wonderful book of Jonah has given us a picture of the human heart, not in its lowest degradation, but taught by revelation, restrained by conscience, influenced more or less by piety, but stripped of its disguises and company dress. God takes us behind the scenes to show us how in Nature his hand and purpose are working by storm and sunshine, fish and worm, and so puts a window for us in the heart of man. Jonah speaks out to God, and acts out before us, and writes down for us to read, without suppression, palliation, or extenuation, the sinful thoughts which often men have, but do not make known. We have at once a picture of God's character, and a mirror in which to behold our own.—Hom. Com.

Nineveh.—The vast area assigned to Nineveh in this book as well as by secular writers, was not, however, completely covered as in the case of our own cities, with streets and squares and buildings. That was a feature unusual, and almost unknown, in the ancient cities of the East. It was perhaps the feature which, belonging to Jerusalem by virtue of the deep ravines by which it was surrounded, and which "determined its natural boundaries," and prevented its spreading abroad after the fashion of other oriental cities, called forth the surprise and admiration of the Jews after their return from Babylon. "Jerusalem," they exclaim, "(unlike Babylon where we so long have dwelt) is built as a city which is compact together." Like Babylon, Nineveh included not only parks and paradises, but fields under tillage and pastures for "much cattle" (iv. 11) in its wide embrace. The probable site of the city has been identified by recent explorers. It lies on the eastern bank of the Tigris in the fork formed by that river and the Ghazr Su and Great Zab, just above their confluence. The whole of this district abounds in heaps of ruins. Indeed, "they are found," it is said, "in vast numbers throughout the whole region watered by the Tigris and Euphrates and their confluents, from the Taurus to the Persian Gulf." "Such mounds," it is added, "are especially numerous in the region to the east of the Tigris, in which Nineveh stood, and some of them must mark the ruins of the Assyrian capital." (Dict. of the Bible.) Four of these great masses of ruins. Kouyunjik, Nimrud, Karamless, Khorsabad, form together an irregular parallelogram of very similar dimensions to those mentioned in the text. From Kouyunjik (lying opposite Mosul) on the Eastern bank of the Tigris, a line drawn in a S. E. direction, parallel to the course of the river, to Nimrud is about eighteen miles. From Nimrud, in a northerly direction, to Karamless is about twelve. The opposite sides of the parallelogram, from Karamless to the most northerly point Khorsabad, and from Khorsabad to Kouyunjik again, are about the same. These four vast piles of buildings, are now generally identified with the site of the Nineveh which Jonah visited.—Camb. Bib.

Introduction.

I. Author. Micah, = "Who like Jehovah?" Of his personal history little is known. His designation as "the Morasthite" probably indicates his home as Moresheth-gath (i. 14). Moresheth was a place in the Shephelah or low range of hills which lie between the hill-country of Judea and the Philistine plain. It was some twenty-five miles southeast from Jerusalem. Micah was thus a representative of the common people and of the country life of Judea, while Isaiah, with whom he was contemporary, stands nearer to the life of the city and the court. "To Micah, the villager, the unjust treatment of the helpless poor by men of wealth and power is the sin that cries aloud to heaven. He has but little to say about idolatry or display or immorality." II. Time. About B.C. 725-700. III. Style. The style in some degree resembles that of Isaiah. It is forcible, pointed, and concise, frequently animated and sublime. "The abrupt transitions with which the book abounds prove that the Book of Micah, like most of the other prophetic writings, was mainly founded on discourses or notes of discourses, composed on various occasions."

CHAPTER THE FIRST.

1, 2. (1) Micah, same as Micaiah. The word means, "Who is as Jah?" Morasthite, from the town of Moresheth-gath. saw, "the meaning is that the prophet had an inward perception of certain facts through the influence of the Divine Spirit."—Camb. B. Samaria and Jerusalem, mentioned as capitals, and standing for the respective kingdoms of Israel and Judah. (2) all . . is,^a lit. "the fulness thereof," against you, i. e. against all peoples. The judgment upon Judah is a warning to other nations. holy temple, i. e. heaven.

Hearing the Word.—An innkeeper, addicted to intemperance, on hearing of the particularly pleasing singing at a church some miles distant, went to gratify his curiosity, but with a resolution not to hear a word of the sermon. Having with difficulty found admission into a narrow open pew, as soon as the hymn before sermon was sung, which he heard with great attention, he secured both his ears against the sermon with his forefingers. He had not been in this position many minutes, before the prayer finished, and the sermon commenced with an awful appeal to the consciences of the hearers, of the necessity of attending to the things which belonged to their everlasting peace; and the minister, addressing them solemnly said, "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear." Just the moment before these words were pronounced, a fly had fastened on the face of the innkeeper, and, stinging him sharply, he drew one of his fingers from his ears, and struck off the painful visitant. At that very moment the words, "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear," pronounced with great solemnity, entered the ear that was opened, as a clap of thunder. It struck him with irresistible force: he kept his hand from returning to his ear, and, feeling an impression he had never known before, he presently withdrew the other finger, and hearkened with deep attention to the discourse which followed. A salutary change was produced on him. He abandoned his former wicked practices, became truly serious, and for many years went, during all weathers, six miles to the church where he first received the knowledge of divine things. After about eighteen years' faithful and close walk with God, he died rejoicing in the hope of that glory which he now enjoys.—Whitecross.

3-5. (3) cometh forth, anthropomorphic, comp. Is. xxvi. 21. his place, Ps. cxv. 3. tread . . places, comp. De. xxxii. 13, xxxiii. 29. (4) mountains, etc., Ps. xcvii. 5. "The figure is that of a storm, but no ordinary storm. Lightning descends, and dissolves the very mountains, and torrents of rain scoop out channels in the valleys. Similar symbolic descriptions occur in Judg. v. 5, Isai. lxiv. 1, Hab. iii. 6; comp. Ex. xix. 18."—Camb. B. (5) what . . Jerusalem? "The sin of each kingdom is here identified with the capital city as the place in which it assumed its most aggravated and concentrated form. Jerusalem is regarded as a great idol temple."—Spk. Com. Jacob is a poetical synonym for Israel.

Hearing the Word.—There is a form of deafness known to physicians in which the person affected is able to hear everything except words. In such a case the ear, as an apparatus for mere hearing, may be so perfect that the tick of a watch or the song of a bird is readily appreciated, but owing to a local injury deeper than the ear, for it is in the brain itself, all spoken words of his mother tongue are as unintelligible to the sufferer as those of a foreign language. Give him a book, and he may read as understandingly as ever, but every word addressed to him through the ear reaches his consciousness only as a sound, not as a word. There is a moral deafness which corresponds to this physical infirmity, but which, instead of being rare, is as common as it is harmful and disabling. To all men there is given an inner ear, which has been fashioned to hear wisdom's words, but that ear often seems so dull of hearing, that there appears no sign of response to her utterances. Now it was just such an unresponsive state of soul and of feeling in the people which we are told led Jesus to speak to them in parables.—W. H. Thomson.

6-9. (6) will make, "this prophecy therefore was delivered before

^a "The Prophets sometimes address their speech to inanimate things, to upbraid the stupidity of men."—Lowth.

"The Word of God is the bodying forth of his mind, the incarnation of his thought, the vehicle of his will; by which he would bring himself near to us, to woo us and save us, to attract us by his love or terrify us by his judgments. It is the sum of all that the world knows of him. It is the expression of his character, the history of his procedure."—Legge.

"I have an ear for other preachers." Sir John Cheke used to say, 'but I have a heart for Lattimer.' Here is a very clear and main distinction. Too often men hear the Word sounding its drums and trumpets outside their walls, and they are filled with admiration of the martial music, but their city gates are fast closed and vigilantly guarded, so that the truth has no admittance, but only the sound of it. Would to God we knew how to reach men's affections, for the heart is the target we aim at, and unless we hit it we miss altogether."—Spurgeon.

a "The stones wh. yet lie on its surface, bereft of the glory that might seem to hover round a ruin, however defaced, have been gathered singly, and cast into heaps, as it were, the heaps of a field, and not the remains of a capital."—Keith.

b "Here again we have unalloyed and rampant heathenism: the 'sacred' courtesans of the temple give a part of their hire towards the repairing and beautifying of the building; and also to purchase idols, or carry on the festivals. At the annual festival of Scandan, which continues twenty-four days, the females alluded to defray the expenses of the last day from the proceeds of their own wickedness."—Roberts.

c "The Prophet here refers in sad irony to the shame which the Israelite should feel in exposing his woes and his fears to the gaze of enemies."—Spk. Com.

"This passage of Micah (vss. 10-16) is to be compared with that noble one in Isaiah (x. 28-32), where the Prophet describes the panic which spreads from one town to another near Jerusalem, when the Assyrian army under Sennacherib invaded Judah, and took all its fenced cities (xxxvi. 1). Micah continues the prophetic description of Isaiah. Isaiah the destruction of Samaria in the 4th year of Hezekiah."—Pulpit Com. heap.. field, i. e. the ruins would be gathered into heaps, as farmers gather up the stones when they clean a field." as plantings, better, "into the plantings;" i. e. vineyards should be planted upon the site of Samaria. valley, below Samaria, wh. stood on a hill. discover, i. e. lay bare the very foundations. (7) hires," riches of the idol-shrines, afterwards called "the hire of a harlot" with reference to the shameful practices of heathenish religion (Deut. xxiii. 14). shall return, etc., the material of the costly images acquired through the offerings of devotees shall again be used for votive offerings in other no less shameful religions, based, like those of heathen Syria, on the worship of the powers and processes of nature.—Camb. B. (8) wail, etc., i. e. in anticipation of the desolation I will at once assume the garb, etc., of the mourner. dragons.. owls, R. V., "jackals," "ostriches;" with reference to the nocturnal howls and screeches of these creatures. (9) incurable, nothing can now heal it, or stay the threatened corruption.

Samaria.—On the morning of the third day after our departure from Jerusalem we left Shechem—the Shechem of the Old Testament, but bearing in the New Testament the name of Sychar. We started early in the morning on our way to another city of still greater celebrity, the ancient city of Samaria. Our tents had been pitched on a beautiful plain at the foot of Mount Gerizim. Before the light of the morning sun had reached them they were once more struck, our Syrian horses were saddled, and we went down at once into a deep valley. Through this valley there flows a bright and musical stream. The trees and shrubs which spring up around it are pomegranates, almonds, olives, mulberries, the fig tree, the vine, the orange, the oleander.—Upham.

10-12. (10) Declare ye it not, "may we at last be spared the sight of the malicious joy of our envious neighbors!" Here begins a series of paronomasias, which, however, are far from indicating a playful mood in the prophet. Most of them refer to Judean towns in the prophet's own neighborhood. He sees a pre-ordained correspondence between names and fortunes.—Camb. B. Gath, see 2 Sa. i. 20. Aphrah, i. e. dust. roll.. dust, the sign of deepest sorrow. (11) Saphir, a village among the hills of Judah. the inhabitant of Zaanán, etc., R. V. "the inhabitant of Z, is not come forth; the wailing of Beth-ezel shall take from you the stay thereof." Zaanán, poss. the Zenan of Jos. xv. 37. (12) but evil came down, R. V. "because evil is come down."

Samaria was once the residence of the kings of Israel, after the revolt of the ten tribes against the kings of the house of David. It is said in the Book of Kings that Ahab built a palace of ivory in Samaria; and prophetic denunciations, called forth by the luxury and oppressions of the Samaritans, are found in the Book of the Prophet Amos. "I will smite the winter house with the summer house; and the houses of ivory shall perish; and the great houses shall have an end, saith the Lord." These expressions indicate with some distinctness the magnificence of the city of Samaria at an early period. It had its vicissitudes; but its wealth and splendor remained for many years. After the conquest of Palestine by the Romans, and during their authority here, Samaria was selected as a place of viceregal residence, and was enriched and beautified by works of art. Herod the Great once resided here; and expending upon it all the vast resources of his genius and tyrannical power, he gave it the proud name of Sebaste, in honor of Augustus Caesar. Christianity also, at a later period, left the impress of its piety and genius. Ascending the eastern brow of the Samaritan mount, one of the objects that first met our view was the lofty remains of a Christian church, said to have been built over the body of John the Baptist. Standing afterwards upon the western brow, at a mile's distance from this church, around us the dust was literally sown with columns; some prostrate at full length on the ground; some partially buried and projecting from the side of the hill; some standing erect in rows and at stated intervals, but without capitals, like wounded and mutilated soldiers on the field of battle; some leaning towards the ground, as if they were borne down with hearts of sorrow, and were mourning the loss of their former greatness.—Prof. Upham.

13—16. (13) Lachish, 2 Ki. xviii. 13, 14. bind . . to the swift beast, in order to flee. beginning, etc., or "the first place in the kingdom of Judah to adopt idolatry of the northern kingdom." (14) give presents, or farewell presents, meaning that Judah will have to give up Moresheth-Gath. Moresheth-gath, a place belonging to, or near, the Philistine Gath. Achzib, Jos. xv. 44. lie, lit. a deceptive brook that dries up and disappears the thirsty wayfarer. The meaning is that Judah shall lose Achzib. kings of Israel, after the fall of the northern kingdom predicted in vss. 6, 7, "Israel" is applied to Judah. (15) R. V. "I will yet bring unto thee, O inhab. of M., him that shall possess thee: the glory of Isr. shall come even unto Adullam." The nobility of Isr. shall fly for refuge to such places as the cave of Adullam, David's asylum (1 Sam. xxii. 1, 2). Maresah, Jos. xv. 44. (16) bald, addressed to Judah. poll thee, or shave thy hair, in token of mourning. eagle, better, "vulture," wh. is distinguished for its bald head.

With Samaria we associate the denunciations of Elijah and Elisha, and the peace, forgiveness, and purity of the New with its early and humble teachers. The weary foot of the Son of God, the Teacher from another world, the man unknown, trod these hills and valleys. He came from the Jordan to Jerusalem, and from Jerusalem to Galilee; and He "must needs go through Samaria." The moral change is greater—the name of Mahomet is substituted for that of Christ; and the precepts of the Koran, in this part of Palestine, as well as in other parts, have taken the place of the doctrines and precepts of the Gospel. But it cannot be so always.—Upham.

CHAPTER THE SECOND.

1—3. (1) devise, intimating deliberate design in the outworking of evil. power . . hand, Ge. xxxi. 20. (2) covet fields, etc., Is. v. 8. oppress, etc., i.e. defraud him both of his liberty and his property. (3) family, or race, Am. iii. 1. remove . . necks, the coming evil is likened to a yoke fixed on a beast's neck. time is evil, being characterized by moral evil it must be visited with evil consequences.

The Besetting Sin.—We all have what the negro called our "upsetting sin," but we don't always know what it is. I will tell you what is the besetting sin of every one of us. When man fell from God, originally, he fell into himself. There is your besetting sin—self. Self is the house devil, after all, that every one of us has to fight; smooth-tongued, suave, hoodwinking us all. "O, how much good I am doing." Are you? Self whispered that. When they told a noted preacher at the foot of the stairs that he had preached a good sermon, he said, "The devil told me that before I left the pulpit." I tell you self in some form, my brother, will be an enemy all the time to be fought. We must get rid of self, or we can never be filled with the Spirit. Charles G. Finney said that when he went into the cities to begin his evangelistic work, he would sometimes preach a day or two without one atom of power. What did he do? He just let himself down before God, and prayed God to empty him of Charles G. Finney,—as it were, to take the bump of self-reliance, and self-trust, and self-seeking out of him. "Seekest thou great things for thyself?"—even in Christian work—"seek them not." Let them be for Christ. Pray that you may be so filled with Christ, that there shall not be room for the house devil of self.—T. L. Cuyler.

4—9. (4) shall one take, i.e. one of your enemies. In a mocking and derisive spirit they would take up your own lamentations. lament, etc., Heb. naha, nehi, niyah, a repetition representing the continuous and monotonous wail.—Fausset. "Shall wail a wail of woe."—Pusey. changed the portion, or removed His people from their inheritance. turning, etc., R. V. "to the rebellious (i.e. the king of Assyria) he divided our fields." (5) none that shall cast, etc., there shall be no restoration at time of Jubilee of the lands taken away.—Expos. Bib. (6) vss. 6 and 7 seem to be the words of the rich oppressors. Expos. Bib. translates:—"Prate not, they prate, let none prate of such things! revilings represents the panic, alarm, and havoc produced in the days of Hezekiah by the Assyrian army under Sennacherib invading Jerusalem from the north-east. Micah represents his career to the south-west, even to Lachish, mentioned by both the prophets (See vs. 13)."—Wordsworth.

"To be indifferent to the honor of God, and to have no sorrow at reproach being brought on the cause of religion through the fall of its professors, is the mark of the carnal, unregenerate mind." —Fausset.

a "Might, not right, is what regulates their conduct." —Fausset.

* Jos. xiv. 1, 2; see also De. xxxii. 8, 9. vs. 4. He hath divided our fields. The land was but the outward symbol of the inward heritance. Unjust gain kept back is restored with usury; it taketh away the life of the owners thereof (Prov. i: 19). The vineyard whereof the Jews said, the inheritance shall be ours, was taken from them and given to others. So now is that awful change begun when Christians, leaving God, their only unchanging good, turn to earthly vanities, and for the grace of God which he withdraws have these only for their fleeting portion, until it shall be finally exchanged in the day of judgment.—Pusey.

a "Since such are your doings, my sentence on you is irrevocable, however distasteful to you: ye who have cast out others from their homes and possessions, must arise, depart, and be cast out of your own, for this is not your rest."—Fausset.

"This is the scene of combat, not of rest; Man's is laborious happiness at best; On this side death his dangers never cease, His joys are conquest, not of peace."

As the needle in a compass trembles till it settles in the north point, so the heart of a sinner can get no rest but in Christ.

"Oh, some seek bread—no more—life's mere subsistence, And some seek wealth and ease—the common quest; And some seek fame, that hovers in the distance; But all are seeking rest."—Langbridge.

will never cease! O thou that speakest (thus) to the house of Jacob, is the spirit of Jehovah cut short? or are such His doings? Shall not His words mean well with him that walketh uprightly?" They claim that they are God's people and no harm can come to them. (8) Here God speaks (vss. 8—10), reproving the oppressors. Exp. Bib. translates:—"But ye are the foes of my people, rising against those that are peaceful," etc. (9) my glory, the privileges which every Israelite possessed as a member of God's people.

A Parable.—The stones from the wall said, we come from the mountains far away, from the sides of the craggy hills. Fire and water worked on us for ages, but only made us crags. Human hands have made us into a dwelling where the children of your immortal race are born, and suffer, and rejoice, and find rest and the view of infinite wisdom; the small things may be as important in their place, as necessary for instrumentally accomplishing God's pleasure, as the great. It is a small thing in itself that Lord Mounteagle is visited by some stirrings of conscience and affection; but is the instrument in God's hand of frustrating the Gunpowder Plot—of saving the British King, Lords, and Commons from destruction—of preserving the British empire for its lofty part in Providence as the bulwark of Protestant Christendom. What thing is in itself more small and (to our apprehension) accidental than the cackling of a goose? And yet that is the instrument in God's hand of rousing Titus Manlius at midnight to discover that the Gauls are stealing into the citadel, and so of saving Rome from perishing in her infancy, and preserving her for those mighty destinies, in reference to the whole world and Church, which God's purpose had assigned to her—which His Word has prescribed for her—as the empress city, the queen of the nations.—Macgregor's "Christian Doctrine."

10, 11. (10) arise .. depart, as a just retribution for the expulsion of others, the oppressors shall be expelled themselves. not your rest, it can be no secure resting-place for you in your wilfulness and wickedness. As a sin-stricken land it is under Divine judgments. "because it is polluted, etc., Camb. B. "because of uncleanness ye shall be destroyed with," etc. (11) spirit and falsehood, or, in a lying spirit. prophesy .. drink, promising you abundance of self-indulgent things. These are the Prophets whom the people would approve and accept.

A Call to Depart (vs. 10).—I. The unhappiness that belongs to human life lessened.—1. By ignorance; 2. By insensibility; 3. By prosperity; 4. By employment; 5. By friendship; 6. By religion. II. What are the causes of the unhappiness of life. 1. The infinite disproportion between our desires and our power; 2. The weakness of our judgment continually making mistakes; 3. One evil destroys the pleasure of almost all the good for a time; 4. Almost every good has its peculiar kindred evil; 5. Whatever good is given only excites the infinite wish for more; 6. The hazardous uncertainty of everything future; 7. Sin is the mighty evil that destroys and transforms everything; 8. The soul is not at home here. III. What is to be done? IV. Arise ye, and depart.—J. Foster.

No Rest on Earth—The Prairie on Fire.—One night, ages ago, a fire broke out in an American wilderness. A spark dropped on dry leaves, the lighted leaves flew before the wind, the flames raced along the grass, and glanced from tree to tree, till all the forest was ablaze, and night was turned into a terrible day. Certain Indians, driven out of their hunting-grounds by the red storm, fled for their lives: hour after hour they ran, until, half dead with fatigue, they reached a noble river; they forded it, and after scaling the opposite bank, their chief struck his tent-pole into the ground, threw himself on the cool turf, and cried, "Alabama!"—"Here we may rest!" But that chief was no prophet. The land was claimed by hostile tribes. The fugitives reached no resting-place there; they were soon beset by foes more relentless than the elements: having escaped the fury of the fire, they perished from the cruelty of man, and where they looked for the still delight of a home, found but the quiet of a grave. Let this tradition serve as a parable. Earth has no Alabama for the soul. "Arise, depart; for this is not your rest."—Stanford.

12, 13. (12) assemble, again, after the objects of the captivity have been accomplished in you; a promise of restoration from Babylon. as the sheep of Bozrah,^a etc., i.e. in great numbers. great noise, comp. the bleating of a large flock.^b (13) breaker, the leader who shall break down every obstacle in the way of their return. Henderson understands Jehovah himself as the mighty Leader of His people. Lord . . them, Is. lii. 12.

The Breaker is Come up Before (vs. 13).—I. Since Christ has gone before us things are not as they would have been had He not passed that way. II. Every foe is conquered. III. The power of hurtful things is destroyed. IV. We have but to march on and take the prey.—C. H. Spurgeon.

CHAPTER THE THIRD.

1-4. (1) heads . . princes, official rulers, magistrates. Those who should be examples to the people. (2) pluck . . bones, robbing those who come to the judgment-seat, instead of doing them justice.^c (3) eat, etc., the Prophet likens their cruel outrages to cannibal feasting.^d (4) then, i.e. in the time of God's judgment, see ch. ii. 3. not hear, the cruel oppressors of the poor shall receive no money.

Why Some Prayers not Answered.—“Certainly all the ‘pretence’ prayers must go among the eternal strays. Like many letters which never reach their destination, many prayers have to be marked ‘missent,’ or with some other fatal brand, and consigned to oblivion. Sometimes prayers remain unanswered because they are not directed right—not addressed to God, but to the audience. Other prayers never ‘go through’ because the address is illegible. They are too full of pomp and rhetorical flourish—mere ‘monologues of flowery prose.’ Other prayers get lost because they are ‘unavailable matter’—prayers whose answers might gratify us, but would fall like showers of daggers on our neighbors—and so are denied passage through the divine channels, as sharp-edged tools, corroding acids, explosives, and the like, are not allowed in the mails. No legally ‘stamped,’ sincerely directed, and well-meaning prayer is ever lost. The answer may be delayed, but the prayer is ‘on file.’”—Anon.

The Old French Régime.—One of the greatest abuses of the French Government, previous to the Revolution, was to be found in the administration of justice, which, from the reign of Louis XII., was really bought and sold. When the sale of an office took place, the purchaser petitioned the crown for a grant of it; and when that grant was signed, he paid, besides the price which the vendor was to receive for it, a sum of money into the royal treasury. The amount of that sum varied from one thousand to two thousand French crowns. A worse feature in the French administration of justice was the épices, or presents made by the parties in a cause to the judges before whom it was tried. To secure the judges the proportion which the suitors were to contribute towards the expense of justice, it was provided, by an ordinance of St. Louis, that, at the commencement of a suit, each party should deposit in court of the amount of one-tenth part of the property in dispute; that the tenth deposited by the unsuccessful party should be paid over to the judges on their passing sentence; and that the tenth of the successful party should then be returned to him. This was varied by subsequent ordinances; insensibly it became a custom for the successful party to wait on the judges, after sentence was passed, and, as an acknowledgment of their attention to the cause, to present them with a box of sweetmeats, which were then called épices, or spices. By degrees this custom became a legal perquisite of the judges; and it was converted into a present of money, and required by the judges before the cause came to a hearing: “Non deliberetur donec solventur species,” say some of the ancient registers of the Parliaments of France.—Percy Anec.

5-7. (5) bite . . teeth, ch. ii. 11. “The Heb. word is always used to denote biting venomously, like a serpent, or to perform a malicious act.”—Spk. Com. cry peace, their words and their works in no way agree. putteth not, by neglecting, or refusing, to give these prophets bribes.^a (6) night, etc., the fig. of calamities. The prophet is address-

^a 2 Ki. iii. 4.

^b “He says men, in order that the comparison of Israel to a flock may be better understood.”

—Wordsworth.

^c “Who exercise all manner of cruelty upon their inferiors, as if they were so many butchers cutting meat for the shambles.”

—Lowth.

^d Comp. Eze. xxiv. 3-5.

The Princess Elizabeth, daughter of Charles I., was found dead one day, with her head leaning on the Bible, and the Bible open at the words, “Come unto Me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.” Her monument in Newport church consists of a female figure reclining her head on a marble book, with the above text engraved on the book.

Judgment. It is neither the great man's power, nor the poor man's meanness, that a judge is to mind in judgment. A judge, a justice, must never cry out, “Oh, he is a poor man!” nor yet out of base fear they cry out, “Oh, he is a great man!” The judges in Egypt were portrayed without hands and without eyes, to signify that they were not to take bribes, nor to accept men's persons.

—Brooks.

^a 1 Sam. 2-16.

b Le. xiii. 45;
Eze. xxiv. 17, 22.

"They shall be so ashamed of themselves as not to dare to open their mouths or boast of the name of prophet." — Calvin.

"Misery assails riches as lightning does the highest towers; or as a tree that is heavy laden with fruit breaks its own boughs. So do riches destroy the virtue of their possessor." — Burton.

"My aim in every sermon is a stout and lusty call to sinners, to quicken the saints, and to be made a universal blessing to all." — Rowland Hill.

"The waters of happiness are not for a luxurious bath where a man may lie till, like flax steeped too long, the very fibre be rooted out of him; a quick bath will brace him, and he will come out refreshed for work." — Alexander Maclaren.

a "It has been remarked that when this prophecy was delivered it must have seemed a most daring utterance. This hill appears to have been densely crowded with the best and strongest edifices in Jerusalem. But luxuriant crops of grain may now be found growing on all the south-eastern face of the mount." — Bib. Things.

ing the rulers. Because of their rapacity, and their league with false prophets, their land shall be overshadowed by adversity, and there shall be no prophecy, whether false or true, to guide them. The false prophets will be ashamed, because of the non-fulfilment of their oracles; and the true will have no fresh revelation till the old cycle of prophecies has been fulfilled. Comp. Lam. ii. 9.—Camb. B. (7) cover their lips, a usual token of shame and sorrow.

Preachers and Preaching.—The injustice of the vulgar tone of preaching is not less flagrant to Jesus than it is to the souls which it profanes. The preachers do not see that they make His Gospel not glad, and shear Him of the locks of beauty and the attributes of heaven. When I see a majestic Epaminondas or Washington—when I see among my contemporaries a true orator, an upright judge, a dear friend—when I vibrate to the melody and fancy of a poem, I see beauty that is to be desired. And so lovely, and with yet more entire consent of my human being, sounds in my ear the severe music of the bards that have sung of the true God in all ages. Now, do not degrade the life and dialogues of Christ out of the circle of this charm—by insulation and peculiarity let them lie, as they befall, alive and warm, part of human life, and of the landscape, and of the cheerful day. Another defect of the traditional and limited way of using the mind of Christ is that the moral nature—that law of laws, whose revelations introduce greatness, yea, God Himself, into the open soul—is not explored as the fountain of the established teaching in society. Men have come to speak of the revelation as somewhat long ago given and done, as if God were dead. The injury to faith throttles the preacher, and the goodliest of institutions becomes an uncertain and inarticulate voice. It is very certain that it is the effect of conversation with the beauty of the soul to beget a desire and need to impart to others the same knowledge and love. If utterance is denied, the thought lies like a burden on the man. Always the seer is a sayer. Somehow his dream is told. Somehow he publishes it with solemn joy. Sometimes with pencil on canvas; sometimes with chisel on stone; sometimes in towers and aisles of granite, his soul's worship is builded; sometimes in anthems of indefinite music; but clearest and most permanent in words. The man enamored of this excellency becomes its priest or poet. The office is coeval with the world. But observe the condition, the spiritual limitation of the office. The Spirit only can teach. Not any profane man, not any sensual, not any liar, not any slave can teach; but only He can give who has; He only can create who is. The man on whom the soul descends, through whom the soul speaks, alone can teach. Courage, piety, love, wisdom, can teach; and every man can open his door to these angels, and they shall bring him the gift of tongues. But the man who aims to speak as books enable, as synods use, as the fashion guides, and as interest commands, babbles. Let him hush.—Emerson.

8—12. (8) I am, i.e. I, Micah, as God's true and faithful Prophet. (9) pervert all equity, judgment is right according to law, equity is right between man and man. With both the magistrate has to deal. (10) blood, a figure for oppression and violence, Eze. xxii. 27; Zep. iii. 3. (11) reward, etc., in all cases money, not right, nor the fear of God, ruled the rulers. lean, in their self-deception, or their hypocrisy. (12) plowed as a field, Is. xxvi. 18. mountain of the house, i.e. Mt. Moriah.

Plowed as a Field.—This striking prophecy was quoted at a critical point in the history of Jeremiah when "the priests and the prophets and all the people" had pronounced sentence of death upon the prophet by acclamation. "Certain of the elders of the land," we are told, invoked the respectful treatment of Micah by king Hezekiah as a precedent for granting Jeremiah a similar immunity. So far from putting Micah to death, Hezekiah, they declare, had been moved by his sombre prediction to "fear the Lord and beseech the Lord," "and the Lord repented him of the evil which he had pronounced upon them" (Jer. xxvi. 17—19). This implies a belief that prophecy is conditional. The prophets declare the principles of God's rule, and apply them to individual cases. But if the moral conditions of the cases to which these principles are applied be altered, the threatening or the promise is postponed, modified, or recalled.—Camb. B.

Zion Ploughed.—At the time I visited this sacred ground, one part of it supported a crop of barley, another was undergoing the labor of the plough, and the soil turned up consisted of stone and lime, filled with earth, such as is usually met with in the foundations of ruined cities. It is nearly a mile in circumference.—Richardson's Travels.—On the south-east Zion slopes down, in a series of cultivated terraces, sharply, though not abruptly, to the sites of the king's gardens. Here and round to the S. the whole declivities are sprinkled with olive trees, which grow luxuriantly among the narrow slips of corn.—Porter.

CHAPTER THE FOURTH.

1, 2. (1) last days, etc., comp. Is. ii. 2, etc. The usual prophetic expression for the times of Messiah. mountain .. Lord, Mt. Moriah, but apparently including Jerusalem as a whole. people .. flow, "heathen shall resort thither to be instructed in the way of salvation." (2) law, or teaching, instruction. word of the Lord, or the Gospel message.^b

A Missionary Discourse (vss. 1-3).—I. The Church rendered conspicuous to all. 1. She shall be exalted above the hills; 2. She shall be established. II. A disposition in all towards the Church. 1. Friendly co-operation; 2. A definite and sacred object; 3. Proper intentions and correct views; 4. Right dispositions; 5. Confidence in the excellency of the Divine instructions. III. The blessings resulting from these great events.—Gamma in 400 Sks.

3, 4. (3) among, R. V., "between many peoples." God shall be the arbiter of all disputes. rebuke, R. V. marg. "decide concerning," as an umpire. beat .. hooks, comp. Is. ii. 4; Joel iii. 10.^a (4) sit .. tree, a poetical figure of perfect security and quietness.^b mouth .. spoken, therefore we may be quite sure that it will come to pass.

The Vine and the Fig Tree.—When we had proceeded some distance, the sounds of the somtora coming upon our ears indicated that the scene of rejoicing was close at hand. My companion stopped at a house with a mean little door, through which, having entered, she led the way into a large open patio, or courtyard, shaded on one side by a trellis of cane work, supporting heavy bunches of luscious grapes. In the midst of the court grew, in full vigor, a verdant fig tree, spreading abroad its expansive branches, and affording an agreeable shelter from the oppressive rays of the noon-day sun. The vine and the fig tree are invariably found in the Moorish patio. The family grow up under this shade; the little ones sport, with the thoughtless glee of childhood, among the foliage, and the grave elders pass the greater part of their time in more serious conversation, and sometimes, doubtless, mere trifling gossip. They dwell under their own vine and fig tree, none daring to make them afraid.—Murray. "This expression most probably alludes to the delightful Eastern arbors, which were partly composed of vines; and the agreeable retreat which was enjoyed under them might also be found under their fig trees. Norden expressly speaks of vine arbors as common in the Egyptian gardens, and the Prænestine pavement, in Dr. Shaw, gives us the figure of an ancient one."—Burder.

5-7. (5) all people will walk, R. V. "all the peoples walk." The nations all worship gods of their own; let us therefore all the more steadily walk in the name of Jehovah. To walk in the name of any one, means to frame one's conduct acc. to his will, to act by his authority and in accordance with his character. (6) assemble, the people in their own land again. (7) a remnant, i.e. I will treat Israel as the "remnant" to which the promises belong. Zep. iii. 19. reign, etc., Da. vii. 14.

Fulfilment of the Ancient Vision.—Such is the ideal world, seen and promised two thousand five hundred years ago, out of as real an experience of human sin and failure as ever mankind awoke to. Are we nearer the Vision to-day, or does it still hang upon time's horizon, that line which seems so stable from every seer's point of view, but which moves from the generations as fast as they travel to it? So far from this being so, there is much in the Vision that is not only nearer us than it was to the Hebrew prophets, and not only abreast of us, but actually ^b Lu. xxiv. 47.

Last days. God's promises are dated, but with a mysterious character; and for want of skill in God's chronology, we are prone to think God forgets us, when, indeed, we forget ourselves in being so bold to set God a time of our own, and in being angry that He comes not just then to us.—Gurnall.

^a "This prophecy began to be fulfilled in the peaceful days of the first appearance of the Gospel. The world was in a quiet condition when Christ came to visit it. That universal peace was an earnest of the peace in earth and heaven which is the fruit of the Gospel of Christ."—Wordsworth.

^b "The fig tree affords a thick shade and is, on this account, a favorite resort of the family, where they may often be seen seated on mats, partaking of a meal, or entertaining friends. So the expression denotes at once security, domestic enjoyment, and competence."—Van Lennep.

"As the pleasures of the future will be spiritual and pure, the object of a good and wise man in this transitory state of existence should be to fit himself for a better, by controlling the unworthy propensities of his nature and improving all his better aspirations; to do his duty, first to God, then to his neighbor: to promote the happiness and welfare of those whom he has the means of assisting; never wantonly to injure the meanest thing that lives; and to encourage, as far as he can, whatever is useful and tends to refine and exalt humanity."

—Southey.

• "The tower of the flock is the Church of Christ, wh. had its origin in Jerusalem and to which all nations are gathered, so as to make one flock and one shepherd."—A. Lapide.

Constant revival, no autumn, no winter, but perpetual summer, is what the Church needs, and which must precede the coming millennium.

• "Zion being compared to an ox treading corn, and an ox's strength lying in the horns, her strength is implied by giving her a horn of iron." — Fausset.

b 1 Kl. xxii. 24; Job xvi. 10, etc.

c Bethlehem means house of bread, and Ephrathah means fruitful.

d "This is an illustrious testimony to the Divine generation, before all time, of Christ the Eternal Son of God." — Wordsworth.

Bethlehem, thou art not worthy to be counted among the Gileads of Judah, but out of thy little thousand there shall stand achieved and behind us, as we live and strive still onward. Yes, brothers, actually behind us! History has in part fulfilled the promised influence of religion upon the nations. The Unity of God has been owned, and the civilized peoples bow to the standards of justice and of mercy first revealed from Mount Zion. Many nations and powerful nations acknowledge the arbitrament of the God of the Bible. We have had revealed that High Fatherhood of which every family in heaven and earth is named; and wherever that is believed the brotherhood of men is confessed. We have seen Sin, that profound discord in man and estrangement from God, of which all human hatreds and malices are the fruit, atoned for and reconciled by a Sacrifice in face of which human pride and passion stand abashed. The first part of the Vision is fulfilled. The nations stream to the God of Jerusalem and His Christ.—G. Adam Smith.

8—13. (8) tower of the flock,^a allusion is to the high wooden tower, erected in large pastures, from which the scattered flocks might be watched. Jerusalem is so regarded in this poetical figure. the first dominion, the empire as in the days of David and Solomon. (9) cry aloud, at the sorrow so soon to come on thee; the prospect of future restoration should prevent such despair. "no king," referring to the captivity of Jehoiachin and Zedekiah. (10) Be in pain, etc., the anguish is not to be escaped, but shall end in deliverance. dwell in the field, the inhabitants of Jerusalem are encamped in the open country, in preparation for the journey to Babylon. (11) defiled, i.e. profaned, despoiled of her boasted holiness and inviolability. look upon Zion, R. V. "see its desire upon Z." (12) shall gather, "hath gathered." The fate they have prepared for Z. will come upon themselves. (13) horn, symbol of destructive power.^a hoofs brass, threshing was done by the treading of the feet. I will consecrate, R. V. "thou shalt devote."

Horn Iron and Hoofs Brass.—"When God," says an old writer, "has conquering work for his people to do, he will furnish them with strength and ability for it—will make the horn iron and the hoofs brass; and when he does so, they must exert the power he gives them, and execute the commission: even the daughter of Zion may arise and thresh." The nations thought to ruin Christianity in its infancy, but it was victorious over them. Those who persisted in their enmity were broken to pieces (Matt. xxi. 44), particularly the Jewish nation; but multitudes by Divine grace were joined to the Church, and they and their substance were consecrated to the Lord Jesus, the Lord of the whole earth.—Pulp. Com.

CHAPTER THE FIFTH.

1—3. (1) Now gather, R. V. "Now shalt thou gather." Assyria may marshal her hosts, may lay siege against the holy city, may violate the person of the king, but from insignificant Bethlehem a royal Deliverer shall arise. daughter of troops, or city having many troops. he hath laid, i.e. the enemy. against us, i.e. the people shut up in the city. smite .. cheek, an act of insult.^b (2) Beth-lehem Ephratah,^c Mat. ii. 6. To be distinguished from Bethlehem in Zebulun. out of thee, a little and humble village. goings .. old, prob. the best translation is, "whose comings forth have been of old, from the ancient days." The clause then may express either the descent of the Messiah from the ancient Davidic family, or, as some understand it,—his pre-existence.^d (3) Therefore will he, etc. Because the deliverance of Israel is to proceed from the insignificant Bethlehem, God will deliver Israel into the hands of her enemies. she, the virgin mother. his brethren shall return, the Messiah's brethren according to the flesh who are in foreign lands shall return to Judea.

The Essential Existence and Divine Manifestations of the Son of God (vs. 2).—I. Consider that essential perfection of the Deity which is attributed to Him. II. Those special manifestations of His glory which are recorded—I. In the creation of all things; 2. In His covenant with His Father; 3. In His communion with men. Application:—(1) These considerations may prove to you that the Saviour is worthy of your love;

(2) Worthy of your confidence; (3) Worthy of your service.—J. Blackburn.

Bethlehem.—By a remarkable interposition of Providence, interwoven, however, with the course of events in the world, was it brought about that the promised King should be born in Bethlehem (as Micah the prophet had foretold), the very place where the house of David had its origin; while, at the same time, the lowly circumstances of his birth were in striking contrast with the inherent dignity and glory that were veiled in the new-born child.—Mander. The Humble Origin of the Messiah.—The value of such a prophecy of Christ lies in the correctives which it supplies to the Christian apocalypse and theology. Both of these have raised Christ to a throne too far above the actual circumstances of His earthly ministry and the theatre of His eternal sympathies. Whether enthroned in the praises of heaven, or by scholasticism relegated to an ideal and abstract humanity, Christ is lifted away from touch with the common people. But His lowly origin was a fact. He sprang from the most democratic of peoples. His ancestor was a shepherd, and His mother a peasant girl. He Himself was a carpenter: at home, as His parables show, in the fields and the folds and the barns of His country; with the servants of the great houses, with the unemployed in the market; with the woman in the hovel seeking one piece of silver, with the shepherd on the moors seeking the lost sheep. The poor had the gospel preached to them; and the common people heard Him gladly. As the peasants of Judæa must have listened to Micah's promise of His origin among themselves with new hope and patience, so in the Roman empire the religion of Jesus Christ was welcomed chiefly, as the Apostles and the Fathers bear witness, by the lowly and the laboring of every nation. In the great persecution which bears his name, the Emperor Domitian heard that there were two relatives alive of this Jesus whom so many acknowledged as their King, and he sent for them that he might put them to death. But when they came, he asked them to hold up their hands, and seeing these brown and chapped with toil, he dismissed the men, saying, "From such slaves we have nothing to fear." Ah but, Emperor! it is just the horny hands of this religion that thou and thy gods have to fear!—G. Adam Smith.

Both names were derived from "fruitfulness," "House of Bread" and "fruitfulness;" and despite the centuries of Mohammedan oppression, it is fertile still. It had been rich in the fruitfulness of this world; rich, thrice rich, should it be in spiritual fruitfulness.—Pusey.

4-7. (4) feed, i.e. feed, or rule, the flock.* "Over this restored people the Messiah shall preside in the plenitude of Divine power." abide, remain undisturbed in their land. be great, Lu. i. 32. (5) peace, comp. Is. ix. 6.^b It is better to read: "And this man shall be Peace," with a full stop after Peace. Assyrian, prob. put here as the representative of all Israel's foes. seven . . eight, an idiom for a full and sufficient number. principal men, lit. anointed men, such as the Apostles. (6) waste, or eat up, as with their flocks the shepherds do. land of Nimrod, another name for Assyria. entrances, gates, or passes. (7) dew from the Lord, "the mysterious origin of the dew and the rain seems to be the point of comparison." Job xxxviii. 28. that tarrieth not for man, "man can neither help nor hinder the works of God in nature; friendship and hostility will be equally unimportant to the destiny of Israel."

The Celestial Flora.—I. "Though thou be little, etc." You can buy complete sets of all the flowers of the Alpine district at the hotel near the foot of the Rosenlani glacier, very neatly pressed and enclosed in cases. Some of the flowers are very common, but they must be included, or the flora would not be completely represented. The botanist is as careful to see that the common ones are there, as he is to note that the rarer specimens are not excluded. Our blessed Lord will be sure to make a perfect collection of all the flowers of his field, and even the ordinary believer, the every-day worker, the common convert, will not be forgotten. To Jesus' eye, there is beauty in all his plants, and each one is needed to perfect the flora of paradise. May I be found among his flowers, if only as one out of myriad daisies, who in sweet simplicity shall look up and wonder at his love for ever.—Spurgeon.

a man who shall rule all men. There is a wonderful spirit of compensation in providence. God is saying to each of us, Though thou art poor, thou mayest be wise; though thou art slow, thou mayest be painstaking and persevering; thou art—though mis understood by men—thou art fully comprehended by thy Father. Look for the "though" in every history; look for the compensation in every life." — Parker.

Sin—a fruit of unbelief. "I tell you that that bottle contains arsenic, and it will kill you if you take it, that is true. If you disbelieve the truth, and take it, your unbelief will cost you your life. A certain Austrian count, once climbing the Alps, was told by his guide that to go out onto a cliff was dangerous. He disbelieved it, went, fell—and they found his body at the hotel, at the foot of that cliff. The world is full today of disasters which are merely the consequences of unbelief." — A. F. Schaffner.

a Is. xl. 9-11.

b Comp. Eph. ii.

14. "It belongs, in truth, to the Church of God to suffer blows, not to strike them. But at the same time let it be remembered that the Church is an anvil which has worn out many a hammer." — Beza.

* "What characteristics the Messiah, as well as His works, is the perfect union of force with gentleness. He was the Lion of the tribe of Judah, yet the lamb of God."—Spk. Com.

d. "The war chariot and the convenient carriage, once so common in these lands, have totally disappeared."—Van Lennep.

* Ex. xx. 4.

† Le. xxi. 1.

g. "The Circassians celebrate their religious ceremonies exclusively in sacred groves, where an emblem, shaped like a cross, is carefully preserved. When a warrior returns home victorious, or has escaped some impending calamity, he repairs to the grove, and presents a thank offering to the god."—Van Lennep.

"As the several nations that the king of Assyria placed in Samaria made idols of their own, and set them up for worship; so we may see the different classes of men in these days, with their idols of worship—the ambitious, the covetous, the pleasure-taker, the miser, the scientific."—John Bateman.

a Comp. Is. i. 2.

b " 'Tis then we hear the voice of God within, pleading with care and sin: Child of My love how have I wearied thee? Why wilt thou err from Me? Have I not brought thee from the house of slaves, parting the drowning waves, and set 8—12. (8) as a lion, the type of irresistible strength.* (9) thine hand, the emblem of power. (10) horses .. chariots,^d cf. i. 13. So Isaiah regards war-horses and war-chariots as equally hateful to God with idolatry, ii. 7. (11) cities strongholds, signs of man's self-confidence. (12) witchcrafts, Ex. xxii. 18. soothsayers, Is. ii. 6.

Dew comes down from heaven, is of heavenly, not earthly, origin, transparent, glistening with light, reflecting the hues of heaven; gentle, slight, weak in itself, refreshing, cooling the strong heats of the day; consumed itself, yet thereby preserving life; falling on the dry and withered grass, wherein all nature droops, and recalling it to freshness of life. And still more in those lands, where from the beginning of April to the end of October, the close of the latter and the beginning of the early rain, during all the hot months of summer, the life of all herbage depends upon the dew alone.—Pusey.

13—15. (13) graven images, ch. i. 7.^e standing images, R. V. "pillars." (14) groves,^f R. V. "Asherahs." "The Asherah was prob. a post or pole fixed in the ground besides an altar of Baal or Jehovah, and regarded as sacred."—Camb. B. cities, marg. enemies. (15) heathen, such as, etc., R. V. "nations which hearkened not," i.e. were disobedient.

Heathenism in Africa.—Africa is the home of superstition. It does not take the form of a regular mythology, or embody itself in the grotesque images of Hindostan. Any trifle which awakens fear, or to which mystery may attach, is an object of reverence or worship. Spirits, both bad and good, are imagined to exist everywhere. The rocks, trees, mountains, rivers, caverns, and groves, may all or each be the home of a spiritual being. Such spots are sacred. Every passer-by will deposit an offering, however small, to show his respect or to deprecate the anger of the spiritual inhabitant. The bodies of living creatures are thought to be the favorite abode of the spirits. At one place the monkeys that live in the wood around the graveyard are thought to be animated with departed spirits. Those monkeys, therefore, are sacred animals. Nobody would dare to touch them; and the creatures seem to know this, for they are quite tame, and not a little impudent. At another place there are many crocodiles, in which, as the people think, departed spirits live. These, too, are sacred, and the natives treat them so kindly, that the scaly monsters will come out of their holes when called, and allow themselves to be handled, and will follow any one who carries a fowl in his hand, for half a mile from his den. At Calabar and Bonny the shark is sacred, for the same reason; and at Benin it is so tame, that it will come up every day to the river bank for food. And what is still more strange is the fact, that at St. Catherine, a species of tiger burrows near the town, and walks through its streets at night, without disturbing the people, who believe these fierce creatures to be sacred. Experience shows that the African is peculiarly receptive of religious impressions. His intellectual powers are wholly uncultivated. He has not worked out for himself a system of religious belief. What he believes is the result of feeling, and not of conviction.

CHAPTER THE SIXTH.

1—5. (1) before the mountains, regarded as the witnesses of God's dealings all through the ages.* (2) controversy, a ground for complaint against them. strong, R. V. "enduring." (3) wearied thee, by too hard exactions,^b Is. xliii. 22; Mal. i. 13. (4) house of servants, Ex. xiii. 3. (5) Balak, etc., Nu. xxii. 5, xxiii. 7. from Shittim, etc., R. V., "remember from Shittim to Gilgal."

A Great Controversy (vs. 2).—I. The appeal. 1. Common in its form, Is. i. 3; Jer. viii. 7; Pro. vi. 6; Lu. xii. 24, etc.; 2. Sublime in conception; 3. Humiliating in substance. II. The parties. 1. God as the moral Governor of the universe, and men as His subjects. III. The case: the question is whether God has done us any injury—I. By the strictness of His laws; 2. By the harshness of His providential dispensations; 3. By the severity of the punishments He has threatened in a future world. Apply:—(1) We have no just complaints against God; (2) God has many just complaints against us.

Hear.—If Adam needed to hear his Father's voice, sounding amid the fair bowers and the unshaded glory of Paradise, surely much more does this prodigal world, that has gone astray from him, need to hear a Father's voice asking after us, and the first intimations of a Father's desire that the lost may be found, and the dead at length become alive.—Cumming.

6—9. (6) wherewith, etc., the question supposed to be asked of the Prophet by the people with whom he pleads. They would know what will appease Jehovah. calves, etc., Le. ix. 2, 3. (7) rivers of oil, this was used with the meat-offerings. my firstborn, as was required in the Moloch rites^a (see preceding pages). (8) "the prophet denies that any external forms will make up for the want of spiritual qualities. The sacrifice of the heart is what God requires," showed thee, De. x. 12. do justly, etc., these being moral, not ceremonial, duties. walk . . . God, implying habitual converse. (9) the city, i.e. Jerusalem. man of wisdom, i.e. the man who is wise will easily see God's authority in this demand for moral obedience. rod, or threatened judgment; prob. the Assyrian invasion.

Is it not True? (vs. 8).—I. The revelation. 1. What He has revealed; 2. How He has revealed these things—by nature, by history, by Jesus Christ, by our own experience. II. The requisition. 1. He requires us to demonstrate our knowledge; 2. To display this in a particular way, to do justly, to love mercy, to walk humbly with God.—Stems and Twigs.

A Condition of Receiving Mercy.—Being sent for by a slave-holder who was seriously unwell, to pray with him, Father Craven approached his bedside and inquired if he had in his will bequeathed liberty to his slaves? "No," said the slave-holder, "I have bequeathed them to my children." "Then," said Father Craven, "prayer will be of no avail—God will not show mercy to those who show none to their fellow-men." So he bade him farewell. Soon after a second message was sent for Father Craven to visit the slave-holder and pray with him. He went and asked the slave-holder if he had emancipated his slaves? "Yes," said the slave-holder, "I have now emancipated them by my will. Will you pray for me?" "Certainly," said the good man, and he knelt down and commended to God the soul of the sufferer, who seemed near his end.

10—12. (10) yet, although such constant and earnest warnings have been given. scant measure, lit. a lean ephah, Am. viii. 5. (11) shall I count them pure, R. V. "shall I be pure?" Cheyne would read: "Canst thou (Jerusalem) be pure?" bag . . . weights, Pr. xvi. 11. (12) thereof, of her, i.e. the city of Jerusalem.

Treasures of Wickedness (vss. 10, 11).—I. Resulting from short weights and defective measures. II. Adulterations of food, and manufacturing articles. III. Results of vulgar theft, fraud, etc. IV. Results of marriage for money without love. V. Results of conquests, national and personal loot, slave trade, etc. VI. The numerous ways in which riches are got, but not by right.

The Sin of the Scant Measure.—This section of the Book of Micah is one of the most poignant criticisms of a commercial community which have ever appeared in literature. In equal relief we see the meanest instruments and the most prominent agents of covetousness and cruelty—the scant measure, the false weights, the unscrupulous prince and the venal judge. And although there are some sins denounced which are impossible in our civilization, yet falsehood, squalid fraud, pitilessness of the everlasting struggle for life are exposed exactly as we see them about us to-day. Through the prophet's ancient and often obscure eloquence we feel just those shocks and sharp edges which still break everywhere through our Christian civilization. Let us remember, too, that the community addressed by the prophet was, like our own, professedly religious.—Expos. Bible.

13—16. (13) sick, with a wasting, consuming sickness. (14) casting down, R. V. "humiliation." take hold, etc., R. V. "remove, but shalt not My saints before thee in the way, lest thou shouldst faint or stray?"—Kebles.

c Le. 11. 1, 4, 15.

d There is every reason to believe that the Jews actually offered human sacrifices in the Valley of Hinnom.

"Vss. 6 and 7 are an exact description of the temper of hypocrites and habitual sinners, who hope to obtain God's favor by performing the external duties of religion; and are willing to purchase their own pardon upon any terms but that of reforming their lives."—Lowth.

"Oft, beneath the saintly veil, the votary of sin may lurk unseen, and to that eye alone which penetrates the inmost heart revealed."

—Bally.

Antonio Guevasa used to say, "That heaven would be filled with such as had done good works, and hell with such as intended to do them."

"The ermine rather chooseth to die than defile her beautiful skin. There is more evil in a drop of sin than in a sea of affliction; affliction is but like a rent in a coat, sin a prick at the heart. In affliction there is some good; in this lion there is some honey to be found. 'It is good for me that I was afflicted' (Ps. cxix. 71). St. Augustine saith, 'Affliction is God's fall to thresh off our husks; not to consume but to refine.' There is no good in sin; it is the spirit and quint-essence of evil. Sin is worse than hell; for the pains of hell only are a burden to the creature; but sin is a burden to God. "I am pressed under your iniquities, as a cart is pressed under the sheaves" (Amos ii. 13). — T. Watson.

"Public reformers had need first practice on their own hearts that which they purpose to try on others." — Charles I.

a "It is with me as with one seeking fruits after the harvest, grapes after the vintage. There is not a cluster to be found, no first-ripe fruit." — Fausset.

b "The meaning is either, to do evil thoroughly, or to do evil in such a way as to appear good, or in the very spirit of Satan, to make evil their good." — Spk. Com.

"We'll mock the time with fairest show; fair face must hide what the false heart does know." — Shakespeare.

carry away safe; and that which thou carriest away," etc. The enemy will fall so suddenly upon the Jews th. they will not be able to save their property. (15) sow, etc., comp. De. xxviii. 38, 40. sweet wine, R. V. "the vintage." (16) statutes of Omri, 1 Ki. xvi. 25, 26. reproach of my people, the reproach wh. attaches to the people of Jehovah when cast out of "Jehovah's land."

Sharp Dealing is Destructive to Society.—The speed of modern life tends to shorten the time expended on every piece of work, and to turn it out untempered and incomplete. The struggle for life in commerce, the organized rivalry between labor and capital, not only puts every man on his guard against giving any other more than his due, but tempts him to use every opportunity to scamp and curtail his own service and output. Who is responsible for the enmity of classes, and the distrust which exists between capital and labor? It is the workman whose one aim is to secure the largest amount of wages for the smallest amount of work, and who will, in his blind pursuit of that, wreck the whole trade of a town or a district; it is the employer who believes he has no duties to his men beyond paying them for their work the least that he can induce them to take; it is the customer who only and ever looks to the cheapness of an article—procurer in that prostitution of talent to the work of scamping which is fast killing art, and joy and all pity for the bodies and souls of our brothers. These are the true anarchists and breakers-up of society.—Expos. Bible.

CHAPTER THE SEVENTH.

1, 2. (1) The speaker here is the true Israel personified. grape-gleanings, a complaint of the fewness of the Church's numbers. my soul desired, etc., better as R. V. marg., "nor firstripe fig which my soul desired." firstripe, these were especially valued, and regarded as being of superior quality. (2) This vs. explains the figure of vs. 1. good . . earth, comp. Ps. xii. 1, xiv. 2; Is. lvii. 1.

3, 4. (3) both hands, indicating thorough earnestness and activity in their evil schemes. Lit. "Both hands are upon evil to make it good." the prince asketh, etc., the prince asketh (an illegal favor), and the judge is ready for a reward (i. e. a bribe). wrap it up, R. V. "weave it together," twist their wicked schemes together. (4) brier . . thorn, to such sinners are often compared, on account of their barrenness, and hurtful qualities. watchmen, i. e. the day foreseen by thy prophets.

Sin Wrappings (vs. 3).—The endeavor of people to wrap up sin is worthy of attention, because—I. It is general. The sinner seeks to wrap up sin—1. From society; 2. From his own conscience. II. Because it is wicked. Concealing sin is—1. A sin against society; 2. Against our constitution; 3. Against God. III. Because it is unwise. 1. The endeavor must prove inevitably fruitless; 2. It is eternally inimical to happiness; 3. If persisted in, will involve in unutterable ruin.—Thomas.

Skilfulness in Sin.—There are men who make a study of doing things that are wrong, skilfully, cunningly, well. There are thieves who are discovered, and there are thieves who are not discovered, because they thief so well, so skilfully; they shake hands with the man they have robbed, and say Good-night to the soul they have plundered. Men may become experts in the devil's academy. The cleverness does not excuse the iniquity; the ability does not restore the character. If that ability had been devoted otherwise, what fortunes lay within its grasp, what influence belonged of right to its mastery! But men love to work in the dark, they seem to be more at home there than in the sunlight; they have a gift of sight which enables them to see all their spectral comrades in the black darkness of night.—Peop. Bib.

5—10. (5) trust . . guide, bec. such is the prevailing selfishness and corruption that none can be trusted. (6) son, etc., comp. Mat. x. 21, 35, 36. (7) "here the thread of thought is broken; the following verses appear to have been attached later. The speaker is, indeed, still the true Israel; but here she appears already overpowered by her enemies, whereas in vss. 1—6 the day of chastisement is still far off."—Camb. B. Therefore, R. V., "But as for me." unto the Lord, away from frail and untrustworthy man. (8) mine enemy, i. e. the instrument of God's "visitation," the heathen oppressor of Israel. darkness, etc.,^a oftentimes the darkest part of the night is that wh. is just before the dawn. (9) bear, patiently and submissively. plead, etc., Ps. xxxv. 1, xliii. 1. righteousness, here His gracious faithfulness to His promises. (10) she that is mine enemy, the worldly power is personified. shame . . . her, "in seeing how utterly mistaken she was in supposing that I was utterly ruined." where . . . God? Ps. xlii. 3—10. as the mire, into the Eastern streets the refuse of the houses is swept, and there trodden down.

Our Mother of Sorrows.—From these fragments, it may be of many centuries, there rises clear the One Essential Figure: Israel, all her secular woes upon her; our Mother of Sorrows, at whose knees we learned our first prayers of confession and penitence. Other nations have been our teachers in art and wisdom and government. But she is our mistress in pain and in patience, teaching men with what conscience they should bear the chastening of the Almighty, with what hope and humility they should wait for their God. Surely not less lovable, but only more human, that her pale cheeks flush for a moment with the hate of the enemy and the assurance of revenge. Her passion is soon gone, for she feels her guilt to be greater; and, seeking forgiveness, her last word is what man's must ever be, praise to the grace and mercy of God.—Expos. Bib.

* The 9th verse contains a beautiful specimen of submissiveness and patient endurance of suffering, from a humbling conviction of the demerit of sin; accompanied by the firm persuasion that when the chastisement had answered its end, Jehovah would graciously afford deliverance.—Henderson.

"Where is Your God?"—A Nonconformist minister, Mr. Norman, had been condemned to lie in Ilchester gaol for preaching. On his way thither the officers stopped to rest at the sheriff's house. Lady Warre, the sheriff's wife, came to look at the prisoner, and to insult him with cruel words, saying, "Where is your God now, Mr. Norman?" "Madam," he replied, "have you a Bible in the house?" "Yes; we are not so heathenish as to be without a Bible." On getting it into his hands, he turned to Micah and read the words, "Rejoice not against me, O mine enemy: when I fall, I shall arise; when I sit in darkness, the Lord shall be a light unto me. I will bear the indignation of the Lord, because I have sinned against Him, until He plead my cause, and execute judgment for me: He will bring me forth to the light, and I shall behold His righteousness. Then she that is mine enemy shall see it, and shame shall cover her which said unto me, Where is the Lord thy God? mine eyes shall behold her: now shall she be trodden down as the mire of the streets." The lady retired silenced, and the dealings of God with her family soon made this warning to be noted and remembered.—Old Test. Anec.

11—13. (11) In the day, etc., Spk. Com., "a day for building thy walls is at hand." Zion is represented as a vineyard whose walls have been broken down. shall the decree, etc., Camb. B., "shall the bound be afar off;" i. e. the boundaries of Isr. shall be widely extended.^b Isa. xxxiii. 17 R. V. (12) he shall come, or they shall come; prob. meaning that from all districts the dispersed of Israel should come to Zion. from the fortified cities, etc., R. V., "the cities of Egypt, and from Egypt even to the River" (i. e. the Euphrates. from sea to sea, from the Mediterranean to the Persian Gulf, Joel ii. 20. from mountain to mountain, from Sinai to Lebanon. (13) land, or earth, as opposed to the kingdom of heaven, the Church of God. Some think the ref. is to the intervening period of desolation for Palestine before the restoration from the captivity.

Earnestness of a Convinced Sinner.—If a man knew that the ship in which he and his family were sailing, and which contained all his property, was leaking day and night, do you suppose he would be careless about it? Would he not be constantly baling out the water lest it should sink the vessel with its precious freight? If a man understood that a spark from the flue of the furnace had set fire to the timber of his dwelling, and that, smothered, it was creeping along and charring the wains-

^a Ps. xxxvii. 24; Pr. xlii. 16.

"Lean not on earth; 'twill pierce thee to the heart; a broken reed at best, but oft a spear; On its sharp point peace bleeds, and hope expires."

—Young.

"Dost thou know what friendship is? 'Tis not the fawning cringe, the studied smile, the oil-smooth speech, big word or solemn vow; it is a sacred ray of heavenly love; like that, rejoicing in the good of others, it scorns the narrow bounds of selfishness, and knows no bliss sincere but social joy; simple and plain, it shines in naked truth, and opens all the sluices of the heart." — Hawkins.

Mr. Finney tells of a blacksmith whose agony became so great at thought of the condition of the Church and of sinners, that he could not work; so locked up his shop, and spent the afternoon in prayer. This was followed by a powerful revival.

^b "In a spiritual sense this began to be fulfilled on the day of Pentecost, when multitudes from Assyria and Egypt were received by the Apostles into the Church of Christ."

—Wordsworth.

"There are two sorts of hypocrites; one that are deceived with their outward morality and external religion; and the other are those that are deceived with false discoveries and elevations; which often cry down works, and men's own righteousness, and talk much of free grace; but at the same time make a righteousness of their discoveries, and of their humiliation, and exalt themselves to heaven with them."

—Edwards. n "The expressions denote that the Jews shall enjoy full and free possession of their land after their return to it, with the same security and happiness with which they possessed it in their most flourishing state under the reigns of David and Solomon."—Lowth. c Ps. lxxviii. 12, 13; Je. xvi. 14, 15.

a "Once they had eagerly drunk in all rumors as so many messages of victories, but then they shall be afraid of hearing them, because they continually fear new disasters, when they see the God of Israel to be so powerful."—Calvin.

"This is what society comes to without God. Lose the religious element, and society falls to pieces. Society thinks not; for a time society thinks it can keep itself very well together but experience shows that when the morale of society goes down, its money securities are waste paper." — People's Bible.

b Comp. Ge. xii. 2, xxvi. 24, xxviii. 13.

"The unchangeable promise implied an engagement that the seed of the patriarchs should never perish, and should be restored to their inheritance as often as they turned wholly to God."—Fausset.

c Lu. i. 70—74.

coting and partition, do you suppose he would content himself merely with saying, "I have no doubt that this house is on fire, and that it is dangerous?" Would he not do something? Many men read the Bible and say, "My dear children, we are all sinful; we are sold in sin; may God lead us out of our sinfulness, and draw us toward Him!" and yet they put forth no effort to reform their lives. And when a man is touched by the Spirit of God, and he is made conscious that the fires of hell are in him, with what earnestness does he enter upon a course of repentance! How does he say, "God have mercy on me! Help me; teach me; lead me!"—H. W. Beecher.

14, 15. (14) feed, as before, in the sense of a shepherd's ordering, providing, and ruling. rod, the shepherd's staff or crook. solitarily, or apart from the enemies, Num. xxiii. 9. in the wood, with the idea of safety and cool repose. Bashan and Gilead,^b districts noted for their rich pastures. (15) days.. Egypt, this Divine deliverance is constantly referred to as altogether a model deliverance.^c

Wonder.—Coleridge says that "in wonder all philosophy began, in wonder it ends, and admiration fills up the interspace; but the first wonder is the offspring of ignorance, and the last is the parent of devotion." There is great inconsistency in man's wonder. He will sometimes wonder at the works of man, but not at the works of God. How often does an archway of more than the ordinary span and beauty excite his "wonder;" while the arch of the heavens with a span measureless and a beauty Divine is looked upon with cold indifference. A piece of human mechanism calls forth his "wonder," while the marvelous structure of his own body is seldom or ever contemplated with interest.—John Bate.

16, 17. (16) see, God's deliverance. their might, wh. they shall feel bears no comparison with God's.^a hand upon their mouth, etc., in astonishment and consternation. (17) this vs. describes the terror and humiliation of the enemies. shall be afraid, etc., R. V., "shall come with fear unto the Lord our God."

Hearers.—1. The inattentive hearer that taketh very little heed to what he heareth; 2. The inconsiderate hearer, that never ponders what he hears, nor compares one thing with another; 3. The injudicious hearer, that never makes any judgment, whether it be true or false; 4. The unapprehensive hearer, who hears all his days, but is never the wiser; 5. The stupid unaffected hearer, that is as a rock and stone under the Word; 6. There are your prejudiced, disaffected hearers, who hear with dislike, especially those things which relate to practice; 7. Your fantastical, voluptuous hearers, that hear only to please their fancy or imaginations: they come on purpose to try if they can hear a pretty sentence, any fine jingle, any flashes of wit; 8. Your notional hearers, that are of somewhat a higher form and sect than the others: they always come to learn some kind of novelty; 9. Those talkative persons, who only come to hear, that they may furnish themselves with notions for the sake of discourse; 10. The censorious and critical hearers, who come on purpose not as doers of the law, but as judges; 11. Malicious hearers, that come on purpose to seek an advantage against those they come to hear, particularly from what they preach. Thus you see the characters of those who are "hearers only," which are various and manifold.—Howe.

The Glory of Christianity.—We cannot keep ourselves; our lamps are only of a certain little size, and our oil is but a spoonful, and there is no independence in man; we live and move, and have our being in God. No man can go to the fountain once for all and take out water enough to keep his life going evermore. He may take his vessel full of water, and may quench his thirst for the moment, but he must keep the way to the fountain always open; never shut up the road: you are full and you abound for the present, but the time of necessity and of pain will inevitably recur. Here is the glory of Christianity: it provides for all time and for all need; it is the salt of the earth, it is the light of the world, it is the disinfectant of all pestilential atmosphere.—Peop. Bib.

18—20. (18) who, etc., Ex. xv. 11. pardoneth, etc., Ex. xxxiv. 6, 7. (19) subdue our iniquities, sins are personified as enemies as in Gen. iv. 7; Ps. lxxv. 3. cast.. sea, Ps. ciii. 12. "Buried out of sight in eternal oblivion." (20) perform, carry into full effect.^b truth, or sure promise.^c mercy, or gracious promise.^c

Divine Mercy (vs. 18).—I. The greatness of God's mercy as it is manifested in the Gospel. 1. He pardons; 2. He passes over; 3. He retaineth not His anger; 4. He delights. II. The exercise of God's mercy toward penitent believers. 1. He turns again; 2. He will have compassion; 3. He will subdue; 4. He will cast into the sea. III. The confirmation of God's mercy derived from the covenant of grace. 1. The relation between the Abrahamic covenant and the covenant of grace; 2. The harmony of mercy with truth in the covenant of grace.

God's Abundant Pardon.—There are two ways of covering sin, man's way and God's way. You cover your sins and they will have a resurrection some time; let God cover them, and neither devil nor man can find them. There are four expressions in the Bible with regard to where God puts sins. He puts them behind His back. If God has forgiven me, who shall bring a charge against me? He has blotted them out as a thick cloud. You see a cloud to-night, and tomorrow there isn't a cloud to be seen. He casts them into the depths of the sea. Some one has said, "Thank God that it is a sea and not a river; a river might dry up, but the sea cannot." The greatest blessing that ever comes to me this side of heaven, is when God forgives me. Have you been forgiven? The fourth expression is that he removes them "as far as the east is from the west." Do you know how far that is? Perhaps some good mathematician will figure that up. "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." Then make sure that you are forgiven.—D. L. Moody.

Abundant Pardon.—It is His promise not only to pardon ordinary sins, but those also which be as scarlet, and red like crimson. It is His free compassion to cast all our sins into the depths of the sea. Now, the sea, by reason of his vastness, can drown as well mountains as mole-hills: the boundless ocean of God's mercies can swallow up our mightiest sins much more. It is His merciful power to blot out our sins as a cloud. Now, the strength of the summer's sun is able to scatter the thickest fog, as well as the thinnest mist—nay, to drive away the darkest midnight; the irresistible heat of God's free love shining through the Sun of Righteousness upon a penitent soul, to dissolve to nothing the desperate work of darkness and most horrible sin, far more easily. But this mystery of mercy and miracle of God's free love, is a jewel only for truly humbled souls. Let no stranger to the life of godliness meddle with it. Let no swine trample it under his feet.—Bolton.

Verse 20.—The return from captivity, while it furnished a striking specimen of the covenanted fidelity and kindness of Jehovah, was only preliminary to the infinitely greater display of those attributes in the mission of the Messiah, the Seed of Abraham, in whom all the families of the earth were to be blessed. The words of this verse are quoted with scarcely any variation, in the inspired song of Zacharias, with direct application to Him of whom His Son had just been born to be the forerunner, Luke i. 72, 73.—Henderson.

Pardon of Sin.—

Darkness, the world, the flesh, spiritual sin,
With such infectious stains thy soul defile,
No earthly spring can wash thy conscience clean,
The streams of Ganges, or the floods of Nile.
The secret source of what in thee is vile Heaven's grace alone can fitly purge away;
Turn to thy Saviour then, in lowly style,
Ask for forgiveness, all thy sins display,
Cling to the Cross in faith, weep, tremble, praise, and pray.

Forgiveness.—

Why, all the souls that were, were forfeit once;
And He that might the vantage best have took,
Found out the remedy. How would you be,
If He which is the top of judgment, should But judge you as you are? O think on that!
And mercy then will breathe within your life,
Like man new made.—Shakespeare.

"Go to the prisoner in his cell under sentence of death; show him the royal mandate proclaiming his pardon, properly signed and sealed; knock off his galling fetters; open his prison doors and introduce him once more to the forfeited sunshine of heaven. What transports of rapture would thrill through his heart, when, in the consciousness of pardon, he rejoiced in the light of liberty! But how much greater cause of joy has the pardoned sinner, called out of darkness into marvelous light, renovated by the Holy Spirit, and fitted for the joys of heaven!"—W. J. Brock.

Tell me the distance from the east to the west and I will tell you the distance which the pardoned sinner is from sin. It is a casting them into the "depths of the sea." Not on the shore, to be washed back by the incoming waves, but into the "depths." Into the abysses of some mighty Atlantic, where no storms shall stir them up, no trump shall wake them from their graves. "In those days, saith the Lord, the iniquity of Israel shall be sought for, and shall not be found." — Pulpit Com.

Introduction.

I. Author. Nahum, = "the consoler." When he is called the Elkoshite, no doubt the place of his nativity is referred to. Three positions have been suggested for this place: (1) The modern Al-Kush, a town 24 miles north of the site of Nineveh; (2) Jerome claims Eleese, a small village in Galilee, as the birthplace; (3) A third tradition places Elkosh in the south of Judah. "These conflicting traditions leave the prophet's birthplace quite uncertain," though some things in the book itself seem to favor the location in Judah. II. Time. "There are two fixed points between which the date of the prophecy must lie: the capture of No Amon or Thebes by the armies of Assurbanipal, cir. 664—2, and the destruction of Nineveh by the Medes, cir. 608—6. Some event or some combination of powers menacing to Nineveh, falling within these fifty or sixty years, must have given occasion to the oracle, for the catastrophe to No Amon referred to can hardly be any other than its capture by the Assyrians. A date 610—8 for the prophecy, is well within the range of possibility." (Cambridge Bible). III. Style. "The prophet's language is forcible and graphic, and his descriptions condensed and brilliant. He is animated by the intensest hatred of Assyria. In ch. i. there are elements of patriotism in this feeling; in ch. ii. iii., it is purer and simply human. The prophecy is the voice of the human mind expressing its revolt against the spirit and deeds of the brutal foe of the human race, and might almost have come from the heart of any of the oppressed nationalities trodden under the foot of Assyria. It is the blood, the wiles and demonic witchcrafts (iii. 1—4), and the spirit of the wild beast (ii. 11—13) that in the name of mankind the prophet appeals against; and if he adds the traffic and riches and luxury of Nineveh, it is only to complete the picture of the immoral spirit of the people. This universal voice of humanity is no new thing in Hebrew prophecy; it is heard in Am. i., ii.; even more distinctly in a contemporary of Nahum, Hab. i. 12—17, and all down history, as in Is. xiv. 5—8, xlvii. 7—15, and many psalms. And the prophet is assured that the voice of mankind is also the voice of God: 'Behold, I am against thee, saith the Lord of Hosts, and I will cut off thy prey from the earth, and the voice of thine emissaries shall no more be heard' (ii. 13)" (Camb. Bib.)

Synopsis.

(From the Pulpit Commentary.)

PART I —The judgment upon Nineveh decreed by God	i. 1—15
Sec. 1. The heading of the book.....	i. 1
Sec. 2. The Divine justice is described, and the irresistible power of God illustrated by his control of the material world	i. 2—6
Sec. 3. But the wrath of God falls not on those who trust in him; it is reserved for his enemies generally.....	i. 7—11
Sec. 4. And especially for Nineveh, which shall be utterly destroyed, while Zion shall rejoice at the joyful news of its ruin, and keep her feasts in safety	i. 12—15
PART II —The execution of the decree; the destruction of Nineveh.....	ii. 1—13

Sec. 1. Nineveh shall be besieged, because God is about to exalt his people by taking vengeance on the enemy, whose defence is of no avail.....	ii. 1—8
Sec. 2. The city is plundered, and lies waste in terrible contrast with its former excellency	ii. 9—13
PART III —The cause of the judgment—the sins of the city, which bring inevitable punishment	iii. 1—19
Sec. 1. The crimes that have brought this fate upon Nineveh.....	iii. 1—7
Sec. 2. The ruin can be no more averted than was that of No-Amon.....	iii. 8—13
Sec. 3. In spite of all its efforts and all its resources, it will meet with a terrible end	iii. 14—19

CHAPTER THE FIRST.

1-3. (1) burden, R. V. marg., "oracle concerning. Nineveh, see the earlier mission of Jonah to this city." Nahum, meaning consolation. A Prophet not otherwise known. Elkoshite, poss. a village in Judah.^b (2) jealous, Ex. xx. 5. revenge, better, avenge. furios, R. V., "full of wrath."^c reserveth . . enemies, holdeth it till His own appointed times. (3) slow to anger, Ex. xxxiv. 6, 7. way . . feet, comp. Ps. xviii. 7, xcvi. 2. "Large as the clouds are He treads on them, as a man would on the small dust."

God's Forbearance (vs. 3).—It seems as if the Prophet meant, God is slow to anger because He is great in power. This leads us to think of—I. His exquisite sensibility. II. His abhorrence of sin. III. His provocation by the world. IV. His right to do whatever He pleases.—Thomas.

The Prophet Nahum arose probably in Judah, if not about the same time as Zephaniah and Jeremiah, then a few years later. Whether he prophesied before or after the great Reform of 621 we have no means of deciding. His book does not reflect the inner history, character or merits of his generation. His sole interest is the fate of Nineveh. Zephaniah had also doomed the Assyrian capital, yet he was much more concerned with Israel's unworthiness of the opportunity presented to them. The yoke of Asshur, he saw, was to be broken, but the same cloud which was bursting from the north upon Nineveh must overwhelm the incorrigible people of Jehovah. For this Nahum has no thought. His heart, for all its bigness, holds room only for the bitter memories, the baffled hopes, the unappeased hatreds of a hundred years. And that is why we need not be anxious to fix his date upon one or other of the shifting phases of Israel's history during that last quarter of the seventh century. For he represents no single movement of his fickle people's progress, but the passion of the whole epoch then drawing to a close. Nahum's book is one great At Last! And, therefore, while Nahum is a worse prophet than Zephaniah, with less conscience and less insight, he is a greater poet, pouring forth the exultation of a people long enslaved, who see their tyrant ready for destruction. His language is strong and brilliant; his rhythm rumbles and rolls, leaps and flashes, like the horsemen and chariots he describes.—Expos. Bible.—The Burden.—There is a sense in which every prophet must make a burden of his work. If he himself had to do it all it would be nothing but burden. Instead of idealizing the word, making it poetical, bringing up before the eye of the mind some stalwart pilgrim carrying his easy load upon his shoulder, think of it as a man whose heart is sore because of the wickedness of the people, whose sleep is taken away from him because night is turned into a day of wickedness and wrath. Think of a man who has more to say than he can utter, whose tongue cannot keep pace with his heart because his heart is full of the thunder and lightning of judgment, and full of the music and pathos of gospel, and would utter itself incoherently, paradoxically, so that men not versed in this species of eloquence would say, What doth this babbler exclaim? for now he thunders, and now he whispers, and now he storms like a whirlwind, and now he cries like a broken-hearted mother. What would he be at? Yet through all this whirl and tumult and conflict must men come before they can understand what the old prophets had to do in the name and strength of God.—Peop. Bib.

4-6. (4) rebuketh the sea, Ex. xiv. 21; Ps. civ. 7-9. maketh it dry, Ps. xviii. 15. Bashan, etc., the hot wind which withers wooded Bashan and Carmel and Lebanon is the fiery breath of Jehovah. Lebanon, see Is. xxxiii. 9.^a (5) is burned, R. V., "is upheaved;" lifts itself up, as with earthquake. (6) poured . . fire, as in a volcanic eruption. rocks . . down,^b or burst asunder. Referring to the great convulsions of nature.

The Anger and the Goodness (vss. 6, 7).—I. Jehovah's anger.—I. Righteous; 2. Terrible; 3. Real; 4. Inexorable. II. Jehovah's goodness.—I. Sincere; 2. Powerful; 3. Watchful; 4. Unchanging. Improvement:

^a Dr. Prideaux places the taking of Nineveh in the twentieth year of king Josiah.

^b "According to St. Jerome, Elkosh was a village in Galilee, and his tomb was shown at Bethogabra near Emmaus. But as his prophecies were written after the captivity of the ten tribes, the tradition which points to his death in an Assyrian village may have some probability. Lazard visited a village called Alkosh, which contains a so-called tomb of Nahum."—Bib. Things.

^c "One who, if He pleases, can most readily give effect to His fury."—Grotius.

"There never was a saint yet that grew proud of his fine feathers, but what the Lord plucked them out by and by; there never yet was an angel that had pride in his heart, but he lost his wings, and fell into Gehenna, as Satan and those fallen angels did; and there shall never be a saint who indulges self-conceit and pride and self-confidence, but the Lord will spoil his glories, and trample his honors in the mire."—Spurgeon.

^a "There is nothing in the world so blooming that God cannot change it when He is wroth."—Fausset.

^b "As Hannibal burst asunder the Alpine rocks by fire to make a passage for his army."—Grotius.

"The developments of pride are numerous and often unsuspected as to their real character. The love of dress and display; the undue deference to the opinions of others, which leads us to adopt forms of speech and modes of action foreign to our usages; the man-fearing spirit which imposes silence in reference to our religion in social circles, and particularly the sentiment which ignores all physical manifestations in connection with religious experience—these are all the offshoots of the one great principle—pride of heart." — S. H. Platt.

Vers. 3 & 4. This passage is so sublime, says one, that it would be difficult to find its equal. May the reader's heart adore the God before whom the unconscious earth and sky act as if they recognized their Maker, and were moved with a tremor of reverence. "Vain are the attempts of men to conceal anything from Him whose word unbars the deep, and lifts the doors of earth from their hinges! Vain are all hopes of resistance, for a whisper of his voice makes the whole earth quail in abject terror." — Spurgeon.

"What if a body might have all the pleasures in the world for asking? Who would so unman himself, as by accepting them, to desert his soul, and become a perpetual slave to his senses? — Seneca.

—(1) In the great day of His wrath who shall be able to stand? (2) He is long suffering to usward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance.—H. Bonar.

God—a God of Nature.—History is the root out of which God grows flowers and wheat, great trees and flowerets that little children may gather with their tiny hands. We protest against the division of the God of nature and the God of grace, the God of nature and the God of revelation, as if only atheists or agnostics had to do with the God of nature, whilst Christians were worshiping some totally distinct being. Christians claim both. Nature and revelation are God in two volumes. Is he a wise reader who, having been entranced in the first volume of the drama, simply declines to read the second? What shall we say of his entrancement when he flushes with the purple of wonder, and expands under the enthusiasm of delighted gratitude, because he has read the first volume, but says he will have nothing to do with the volume that succeeds it? Such indifference to the succeeding volume throws suspicion upon the reality of his admiration when he offers that mockery to volume one. In Nahum you find the God of the book and the God of nature, the God of moral attributes and the God of majestic revelation, in the forms, the palpitations, and the changing colors of this dissolving scene.—Peop. Bib.

A Dearth of Good Men.—The prophet, speaking in the name of the godly remnant of the land, laments their terrible isolation. We are thus reminded of the sad condition of a land in which there is a dearth of good men. For: 1. They are the choice fruit of the land—wholesome, fragrant, delicious. The ideal Israel is compared to "grapes" and "the first ripe in the fig tree" (Hos. ix. 10). The Lord "taketh pleasure" in such; they satisfy the hunger of the Divine heart for godliness in the creature (Ps. cxlvii. 11; cxlix. 4; Prov. xi. 20). So far as they share the spirit of Christ, they are, like Him, "beloved of God," and should be attractive to men. 2. They are the salt of the earth—the one element that preserves from universal corruption.—Pulp. Com.—The Fall of Nineveh.—When Nahum prophesied, Assyria was at the height of its prosperity. No enemy in its neighborhood was left unsubdued; the distant Egypt had submitted to its arms; Phœnicia and Cyprus owned its sway; Judæa paid annual tribute; commercial enterprise had drawn unto it the riches of all nations. No one at this epoch could have foreseen the speedy end of this prosperity. Nahum needed a single-hearted courage and a full persuasion of the truth of his mission to denounce the crimes of this flourishing kingdom, and to proclaim its coming downfall. In fifty years the end came. A combination of enemies overthrew this mighty empire. On the death of Assurbanipal matters began to assume a dangerous attitude. Egypt rose against its former conqueror; Babylon revolted, the Medes, now become a powerful monarchy, prepared to attack Nineveh. The reigning monarch (whose name is uncertain), the successor of Assurbanipal, himself marched against the latter, sending Nabopolassar to recover Babylon. The Medes were defeated, and for a time driven back. Nabopolassar also was successful, and received as a reward for his services the title of King of Babylon. Here he managed affairs so skilfully, and strengthened himself so effectually, that, after fifteen years, he found himself able to throw off the Assyrian yoke, and to establish his own independence. The Medes, meantime, under Cyaxares, had recovered from their late defeat, and were only deterred from attacking Nineveh by an inroad of the Scythians into their own country. In order to strengthen his position, Nabopolassar made alliance with all the enemies of Assyria, and became the ruling spirit of a strong confederacy, which comprised Medes and Persians, Egyptians, Armenians, and other nations, all animated with the fierce desire of revenging themselves on Assyria. Josiah of Judah, as a tributary prince, was drawn into the contest, and fell at Megiddo, while endeavoring to arrest the advance of the Egyptian army. About B. C. 612 the allied forces attacked Nineveh, but were repulsed with loss. Victory for some time hovered over the Assyrians; but the enemy, reinforced from Bactria, proved irresistible. The Ninevites, fearing for their final safety, attempted to escape from the city. They were, however, overtaken, and again shut up within their walls. Here they valiantly defended themselves for more than two years, when a circumstance, against which no remedy availed, laid them at the mercy of the besiegers. An unusually heavy and long-continued flood of the river Tigris carried away a large section of the huge rampart that surrounded the city. Through the gap thus formed the enemy forced their way within the walls and captured the place. The king, rather than fall into the hands of his implacable foes, gathered his wives and his treasure into the palace, and burned himself with them there; the town was sacked, and a great number of the inhabitants were massacred.—Pulpit Com.

7—10. (7) good, in the sense of being gracious and long-suffering. stronghold, Pr. xviii. 10. knoweth, so as to care for.^a (8) flood, the frequent fig. for Divine judgments. the place thereof, or "her place," i. e. Nineveh's.^b (9) affliction, or the stroke. It should be so complete as to need no renewal. Once should suffice. (10) folden . . thorns, wh. tangled together may seem to make an impregnable hedge. while they be drunken, etc., R. V., "and be drenched as it were in their drink." devooured, by fire.^c

The Vengeance of the Lord.—The Proem to the Book of Nahum is thoroughly Oriental in its sense of God's method and resources of destruction; very Jewish and very natural to that age of Jewish history, in the bursting of its long-pent hopes of revenge. We of the West might express these hopes differently. We should not attribute so much personal passion to the Avenger. With our keener sense of law, we should emphasize the slowness of the process, and select for its illustration the forces of decay rather than those of sudden ruin. But we must remember the crashing times in which the Jews lived. The world was breaking up. The elements were loose, and all that God's own people could hope for was the bursting of their yoke, with a little shelter in the day of trouble. The elements were loose, but amidst the blind crash the people little knew that Jehovah knew them.—Expos. B.—Man Powerless before God.—When God shakes men as dust from under the summer thrashing-floor, the right hand of a man's strength is as powerless as the left hand of a man's weakness, and his wisdom is as folly. What avails the wisdom of the apple to make it cling to the bough when it is ripe in autumn time? or the wisdom of the leaf to hold it fast to the stem when the tempest calls? or the wisdom of the tree to make it stand secure when a rock from the cliff comes crashing down through its puny branches? When God sends storms upon men, they must imitate the humble grass, which saves itself by lying down. Therefore it is said, "Humble yourselves before the mighty hand of God, that in due season he may raise you up."—H. W. Beecher.—Dasher in Pieces.—Demetrius was surnamed Poliorcestes, the destroyer of cities; Attila called himself Orbis flagellum, the scourge of the world. Julius Cæsar was Fulmen belli, the thunderbolt of war; he had taken in his time a thousand towns, conquered three hundred nations, took prisoners one million of men, and slain as many. These were dissipators indeed, and dashers in pieces, rods of God's wrath; and this they took to be a main piece of their glory.—Trapp.—The Lord a Stronghold.—From whence does this trouble arise? From danger? He is our strength for protection. "The Lord is the strength of my life, of whom shall I be afraid?" "We are more than conquerors." From duty? He is the strength to assist. If oppressed with a sense of our inability, "our sufficiency is of God." From affliction? He is our strength to support and deliver. If he does not release, he sustains and comforts. "My grace is sufficient for thee." Whatever the nature and degree of affliction, in God we find a "very present help in the day of trouble."—Jay.

11—15. (11) one . . thee, Sennacherib out of Nineveh.^a wicked counsellor, Heb. "a counsellor of Belial." (12) quiet, etc., R. V., "Though they be in full strength and likewise many, even so shall they be cut down and he shall pass away." The Assyrian army shall be destroyed and Sennacherib shall flee. cut down, Is. xvii. 12—14. no more, by the hand of the Assyrian. (13) break . . sunder, comp. Is. x. 27. (14) concerning thee, the address seems to be to the Assyrian people; they shall become extinct. (15) mountains, etc., comp. Is. lli. 7. Here the language expresses the general rejoicing, and sense of safety, after the overthrow "Though sages may pour out their wisdom's treasure, there is no sterner moralist than pleasure."—Byron.

^a Ps. i. 6; 2 Ti. ii. 19.

^b "The populous imperial city should become a perpetual desolation, according to the vivid prediction of another prophet, Zeph. ii. 13, 14, 15."—Spk. Com.

^c "These thorns, esp. the kind called bellan, wh. covers the whole country, and is that wh. is thus burned, to clear the ground, are so folden together as to be utterly inseparable, and being united by thousands of small intertwining branches, when the torch is applied they flash and flame instantly like stubble full dry."—Thomson.

Vs. 7. J. Milner, ii. 47; E. Cooper, v. 50.

"He who begins by halving his heart between God and mammon will end by being whole-hearted for the world and faint-hearted for Christ."—A. J. Gordon.

^a Is. xxxvi. 14—20.

"The roses of pleasure seldom last long enough to adorn the brow of him who plucks them, and they are the only roses which do not retain their sweetness after they have lost their beauty."—Blair.

"It was related of an atheist who was dying that he appeared very uncomfortable, unhappy and frightened. Another atheist who stood at his bedside said to him, 'Don't be afraid. Hold on, man; hold on to the last.' The dying man said, 'That is what I want to do, but tell me what to hold on to.'"—D. L. Moody.

* Lit. "The hammer is come up against thee. See Je. i. 23.

b Reference is to the evils inflicted on Sennacherib's first invasion of Palestine.

"Pleasure must first have the warrant that it is without sin; and then the measure that it is without excess."—Adams.

"Thou mayest choose whether thou wilt be remembered to thy praise or to thy shame."—Bishop Pilkington.

"He left a name, at which the world grew pale, to point a moral, or adorn a tale."—Samuel Johnson.

"Pleasure soon exhausts us and itself also; but endeavor never does."—Richter.

* "The ancients dyed their bull's hide shields red, partly to strike terror into the enemy, chiefly lest the blood from wounds wh. they might receive should be perceived and give confidence to him."—Calvin.

of Sennacherib's army. keep .. feasts, this they could not do while the enemy was in the land.

The Song of Peace is a strange one to be heard amid the wars and contentions of earth, and the discordant tumults of the human heart, restless as the sea. Yet Jesus has brought peace to the earth,—peace between man and God, resulting in peace between man and man, and the soul's peace with itself and with its surroundings, and with the law of God,—peace such as the world cannot give and the world cannot take away. This peace is the fruit of the gospel in each soul that receives it, and the ultimate result of the gospel in all the world. And even now the rays of this peace are illuminating the mountain-tops of human experience.—Peloubet's Notes.—Peace, newly granted by the grace of God, was to be celebrated by a new consecration of the people. This has special reference to the king of Nineveh and Assyria, and the promise must have been very precious to contemporaries oppressed by Assyria. But to us the fundamental truth is far more important, that to the people of God a perfect deliverance is near at hand, and has already appeared in Christ, by which the Belial, from whom every wicked spirit proceeds, is forever cast out.—Lange.

"Come, and begin Thy reign
Of everlasting peace;
Come, take the kingdom to Thyself, Great King of Righteousness."—Bonar.

CHAPTER THE SECOND.

1, 2. (1) dasheth in pieces, or the scatterer; a poetical name for the besieger, who should destroy the kingdom of Assyria, whose capital was Nineveh.^a keep, etc., do all you can, in your self-confidence: you will need it all, and yet all will be in vain. The advice is ironical. (2) turned away, R. V., "bringeth again." The destruction of Nineveh is deliverance and prosperity to Jacob, i. e. Judah. emptiers, or Assyrian spoilers. vine branches, Ps. lxxx. 8-16.^b

Example of the Watchcare of God.—David Zeisberger was traveling with several Christian Indians. They went to sleep, one night, in a room where several barrels of gunpowder were stored, grains of which were scattered about the floor. The host urged them not to take a candle in the room, but yielded, on a promise of the utmost caution. The missionaries went to sleep. A traveler who had the candle in special charge forgot to extinguish it. In the morning Zeisberger called out one of his brethren, and said, "Had we not had the eye of Him upon us who never slumbereth or sleepeth, we should all have been this night precipitated into eternity. I slept soundly, being extremely fatigued, and was in my first sleep, when I felt as if some one roused me. I sat up, and saw the wick of the candle hanging down on one side, in a flame, and on the point of falling into the straw, which I was just in time to prevent. I could not fall asleep again, but lay awake silently thanking the Lord for the extraordinary preservation we had experienced."

Cause of the War.—The Assyrians had oppressed God's people. They had abused their power in the chastisement of Israel, plundered the people, and outrageously destroyed their vines. Now the emptiers must be emptied, and those who chastised others must be chastised themselves. "Power abused brings a curse upon its possessors. Power gives temptation, which in turn sets aside honor, social duty, law, and right; creates abuse; and abuse, strife, confusion, retribution, bloodshed, sin."—Bailey.

3-5. (3) description of the hostile army "in the day of its preparation, i. e. before engaging the Ninevites. The pronoun, "his" mighty men, refers to the destroyer of Nineveh mentioned in vs. 1. From vs. 3 to vs. 7 all the tenses should be in the present, as R. V. made red, in the Nineveh monuments, the shields and dresses of the warriors are generally painted red." in scarlet, the Oriental military cloak. flaming torches, R. V., "the chariots flash with steel." fir trees, or spears made of fir wood. (4) rage, or are driven furiously. streets, this might be translated "fields," as in Job v. 10. (5) He shall recount his worthies, Camb. B., "He bethinketh himself of his worthies (or valiant men)." This 5th vs. seems to describe the defensive action of the Ninevites. they . . well, the Ninevites, hurrying to the wall, see the towers for the rams, and other preparations for the siege.^b

The siege was no easy task. History declares that the king, at the approach of the enemy, collected all his active forces—that the besieging army was three times severely defeated, and that the Medes could only be held with great difficulty to the work. The Assyrians abandoned themselves to negligent rejoicing in the camps before the gates on account of victory, but were attacked in the night and driven back to the walls. Salamenes, brother-in-law to the king, who had resigned the command to him, was driven into the Tigris (cf. ch. iii. 3); but the city was still uninjured, and the enemy encamped in vain before the gates. In the spring of the third year other powers interfered. The river became "an enemy to the city" (cf. ii. 7; i. 8—10). The inundation occurred suddenly, and violently broke down in one night the walls on the river. The king despaired of his life, and having sent his family to the north, shut himself up with all his treasures, and burned himself in the royal citadel. Immense booty was carried away. The city was plundered, sacked, and set on fire.—Lange, Introd. to Nahum.

6, 7. (6) rivers the streams and canals fed by the Tigris. As these led into the city, their seizure was of the utmost advantage to the enemy. The "gates of the rivers" are probably not city gates situated on the rivers, but rather the points in the wall where the rivers or canals enter the city.—Camb. B. dissolved, with fear and terror. (7) Huzzab, etc., Expos. B., "Huzzab is stripped, is brought forth, with her maids sobbing like doves, beating their breasts." Huzzab prob. refers to the queen. Isa. xlvii. 2, 3. maids . . doves, or "with dove-like plaints."^a tabering, beating on their breasts, as sign of distress and grief.

The city of Nineveh lay on the left or E. side of the Tigris. The city proper was of the form of an irregular parallelogram, stretching from N. W. to S. E., the broader end being on the N. This city proper was enclosed by walls protected by moats. It was only at the N. W. point that the city touched the Tigris, from which it gradually retreated to the S. E., leaving between it and the river a considerable space of territory, though an arm of the river again approached the city at the S. W. corner of the parallelogram. Billerbeck computes the length of the north wall at 2,000 metres (6,561 feet), that of the south wall at 800 m., and the length of the east wall N. to S. at 5,000 m., and conjectures that there was room in the city for 300,000 inhabitants. Through the city ran a mountain stream, the Choser, cutting the city into two parts and falling into the Tigris, and from this stream and other streams and canals from the hills on the N. E. was drawn the water that filled the moats as well as the water supply of the city, the Tigris being unsuited for drinking. Besides the walls of the city proper with their moats there were extensive outer defenses. A wall ran along the east bank of the Tigris, and an immense rampart protected the city on the east side, between which and the city walls rose various kinds of fortifications. These outer walls were also protected by moats. The moats did not wash the walls, but were trenches at some distance from them, and the walls could only be approached by drying the moats or throwing dams across them. The "gates of the rivers" are not city gates situated on the rivers, but rather the points in the wall where the rivers or canals enter the city. Such "gates" would be structures provided with sluices regulating the supply of water, and if these were opened the walls would be undermined or the city inundated.—Camb. Bib.

8—10. (8) like a pool, or as a city well watered. The river and streams formed a part of her defence and confidence. Or, the city may be compared to a pool on account of the multitude of her inhabitants.^a flee away, their numbers not availing to preserve them. stand, the unheeded voice of those who would rally the fugitives. (9) take ye, addressed to the victors. glory out of, etc., R. V., "glory of all pleasant furniture." pleasant furniture, costly and luxurious things.^b (10) heart, ^b Some apply this vs. to the anxious efforts made by the defenders of the city.

"If thou art rich, thou art poor; for like an ass whose back with ingots bows, thou bearest thy heavy riches but a journey, and death unloads thee." — Shakespeare.

^a Is. xxxviii. 14, lix. 11.

"In the depraved nature of man, pride is the radical reigning sin that first lives and last dies. . . A man may visibly dispense the pomp and vanities of the world, and this may raise his esteem in the minds of real saints; and the outward practice of goodness will be productive of the praise of goodness in others; this will afford a strong temptation of pride. All the operations of virtues, even the exercise of humility, that are the matter and argument of praise, may be incentives of pride; and those diseases are extremely dangerous which are nourished by that food that is necessary to support life."—Dr. Bates.

"Conquerors proud, to seal her doom, swept her to ruin's all-engulfing tomb. Long ages past, and turf o'er-grew the walls, and silence reigned in Ninus' buried halls."

^a Re. xvii. 1, 15.

^b "The enemy may easily plunder the city of all its riches and costly furniture, for there is none to make any resistance." —Lowth.

The Roman soldiers at the sacking of Jerusalem entered the temple, and went into the sanctum sanctorum; but seeing no images there, as they used to have in their own idolatrous temples, gave out, in a jeer, that the Jews worshiped the clouds. So the worldling can see no pleasure in religion.

etc., Is. xiii. 7, 8. gather blackness, R. V., "are waxed pale." Joel ii. 6 R. V.

The Destruction of Nineveh.—The Medes and Persians were conquering Assyria (B. C. 625), and within twenty years Nineveh, its capital, was destroyed. It was slowly "bleeding to death in consequence of its many wars." Zephaniah's prophecy was fulfilled. Nineveh shall become so complete a desolation that "pelicans and hedge-hogs shall bivouac upon her chapiters, the owl shall hoot in her windows, and the crow croak upon the threshold. Crushed! desolate! and all that pass by shall hiss and wag their heads" (Zeph. ii. 12—15). She was so "swept with the besom of destruction that she vanished suddenly, like a dream when one awaketh; and those who passed over its ruins, like Xenophon and his ten thousand in B. C. 401, knew not what they were (Anab. iii., iv. 7)." Her very name had become forgotten in two centuries.—Farrar. —And Napoleon encamped near its site and was not aware of it. It was not "till 1842 that the relics of her former splendor began to be revealed to the world," and confirm the mighty kingdom of God which twenty-five centuries before she had tried to destroy.—Peloubet's Notes.

11—13. (11) where, etc., the exclamation of surprise at the desolation of this famous city. lions, here used as emblems of majesty and strength. (12) lion .. ravin, fig. description of the way in wh. Nineveh had plundered the nations she subdued. (13) against thee, to bring upon thee the overwhelming judgments wh. their iniquity had so long called down. messengers, perhaps with allusion to such mockers as Rabshakeh.

Desolation of Nineveh.—"Where is the dwelling of the lions," etc. Great must be the desolation to call forth such an expression. Where indeed is the proud city? Its place was unknown for ages, and is only just discovered by the ruins which have been dug up. It was secure, the dwelling of the lions; spacious walked; and wealthy, the feeding-place of the young lions; but its battlements were destroyed and its glory departed. The dust of Nineveh is a witness for the truth of God, and a warning to the nations of the earth. "Assyria lies buried there with all its people; round about are their graves, all of them are slain and fallen by the sword; they have made their graves deep there below." —Hom. Com.

a "Nineveh not only practiced cruelties, but handed the record of them down to posterity by representing them in all their horrors on the palace walls."—Rawlinson.

Jno. iii. 8.

b "Horsemen are seen in the most ancient sculptures of Nimrod. Disciplined bodies of cavalry were represented in the bas-reliefs of Konyunjik. The horsemen were armed with swords and bows, or with swords and long spears; they wore short tunics, and their legs and feet were bare. When riding without pads or saddles they sat with their knees almost on a level with the horse's back."—Layard.

c 2 Kl. ix. 22.

"Great cities are often called harlots upon the account of those vices wh. prevail in them, and infect others by their example." —Lowth.

CHAPTER THE THIRD.

1—6. (1) bloody city, comp. 2 Sa. xvi. 7, xxi. 1. In the great Eastern cities life was little valued, and crimes of violence abounded.^a prey departeth not, she ceases not to plunder. (2) noise .. chariots, this is what the Prophet sees in his vision. The figures describe the vigor of the enemies' attack. (3) horseman, or horse-soldier.^b (4) because, etc.,^c Nineveh was treacherous in dealing with other nations, and skilful in seducing them into idolatry. (5) against thee, ch. ii. 13. discover, etc., Is. xlvii. 2, 3; Je. xiii. 22, 26. (6) cast, etc., as on one put up to public dishonor. "Nineveh shall be like a vile woman, exposed to the insults and ill treatment of the rabble."

Geo. Adam Smith gives a spirited, though somewhat free, translation of the first vss. of chap. 3:—

Woe to the City of Blood,
All of her guile, robbery-full, ceaseless rapine!

Hark the whip,
And the rumbling of wheels!
Horses at the gallop,
And the rattling dance of the chariot!
Cavalry at the charge,
Flash of sabres, and lightning of lances!

The Besieger Besieged.—It is siege, irresistible and full of cruelty, which Assyria records as her own glory. Miles of sculpture are covered with masses of troops marching upon some Syrian or Median fortress.

Scaling ladders and enormous engines are pushed forward to the walls under cover of a shower of arrows. There are assaults and breaches, panic-stricken and suppliant defenders. Streets and places are strewn with corpses, men are impaled, women led away weeping, children dashed against the stones. The Jews had seen, had felt these horrors for a hundred years, and it is out of their experience of them that Nahum weaves his exultant predictions. The Besieger of the world is at last besieged; every cruelty he has inflicted upon men is now to be turned upon himself. Again and again does Nahum return to the vivid details, —he hears the very whips crack beneath the walls, and the rattle of the leaping chariots; the end is slaughter, dispersion and a dead waste.—Exp. Bib.

7—12. (7) flee, in fear and loathing. bemoan, express sorrow for thy richly deserved calamities. (8) No, marg. No Amon, or Thebes in Upper Egypt.* rivers, i. e. arms, or canals, of the Nile. sea, usual term for considerable bodies of water. (9) Ethiopia, Heb. Cush. poss. at the time master of Upper Egypt. strength, as allies. Put . . Lubim, Ge. x. 6, 13. Put or Punt was a part of the coast of Egypt opposite Arabia. Lubim or the Lybians dwelt west of the Canopic mouth of the Nile. helpers, or auxiliaries. (10) yet, nevertheless; in spite of all the help she had. young, etc., comp. 2 Ki. viii. 12; Is. xiii. 16. cast lots, as if they were mere slaves. (11) drunken,—a fig. for the stupefaction caused by calamity. be hid, Camb. B., “shalt faint.” strength, Camb. B., “a place of refuge.” Je. xxv. 17. (12) first ripe figs, Is. xxviii. 4. Figs readily drop off when ripe.

Pride and progress can never go together. Pride and education are sworn enemies. Self-trust and reality of character can never cohere. We live our greatest life in our humility, in our reverence, in our aspiration. Why fight against this God? If the cities have outwitted him, where are they? You should be able to find them. Where is old Babylon? Where the mocking, mighty, pompous, overbearing Rome? Where are those cities that have threatened God and lived? You ought to be able to find them if they have been victorious. Now we are called upon to acquaint ourselves, and be at peace with him; we are called into harmony, and the way by which this harmony is attained is one way and only one, and unchangeable and complete, and that is the way we call the Gospel of Christ, the doctrine of the Cross, the doctrine of atonement, the doctrine of something being done for man that man could never do for himself, and which he lays hold of by the energy called faith.—Peop. Bib.

Thebes, the No of Prophecy.—The identity of No, mention of which occurs several times in the Prophets, with Thebes, is now scarcely disputed. This city was the most ancient capital, and renowned city of Egypt. It was also the chief seat of the worship of Jupiter Ammon, one of the gods of the Egyptians. It could furnish 20,000 armed chariots for warfare, and when captured by the Persians under Cambyses (B. C. 525), the spoil, in gold and silver talents, which fell into the hands of the conquerors, amounted to nearly two million pounds sterling. The ancient city was twenty-three miles in circumference. The valley of the Nile was not large enough to contain it, and its extremities rested upon the bases of the mountains of Arabia and Africa. The whole of this great extent is more or less strewn with ruins, broken columns, and avenues of sphinxes, colossal figures, obelisks, pyramidal gateways, porticoes, blocks of polished granite, and stones of extraordinary magnitude, while above them, “in all the nakedness of desolation,” the colossal skeletons of giant temples are standing “in the unwatered sands, in solitude and silence. They are neither grey, nor blackened; there is no lichen, no moss, no rank grass or mantling ivy, to robe them, and conceal their deformities. Like the bones of man, they seem to whiten under the sun of the desert.” The sand of Africa has been their most fearful enemy; blown upon them for more than three thousand years, it has buried the largest monuments, and, in some instances, almost entire temples. On the Arabian side of the Nile are the great temples of Luxor and Carnac. The temple of Luxor stands near the bank of the river, built there, as is supposed, for the convenience of the Egyptian boatmen. Before the magnificent gateway of this temple, until within a few years,

* “The deity Ammon appears to have been first worshipped by the Ethiopians, or Libyans, and afterwards by the Egyptians, who called him Amun. Herodotus tells us that there was an oracle sacred to Ammon at Meroe, and also at Thebes, the capital of upper Egypt.” — Bib. Things.

vs. 7. J. Randall, 71.

“As the angel stood in the path of Balaam while going on in his stubborn determination to disobey, so God puts warnings, and entreaties, and mercies, and the love of Christ, and trials and punishments, in the path of the sinner, as his good angels to withstand his downward course and to cry out to him, ‘Go back, go back.’”

“Pride and choler are like the fox offering to go out when his belly was full, which enlarging him bigger than the passage, made him stay, and be taken with shame. They that would come to preferment by pride are like those who would ascend stairs on horseback.”

“Remember what thou wert before thy birth—nothing; what thou wert for many years after—weakness; what in all thy life—a great sinner; what in all thy excellences—a mere debtor to God, to thy parents, to the earth, to all the creatures. Upon these or the like meditations, if we dwell, and frequently retire to them, we shall see nothing more reasonable than to be humble, and nothing more foolish than to be proud."—Bp. Taylor.

"Love not this world, because if you love, it you cannot love Him. Love not this world, because if you love it you love something that by and by will be ashes, and, while you thought you were grasping the honors of the world that now is and is to come, you will find you have grasped only the hot, dusty ashes of the world that is to come." — Robert E. Speer.

a Is. xix. 16; Je. l. 37, li. 30.

b "Nineveh's doom is fixed, yet is she bidden ironically to make every preparation for a long siege." — Spk. Com.

"No wise man ever lost anything by cession; but he receives the hostility of violent persons into his embraces, like a stone into a lap of wool, it rests and sits down softly and innocently; but a stone falling upon a stone makes a collision, and extracts fire, and finds no rest; and just so are two proud persons, despised by each other, condemned by all, living in perpetual dissonances, always fighting against affronts, jealous of every person, disturbed by every accident, a perpetual storm within, and daily hissing from within."—Taylor.

stood two lofty obelisks, each a single block of red granite more than eighty feet high, covered with sculptures and hieroglyphics, fresh as if but yesterday from the hands of the sculptor. But great and magnificent as was the temple of Luxor, it served but as a portal to the greater Carnac. Standing nearly two miles from Luxor, the whole road to it was lined with rows of sphinxes, each of a solid block of granite. At this end they are broken, and, for the most part, buried under the sand and heaps of rubbish. But approaching Carnac they stand entire, still and solemn as when the ancient Egyptian passed between them to worship in the great temple of Ammon. Four grand propylons terminate this avenue of sphinxes, and, passing through the last, the scene which presents itself defies description. The field of ruins is about a mile in diameter; the temple itself 1,200 feet long and 420 broad. It has twelve principal entrances, each of which is approached through rows of sphinxes, as across the plain from Luxor, and each is composed of propylons, gateways, and other buildings, in themselves larger than most other temples; the sides of some of them are equal to the bases of most of the pyramids, and on each side of many are colossal statues, some sitting, others erect, from twenty to thirty feet in height.

No-Ammon fell; the sacred name of the capital of Upper Egypt was rubbed out as the merest speck upon the page of Time. We know the city referred to by the more modern name of Thebes—a city of a hundred gates and twenty thousand chariots—and the Pharaohs of this great capital warred and conquered riotously from the Soudan to Mesopotamia; trampling down everything, and showing their pride and pomp and power in all manner of ridiculousness of ostentation and wickedness and infamy of royal display. But God blotted out the city.—Peop. Bib. —Thebes was renowned for its numerous gates and vast extent. Its remaining ruins describe a circuit of twenty-seven miles [Henderson]. There is no definite historical account of its capture by Assyrians. But from brief notices in Scripture, we have hints of a struggle for supremacy between Assyria and Egypt (cf. 2 Kings xvii. 4). See Smith's Dict. of the Bible, article Thebes; and Keil on vss. 8—10.

"A couple of men, in a crazy craft, being caught in a squall, betook themselves, one to praying, and the other to poling toward the shore. Soon the latter touched bottom, and turning to his devout comrade, said: 'What's the use of praying when you can touch the bottom with the pole?' So say multitudes by their conduct, who would not, for the world, say anything so ludicrous by word. The only difference is, that they are not half so truthful in expressing themselves as bold unbelievers are, but their piety is of no higher type."—Old Test. Anec.

13—15. (13) women, i. e. as women for helplessness.^a gates, or passes by wh. access is gained into thy country. (14) draw, etc., i. e. make every possible provision for the siege, but all shall not avail.^b go into clay, etc., i. e. prepare bricks to strengthen the walls. brickkiln, both baked and sun-dried bricks seem to have been used. (15) fire, the remains of Nineveh show that the city was destroyed by fire. canker-worm, Joel i. 4.

Human Efforts as Directed Against the Divine Purpose.—We have furnished us in these verses an illustration of human effort as directed against the accomplishment of the purpose of God. Sometimes this course is taken by men unconsciously, but it was scarcely so in this instance. We know that the Assyrian power in the time of Sennacherib boldly defied the God of heaven, and it seems with the lapse of time to have gone from bad to worse. It was the Divine will that at length the arm of Assyria should be broken, and that its haughty and oppressive rule should cease; and the prophet here set forth how that, in the day of trial, human strength should do its best in order to avert the destruction divinely intended to be wrought. Some regard vs. 14 as simply indicating the fact that the Assyrian power would maintain a prolonged defence; whilst others view the prophet as speaking ironically, and as mocking the vain endeavours of the defenders of Nineveh, just as Isaiah ridiculed the makers of idols (xliv. 9—20).—Pulpit Com.

16, 17. (16) spoileth, marg. spreadeth himself. (17) crowned, "the high officers of state were adorned with diadems, closely resembling the lower band of the royal mitre, separated from the cap itself."—Spk. Com. camp . . day, settling in clusters on walls of loose stone or earth." Locusts become torpid in cold weather; under the warmth of the sun they revive and take flight. So the captains and princes of Nineveh are paralyzed and useless in the day of calamity.

Nineveh's Desolation.—Nahum's prophecy of the future destruction of Nineveh was fulfilled by the Medes and Babylonians (cf. ch. ii. 1); and according to his prediction, the vast power of Nineveh completely vanished, and its glory was utterly eclipsed, so that in the year B. C. 401, Xenophon passed by the site without learning its name (Xen. Anab. iii. 4—7). Four hundred years afterwards a small fortress was standing on the site, to guard the passage of the river Tigris (Tacitus, Ann. xii. 13), and opposite to it, on the west bank of the Tigris, has arisen the city of Mosul. In the year 1776, Niebuhr visited the spot, and supposed that what were the heaps of ruins of Nineveh, were natural undulations in the soil (See Rawlinson, i. 326). In more modern times it has been explored by Botta, the French Consul (in 1842), and more recently by Layard and others, who have brought to light those gigantic remains of palaces, statues, and other monuments which testify to the ancient grandeur of Nineveh, and those annalistic inscriptions which confirm the veracity of the prophecies of Nahum and of Isaiah, and of the historical narrative of Holy Scripture: and bear witness to the Divine foreknowledge of the Holy Ghost who speaks in it; to whom with the Father and the Son, Three Persons and one God, be honor and glory now and for evermore. Amen.—Wordsworth.

18, 19. (18) shepherds, or chief rulers. slumber, in death. nobles, marg. valiant ones. (19) bruise, better, breaking. bruit, sound, report." clap . . hands, in exulting triumph and joy. wickedness passed, Assyria has been the foe and scourge of the human race.

The Danger of Foreign Population.—The swift decay of these ancient empires from the climax of their commercial glory is often employed as a warning to ourselves. But the parallel, as the previous paragraphs suggest, is very far from exact. If we can lay aside for the moment the greatest difference of all, in religion and morals, there remain others almost of cardinal importance. Assyria and Babylonia were not filled, like Great Britain, with reproductive races, able to colonize distant lands, and carry everywhere the spirit which had made them strong at home. Still more, they did not continue at home to be homogeneous. Their native forces were exhausted by long and unceasing wars. Their populations, especially in their capitals, were very largely alien and distraught, with nothing to hold them together save their commercial interests. They were bound to break up at the first disaster. It is true that we are not without some risks of their peril. No patriot among us can observe without misgiving the large and growing proportion of foreigners in that department of our life from which the strength of our defence is largely drawn—our merchant navy. But such a fact is very far from bringing our empire and its chief cities into the fatal condition of Nineveh and Babylon. Our capitals, our commerce, our life as a whole are still British to the core. If we only be true to our ideals of righteousness and religion, if our patriotism continue moral and sincere, we shall have the power to absorb the foreign elements that throng to us in commerce, and stamp them with our own spirit.—Exp. Bib.—Hopelessness.—"There is no healing of thy bruise; thy wound is grievous." Nothing can be more distressing than the consciousness of powerlessness in the presence of the deepest human need; to witness from the seashore the wreck, and to be utterly unable to save the shipwrecked mariners; to be sure that some one is in the burning edifice, and yet for it to be impossible to reach him and to bring him out; to stand before an audience alarmed by some needless cry, and to see the rush towards the doors, and to be unequal to checking it; or even to be by the bedside of one in life's youth or manhood's prime, and to hear that disease has, humanly speaking, prematurely seized its victim, and that medical help cannot cure, but only, and that for a time, alleviate. This position is occupied by many an earnest-hearted worker for God and the good of souls, in relation to the moral salvation of men. Nahum sustained it in reference to the Ninevites. He saw in them a people wrecked through b "In the evenings, as soon as the air became cool, at Abelh, they literally camped in the hedges and loose stone walls, covering them over like a swarm of bees settled on a bush. There they remained until the next day's sun waxed warm, when they again commenced their march." —Thomson.

a Fr. bruit. Lat. brugire, to rustle, roar, rattle. "Antisthenes, on a time, walked in the common place at Athens, with a cloak all torn and tattered, that every one beholding it might judge that he did it through humility; but Socrates, having discovered the hypocrisy, said that he saw his ambition through the holes of his cloak. Diogenes, once entering Plato's chamber, discovered his bed neatly made and jumping upon it, trampled it down, saying that he trampled down Plato's pride. Plato answered that it was done with greater pride. "In for a penny, in for a pound. He that takes the devil into his boat must ferry him over the sound." —English. "It is the first shower that wets."—Italian. "It is all the same whether a man has both legs in the stocks, or one." —German.

"There is nothing like being bespattered for making one defy the slough." — French.

"Make yourself an honest man, and then you may be sure that there is one rascal less in the world." — Carlyle.

"It was said of Vespasian, that he was even a better man for being an emperor. So the prosperity of some, instead of destroying them, displays and increases their excellency; they are rich, not only in temporal things, but in faith and good works." — Jay.

the adverse winds and tempests of evil, consumed by the fires of unholy passion, on the mad rush to ruin and death, diseased through and through so that recovery was impossible; and hence, unable to heal, he cried in the sadness of his heart, "There is no healing of thy bruise; thy wound is grievous."—Pulpit Com.—"Monuments and inscriptions prove the pitiless cruelty of Assyria. In sculptures are rows of impaled prisoners, whose eyes were put out, and whose lips were fastened by rings. God had long borne this oppression, but now guilt must be punished. Judgment must fall, and there is not the least hope of recovery. Cruelty and oppression will be rewarded in their own coin."—Hom. Com.—The Overthrow of Evil-doers a Source of Thankful Joy.—"All that hear the bruit of thee shall clap the hands over thee: for upon whom hath not thy wickedness passed continually?" These last words in the Book of Nahum are truly impressive. The messenger closes his brief prophecy in the same tone in which he commenced it, the vengeance of God being still his theme. At the outset he declared the solemn fact; at the end he applies the truth thus announced to the particular case in hand. The magnificent dirge forming this third chapter is one sustained shout of wild exultation that the oppressor has fallen at last. The naked discrowned corpse of the glorious city is cast out to the scorn and disgust of the world. No spark of pity mingles with the prophet's delight. In this storm of indignation and vengeance the spirit of prophecy in the northern kingdom breathes its last. Under this doom Nineveh vanishes from view, to be no more seen till in our day the discovery of her buried remains has given new life to the whole of this portion of sacred history.—Stanley's "Jewish Church."

Redeeming the Time.—

Lose this day, loitering, 'twill be the same story
To-morrow, and the next more dilatory.
The indecision brings its own delays,
And days are lost lamenting o'er lost days.
Are you in earnest? seize this very minute!
What you can do, or think you can, begin it!
Boldness has genius, power and magic in it!
Only engage, and then the mind grows heated;
Begin it, and the work will be completed!

Introduction.

I. Author. Habakkuk, = "embrace." Of his history nothing whatever is known. II. Time. B.C. 630—598. III. Design, etc. The design of the book is to portray the coming destruction of Judah by the Chaldeans, and the retribution which should befall the latter. It concludes with an ode, which presents one of the most perfect specimens of Hebrew lyrical poetry. References to this book occur in Heb. x. 37, 38; Rom. i. 17; Gal. iii. 11; Acts xiii. 41. IV. Style. Habakkuk holds a distinguished place among the sacred poets; whoever reads his prophecy must be struck with the grandeur of his imagery and the sublimity of its style, especially of the hymn in the third chapter, which Bp. Lowth considers one of the most perfect specimens of the Hebrew ode.

"Habakkuk is the earliest who is known to us of a new school of religion in Israel. He is called 'prophet,' but at first he does not adopt the attitude which is characteristic of the prophets. His face is set in an opposite direction to theirs. They address the nation Israel, on behalf of God: he rather speaks to God on behalf of Israel. Their task was Israel's sin, the proclamation of God's doom and the offer of His grace to their penitence. Habakkuk's task is God Himself, the effort to find out what He means by permitting tyranny and wrong. They attack the sins, he is the first to state the problems, of life. To him the prophetic revelation, the Torah, is complete: it has been codified in Deuteronomy and enforced by Josiah. Habakkuk's business is not to add to it but to ask why it does not work. Why does God suffer wrong to triumph, so that the Torah is paralyzed, and Mishpat, the prophetic justice or judgment, comes to nought? The prophets travailed for Israel's character—to get the people to love justice till justice prevailed among them: Habakkuk feels justice cannot prevail in Israel, because of the great disorder which God permits to fill the world. It is true that he arrives at a prophetic attitude, and before the end authoritatively declares God's will; but he begins by searching for the latter, with an appreciation of the great obscurity cast over it by the facts of life."—Geo. Adam Smith.

CHAPTER THE FIRST.

1-4. (1) burden, G. A. Smith translates: "The oracle which H. the prophet received by vision." Habakkuk, meaning "embrace." The word should be pronounced Habák-kuk. (2) cry, for help against the violent, who seem to prosper." When the prophet says "I," he probably speaks not so much for himself personally, as for the godly in Israel. (3) shew me, or let me see iniquity appearing to triumph. there are that raise, etc., R. V., "there is strife and contention riseth up." (4) slacked, seems to hesitate to touch these successful wicked men. wicked, etc., Job xxi. 7; Je. xii. 1.

The Importunate Prayer (vs. 2).—How long will He suffer His people to pray, and still neglect to hear? 1. Till they see the plague of their own hearts; 2. Till the Church feels that she stands in the gap between God and a sin-destroyed world, and that He will be inquired of to do all that He has promised; 3. Till they are willing to do whatever of duty He requires, in addition to praying; 4. Till they have removed the stumbling-blocks out of the way of a revival of His work; 5. Till He sees in them a disposition to give Him the glory of the work He does.—A. Clark.

Habakkuk conducts a kind of dialogue, and if the paradox may be allowed it seems to be a dialogue mainly on his own side. To call it a monologue would be hardly correct. He talks to God; he has it out with God; he plies God with sharp questions. He will have practical matters attended to; he says, Lord, this is evil; how did it come to be in thy universe, thou fair One, whose face is beauty, whose voice is music? He could not write a long prophecy in that strain. Jesus Christ could not be a minister more than three years; Habakkuk can only write his three chapters. He was no magician in the elaboration of sentences; every sentence in Habakkuk was itself a Bible. There is no such book in all the canon as Habakkuk. The very word means strong embrace. He gets hold of God, and throws him in the gracious wrestle. He will not let God go. On the one side he represents pessimism or despair as it never was represented before, and on the other he rises to heights of faith which even David did not attain with all his music. We shall find sentences in Habakkuk that leave all the prophets and minstrels of the Old Testament far away down in the clouds, whilst Habakkuk himself is up beyond the cloud-line, revelling in morning light.—Parker.

5-8. Vss. 5-11 seem to be the answers of God to the prophet's complaint. "The wrongs complained of will bring their punishment." (5) behold ye, etc.,^b observe what is happening among the Gentiles. God will use a heathen nation to chastise the sinners in Judæa. wonder, or be astounded. (6) Chaldeans, Ge. xi. 28. bitter, i. e. cruel.^c hasty, sudden and overwhelming inroads were characteristic features of their warfare. which shall march, R. V., "which march through the breadth of the earth." (7) judgment, etc., i. e. they act entirely on their own will, without any consideration for others.^d (8) horses, Nah. iii. 2. leopards, noted for swift, gliding running.^e evening wolves, sharp set with hunger.

Evening Wolves (vs. 8).—May not the furious creature represent— I. Our doubts and fears, after a day of distraction of mind, losses in business, and perhaps ungenerous tauntings from our fellow men? II. False teachers who craftily and industriously hunt for the precious life, devouring men by their falsehoods? III. What a wonder of grace it is when fierce persecutors are converted, for then the wolf dwells with the lamb, and men of cruel ungovernable dispositions become gentle and teachable.—Spurgeon.

The Chaldeans (Heb. Kaskdim), in the Assyrian inscriptions Kaldu, were properly neither Assyrians nor Babylonians, though no doubt like them a Shemitic people. Their seats were in the southmost parts of the Babylonian plain, towards and on the Persian Gulf. Here they formed a number of small states, one of which was Bit Yakin, the kingdom of "The prophecy of Habakkuk is an organic whole divided into two parts, the first of which is a colloquy between God and the prophet, in which is announced the judgment coming upon Judah through the instrumentality of the Chaldeans; the second is a magnificent ode celebrating the punishment of God's enemies and the salvation of the pious."

a "The Prophet proposes the common objections against Providence taken from the prosperity of the wicked and the oppression of the righteous, which have been a stumbling block to good men."—Lowth.

b Acts xiii. 41; Paul quotes from the Sept. version.

c Comp. Je. l. 42.

d "The Chaldees will be a law unto himself. . . Self-asserting and irresponsible judgment will be the fit instrument of punishment on the authors of wrong judgment."

—Spk. Com.

e "Agile, swift, and when irritated the most terrible and cruel of beasts."—Tristram.

"Others only look and wonder, the Christian only looks and loves."

—Harrison.

That God cannot be indifferent to sin, to the wickedness of nations or to the transgressions of individuals, is self-evident; otherwise he could not be God. But that, loving righteousness and hating iniquity, he should seem to make no effort to protect, vindicate, strengthen, and diffuse the one, or to punish, restrain, and overthrow the other,—this is what occasions trouble to religious souls reflecting on the course of providence. The solution of the problem can only be that, on the one hand, he deems it better that righteousness should be purified, tested, and established by contact with evil, while, on the other hand, it seems preferable to his wisdom and love that wickedness should have free scope to reveal its true character, and ample opportunity to change its mind or to justify its final overthrow.

—Pulp. Com.

a "No fortress could withstand the Babylonian conqueror. Not even, Tyre whose very name (Rock) betokened its strength. The most impregnable garrison seemed only to require that he should heap up a little dust against it, and it was taken."

b Ps. xc. 2, xciii. 2, cii. 27.

b The prophet's reasoning admits of a more extended range of application, and has an important bearing upon the immortality of man. Jehovah is "from everlasting." He is "the eternal Merodach Baladan, which lay on the coast and is called in inscriptions "the land of the sea." If the Shemites penetrated into the plains of the two rivers from the north, the Chaldeans must have formed the vanguard of the immigration and been thrown into the furthest south by the successive waves of population that followed them; if they entered from the south or south-west the Chaldeans would be the latest to arrive. This is most probable, for the movement appears always to have been northward, and the steady aim of the Chaldeans was to gain possession of the country lying to the north of their abode and seat themselves upon the throne of Babylon. This their princes succeeded in doing more than once. Merodach Baladan, who gave trouble to three Assyrian monarchs. Tiglath-Pileser, Sargon and Sennacherib, appears to have occupied the throne of Babylon from B. C. 721 to 709, when after a war with Sargon he was dispossessed. The indefatigable veteran renewed the struggle for the crown of Babylon in the time of Sennacherib, but without success, and disappears from history, though his descendants are spoken of in the annals of the succeeding Assyrian kings. The Chaldean states allied themselves with Shamash-shumukin, the Babylonian viceroy, in his revolt against his brother Assurbanipal, but were severely chastised by the Assyrian king and overrun by his armies. Finally, on the death of Assurbanipal (cir. 626), the Chaldean Nabopolassar, taking advantage of the weakness of Assyria, succeeded, by what steps is unknown, in placing the crown of Babylon on his head, and transmitting it to his descendants. The Chaldean empire of Babylon dates from the usurpation of Nabopolassar (B. C. 625), though it was his son Nebuchadnezzar (605), the greatest ruler of the East, to whom its splendor was due. Nebuchadnezzar was succeeded by several princes of feeble character, the last of whom was Nabonidus (Nabuna'id), in whose reign the empire fell before the attack of the Medes and Persians under Cyrus (B. C. 538), having lasted less than a century, and with its fall the empire of the East passed from the Shemites to a people of the Aryan race.—A. B. Davidson.

9—11. (9) They shall come, R. V., "They come all of them." for violence, with violent intentions. their faces, etc., R. V., "their faces are set eagerly as the east wind," i. e. their movement is impetuous and rapid. they shall gather, etc., R. V., "they gather captives as the sand," i. e. "as the wind drives the sand before it in confused heaps," or perhaps, "innumerable, like the sand." (10) R. V., "Yea, he scoffeth at kings and princes are a derision unto him: he derideth . . . he heapeth up dust," making thus an embankment, from whence to attack the city." (11) R. V., "Then he sweepeth onward as the wind and passeth through and becometh guilty: thus his might becometh his god." His success intoxicates him and he defies his own might.

The Agger or Mount (vs. 10).—Another contrivance which the besiegers employed was the Agger or Mount, which they raised so high as to equal, if not exceed, the top of the besieged walls: the sides were supported with bricks or stones, or secured with strong rafters to hinder it from falling; the forepart only remained bare, because it was to be advanced by degrees nearer the city. The pile itself consisted of all sorts of materials, as earth, timber, boughs, stones; into the middle were cast also wickers, and twigs of trees to fasten, and, as it were, cement the other parts. The prophet Habakkuk manifestly refers to the mount, in that prediction where he describes the desolating march of the Chaldeans, and the success of their arms.—Paxton.

12, 13. Vss. 12—17 seem to be a remonstrance of the prophet with God over the cruelties of the Chaldeans. (12) art, etc., these are the words of Habakkuk, as representing believing Israel. They are spoken in "opposition to the impious deifying of the Chaldeans' power as their god." not die, or be destroyed under Thy judgments. for correction, of Israel, not for his destruction. To His people all Divine dealings are chastisements. (13) purer eyes, etc., Ps. v. 4, 5; Je. xii. 1, 2. wherefore, etc., reference is to the strangeness of God's using so bad a nation as the Chaldeans for His purposes.^b and the brutal conqueror in his pride treated them like the lower creatures. creeping things, Ps. civ. 25. no ruler over them, "this hardly means that the creeping things have no king to protect them, but rather that, as the lowest creatures that have life, they have no higher instincts, no organization, they are a mere swarming disorder, and to this condition do the conquerors reduce mankind. Prov. vi. 7, xxx. 27."—Camb. B. (15) angle, or hook. drag, or long net, wh. is dragged through the water.^b rejoice, glorying in their crimes because they are successful. (16) sacrifice . . net, i. e. they put their trust in, and as it were deity and worship their arms, power, and military skill. (17) empty, etc., i. e. carry away the spoil of the nations successfully. "Shall they, without interruption, be permitted to enjoy the fruits of their violence?"

14—17. (14) makest men, etc., i. e. sufferest the Chaldeans to commit these cruelties. as the fishes, men under the cruel rapacity of these tyrants ceased to be men, the very humanity in them was disregarded,

Self-Sufficiency.—"They say in their heart, My power and the might of mine hand hath gotten me this wealth" (Deut. viii. 17). So Pharaoh said, "My river is mine own, and I have made it for myself" (Ezek. xxix. 3). So Nebuchadnezzar said, "Is not this great Babylon, that I have built," etc. (Dan. iv. 30). Pusey refers in illustration of this to certain North American Indians, "who designate their bow and arrow as the only beneficent deities whom they know;" to the Romans sacrificing to their military standards; and to the French referred to in the Times during the Franco-German War as "almost worshipping the mitrailleuse as a goddess." And this is still our peril. Because our possibilities are so great, we think that we can win all blessings for ourselves. Everywhere we see the worship of our human powers and means—the workman worshipping the strength of his arm and the deftness of his fingers, the man of business worshipping his skill and acuteness, and the man of science, human knowledge. Nor is the Church of God free from this spirit: for there is far too much of trusting to forms and ceremonies, to worldly alliances, to machinery and organization, as though these were the great essentials, and far too little of "looking up unto the hills whence cometh her help."—S. D. Hillman.

CHAPTER THE SECOND.

1-4. (1) stand . . watch, Is. xxi. 8. As a watchman looks out from his watch-tower into the distance, the prophet will watch for the answer from heaven.—What I shall answer, etc., Camb. B. "what answer I shall bring to my plea." (2) make it plain, De. xxvii. 8. table, or tablets, suitable for public inscriptions. run, etc., so plain that he that reads may run on in his reading, i. e. read rapidly. (3) appointed time, but there will be some delay before it is fulfilled. but at the end, etc., R. V., "and it hasteth toward the end, and shall not lie." not tarry, not really, though to human view the period may seem to be prolonged: God's time is always kept. (4) lifted up, or haughty. just . . faith,^b R. V. margin, and Camb. B., "the just shall live in his faithfulness." Let the righteous, however baffled his faith be by experience, hold on in loyalty to God and duty, and he shall live.

The Watch-Tower of Prayer (vs. 1).—I. Watch for things to pray about. II. Watch for times to pray. III. Watch for answers to prayer.—Edmond.

Habakkuk, the Prophet of a Tried but Triumphant Faith.—

O Thou of ear so keen that it must hear
The prayer of faith for healing of our shame,
O Thou of eyes so pure that they must flame
In vivid lightnings on our darkness drear,
And clarify our murky atmosphere,
When wilt Thou come to manifest Thy name,
To vindicate the right, Thy cause reclaim?
Bold watchman on thy tower of hope, what cheer?

Swift comes the answering vision; make it plain:
The Lord is on His throne,—keep silence, earth,— Shall punish wrong, and crown the just with life;

God;" hence our immortal destiny: "We shall not die." Surely the Divine Father will not allow his children to fade away and be no more. Certainly, he whose tender love to his children the love of human parents so faintly images, will not dwell through the eternal ages and "leave himself childless when time shall end." — Pulp. Com.

b "Fishing on a larger scale is done by means of a long net, some three or four feet in width, with pieces of lead attached on one side to sink it, and of cork on the other to keep it afloat. The operation is performed by men occupying two boats." — Van Lennep.

a "The Prophets often compare themselves, awaiting the revelations of Jehovah with earnest patience, to watchmen on an eminence watching with intent eye all that comes within their view." — Fausset.

Is. xxi. 11; Je. vi. 17; Eze. iii. 17, xxxiii. 2, 3; Jno. iii. 36; Ro. i. 17; Ga. iii. 11; He. x. 38.

"But the righteous shall live by his faithfulness." This word, wrongly translated faith by the Greek and other versions, is concentrated by Paul in his repeated quotation from the Greek word, that single act of faith by which the sinner secures forgiveness and justification. Of course it has faith in God as its secret—the —the verb from which it is derived is the regular Hebrew term to believe—but it is rather the temper which faith produces of endurance, steadfastness, integrity. —G. A. D. A. M. Smith.

a "The acquisitions of the Chaldeans are represented as so many pledges extorted from the conquered, and reclaimable by them; the greater the amount the heavier the debt and the retribution."

—Spk. Com.

a Pr. viii. 36, xx. 2.

They who wrong their neighbors do much greater wrong to their own souls.

b "The special witness made is that the money and materials wherewith he built the house were unjustly gotten." —Mat. Henry.

"Sweet are the thoughts that savor of content—the quiet mind is richer than a crown; sweet are the nights in careless slumber spent—the poor estate scorns fortune's angry frown. Such sweet content, such minds, such sleep, such bliss, beggars enjoy when princes oft do miss. The homely house that harbors quiet rest, the cottage that affords no pride nor care, the man that grees with country music best, the sweet consort of Mirth's and Music's fare. Obscured life sits

Revive His ancient work; by second birth
Flood all the world with glory, quenching strife, Till men their heritage of joy regain.—C. S. Hoyt.

5—8. (5) transgresseth by wine, R. V., "Yea, moreover, wine is a treacherous dealer, a haughty man," etc., the description of the Chaldean as one "intoxicated with his successes, and not knowing how to set any bounds to his ambition."—Lowth. hell, here the emblem of an insatiable temper. as death, the foe with whom no man can make reconciliation. (6) all these, the nations crushed by the Chaldeans. parable, or figurative speech. against him, in the day of his calamity. thick clay, R. V., "pledges;" i. e. contracts a heavy burden of debt.^a (7) they, etc., the Medo-Persian conquerors. (8) remnant . . thee, the conquerors of Babylon were a mixed people made up of the nations crushed by Babylon. violence of the land, R. V., "violence done to the land."

The True Life.—God will not have these high nests. You know it. When you were young, what you were going to be! What adornment and finery and vanity and presumption! Now that you are a wrinkled old woman tell us what life really is; tell us what you would be and do if you had the chance to begin again. And when you came from school to college, you remember, you were going to trample down everybody and set everything right, and now that you are a disappointed old grey-beard, tell us what is life: how would you do if you had to start once more? Where is the girl that was simple, frank, self-distrustful, industrious, almost silent, and absolutely without pretence? She is crowned among the mothers of Israel. Where is the young man that began at the bottom, and went up and said, I am afraid I am getting almost too high now: what am I in my father's house that I should have this elevation? Where will he end? In heaven. Here is your choice then: the life of the just, or the life of the clay-gatherer; the life of holiness, or the life of covetousness; the life that will have nothing that reason cannot explain and conscience justify and merit claim, or the life that will have a high nest without working for it and without climbing to it. It need be no Habakkuk who can forecast the future of men now. The Bible has, if we have inhaled its true spirit, made us all prophets.—Parker.

9—11. (9) coveteth, etc., Je. xxii. 13. "A covetousness so surpassingly evil as to be fatal to himself." R. V., "getteth an evil gain." nest, perhaps referring to the royal citadel, wh. was built high, like the Babel-tower, or the figure may be taken from birds that build in inaccessible places. (10) shame, or ruin. Brought disgrace upon yourself. (11) stone, this, and the tie-beam, are supposed to be witnesses of the wickedness.^b

Note on vs. 11.—The margin of the A. V. has, instead of "answer it," "witness against it." When a man denies what he has solemnly promised, the person who complains of his perfidy says, "The place where you stood shall witness against you." "A beautiful princess was once enjoying herself in a fragrant grove, when a noble prince passed that way; she became enamored of his person, and he solemnly promised to return and marry her. When he left her, she wept bitterly, and said, 'Ah! should he not return, this tali-tree shall witness against him. Yes, the birds shall be my witnesses.'"—Roberts.

No Satisfaction in Self-Indulgence.—A reporter was talking with the distinguished lawyer, the Hon. Joseph H. Choate, our ambassador to Great Britain, and the conversation is given in Ainslee's Magazine. Here is a fine passage: "Are not," I said, "a few hours of toil, a luxuriously furnished home, hosts of friends, the applause of the people, sumptuous repasts, and content in idleness, knowing that enough has been done, the conditions of happiness?" "We never know that enough has been done," he said meditatively. "All that you speak of sounds pleasant; but the truth is, that minds whose great exertions have made such things possible for themselves are the very last to crave or rejoice in their possession. You have described what appeals to the idler, the energyless dreamer, the fashionable dawdler, and the listless voluptuary. Enjoyment of such things would sap the strength and deaden the ambition of a Lincoln. The man who has attained to the position where such things are possible is one whose life has been a constant refutation of their need. He is one who has abstained, who has conserved his mental and physical strength by living a simple and frugal life. His enjoyment has been in working, and I guarantee that you will always find successful men plain-mannered persons of simple tastes, to whom sumptuous repasts are a bore, and luxury a thing apart. They may live surrounded by these things, but personally take little interest in them, counting them mere trappings which neither add to nor detract from greatness."

12—14. (12) blood, or violence and blood-shedding.^a (13) is it not of the Lord, hath not God ordained that these blood stained splendors shall come to naught? in the very fire, R. V., "for the fire," they are erecting structures which are to be burned up. very vanity, see Je. li. 58. (14) earth . . sea, Is. xi. 9,^b "the verse explains the preceding. The Lord of Hosts, God Omnipotent, whose purposes overrule all, shall bring in His kingdom, and in the judgments that precede its coming the great fabrics reared by heathenism for its idolatries and its oppressions shall become fuel for the fire (Is. ix. 5)."—Camb. B.

15—17. (15) neighbour drink, "not only do the Chaldeans oppress and pillage the peoples, but they expose them to the vilest derision and contumely. They behave to the conquered nations like one who gives his neighbor intoxicating drink to stupefy his faculties and expose him to shame."—Pulp. Com. look, etc., a fig. for shameful defeat. (16) shame for glory, i. e. instead of glory. "Thou hast feasted thyself on that which is shameful rather than on that which is decorous and honorable." drink thou also, etc., let the same ignominy come to thee which thou hast visited on others. the cup, etc., God shall bring round the cup of suffering and vengeance to thee in thy turn, so that foul shame shall be on thy glory. (17) Lebanon, R. V., "the violence done to Lebanon," the reckless devastation of the forests. spoil of beasts, R. V., "destruction of the beasts."^c "The earth, the woods and the beasts no less than man have rights; there is nothing that exists which is not moral; wanton excess on anything recoils on the head of the perpetrator. The ravage and terror carried into the world of creatures shall come back in terror and destruction on the Chaldean." violence of the land, R. V., "violence done to the land, to the city, and to all," etc.

Degrading Effects of Drink.—A minister of the gospel told me in 1847 one of the most thrilling incidents I ever heard in my life. A member of his congregation came home for the first time in his life intoxicated, and his boy met him on the doorstep, clapping his hands and exclaiming, "Papa has come home!" He seized that boy by the shoulder, swung him around, staggered, and fell with him in the hall. The minister said to me, "I spent that night in that house. I went to the door, and bared my brow that the night air might fall upon it and cool it; I walked up and down the hall. There was his child dead; there was his wife in strong convulsions, and he asleep. A man but thirty-five years of age asleep with a dead child in the house, having a blue mark upon the temple where the corner of the marble steps had come in contact with the head as he swung him round, and a wife upon the very brink of the grave! I felt I must remain until he awoke, and I did. When he awoke he passed his hand over his face, and exclaimed, 'What is the matter? Where am I? Where is my boy?' 'You cannot see him.' 'Where is my boy?' he inquired. 'You cannot see him.' 'Stand out of my way. I will see my boy!' To prevent confusion, I took him to that child's bedside, and, as I turned down the sheet and showed him the corpse, he uttered the shriek, 'Ah, my child!' One year afterwards that man was brought from a lunatic asylum to lie side by side with his wife in one grave, and I attended his funeral." The minister of the gospel who told me that fact is to-day a drunken hostler in a stable in Boston! Now tell me what drink will do. It will debase, degrade and imbrute everything that is noble, bright, glorious and godlike in a human being.—J. B. Gough.—Conscientious Charity.—If you give sixpence to a poor creature, when you know, or may know, if you think or inquire, that the sixpence will be turned at once into intoxicating drink, you are putting a stumbling-block or occasion of falling in the way of a brother or sister down a type of bliss; a mind content both crown and kingdom is." —Greene.

^a Mi. iii. 10.

"Who hath raised the greatness of his capital city Babylon upon the ruins of many other cities, and the destruction of their inhabitants." —Lowth.

"Shall not God have His turn, when cruel rapacious men have triumphed so long, though He seems now to be still?"—Calvin.

^b "The earth will not only be filled with the glory of the Lord, but with the knowledge of it. Men will recognize it. It will be filled with that knowledge, as the sea is covered with waters, which lie deep, spread far, and will never be dried up." — Wordsworth.

^c "As thou didst hunt men as wild beasts, so shalt thou be hunted thyself as a wild beast, which thou resemblest in cruelty." — Fausset.

"I drank; I liked it not; 'twas rage, 'twas noise. An airy scene of transitory joys. In vain I trusted that the flowing bowl would banish sorrow, and enlarge the soul; to the late revel, and protracted feast, wild dreams succeeded and disorder'd rest." — Prior.

^a LXX. rend.
"Stand in awe of Him."

"Comp. the silence in a court of justice when a judge pronounces the sentence."—Lowth.

"An outsider is very useful to an insider. As the engineer cannot steer, being down below among the machinery, he is very much helped by the man who is on the look-out; and men that are buried in the hull of their affairs ought to be thankful if there is anybody on deck that can keep a look-out, and tell which way the ship is going."—Spurgeon.

^a "The term appears to mean a composition characterized by vehement emotions and sudden transitions."

—Wordsworth.

^b "He adopts the imagery of Moses (De. xxxiii. 2), of Deborah (Jud. v. 4, 5), and of David (Ps. lxxviii. 7)."

"In His hand He took the golden compasses prepar'd, in God's eternal store, to circumscribe this universe and all created things; one foot he centred, and the other turn'd round through the vast profundity obscure, and said, thus far extend, thus far thy bounds, this be thy just circumference. O world." — Milton.

for whom Christ died. What is it that forbids you to do this? Is it political economy? Perhaps, but it is certainly also Christian duty, Christian love. I once heard an excellent clergyman say, "Warn as you will, if I were to refuse help to the apparently hungry woman who begs me to give her money to buy food, I could not eat my own dinner in comfort." My answer to such a remark would be, "What does it matter whether you eat your own dinner in comfort or not? This is a very secondary consideration, compared with the question of doing good or harm to the brother or sister for whom Christ died."—Davies.

18—20. (18) what profiteth, Isa. xlv. 10; Jer. ii. 8, 11, xvi. 17, 20. dumb idols, Ps. cxv. 5. (19) wood . . . stone, of wh. the idol figures were made. it shall teach, R. V., "Shall this teach?" no breath, as sign of life. (20) The prophet contrasts the majesty of Jehovah with these dumb and lifeless idols. Lord, Jehovah: the One and living God. temple, not the shrine at Jerusalem, but heaven itself, Ps. xi. 4. silence,^a so that they may hear what He may say unto them: or in token of reverent and submissive attention to His judgments.

Seeking the True God.—Twenty years ago, when Christian missions scarcely existed in Japan, a young Japanese of good family met with a book on geography in the Chinese language, which had been compiled by an American missionary in China. It began with these words: "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." What could this mean? Who was that God? Certainly He was not known in Japan; perhaps He might live in America, whence the author of the book came. The young man determined to go to America and seek for God. He left Japan secretly, at the peril of his life; for the old law was then still in force, under which death was the penalty incurred by any Japanese who quitted his country. He made his way to China, and thence to the United States. There, after some perplexing experiences, he did find the God he had been seeking, and with his whole heart embraced the faith of Christ. That young man, Joseph Nisima, became principal of a Native Christian College at Kioto, the ancient sacred capital of Japan.—E. Stock.

CHAPTER THE THIRD.

I—4. (1) a prayer, including praise and meditation, as well as petition. upon Shigionoth,^a R. V., "set to Shigionoth." The word is plur. of Shiggaion in the title of Ps. vii. and may mean a wild, tumultuous and ecstatic poem. The word "upon" in such superscriptions appears to mean "after the mode of," "to the music of" Shigionoth. (2) thy speech, R. V., "the report of thee," perhaps an allusion to the divine manifestation at the Exodus. revive thy work, accomplish once again the rescue and deliverance of Thy people. "Though we seem, as it were, dead nationally, revive us." midst . . . years, i. e. during our very captivity. (3) "The Theophany is pictured as a great tempest in the heavens in the midst of which God is present. It comes from the south, the region of Paran and Sinai (vs. 3 a); there is a terrible splendor around the advancing God, which lightens the heavens and the earth (vss. 3 b, 4); pestilence and fever-glow follow in His wake (vs. 5); all nature shudders, the eternal hills sink down (vs. 6); the nations and tribes in the desert are dismayed (vs. 7)."—Camb. B. Teman . . . Paran, the region of God's manifestation at the giving of the law.^b (4) horns . . . hand, R. V. marg., "rays coming forth at his side." there was the hiding, in that ineffable light was the hiding-place of his majesty.

Teman and Paran.—Teman is the name given to the region extending from the south of Palestine to Mount Sinai; Paran is the name of a mountain in the wilderness of Paran, also south of Palestine. Dr. Henderson (on the Minor Prophets at this place) remarks: "From Sinai occurring along with Seir and Paran (Deuteronomy xxxiii. 2), and with Seir and the country of Edom (Judges v. 4, 5), it is probable that Habakkuk here alludes to the regions to the south of Palestine generally, as the theatre of the Divine manifestations to Israel, only, specifying the two points nearer to that country." Teman in the one clause is parallel to Paran in the other, as God is to Holy One, according to the style of Hebrew poetry. God came down on the top of Sinai, and thence displayed His glory before His people, and marched with them through the wilderness towards the Holy Land. The Prophet refers, in the highest style of poetry, to the Lord's former favors bestowed on the Israelites, as encouraging the hope that He will bless His people still.—S. S. Times.

5, 6. (5) pestilence, as His agent in His judgments. burning coals, or burning heat, a poetical figure for fever-disease, or perhaps lightning-strokes. (6) measured, etc., as a general first estimates his work, and forms his plans. drove asunder, or convulsed, with the first signs of His wrath. mountains, etc., figures of the most stable things.^a His ways are everlasting, R. V., "His goings were as of old."

The Pestilence (vs. 5).—The place of the pestilence under the Divine administration, as connected with the moral government of God. I. Examine some prevalent opinions in regard to the matter which seem to be erroneous. 1. Some do not recognize the hand of God in such visitations; 2. Some do, but not on Bible principles. II. What are we to regard as the true doctrine on the subject, and as the true principles of judging in the case? 1. There is a class of sins that bring their own punishment; 2. All things, even storms, etc., are under the control of God. III. The lessons of the visitation. 1. God rules in the nations of the earth; 2. God has hidden resources for effecting His purposes; 3. This may be regarded as an extraordinary means of arresting the attention of mankind; 4. Such a visitation is of the nature of a proclamation in favor of virtue and piety.—Barnes.

7—12. (7) I saw, in prophetic vision. Cushan, poetical allusion to the Egyptian overthrow, when Israel was delivered. in affliction, panic-stricken. curtains, tent curtains. (8) rivers, the Red Sea, and the Jordan. By this sudden question the Prophet sets us on considering the gracious purpose of the Divine dealings. salvation, for Thy people: though they seemed to be only for destruction. (9) quite naked, drawn out from its sheath, and set quite ready for use. oaths, etc., a very obscure passage; meaning uncertain. R. V. translates: "the oaths to the tribes were a sure word." cleave the earth, etc., Camb. B.: "cleave the rivers into dry land." (10) lifted up his hands, fig. of the great storm-driven waves. (11) stood still, i.e. remained in their habitation, behind the storm-cloud. at the light of thine arrows, etc., the sun and moon are hidden and outshone by the terrible brightness of the lightnings of Jehovah.^b

Oriental Bows (vs. 9).—The Oriental bows, according to Chardin, were usually carried in a case hung to their girdles; it was sometimes of cloth, but more commonly of leather.—Harmer.

13—16. (13) woundedst, etc., R. V. marg. "thou didst smite off the head from the house," etc. discovering the foundation,^a overturning the house or city, so that the very foundations are disclosed. (14) strike through, etc., R. V. "Thou didst pierce with his own staves the head of his warriors;" the enemies of Israel were made to destroy each other. devour, as wild beasts carry their prey to their dens to enjoy it secretly. (15) heap, etc., Ex. xv. 8. (16) This vs. returns to vs. 2, taking up the words "I have heard thy speech and was afraid." belly, heart or inward parts.^b rotteness, fig. for utter failure of strength. that I might rest, etc., Pulp. Com.: "I who shall rest in the day of tribulation." when he cometh, etc., R. V. marg. "when he that shall invade them in troops cometh up against the people."^c

God's Work.—A story is told of an Eastern king, which illustrates God's work in giving growth. He was seated in a garden, and one of his counsellors was speaking of the wonderful works of God. "Show me a sign," said the king, "and I shall believe." "Here are four acorns," said the counsellor; "will your majesty plant them in the ground, and then stoop down for a moment, and look into this clear pool of water?" The king did so. "Now," said the other, "look up." The king looked up, and saw four oak-trees where he had planted the acorns. "Wonderful!" he exclaimed; "this is indeed the work of God." "How long were you looking into the water?" asked the counsellor. "Only a second," said the king. "Eighty years have passed as a second," said the other.

^a Na. 1. 5.

"The mountains and hills are spoken of as emblems of eternity, because time seems to make no change or alteration in them." —Lowth.

"Pleasures of the mind are more at command than those of the body. A man may think of a handsome performance, or of a notion that pleases him, at his leisure. This entertainment is ready, with little warning or expense; a short recollection brings it upon the stage, brightens the idea, and makes it shine as much as when it was first stamped upon the memory." —Jeremy Collier.

^b "His brazen arms like flames of lightning shone, which the great Thunderer launches from his arm." —Homer.

"As alchemists spend that small medium they have to get gold, and never find it, so we lose and neglect eternity for a little momentary pleasure which we cannot enjoy, nor shall we ever attain to in this life." —Burton.

^a The neck is the emblem of dignity and power, and sometimes of stubbornness and pride.

^b In the Heb. idea, the belly is the seat of physical emotion; the bones are the seat of intensest pain.

^c "The allusion is evidently to the bands of Chaldeans, Syrians, etc., sent against Jehoiakim after his rebellion. (2 Ki. xxiv. 2.)" —Spk. Com.

The king looked at his garments; they were threadbare. He looked at his reflection in the water; he had become an old man. "There is no miracle here, then," he said angrily. "Yea," said the other, "it is God's work, whether He do it in eighty years or in one second."

Activity of God.—The most intensely thoughtful, and the most intensely active, of any being in the universe, is God; and all the power and all the majesty of His administration are for the production of good everywhere; and every violation of His wishes is a violation of a tendency towards the production of good. He is never tired, He is never weary, of His work. Such is our God, that sits in the heavens for ever and for ever, legislating by His thoughts and by His will—for He has no framework of government such as we imagine when we speak of legislation. By the whole personal influence of His being, by all His breathings, by His wishes, by His thoughts and feelings, He is perpetually studying how to raise about Him in this world, and in other worlds—if there be any that are populated—those intelligences that shall approach to Him in power of thought, and moral excellence, and perfectness of joy. This is God's avocation.—Beecher.

17—19. (17) although, etc., the expression of a simple but assured confidence, which could endure through all calamity. fig . . vines . . olive, the three principal and most important fruit trees of Canaan. All those were carefully cultivated. no meat, i.e. food, corn and vegetables. (18) rejoice, in the quiet assurance that Jehovah will both deliver and provide. (19) hinds' feet, implying swiftness and security. Ps. xviii. 32, 33. stringed instruments, Heb. neginoth.^b See titles of Ps. iv., vi.

Conscious and Unconscious Testimony.—Daniel Webster was a firm believer in Divine revelation, and a close student of its sacred pages. On one occasion, a small company of select friends spent an evening at his house. Tea over, the Bible, and the relative beauties of its several parts, became the topic of conversation. Each one of the guests had a preference. When the turn came to Webster, he said: "The masterpiece of the New Testament, of course, is the Sermon on the Mount. That has no rival, no equal. As to the Old-Testament writings, my favorite book is that of Habakkuk, and my favorite verses, chapter iii. 17, 18: 'Although the fig tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines—the labor of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat—the flock shall be cut off, and there shall be no herds in the stall—yet will I rejoice in the Lord, and joy in the God of my salvation.' This," continued Webster, "I regard as one of the sublimest passages of inspired literature. And often have I wondered that some artist, equal to the task, has not selected the Prophet and his scene of desolation as the subject of a painting. When in Paris, some years ago," continued Webster, "I received an account of a French infidel, who happened to find in a drawer of his library some stray leaves of an unknown volume. Although in the constant habit of denouncing the Bible, like most infidel writers, he had never read any part of it. These fugitive leaves contained the above prayer of Habakkuk. Being a man of fine literary taste, he was captivated with its poetic beauty, and hastened to the club-house, to announce the discovery to his associates. Of course they were anxious to know the name of the gifted author, to which inquiries the elated infidel replied: 'A writer by the name of Hab-ba-kook, of course, a Frenchman!' Judge of the infidel's surprise, when informed that the passage he was so enthusiastically admiring was not produced by one of his own countrymen, nor even by one of his own class of so-called Freethinkers, but was penned by one of God's ancient Prophets, and was contained in that much despised book—the Bible."—Lutheran Observer.

Although the fig tree blossom not, O Lord,
And henceforth fruit be found not on the vine,
The labor of the olive fail, the gourd
Be dried and lend no shelter, and the kine
Be taken from the stalls: though at Thy word
The fleeced flocks be cut from off the fold,

^a "Of the olive it is said, 'The fruit of this tree is indispensable for the comfort, and even the existence of the mass of the community. Almost every kind of dish is cooked in oil, and without it the good wife is utterly confounded; and when the oil fails the lamp in the dwelling of the poor expires.'"—Bib. Things.

^b The word "my" strongly confirms the inference drawn from other notices, that Habakkuk was a member of the Levitical choir."—Spk. Com.

"As for a little more money and a little more time, why it's ten to one if either one or the other would make you a whit happier. If you had more time, it would be sure to hang heavily. It is the working man is the happy man. Man was made to be active and he is never so happy as when he is so. It is the idle man is the miserable man. Money never made a man happy yet, nor will it. There is nothing in its nature to produce happiness. That was a true proverb of the wise man, rely upon it: 'Better is little with the fear of the Lord, than great treasure, and trouble therewith.'"—Franklin.

And all our enemies when waxen bold
 Should decimate our cities with the sword;
 Though the fair fields of happy Israel
 Be wither'd in Thy glance, and yield no meat;
 Though in Thy temples rude unholy feet
 Tread down the altars we have loved so well:
 Though powers and kingdoms fall beneath Thy rod, Yet shall I safely dwell with Thee, my God! —G. Smith.

"Grant, Almighty God, as the dulness and hardness of our flesh is so great that it is needful for us to be in various ways afflicted—oh grant that we patiently bear Thy chastisement, and under a deep feeling of sorrow flee to Thy mercy displayed to us in Christ, so that we depend not on the earthly blessings of this perishable life, but relying on Thy word go forward in the course of our calling, until at length we be gathered to that blessed rest which is laid up for us in heaven, through Christ our Lord. Amen."—From the prayer with which Calvin concludes his exposition of Habakkuk.

We overstate the ills of life. . .
 We sigh so loud, the nightingale within refuses to sing loud, as else she would. O brothers! let us leave the shame and sin of taking vainly, in a plaintive mood,
 the holy name of Grief,—holy herein, that, by the grief of one,
 came all our good. — Mrs.
 Browning.

Introduction.

Nothing is known of Zephaniah beyond what may be gathered from his book. The opening verse makes him a descendant in the fifth generation from Hizkiah (R. V., Hezekiah). It is unusual to carry the genealogy of a prophet beyond his father. The exception in this case favors the supposition that our prophet was a descendant of King Hezekiah. Chap. i. 4, ("this place") shows that the prophet lived in Jerusalem. "He is familiar with the different localities in the capital, as the Fish gate, the Second Quarter, and the Maktesh, apparently the quarter of the merchants (i. 10, 11), and with the various classes inhabiting the city; and his picture of the social and religious practices prevailing among the people is drawn from observation (i. 4—8, 12)."

The date of the prophecy is between the years 639 and 621 B.C., probably toward the latter part of that period.

The book has been called the Dies irae of the Old Testament. Its burden is "the day of the Lord," a day of darkness and terrors and wrath, against Judah and the surrounding nations. The instrument of the divine visitation has been by many supposed to be the Chaldæans. Later scholars, however, are inclined to find this instrument in the Scythians, who ravaged Western Asia in the latter part of the seventh century. "But the judgment has not its end in itself, it is but the means of making Jehovah known to the world, and this knowledge of Him is salvation. The lips of the nations are purified that they may call upon the name of the Lord, and Israel comes forth from the judgment a chastened and humble people, trusting in Jehovah their God alone (iii. 9—13)."

CHAPTER THE FIRST.

1-3. (1) Zephaniah, meaning "Whom the Lord covers," in times of storm and distress.^a Hizkiah, the same as Hezekiah, and probably the good king of that name. king of Judah, these words refer to Josiah, not to Amon. (2) utterly consume, marg. "by taking away I will make an end."^b the land, R. V. "the face of the ground," not the land of Judah alone. (3) man and beast, etc., the creatures, esp. the domestic creatures, sharing the judgments brought on man.^c stumbling blocks, or idols.^d

The Book has two great divisions: First, ch. i. 2-iii. 8, a threat of judgment on the world: on Judah and the nations; and secondly, a promise of salvation equally universal, ch. iii. 9-20. The judgment is that of the great day of the Lord. The prophet represents it as universal, but concentrating itself on Judah, ch. i. 2-ii. 3; then as involving the nations, ch. ii. 4-15; and finally he speaks of Judah and the nations together, ch. iii. 1-8.—Camb. B.

4-6. (4) Judah, previously to this, the ten tribes had been carried away captive. "As in Am. i., ii. the cloud laden with judgment trails round the horizon, discharging itself on one nation after another, and finally settles over Israel, so here Jehovah's wrath against all created things concentrates itself on Judah and Jerusalem." remnant of Baal, this may refer to the altars wh. have been spared in the time of Josiah's reformation,^e or it may mean simply "the last vestige," i.e. "the whole." Isa. xiv. 22. Chemarims, idol-priests.^f with the priests, i.e. the unfaithful priests of Jehovah. (5) housetops, chosen for worship-places, bec. in full view of the heavenly bodies.^g by the Lord, better, to Jehovah, and yet, with strange inconsistency, swear also to Malcham, or Moloch, or the word may be trans. "your king," and then it may be referred to Baal. (6) turned back, in apostasy.^h not sought, etc., the indifferent who do not trouble themselves about religion.

Vs. 7.—The Soul's Silence before the Presence of the Lord.—I. A silence of adoration. As becomes a creature in the presence of his Creator (Zech. ii. 13; Hab. ii. 20), and a sinner in the presence of the Holy One (Job. xl. 4). II. A silence of contemplation. As befits the soul in those moments in which God reveals himself in nature (Job xxxvii. 14) or in grace (Gen. xvii. 3; Exod. xiv. 13). III. A silence of expectation. As a praying soul maintains when looking out for a response to his supplications (Ps. lxii. 1, 5, margin), or a perplexed spirit when waiting for God to clear up the mystery of his providence (Ps. xxxvii. 7, margin). IV. A silence of submission. As they preserve who recognize the ills of life to proceed from the hand of God (Ps. xxxix. 2; Lam. iii. 28, 29). V. A silence of approbation. As God's judgments will enforce upon all who behold them (Ps. xlv. 10).—T. Whitelaw.

7-10. (7) hold thy peace, Heb. Hush!ⁱ day, etc., the expression usually signifies God's time of judgment. sacrifice, the wicked Jewish people, who are now to be offered up. bid, R. V. "sanctified." guests, fig. for the foes who shall devour Judah.^j (8) punish, lit. visit upon. strange apparel, R. V. "foreign apparel," such as imitate foreign manners and customs. (9) leap, etc.,^k prob. referring to deeds of violence and robbery, as the following clause indicates. Am. iii. 10; Je. v. 27. (10) fish gate, 2 Chr. xxxiii. 14; Ne. iii. 3, xii. 39. Situated in the northern wall of Jerusalem. second, R. V. "second quarters." hills, of Jerusalem. The vs. describes the noise and terror of an enemy breaking into the city on the north.

That Leap on the Threshold.—A great number of attendants is a modern piece of Oriental magnificence; it appears to have been so anciently, Eccles. v. 11; these servants, now, it is most certain, frequently attend their master on horseback, richly attired, sometimes to the number of twenty-five or thirty: if they did so anciently, with a number of servants attending great men, who are represented by this very Prophet as at that time in common terrible oppressors, ch. iii. 3, they may be naturally supposed to ride into people's houses, and having gained ad-

^a Gesenius.^b Je. viii. 13.^c Ro. viii. 22.^d Eze. vii. 19, xiv. 3, 4.^e "To know the pains of power, we must go to those who have it; to know its pleasures, we must go to those who are seeking it; the pains of power are real, its pleasures imaginary."—C. Colton.^f "The remains of Baal worship, which as yet Josiah was unable utterly to eradicate in remoter places. Baal was the Phœnician tutelary god."

—Fausset.

^g 2 Ki. xxiii. 5.^h 2 Ki. xxiii. 5, 12; Je. xix. 13, xxiii. 29.ⁱ Je. ii. 13, 17.^j Ha. ii. 20; Zec. ii. 13.^k "The illus. is drawn from those sacrifices in wh. the offerer invited his friends to share the flesh of the victim, see 1 Sa. ix. 12, 13."—Spk. Com.^l "Leap over the threshold;" in imitation of the Philistine custom of not treading on the threshold. 1 Sa. v. 5.—Rosenmüller.

Submission is the most becoming attitude. The praise of silence has its pre-eminent advocate in Carlyle, who writes: "Nay, in thy own perplexities, do thou thyself but hold thy tongue for one day: on the morrow, how much clearer are thy purposes and duties; what wreck and rubbish have those mute workmen within thee swept away, when intrusive noises were shut out."

a Ho. xii. 7. "Those whose souls were engrossed in buying and selling, and getting money, had forfeited the honored name of Israel, and deserved to be called by the name of the original inhabitants, whom they closely resembled." — Spk. Com.

b "Image from the crust formed at the bottom of wines long left undisturbed."

—Fausset.

"There is no keeping back the power we have. He hath no power who hath not power to use." — Bailey.

"Let him that would be at quiet take heed not to provoke men in power." — Seneca.

a Joel ii. 1, 11; Ro. xiii. 12; He. x. 37; Re. xxii. 20.

"Let not sinners be laid asleep by the patience of God, for when the measure of their iniquity is full, His justice will both overtake and overcome, will make quick work and thorough work." — Mat. Henry.

"Power! 'tis the favorite attribute of gods, who look with smiles on men, who can aspire to copy them." — Martyn.

mission by deceit, to force from them by violence considerable contributions: for this riding into houses is not now only practiced by the Arabs; it consequently might be practiced by others, too, anciently. It is not now peculiar to the Arabs, for Le Bruyn, after describing the magnificent furniture of several of the Armenian merchants at Julfa, that suburb of Ispahan in which they live, tells us, that the front door of the greatest part of these houses is very small, partly to hinder the Persians from entering into them on horseback, and partly that they may less observe the magnificence within. If this text refers to a violence of this sort, they are the thresholds of the oppressed over which they leaped, not the thresholds of the oppressive masters, which some have supposed, when they returned laden with spoil.—Harmer.

11—13. (11) Maktesh, probably a part, or street, of Jerusalem. merchant people, or people of Canaan.^a bear silver, those who have gotten wealth by trade and usury. (12) search .. candles, the darkest places shall be penetrated and those hiding in them discovered. In the pictures of Zephaniah as a saint he is represented carrying a lantern. settled .. lees, marg. curded, crusted, thickened. good .. evil, i.e. He does not concern Himself about us. The vs. describes a prosperous, self-indulgent, semi-sceptical class. (13) therefore, etc., comp. De. xxviii. 39; Am. v. 11.

The Diligent Search and the Certain Discovery (vs. 12).—I. The nature of the search. 1. Determined; 2. Universal. (a) No bribe can avert it; (b) No strength can resist it. II. The design of the search. 1. To rouse the spiritually hardened; 2. To reprove the practically indifferent; 3. To punish the worldly-minded.—Hom. Com.

Settled on Their Lees (vs. 12).—The margin has, in place of "settled," "curdled or thickened." The Tamul translation has this, "dregs stirred up," i.e. sediment shaken together well thickened. Of people who are in great straits, of those who are a strange compound of good and evil, of things which are difficult to understand, it is said, "Ah! this is all kullumbinvandal," i.e. stirred up dregs. This appears to have been the state of the Jews, and they wanted to show that the Lord would neither do good nor evil; that in Him was not any distinct character; and that He would not regard them in their thickened and mixed condition; that though they were joined to the heathen, it was not of any consequence. "I will search Jerusalem with candles;" thus were they mistaken in their false hopes. Does a man declare his innocence of any crime, the accusers say, "We will search thee with lamps." "Yes, yes, I will look into that affair with lamps!" "What! have your lamps gone out? You see I am not guilty." — Roberts.

14—16. (14) day of the Lord, sometimes in the Scriptures the terrors of the day of the Lord are represented as due to His manifestation of Himself and the convulsions of nature that accompany His appearing, "when he arises to shake terribly the earth" (Is. ii. 10—22); at other times, as in the present passage and in Is. xiii., besides the supernatural gloom and terrors that surround Him when He appears, He is represented as using some terrible distant nation as the instrument by which He executes His judgment.—Camb. B. hasteth, seems, to the Prophet, to be hurrying swiftly. voice, it is near, so that the sound of it is heard. cry, or shriek, comp. Is. xiii. 7, 8. (15) wrath, Je. xxx. 7; Joel ii. 11. The first words of the Vulgate translation of this verse, Dies iræ dies illa, were adopted by Thomas of Celano as the opening words of his splendid hymn on the Last Judgment. (16) trumpet, or signal of war. alarm, or war-shout.

Zephaniah, the Prophet of the Day of the Lord.—

A day of wrath, of darkness and distress,

When God will search with candles, and will seize

The careless doubters, settled on their lees,

Who live in luxury and selfishness.

The enemy, resentful, pitiless,

With banners waving in the morning breeze,

The city gates shall enter at their ease,

And all its treasures spoil beyond redress.

But sing, O Zion! There's another day
Of God, when He, thy King, who's in the midst
Of thee, shall joy o'er thee, and rest in love;
Thy foe cast out, thy judgments take away;
Let thee no more see evil, since thou didst
Not doubt, but patiently His goodness prove.—C. S. Hoyt.

17, 18. (17) bring distress, comp. De. xxviii. 52. like blind, in utter and hopeless bewilderment. dust . . . dung, refuse and worthless things. (18) neither, etc., Pr. xi. 4; Eze. vii. 19. speedy riddance, R. V. "an end, yea, a terrible end."

The Greatness of God.—

A million torches, lighted by Thy hand,
Wander unwearied through the blue abyss;
They own Thy power, accomplish Thy command,
All gay with life, all eloquent with bliss;
What shall we call them? Piles of crystal light?
A glorious company of golden streams?
Lamps of celestial ether, burning bright?
Suns, lighting systems with their joyous beams?
But Thou to these art as the noon to night!

Yes! as a drop of water in the sea,
All this magnificence in Thee is lost.
What are ten thousand worlds compared to Thee?
And what am I, then? Heaven's unnumber'd host,
Though multiplied by myriads, and array'd
In all the glory of sublimest thought,
Is but an atom, in the balance weigh'd Against Thy greatness,—is a cypher brought Against infinity! What am I? Nought!

CHAPTER THE SECOND.

1—3. (1) Gather yourselves together, to make confession and supplication to God. not desired, R. V. "that hath no shame."^a (2) before the decree, etc., before the Divine purpose bring forth its effects. before the day, etc., Camb. B.: "before ye become like the chaff that passeth by." (3) meek, or pious, humble souls.^b hid,^c so as to be preserved in the time of judgment and calamity, Is. xxvi. 20. Such preservation, however, cannot be absolutely assured. Oftentimes the righteous have to share national troubles with the wicked.

Now.—When a course is felt by us to be right, we ought at once to pursue it. "What is 'now'?" 'A bright presence.' Wrestle with it, and say, 'I will not let thee go except thou bless me!' 'A sweet garden.' Go, gather in it the fruits of life! 'A true temple.' Bow down in it, and consecrate yourself to him who has placed you within its shrine! 'A living rescue.' Use it, that you may run into the ark of safety! 'A rich banquet.' Now the feast is spread: 'Come, eat, O friends, drink, O beloved! yea, eat and live for ever!'—M. F. Tupper.

4—7. (4) The nations on whom the impending judgment shall fall are: (1) the Philistines (vss. 4—7); (2) Moab and Ammon (vss. 8—11); (3) Cush or the Ethiopians (vs. 12); and (4) Assyria (vss. 13—15). In relation to Judah the four nations named lay respectively west, east, south, and north. Gaza, etc., the principal cities of the Philistine plain.^a at the noon day, perhaps the meaning is "in the half of the day."—Camb. B. appendix. (5) Cherethites, 1 Sa. xxx. 14. Canaan, wh. included Philistia. (6) dwellings and cottages, etc., R. V. marg. "pastures with caves for shepherds," etc., the sign of a desolate and uninhabited district. (7) remnant,^b those restored fr. captivity. They did pasture their flocks in this seacoast region. turn away, etc., R. V. "bring again their captivity."

Ascalon.—The site of Ascalon is in form like an old Roman theatre, —the sea in front, and the ground once occupied by the city rising grad-

"Thou, whosoever hast been wont to speak against God, as if he had no care about earthly affairs, cease thy murmurs and self-justifications: submit thyself to God, and repent in time." —Calvin.

"As the vintner goes through his cellars, torch in hand; or as the head of the household, taper in hand, searches every nook and corner of his house before the Passover, lest any morsel of leaven should be hidden in it, so Jehovah will 'search Jerusalem with candles,' hunting the evil out of every dark nook in which they have concealed themselves, suffering none to escape."

^a"Or, 'O nation not ashamed,' lost to all sense of shame, and therefore unwilling to receive correction, and incapable of amendment." — Wordsworth.

^b Mat. v. 5.

^c Ps. xxvii. 5.

"Lord," says Augustine, "I have viewed the world over, in which thou hast set me; I have tried how this and that thing will fit my spirit and the design of my creation; and can find nothing in which to rest, for nothing here doth itself rest. Lo, I come to thee, the eternal Being, the Spring of Life, the Centre of rest, the Fullness of all things!"

^a This prophecy has been literally fulfilled; scarcely a trace of these once flourishing cities is now left.

^b Hag. i. 12, 11. 2.

G. Adam Smith translates vs. 4, 5 as follows: For Gaza forsaken shall be, Ashk'lon a desert. Ashdod—by noon shall they rout her, and Ekron be torn up! Ah! woe, dwellers of the sea-shore, folk of Kere-thim. The word of Jehovah against thee, Kena'an, land of the Philistines!

^a For prophecies against Moab, see Nu. xxiv. 17; Is. xv. xvi.; Am. ii. 1—3; Je. xlviii.

For prophecies against Ammon see Am. i. 13—15; Je. xlix.; Eze. xxv. 1—7.

^b Poss. it designates the prickly acanthus, a very common and troublesome weed. ^c abundant among ruins."—Tristram. Pride. That wh. first overcame man, is the last thing he overcomes.—Augustine.

"It is a dangerous indiscretion for a man not to know the bounds of his own calling."—Bp. Hall.

^c "A bird somewhat smaller than a heron, of solitary habits, and frequenting marshy lands. It is a bird of the wilds, almost a bird of desolation, avoiding alike the neighborhood of man and the progress of man's improvements."—Bib. Things.

^d Ha. i. 8.

^e "They were so given to bantering, that it was hard to say when they were serious."—Mat. Henry.

"Sins of commission are usual punishments for sins of omission. He that usually and uniformly to the wall, which runs in a semicircle from shore to shore. Not a house, not a fragment of a house, remains standing. Not a foundation of temple or palace can be traced entire. One half of it is occupied by miniature fields, and vineyards, and fig orchards; rubbish-mounds here and there among them, and great heaps of hewn stones, and broken shafts, and sculptured slabs of granite and marble. The rude fences exhibit similar painful evidences of ancient wealth and magnificence. The other half of the site was still more fearfully desolate. It is so thickly covered with drift sand, that not a heap of rubbish, not a vestige of ruin, remains visible, save here and there where the top of a column rises like a tombstone above the smooth surface. The sand is fast advancing; it has already covered some of the highest fragments of the southern and western wall, and ere a quarter of a century has passed, the site of Ascalon will have been blotted out for ever.—Porter.

8—11. reproach . . Ammon,^a the neighboring nations, wh. had long manifested bitter enmity against the Jews. magnified . . border, Am. i. 13. (9) as Sodom, the type of utter and overwhelming destruction. nettles,^b the growth of waste places. (10) this, overwhelming judgment, comp. Is. xv. 6; Je. xlvii. 29. (11) famish, etc., by depriving them of their worship, offerings, and worshippers. worship him, i.e. Jehovah. every one from his place, this seems to mean that without making pilgrimages to Jerusalem (Is. ii. 3; *Zech. viii. 22, xiv. 16) the peoples shall worship Jehovah, every man in his own land (Mat. i. 11).

12—15. (12) Ethiopians, Ge. x. 6; allies of the Egyptians. These were conquered by Nebuchadnezzar. "Ethiopia or Cush was the country lying south of Egypt. Stretching from Syene (Assouan) southward, it corresponded to Nubia and the modern Soudan." (13) Assyria, the earlier kingdom, whose capital was Nineveh, and which Babylon conquered and absorbed. (14) beasts of the nations, "beasts" is in apposition with "flocks." The flocks and herds of all nations shall make Assyria their pasture ground. cormorant, or pelican, Ps. cii. 6. bittern, Tristram says: "the bittern is very abundant in these swamps of the Tigris." upper lintels, or capitals of her columns. uncover . . work, laying bare the interior decorations as the palaces dropped into ruins. (15) carelessly, heedless of all warnings, Is. xlvii. 8. I am, etc., this is the expression of the pride and self-satisfaction of Nineveh. hiss, etc., Na. iii. 19.

Nineveh.—This doom on Nineveh was carried out to the very letter. It was not simply the largest city of the ancient world. In the mouth of the Hebrew prophets it was the name of a district, 25 miles long, by 15 broad, which included four large cities, besides villages and forts, within its protecting walls. About six centuries B.C., this vast populous district was conquered and destroyed by the Medes (under Cyaxares), and the Chaldeans (under Nabopolassar, father of Nebuchadnezzar). So complete was the destruction, that with startling abruptness the great city vanished from the face of the earth, and its very ruins were hidden from the eyes of men. In A.D. 1766, Niebuhr, the great historian, stood on the eastern bank, which he took to be acclivities wrought by the hand of nature. It was not till A.D. 1842 that Layard, Rawlinson, and Botta dug into these mounds, exhumed and interpreted the remains which tell the story of the city's greatness, luxury, and culture with a power beyond that of words.—S. Cox.

CHAPTER THE THIRD.

1—4. (1) her, i.e. Jerusalem, wh. at the time was filled with the sins of luxury and cruelty. filthy, R. V. "rebellious." (2) the voice, of gracious warning. (3) roaring lions, resembling such in their violent dealings with the people. evening wolves, fiercely ravening for their prey.^a gnaw . . morrow, R. V. "they leave nothing till the morrow." (4) light, reckless, unprincipled.^b violence . . law, Eze. xxii. 26.

Special Need of Watchfulness.—When cast by Providence among sinful persons who respect us, we ought to be peculiarly watchful. The hatred of the ungodly, when poured upon Christians in the form of persecution, is seldom harmful to their spiritual nature, but the friendship of the world is always to be suspected. When the servants of the high priest allowed Peter to warm his hands at the fire, had Peter been a wise man, he would have been afraid that evil would come to it. We are disarmed by kindness, but it is never safe to be disarmed in an enemy's country. "Who," says the old proverb, "could live in Rome and yet be at war with the pope?" Who can have much to do with sinners and not have something to do with their sins? The smiling daughters of Moab did more mischief to Israel than all Balak's frowning warriors. All Philistia could not have blinded Samson if Delilah's charms had not deluded him. Our worst foes will be found among our ungodly friends. Those who are false to God, are not likely to be true to us. Walk carefully, believer, if thy way lie by the sinner's door, and especially if that sinner hath acted a friendly part to thee.—Spurgeon.

5-7. (5) all these wrongs they practice undeterred by the presence and operations of the righteous Lord in the midst of them. just Lord, etc., R. V. "The Lord in the midst of her is righteous." every morning, or "morning by morning." His moral rule is as constant and as visible as the material law that brings in the dawn. Cf. Hos. vi. 5. The fact that God was in the midst of them, witnessing against their wrongdoings, aggravated their iniquity...no shame, on account of his sin. Jer. vi. 15; viii. 12. (6) Jehovah's righteous rule is exercised not only in the midst of Israel itself, but also among the nations without. cut off the nations, R. V. "cut off nations." "No particular nations are named; history is full of God's judgments on the peoples for their unrighteousness, the Flood, the overthrow of Sodom, the destruction of Samaria, and the like." (7) God's purpose in these judgments on the nations was that Israel should take warning from them and receive instruction. so their dwelling, etc., R. V. "so her dwelling should not be cut off, according to all that I have appointed concerning her." rose early, the usual sign of doing things earnestly.

Effect of Neglecting God (vss. 7, 8).—I. What God has been expecting of us. 1. There have been judgments of God on surrounding nations; 2. God has been speaking to us by these events. II. How we have disappointed His expectations. 1. Hear the accusation of God against us; 2. The accusation is applicable to all. III. What we may expect from Him.—1. In a way of judgment; 2. In a way of mercy.—Simeon.

God's Watchful Care.—A little boy was running about in an apartment, amusing himself, as children are accustomed to do. His money was potsherds, his house bits of wood, his horse, a stick, and his child a doll. In the same apartment sat his father, at a table, occupied with important matters of business, which he noted and arranged for the future benefit of his young companion. The child frequently ran to him, asked many foolish questions, and begged one thing after another as necessary for his diversion. The father answered briefly, did not intermit his work, but, all the time, kept a watchful eye over the child, to save him from any serious fall or injury. Gotthold was a spectator of the scene, and thought with himself: "How beautiful an adumbration of the fatherly care of God! We, too, who are old children, course about in the world, and often play at games which are much more foolish than those of our little ones: we collect and scatter, build and demolish, plant and pluck up, ride and drive, eat and drink, sing and play, and fancy that we are performing great exploits, well worthy of God's special attention. Meanwhile, however, the Omniscient is sitting by, and writing our days in His book. He orders and executes all that is to befall us, overruling it for our best interests in time and eternity: and yet His eye never ceases to watch over us and the childish sports in which we are engaged, that we may meet with no deadly mischief."

8-10. (8) wait ye upon me, R. V. "for me." The exhortation is addressed to the pious among the Jews, as in ch. ii. 3, and is used in a good sense (Ps. xxxiii. 20), urging them not to despair, but to be patient under the affliction, in the assured hope of salvation.—Pulp. Com. fire .. jealousy, ch. i. 18. (9) pure language, or lip. They shall sincerely take upon their lips the name of Jehovah. one consent, lit. one shoulder:

leaves a duty may fear, to be left to commit a crime."—Gurnall. "We may lose heaven by neutrality as well as by hostility, by wanting oil as well as by drinking poison. An unprofitable servant shall as much be punished as a prodigal son. Undone duty will undo our souls." — Bowes. The last words of the industrious Archbishop Usher were, "Lord, in special, forgive me my sins of omission."

a "The morning is the usual time in the sultry East for dispensing justice." — Fausset.

b "God rose up early, to send them His Prophets, to reduce and reclaim them, but they were up before Him, to shut and bolt the door against Him." — Mat. Henry.

"Never put much confidence in such as put no confidence in others. A man prone to suspect evil is mostly looking in his neighbor for what he sees in himself. As to the pure all things are pure, even so to the impure all things are impure." — J. C. Hare.

c Is. lx. 4, 9, lxvi. 20. "The confidence we have in ourselves creates a great part of that trust which we have in others. The greatest part of our confidence proceeds from a desire either to be pitied or admired." — Beaumont.

Vs. 13—“We little expected this when Zephaniah opened his judgment. We expected the fire to devour every root, and that nothing would be left behind but white ashes; and lo! such has been the effect of the threatened judgment of God, that truth takes the place of lies, vice is displaced by virtue, and the mouth that was befouled with deceit is now found to be the instrument of purity and music. Do not despair of the worst. The worst should not despair of themselves.” — J. Parker.

“What is public history but a register of the successes and disappointments, the vices, the follies and the quarrels of those who engage in contention for power?”—Paley.

“Prayer sanctifies all our actions. When the mind in the morning opens to God, as the eye to the sun’s clear light, by the radiance of the Divine beams we become enlightened inwardly all the day.”—Feltham.

a He. xli. 12;
Is. xxxv. 3, 4.

“as of men helping one another to support a heavy load.” (10) my suppliants,” “looking to the thought in Isa. lxvi. 20 (where it is said that the Gentiles shall bring the Israelites out of all nations as a meat offering unto the Lord), we had better render the passage as the R. V. margin, “They shall bring my suppliants, even the daughter of my dispersed, for an offering unto me.” The remote Gentiles shall show their faith in God by aiding the Hebrews among them to turn to the Lord; this shall be their offering to the true God, whom they have learned to adore.” —Pulp. Com.

With One Shoulder.—Only when all men serve God with one shoulder the sense of strain and distress will pass from us. To love God is to love man. Till they share our freedom, it cannot be a happy freedom. Till they love him and do his will, they will put many hindrances and temptations in our way which make obedience hard and painful. If they do not take their full share in bearing the burden, it will press unduly upon our shoulders. If some are morally taller and others morally shorter, men do not keep step. Only when the whole world stands under the Divine burden with one shoulder, and moves with one step, will our freedom be a happy freedom, and God’s statutes become our songs. Seeing how men suffer from the sins of men, and nations from the sins of nations, we may well long and pray for the time when all men shall speak with a pure lip and serve with a single shoulder.—Preacher’s Lantern.

11—13. (11) not be ashamed, God addresses Israel repentant, and assures her that she shall not have cause to blush for her iniquities, because she has become humble and obedient. them that rejoice in thy pride, R. V. “thy proudly exulting ones.” (12) I will also leave, R. V. “But I will leave,” an afflicted and poor people, “afflicted in its modern sense is too strong. The idea is “lowly,” not “haughty.” (13) The remnant, the idea that only a remnant shall be saved, is common to all the prophets. Isa. x. 21, 22; Joel ii. 32.

The Restored Remnant.—I. Their spiritual character. 1. They are few in number; 2. They are humble in spirit; 3. They are dependent upon God; 4. They are upright in conduct. II. Their blessed condition. 1. They are cleansed from shame for sin; 2. They are delivered from spiritual pride; 3. They are redeemed from proud oppressors; 4. They are specially protected by God.—Hom. Com.

14, 15. (14) daughter of Zion, Is. xii. 6, liv. 1. “Such hymns of joy properly belong to the times of the Gospel.” (15) taken away, removed them, bec. their end was sufficiently accomplished. the king, the only true King. “The prophecy of the perpetual Divine presence is fulfilled in God the Son, Emmanuel, God with us.”

Shalt Not See Evil Any More.—Tell the mariner that no more shall the sea be lashed into a storm; tell the wayfaring man that no more shall the lion rise up suddenly in his path; tell the toiler that no more shall blight devastate his harvest; and he will have some idea of the joy that must have filled the heart of Jerusalem when the Lord predicted that evil should not be seen any more within the lines of her beauty, within the security of her defences. What great feasts the Lord provides his people! How rapturous is the music of reconciliation!—Parker.

16, 17. (16) slack, or faint. This is gracious comforting for the feeble-minded and timid. (17) rejoice over thee, in having now the opportunity of doing thee good. rest, literally “be silent in his love,” the words seem to mean that God’s love will be so deep as to hush motion or speech; it will be a silent ecstasy.—Camb. B.

God and His People.—I. God’s relation to his people. 1. Their covenant God; 2. Their rightful King; 3. Their mighty Saviour. II. God’s presence with his people. He is in their midst. 1. In the Spirit of his Son; 2. In the Word of his truth; 3. In the ordinances of his Church. III. God’s work for his people. Salvation: 1. From the guilt and power of sin; 2. From the danger of ignorance and error; 3. From the temptations and corruptions of the world; 4. From the fear of death and the dominion of the grave. IV. God’s delight in his people. 1. True and tender; 2. Full and deep; 3. Perfect and abiding.—T. Whitelaw.

Through love to light! Oh, wonderful the way,
That leads from darkness to the perfect day!

From darkness and from sorrow of the night,

To morning that comes singing o'er the sea.

Through love to light! Through light, O God! to thee,
Who art the love of love, the eternal light of light.

—Richard W. Gilder.

18—20. (18) them that are sorrowful, etc., the reference is to the Jews dispersed among the nations, far from the sanctuary and the feasts.^b of thee, i.e. of thy true citizens. the reproach, of being under Divine judgments, and in bitter captivity. (19) undo all, R. V. "deal with all." halteth, the afflicted of Israel are compared to a lame and footsore flock of sheep. Hence the feminine gender. Mic. iv. 6, 7; Ezek. xxxiv. 16. (20) even in the time, R. V. "and at that time will I gather you!" before your eyes, the deliverance shall not be delayed till their eyes are closed and be seen only by their children. Their own eyes shall see it.

The Wonderful Restoration.—I. A restoration glorious in its character. 1. It will be divinely performed; 2. It will be completely performed; 3. It will be visibly performed. II. A restoration certain in its accomplishment. 1. Unimpeded by outward enemies; 2. Unimpeded by internal weakness.—Pul. Com.

Divine Restoration.—The Lord did not build the universe that he might destroy it; wherever there are marks of destruction they are footprints of an enemy; the purpose of the Lord is to obliterate such footprints, to rebuild all shattered strength, to restore all marred beauty; and when the Lord has set himself to work out a purpose, who can withstand the pressure and the progress of his omnipotence? Let all evangelical thinkers and workers, yea, all evangelical men, know that they are moving in the line of the divine intent. Let them nourish themselves with the fatness of the divine promises, and be assured that, come what may, the Lord will ultimately prevail.—J. Parker.

^b La. ii. 6.

"The immediate judgment with which Zephaniah threatened Jerusalem was averted. But his prophecy began to be fulfilled in the disasters which befell neighboring nations. It was fulfilled yet further in those great convulsions of the nations of the East which followed shortly. It was fulfilled for Judah in the captivity and destruction of the guilty nation. For these were all steps of progress advancing towards the great end, elements contributing to the fulness of the times, preludes to the establishment of the universal divine kingdom."

—Kirkpatrick.

Introduction.

I. Author. Haggai. He was the first of the three prophets, who belong to that final stage of Jewish history which began with the return from the captivity in Babylon. Two of them, he and Zechariah, prophesied at its commencement. Malachi followed about a hundred years later. After that, the voice of prophecy was silent for four centuries till the days of John the Baptist. Of the personal history of Haggai scarcely anything is known. His tribe and parentage are not told us. It would seem most probable that he was among the captives who returned from Babylon, and there is a tradition that he was born during the exile in that city. The Book of Ezra, which contains the history of the return from Babylon, and of the events which followed immediately upon it, mentions both Haggai and Zechariah by name, and describes the effect upon the people of their prophecies, of which the written records are preserved to us in their Books (Ezra v. 1; vi. 14).—Cambridge Bible. II. Time. B.C. 520, September to December. III. Style. Prosaic, but parallelisms occasionally appear (see i. 6, 9, 10, ii. 6, 8, 22). He frequently introduces interrogatories (as in i. 4, 9, ii. 3, 12, 13, 19). It may be added that "the desire of all nations" (ii. 7) cannot directly apply to Christ; it should rather be rendered "the choice of all nations." All shall be shaken, or fear; but the choicest, the best, shall come to give honor to God. It is not denied that this has its full accomplishment in Messianic times. IV. Theme. Haggai was commissioned to stir up the flagging zeal of the people, informing them that the unproductive seasons which they had experienced were the punishment of their negligence, and assuring them that the second temple, far from being inferior to that of Solomon, should exceed it in glory.—Litton.

Synopsis.

(According to Horne.)

DISCOURSE I. The people reproved for delay in building the temple; and told that their neglect has resulted in bad seasons..i. 1—12

They are encouraged to undertake the work, and promised Divine assistance.....13—15

DISCOURSE II. The builders are promised that the glory of the second temple should surpass that of the first—this prophecy was fulfilled by Jesus Christ honoring the second temple with His presence, and there publishing His saving doctrine to the world (see Luke xix. 47, xx. 1, xxi. 38; John xviii. 20); and that the harvest of the following year should be good.....ii. 1—19

DISCOURSE III. The setting up of Messiah's kingdom under the name of Zerubbabel foretoldii. 20—23

CHAPTER THE FIRST.

The first prophecy, chap. i. 1, 2. (1) Darius, Darius Hystaspes.^a sixth month, "i.e. of the Jewish year. While they had kings of their own the Jewish historians were wont, as we see throughout the Books of Kings and Chronicles, to date events by the years of their reigns. Now that their own monarchy was at an end, they use instead the year of the foreign Sovereign to whom they were tributary. The transition is observable in vs. 8 of 2 Kings xxv. as compared with vs. 1. But the months are still those of their own calendar. The sixth month was called Elul after the return from Babylon. (Neh. vi. 15; 1 Macc. xiv. 27.)"—Camb. Bib. Haggai, meaning, as some suppose, festive; but this is uncertain. Zerubbabel, comp. Ezr. i. 8, iii. 8. (2) this people, bec. of their sinful state of mind God does not address them as My people. not come, R. V., "It is not the time for us to come." An idle excuse with no special reason. "By and by. It is not time yet."

The House of God.—You have all got into the habit of calling the church the "house of God." I have seen over the doors of many churches the legend actually carved, "This is the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven." Now, note where that legend comes from, and of what place it was first spoken. A boy leaves his father's house to go on a long journey on foot, to visit his uncle; he has to cross a wild hill desert; just as if one of your own boys had to cross the wilds of Westmoreland, to visit an uncle at Carlisle. The second or third day your boy finds himself somewhere between Hawes and Brough, in the midst of the moors, at sunset. It is stony ground, and boggy; he cannot go one foot further that night. Down he lies to sleep on Wharfedale where best he may, gathering a few of the stones together to put under his head—so wild the place is he cannot get anything but stones. And there, lying under the broad light, he has a dream; and he sees a ladder set up on the earth, and the top of it reaches to heaven, and the angels of God are ascending and descending upon it. And when he wakes out of his sleep, he says, "How dreadful is this place: surely, this is none other than the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven." This place, observe; not this church; not this city; not this stone even, which he puts up for a memorial—the piece of flint on which his head has lain. But this place; this windy slope of Wharfedale; this moorland hollow, torrent-bitten, snow-blighted; this any place where God lets down the ladder. And how are you to know where that will be? or how are you to determine where it may be, but by being ready for it always? Do you know where the lightning is to fall next? You do know that, partly: you can guide the lightning; but you cannot guide the going forth of the Spirit, which is as the lightning when it shines from the east to the west. But the perpetual and insolent warping of that strong verse to serve a merely ecclesiastical purpose, is only one of the thousand instances in which we sink back into gross Judaism.

Haggai, the Prophet of Reconstruction.—

'Mid blended shouts of joy and grief were laid
The stones whereon the exile's hopes were based.
Then foes conspired. The king his course retraced,
His throne against the enterprise arrayed.
And now self-seeking, apathy, invade
All hearts. The pulse grows faint, the will unbraced.
They rear their houses, let God's house lie waste.
So heaven from dew and earth from fruit are stayed.

There comes swift messenger from higher court,
With rugged message, of divine import:—

"Your ways consider; be ye strong and build;
With greater glory shall this house be filled."

He touched their conscience, and their spirit stirred
To nerve their hands for work, their loins regird.

^a Ezr. iv. 5, 24.

"Darius was a common name of the Persian kings, as Pharaoh of those of Egypt, and Caesar of those of Rome."—Fausset.

^b "The temple began to be rebuilt in the year B. C. 535. But in consequence of opposition from without, and the failure of faith and courage within, the work of building the temple was intermitted for fifteen years."—Wordsworth.

Christians in Greenland very seldom, if ever, absent themselves from public worship on account of the weather. When it is so cold that their breath freezes and forms icicles on their faces, they yet go long distances—men, women, and children—through snow and ice, storm etc., to the house of prayer. Through much greater sacrifice than the Christians of more favored lands do the poor Greenlanders obey the injunction not to forsake the assembling of themselves together.

c "It argues a great contempt of God and religion, when men think no cost or finery too much to bestow upon themselves, and the meanest accommodation good enough for the service of God."—Lowth.

In the East at the present day "the chief ornament of a room on which the chief expense is laid out, is the ceiling. The favorite ceiling is made of wood, carved in intricate and graceful arabesque figures painted in brilliant, gorgeous colors, and sometimes extremely beautiful. A favorite color for ceilings in Asia Minor, and one of the most enduring, is vermilion."—Van Lennep.

"Get the work done, then the blessing will come. There are some of us who want the blessing without the work, and we cannot have it. You cannot have the harvest without having first the seedtime, and that seedtime may be very cold and harsh, and you may have to face many a morning that is all keenness and coldness."—Parker.

a "If God cross us in our temporal affairs, and we meet with trouble and disappointment, we shall find this is the cause of it; the work we have to do for God and our own souls is left undone, and we seek our own things more than the things of Jesus Christ."—Mat. Henry.

3—6. (3) then, in special application to this sinful negligence. (4) you, O ye, "the repetition of the pronoun is emphatic." "Is it a time for you—you—to be dwelling in houses ceiled with planks, while this House is waste?"—G. A. Smith. ceiled, or wainscoted, a favorite form of ornamentation.° this house, the temple of Jehovah. (5) consider, set your heart on; wisely estimate your past and present conduct. (6) sown, etc., Le. xxvi. 16; De. xxviii. 38. he that earneth wages, "The judgment is not confined to the fruits of the earth, but extends to all branches of human industry. Disappointment and loss mar all alike. 'The labor pictured is not only fruitless, but wearisome and vexing. There is a seeming result of all the labor, something to allure hopes; but forthwith it is gone. The heathen assigned a like baffling of hope as one of the punishments of hell.'"—Pusey, in Camb. B. bag .. holes, a proverbial expression for labor spent to no profit, or permanent advantage.

Idleness.—It was the speech of Mr. Greenham (some time a painful preacher of this nation), that, when the devil tempted a poor soul, she came to him for advice, how she might resist the temptation; and he gave her this answer: "Never be idle, but be always well employed; for in my own experience I have found it, when the devil came to tempt me, I told him that I was not at leisure to hearken to his temptation, and by this means I resisted all his assaults."—Cawdray.

7—9. (7, 8) mountain, R. V. margin, "the hill country." Neh. ii. 8, viii. 15. "The wood-work, wainscoting and panelling, was the chief point now demanding attention." will be glorified, or, as the Chaldee expounds it, "I will place My glory there." (9) blow, so scattering it as chaff before the wind." run, "you are indifferent to the miserable condition of the house of God, while you haste with all diligence to your own houses for business or pleasure, being entirely absorbed in worldly interests, or eager only to adorn and beautify your own habitations."—Pul. Com.

A Dying Request.—"I have one request to make to you," said a dying Christian to his son; "will you grant it me?" The son promised compliance. "That you will, for six months after my death, retire alone to your room for half an hour every day, and think." "On what subject?" inquired the boy. "That," replied the father, "I leave entirely to yourself." He had been a disobedient son, but in this solemn hour he felt that no sacrifice was too great if he could only make amends for the past. The father died. The promise was fulfilled. At first his thoughts wandered to all sorts of subjects, till at length conscience began to work in him. He was alarmed, and was at length led to the Saviour; lived from thenceforth a useful life.—Bib. Treasury.

10, 11. (10) heaven, etc., R. V. "Therefore for your sake the heaven is stayed," etc., i.e. on your account, because of your sin. De. xxviii. 23. dew, one of the most important agents in the sultry East, where rain only falls at fixed periods. "The dews generally are remarkably heavy, and in the summer months take the place of rain. Dr. Thomson speaks of the dew rolling in the morning off his tent like rain."—Pul. Com. (11) drought, Heb. choreb, sounding like chareeb, waste: wh. was the condition in wh. they allowed God's house to be. The terms used indicate a correspondence bet. the sin and the punishment, and so a special appropriateness in the punishment.^a God in Nature.—To those who believe in God, and try to see God in all things, the most minute natural phenomenon cannot be secular. It must be divine—deliberately divine; and I can use no more lofty word. The grain of dust can no more go from God's presence, or flee from God's Spirit, than you or I can. If it go up to the physical heaven, and float—as it actually often does—far above the clouds, in those higher strata of the atmosphere which the aeronaut has never visited, even there it will be obeying physical laws, which we term hastily laws of nature, but which are really laws of God; and if it go down into the abyss, if it be buried fathoms, miles, below the surface, and become an atom of some rock in the process of consolidation, has it escaped from God, even in the bowels of the earth? Is it not there obeying the will and mind of God?—Kingsley.

12—15. (12) remnant, or rest, Ne. vii. 72. fear, in the sense of humbly receiving the Divine reproof, and proceeding, at once and earnestly, to mend their ways. (13) messenger, "The word is that commonly used for an angel in the O.T., but its first and proper meaning is messenger. In the same way in the N.T., the same word is used generally in its restricted sense for an angel, and occasionally in its wider sense for a messenger (Luke vii. 27, ix. 52; James ii. 25). Haggai is the only prophet who uses this title of himself. It is, to say the least, doubtful whether Moses as a prophet is intended by it in Num. xx. 16. Malachi ("my angel or messenger") has it for the only name by which we know him, and he uses it of the Jewish priest (ii. 7), and of John Baptist the forerunner of our Lord, and of our Lord Himself, "the messenger of the Covenant (iii. 1)."—Camb. Bib. with you, graciously recognizing your penitential spirit, and active efforts to do the right. (14) the spirit of, etc., "Note how the narrative emphasizes that the new energy was, as it could not but be from Haggai's unflattering words, a purely spiritual result. It was the spirit of Zerubbabel, and the spirit of Jehoshua, and the spirit of all the rest of the people, which was stirred—their conscience and radical force of character. Not in vain had the people suffered their great disillusion under Cyrus, if now their history was to start again from sources so inward and so pure."—G. A. Smith. (15) four and twentieth, etc., the time is noted to show that, once aroused, the people set at once about the work.

CHAPTER THE SECOND.

The second prophecy, chap. ii. 1—9. 1—3. (1) seventh month, Tisri, or Ethanim. one and twentieth day of the month, "It has been pointed out that this was the seventh and last day of the Feast of Tabernacles (Lev. xxiii. 33—36, 39—43); and it has been suggested that the depressing contrast between the former Temple and the present would be heightened and brought home to the people by the rites and services of the festive season. "The return of this festal celebration, especially after a harvest which had turned out very miserably, and showed no signs of the blessing of God, could not fail to call up vividly before the mind the difference between the former times, when Israel was able to assemble in the courts of the Lord's house, and so to rejoice in the blessings of His Grace in the midst of abundant sacrificial meals, and the present time, when the altar of burnt sacrifice might indeed be restored again, and the building of the temple be resumed, but in which there was no prospect of erecting a building that would in any degree answer to the glory of the former temple."—Keil's Minor Prophets. (2, 3) first glory, as built by Solomon, and as seen before the Babylonish invasion. There might well have been some old men living who could remember it." as nothing,^b R. V. omits "in comparison of it."

The Desire of All Nations (vss. 3—9).—I. The inquiry which is here made. II. The exhortation which is here addressed. III. The assurance which is here given. 1. The character under which Christ is here set forth; 2. The time of His manifestation; 3. The precursors of His coming; 4. The results with which it would be attended.

Memory.—The man who has been since boyhood a stranger from his home and country, and long a wanderer in many lands, will assure you that the past is to him like a dim and confused dream, and that there are few things which he can vividly recall. But let him only return to the home of his childhood, to the rural village, or the old house in which he was nurtured, how touching is it to watch in him the opening up of page after page filled with memories which he cannot choose but read, though each page in the old life-book may be blotted by his tears. As he journeys to the place from which, long ago, he took his departure as a boy, and sees the old hills, the fields, the streams, the rocks, the trees, the church and churchyard, the school, the scattered homesteads,—there is not an object that does not summon up persons who have passed away, and incidents of joy and sorrow, which, up to that moment, he had forgotten!—Macleod.

^a "The 24th day of the sixth month of the second year of Darius would fall in Sept. B. C. 520.

"The longer the soul hath neglected duty, the more ado there is to get it taken up; partly through shame, the soul having played the truant, knows not how to look God in the face, and partly from the difficulty of the work. It requires more time for him to tune his instrument than for another to play the lesson."—A n Old Divine.

"It was now about 66 years since the destruction of the first temple by the Chaldeans."—Wordsworth.

^b The Jews note the foll. 5 points of inferiority. The absence from the second temple of (1) the sacred fire; (2) the Shekinah; (3) the ark and cherubim; (4) the Urim and Thummim; (5) the spirit of prophecy."—Fausset.

^a Ezr. iii. 12.

"Too often a mischievous gloom enters the mind of God's people. Their hands slacken, their energies are paralyzed for the work of God, and they sink into desponding apathy and indolence. Did we realize our present privileges and future prospects, the gleam of sunshine would be to us the earnest of what it will be, when—as Rutherford beautifully observes—"we shall be on the sunny side of the Brae,"" —Bridge.

c "The Jews hesitated about going forward with the work, through dread of the world-power, Medo-Persia, influenced by the craft of Samaria. The Prophet assures them that these and all other world-powers are to fall before Messiah, who is to be associated with this temple; therefore they need fear nought."—Fausset.

a "If the Messias was to come while the second temple stood and if that temple hath ceased to be, then is that Messias already come." — Bp. Pearson.

Be strong, all ye people of the land, saith the Lord, and work (vs. 4). This verse is an admirable prescription for all workers. First, "be strong," have genuine and settled determination. Second, "work." Do not merely determine, but actualize your determination in work. Your doing will react on your determination to do. Third, be sure of God's presence and truth to you as these were for four forefathers. He helped them; He will help you. — Wayland Hoyt.

"To unconverted persons, a great part of the Bible resembles a letter written in cipher. The blessed Spirit's office is to act as God's decipherer, by letting His people into the secret of ce-

4-7. (4) be strong.^c "This is repeated three times for emphasis' sake. The same exhortation was given by David to Solomon before the building of the first temple (1 Chron. xxviii. 10; comp. Josh. i. 6, 7, 9). Haggai seems to suggest comfort in the thought that such admonition was needed at that time as well as now when they are so depressed (comp. Zech. viii. 9)." — Pul. Com. (5) covenanted, God's mercies are ever set before us in this light, they are faithfulness to His covenant and His promise. my spirit, R. V. "and my spirit abode among you." "It is remarkable that the presence of the Spirit should be used as an equivalent to a fulfilment of the covenant on God's part: the idea which pervades the N.T. (comp. Is. lxiii. 10, 11, 14; Neh. ix. 20)." — M. Dods. Ne. ix. 20. (6) a little while, "The true explanation would seem to be that it is not the actual birth of Christ, but the preparation for that event in the 'shaking of all nations,' to which the 'little while' refers. The whole grand future, embracing not only the first but the second coming of Christ and the final consummation of all things, is indeed included in the prophecy. But it was the beginning of the great drama, not its last act, that was then closely at hand. That beginning was the then immediate object of the Church's hope; in that she was to welcome the promise and the presage of all that should follow. Time alone would unfold the plot. In prophetic prospect coming events were confused and blended, just as in our Lord's great prophecy were the circumstances of the destruction of Jerusalem and of the end of the world. But the beginning was near at hand. This shaking commenced immediately. The axe was already laid at the root of the Persian empire, whose subsequent and visible fall was but the manifestation of a far earlier one, which had been hidden from view." (Hengstenberg.) — Camb. Bib. shake the heavens, etc., this apparently refers to prophetic convulsions; see yss. 21, 22. (7) desire, etc., R. V., "and the desirable things of all nations," etc. "We may understand what he says," writes Calvin, "of Christ; we indeed know that Christ was the expectation of the whole world; . . . but as it immediately follows, Mine is the silver and Mine is the gold, the more simple meaning is that which I first stated; that the nations would come, bringing with them all their riches, that they might offer themselves and all their possessions a sacrifice to God." — G. A. Smith; so Camb. Bible, M. Dods and most modern comm.

The Glory of the Latter House (vs. 7).—I. The fulfilment of this prediction in reference to the second temple. 1. By the presentation of Jesus; 2. By His teaching; 3. By His expulsion of the traders; 4. By His miracles. II. The fulfilment of this prediction in reference to the Christian Church. 1. By the spiritual presence of the Redeemer; 2. By the observance of His ordinances; 3. By the perpetuation of His doctrine; 4. By the display of His saving power; 5. By the character of His worshippers.—G. Brooks.

Offices of the Holy Spirit.—He is represented as undertaking and sustaining a great variety of offices in behalf of men; as endowing men with a great variety and abundance of gifts, of which He is the source and author, and in reference to all these offices and gifts they are said to partake of Him, and to have, in proportion to their faith, and according to their faith, a common participation in Him, a right in Him, enduring so long as there is a Church to sustain in the world, till faith is swallowed up in sight. These offices are, perhaps, most compendiously described by the word "Comforter" in the text, which seems to convey the idea of all the help which men stand in need of, and which they may call upon Him to exercise in their behalf. One of our old divines says: "In the sense in which the term Advocate is here employed, we may apply it to a great variety of persons. If we are sick we call to us a physician; if we are perplexed we call to us a lawyer; if we are going to build, we call to us an architect; if we are in trouble, we call to us some kind and affectionate friend; and so as we want it we get advice, and instruction, and comfort from day to day." And so all these persons may be called advocates, or persons called to us, as our necessities or circumstances dictate. But with far greater propriety may we say this of the Holy Ghost. If we are ignorant we call to Him, and He is the Spirit of wisdom and revelation; if we are sorrowful we call to Him, and

He is the Holy Ghost the Comforter; if we are oppressed with unbelief, we call to Him and He gives us power to believe; if we are unholy and under the influence of strong passion, we call to Him and He allays the tumult in our breasts; sanctifies us in body, soul, and spirit. And so, in whatever thing we call upon Him for, suited to our spiritual nature, the Lord our God, blessed be His name, is nigh unto us. And that is the peculiar and crowning glory of the Christian dispensation. We may say far more truly than it was said by Israel of old, even with the tabernacle and pillar of cloud in the midst of them, "What people is there that hath the Lord their God so nigh unto them in all things that they call upon Him for?"—Osborn.

8, 9. (8) silver is mine, the wealth of the nations is in my hand and under my control and it shall be brought for the glory of my house. (9) latter house, R. V., "the latter glory of this house," etc. "The glory here promised is first and most obviously material glory, the desirable things, the precious gifts of all nations. But it includes the spiritual glory, without which in the sight of God material splendor is worthless and unacceptable. Christ Himself, present bodily in the temple on Mount Zion during His life on earth, present spiritually in His Church now, present in the holy city, the heavenly Jerusalem, of which He is the Temple (Rev. xxi. 22), calling forth the spiritual worship and devotion, and as the legitimate and necessary expression of that, the wealth and treasure of all nations, is the glory here predicted. But all this is rather implied, to be discerned by the Church in the growing light of its fulfillment, than expressed, to be understood by those to whom the prophecy was first delivered."—Camb. Bib. peace, Eze. xxxiv. 25, 26; Mi. iv. 3, 4.

The third prophecy, vss. 10—19. 10—14. (10) ninth month, or Chisleu. (12, 13) the force of these vss. is that the evil reaches farther than the good. If one is unclean by a corpse his touch conveys uncleanness; but if he is holy by bearing holy flesh, his touch does not convey holiness. (14) so is this people, etc., that is to say, while the Jews had expected their restored ritual to make them holy to the Lord, this had not been effective, while, on the contrary, their contact with sources of pollution had thoroughly polluted both themselves and their labor and their sacrifices." (14) there, on the "work of their hands," i. e. on the altar built on their return from Babylon. Ezra iii. 3.

The Abiding Influence of Evil.—These poor colonists, in the hope deferred, were learning the old lesson, which humanity finds so hard to understand, that repentance and new-born zeal do not immediately work a change upon our material condition; but the natural consequences of sin often outweigh the influence of conversion, and though devoted to God and very industrious we may still be punished for a sinful past. Evil has an infectious power greater than that of holiness. Its effects are most extensive and lasting. It was no bit of casuistry which Haggai sought to illustrate by his appeal to the priests on the ceremonial law, but an ethical truth deeply embedded in human experience.—Exp. Bib.

15—17. (15) The vs. may be rendered more clearly thus: "And now consider, I pray you, from this day (the 24th day of the 9th month) and upward (that is backward), from (the time when) not yet stone was laid," etc. This covers the time during which, after laying the foundation of the temple, they had ceased to labor upon it. (16) since those days, R. V., "through all that time," etc., i. e. the fourteen years referred to in vs. 15. heap, that should have been, in a good season, twenty measures. God sent bad seasons, as a sign of His displeasure. pressfat, R. V., "wine-fat." (17) blasting and with mildew, "two diseases of the corn which Moses had foretold (Deut. xxviii. 22) as chastisements on disobedience, and God's infliction of which Amos had spoken of in these selfsame words (Amos iv. 9). Haggai adds the hail as destructive of the vines (Psalm lxxviii. 47)."—Pusey. turned not, not recognizing in My judgments the designs of correcting love."

Contemplation.—Some there may be that say, "It is not worth so much time and trouble, to think of the greatness of the joys above: so that we can make sure they are ours, we know they are great." But as these men obey not the command of God, which requires them to have "their conversation in heaven," and to "set their affections on things above," so they wilfully make their own lives miserable, by refusing the lestial experience, as the key and clue to those sweet mysteries of grace which were before as a garden shut up, or as a fountain sealed, or as a book written in an unknown character."

—Toplady.

The later Jewish age shows at least a partial fulfilment of the prophecy (vss. 7—9) in its spiritual significance. "Rites and ceremonies retired more into the background; and prayer began to assume its true place in public worship. The religious knowledge of the people was kept up through the regular public reading and distribution of the Scriptures. Synagogues were established, the people having learnt at Babylon that God's presence might be enjoyed in their assemblies in any place or circumstances. Thus there was kept alive throughout the nation a higher and purer type of religion than it had known before."

—McCundy.

a "Though this people live in a holy land, it does not communicate any holiness to the people by any intrinsic virtue of its own, but it entails upon them all an obligation to personal holiness." —Wordsworth.

a "This people either saw not the hand or God in it (imputing it to chance), or saw not their own sin as the provoking cause of it, and so turned not to Him." —Mat. Henry.

"Modern science has shown that blasting and mildew are produced by plants—they are the diseases occasioned by the growth of minute fungi, . . . the functions of vegetable nature are reversed in them, their pores inhale oxygen, and exhale carbonic gas, like animals." —Hugh Macmillan.

"The prophet's strong faithful speech indicates that there had been amongst these returned captives much of indifference, in reference to the work of God, and it was only right that they should be reminded of this, and that by the painful memory of past failure they should be stimulated to more thorough consecration in the future. The past is irrevocable and irretrievable. No tears, no regrets, can win it back to us. The future, however, is available, and hence, leaving the past, with all our shortcomings in relation to it, and rejoicing in God's mercy, let us go and sin no more."

b Mat. xxiv. 29.
c Da. ii. 44;

Rev. xi. 15.

"Zerubbabel was a man of indomitable courage. Had he been a craven, he never would have done so outwardly foolish a thing as join himself with a handful of pilgrims who proposed to quit their comfortable homes and prosperous estates in Babylon, and undertake a long and perilous journey to a promised land on the other side of the Syrian desert.

delights which God hath set before them. . . . As for you whose heart God hath weaned from all things here below, I hope you will value this heavenly life, and take one walk every day in the New Jerusalem. God is your love and your desire; you would fain be more acquainted with your Saviour; and I know it is your grief that your hearts are not nearer to Him, and that they do not more feelingly love and delight in Him. Oh, try this life of meditation on your heavenly rest. Let the world see by your heavenly lives, that religion is something more than opinions and disputes, or a talk of outward duties. If ever a Christian is like himself, and answerable to his principles and profession, it is when he is most serious and lively in this duty.—Baxter.

18, 19. (18) upward, i. e. "backward." (19) yet in the barn, i. e. is it any longer in the barn? Is it not all exhausted and used up? The meager yield of the blighted corn was soon consumed and the granary left empty. Some have thought that by "the seed" is here meant what would be required to sow the land for another year, and that the dearth and distress are heightened by the fact that there is not even corn enough left to sow. But as the word is frequently used, not of seed corn, but of produce (e. g. 1 Sam. viii. 15; Isaiah xxiii. 3; Job xxxix. 12), and as the remainder of the verse refers to produce, it is better taken in that sense here.—Camb. Bib.

Verses 10—19.—This then is the substance of the whole message. On the 24th day of the 9th month, the Jews had been discouraged that their attempts to build the temple, begun three months before, had not turned the tide of their misfortunes and produced prosperity in their agriculture. Haggai tells them, there is not yet time for the change to work. If contact with a holy thing has only a slight effect, but contact with an unclean thing has a much greater effect (verses 11—13), then their attempts to build the temple must have less good influence upon their condition than the bad influence of all their past devotion to themselves and their secular labors. That is why adversity still continues, but courage! from this day on God will bless. The whole message is, therefore, opportune to the date at which it was delivered, and comes naturally on the back of Haggai's previous oracles.—G. A. Smith.

The fourth prophecy, vss. 20—23. 20—23. (20) "Temporal blessings had been promised to the people generally; now spiritual blessings are announced to Zerubbabel as the head of the nation and the representative of the house of David." and again, this revelation took place on the same day as the preceding one. (21) Zerubbabel, as the head of the civil government. shake, etc., the usual fig. for violent political convulsions.* (22) overthrow, etc., the terms here employed are too wide to be satisfied by any event in the life of Zerubbabel: "There was in Zerubbabel's time no shaking of the heaven or of nations. Darius had indeed to put down an unusual number of rebellions in the first few years after his accession; but, although he magnified himself on occasion of their suppression, they were only so many distinct and unconcerted revolts, each under its own head. All were far away in the distant East. The Persian empire, spread "probably over 2,000,000 square miles, or more than half of modern Europe, was not threatened."—Pusey. The prophecy reaches forth to the more distant future, and still awaits its full accomplishment. "All other world-kingsdoms are to be overthrown to make way for Christ's universal kingdom." come down, or, brought down, and laid low. (23) Lord of hosts, lit. "Jehovah Tsevaoth," a title used 14 times in Haggai, in Zech. 48 times, in Malachi 25 times, while in the Pentateuch it does not occur once. The first use was in 1 Sam. i. 3. It refers to Jehovah as ruler of the highest material objects and spiritual agencies.—M. Dods. O Zerubbabel, here treated as the representative of Messiah. as a signet, or as one who bears the king's signet, as the sign of his authority.* I have chosen thee, "with these words the Messianic promise made to David was transferred to Zerubbabel and his family among David's descendants, and would be fulfilled in his person in just the same way as the promise given to David, that God would make him the highest among the kings of the earth (Ps. lxxxix. 27). The fulfillment culminates in Jesus Christ, the son of David, and descendant of Zerubbabel (Matt. i. 12; Luke iii. 27), in whom Zerubbabel was made the signet-ring of Jehovah. Jesus Christ has raised up the kingdom of His father David again, and of His kingdom there will be no end (Luke i. 32, 33). Even though it may appear oppressed and deeply humiliated for the time by the power of the kingdoms of the heathen, it will never be crushed and destroyed, but will break in pieces all these kingdoms, and destroy them, and will itself endure for ever (Dan. ii. 44; Heb. xii. 28; 1 Cor. xv. 24).”—Keil.

The Signet Ring.—In the eyes of Orientals the finger-ring or signet, was regarded as a valuable possession, to lose which was esteemed a dire calamity. To speak of one as a signet-ring was to assure him of tender regard and watchful preservation. Reversing the threat pronounced against Jeconiah, the last king of Judah, and the grandfather of Zerubbabel (Jer. xxii. 24), Jehovah promises that Zerubbabel shall be as a signet-ring upon his own finger, i. e. shall be indissolubly associated with himself and regarded with sincere affection; and this promise may be said to have been fulfilled, so far as Zerubbabel was concerned, in that he was henceforth inseparably linked with the history of God's people, and in fact constituted an ancestor of Messiah, who afterwards sprang from his line. But as the day when the promised distinction should be conferred on Zerubbabel was expressly specified as the day when the process begun by Jehovah of shaking the heavens and the earth should have been brought to a completion, at which time Zerubbabel should have been long dead, it becomes obvious that the promise must be understood as having reached its highest fulfillment in Zerubbabel's distinguished descendant, who should then be made Jehovah's signet-ring, in reward for a greater work of emancipation and temple-building than had been performed by Zerubbabel. And in this reward all share who, whether before his coming or since, have been fellow-workers with him by serving the will of God in their day and generation.—Pul. Com.

Nor, had he been a weakling, would he have succeeded in carrying these pilgrims in safety to their destination. But with the help of God and his own stout heart he did it. It was a feat only second to that of Moses, who brought their fathers out of Egypt, led them through the scorching wilderness, and set them down at the gate of Canaan. Nor again, unless Zerubbabel had been a hero, could he have brought the temple to completion, working, as he did, with a company of builders who became alarmed at every menace uttered against them by the people of the land, and who threw down their tools on encountering the smallest resistance.” — Pulpit Com.

Introduction.

I. "Of the Prophet Zechariah, as of his colleague and contemporary Haggai, very little is known. He tells us himself that he was the son of Berechiah and the grandson of Iddo (i. 1). If the Iddo thus spoken of is to be identified, as with much probability he may be, with the person of that name mentioned in the Book of Nehemiah, we have this explanation confirmed by the fact, that while Iddo is among the 'priests' who returned with Zerubbabel and Joshua (xii. 4), 'Zechariah of Iddo' takes his place amongst 'the priests, the chief of the fathers,' under Joiakim, the son of Joshua, in the next generation (vss. 12, 16). If this view be adopted, it follows that Zechariah was a priest as well as a prophet, and that, since his grandfather was still living when the first caravan returned under Zerubbabel, he must have been a comparatively young man when sixteen years later he entered upon his prophetic office. That he was born and spent his early years in Babylon is highly probable. This would account for his frequent use of visions and allegories; the divine Spirit adapting Himself as ever, to the capacity and training of the human instrument, in imparting His revelations."—Cambridge Bible. II. Unity of the Book. The manifest difference of style and diction between the first eight and the last six chapters with other considerations, has led many scholars to believe that chapters ix. to xiv. are not the work of Zechariah, but of an unknown author. III. Time. The text itself clearly fixes the date of the earlier portion of the Book as in the second and fourth years of Darius, i.e. B.C. 520 and 518. If Zechariah wrote the closing chapters, it was probably many years later, when the prophet was becoming an old man. Those who do not accept Zechariah's authorship of the latter part of the book are divided in opinion as to the date, some favoring a time before the captivity, others naming the early part of the fourth century before Christ. IV. Theme. "The prophecies of Zechariah containing as they do a portraiture of the destiny of God's people to the end of time, and comprehending so many mighty events which yet await their fulfilment, present to the interpreter many difficulties, some of which have hitherto been found insoluble, and will probably remain unsolved till the mystery of God contained in them shall have been fulfilled. One thing, however, they clearly reveal to us—that the future triumph of God's kingdom is certain, and that all the great movements in the history of the nations, however unpropitious they seem at the time, are parts of the mighty plan of Divine providence, which shall end in making the kingdoms of this world 'the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ.'"—Dr. Barrows.

Synopsis.

PART I.—.....chaps. i.—viii.

1. Introductioni. 1—6
2. Vision of the angelic horsemen....i. 7—17
3. Vision of the horns and smiths...i. 18—21
4. Vision of the man with a measuring lineii. 1—13
5. Vision of the high priest accused by Sataniii. 1—10
6. Vision of the golden candlestick.....iv. 1—14
7. Vision of the flying rollv. 1—4
8. Vision of the woman in the ephah.....v. 5—11
9. Vision of the four chariotsvi. 1—8

10. Crowning of the high priest.....vi. 9—15
11. Concerning fastsvii., viii.

PART II.....ix.—xiv.

- The First Burden.....chs. ix.—xi.
 1. The coming of the King.....ix., x.
 2. The rejection of the Shepherd.....xi.
- The Second Burdenchs. xii.—xiv.
 1. Deliverance and repentance of Jerusalem.....xii. 1—xiii. 6
 2. The Shepherd smitten for the flock.....xiii. 7—9
 3. Judgment of the nations and sanctification of Jerusalemxiv.

CHAPTER THE FIRST.

1-3. (1) eighth month, "coincides with our November and with the rainy season in Palestine. Haggai's first prophecy had been delivered in the sixth month, and his second prophecy in the seventh month of this same year. (Hag. i. 1, ii. 1.)" second year of Darius, B. C. 520. the prophet, the designation of Zechariah, not of Iddo. (2) sore displeased, Heb. "displeased with displeasure," i. e. vehemently displeased. (3) them, the Jews of that day. turn ye,^b R. V., "return unto me." The Lord of Hosts, "this phrase is of unusually frequent occurrence in the first eight chapters of this book and in that of Haggai. Its use appears designed to inspire the mind with unshaken confidence in the irresistible power of God."—Barrows.

God's Call to Repentance.—I. The call is founded on God's absolute right to obedience. II. Urged by God's judgments on transgressors. III. Encouraged by God's promises. IV. Enforced by the experiences of life.—Forsyth.

Rebuilding the Temple.—From the book of Ezra it appears that the rebuilding of the temple was brought about largely through the influence of the prophets, Haggai and Zechariah. The zeal with which the returned exiles had begun the work 16 years before, building the altar and laying the foundations of the temple, had been checked by the jealousy and intrigues of the Samaritans. But now the accession of Darius to the throne of Persia gives promise of security to the little colony at Jerusalem, and Haggai and Zechariah are commissioned to arouse and encourage the people to resume the work. Ezra v. 1, vi. 14.

The Message and the Messenger.—The Lord chooseth both old men and young; his message will fit any age: sometimes he has a word to us that a boy could not utter; sometimes he has a message to deliver that only a young heart can properly announce, because it alone has the requisite freshness of sympathy and music. The Lord has a word which only men of business can speak; and they will not speak it. There are some sermons that ought never to be preached in the pulpit; they ought to be preached in the market-place, or over the counter, or on high Change; and men of business only can speak them with clearness and precision, and moral, because personal, authority. There are some texts that preachers have no business with; they cannot pronounce the words aright; they can utter the individual syllables, but they cannot run them into that persuasive music which belongs only to the tongue of honest commerce.—J. Parker.

4-6. (4) former prophets, those before the captivity, as Nathan, Gad, Shemaiah, Hanani, Elijah, Elisha, Hosea, Joel, Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel. Those who listened to these prophets, but neither heeded nor obeyed, had set a bad example. (5, 6) "The lesson conveyed by these two verses, which must be taken together, is the same as that contained in the words of Isaiah (xl. 6, 8), 'All flesh is grass, and all the godliness thereof is as the flower of the field. The grass withereth, the flower fadeth, but the word of our God shall stand for ever.' There, however, the lesson has reference to God's word of promise, for comfort (comp. 1 Peter i. 24, 25). Here it has reference to His word of threatening, for warning."—Camb. Bib. where are they? i. e. recall the Divine judgments under wh. they have fallen. live for ever, or abide from generation to generation.^b words, etc., i. e. denunciations and judgments. statutes, or "decrees," the root of the Heb. word means to hack or cut—as letters in stone or other hard substance, therefore decrees, enduring permanently. take hold, R. V., "overtake," the idea is of punishment dogging a person until it overtakes him. and said, comp. La. i. 18, ii. 17.

Be Not as Your Fathers.—This is an inversion of a common exhortation. We are often counselled to keep in our father's way, and attend to our father's word, and reflect our father's example; but in this case we are to turn away from our fathers as from our enemies. The fact that such a command is given shows that obedience to it is possible; if that is the case, here is a most remarkable instance of men separating them-a "The Heb. root conveys that idea of breaking forth into anger or displeasure wh. we have in the word ebullition."—Spk. Com.

b "Though God hath brought you back from captivity, yet this state will not long last unless ye are really converted. God has heavier scourges ready, and has begun to give symptoms of displeasure."—Calvin.

"In a revival of religion in Jackson county, Ga., in the summer of 1846, out of eighty hopeful conversions, sixty-three of whom united with the church, not more than three or four were past the age of twenty-five. In the great work in Athens, which followed, there was a similar proportion of youth. In other revivals in the same state, in 1845 and 1846, including in all not far from five hundred additions to the churches, at least as large a proportion were from twelve to twenty-five years of age, and these facts are, perhaps, a fair average throughout the country."—Dr. Haven.

a Comp. Is. xxxi. 6; Je. iii. 12, xviii. 11; Eze. xviii. 30; Ho. xiv. 1.

b "The thought appears to be this: 'Your fathers have perished, as was foretold, and their fate ought to warn you. But you may say. The prophets too are dead. I grant it, but still, My words do not die; though dead, their prophetic words from Me, fulfilled against your fathers, are not dead with them. Beware, then, lest ye share their fate!"

—Fausset.

"'Tis law as steadfast as the throne of Zeus,

Our days are heritors of days gone by."

—Aeschylus.

"We need no reed, no pole, no measuring line, wherewith to take the dimensions of our days, nor any skill in arithmetic, wherewith to compute the number of them. No; we have the standard of them at our fingers' ends; and there is no multiplication of it; it is but one hand-breadth in all."

—Mat. Henry.

a "By myrtles I do not mean the dwarf myrtles which grow in greenhouses in England, but such as Zechariah spoke of, eight or ten feet high. They grow nearest to perfection in shaded valleys, and therefore at once associate themselves with everything serene and peaceful."—Gadsby.

selves from their antecedents. Science teaches us that no man can get away from his antecedents; but Scripture insists that such a detachment is possible, and indeed is requisite for entrance into the kingdom of heaven. Nature allowed to go on in its uninterrupted course would possibly prove the scientific position; but we are not only in an economy of nature, we are also in an economy of grace or of distinct spiritual action; the God who created nature has also committed himself to certain spiritual ministries, the end of which is new creatureship. Let some who have had bad fathers be encouraged by this exhortation; let those who have had good fathers follow in good ways; but let no man's heart be cast down simply because he started from a bad human origin. History is full of instances in which the children of bad parents have become conspicuous Christians. Do not quote the authority of bad men simply because they happen to be your fathers. It is possible for a youth to say that by following an evil course he is only doing what his father did; that is no excuse; certainly it is no reason, and he knows in his own heart that it is a vain and hollow plea.—J. Parker.

7, 8. Here begins "a series of eight visions, with accompanying interpretations, seen by the prophet on the same night, which, like dissolving views, melt into one another, and so gradually open up the whole prospect, i. 7—vi. 8."—Camb. Bib. "In the FIRST VISION (vss. 7—17) it is revealed to Zechariah that the Gentile nations should be overthrown, and that whatever might be the present condition of the Jewish people, God's purpose of mercy toward them was unshaken and would be fulfilled."—Pul. Com. (7) Sebat, the name for the eleventh month in use subsequent to the captivity, corresponding to our January or February. (8) by night, may intimate that it was a mental vision. myrtle trees, "it was one of the myrtle-covered glens in the neighborhood of Jerusalem." Zechariah calls it the Glen or Valley-Bottom, either because it was known under that name to the Jews, or because he was himself wont to frequent it for prayer. He discovers in it what seems to be a rendezvous of Persian cavalry-scouts, the leader of the troop in front, and the rest behind him, having just come in with their reports. Soon, however, he is made aware that they are angels. They are scouts of God come in from their survey of the whole earth."—G. A. Smith. behind him, etc., R. V., "and behind him there were horses, red, sorrel, and white." These colors may have been only to distinguish the horses as coming from different countries.

Angels.—Angels are men of a superior kind.—Young. They bear his will about to every part of the universe. This is their delight. They bless God, who vouchsafes thus to employ them. But when they have fulfilled God's message, then they return back to him by whom they were sent forth, and stand before him, drinking in fresh streams of life and strength and purity and joy from his presence.—Hare.

"They fight for us, they watch and duly ward,

And their bright squadrons round about us plant;

And all for love, and nothing for reward,

Oh! why should heavenly God to man have such regard."

—Spenser.

9—II. (9) two angels appear in this vision, first: he who is spoken of as "a man riding upon a red horse," and afterwards as "the angel of the Lord," and second: the interpreting angel, who is near to the prophet through all the eight visions (excepting perhaps the fourth) to explain to him their meaning. (10) walk . . earth, ch. vi. 7. (11) at rest, none of that "shaking of the nations" which had been promised. Peace and prosperity everywhere except among God's people.

Verses 9—II.—Calvin's view is, that the obscurity in which the vision is shrouded, the dark night, the low valley, the sombre myrtles, is intended to remind the prophet that God's judgments are unsearchable and His ways past finding out, while the angel riders are a help to his human weakness to understand how, like a king whose couriers are continually passing to and fro throughout his dominions, the Almighty is intimately acquainted with all that is done upon earth, and the different colored horses picture to his mind the truth, that all human events, whatever be their complexion, are alike under the cognizance and control of the never-failing Providence, which ordereth all things both in heaven and earth; and we may add, however diverse they appear, are all working harmoniously to accomplish His will.—Camb. Bib.

12—15. (12) threescore and ten years, the predicted seventy years of captivity (Jer. xxv. 11; xxix. 10) were past; it was time that the punishment should cease. There are two computations of this period. The first dates from the first capture of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, B. C. 606, when Judæa was made tributary to Babylon (2 Kings xxiv. 1; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 6; Dan. i. 1, etc.), unto the return of the company of exiles under Zerubbabel, B. C. 536; the second dates from the final destruction of Jerusalem, B. C. 588, unto the second year of Darius, B. C. 519, when Zechariah saw these visions. However reckoned, the dark period was now over; might they not now expect the commotion among the nations which was to precede their own restitution?—Pul. Com. (13) comfortable, such as brought comfort and assurance. (14) jealous, ch. viii. 2. Full of anxious concern for the well-being of His people. (15) heathen, R. V., “nations;” here esp. the Chaldeans, who had exceeded their commission in their severe dealings with God’s people. at ease, means, in a bad sense, to be carnally secure. They had treated the Jews wantonly and were “at ease.”—Barrows.

The Wrath of God and the Wrath of Man.—I. God’s wrath is the highest reason. It is not a mood or passion; not the outburst of arbitrary power; but the calm expression of the Eternal Mind. He who does wrong identifies himself with the wrong, and so far must be an object of indignation. II. God’s wrath is the purest justice. Law must stand. Government and order must be maintained. Else anarchy. But nothing will be done beyond what is necessary for the ends of justice. How different with the wrath of man! Often carried beyond the bounds of right, and becomes oppression. Often continued beyond the limits of justice, and becomes revenge (Isa. xlvii. 6). III. God’s wrath is the holiest love. It is consistent with pity for the sufferer, mercy for the penitent, and deliverance for the oppressed. In his hand pains are disciplinary, trials are remedial, chastisements are benedictions in disguise. “The end of the Lord is merciful.” But with men how often is wrath pitiless and cruel, working evil instead of good, rejoicing in destruction instead of deliverance!—Forsyth.

16, 17. (16) line, measuring it out for rebuilding. (17) R. V., “cry yet again.” my cities, not Jerusalem only. spread abroad, overflow, as a vessel or fountain. choose, or show, by gracious signs, His choice. “The scope, then, of the first vision is clear. It conveys a distinct promise and prophecy of three future events. ‘My house shall be built,’ vs. 16. This was accomplished four years later in the sixth year of Darius (Ezra vi. 15). ‘A line shall be stretched forth upon Jerusalem,’ vs. 16. This was done some seventy years later, when the city was rebuilt by Nehemiah (Neh. vi. 15). ‘My cities through prosperity shall yet be spread abroad,’ vs. 17. The fulfilment of this is to be found in the history of the Jews under the Asmonean princes. Beyond this the first prophecy does not expressly go; though its concluding words, ‘The Lord shall yet comfort Zion, and shall yet choose Jerusalem,’ are at least an implied promise of better things, than any which befell the Jews before the coming of Christ.”—Camb. Bib.

Two things are to be noted in this oracle. No political movement is indicated as the means of Jerusalem’s restoration: this is to be the effect of God’s free grace in returning to dwell in Jerusalem, which is the reward of the building of the temple. And there is an interesting explanation of the motive for God’s new grace: in executing His sentence upon Israel, the heathen had far exceeded their commission, and now themselves deserved punishment. That is to say, the restoration of Jerusalem and the resumption of the worship are not enough for the future of Israel. The heathen must be chastised. But Zechariah does not predict any overthrow of the world’s power, either by earthly or by heavenly forces. This is entirely in harmony with the insistence upon peace which distinguishes him from other prophets.—Exp. Bib.

SECOND VISION, vss. 18—21. 18—21. (18) four horns, the horns^b a “Reference may be to the new troubles brought by their enemies upon the Jews after their return to Jerus., and especially in hindering them from rebuilding the temple.”—Lowth.

Is xlvii. 6; Am. i. 9, 11.

Most wonderfully did God prepare political events, in the restoration from Babylon and in the coming of Christ, for the special condition of his Church. Quietness may reign in all quarters except in the Church. Divine justice may seem to sleep; but it is only the calm before the storm.

a “A prediction of the coming occupation of the land by Jews returning from Babylon, and of the increase of population under the Asmonean princes.”

—Spk. Com.
Da. ix. 25; Na. vi. 15, 16.

b Poss. the Samaritans, Arabians, Asmonites, and Philistines; or, these as representing all earthly powers so far as they are hostile to the Church of God.

Je. 1. 8, 9; Eze. xxv. 1.

"So just and wonderful are the overruling councils of God's Providence, that the arrow which strikes through the heart of the transgressor is oftentimes directed from the very bow which he had vainly trusted would be his strength. The companion of his sin is the first to cast reproach and shame on him for the evil which he has done." — J. S. M. Anderson.

* Eze. xl. 3; Re. xi. 1, xxi. 15, 16.

"Oh, there are no tears in heaven; but, when Angels come down to earth, it may be they can fall into companionship with human sadness, and even learn to weep: and where is the spectacle which shall wring tears from eyes which they were never meant to stain, if it be not that of the obstinate rejection of the gospel of reconciliation, and of careless trifling with a thing so inestimably precious as the soul? Old men, buried with your gold, angels weep over you! Young men, frittering away your days in vanities and pleasures, angels weep over you!" — H. Melvill.

which have tossed and gored Israel are to be prevented from doing further injury. (20) carpenters, R. V., "smiths," the various human agencies by which the foes of Israel would be defeated. fray them, strike terror into them. to cast out, etc., R. V., "to cast down the horns of the nations, which lifted up their horn against the land of Judah to scatter it."

The Castle of Banias.—Two hours later we reached the foot of a tall isolated mountain, which is crowned by the crumbling castle of Banias, the stateliest ruin of that kind on earth, no doubt. It is a thousand feet long and two hundred wide, all of the most symmetrical and at the same time the most ponderous masonry. The massive towers and bastions are more than thirty feet high, and have been sixty. From the mountain's peak its broken turrets rise above the groves of ancient oaks and olives, and look wonderfully picturesque. It is of such high antiquity that no man knows who built it or when it was built. It is utterly inaccessible except in one place, where a bridle-path winds upward among the solid rocks to the old portcullis. The horses' hoofs have bored holes in these rocks to the depth of six inches during the hundreds and hundreds of years that the castle was garrisoned. We wandered for three hours here among the chambers and crypts and dungeons of the fortress, and trod where the mailed heels of many a knightly crusader had rung, and where Phœnician heroes had walked ages before them. We wondered how such a solid mass of masonry could be affected even by an earthquake, and could not understand what agency had made Banias a ruin; but we found the destroyer after a while, and then our wonder was increased tenfold. Seeds had fallen in crevices in the vast walls; the seeds had sprouted; the tender, insignificant sprouts had hardened; they grew larger and larger, and by a steady, imperceptible pressure forced the great stones apart, and now are bringing sure destruction upon a giant work that has even mocked the earthquakes to scorn! Gnarled and twisted trees spring from the old walls everywhere, and beautify and overshadow the grey battlements with a wild luxuriance of foliage.—Mark Twain.

CHAPTER THE SECOND.

THIRD VISION, vss. 1—3. "The way being thus cleared by the destruction of the enemies of Judah, the next vision reveals the rebuilding of Jerusalem. A man with a measuring line comes upon the stage. But, as he is about to mark out the ground-plan of the city, he is stopped by an intimation that the Jerusalem of the future shall neither admit of walls, because of its overflowing population, nor require them, inasmuch as Jehovah Himself will be a wall of fire about her."—Camb. Bib. 1, 2. (1) a man, "the prophet beholds a young man—by this term he probably means a servant or apprentice—who is attempting to define the limits of the new city. In the light of what this attempt encounters, there can be little doubt that the prophet means to symbolize by it the intention of building the walls upon the old lines, so as to make Jerusalem again the mountain fortress she had previously been."—G. A. Smith. (2) measure, preparatory to rebuilding."

Ministering Angels.—That there is an order of beings superior to man, who feel a deep interest in his welfare, is a doctrine which appears quite evident in various parts of Divine Revelation. These beings are called angels; a word in the Hebrew and Greek languages (from which it is derived) signifying a messenger. That they are of different gradations in rank and intelligence appears to be set forth by terms applied to the angelic hosts: such as thrones, dominions, principalities, and powers (Col. i. 16). The ancient Jews reckoned four orders or companies of angels, each headed by an archangel; the first order being that of Michael, the second of Gabriel, the third of Uriel, and the fourth of Raphael. Of the creation of man it is stated in Heb. ii. 7, that he was made but a little lower than the angels; and the idea has prevailed in most nations that he has in some manner been connected with them. Their principal employment, however, was to wait upon the Almighty and execute His commands. It has also been a generally prevalent and very ancient opinion that certain classes of angels were appointed to watch over the welfare of the human race; and that every individual had some spirit or angel, either good or bad, who had control over his mind to a greater or less degree. It is well known that something like the above belief universally prevailed among the Jews, Greeks, Romans, and Persians; and indeed among many of the barbarous nations of antiquity. Hesiod, one of the most ancient of the Greek poets, tells us in some of his writings that "the men of the golden age are the good angels of the present degenerate race; they watch near us, protect us from harm, and strive to the utmost of their power to purify our hearts, and save us from misery." Socrates, called the wisest of the heathen philosophers, publicly avowed himself under the guidance of a good genius or spirit, very much in accordance with the Christian idea of a guardian angel. Angels are first spoken of in the Book of Genesis, where two of them appeared for the deliverance of righteous Lot, who dwelt in Sodom, from the fate which overwhelmed the Cities of the Plain for their wickedness. There are also many other accounts in the Old Testament of the appearance of angels among men—sometimes for the deliverance of His chosen people, and at other times for the destruction of their enemies. In the New Testament an angel announced the advent of the Saviour; and a multitude of the heavenly host were heard praising God for the glad tidings of salvation for fallen men. Having assumed the nature of man, the Redeemer became subject to his trials and temptations. After successfully resisting the temptation of the devil, angels came and ministered unto him. In His agony and bloody sweat in the Garden of Gethsemane there appeared an angel from heaven strengthening Him. At His ascension angels were in attendance, and at the day of judgment all the holy angels will be with Him.

3-5. (3) talked . . me, ch. i. 9. another, apparently the "angel of the Lord" who in vs. 4 sends the interpreting with the message to the young man, and who is the "me" of vss. 8, 9, and 11. (4) towns, R. V., "villages," open and unwall'd. Comp. Ezek. xxxviii. 11. without walls, i. e. the population will so extend that no walls can contain it; nor will they be needed." (5) wall of fire, "she will not need walls. God will be her protection, not only defending her from attack," but consuming the enemy who may presume to assault her (comp. Deut. iv. 24; Ps. lxxviii. 2). glory, God will make His glory conspicuous by the mighty deeds He will do in Jerusalem and the providential care He will take of her. He shall be known to be dwelling there, as He revealed His presence by the pillar of fire and the Shechinah (comp. Isa. lx. 1, 2, 19).—Pul. Com.

Speak to Young Men (vs. 4).—I. Why should young men be an object of special solicitude? II. Who should speak to young men? III. How should we speak to them? IV. What shall we say to them?

God's Care of His People.—This is an encouraging promise, made to the Jews when in captivity in Babylon, assuring them that they should yet again return to their favorite city, Jerusalem; where God was used to show the tokens of His favor to them, above all people on the face of the earth, and from which they were driven on account of their grievous sins. That city, indeed, now looked desolate, and its walls were broken down, but God yet promised to restore His people, and to protect them; for He was unwilling to give them up to total ruin, if they would repent and turn sincerely to Him. Then they would not have to fear any enemy that might come against them, even if they had no walls to defend the city: "For I, saith the Lord, will be unto her," meaning the city of Jerusalem, "a wall of fire round about, and will be the glory in the midst of her." "A wall of fire" seems a singular expression to us; for whoever built a wall of fire? But it will be easily understood, by referring to a practice of the Eastern shepherds, who, in order to protect their flocks and tents from the attacks of wild beasts, were accustomed, at night, to make fires all around them, over which the most furious animals always dreaded to pass. Indeed, this custom is still adopted in various parts of the world, where there are many wild beasts. How many promises of protection God has graciously given to them that love Him! He is their shield, their buckler, their tower, their "wall of fire." There shall "We are not able to measure, and far less, as we suppose, to overrate the amount of benefit which results to Christians from these spiritual ministrations. But if, as it was with the Prophet's servant, the eyes were opened to discern the chariot of fire and the horses of fire marshalled to our protection—who will not allow that we should have a greater sense of security than is ordinarily conveyed through an infusion of fresh vigor into the principle of faith?"

—H. Melville.

a "This imagery represents extent and peace. The prophecy was not accomplished in the literal Jerusalem, but is fulfilled in the spiritual Jerusalem, the City of Peace, the universal Church of Christ, diffused throughout the world, and defended by the Divine protection as with a wall of fire."—Wordsworth.

"A fire's a good companionable friend, a comfortable friend, who meets your face with welcome glad, and makes the poorest shed as pleasant as a palace. Are you cold? he warms you; weary? he refreshes you; hungry? he doth prepare your food for you. Are you in darkness? he gives light to you; in a strange land? he wears a face that is familiar from your childhood. Are you poor? what matters it to him; he knows no difference between an emperor and the poorest beggar! Where is the friend, that bears the name of man, will do as much for you?" — Mary Howitt.

a "God is very sensible of every injury offered to His people; it is like hurting the eye, which is the most tender and sensible part of the body."

—Lowth.

Ps. xvii. 8; 2 Th. i. 6.

b Zep. i. 7; Hab. ii. 20.

"Dear child of the Father, oh! never forget,

That the love of thy Father on thee hath been set,

That out of the heavens it floweth to thee

Forever and ever, a great tidal sea." — M. E. Sangster.

"Of joys departed, never to return, how painful the remembrance.

. . . In that dread moment, how the frantic soul raves round the walls of her clay tenement, runs to each avenue, and shrieks for help—but shrieks in vain!"—Blair.

"Satan suggested to the Jews that so consciously polluted a priesthood and people could offer no acceptable sacrifice to God, and therefore they might as well desist from the building of the temple."

—Fausset.

A minister of the Gospel one day saw a piece of ivy entwined round a brand in the fire. He took it out, planted it in front of his house. It took root, grew, no real evil come nigh them, and He will preserve them to His kingdom and glory through Jesus Christ.

6—9. (6) Ho, Is. lv. i. flee . . . north, "the north country, although its capital and center was Babylon, was the whole Babylonian empire, called 'the north' because its invasions always came upon Israel from the north. But the Book of Esther shows that sixty years after this the Jews were dispersed over the 127 provinces of the Persian empire, from India (the Punjab) to Ethiopia (Esther i. 1; iii. 8, 12—14; viii. 5, 9); whether they were purposely placed by the policy of the conquerors in detached groups, as the ten tribes were in the cities of the Medes, or whether, when more trusted, they migrated of their own accord."—Pusey in Camb. Bib. spread, etc., or scattered you. (7) deliver thyself, R. V., "Ho Zion, escape, thou that dwellest with," etc. daughter of Babylon, Ps. cxxxvii. 8. after the glory, R. V., "after glory," i. e. in pursuit of glory; to manifest His glory in the punishment of the nations. hath he sent me, i. e. "hath the Lord sent me (the angel of the Lord)." toucheth . . . eye, De. xxxii. 10.^a (9) shake, in threatening; Isa. xix. 16.

Verse 9.—In the fourth or fifth year of Darius, the Babylonians, after long and cautious plotting, revolted and shut themselves up in their city, prepared for a long siege. Zophyrus, Darius's friend and general, cut off his own ears and nose, and by pretending that he had been thus mutilated by Darius, gained entrance into the city and the confidence of the besieged. By his craft the gates were opened to the Persians, and when the city was mastered three thousand Babylonians were crucified.—M. Dods.

10—13. (10) sing, etc., Is. xii. 6, liv. i. dwell in the midst of thee, this prophecy had a fulfillment, when the temple was rebuilt and the worship of God was resumed on Mount Zion. But it had a higher fulfillment when "the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us" (John i. 14, Malachi iii. 1), and the promise of the Gentiles being joined to the Lord, vs. 11, was also accomplished. It awaits its highest fulfillment in both particulars in the times that are yet future. Rev. vii. 15; xxi. 3, 22—26.—Camb. Bib. (11) many nations, Gentiles who will unite to form the new kingdom of Messiah. know, by personal experiences. (12) inherit, or take actual possession of. (13) silent,^b "in the expectation of these mighty events, men are called upon to wait in awe and wonder." raised up, R. V., "waked up."

Joy an Attribute of Heaven.—Some people are afraid of anything like joy in religion. They have none themselves, and they do not love to see it in others. Their religion is something like the stars, very high and very clear, but very cold. When they see tears of anxiety, or tears of joy, they cry out, Enthusiasm, enthusiasm! "I sat down under His shadow with great delight." Is this enthusiasm? "May the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing." If it be really in sitting under the shadow of Christ, let there be no bounds to our joy. Oh, if God would but open our eyes and give us simple childish faith to look to Jesus, to sit under His shadow, then would songs of joy arise from all our dwellings. "Rejoice in the Lord always, and again I say, Rejoice."—Cheyne.

"Be Silent, O All Flesh, before the Lord."—The profoundest emotions of the soul are always mute. Superficial feelings are noisy and chattering. The shallow stream babbles amongst the hills. The deep river rolls by unheard. There are emotions of a pleasurable kind, that go off in the boisterous laugh, or the jocund song, or the sentimental hymn. But deep joy is silent as the stars. The real lover of art has joy in gazing at a magnificent piece of art, but his joy is inarticulate. The real lover of nature has deep joy in surveying some landscape of unparalleled grandeur. It is a joy that cannot go out in laughter, or speech, or song; it is silent. It is so with the godly soul. In the presence of the supremely beautiful it is filled with a joy that cannot speak, "a joy unspeakable, but full of glory."

CHAPTER THE THIRD.

FOURTH VISION, vs. 1—10. "Joshua the High Priest accepted and blessed as the people representative; a vision intended to restore the people's confidence in the priesthood and their ministry."—M. Dods. 1. 2. (1) Joshua, Hag. i. 1. standing, etc., his proper attitude in the discharge of high-priestly duties. right hand, the position taken by the accuser in a court of justice. to resist him, R. V., "to be his adversary," Rev. xii. 10. (2) the Lord said, apparently the same as "the angel of the Lord" in vss. 1, 5, 6. brand . . fire, a proverbial expression, comp. Am. iv. 11. "Charred and unsightly as the bit of wood may be, the fact of its being plucked out of the fire proves its value to the owner, and that he sees a farther purpose it can serve."—M. Dods.

A Scripture Object Lesson.—Objects: A charred stick, a napkin, a pocket knife. Subject: The plucked brand. I. The sinner's danger. The noble house which God builded to be a temple for the spirit is ruined. The soul consumed by sinful lusts; separate from God; under the curse of the law; sentenced, etc. (see Is. xxxiii. 14; Mk. ix. 44). This is the doom of guilty men. II. The sinner's safety. Jesus Christ bears in His own body the curse; plucks the soul from the fire by His loving hand; quenches the smoking embers of sin by His grace. [Take up the brand, as if to represent the sinner plucked from the burning.] III. The sinner saved. 1. He still bears the marks of sin, you can see he has been in the fire; he has no comeliness of outer life; his influence still is bad, just as this brand blackens my hand and mars this napkin. [Proof by experiment.] Can this state of things be improved? Let us see. [Cut off the charred surface until the white wood appears.] What do we see? Yes, the black disappears, and the pure, clean wood come out. Christ not only saves us from death, but He, at the same time, takes away our sin. He is "the Lord our righteousness." We shall never be wholly perfect here; but it is our duty, by the help of God, to cut off every possible mark and trace of sin from our characters. Cut off your sins, children. [The napkin may now be applied to the brand without being soiled.] 2. One thing more: the future state of the changed sinner. I have seen in houses, as I passed, charred boards and blackened bricks nailed and built into the walls again. They have been saved from the fire, and now were once more filling their place in the homes of men. So Jesus takes the sinner, the brand plucked out of the fire, and builds him into His glorious spiritual temple. May we all have a part and place there.—H. C. McCook.

A Countryman's Conversion.—A plain countryman, who was effectually called by Divine grace under a sermon from Ze. iii. 2, was some time afterwards accosted by a quondam companion of his drunken fits, and strongly solicited to accompany him to the alehouse. But the good man strongly resisted all his arguments, saying, "I am a brand plucked out of the fire." His old companion not understanding this, he explained it thus:—"Look ye," said he, "there is a great difference between a brand and a green stick; if a spark flies upon a brand that has been partly burned, it will soon catch fire again; but it is not so with a green stick. I tell you, I am that brand plucked out of the fire, and I dare not venture into the way of temptation, for fear of being set on fire."—Whitcross.

3-5. (3) "Yet something remains: Israel is rescued, but not sanctified. The nation's troubles are over: their uncleanness has still to be removed. Zechariah sees that the High Priest is clothed in filthy garments, while he stands before the Angel of Judgment. The Angel orders his servants, those that stand before him, to give him clean festal robes."—G. A. Smith. filthy garments, as representative of a sinful people. (4) he answered, i. e. the angel of the Lord. take . . him, as the sign of his justification and acceptance. change of raiment, R. V. "rich apparel." (5) and I said, i. e. Zechariah. "So Isaiah in the midst of a solemn vision gives vent to his feelings (Isa. vi. 5) and St. John mingles his own sentiments and actions with what he beholds." (Rev. v. 4; x. 9; xi. 1.) fair mitre, "a clean turban," this brings the headdress, in Ezekiel of the Prince of Israel, and in the Priestly code of the High Priest."—G. A. Smith. See Ex. xxviii. 36 and note there.

Fifty Garments (vs. 3).—It was usual, especially among the Romans, when a man was charged with a capital crime, and during his arraignment, to let down his hair, suffer his beard to grow long, to wear filthy ragged garments, and appear in a very dirty and sordid habit; on account of which they were called sordidati. When the person accused grew higher, and spread wider, until it covered the front most luxuriantly, forming a beautiful ornament, and admired by the passers-by. To all inquiries he gives the history of its planting and growth, and then asks the question, "Is not this a brand plucked from the burning?"

The promise is that Zerubbabel, notwithstanding all the difficulties he had to contend with in rebuilding the temple, should see it completed, should see the crowning stone laid on the building, amid the hosannas of the people. "Grace, grace unto it!" So it will be with every genuine work to which a true man puts his hand in the name of God. It will be finished; there will be no failure, success is inevitable. "As I live, saith the Lord, the whole earth shall be filled with My glory." (Numb. xiv. 21.)

"When the people in the E. are in deep distress, or when they have been charged with some capital crime, it is customary for them not to wash themselves, but to allow the dirt to accumulate both on their person and dress. The angel of the Lord ordered the officers of justice to take his filthy garments off, as a mark of his acquittal, and to clothe him with a change of raiment, as an emblem of his justification."—Gadsby.

was brought into court to be tried, even his near relations, friends, and acquaintances, before the court voted, appeared with dishevelled hair, and clothed with garments foul and out of fashion, weeping, crying, and deprecating punishment. The accused sometimes appeared before the judges clothed in black, and his head covered with dust. In allusion to this ancient custom, the Prophet Zechariah represents Joshua, the high priest, when he appeared before the Lord, and Satan stood at his right hand to accuse him, as clothed with filthy garments. After the cause was carefully examined, and all parties impartially heard, the public crier, by command of the presiding magistrate, ordered the judges to bring in their verdict."—Paxton.

6—10. (6) protested, or declared in a very solemn manner. (7) charge, or ordinance.^b judge my house, rule my temple. places to walk, R. V. "a place of access." "Instead of being an outcast he will have a place among those who are most familiarly known in the heavenly court."—M. Dods. these that stand by, the company of angels "that stood before him," vs. 4. (8) that sit before thee, Joshua's fellow-priests who were accustomed to sit with him in council. men wondered at,^a R. V. "men which are a sign." "Men who in their persons (and office) shadow forth future events. Ezek. xii. 6, 11; xxiv. 24, 27." This clause is a quasi-parenthesis. The direct address is interrupted, and a reason, as it were, given for making it: "To Joshua and his fellows I foretell the coming of 'my servant, Branch,' because they, the priesthood, in all their office and ministry, as well as in what has just happened to them in the vision in the person of their chief, are types of Him."—Camb. Bib. my servant, a frequent name of the Messiah in Isaiah, e. g. xlii. 1; xlix. 6; lii. 13; liii. 11. the branch,^b as there is no article in the Hebrew, this seems to be used as a proper name, "My Servant, Branch." This is first found as a designation of the Messiah in Isa. ix. 2. "Other passages point to the idea that out of the stem of Jesse now so marred, there would one day spring a branch in which the whole family should be glorified."—M. Dods. (9) the stone "the primary and immediate reference is to the Temple, in re-building which Joshua was then engaged. The "stone," which was perhaps seen lying before him in the vision, is most probably not the foundation-stone, which had been laid years before, but the head-stone (iv. 7, 9), which would complete the building, and which He, with whom to purpose is to accomplish, here announces that He has already laid; so certainly shall it be set in its place in due time. The ultimate reference is to Him, who as "the Branch" should hereafter "build the temple of the Lord" (vi. 12).—Camb. B. seven eyes, we may "understand the words to be a promise that the seven eyes (i. e. the perfect watchfulness and care—seven being the number of perfection) of God shall be fixed upon this stone; that He will never, so to speak, take His eyes off either type or anti-type, till His purpose respecting them is accomplished." I will engrave, i. e. I will have a hand in every detail of this building.—Dods. in one day, in a short time, either "soon," or "suddenly." (10) under the vine, 1 Ki. iv. 25. "In this cleansed and purified kingdom shall be found peace, happiness, and plenty, recalling the prosperous days of Solomon (1 Kings iv. 25). (For a similar picture of prosperity, see Micah iv. 4).—Pul. Com.

The Golden Age.—Mankind have always clung to the hope of better times to come. We give a passage from the famous fourth Eclogue of Virgil:—

The last great age, foretold by sacred rhyme,
Renews its finished course; Saturnian times
Roll round again; and mighty years, begun
From their first orb, in radiant circles run.
The base, degenerate, iron offspring ends,
A golden progeny from heaven descends. . . .
See, labouring nature calls thee to sustain
The nodding frame of heaven and earth and main!
See, to their base restored earth, seas, and air,
And joyful ages from behind in crowding ranks appear.

^b Used in the Bk. of Num. to denote the offices and duties of priests and Levites.

^a "They are men to be gazed at with wonder, because they typify a great mystery, which was no other than the incarnation and everlasting priesthood of Jesus the Son of God."—Wordsworth.

^b The Alex. Jews trans. this word the sunrise, the dayspring from on high.

"My own experience is that the Bible is dull when I am dull. When I am really alive, and set in upon the text with a tidal pressure of living affinities, it opens, it multiplies discoveries, and reveals depths even faster than I can note them. The worldly spirit shuts the Bible; the Spirit of God makes it a fire, flaming out all meanings and glorious truths."—Horace Bushnell.

CHAPTER THE FOURTH.

1-4. FIFTH VISION: vss. 1-14. "This is intended to give Zerubbabel, the civil head, the assurance that he is also God's anointed, endowed with power from God to do God's work."—M. Dods. (1) waked me, from trance. (2) looked, R. V. "seen." ..candlestick,^c the same word that is used of the lamp-stand in the Tabernacle, which this resembles. bowl, comp. Ex. xxvii. 20, 21. seven pipes, to convey new oil from the olive trees. (3) olive trees, living sources of fresh oil.^d In a secret manner these supplied the bowls. (4) spake, better, said.

Shining Lamps (vs. 2).—There are four things necessary to lamps giving light properly. 1. They must be lighted; 2. They must be set; 3. They must be fed; 4. They must be trimmed. Apply:—(1) Have you lamps? (2) Are you lamps?—Edmond.

5-7. (5) knowest, etc., as if the Prophet should have discovered the meaning. (6) This is the word of the Lord, i. e. this is God's way of saying to Zerubbabel. not by might, or mere human force. by my spirit,^e a sure, lasting but secret strengthening and replenishing, like that of the olive trees. (7) great mountain, of difficulty. The mountain-like obstacles that had risen up before Z. shall be overcome. headstone, or topstone, the sign of the completion of the building.^f Grace, grace unto it, with shouts of festive joy he shall set in its place the crowning stone of the edifice.

8-10. (8, 9) his hands. The Temple was finished in Darius's sixth year. (Ezra. vi. 15.) (10) "For whoever hath despised the day of small things, they shall rejoice when they see the plummet in the hand of Zerubbabel."—G. A. Smith. small things,^g or beginnings. The unfinished temple, and the feeble and depressed condition of the people. plummet, used in building operations, and here as a final testing of the completed work. those seven, R. V. "Even these seven." The meaning of the verse is: "For who hath despised the day of small things? (comp. Hag. ii. 3) For these seven eyes of Jehovah, which run to and fro throughout all the earth, shall rejoice to see the plummet in the hand of Zerubbabel." Since, then, God beholds the progress of the work with joy and favor, who will venture to despise it?—Camb. B. run .. earth, ch. iii. 9.

The Day of Small Things (vs. 10).—1. Little errors not to be overlooked; 2. Small sins not to be indulged; 3. The beginnings of grace not to be contemned; 4. Slight means not to be neglected; 5. Weak Christians not to be despised; 6. A rising cause not to be despaired of.

Small Things.—It is a curious fact that the sun which shines seven times in the course of the week is spoken of as the "seven eyes" of the Deity, because there is an eye for each day. Thus, the Sunday, the "first eye" of God shines, and so on through the rest of the days. In the 9th verse mention is made of laying the foundation stone of a temple for Jehovah, and again in the 10th verse it is asked, "Who hath despised the day of small things?" saying it is only the foundation, this is a small beginning: fear not, for the "seven eyes" of the Lord are over the work. His good providence shall accomplish the whole, because He has an eye for each day of the week. Has a man suffered a great evil, has an antagonist triumphed over another, either in a court of justice or any other way, he says, in talking about his misfortunes, "God has lost His eyes, or I should not have fallen into this trouble." "Well, friend, how is this? I hear you have gained the day." "True, true, the eyes of God were upon me." Should there not have been rain for some time, the people say, "God has no eyes in these days," i. e. He does not take care of us. In the book Neethe-veanpa it is said, "To all there are two eyes: to the learned there are three; to the giver of alms there are seven eyes (alluding to each day); but to those who through penance have received gracious gifts there are innumerable eyes."—Roberts.

"They've Forgotten the Rope."—A tall chimney had been completed, and the scaffolding was being removed. One man remained on the top to superintend the process. A rope should have been left for him to ^c Ex. xxv. 31-39.

"It is interesting to note, that throughout the Scriptures oil is used to represent the Holy Spirit, and that in their union to the Holy Spirit, formed by their faith in Christ, and maintained by their constant study of His word, their habitual dependence on Him in prayer, and their continuous obedience to his commands, believers are represented as having that unfailing supply of strength by which they are sustained in every duty and prepared for every emergency. As in Zechariah's vision the two olive trees stood, one on each side of the golden lamp, emptying into its bowls the oil out of themselves, and thus sustaining its never-failing light; so the Holy Spirit in the believer's heart gives him grace sufficient for him in every hour of need."

^d "The oil is supplied by God Himself through the olive trees, which represent the functions of Christ, who is the great High Priest and King."—Wordsworth.

^e "The secret assistance of My providence."—Lowth.

^f Ezra. iii. 11, vi. 15.

^g Comp. Mat. xiii. 31, 32.

"The little coral insects that build up the beautiful islands which stud the face of the Southern sea work, we are told, for ages in the dark caves of the ocean, regardless of their perishing in obscurity long before their graceful architecture even begins to peep above the surface of the waters. So it is with those who labor under the guidance of Providence for the accomplishment of some remote good. They may work on for generations in obscurity and contempt, conscious only that they are working in harmony with the plans of God."—Peace Society's Report 1859.

"We see this illustrated in the world of nature, and in the world of grace. The little humming-bird, the little gnat, the little violet, the little minnow, the little mite, the little atom, He makes use of in a wise and beautiful manner in creation, for the manifestation of His glory. So He does in grace. The little promise, the little faith, the little talent, all have their place, and are used by Him for His glory."—John Bates.

"The appointed means and channels by which the favor and grace of God were conveyed and bestowed on the Hebrew people."—Wordsworth.

"The dimensions of the roll seem to have no special meaning beyond implying that it was a roll of great magnitude."—Spk. Com. Eze. ii. 9, 10.

"Books are a part of man's prerogative; in formal ink they thoughts and voices hold, that descend by. His wife was at home washing, when her little boy burst in with "Mother, mother, they've forgotten the rope, and he's going to throw himself down!" She paused—her lips moved in the agony of prayer—and she rushed forth. A crowd were looking up to the poor man, who was moving round and round the narrow cornice, terrified and bewildered! He seemed as if at any moment he might fall, or throw himself down in despair. His wife from below cried out—"Wait a bit, John!" The man became calm. "Take off your stocking—unravel the yarn." And he did so. "Now tie the end to a bit of mortar and lower gently." Down came the thread and the bit of mortar, swinging backwards and forwards. Lower and lower it descended, eagerly watched by many eyes; it was now within reach, and was gently seized by one of the crowd. They fastened some twine to the thread. "Now pull up." The man got hold of the twine. The rope was now fastened on. "Pull away again." He at length seized the rope and made it secure. There were a few moments of suspense, and then, amidst the shouts of the people, he threw himself into the arms of his wife, sobbing—"Thou'st saved me, Mary." The worsted thread was not despised—it drew after it the twine, the rope, the rescue! Ah, my friend, thou mayest be sunk very low down in sin and woe, but there is a thread of Divine love, that comes from the throne of heaven, and touches even thee. Seize that thread. It may be small, but it is golden. Improve what you have, however little, and more shall be given. That thin thread of love, if you will not neglect it, shall lift even you up to God and glory. "What hath despised the day of small things?"

11—14. (11) what . . . trees, "To this question no answer is immediately forthcoming, the answer being delayed in order to augment the prophet's desire of understanding the vision, and to induce him to make the question more definite.—Pul. Com. (12) pipes, etc. The Prophet noticed the peculiarity that the trees fed the bowls without any pressing of the hand of man. (13) knowest, etc., see note on vs. 5. (14) anointed ones, R. V. "These are the two sons of oil," the reference here is generally supposed to be to Zerubbabel and Joshua, as representing the kingly and priestly offices, the channels through which God supplies His Church. It may be doubted, however, whether the angel does not purposely avoid giving a definite, and especially a human meaning to these symbols. The tenor of the whole vision is, 'by My Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts.' These 'sons of oil,' then, are agents or agencies, near to God and beyond our ken, 'that stand by the Lord of the whole earth.' With this view would seem to accord the fact, that the two mysterious 'Witnesses,' in the Book of Revelation (xi. 4), are spoken of as being 'the two olive trees . . . standing before the God of the earth,' with an obvious reference to Zechariah's vision."—Camb. B.

The Two Sons of Oil.—I think the best interpretation is that these stand for and represent all those high and hidden agencies, beyond our human sight, which God is steadily using for and applying to the furtherance of his benignant purposes in the world. Behind every builder for God, though he may not see them much, or understand about them clearly, stand, set there by God, these "sons of oil," assisting him. Let the builder for God in any sphere keep up good heart. He cannot fail. God is on his side. The temple shall go on to the turret-stone.—Wayland Hoyt.

CHAPTER THE FIFTH.

SIXTH VISION, vss. 1—4. The flying roll, sent for the cleansing of the people by the punishment of individual sinners. 1—2. (1) flying roll, "Its flight signified the swift coming of punishment; its flying from heaven that the sentence proceeded from the judgment-seat above." (2) twenty cubits, etc., an immense roll of parchment, large enough to be inscribed with a vast number of offences.

The Flying Roll seen by Zechariah.—The roll indicates the form in which books were formerly written—not in separate leaves, and bound in pasteboard and leather backs, as ours are at the present day, but the skins of goats, or some other animal, having been dried and cut into square pieces, were attached together, and made to extend to a length of several yards. Then one end was fastened to a roller, and the whole was rolled up just as we roll up a map. Indeed, our word volume comes from this ancient usage of forming a book by rolling it up; for the word volume means a something rolled up. The roll which Zechariah saw was such a volume, and it was a very large one, being twenty cubits, or thirty feet, in length, and ten cubits, or fifteen feet, in breadth. All this space was written on, full of the curses or threatenings of God against sinful men. Now God has recorded His threatenings as well as His promises, for He is alike faithful in the fulfilment of both. But the passage speaks of the roll flying, and what is meant by this? It seems simply that when the Prophet saw the roll it seemed to be moving swiftly across the heavens—thereby indicating that, as the roll was not stationary, so God's judgments against wicked men are not for one place only, but for all places where sin reigns; and as the roll moved swiftly, so God's judgments were not to be long delayed, but to be speedily poured forth on the guilty nations."—W. Cooke.

3—4. (3) curse, or rather, the document on wh. the curse is inscribed. For judgments denounced against the Jews see De. xxvii. 15—26, xxviii. 15—68. earth, R. V., "land." As on this side, etc., R. V. "on the one side."... "on the other side." i. e. there was writing on both sides of the roll. swear, i. e. falsely, vs. 4. (4) remain. R. V. "abide," take up its lodging there until it has wrought out its purpose."

The Curse (vs. 4).—It abides in the house to curse everything, even the timber and the stones. Guilt, not only, like a ravenous beast, crouches at the door of the sinner, but rather, like a blasting mildew, spreads its baneful influence over the whole dwelling. The sin of one member of a family brings its curse on the others. The sins of the parents bring a curse upon the children. "Between parents and children," says Jeremy Taylor, "there is so great a society of nature and of manners, of blessing and of cursing, that an evil parent cannot perish in a single death; and holy parents never eat their meal of blessing alone; but they make the room shine like the fire of a holy sacrifice; and a father's or a mother's piety makes all the house festival, and full of joy from generation to generation."—Pul. Com.

5—7. SEVENTH VISION. vs. 5—11. "A woman, in whom the wickedness of the land is personified, is pressed down into a great ephah, or measure, and carried, fast shut up in it, by swift ministers, into the land of Babylon, the proper home of all iniquity."—Camb. Bib. (5, 6) ephah, "the largest vessel in use among the Jews, of more than seven gallons in capacity, and round like a barrel."—G. A. Smith. their resemblance, or the thing that their iniquity is like. the earth, R. V. "the land." (7) talent of lead, R. V., marg. "a round piece of lead;" a leaden cover so heavy that the woman inside, who is the personification of the national wickedness, cannot escape. The cross is lifted, to show to the prophet the contents of the ephah.

Angels: objects of their Ministry.—Their ministry relates especially to believers; (Heb. i. 14) "are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?" (Ps. xxxiv. 7) "The angel of Jehovah encampeth round about them that fear Him." (Ps. xci. 11) "He shall give His angels charge over thee." (Isa. lxiii. 9) "The angel of His presence saved them." (Matt. xviii. 10) "Their angels do always behold the face of My Father." (Matt. xiii. 41) "The Son of Man shall send forth His angels, and they shall gather out of His kingdom all things that offend." (xxiv.) "They shall gather together His elect from the four winds." (Acts xii. 15) "It is his angel."—Milton.

8—11. (8) this is, etc. R. V. "This is Wickedness;" and he cast her down into the midst of the ephah." (9) two women, poss. symbolising the two agents in the captivities, Assyria and Babylon. wings, comp. De. xxviii. 49. (10, 11) to build it, R. V., "to build here an house." land of Shinar, "The counter part of the Holy Land."—Ewald. "The land in which men first conspired against God." (Gen. xi. 2). and it shall be, etc., R. V. "and when it is prepared she shall be set there in her own place."

Verses 5—11.—In this striking hieroglyphic we are taught how idol-we to them our solitude may give, and make time present travelled that of old. Our life, fame pierceth longer at the end, and books it farther backward do extend."—Overbury.

* Comp. the oracle at Delphi against the perjurer: "The curse shall swiftly enter, and shall bring the man himself and all his house to ruin." Pr. iii. 33; Is. xxiv. 5, 6.

"It is said that a prisoner standing at the bar, indicted for felony, was asked by the judge what he could say for himself. 'Truly, my lord,' says he, 'I did mean no hurt when I stole; it is an evil custom that I have gotten; I have been used to it ever since I knew anything.'—'Why, then,' says the judge, 'if it be thy custom to steal, it is my custom to hang up thieves.'"—Spencer.

a "An ephah being the measure of dry things, denotes the Jews' unjust dealings in buying and selling."—Lowth.

b "The article is emphatic, implying the lawlessness and wantonness which had prevailed in Judah, and wh. is to be borne away into the land of Shinar, the home of lawless and licentious men."—Spk. Com.

a "The capital of the God-opposed world kingdoms, and so representing in general the seat of irreligion."—Fausset.

"Wickedness or lawlessness is carried to Babylon, and is settled there because at Babylon is its proper place."—S. Jerome.

A thousand liveried angels lackey her, driving far off each thing of sin and guilt, and in clear dream and solemn vision, tell her of things that no gross ear can hear; till oft converse with heavenly habitants begins to cast a beam on the outward shape.

^b "The metal among the ancients representing hard solidity; so the immovable and resistless firmness of God's people."—Fausset. "The secret purpose of God from eternity does not come forth to view before the execution, but is hidden and kept back irresistibly till the fit time, as it were, between lofty mountains; the chariots are the various changes wrought in nations, which, as swift heralds, announce to us what before we knew not."—Calvin.

^a Comp. Je. xlix. 36. Rev. vii. 1.

^b Da. xi. 6.

"How absolute and omnipotent is the silence of night! And yet the stillness seems almost audible! From all the measureless depths of air around us comes a half-sound, a half-whisper, as if we could hear the crumbling and falling away of earth and all created things, in the great miracle of nature, decay and reproduction, ever beginning, never ending—the gradual lapse atry, with all its accompanying atrocities, was removed from the land of the Hebrews which it had desecrated, to a country devoted to it and where it was to commingle with its native elements, never to be re-imported into Canaan. How exactly has the prediction been fulfilled! From the time of the captivity to the present, a period of more than two thousand years, the Hebrew people have never once lapsed into idolatry. The whole vision was intended to convince them of the greatness of the evil.—Henderson.

CHAPTER THE SIXTH.

EIGHTH VISION. vss. 1—8. This vision gives assurance that the peace of Israel would not again be disturbed by her enemies. Babylonia and Egypt especially would be visited with such divine judgments as should appease the spirit of God, aroused to anger by the sufferings of Israel.—Dods. 1—4. (1) four chariots, these according to vs. 5, represent the winds, which again represent the invisible mighty agencies sent forth by God to accomplish his purpose. Ps. civ. 3; cxlviii. 8; Dan. vii. 2. They are four because God's agents are sent to every quarter.—Dods. between two mountains, perhaps Zion and Moriah are intended, "thus representing Jerusalem as the point of departure of God's judgments."—Dods. Or the allusion may be more general, to valleys between mountains as the highways of invaders. brass, the symbol of might.^b (2) red, etc., comp. ch. i. 8, color for bloodshed; black may represent famine and mourning; white, victory; grisled, mixed fortunes. But it is by no means certain that these colors have special significance.

Angels:—

They are God's ministering spirits, and sent,
His messengers of mercy, to fulfil Good for salvation's heirs. For us they still Grieve when we sin, rejoice when we repent:
And on the last dread day they shall present
The severed righteous at His holy hill,
With them God's face to see, to do His will,
And bear with them His likeness.

—Bp. Mant.

5—8. (5) spirits, better, winds, as Divine agents,^a standing, etc., as servants waiting their Lord's bidding. (6) north country, usual term for Babylon. after them, to complete their work... south country, i. e. Egypt.^b (7) and he said, i. e. the Lord. (8) upon me, "me" may refer to the prophet... quieted, or satisfied, by the full execution of the Divine judgment. It is striking that none are sent eastward. This appears to mean that, in Zechariah's day, no power oppressed or threatened Israel from that direction; but in the north there was the centre of the Persian Empire, to the south Egypt, still a possible master of the world, and to the west the new forces of Europe that in less than a generation were to prove themselves a match for Persia. The horses of the fourth chariot are therefore given the charge to exercise supervision upon the whole earth. The centre of the world's power is in the north, and therefore the black horses, which are dispatched in that direction, are explicitly described as charged to bring God's spirit, that is His anger, or His power, to bear on that quarter of the world.—G. A. Smith.

"Symbolical action. Crowning of the high-priest, vss. 9—15. Zechariah is directed to go to the house of Josiah in Jerusalem, and to take from certain Jews who were lodging there gold and silver, a portion of the offerings to the House of God, which they had brought from their brethren still in exile, vss. 9, 10. Of this gold and silver he is to make a crown, and put it on the head of Joshua the High-priest, vs. 11. The significant action is to be accompanied by a prediction in the name of Jehovah, that in due time there shall 'grow up the Branch,' who shall be the true builder of the temple of the Lord, who shall be both King and Priest, and in the exercise of those two offices the author and dispenser of peace, vss. 12, 13." 9—13. (10) of them, i. e. from them. Take silver and gold from them. (11) then take, etc., R. V., "yea, take of them silver and gold." crowns,^a i. e. two crowns, or the double crown of the king and the priest. (12) The Branch, ch. iii. 8, the Messiah, whom Joshua was to represent. out . . . place, lit. "from under him." Comp. for the expression Ex. x. 23; and for the meaning Is. xi. 1; liii. 2. Other less satisfactory renderings are, it shall grow up under Him, i. e. all things fair and good shall spring up and flourish under Him.—Camb. Bib. he shall build, in the full and higher sense, Messiah.^b (13) the glory, i. e. the full glory of both the regal and the priestly offices. Messiah would be both King and Priest. counsel of peace, i. e. there would be no clashing of jurisdictions, bec. both offices would be united in one person.^c

The Matchless Man.—The prophet is commanded to go to certain of the more distinguished men who had returned from Babylonian captivity, representative men and envoys it may be. He was to take these men, whose names are here given, who were entertained in the house of another distinguished man, here called Josiah the son of Zephaniah. From that house the silver and gold which they had brought from Babylon were to be taken, with which crowns were to be made and placed upon the head of Joshua the son of Josedech, the high priest. By the general consent of expositors, this was a mere symbolical transaction—a transaction pointing to some great Man whom Heaven will require all men to crown with the highest dignity. Here is a character symbolized by the name of Joshua, to whom the people are called upon by God Himself to render honor. Who is this Man? Can you find him anywhere amongst the millions of your contemporaries in any land, or on the page of the history of the people of any time? anywhere but in the records of the four evangelists—the Man Christ Jesus? "When He bringeth in the First Begotten into the world, he saith, Let all the angels of God worship Him."—D. Thomas.

14, 15. (14) the crowns shall be to Helem, etc., the crowns are to be for a memorial to H. and his companions of the symbolical act that had taken place, and for this purpose are to be placed in the temple.—Henderson. Helem, or Heldai. Hen, "the Authorized version considers this a proper name. In that case it would be another name for Josiah. But it is really an appellative, and the rendering should be, as in R. V. margin, 'for the kindness of the son of Zephaniah.' The crowns would be also a memorial of his kindness in receiving and entertaining these exiles (comp. Matt. x. 41)."—Pul. Com. memorial, of the promise of Messiah wh. had been given in connection with them. (15) far off, distant nations, symbolized by these emissaries from Babylon.^d A first reference may be to the fact that other Jews shall return from Babylon bringing aid to the present work of rebuilding the temple.

A Lost Crown.—A lady in a dream wandered around heaven, beholding its glories, and came at last to the crown-room. Among the crowns, she saw one exceedingly beautiful. "Whom is this for?" "It was intended for you," said the angel; "but you did not labor for it, and now another will wear it."

CHAPTER THE SEVENTH.

The Deputation from Bethel. Chaps. vii., viii. After the lapse of nearly two years, Zechariah is again called to prophesy, the occasion of his doing so being the arrival at Jerusalem of a deputation, sent from Bethel to enquire whether they ought still to observe a national fast, which had been instituted in the time of the captivity, vii. 1—3. The answer of Almighty God by the prophet falls into four sections (marked by separate paragraphs in R. V.), each of which is introduced by the same formula, vii. 4, 8; viii. 1, 18. The return in the last of these sections (viii. 19) to the question out of which the whole arose, shews that the prophecy is really one.—Camb. B. 1—7. (1) fourth year, B. C. 518.^a Chisleu, or Kisleu, the name in use after the captivity. (2) when they had sent unto the house of God, Sharezer, etc., R. V., "Now they of and running of the sand in the great hour glass of time."—Longfellow.

^a "No time was to be lost to mark the significance of their coming from afar to offer gifts to the temple, typifying in the double crown made of their gifts, and set on Joshua's head, the gathering in of Israel's outcasts to Messiah hereafter, who shall then be recognized as the true King and Priest."—Fausset.

^b "The building of God's spiritual temple, the Church, was a work reserved for the Messiah."—Lowth.

^c "Neither will the regal office overshadow the sacerdotal nor the sacerdotal the regal."—Spk. Com.

^d Is. lx. 10. "It is not enough to begin in the spirit and end in the flesh; it is not for him that runneth, but for him that runneth to the end, that persevereth; that the crown is reserved; it is he that shall eat of the hidden manna,—he that shall have the white stone and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth, saving he that receiveth it."—Spencer.

^a "With returning prosperity and power. It was only natural that a question should arise as to the propriety of retaining these services of humiliation which had been instituted as memorials of the destruction of the city and temple."—Spk. Com.

^b The tenth day of the fifth month was kept as the day on which the temple was destroyed by the Babylonians.

"These are heart-wrung tears. At these words, sympathetic tears swam o'er for the first time, from each celestial eye, as trees autumnal shed their leafy tears in golden showers, shaken by sudden gust; tears not to be forbid."—Bailey.

^c 2 Kl. xxv. 25; Je. xli. 1—3.

^a Comp. Ex. xxii. 21; Is. i. 23, lviii. 6, 7; Mi. vi. 6—8.

"Compassion is an emotion of which we ought never to be ashamed. Graceful, particularly in youth, is the tear of sympathy and the heart that melts at the tale of woe. We should not permit ease and indulgence to contract our affections and wrap us up in a selfish enjoyment; but we should accustom ourselves to think of the distresses of human life, of the solitary cottage, the dying parent, and the weeping orphan. Nor ought we ever to sport with pain and distress in any of our amusements, or treat even the meanest insect with wanton cruelty." — Dr. Blair.

Bethel had sent Sharezer," etc. To inquire God's will in the matter of the fastings. (3) priests . . . prophets, through whom they might expect the Divine will to be communicated: weep, as in a time of humiliation. fifth month,^b "the deputation limited their inquiry to the fast of the fifth month, which commemorated the burning of the temple and the city, now practically restored. But with a breadth of view which reveals the prophet rather than the priest, Zechariah replies, in the following chapter, upon all the facts by which Israel for seventy years had bewailed her ruin and exile. He instances two, that of the fifth month, and that of the seventh month, the date of the murder of Gedaliah,^c when the last poor remnant of a Jewish state was swept away."—G. A. Smith. separating myself, from food, etc. (4, 5) The people are reminded that their fasting and feasting had alike been observances terminating upon themselves and devoid of religious motive and spiritual aim, and consequently unacceptable to God; in accordance with the teaching of the earlier prophets, in the times of Jerusalem's prosperity.—Camb. B. fasted, etc., comp. Is. lviii. 5. seventh month, probably on account of Gedaliah.^c to me, Hag. i. 4. Was it really religious fasting, the sign of a true heart-penitence? (6) when ye did eat, etc., R. V., "when ye eat and when ye drink, do not ye." for yourselves, for your own self-pleasing. You neither honored Me in your feeding or in your fasting. (7) should ye not, etc., or "is it not the words which the Lord hath cried by the former prophets;" i. e. "is not this what the prophets said would happen?"—Dods. south, the Negeb. the plain, Heb. Shephelah, the maritime district.^d Perhaps the third division of the territory of Judah, "the hill country," Luke i. 39, is pointed at in the words, "Jerusalem and the cities thereof round about her." Judg. i. 9; Obad. 19.

National Fasts.—In 1853, when cholera prevailed, the Presbytery of Edinburgh (Church of Scotland) suggested to Lord Palmerston, then Home Secretary, the propriety of ordering a national fast. His lordship, in his reply, recommended observance of natural laws rather than fasting. If this were attended to, all would be well. Otherwise pestilence would come, "in spite of all the prayers and fastings of a united but inactive nation." He does not seem to have understood that the two things were quite compatible. Prayer and inaction is folly; but prayer and action is the highest wisdom. Surely there is something grand and beautiful in a whole nation bowed in humility and supplication before the Most High.—Pul. Com.

"In the next section, vss. 8—14, the substance of the teaching of the earlier prophets, as insisting on moral reformation and not on outward observances, is given; and to the neglect of it are traced the rejection by God of His people, and the calamities that had come upon them in their captivity and dispersion."—Camb. B. 8—10. (8, 9) execute, etc., expression of God's demand for moral not merely ceremonial goodness.^a (10) oppress not, Je. v. 28. imagine evil, plot or plan evil schemes.

Compassion and Its Reward.—The Cup of Cold Water.—A young Englishwoman was sent to France to be educated in a Huguenot school in Paris. A few evenings before the fatal massacre of St. Bartholomew's day, she and some of her young companions were taking a walk in some part of the town where there were sentinels placed—perhaps on the walls; and you know that when a soldier is on guard he must not leave his post until he is relieved, that is, till another soldier comes to take his place. One of the soldiers, as the young ladies passed him, besought them to have the charity to bring a little water, adding that he was very ill, and that it would be as much as his life was worth to go and fetch it himself. The ladies walked on, much offended at the man for presuming to speak to them,—all but the young Englishwoman, whose compassion was moved, and who, leaving her party, procured some water and brought it to the soldier. He begged her to tell him her name and place of abode, and this she did. When she rejoined her companions, some blamed and others ridiculed her attention to a common soldier; but they soon had reason to lament that they had not been equally compassionate, for the grateful soldier contrived, on the night of the massacre, to save this young Englishwoman, while all the other inhabitants of the house she dwelt in were killed.—Paxton Hood.—A Soldier Overcome by Kindness.—There was in a barrack an incorrigible soldier, who had been fined, imprisoned, flogged, and put on extra drill, but all to no purpose. His colonel, seeing him one day in the guardhouse for some misdemeanor, said to him, "What! you here again?" "Yes, sir," he replied, with a dogged hardihood that showed he cared for no punishment. The colonel turned round to the sergeant and said, "I don't know what to do with this fellow. We've flogged him, fined him, imprisoned him, put him on extra drill; in fact, we've tried everything." "No, sir," answered the sergeant, touching his cap with the military salute, "there's one thing you've not tried; you've never forgiven him." The colonel held down his head, somewhat ashamed, and after consultation with his brother officers, returned to the soldier, and said to him, "There, sir, you may go; you're forgiven; you will not be punished for this." A new light seemed to break upon the mind of that man, and from that time, two years past, said the chaplain, there has not been a better behaved or more easily managed man in the regiment.

11—14. (11) pulled . . shoulder, as a stubborn beast wh. will not be yoked. (12) adamant stone, Eze. iii. 9, poss. diamond. (13) so they cried, R. V., "so they shall cry and I will not hear . . but I will scatter," etc. (14) desolate after them, or behind them, when they had gone into captivity.^b pleasant land, Je. iii. 19. Lit. "land of desire."

Tastes in Hearers.—One is like an Athenian, and he hearkeneth after news: if the preacher say anything of our armies beyond the sea, or council at home, or matters of court, that is his lure: another is like the Pharisee, and he watcheth if anything be said that may be wrested to be spoken against persons in high place, that he may play the devil in accusing of his brethren; let him write that in his tables too; another smacks of eloquence, and he gaps for a phrase, that when he cometh to his ordinary, he may have one figure more to grace and worship his tale: another is discontent, and he never pricketh up his ears till the preacher come to gird against some whom he spiteth, and when the sermon is done, he remembereth nothing which was said to him, but that which was spoken against another: another cometh to gaze about the church; he hath an evil eye, which is still looking upon that from which Job did avert his eye: another cometh to muse; so soon as he is set, he falleth into a brown study; sometimes his mind runs upon his market, sometimes of his journey, sometimes of his suit, sometimes of his dinner, sometimes of his sport after dinner; and the sermon is done before the man thinks where he is: another cometh to hear, but so soon as the preacher hath said his prayer, he falls fast asleep, as though he had been brought in for a corpse, and the preacher should preach at his funeral.—Henry Smith.

CHAPTER THE EIGHTH.

"Passing now to a happier strain of hope and promise (vss. 1—17), the prophetic word tells of the bright days of holiness and prosperity in store for Jerusalem, in contrast with her earlier condition of distress and discord, and urges the people, on the strength of these promises, to holy obedience."—Camb. B. 1—3. (1, 2) was jealous, R. V., "are jealous;" the Hebrew word is derived from the redness of the face which betrays strong emotion."—Dods. fury, here, in a good sense, warmth, or zeal. (3) city of truth, no longer full of lies and treachery and infidelity. God dwelling therein, it shall be "the faithful city" (Isa. i. 26), in which all that is true and real shall flourish (comp. vs. 16; Zeph. iii. 13).—Pul. Com. mountain,^a with special reference to Moriah.

A Safe Resting Place.—These are solid doctrines to rest upon—God calling for judgment; God approving the moral, the righteous, and the true; God connecting His heaven with His earth, and God's heaven shrouding itself in frowns when God's earth rushes into sin and selfishness. This is the economy in which we live. We can pull out the shoulder, chafe against the bars of the cage, but the cage is there, and we cannot escape. Much better surrender, obey; seek the appointed way to peace, which is the way of the Cross, the way of Calvary, the way of ^b "It was ordered remarkably by God's providence that no occupants took possession of it, but that during the Jews' absence it was reserved for them against their return, after seventy years." — Fausset.

"They might thank themselves (for the desolations of their land); it was they that by their own wickedness laid the pleasant land desolate. It was not so much the Chaldeans that did it. No, they did it themselves. The desolations of a land are owing to the wickedness of its inhabitants." — M. Henry.

^a Comp. Is. ii. 2; Mi. iv. 1; Eze. xl. 2.

that wonder which is called by this name—none nobler—the Atonement. Do not define it, but receive it in its largeness of reconciliation and hospitality of love. Oh, fall down before it, and say, "Lord, I believe, help thou mine unbelief."—J. Parker.

4—6. (4) old men, a sign of settled times, when men are not cut off in their prime by war or pestilence. dwell, better, "sit," which gives a more graphic picture of the peaceful state indicated. Comp. i Macc. xiv. 9. Long life and abundance of children were reckoned among the blessings of the O. T.—Dods. (5) streets, etc., the sign of peace and security.^b Mt. xi. 16, 17. (6) marvellous, Heb. "signifies to be impossible to human power, something miraculous."—Barrows. should it also be marvellous, i. e. the things that are impossible with men are possible with God.

Old Men and Children.—Like many another emigration, for religion's sake, from the heart of civilization to a barren coast, the poor colony of Jerusalem consisted chiefly of men, young and in middle life. The barren years gave no encouragement to marriage. The constant warfare with neighboring tribes allowed few to reach grey hairs. It was a rough and a hard society, unblessed by the two great benedictions of life, childhood and old age. But this should all be changed, and Jerusalem filled with placid old men and women, and with joyous boys and girls. The oracle, we say, had its motive in Zechariah's day. But what an oracle for these times of ours! Whether in the large cities of the old world, where so few of the workers may hope for a quiet old age, sitting in the sun, and the children's days of play are shortened by premature toil and knowledge of evil; or in the newest fringes of the new world, where men's hardness and coarseness are, in the struggle for gold, unawed by reverence for age and unsoftened by the fellowship of childhood,—Zechariah's great promise is equally needed. Even there it shall be fulfilled if men will remember his conditions—that the first regard of a community, however straitened in means, be the provision of religion, that truth and whole-hearted justice abound in the gates, with love and loyalty in every heart towards every other.—Exp. Bib.

Playing Together.—Yes, it is a happy sight, the sports of children! What life! what joy! what consequential airs! Bring out the baby, Bridget. Let the trumpet and the drum do their best, only let it be at a proper time, and in a proper place, and not to disturb the sick and nervous. We never know what children really are while we keep apart from them, or watch them as a sentinel does a prisoner. Let us get hold of your hands and your hearts, little ones, and we will try to enter into your joys.

7—12. (7) east country, lit. "land of the sun-rising;" "from the rising to the going down of the sun," i. e. from all parts of the world. (8) in truth, etc., Ho. ii. 19, 20. (9) vs. 9—13 form one continuous exhortation to persevere in rebuilding the temple. The exhortation is grounded upon a comparison of their condition, before and after the time when they began in earnest to build the house of the Lord. The improvement which had already taken place since that time should encourage them to go on building, cheered by fresh prophecies and promises from the mouth of the same prophets who had urged them to begin the work. and of Him whose messengers of good they were.—Camb. B. prophets, esp. Haggai and Zechariah. foundation, etc., see Ezr. v. 1, 2. (10) these days, R. V., "those days." no hire, Hag. i. 6, i. e. "the fruits of the earth would not pay the labor of those who cultured it, bec. the Divine judgments lay on a negligent people. peace, etc., in the time of neglect." the affliction, R. V., "the adversary;" the Samaritans and Amorites who plundered the caravans. Comp. Ezr. viii. 22. (11) residue, R. V., "remnant;" the returned captives. Hag. i. 12. (12) seed, etc., general signs of returning prosperity.

Value of Religion.—Let me tell business men that they cannot have any real success unless they are profoundly religious. Appearances are often to the contrary. Appearances amount to nothing. We cannot take in the case within the limits of three years or thirty years; we must look upon the whole field-space and upon the whole time-space, and this is written at the root of all things: A man cannot neglect God and be really rich. He may have heaps of money, but he has not wealth; he is not the owner of the wealth, the wealth is his owner; he is not proprietor, he is slave. He has locked himself up in his own gold-chest, and there he famishes as if he were a beggar. His soul is fat who makes the lives of others pleasant; he is strong who shares his strength with the weak.—J. Parker.

^b"This imagery, which represents a time when there is no alarm of war, or plague, or famine, but everything is peaceful and joyous, describes, in a spiritual sense, the condition of the Church, as defended by Christ, and enriched with blessings by Him."—S. Jerome.

"Now, roughly, not with vain subtlety of definition, but for plain use of the words, 'Play' is an exertion of body or mind made to please ourselves, and with no determined end; and work is a thing done because it ought to be done and with a determined end. You play, as you call it, at cricket, for instance. That is as hard work as anything else, but it amuses you, and it has no result but the amusement. If it were done as an ordered form of exercise, for health's sake, it would become work directly."—Ruskin.

^a Ezra iv. 1, 4. "The illustrious officer of day first worship'd in the east, 'gins to display the glory of his beams; then buds unfold their chary leaves, each dew-drown'd marigold insensibly doth stir itself and spread; each violet lifts up his pensive head."—Poole.

13—15. (13) curse, or byword and reproach.^b "Either the object of cursing and blessing, as men cursed you before so now they shall bless you (Jer. xxii. 9); or a formula of imprecation or benediction, God make thee like them (Jer. xxix. 22; Gen. xlviii. 20; Ruth iv. 11, 12)." (14) repented not, found no occasion for changing My purpose. (15) well, or graciously; granting restoring mercies.

The Sinner a Curse; the Saint a Blessing.—By their declension in religion the Jews had become a curse to the heathen instead of a blessing—"blind leaders of the blind." Hence it is suggested—I. That ungodly persons are a curse in the world; i. e. in the measure of their sinfulness. Illustrate this by showing how the indolent, dishonest, intemperate, etc., tempt others—make their homes unhappy, are a curse to themselves. Show that any one may fall into evil habits and become a great injury to others. II. That godly persons are a blessing. By word, deed, and example, others are encouraged to become like them. World improved. Good laws passed. Sabbath kept. Sin rebuked. Peace maintained, etc. III. That the ungodly are made godly by the salvation of God. God saves from sin and its consequences. Salvation through faith in Christ. Faith works by love. Obedience of faith and love.—Hive.

16, 17. "The prophet has promised them a prosperous and happy condition in which fasting would be out of place. This condition they are to prolong by righteousness, truthfulness, and loving-kindness."—Marcus Dods. (16) speak . . neighbour, Eph. iv. 25. truth and peace, Jerusalem would indeed "be called a city of truth" (vs. 3), when alike in the private intercourse of her citizens (speak ye every one the truth to his neighbor), and in the public administration of justice (in your gates, Deut. xxv. 7; Job v. 4), truth reigned supreme. The judgment of peace is righteous judgment, which alone secures peace.—Camb. B. in your gates, the usual place of judgment,^a and of concourse. But the term often stands for the city itself. Here it means, wheresoever you come into social relationships. (17) imagine evil, ch. vii. 10.

Kings as Judges (vs. 16).—It appears from the above, and other passages of Scripture, that the kings of Israel distributed justice, or sat in judgment to decide causes that might be brought before them, at the gate; that the gate of the city was the place where these causes came before them, and whence they pronounced their decision; that the king held his councils at the gate, or where the elders or chiefs met the king, to consider the affairs of the nation; and that, in fact, all their principal assemblies were held at the gates of the city. This Jewish custom still exists in the interior of South Africa. While in Kurrcechane, a city about twelve or thirteen hundred miles up from the Cape of Good Hope, I was told that a cause was going to be brought before the king. Being anxious to witness it, I was led in haste to the gate, where I saw the king sit down at the right side of it, with his secretary on his right hand, and the prosecutor, or complainant, on his left, who stated his case across to the secretary. During his narrating his case, the king was looking about, as if not attending to what was said, but I saw from his eye that he was attending to what, for form's sake, was addressed to the secretary. When the party had finished what he had to say, the secretary repeated the whole to the king, as if he had been entirely ignorant of the matter. The king immediately gave judgment.—Campbell.

The question of the deputation from Bethel (vii. 1—3) is now definitely answered. The fasts of the captivity are to be transformed into joyful feasts, to which willing multitudes shall throng from all parts of the land; heathen nations joining also in their celebration, and counting it an honor and protection to be associated with a Jew. 18—23. (18, 19) cheerful feasts, i. e. they shall still be duly kept, but their character shall be changed; bec. they need be no longer memorials of the desolation of their city and temple, seeing that these had been rebuilt. "In the tenth month the siege of Jerusalem had begun (2 Kings xxv. 1); on the ninth of the fourth month Jerusalem was taken (Jer. xxxix. 2); on the ^b "A standing monument of the Divine vengeance, so that the heathen used this as a common form of imprecation, 'God do so to me as He did to the Jews.'—Lowth. Is. lxxv. 15; Je. xxix. 32.

^a "The administration of justice tends to promote peace and concord." — Spk. Com.

"A Chinese, justly irritated at the oppressions of the Government, gained access to the emperor with his complaints. 'I come,' said he, 'to present myself to the punishment to which similar remonstrances have brought six hundred of my fellow creatures; and I give you notice to prepare for new executions, since China possesses ten thousand patriots, who, for the same cause, will follow each other, to ask the same reward.' The emperor was not proof against such intrepid virtue; he granted the Chinese the reward that pleased him best — the punishment of the guilty, and the suppression of the obnoxious impost.

There is a fable of a princess who must make her escape from a castle, or starve. The gate is open; the bright sun invites her forth. Only a spider's web hangs across the passage. This she brushes aside, when, lo! another, and so on, till she sits down and weeps, feeling that though there is only a spider's web between her and liberty, she cannot escape. Habit is like these spiders' webs. To meet each act is an herculean task, but grace can uproot and conquer it.

^a Nu. xv. 38; De. xxii. 12.

^b "Another rend. is, 'The eyes of men in general and of all Israel in particular, through consternation at the victorious progress of Alexander, shall be directed to Jehovah.'"—Fausset.

^c Comp. Eze. xxviii. 12—19.

Vss. 1—8. The foreground of this prophecy is the course of the victories of Alexander, wh. circled round the Holy Land without hurting it, and ended in the overthrow of the Persian empire. The surrender of Damascus followed first, immediately on his great victory at the Issus; then Sidon yielded itself and received its ruler from the conqueror. Tyre he utterly destroyed; Gaza, we know, perished; he passed harmless by Jerusalem. Samaria, on his return from Egypt, he chastised. History gives no other explanation of Zechariah's prophecy than his conquest by Alexander: that conquest agrees minutely with the prophecy.

seventh of the fifth, city and temple were burnt down (2 Kings xxv. 8); in the seventh month Gedaliah was assassinated and the poor relics of a Jewish state swept from the land (Jer. xli.)."—G. A. Smith. (20) people, R. V., "peoples," prob. the tribes of Israel. (21) to pray, R. V., "to intreat the favor of the Lord." Is. ii. 3; Mi. iv. 1, 2. A prophecy also of the Gentiles flocking into the Gospel Church. (22) many people, R. V., "many peoples," Is. lxvi. 19—23. ten men, i. e. an indefinite number. "Ten expresses totality, and signifies a large number. Comp. Gen. xxxi. 7; Neh. iv. 12; Lev. xxvi. 26."—Dods. take hold, the gesture of entreating friendly assistance. skirt, this with its fringe and blue riband was a distinguishing badge of the Jew.^a

CHAPTER THE NINTH.

Part II., chaps. ix.—xiv. After a lapse, it may be, of many years (for there is no date to this second division of the Book), when, perhaps, the active work of a long life was done, Zechariah is again called to prophesy. The event, which was the immediate subject of his earlier prophecies, had now become an accomplished fact. The temple was restored and its worship resumed. "Moved by the Holy Ghost," he soars now into loftier regions of prophetic inspiration, and in two "burdens of the word of the Lord," depicts in glowing language and vivid imagery the nearer and more distant future as they expand before him. —Camb. B.

[But many scholars are convinced that chaps. ix.—xiv. were written after the exile and not by Zechariah. The marked difference, in many respects, of these chaps. from the earlier portion of the book gives much probability to this view.—G. M. A.]

1—4. (1) Hadrach, prob. a region of Syria, near Damascus. the net, R. V., "its resting place," i. e. the place on which the "burden" or heavy judgment of the Lord shall light. eyes, etc., "for Jehovah hath an eye upon the heathen and all the tribes of Israel—and on Hamath," etc.—G. A. Smith.^b (2) Hamath, Nu. xxxiv. 8; Jos. xiii. 5. The principal city of Upper Syria, bordering on the land of Hadrach. shall border thereby, R. V., "which bordereth thereon." wise R. V., "because she is very wise." This no doubt refers to Tyre. The prophets generally refer the fall of Tyre to her over-confidence in her own wisdom. Ezek. xxviii. 1—4. (3) stronghold, on an island half a mile from the shore, wh. seemed impregnable. (4) cast her out, many of her wealthy inhabitants fled over the Mediterranean. power . . sea, i. e. her sea defences.^c

Tyrus, a Stronghold.—Proudly confident in the strength of their island fortress, the Tyrians mocked the attempts of Alexander to reduce their city. Every engine of war for defence had been stored up in their bulwarks, and every device which their skilful engineers could suggest was had recourse to, and for a time with marked success. "Ye despise this land army through confidence in the place that ye dwell in as an island, but I will show you that ye dwell on a continent," was the language of Alexander. The shallow channel between the mainland and the island was at last bridged over by a huge dam of earth erected after repeated failures, and the city which had stood a five years' siege from the Assyrians, a thirteen years' siege from the Chaldeans, was taken after a short siege of seven months by Alexander. Ten thousand of its brave defenders were either massacred or crucified, the rest were sold into slavery; none escaped save those who were concealed by the Sidonians in the ships. Q. Curtius adds distinctly that "Alexander having slain all, save those who fled to the temples, ordered the houses to be set on fire."—C. H. H. Wright.

5—8. (5) Ashkelon, etc., cities of the Philistine plain and shore. very sorrowful, "and Gaza writhe in anguish, and Ekron, for her confidence is abashed."—G. A. Smith. (6) bastard, "half-breeds,"—G. A. Smith. A term of contempt. (7) blood . . abominations, the foul and idolatrous sacrifices of Phil. idolatry. remaineth, R. V., "and he also shall be a remnant for our God." "The Philistine also shall become a choice remnant unto the God of Israel, no longer to be regarded as alien and impure."—Pul. Com. as . . Judah, the meaning is that the Philistine, the nation personified as before, shall take his place, ruler and people, as one of the divisions of the Jewish nation. Ekron as a Jebusite, the Jebusites had held their own in the midst of the chosen people, possessors of the stronghold of Zion up to the time of David (Josh. xv. 63); but at last had been merged and lost in Israel. So should it be with the Philistines, who are here intended by Ekron. They too shall be absorbed into the Jewish church and nation, when the ultimate goal of the prophecy is reached.—Camb. B. (8) encamp, for their defence." because of the army, etc., R. V., "against the army, that none pass through or return;" i. e. to defend it against the incursions of enemies.

The Security of Jerusalem.—The prophecy of vs. 8 was remarkably fulfilled in the unexpected sparing of Jerusalem by Alexander. Furious as he was at the refusal of the high-priest Iuddua to furnish him supplies while besieging Tyre, and resolved as he was to make an example of Jerusalem, he yet no sooner saw the high-priest in his official robes than he recognized him as the same person who had appeared to him in a dream and promised him victory over the Persians. Accordingly he honored Iuddua, exempted the Jews from tribute each Sabbatical year, and allowed them to live according to their own laws. The story no doubt has been embellished, but the nucleus of fact is remarkable.—Dods.

The coming of the King, vss. 9—17. 9. rejoice, etc., Is. lxii. 11; Mat. xxi. 15; Jno. xii. 15. The joy is to be on account of the coming of Messiah. shout, Zep. iii. 14. King, i. e. Messiah. riding . . ass," "which in the East does not convey an idea of poverty, but only of peace. Had he been a warrior he would have come in his war-chariot, or on his war-horse."—Dods.

The Ideal King.—I. Beautiful vision. Poets in rapt moments have had glimpses of the highest (Ps. xlv. 72). "Find me the true king or able man, and he has a Divine right over me" (Carlyle). II. Passionate longing. The heart yearns for what is best. The need presses. Circumstances now and again arise that intensify the feeling and the cry. There is much to be done—evils to remove, wrongs to be redressed, rights and liberties to be secured. Oh for the coming of the true King! III. Immortal hope. The true King "not yet." Still hope. Faith in the possibilities of human nature; above all, faith in the promise of God.

"Ring out false pride in place and blood,
The civic slander and the spite;
Ring in the love of truth and right,
Ring in the common love of good. . . .

"Ring in the valiant man and free,
The larger heart, the kindlier hand;
Ring out the darkness of the land.
Ring in the Christ that is to be."

10—17. (10) cut off, destroy all war weapons, bec. Messiah brings the reign of peace. Ephraim, i. e. the ten tribes. Jerusalem, the two tribes. sea to sea, Ps. lxxii. 8. (11) thee, the daughter of Zion, in vs. 9. by the, R. V., "because of the." blood . . covenant, or in fulfilment of the covenant that was ratified with blood." "It was this that had sealed God's promise to be their helper in every such emergency as the present."—Marcus Dods. sent forth, i. e. liberated. prisoners, etc., Is. lxi. 1. pit, or prison." (12) stronghold, wh. God offers to be to you. render double, Is. xl. 2. "The prophecy now moves forward (vss. 13—17) and takes for its ground work a later epoch in the future history of the Jews. As their deliverance from their enemies without fighting, in the times of Alexander (vss. 1—8), was foretold as the pledge and type of Messiah's kingdom of peace (vss. 9—12), so their victories over the Selucidæ, in the times of the Maccabees, are in these verses foretold as the pledge and type of Messiah's victories over all His enemies."—Camb. Bib. (13) bent Judah, R. V., "For I have bent Judah for me, I have filled the bow with Ephraim; and I will stir up thy sons, . . . and will make thee," using these as Divine instruments. O Greece,* reference may be to the valiant efforts of the Maccabees to free the country from the Syrian opa "Reassuring the Jews while engaged in the rebuilding, who might otherwise have feared that their work would be undone by the conqueror."—Maurer.

b "This prophecy does not produce on the mind of an Oriental that idea of abject poverty and humility wh. would be suggested to an Occidental. Had He come riding in a chariot, it would have been an emblem of earthly grandeur; had He rode upon a horse. He would have seemed a conqueror; His riding upon an ass only showed that He was gentle, and that the weapons of His warfare were persuasion and the diffusion of truth."—Van Lennep.

a Ex. xxiv. 8; He. ix. 18—20.

b "An image of the misery of the Jewish exiles in Egypt, Greece, etc., under the successors of Alexander."—Fausset. "Would you taste the tranquil scene? Be sure your bosoms are serene: devoid of hate, devoid of strife, devoid of all that poisons life; and much it 'vaile you, in their place, to graft the love of human race.'"—Shenstone.

c Is. lxvi. 19.

^d Comp. Job xli. 23.

^e Is. lxiii. 1—3.

^f "The spiritual blessings of the Gospel, esp. in God's Holy word and sacraments, are the corn and new wine which strengthen and refresh chaste and holy souls, who are here compared to men and maidens."—S. Cyril.

pressions. (14) Lord shall be seen, present to give His special aid and defence. (15) subdue . . stones, R. V., "shall tread down the sling stones."^a make a noise, the joyous noise of feasting after victory. filled, with blood; "to be wet with blood is an image of victory." like bowls, i. e. the bowls of the altar, in wh. the blood of the sacrifices was received. (16) stones of a crown, "the people shall be in God's sight as precious as these are in the eyes of men, and shall be highly exalted."—Pul. Com. ensign . . lifted up as an ensign, etc., R. V., "lifted on high over his land." The land is the crown in which the precious jewels are set.—Pul. Com. (17) goodness, "How great is the prosperity and beauty of God's people when thus favored by Jehovah."—Marcus Dods. *corn, etc., signs of plenty.*² cheerful, R. V., "flourish."

The Coming of the King (vss. 9—17).—The great event for which all that had been foretold in the preceding verses of the chapter, and indeed all the preceding history of Israel and of the world, had been a preparation, and in which as purposed and promised by God was the pledge of Israel's preservation for its accomplishment, is now announced and its consequences unfolded. Sion is called upon to welcome with exultation her just and lowly King, who comes to her in humble state (vs. 9), whose kingdom of peace shall cover all the land and embrace all nations (vs. 10), and who, mindful of His covenant with her, shall give deliverance to the captives of Israel (vss. 11, 12). Using them, now once more an united nation, as the instruments of His warfare (vs. 13), Himself fighting for them and manifesting Himself as their Protector (vs. 14), He will make them victorious over all their enemies (vs. 15), and will promote them to safety and honor (vs. 16), magnifying His "goodness" and His "beauty" in the prosperity with which He crowns them (vs. 17).—Camb. B.

CHAPTER THE TENTH.

1—4. (1) latter rain, this was early spring, March or April. It came in time to swell the grain now ripening to maturity. bright clouds, R. V., "even of the Lord that maketh lightnings; and he shall give them showers," etc.^a Great rains are usually associated with thunder and lightning.^b grass, a general term for cultured vegetation. (2) idols, R. V., "teraphim,"^c household gods of human form, sometimes of life size. Comp. Judges xvii. 5; xviii. 5, 24. diviners, De. xviii. 10—14. went their way, "the Israelites, bec. they have had recourse to idols and diviners, wander and stray about to their hurt like sheep without a shepherd." (3) shepherds, fig. for the princes and leaders. goats,^d referring still to the unfaithful rulers. goodly horse, comp. Song Sol. i. 9. "From being timid and helpless sheep, the people were to become like the war-charger of Jehovah."—Dods. (4) out of him, i. e. Judah. corner, R. V., "corner-stone." nail, or peg, by wh. the shepherd's tent is fastened. battle . . bow, ch. ix. 13. oppressor, or, ruler, as in R. V. margin, a sense which the word will bear in Is. iii. 12; lx. 17. Every ruler, civil and military, "the corner-stone," "the nail," "the battle-bow," shall proceed from Judah, blessed by God, or from God, as His gift to Judah, as the need of the state requires.

Parable of the Rain.—I. Man's great need. Without rain the ground is impoverished and dead. So is the soul without God. II. Man's great resource. Not idols or enchantments, not human devices or philosophies, but appeal to God. He will withhold no good from them that walk uprightly. III. Man's great consolation. 1. Sweet (cf. Deut. xxxii. 2); 2. Timely. God does not give in an arbitrary way, but according to His own wise and holy laws. When rain is most needed it is most appreciated. So in spiritual things (cf. Ps. xlv. 3); 3. Abundant "showers." Rain sometimes slight, partial or temporary. Here promise of "abundance of rain," meeting the needs of all, reaching to the farthest limits of the parched land; 4. Invigorating and fertilizing. "To every one grass in the field," call for thankfulness and joy.—Forsyth.

Eastern Dreamers.—The Hindoos may be called a nation of dream-

^a Job xxviii. 25.

^b Je. x. 13.

^c Gen. xxxi. 19.

^d "The term he goats describes what these rulers were, the emblem of headstrong wantonness and offensiveness lust."—Fausset.

"Then with uplifted hands, and eyes devout, grateful to heaven, over his head beholds a dewy cloud, and in the cloud a bow conspicuous, with three listed colors gay, betokening peace from God, and covenant new."—Milton.

"For, faithful to its sacred page, heaven still rebuilds thy span; nor lets the type grow pale with age that first spoke peace to man."—Campbell.

ers; they are often elevated or depressed by the gay or sorrowful scenes of their sleeping hours. The morning is the time for the young and the old to tell their wondrous stories, and many a sage prognostication is then delivered to the attentive hearers. Men and women often take long journeys, perform arduous penances, and go through expensive ceremonies, from no other cause than that of a dream. The crafty Brahmin finds this to be a powerful medium of access to the superstition and purses of the people. How many splendid temples have been built or repaired, how many rest-houses erected, how many costly presents have been made, as the result of a real or pretended dream! Mendicants, pandarams, priests, and devotees have all had their profitable revelations from the gods. Does a needy impostor wish to have a good berth and a settled place of abode? He buries an idol in some lonely place, and, at the expiration of about twelve months, he has a dream, and a vision into the bargain, for the god actually appears to him when he is not asleep, and says, "Go to such a place, and you will find my image; there long, long has it been in disgrace, but now you must build a temple to my glory."—Roberts.

5—10. (5) they, etc., God's people, when God manifests His power in them, and through them. mire . . streets, the house refuse is freely swept into the narrow streets of Eastern cities. riders, etc., in this respect the Hebrews were especially weak, and their enemies strong. Victory over the horsemen therefore equals complete victory.—Marcus Dods. (6) house of Joseph, survivors of the ten tribes.^a bring them, comp. vs. 10. to place them, omitted in R. V. (7) they of Ephraim, i. e. as well as Judah, shall be heroes. Not many members of the northern kingdom returned at first from the captivity; but the prophet gives the assurance that they shall come and prove themselves mighty warriors."—Pul. Com. rejoice . . wine, ch. ix. 15. (8) hiss for them, fig. fr. attraction of bees into a hive.^b increase, Is. xlix. 19. "Josephus informs us that 200 years after the time here referred to, Galilee was peopled to an amazing extent, studded with cities, towns, and villages, some of the latter containing as many as 15,000 inhabitants."—Barrows. (9) sow them, "their dispersion among the nations of the earth shall not be for their destruction, but like the sowing of corn, which is scattered broad-cast, not that it may be lost and perish, but that it may bring forth much fruit. Comp. Hos. ii. 23." "As Merivale says (Hist. of the Romans, xxix.), the Jews made themselves homes in every country from the Tiber to the Euphrates, from the pines of the Caucasus to the spice-groves of Happy Arabia."—Dods. live with their children, i. e. permanently, generation after generation, in security. turn again, return to their own land. (10) Assyria, etc., comp. 2 Ki. xv. 29; Is. xi. 11—16; Ho. xi. 11.

The Nature of Prophetic Utterance.—The truth is that such descriptions suit many different events, and have various applications. Though their complete fulfilment may be expected only in Messianic times and circumstances, yet we may see many anticipatory and preparative transactions, which are meant to introduce the final accomplishment. The Jewish prophet is not always foretelling certain definite events. Oftentimes he is teaching, warning, and exhorting; and generally he is enunciating great principles, the truth of which shall be clear in the future, rather than predicting facts. Not unfrequently commentators have neglected this consideration, and sought too curiously to restrict the prophet's words to some one issue. It may be noted, further, that where the prophetic language concerning the destiny of the restored people seems to be exaggerated, and not borne out by subsequent facts, the promises are always conditioned by the moral state of the recipients. If they answered fully and consistently to God's call, the result would be such as was predicted. That the event in all respects did not correspond with the high ideal previously announced must be attributed, not to the prophet's mistake, but to the people's waywardness and disobedience.

11, 12. (11) he, i. e. Jehovah. Imagery taken from the first deliverance through the Red Sea. with affliction, i. e. to His enemies. Comp. Exod. xiv. 24, 25, 27, xv. 3—7. This is perhaps the best rendering of this difficult and much disputed clause.—Camb. B. G. A. Smith translates: "And they shall pass through the sea of Egypt, and He shall smite the

^a "They who were served by Jacoboam's schism, will dwell together in Christ; and there will be one flock and One Shepherd."—S. Jerome

Eze. xxxvii. 19 —22.

"As one who in some frightful dream would shun his pressing foe, labors in vain to run, and his own slowness in his sleep hemoans, in thick short sighs, weak cries, and tender groans."—Dryden.

^b "As bees are gathered by hissing, or whistling, into a swarm and into a hive."

—Wordsworth. Is. v. 28, vii. 18.

"Summon them fr. distant countries, by a certain signal, as a shepherd calls his flock together with his whistle."

—Lowth.

"The slight hold the Jews have on every soil where they now live, as also the commercial, and therefore cosmopolitan character of their pursuits, making a change of residence easy to them, fit them peculiarly for missionary work."—Moore.

"This is equivalent to an assurance that all obstacles will be surmounted that now restrain the Jews in spiritual bondage, and that they will be delivered by a glorious exodus from their present spiritual Egypt of darkness and thralldom into the glorious light and liberty of the Gospel in the Church of Christ."

—Wordsworth.

"The groves were God's first temples. Ere man learn'd to hew the shaft, and lay the architrave, and spread the roof above them: ere he framed the lofty vault, to gather and roll back the sound of anthems; in the darkling wood, amid the cool and silence, he knelt down and offer'd to the Mightiest solemn thanks and supplication. For his simple heart might not resist the sacred influences which, from the stilly twilight of the place, and from the grey old trunks, that high in heaven mingled their mossy boughs, and from the sound of the invisible breath, that sway'd at once all their green tops, stole over him, and bow'd his spirit with the thought of boundless power and inaccessible majesty. Ah, why should we, in the world's ripper years, neglect God's ancient sanctuaries, and adore only among the crowd and under roofs that our frail hands have raised?"—Bryant.

"And there is another beauty produced by a number of differently formed sea of breakers, and all the deeps of the Nile shall be dried, and the pride of Assyria brought down, and the sceptre of Egypt swept aside. And their strength shall be in Jehovah, and in His Name shall they boast themselves—oracle of Jehovah." smite, i. e. God shall smite the sea for them. river, R. V., "the Nile," i. e. "the fertilizing inundations of the Nile shall be dried up, the source of Egypt's wealth shall fail."—Dods. (12) walk up and down, i. e. pursue the course of their lives. Mic. iv. 5, Col. iii. 7.

Verses 10—12.—These verses seem to point not so much to any specific restoration of Israelites at that time in exile, as to a general reassembling and reorganization of the people of God. This is rendered more apparent by the highly poetical language of vs. 11, in which the prophet borrows his imagery of the future deliverance and organization of God's people from the normal emancipation, the Exodus, the birth-day of the nation.—Dods.

CHAPTER THE ELEVENTH.

1, 2. (1) doors, i. e. passes, or mountain defiles. "The passage is highly poetical and dramatic, but in its first reference literal and physical. In the path of the invading army stands Lebanon, at once the pride and bulwark of the land. As the priestly herald of the approaching host the prophet summons it to open wide an access, and to surrender to the reckless torch of the fierce foe its goodly pines and noble cedars. Comp. 2 Kings xix. 23; Is. xxxvii. 24, xiv. 8." fire, typical of invading enemies. Poss. this is prophetic of the Rom. invasion under Vespasian and Titus. (2) fir tree, or cypress. mighty, R. V., "the goodly ones," if the cedars. the mighty trees are destroyed what hope is there for the little cypresses! forest . . down, R. V., "the strong forest is come down," hitherto untrodden by the foot of men. The inaccessible forest.

Fallen Greatness (vs. 2).—I. The differences there are among men, physical, social, moral, intellectual, religious, spiritual. II. Their fall, however, distinguished. 1. There is a moral fall to which all are exposed; 2. There is a mortal fall which to all is inevitable. III. The sorrow caused by their removal. 1. Sympathetic; 2. Rational; 3. Moral and pious; the death of a good man is a public loss; such is a benefactor, an intercessor, etc.—W. Jay, funeral sermon for Rowland Hill.

Cedars of Lebanon.—These far-famed trees are situated on a small eminence in a valley at the foot of the highest part of the mountain: the land on the mountain's side has a sterile aspect, and the trees are remarkable by being altogether in one clump. There are, in fact, two generations of trees; the oldest are large and massy, four, five, or even seven trunks springing from one base; they rear their heads to an enormous height, spreading their branches afar; and they are not found in any other part of Lebanon, though young trees are occasionally met with. The ancient cedars—those which superstition has consecrated as holy, and which are the chief object of the traveller's curiosity—have been gradually diminishing in number for the last three centuries. In 1550, Belloni found them to be twenty-eight in number; Rauwolf, in 1575, counted twenty-four; Dandini, in 1600, and Thevenot, about fifty years after enumerated twenty-three, which Maundrell, in 1697, states were reduced to sixteen. Dr. Pococke, in 1738, found fifteen standing, and one which had been recently blown down. Burckhardt, in 1810, counted eleven or twelve; twenty-five others were very large ones, about fifty of middling size, and more than three hundred smaller and young ones. Lastly, in 1818, Dr. Richardson found that the old cedars, "the glory of Lebanon," were no more than seven in number. In the course of another century, it is probable that not a vestige of them will remain, and the predictions of the Prophets will then be most literally fulfilled: "Lebanon is ashamed and hewn down. The high ones of stature shall be hewn down: Lebanon shall fall mightily" (Isa. xxxiii. 9, x. 33, 34). The trunks of the old trees are covered with the names of travellers and other persons who have visited them, some of which go as far back as 1640. Maundrell, in 1697, measured one, which he found to be twelve yards and six inches in girth, and thirty-seven yards in the spread of its boughs; at above five or six yards from the ground it was divided into five limbs, each of which was equal to a great tree. They send forth a fragrant odor, which seems to be intended by "the smell of Lebanon" (Hos. xiv. 6; Sol. Song iv. 11). Its timber was used in the erection of the first and second temple at Jerusalem, as well as of the palace of Solomon; and in the last-mentioned edifice, so much cedar-wood appears to have been used, that it was called "the house of the forest of Lebanon" (1 Kings vii. 2, x. 19). The Tyrians used it in shipbuilding (Ezek. xxvii. 5, 6).

3—9. (3) "Hark to the wailing of the shepherds! for their glory is destroyed. Hark how the lions roar! for blasted is the pride of Jordan."—G. A. Smith. shepherds, who keep their flocks on the slopes of Lebanon; not only the forests but the pastures are destroyed. their glory, i. e. the rich pasture land. pride of Jordan, the thick woods on the banks, in wh. the lions found covert. These also were ruthlessly cut down by the invader. (4) feed, "The person addressed is Zechariah. The passage is dramatic. The prophet is represented as personating, inclusively perhaps, as is so generally the case in O. T. prophecy, the long line of Jehovah's true shepherds, but chiefly and ultimately the Good Shepherd of whom they all were types."—Camb. B. flock . . slaughter, i. e. destined for the slaughter. (5) slay them, instead of tending them.^a God's people were bought and sold. The governors of Judah and Israel abused their position for their own ends, and their blindness in doing so is exhibited in their saying, "Blessed be Jehovah." The prophet sets forth the pious complacency with which these men contemplate their ill-gotten gains. (6) no more pity, "show no more pity for the main body of the people than their rulers do."^b king, perhaps Vespasian or Titus. "They shall have a chance to test whether human government is less oppressive than divine government. This verse may well have been remembered and produced in the days of Herod and the Romans."—Dods. (7) R. V., "so I fed the flock of slaughter, verily the poor," etc. Vss. 7—14 are a description of what the prophet did in compliance with the injunction of vs. 4.—Dods. staves, or shepherds' rods. beauty, or God's favor towards His people. bands, implying bond of brotherhood bet. Israel and Judah. (8) three shepherds, "This has been understood to refer either to three historical persons, e. g. Zachariah, Shallum (2 Kings xv. 8, 13) and some third usurper, not mentioned in the history, of the same time, or Antiochus Epiphanes, Antiochus Eupator and Demetrius I., in the time of the Maccabees (though it is difficult to believe that these could have been called shepherds of Israel); or else to the three offices of king, priest and prophet. But all these references break down, and it is better to take the words generally, as describing the prompt and vigorous action of Jehovah's shepherd in dealing with the evil shepherds (x. 3), as well as in feeding the flock."—Camb. B.^c in one month, i. e. in a short time. lothed them, referring to the people, the flock. (9) dieth, etc., Je. xv. 2.

10—14. (10) break my covenant,^b declare it to be no longer binding. the people, R. V., "the peoples." This may mean the nations of the earth, in which case the sense will be that the prosperity which the shepherd on assuming office had guaranteed to the flock, and of which his staff "Beauty" was the symbol, was assured to them by a covenant, so to speak, into which he had entered with all nations not to molest them (comp. Hos. ii. 18; Job. v. 23). (11) waited upon me, R. V., "gave heed unto me." "Though the bulk of the nation took no heed, learned no lesson, yet the humble and the suffering among them, who paid respect to his words, recognized that what happened was according to God's Word, and knew that all the rest would be fulfilled."—Pulpit Com. (12) my price, R. V., "my hire." It is as much as to say, "I will be no more your shepherd: give me therefore my wages, that I may go my way." It is further designed to bring out in bold relief the mutual aversion and contempt, that had sprung up between the shepherd and the flock (vs. 8). He asks as one who cares not whether his request be granted: "Give, or forbear." They reply by a gift more insulting than refusal. thirty pieces, the value of a slave that had been killed.^c (13) cast . . potter,^a "implies contemptuous rejection of the sum, and at the same time intimates the ultimate destination to which, in the sight of Omniscience, it was directed. The potter is named as the workman who makes the meanest utensils out trees standing on the same lawn, and each showing its separate mould and features. For as one star differeth from another in glory, and as one saint in heaven differeth from another in glory, so one tree differeth from another in glory. There is one glory of the oak, which looks as if it had faced a hundred storms, and, having stood them all, were ready to face as many more; another glory of the aycamore, that 'spreads its gentle pomp its honeyed shade,'"—Dr. McCosh.

^a Am. ii. 6, 7, viii. 4—6.

^b "Jehovah, in vengeance for their rejection of Messiah, gave them over to intestine feuds and Rom. rule. The Zealots and other factious Jews expelled and slew one another by turns at the last invasion by Rome."—Fausset.

^c "Possibly representing the civil power, the priesthood, and prophecy. These have been removed from the Jews since their rejection of Messiah."—Wordsworth. Some think a more definite reference to John, Simon, and Eleazar, three leaders of factions in the Jewish war.

^d "Thus the covenant which I had made with the whole nation of the Jews was broken; and I excluded them from having any benefit in the second covenant, that of the Gospel."—Lowth.

^e Ex. xxi. 32; Ho. iii. 2; Mat. xxvii. 9.

^f "Thrown to the potter with disdain. 'Let him take it to buy clay with, or for any use that a little money will serve to, for it is not worth hoarding; it may be enough for a potter's stock, but not for the pay of such a shepherd, much less for his purchase.'—Mat. Henry.

"It seems too costly for Him who is the Prince of life and glory to let His fair limbs be tortured in agony; that the hands which carried mercies should be pierced with accursed nails; that the temples that were always clothed with love should have cruel thorns driven through them! It appears too much. Oh! weep, Christian, and let our sorrow rise. Is not the price all but too great, that your Beloved should for you resign Himself?"—Spurgeon.

b Eze. xxxiv. 3. c "If taken as pointing to an individual king, there is none to whom it will more aptly apply than to Herod, who was totally regardless of the real interests of the Jews, and whose reign was marked by the perpetration of the most shameful and barbarous cruelties."

—Henderson.

"I venerate the man whose heart is warm, whose hands are pure, whose doctrines, and whose life coincident, exhibit lucid proof that he is honest in the sacred cause."—Cowper.

of the vilest material. That this was ordered and executed in vision is plain; how much the prophet understood we cannot tell. The ambiguous and highly typical order was explained and fulfilled to the letter by the action of Judas Iscariot, as the evangelist testifies (Matt. xxvii. 5-10).—Pul. Com. in the house of the Lord, both because He it was who, whether in the person of His servants or of His Son, was the real subject of the insulting valuation, and also because what was done in the house of God was done that He might see and take action about it. goodly price, ironical. (14) I cut asunder mine other staff, "to signify both the completion of the rupture between the shepherd and the flock, with which he had now nothing more whatever to do, and also the second evil consequence of that rupture, which would befall the flock. Its beauty was gone already: its unity would now be gone also."—Camb. B.

Agony of Christ.—Is it possible for us to understand that expression which dropped from His lips on that memorable night of His agony—"My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death"? Not only sorrowful, but exceeding sorrowful; so exceeding sorrowful that it approached the state of death. It was not possible for His eyes to give full relief to His pent-up sorrow in tears, or His lips in wailing lamentation; but the pores of His body came to His help. These, infinite in number, became so many outlets to the profound anguish of His smitten soul. What was it that occasioned this exceeding sorrowfulness of His soul in the agony of the garden? If we bear in mind that on Him were laid the iniquities of us all—that He knew each and all the sins of which the world was and would be guilty—that His pure and Divine nature was so susceptible of abhorrence of sin—that He was despised of the world for whom He was so benevolently suffering—that there were yet, not far away, the scenes of His trial, Peter's unfaithfulness, Judas's treachery, the cowardice of all the Apostles, and the tragic doings of Calvary—that the Father who had delighted in Him from eternity, who smiled on angels, and whose countenance of love gave radiancy to creation, was soon to lay His hand upon Him in chastisement and affliction, which would have annihilated the whole universe of finite life; when we consider these things, do we not perceive the reasons why His soul was exceeding sorrowful, even unto death?—John Bate.

15-17. (15) foolish shepherd. Folly is in Scrip. often a synonym for wickedness. (16) visit, etc., just the things wh. the good shepherd and ruler ought to do. seek . . young one, R. V., "seek those that be scattered." that standeth still, R. V., "which is sound," i. e. the healthy ones. eat . . fat, enriching and satisfying himself, and heedless of the people's needs and sufferings." Reference is to the Antichrist of the N. T. claws, R. V., "hoofs. (17) idol, R. V., "worthless." his arm, "the arm that ought to have defended the flock shall be withered; the eye that should have watched for their safety shall be blinded."

Evil Shepherds.—

Blind mouths! that scarce themselves know how to hold
A sheep-hook, or have learned aught else the least
That to the faithful herdsman's art belongs!

The hungry sheep look up and are not fed,
But swollen with wind, and the rank mist they drew,
Rob inwardly, and foul contagion spread;
Besides what the grim wolf with furrow paw
Daily devours apace, and nothing said.—Milton.

CHAPTER THE TWELFTH.

1-5. (1) for Israel, R. V., "concerning Israel. Thus saith," etc. stretched, etc., Is. xlii. 5, etc. (2) cup of trembling, "a bowl of reeling"—a bowl whose contents cause staggering and reeling. Jerusalem is the capital and type of the Messianic theocracy; the hostile powers of the world crowd around her, like thirsting men round a bowl of wine; but they find the draught is fatal to them; they stagger back discomfited and destroyed. The figure of the cup and drunkenness is often employed to denote the judgment of God upon transgressors, which makes them incapable of defence or escape (comp. Jer. xxv. 15, etc.; li. 39, 57; Hab. ii. 16).—Pul. Com. when . . . Jerusalem, R. V., "and upon Judah also shall it be in the siege against Jerusalem," i. e. the burden which was upon, or concerned Israel, should also be upon Judah. (3) burdensome stone, one difficult and dangerous to lift or to carry. "Since Jerome, commentators have thought of a stone by throwing or lifting which men try their strength, what we call a 'putting stone.' But is not the idea rather of one of the large stones half-buried in the earth which it is the effort of the husbandman to tear from its bed and carry out of his field before he ploughs it? Keil and Wright think of a heavy stone for building. This is not so likely."—G. A. Smith. cut in pieces, R. V., "sore wounded." Though all the people, etc., R. V., "and all the nations of the earth shall be gathered together against it." (4) that day, of Divine deliverance.^b Different days seem referred to in this prophecy. open . . . upon, in kindly regard. the people, R. V., "the peoples," who fight against Jerusalem. (5) governors of Judah, the tribe leaders would join with Jerusalem in resisting the invader.

Jerusalem, a Burdensome Stone.—God's Church is founded on the rock, and persecutors dash against it in vain. It is a rock of offence by virtue of its charter and power, a stone of stumbling to many. In times of persecution kings and rulers have tried to upset or remove this stone, but it has torn, lacerated, or ground to powder those upon whom it has fallen. Israel escaped, but Pharaoh was drowned in the sea. The Philistines captured the ark, but Dagon was broken to pieces. Diocletian built a monument to commemorate the extinction of Christianity, but he perished, and it survives. In a conference with Andrew Rivet, the King of France threatened severe measures against the cause of truth, but the Reformer answered, "May it please your Majesty, the Church of God is an anvil which hath broken a great many hammers."

6—8. (6) hearth, R. V., "pan," i. e. a chafing-dish full of fire.^a (7) tents, fig. for the open towns and villages. "God will first appear in behalf of those Jews that live in the open country." magnify . . . Judah, there was danger of this, as inhab. of towns are disposed still to over-estimate themselves. (8) he that is feeble, etc., in the day of need the weaklings of the future shall equal the heroes of the past; and the strong shall resemble the angel that led the hosts of Israel. Ex. xxiii. 20; Josh. v. 13.

Yearning for Redemption.—The elect yearned, and knew what they yearned for; the nations yearned, and knew not for what. But still they yearned; for as the earth in its long polar night seeks to supply the absence of the day by the generation of the Northern Lights; so does each people in the long night of its heathen darkness bring forth, in its yearning after the life of Christ, a faint and glimmering substitute for the same. From these dreamy longings after the break of day have proceeded oracles, priests, sacrifices, lawgivers, and the like. Men have nowhere given up hoping, nor acquiesced in the world's evil as the world's law. Everywhere they have had a tradition of a time when they were nearer to God than now, a confident hope of a time when they should be brought nearer again.—Abb. French.

9—14. (9) seek to destroy, or exert myself to destroy.^b (10) spirit . . . supplication, i. e. the spirit which conveys grace and calls forth supplications; an extraordinary outpouring of divine influence. look upon me whom they have pierced, R. V., "unto me." "The speaker is Almighty God. The Jews had pierced Him metaphorically by their rebellion and ingratitude throughout their history. They pierced Him, literally and as the crowning act of their contumacy, in the person of His Son upon the cross, John xix. 37. Comp. Rev. i. 7."—Camb B. for his only son, "among the Hebrews the preservation of the family was deemed of vast importance, and its extinction regarded as a punishment and a curse, so that the death of an only son would be the heaviest blow that could happen (see Isa. xlvii. 9; Jer. vi. 26; Amos viii. 10)."—Pul. Com. (11) Hadadrimmon, 2 Chr. xxxv. 24. "This is one of the few ethical strains which run through these apocalyptic chapters. It

"What profusion is there in His work! What unnumbered cathedrals has He reared in the forest shades, vast and grand, full of curious carvings, and haunted evermore by tremulous music, and in the heavens above, how do stars seem to have down out of His hand faster than sparks out of a mighty forge!"—H. W. Beecher.

^b Eze. xxxviii. 3, 4.

"It is said that an unhelped cross is the heaviest thing a man ever carried; but a Christ-touched cross is about the lightest thing a man ever carried."—Beecher.

"How exquisite is pleasure after pain! Why throbs my heart so turbulently strong, pain'd at thy presence, this redundant joy, like a poor miser, beggar'd by his store?"—Young.

^a "The leaders of Judah are to be a fire bursting out on every side, the enemies that be-leaguer Jerusalem being the fuel by wh. it is fed."—Spk. Com.

^b "This cannot be applied in all its fulness to the literal Jerusalem; no such combination of all nations against Jerusalem has ever been formed."—Wordsworth.

"True repentance arises from the sight by faith of the crucified Saviour. It is the tear that drops fr. the eye of faith looking on Him."—Fausset.

a 2 Ki. xiii. 29.

"The prophet uses the strongest metaphors known to human experience. No pang which death can inflict is so severe as that which wrings the heart of parents following to the tomb the remains of a first-born or an only son. It seems as all hope and glory were entered in the same grave. When President Lincoln was assassinated in 1865, a shuddering horror seized every heart throughout the land, and multitudes who had never seen the kindly leader were as deeply moved as if the blow had fallen on their own kindred. A gloomy pall settled down over all hearts and all households."—Lange.

b "Provision made for the cleansing of all those from the pollutions of sin who truly repent, and are sorry for them."—Mat. Henry.

c "The Jews were always very much addicted to sorcery, charms, and other sorts of divination."—Lowth.

d "It is the triumph of Christian faith and charity to love the erring without loving their errors, and to hate the errors without hating the erring."—Wordsworth.

forms their highest interest for us. Jerusalem's mourning is compared to that for Hadad-Rimmon in the valley or plain of Megiddo. This is the classic battle-field of the land, and the theatre upon which Apocalypse has placed the last contest between the hosts of God and the hosts of evil. In Israel's history it had been the ground not only of triumph but of tears. The greatest tragedy of that history, the defeat and death of the righteous Josiah, took place there; and since the earliest Jewish interpreters the mourning of Hadad-Rimmon has been referred to the mourning for Josiah."^a—G. A. Smith. (12, 13) David .. Nathan .. Levi .. Shimei, "two families are singled out as examples, and in each case the family or tribe is first described by its general name, and then one branch of it is mentioned, to indicate that to every part and division the widespread mourning shall extend." (14) every family apart, indicating individual grief and mourning of the most solemn character.

Flowers of Memory.—"As one mourneth for his only son." An investigator of pedigrees was searching in a midland county of England for any traces that might still be found of an old family of the district. He went to the records of the church, but their name was not there, it had perished. He repaired to the supposed site of their ancient hall. Not a stone remained to tell its place. Disappointed in these attempts, he accosted an aged peasant: "Do you know anything of the Findernes?" "Findernes?" was the reply. "We have no Findernes here, but we have Findernes' flowers." Here was a clue. The old man led the way to a field where there were traces of an ancient terrace. "There," said he, pointing to a bank of garden-flowers grown wild, "there are Findernes' flowers, brought by Sir Geoffrey from the Holy Land, and, do what we will, they will never die."

Inconsolable Grief.—

I pray thee, cease thy counsel,
Which falls into mine ears as profitless
As water in a sieve: give not me counsel,
Nor let no comforter delight mine ear,
But such a one, whose wrongs do suit with mine.
Bring me a father, that so loved his child,
Whose joy of her is overwhelmed like mine;
And bid him speak of patience,
Measure his woe the length and breadth of mine,
And let it answer every strain for strain
As thus for thus, and such a grief for such
In every lineament, branch, shape, and form.
If such a one will smile, and stroke his beard,
Cry—sorrow, wag! and hem when he should groan;
Patch grief with proverbs; make misfortune drunk
With caudle-water; bring him yet to me,
And I of him will gather patience:
But there is no such man.—Shakespeare.

CHAPTER THE THIRTEENTH.

1—6. (1) that day, "the mourning for sin of ch. xii. 10—14 shall be the precursor of cleansing from sin, for which ample and lasting provision shall be made." fountain, the form of the promise is Jewish, the substance Christian. For the lustral waters of the Law, the "water of sin" (Num. viii. 7) and the "water of uncleanness" (Num. xix. 9), which were contained and renewed in bowl or laver, and which did but "sanctify to the purifying of the flesh," shall be substituted the living fountain of the Gospel.—Camb. B. sin .. uncleanness,^b personal guilt, and the corruption which sin produces. (2) cut .. land, Eze. xxx. 13. unclean spirit, or lying spirit, or false pretence to prophetic inspiration.^c (3) when, etc., comp. De. xiii. 1—11; Eze. xiii. 1—9.^d (4) rough garment, R. V., "a hairy mantle," the customary garb of a prophet; comp. Elijah's, 2 Ki. i. 8; also John Baptist's, Mat. iii. 4. (5) taught me, etc., R. V., "for

I have been made a bondman from my youth," so "if I had the will I could never have had the chance of setting up as a prophet."—Dods. (6) wounds . . hands, R. V., "wounds between thine arms," i. e. probably, on thy breast. Comp. "between his arms," i. e. in his back, 2 Kings ix. 24; "between your eyes," i. e. on your foreheads, Deut. xi. 18. The interrogator, in his zeal against false prophets, is still unsatisfied, and detecting wounds, or scars, on the breast of the quondam false prophet, charges them upon him as proofs of his guilt, because he regards them either as self-inflicted in the service of idols (1 Kings xviii. 28), or as given him by his parents, from whose righteous indignation he had escaped wounded, when they went about to kill him (vs. 3).—Camb. B. wounded . . friends, i. e. in token of grief for deceased relatives.^a

The Smile of God.—I have seen in an African desert a beautiful patch of green, a luxurious blending of graceful palm, waving grass, rippling spring, pendent fruits, and tropic flowers—an island of verdure, refreshment, and comfort, in the midst of a sea of sand, of dreary brushwood, and of stunted thorn. Hither came both man and beast, hot with travel, scorched with heat, oppressed with hunger, faint with thirst, and found food and drink, shelter and repose. The negroes who dwelt in the surrounding region called the weary tract around "The Torment," because it was hard, dry, difficult, inhospitable. The patch of natural garden-ground in the centre they called by an African word which means a god or a spirit in a good temper, or rather, the smile of God. The smile of God! Verily a good name and a beautiful; a smile that lightens the heart and cheers the lot of every drooping traveller that passes that way. As he gazes with hand-shaded eyes through the haze of the desert heat, and catches a glimpse of the green isle upon the border line, that smile of God begets a smile on his own tired and weary face, and with quickened step and hopeful eye he presses thitherward and rejoices in its cool and grateful shade!—J. J. Wray.

7—9. G. A. Smith supposes these three verses to belong directly after chap. xi, "developing the tragedy of the nation to its climax in the murder of the Good Shepherd. (7) my shepherd, the ruler of the Jews; here it must be referred to Messiah. my fellow, lit. "the man of my union."^b smite, etc., Mat. xxvi. 31; Mk. xiv. 27. turn . . ones, Is. i. 25. "I will show mercy to My little flock, dispirited by the death of their Master, and will quickly show Him to them alive again, to their joy and comfort."—Lowth. (8) two parts, this should come to pass in the Rom. siege of Jerus. (9) refine them, "this third part, like its Master, passes through much tribulation, and is thereby refined and purified (comp. Ps. lxvi. 10; Isa. xlviii. 10; Jer. ix. 7; Dan. xii. 10; Mal. iii. 3; 1 Pet. i. 6, 7)."—Pul. Com.

The Day of the Lord (xiii. 7—xiv. 21).—This closing prophecy seems less a chronological continuation of the preceding than a closer, more penetrating and far-reaching view of the results of those ruling principles whose operation was to some extent described in the former. The highly figurative representation here given cannot be taken as if it were a realistic picture of some one event. It is intended to show the working of certain principles, and to convey the impression that God's people will triumph, but only by their passing through most critical times, and by His miraculous and personal interposition. It shows us the day of the Lord opening in gloom, but light at evening, when it promised to be darkest; great calamities falling on the city of God, but resulting in her being lifted up as the conspicuous, life-giving metropolis of the race.—M. Dods.

CHAPTER THE FOURTEENTH.

"Judgment of the heathen and sanctification of Jerusalem." 1—3. (1) day . . cometh, "lit. a day to (or, of) Jehovah, i. e. which is in a special manner His. The previous prophecy (xiii. 7—9) is now expanded, attention being concentrated, however, on the city rather than on the land (xiii. 8), and on the final act rather than on the long previous process of purifying discipline. It is impossible satisfactorily to adapt the terms of ^a "The worshippers of Bacchus had an ivy leaf imprinted upon their bodies."—Maccabees, bk. iii.

"The detection of one of the false prophets is here dramatically represented."—Fausset.

^b "My equal."—De Wette. "My nearest kinsman."—Hengstenberg.

"Reference may also be to the preservation of the Christians at the siege of Jerus., they having retired to Pella when Cestus Gallus soon afterwards withdrew from Jerusalem."—Fausset.

"A man's purpose of life should be like a river, which was born of a thousand little rills in the mountains; and when at last it has reached its manhood in the plain, though, if you watch it, you shall see little eddies that seem as if they had changed their minds and were going back again to the mountains, yet all its mighty current flows changeless to the sea. If you build a dam across it, in a few hours it will go over it with a voice of victory. If tides check it at its mouth, it is only that when they ebb it can sweep on again to the ocean. So goes the Amazon or the Orinoco across a continent—never losing its way or changing its direction for the thousand streams that fall into it on the right hand and on the left, but only using them to increase its force, and bearing them onward in its resistless channel." — H. W. Beecher.

a "The expression imports that the whole land shall have a plentiful share of these blessings." — Lowth. "Nature is but a name for an effect whose cause is God." — Cowper.

"In nature things move violently to their place, and calmly in their place."

—Bacon.

"Since a few minutes can turn the healthiest bodies into breathless carcasses, and put those very things which we had principally relied on into the hands of our enemies, it were little less than madness to repose a distrustless trust in these transitory possessions, or treacherous advantages, which we enjoy but by so fickle a tenure. No; we must never venture to wander far from God, upon the presumption that death is far enough from us; but rather, in the very height of our jollity, we should endeavor to remember, that they who feast themselves to-day, may, themselves prove feasts for the worms to-morrow." — Boyle.

this prophecy, either to the taking of Jerusalem under the Maccabees, or to its destruction by the Romans. As Pusey well remarks, 'those who explain it solely of this, are obliged to mingle explanations partly literal, as that Jerusalem should be the earthly Jerusalem which was destroyed, partly metaphorical, as to the mount of Olives, its division into two parts, &c.' It should moreover be observed that there is no word here of the city being destroyed." — Camb. B. (2) all nations, comp. Joel iii. 2, 9—11; Ezek. xxxviii. ff; Rev. xx. 7—9. taken, Heb. "Be encompassed as in a net." (3) in the day of battle, Ex. xiv. 14, 25.

"The city shall be taken, and the houses rifled." — In the account given by Josephus of the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, we have a record of enormities at which we might well stand aghast. Christ said, concerning this event, "There shall be great tribulation, such as was not from the beginning of the world until this time, no, nor ever shall be." "The particulars," says Dr. Wardlaw, "here noted, are such as usually, it might be said invariably, attend the besieging, the capture and the sacking of cities; especially when, as in this case, the assailing army has been exasperated by a long, harassing, and wasting defence. The entrance of the un pitying soldiery, the rifling of houses, the deeds of violence, the indiscriminate massacre, and the division of the spoil, are just what all expect, and what require no comment. And never were such scenes more frightfully realized than at the destruction of Jerusalem, when God in his providence, in judicial retribution, gathered all nations against the devoted city to battle."

4. 5. (4) shall cleave, "as the enemy are supposed to beset Jerusalem, so as to make escape by any ordinary road impossible, the Lord will open a way through the very centre of the mountain (as he opened a path through the Red Sea), by cleaving the hill in sunder, the two parts moving north and south, and leaving a great valley running east and west, and leading to the Arabah." — Pul. Com. (5) R. V., "And ye shall flee by the valley of my mountains." Azal, prob. a name by wh. a part of Olivet was called. earthquake, Am. i. 1. "There is no mention of this in the historical books. The references to it here and in Amos i. 1 show that it made a deep impression on the people and was long remembered. The story of Josephus (see Stanley, Jewish Church, II, 439) connecting it with Uzziah's attempt to burn incense (2 Chron. xxvi. 19) is probably only an embellishment of this passage of Zechariah. Ewald puts the earthquake in 'one of the first years of Uzziah.'" — Camb. Bib. saints, "holy ones," or angels. with thee, i. e. with the Lord.

6—8. (6) clear, nor dark, R. V. margin, "there shall not be light, the bright ones shall contract themselves," i. e. the heavenly bodies shall be darkened. It shall be a dark day. Comp. Joel iii. 5. (7) one day, a unique day, none like it. Jer. xxx. 7. shall be known, R. V., "is known." Mi. xiii. 32. evening time, Is. lx. 19, 20. The day that opened in gloom shall close, unexpectedly, with light. (8) living waters, etc., Eze. xlvii. 1; Joel iii. 18; Re. xxii. 1. former sea, the Dead Sea, R. V., "the eastern sea the western sea." hinder sea, the Mediterranean. summer and winter, indicating that the streams should be perennial.

At Evening Time Light.—In "life's evening" light is desired. "Nothing is more common than the craving and demand for light a little before death," says an author. "Open the windows," cried M. de Lescure, on his dying bed. Rousseau wished to have "a parting look at the glorious orb of day." Goethe's request was for "more light, more light." Dark indeed has been the evening time to many. But as the sun often struggles through the clouds of day and sinks in brilliant light, so the chamber of death has been filled with light and glory from the Sun of righteousness. To Bunyan's Mr. Fearing "all was well at last." The gloom of the poet Cowper endured long, but passed away at length. Dr. Johnson dreaded death through life, but met it with hope and unusual patience. Happy those to whom the valley of the shadow of death is lit up with God's presence! Unhappy those whose darkness is eternal night! "Unto the upright there ariseth light in the darkness." — Hom. Com.

I will not faint, but trust in God,
Who this my lot hath given;
He leads me by the thorny road,

Which is the road to heaven.
 Tho' sad my day that lasts so long,
 At evening I shall have a song;
 Tho' dim my day until the night,
 At evening-time there shall be light.—Rossetti.

9—11. (9) one Lord, R. V., "In that day shall the Lord be one, and his name one." All men shall recognize the one Lord. (10) as a plain, R. V., "as the Arabah," a tract of level country wh. stretches along the lower Jordan to the Dead Sea. Geba to Rimmon, meaning, from north to south." lifted up, R. V., "and she shall be lifted up and shall dwell in her place." The "plain" which the prophet here pictures to himself, may be a table-mountain or elevated platform, all other hills and mountains sinking down to the present level of the "valleys and plains" of Palestine, and leaving Jerusalem standing aloft on this elevated base, the queen-like city and mistress of the world.—Camb. B. Benjamin's gate, 2 Ki. xiv. 13. first gate, W. of the city. corner gate, E. of the city. tower of Hananeel, N. of the city.^b king's winepress, Song Sol. viii. 11; in the southern portion of the city. utter destruction, R. V., "curse." safely, or securely.

Christ's Reign on Earth (vs. 9).—I. The incalculable importance of this prophecy—I. To the world at large; 2. To the Church in particular; 3. To every individual of mankind. II. The blessedness of the period to which it refers. 1. Surely it will be a period of great temporal prosperity; 2. Spiritual blessings will most richly abound; 3. God will manifest Himself on earth.

12—15. The deliverance and prosperity of Jerusalem shall be accomplished by a terrible plague sent upon those who fought against her, vs. 12; and by a panic which shall cause them to slay one another, vs. 13, and also by the courage and prowess of Judah. The wealth of their enemies shall be the spoil of the Jews, vs. 14; while the consuming pestilence shall extend to all the cattle in the hostile camp, vs. 15.—Camb. B. (12) plague, some contagious disease. Comp. Ex. ix. 14; Nu. xiv. 37. (13) tumult, or panic." (14) Judah, i. e. the people of the towns and villages of Judah.^b (15) plague of the horse, as was the plague that came on men (vs. 12), so shall be the plague that falls on their beasts and cattle.

Preparation for the Judgment.—The Gospel of Jesus Christ alone will prepare men aright for the last things wherewith they will have to do. Philosophy and science may teach things useful as to this life. History may bring the experience of the past to bear on the duties of the present in the conduct of states. One system of education may instruct the young how to acquire wealth; another how to spend it with gentility; a third, how to glitter in society; and a fourth, how to make the stores of classical learning all one's own. But Christianity has a higher aim; its object is more extensive. While it overlooks not the things present, it looks onward to things future. While it neglects not the concerns of time, it subordinates them to those of eternity. It brings indeed, and rejoices to hold out, the promise of the life that now is; but, on the other hand, it also brings, and smiles with a brighter and a sweeter look in holding out, the promise of the life which is to come. The last things of man are the most important things.—John Hambleton.

16—19. (16) left, etc., intimating that the relics of the nations shall come into the converting power of the Gospel.^c go up, or share in Christian acts of worship, wh. are here represented by the old Jewish solemnities. (17) no rain, Am. iv. 7, 8. "The Feast of Booths was specially one of thanksgiving for the harvest; that is why the neglect of it is punished by the withholding of the rain which brings the harvest."—G. A. Smith. (18) family of Egypt, specially mentioned bec. the threat of no rain would not affect a country wh. does not depend on the rains. that have no rain, R. V., "neither shall it be upon them." (19) punishment, lit. "sin;" here, sin as manifested in its consequences.

"The Withholding of the Rain," says Dr. Dods, "was not only one of the ways by which idolatry and apostasy were punished under the theocracy, but it was the appropriate punishment of those who refused to acknowledge Jehovah as the Giver of the harvest. This suiting of punishment to offence is a marked characteristic of God's government, and ^a 2 Ki. xxiii. 8.

^b No. iii. 1, xii. 39; Je. xxxi. 38.

"The world is preparing day by day for the millennium; but you do not see it. Every season forms itself a year in advance. The coming summer lays out her work during the autumn, and buds and roots are forespoken. And so 'the kingdom of God cometh not with observation.'" —Beecher.

^a Ju. vii. 22.

^b Zec. xii. 7.

"Traverse the earth,—enter the gorgeous cities of idolatry, or accept the hospitality of its wandering tribes,—go where will-worship is most fantastic, and superstition most gross,—and you will find in man 'a fearful looking for of judgment.' The mythology of their Nemesis may vary,—their Elysium and Tartarus may be differently depicted,—the Metempsychosis may be the passage of bliss and woe,—still the fact is only confirmed by the diversity of the forms in which it is presented." —R. W. Hamilton.

^c "This vs. declares that even the judgment upon the enemies of Israel was not to be universal in its operation. The renewed prosperity of Jerusalem would attract many heathen as proselytes." —Spk. Com.

^a Is. xxiii. 18;
Ob. 17; Joel iii.
17.

^b Re. xxi. 15.
"No hypocrite or unclean person shall have any share in the society of the faithful."

—Lowth.

"If a man would have the beginnings of heaven,
it must be by absolute consecration of everything to God on earth. Let his life be a liturgy, a holy service of acted worship."
—Moore.

should probably be more used in education than it is (e. g. by secluding for a time, from all intercourse with his companions, the boy who has told a lie, and so on). Dante has largely utilized the principle in his great poem. In his vision of the realms of punishment he saw tyrants immersed in blood; gluttons exposed in all their pampered softness to a sleety tempest of cold, discolored, stinking hail; the proud bending for ever under heavy burdens; schismatics, who have rent the Church, themselves cleft asunder; those who had pried into the future, and professed prophetic foresight, with faces reversed, unable to see their own way."

20, 21. (20) upon the bells, i. e. even upon the smallest and the commonest things. Everything shall be consecrated and holy.^a Holiness, R. V., "Holy;" so in vs. 21. pots . . bowls, the pots for boiling the meat had been held less sacred than the bowls which held the blood of the victims; but now all shall be alike holy. (21) Canaanite, i. e. any heathen, or unclean person.^b

The Bells of the Horses (vs. 20).—I. Let us hear the horse's bells, they speak of power, holiness, pleasure, journeying, merchandise, toil, such are the uses of horses. II. Let us commend their music, for loudness, clearness, constancy, universality, divinely long. III. Let us go home and tune our bells, the chamber-bell, the shop-bell, the kitchen-bell, the visiting-bell.—Spurgeon.

The Jerusalem That is To Be.—How fitting a close of the whole is this thought! How rightly does this chief prophet of the post-Captivity Jerusalem tell us thus, in conclusion, of that far more glorious Jerusalem which is some day to shine forth! It is much the same that the Prophet Daniel does at the end of his prophecy. It is the same also that "St. John the divine" does at the end of his song. They bring their message to an end when they have given us a glimpse of the end which God has in store. It is for us to take care that we are truly numbered with those for whom that "end" is prepared.—Pul. Com.

Zechariah, the Prophet of Restored Jerusalem.—

Despise not things so small. Thou'rt not alone,
But God is with thee and will bless thy toil.
Mid shouts of "Grace!" thou'lt lay the topmost stone,
And feed the temple lamps with golden oil.
The city shall o'erleap its ancient bounds,
And God shall be its glory and defence.
The boys and girls shall fill its streets with sounds
Of laughter, till old age its care relents.
Men call the city "truth," therein find peace.
Its fasts are turned to feasts. Its sacred shrine
Is altar for the nations. Never cease
The living streams to flow, the light to shine.

Wouldst know the secret of this vision's flower?
By Spirit of the Lord, and not by power.—Chris. End. World.

Introduction.

I. Author. Nothing is known of the author of the book of Malachi beyond what may be gathered from the book itself. The word "Malachi" means "messenger" or "angel," and is used in that sense in ch. ii. 7 and iii. 1 of this book; and it is not unlikely that we have here the message of an unnamed prophet whom we know only as the messenger of the Lord. II. Time. The contents of the book point to a date near the time of Ezra and Nehemiah, somewhere between 464 and 424 B.C. III. Style. "The prophecy is eminently practical in its character. It is almost throughout minatory in tone. The dark page of the prophet's roll, though illumined at its close by a gleam of the coming glory, is for the most part inscribed with denunciation and threatening and rebuke. And with these its contents the style of the Book accords. It is not wanting, however, in literary merit. It has elements both of grace and power. If he soars not to the sublime heights of Isaiah, nor unfolds the mystic visions of Ezekiel and Zechariah, the writer moves with firm and dignified tread along his humbler and more trodden path. He is concise and yet lucid; energetic and yet collected. There is peculiar force in his manner of making the object of his rebuke turn upon him with a sharp, short question, which he uses as a point of vantage to repeat and expand his charges."—Cambridge Bible. We must not fail to appreciate "the genuine prophetic spirit of our book. Far more fully than, for instance, that of Haggai, to the style of which its practical simplicity is so akin, it enumerates the prophetic principles: the everlasting Love of Jehovah for Israel, the Fatherhood of Jehovah and His Holiness, His ancient Ideals for Priesthood and People, the need of a Repentance proved by deeds, the consequent Promise of Prosperity, the Day of the Lord, and Judgment between the evil and the righteous."—Geo. Adam Smith.

Synopsis.

(According to Cambridge Bible.)

Title and introductory appeal.....	i. 1—5
Rebuke of the priests.....	i. 6—14
Threatened punishment of the priests.....	ii. 1—9
Rebuke of the people for heathen marriages and divorce	ii. 10—16

Rebuke of the people for profane implety,	ii. 17—iii. 6
Rebuke in the matter of tithes and offerings	iii. 7—12
The righteous judgment of God.....	iii. 13—iv. 3
Conclusion	iv. 4—6

CHAPTER THE FIRST.

1-3. (1) to Israel, i. e. the whole covenanted nation. Malachi, meaning, "Messenger of Jehovah." (2) loved you, Deut. vii. 8, x. 15.^a "This is the keynote of all that follows. On this rests Jehovah's claim to the filial honor and reverential fear which had been withheld from Him (i. 6); on this the patient forbearance of the present (iii. 6), and the bright promise of the future (iv. 2). This is the light that casts the dark shadow of the people's ingratitude across the prophet's page, and that shines through and beyond the darkness, unquenched and unquenchable."—Camb. Bible. Was not Esau, etc., "The argument of these vss. is this: If you would see the difference between hatred and love, look at the different conditions and prospects of Edom and Israel."—Marcus Dods. Jacob's brother, comp. Ho. xii. 3-5, 12, 13. (3) hated Esau, in Scrip. hating often stands for a less degree of love, Lu. xiv. 26. laid his mountains, etc. R. V. "made his mountains a desolation, and gave his heritage to the jackals of the wilderness." God dealt much more severely with Edom than with Israel. "The desolation of Edom here referred to was in all probability caused by Nebuchadnezzar, in fulfilment of the prophecy of Jeremiah (xlix. 17-22. Comp. xxvii. 3-6)."

Ingratitude.—"Yet ye say, Wherein hast thou loved us?" Here is ingratitude. Here, however, is our own experience. This is the law of the family. You have been supporting some one a long time, and because you do not attend to the very last appeal, all you did in the years that are gone is simply forgotten, and the inquiry is, Wherein have you been so kind? Treacherous is the memory when it has charge of recollections of good and favor and help rendered under circumstances which ought to have made the offering of such assistance an imperishable remembrance. Have we not had familiarity and experience in this matter? All you have done for your friends, let me assure you, is forgotten. They never speak well of you, except it may be in some general sense. Favors are soon forgotten. Yet whoso forgets a favor is no true man; he is a bad man, whatever his doctrinal professions may be. We should keep all our friends' kindnesses as so many evergreens, every kind action kept in the heart like a precious plant and not allowed to die. But God's favors are forgotten principally because they are so numerous. The very circumstance that ought to have made their memory indelible is a circumstance which causes the record to be soon obliterated. We become familiar with God's blessings, and we seem to have established some right in their succession. We expect the sun to rise; we complain to one another if there be anything like disappointment attending the circumstances of his rising; we say, Do you call this April? Why, in April we ought not to have such fog and darkness: where is the sun? What right have you to the sun? Why not rather say, God be praised, here is the sun: God might have kept back the light from a world that has forfeited every claim upon his complacency, yet here is the shining sun. Keep your gratitude green. Never let your thankfulness fall into decay. You might thus by keeping a perfect remembrance of favors received multiply those favors tenfold; the assistance that was rendered to you in childhood should be with you as a stimulating memory to old age.—J. Parker.

4-5. "Should the people of Edom say, 'We are destroyed, but we will rebuild the waste places,' thus saith Jehovah of Hosts, They may build, but I will pull down: men shall call them 'The Border of Wickedness' and 'The People with whom Jehovah is wroth for ever.' And your eyes shall see it, and yourselves shall say, 'Great is Jehovah beyond Israel's border.'"—G. A. Smith. (4) impoverished, R. V. "beaten down," will return, both Edom and Israel desired to return to their own lands, but God had not permitted Edom to succeed in its attempt. "Edom never recovered its power; it became the prey of the Persians, the Nabatheans, the Jews under the Maccabees, the Macedonians, the Romans; and finally the Mohammedan conquest effected its utter ruin."—Pul. Com. the border, so named because Edom lay close on the border of the Holy

* "I have chosen you for My peculiar people, out of pure love and kindness, without any antecedent merits on your side."—Lowth.

"The Jews at this time were in an ungrateful temper. They were disappointed and impatient, and murmured against God, and charged Him with unfaithfulness, fickleness, and inconstancy. The Prophet replies to these allegations."

—Wordsworth.

"We are as water, weak, and of no consistence, always descending, abiding in no certain place, unless where we are detained with violence; and every little breath of wind makes us rough and tempestuous, and troubles our faces; every trifling accident discomposes us; and as the face of the waters wafting in a storm, so wrinkles itself, that it makes upon its forehead furrows deep and hollow like a grave: so do our great and little cares and trifles first make the wrinkles of old age, and then they dig a grave for us."—Bishop Taylor.

"Edom is a perpetual waste. It is a desolate monument of Divine wrath."—Gadsby.

b "Just across the narrow Jordan valley Edom always lay threateningly upon the skirts of Palestine. It was the country where Israel's most inveterate enemies lived. No other nation pressed on them so constantly or gave them such continual trouble as the Edomites." — Phillips Brooks.

"We talk of human life as a journey, but how variously is that journey performed! There are those who come forth girt, and shod, and mantled, to walk on velvet lawns and smooth terraces, where every gale is arrested and every beam is tempered. There are others who walk on the Alpine paths of life, against driving misery, and through stormy sorrows, over sharp afflictions; walk with bare feet and naked breast, jaded, mangled, and chilled." — Sidney Smith.

* "By your actions you declare how little value you have for the worship of God, since you care not in how slight and contemptuous a manner it is performed." — Lowth.

b "Whatever is given as a present in the East, whether of great or small value, a diamond or an orange, a pistol or a knife, a turban or a garment, it should not be in any way damaged or imperfect. If you give a sheep or a lamb, it must not be lame or sick; and if you give a piece of gold, it should be full weight." — Gadsby.

c "The priests were specially

Land. (5) will be, etc., R. V., "The Lord be magnified beyond the border of Israel," i. e. by the overthrow of Edom.

The City of Petra (vs. 4).—Astonishment, for which language can scarcely find utterance, is the sentiment expressed by every traveler who has been able to explore the magnificent ruins of the once proud metropolis of Idumæa or Edom. A narrow and circuitous defile, surrounded on each side by lofty and precipitous or perpendicular rocks, forms the approach to the desolate yet magnificent scene. The ruins of the city here burst upon the view in their full grandeur, shut in on the opposite side by barren, craggy precipices, from which numerous ravines and valleys branch out in all directions; the sides of the mountains, covered with an endless variety of excavated tombs and private dwellings, present altogether the most singular scene that can well be conceived. The theatre is the first object which presents itself to the traveler on entering Petra from the eastward. Captains Irby and Mangles state that it was entirely hewn out of the live rock. Fragments of columns are strewn on the ground in front. This theatre is surrounded by sepulchres. Every avenue leading to it is full of them; and it may be safely affirmed, that one hundred of the largest dimensions are visible from it. Indeed, throughout almost every quarter of this metropolis, the depositories of the dead must have presented themselves constantly to the eyes of the inhabitants, and have almost outnumbered the inhabitants of the living. Of all the ruins of Petra, the mausoleums and sepulchres are among the most remarkable; and they give the clearest indication of ancient and long-continued royalty, and of courtly grandeur. Their immense number corroborates the accounts given of their successive kings and princes by Moses and by Strabo. The structure of the sepulchres also shows that many of them are of a more recent date. Great must have been the opulence of a city which could dedicate such monuments to the memory of its rulers. —Horne.

6—8. (6) honoureth, is bound to honor. If then I be a father. "We are so accustomed to associate with the Divine Fatherhood only ideas of love and pity that the use of the relation to illustrate not love but Majesty, and the setting of it in parallel to the Divine Kingship, may seem to us strange. Yet this was very natural to Israel. In the old Semitic world, even to the human parent, honor was due before love. Honor thy father and thy mother, said the Fifth Commandment; and when, after long shyness to do so, Israel at last ventured to claim Jehovah as the Father of His people, it was at first rather with the view of increasing their sense of His authority and their duty of reverencing Him, than with the view of bringing Him near to their hearts and assuring them of His tenderness."—G. A. Smith. O priests, these are esp. addressed, because they ought to be the leaders and examples of the nation... wherein, etc., comp. vs. 2. "Asked in a spirit of self-satisfied insensibility." "Impudently persisting in justifying themselves." (7) bread, here used generally of the sacrificial offerings. ye say, in conduct if not in words. table, same as the altar. (8) R. V. "And when ye offer the blind for sacrifice, it is no evil! and when ye offer the lame and sick, it is no evil!"—Spoken ironically. blind, see Le. xxii. 22.

Jehovah lightly esteemed (vss. 6—11).—I. An indignant expostulation. II. A solemn accusation. III. An important prediction. 1. It has been already fulfilled in a large measure; 2. The time is coming when it will be completely accomplished.

9—11. (9) beseech God, as the national intercessors. this, i. e. the peril the nation was in of Divine judgment. your means, through your unconcern about the character of the offerings and the worship. regard your persons, R. V. "Will he accept any of your persons?" (10) R. V. "Oh that there were one among you that would shut the doors, that ye might not kindle fire on mine altar in vain!"—Better no sacrifices at all than such sacrifices as these. Better a temple closed than a temple profaned.—Isa. i. 12, 13. (11) shall be great, R. V. "is great," with "shall be" in the margin; so through the verse. G. A. Smith and others believe that this teaches the acceptable nature of many heathen sacrifices in contrast to Hebrew worship. "Never have we had in prophecy a statement so generous and so catholic as this."—G. A. Smith.—But the Cambridge

Bible presents the opposite view and says: The view that Almighty God is here recognising the worship of the heathen world as in reality offered to Him is quite inadmissible. The whole tenor of the Old Testament emphatically contradicts it, and the teaching of the New Testament is accordant and explicit. "The things which the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice to devils and not to God" (1 Cor. x. 20; cited from Deut. xxxii. 17.) Gentiles, who shall be taken into Divine favor, when you are cast off for your sins." incense, of praise. offering, of the broken and contrite heart.

The Universal Spread of the Gospel (vs. 11).—I. The Scripture testimony to the ultimate universal spread of the Gospel. II. The same truth is evident from the nature of the case. 1. The need of redemption is universal; 2. The Gospel alone can satisfy this craving of mankind; 3. The Gospel is fitted for universal diffusion. III. The voice of history confirms the conclusions. 1. The importance of the conquests already won by the Gospel; 2. The proved weakness of the only weapons with which it can be assailed.

12—14. (12) have profaned, R. V., "profane," by making it seem no matter what is the character of the offerings made to Me. ye say, by your actions. (13) weariness, finding no joy in My worship, counting it only a painful drudgery." snuffed, or sniffed, as an animal would who rejects food. torn, R. V. "And ye have brought that which was taken by violence." (14) deceiver, who brings the imperfect, and makes out that it is the best he has. "The cheat," "the man who seeks to stand well with God and yet to be at no expense in the matter."—Dods. corrupt thing, R. V. "a blemished thing," is dreadful, "is revered," G. A. Smith, "is to be feared."—Dods.

The Times of Malachi.—After Nehemiah had been working for some twelve years at the moral reformation of the people of Jerusalem and Judæa, he was recalled to Persia; and immediately on his departure the old evils which he had stoutly resisted came back like a flood. In spite of the presence of Ezra in Jerusalem, it was seen that a reformation enforced by the civil power, rather than as the fruit of individual conviction, had no permanent vitality. When Nehemiah's back was turned, "the tithes due to the temple, the Levites, and the priests were not delivered, and the greatest distress was thus caused to all those who depended on them for maintenance. The choristers, the guards of the gates, and the ordinary Levites alike, were compelled to go back to their homes, and cultivate their fields for a living. Public worship was thus interrupted, and the temple, forsaken by its ministers, was neglected by the people. Nor was the refusal to pay tithes the only sign of an altered spirit. The sabbath was profaned, both in town and country, winepresses were busy in its sacred hours, and the roads and fields were dotted with the workers taking sheaves to the barn on their heavily laden asses. Jerusalem itself was disturbed by a sabbath fair, to which loads of wine, grapes, figs, and much else were carried in during sacred hours. After all the professed zeal to put an end to mixed marriages, things were rapidly drifting to almost a worse condition than of old. The very priests had rapidly lost their high tone. Their irreverence, indifference, and worldliness shocked the thoughtful. Everything that Ezra and Nehemiah had effected was well-nigh undone." The Prophet Malachi had the "burden" laid upon him of recalling both priests and people to their duties. And this he did partly by vigorous denunciations of surrounding evils, and partly by anticipations of the times of Messiah. The "Coming One" would surely prove to be a stern Rebuker of national sin.—Pulpit Com.

CHAPTER THE SECOND.

1—3. (1) "In this third section of his book. "Malachi" addresses himself to the priests. He charges them not only with irreverence and slovenliness in their discharge of the Temple service—for this he appears to intend by the phrase filth of your feasts—but with the neglect of their intellectual duties to the people."—G. A. Smith. (2) a curse, De. xxvii.

gully, because it was their duty to reject improper offerings.

—Spk. Com.

c Mat. xxi. 43.

a "Ye regard God's service as irksome, and therefore try to get it over by presenting the most worthless offerings."

—Fausset.

Anaxagoras being asked what he thought he was born for? answered, "That I may meditate upon heaven." O my soul! what dost thou think thou wast re-born for? Is it not that thou mayest live in heaven? God hath made thee to enjoy communion with Himself; thou need'st not stay one hour on earth, but, with Enoch, spend thy days with God, walk and converse with Jesus Christ in the galleries of His love, with Moses live on the mount of glory.

"Malachi is like a late evening which closes a long day, but he is at the same time the morning twilight which bears in its bosom a glorious day."

—Pusey.

"Scriptures, sacraments, sermons, Sundays, all have a double edge; if used well, they lead men on to heaven; but if despised or misused, they aggravate men's sin, and increase their condemnation."

—Wordsworth.

b "The worshippers of the Hindoo god Shiva have to this day a spot on their foreheads made of the ashes of cow's dung."—Gadsby.

15—26; xxviii. 15—68. curse your blessings, or turn your blessings into curses. (3) corrupt your seed, R. V. "Behold I will rebuke the seed for your sake" so as to prevent due harvest. feasts,^a R. V. "sacrifices." "The figure is very forcible. It is as though Jehovah sees nothing in the droves of diseased and blemished animals that are brought to His altar on some great Festival, but the mass of filth and offal that necessarily accompanies the sacrifice. It is all one vast abomination! Flinging back in holy indignation the polluted offerings into the faces of the unworthy priests, He overwhelms them beneath the fetid heap, and thus they are swept forth with it from the sacred precincts. Comp. Exod. xxix. 14, 1 Kings xiv. 10."—Camb. Bib. take you away, R. V. "and ye shall be taken away," cast away as if you were dung.

Curses.—The late Rev. John Brown, of Haddington, once passing the Firth of Forth, between Leith and Kinghorn, had for a fellow-passenger, one who appeared to be a Highland nobleman. Mr. Brown observed, with grief, that he frequently took the name of God in vain; but suspecting that to reprove him in the presence of the other passengers might tend only to irritate him, he forebore saying anything, till he reached the opposite shore. After landing, Mr. Brown, observing the nobleman walking alone, stepped up to him, and said, "Sir, I was sorry to hear you swearing while on our passage. You know it is written, 'Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain.'" On this the nobleman, lifting his hat, and bowing to Mr. Brown, made the following reply: "Sir, I return you thanks for the reproof you have now given me, and shall endeavor to attend to it in future; but," added he, "had you said this to me while in the boat, I believe I should have run you through with my sword."—Whitcross.

a Nu. iii. 6, etc.

b Nu. xxv. 12, 13.

"All the blessings that make up human welfare, were summed up for the Hebrew in one word—peace."

Cox.

4—7. (4) might be, or, might stand fast.^a For the breach of the covenant they must be held responsible. (5) was, implying that you, his descendants, have changed it into a covenant of woe. life, or prosperity. peace, or security.^b fear, R. V. "and I gave them to him that he might fear, and he feared me," etc., reverential, godly fear, expressed in earnest and careful keeping of My ordinances.

(6) The law of truth, "teaching, as a function of the priesthood, entered into the original idea and constitution of the office (Deut. xxxiii. 10; Lev. x. 11), and was revived in connection with it after the return from Babylon (Ezra vii. 10, 25; Nehem. viii. 1—8). To be without "a teaching priest" was a national calamity (2 Chron. xv. 3)."—Camb. Bib. iniquity, R. V. "unrighteousness." walked with me, conducted all his relationships and duties. equity, R. V. "uprightness." "He directed all his actions by the rule of My laws." turn,^c etc., "What a history of zeal for the glory of God and the conversion of sinners in those, of whom the world knows nothing; of whose working, but for the three words (many he-turned-away from iniquity) in the closing book of the Old Testament, we should have known nothing."—Pusey. (7) "The lips of a priest guard knowledge, and men seek instruction from his mouth, for he is the Angel—the revealing Angel—of Jehovah of Hosts. Once more, what a remarkable saying to come from the legal age of Israel's religion, and from a writer who so emphasises the ceremonial law!"—G. A. Smith. seek the law, i. e. to know its applications to particular cases.^d messenger, or interpreter. "The priest is here called, as elsewhere the prophet, the angel, or messenger, through whom and by whom Jehovah speaks to and acts upon men."—Marcus Dods.

c Ja. v. 19, 20.

d De. xvii. 9—11, xxiv. 8. See also Ezr. vii. 10.

"Man's uncertain life is like a rain-drop hanging on the bough, amongst ten thousand of its sparkling kindred, the remnants of some passing thunder shower, which have their moments, dropping one by one, and which shall soonest lose its perilous hold we cannot guess."—Joanna Baillie.

Did Turn Many Away from Iniquity.—By influence, by example, by tender words, many are turned away from iniquity, from selfishness, from drunkenness, from baseness, from evil pursuits of ever kind; not by the thunder of eloquence, not by the lightning of logic or high reasoning, not by the mystery of metaphysics, but by calm, quiet, loving, tutorial interest in private life,—who knows what triumphs have been wrought within the sanctuary of the house? God is not unrighteous to forget our work of faith and labor of love; God knows how many lambs we have tended; how many straying sheep we have brought back to the fold; how many hopeless hearts we have rekindled; to how many we have given of the oil of grace. Let no man, therefore, fail of heart and courage because he does not speak from a public pedestal. His name may not be known far away from his own fireside; there are private priests, there are household evangelists, there are ordained missionaries whose names are not published; there are women-shepherds who are seeking the very worst sheep—the sheep that the shepherds would not look after, the shepherdesses are following still; all the service is written down, and attached to it is the commendation of God.—Joseph Parker.

8—10. (8) ye, the priests of Malachi's days. departed, R. V. "turned aside." De. xvii. 10. stumble . . law, R. V. "in the law," the law being the way in which men should walk, they are made to stumble while in the way, by misrepresenting it, and making it appear to be hard and unreasonable. covenant of Levi, vs. 4. (9) therefore, because they are unfaithful. contemptible, etc., for while men use the liberty wh. unfaithful priests allow, they despise them in their hearts, bec. of their unfaithfulness. partial,* R. V. "had respect of persons." (10) Here begins a new section (10—17) on the cruelty of divorce as practiced by the Hebrews in order to marry in influential heathen families. against his brother, for a man's wrong-doing is never merely an injury to himself; it is an aggravation of the sin that it hurts others. Out of the common Fatherhood springs a common brotherhood.

Spirituality of Malachi.—It really is fine to observe with what native ease Malachi rises into the higher region of thought. While dwelling on the sins of the priests he moves in the lower, the ceremonial elements; he insists on the maimed rites and blemished sacrifices, on the perfunctory and the contemptuous spirit with which they lounged through the service of the Temple. But no sooner does he attempt to frame a conception of what the true priest should be, than all that is forgotten; we hear no more of altar and sacrifice: his thoughts are riveted on the moral aspects of the priestly vocation—how holy a man, how wise a teacher, how careful and friendly a guide, the priest should be. When we are thinking only to hear that the sons of Levi are to offer clean and perfect, instead of blemished and polluted, sacrifices, to delight in the ministrations of the sanctuary instead of despising them, as much to our surprise as pleasure, he places before us a lofty spiritual ideal of character and service, well-nigh, if not altogether beyond the reach of mortal powers: he pronounces a eulogium on Levi which we should hardly dare to inscribe, as an epitaph, on the tomb of the holiest saint, or even on that of an inspired apostle.—S. Cox.

11—13. (11) abomination, a thing regarded as such by the holy law of God. loved,* i. e. which God loved. the daughter of a strange god, "as those who worship and serve the true God are called His sons and daughters, so they that worshiped any strange god are, by like reason, here called the daughters of that god." (12) R. V., "The Lord will cut off to the man that doeth this, him that waketh and him that answereth, out of the tents of Jacob." master and scholar, (him that waketh and him that answereth), a prov. expression for every living member of the transgressor's family. "It is taken from sentries or watchmen who as they go their rounds give their challenge and receive the watch-word in reply. In the same sense the Arabs say, 'no one crying out, and no one answering, i. e. no one alive.'" him that offereth, comp. Ne. xiii. 28, 29. (13) have ye done, R. V., "ye do," referring to a habit. For a second thing, they not only marry heathen women, but they are in the habit of treating cruelly and divorcing their lawful wives. with tears, etc., these were shed by the repudiated Jewish wives.

"The Master and the Scholar" (vs. 12).—This should rather be rendered, "the watchman and the answerer." The true explanation is probably to be brought from the temple service, in which there was appointed a constant watch, day and night, by the Levites; and among them this seems to have belonged particularly to the singers (1 Chron. ix. 33). Now the watches in the East are, to this day, performed by a loud cry from time to time, by the watchmen, one after another, to mark the hour, and that very frequently, in order to show that they are constantly attentive to their duty. Tavernier remarks that the watchmen in the camps go their rounds, crying one after another, "God is one. He is merciful;" and often add, "Take heed to yourselves." The hundred and thirty-fourth Psalm gives us an example of the temple-watch. The whole

* 1 Ti. v. 21.

"The nature of the profession exercises a great influence on longevity; thus out of 100 of each of the following professions the number of those who attain their seventieth year is—among clergymen, 42; agriculturists, 40; traders and manufacturers, 33; soldiers and clerks, 32; lawyers, 29; artists, 28; professors, 27; physicians, 24; so those who study the art of prolonging the lives of others are most liable to die early, probably on account of the effluvia to which they are constantly exposed."—Abeille Medicate.

* "This is the reproof of those who contracted marriages with foreigners, and repudiated their Jewish wives. To intermarry with the heathen would defeat the purpose of Jehovah, who was the common Father of the Israelites in a peculiar sense in wh. He was not Father of the heathen."—Fausset.

Psalm is nothing more than the alternate cry of the two different divisions of the watch. The allusion is similar in the passage before us.—Bush.

^b Or, Why does God thus refuse to accept our offerings?

^a "Can anything justify your violent and treacherous conduct towards your wives, which is contrary to moral sense, and a violation of the moral laws?"

—Spk. Com.

False views of God are fatal to consistent conduct towards our fellow-men. We must recognize such truths as these: that we are creatures of the one God; that we are pensioners on his bounty; that we are sinners dependent on his mercy; and that, nevertheless, we are children entitled to claim our place in his family. We shall then recognize that we are bound to treat all our fellow-creatures as members of the same family.

14—16. (14) wherefore?^b as if you did not know well the reason. wife of thy youth, thy proper and honorable Jewish wife. dealt treacherously, etc., "with whom thou hast broken faith, though she is thy mate, and thy wife by covenant."—G. A. Smith. covenant, comp. Pr. ii. 17. (15) R. V., "and did he not make one although he had the residue of the spirit? and wherefore one? He sought a godly seed." The meaning of this much controverted passage seems to be this: Did not God make us (the Jewish people) one, separating us from other nations? But He had the residue of the spirit and might have extended the same favor to other nations. Why then did he choose one? That He might make a godly seed, a people to be the stock of His Messiah. But if you ally yourselves with these idolaters you defeat the Divine plan. to your spirit, see that your conscience is clear in what you do. (16) putting away,^a or divorce. For one covereth, etc., R. V., "and him that covereth his garment with violence," probably referring to cruel treatment of the lawful wives. "The Fatherhood of God is not merely a relation of power and authority, requiring reverence from the nation. It constitutes the members of the nation one close brotherhood, and against this divorce is a crime and unnatural cruelty. Jehovah makes the wife of a man's youth his mate for life and his wife by covenant. He hates divorce, and His altar is so wetted by the tears of the wronged women of Israel that the gifts upon it are no more acceptable in His sight. No higher word on marriage was spoken except by Christ Himself."—G. A. Smith.

Marriage (vs. 14).—I. Marriage is represented in its claims as a social compact. 1. She is thy wife; here is the peculiarity of the relation; 2. Thy companion; here is the propriety and solace of the relation; 3. Of thy youth; here is the tenderness of the relation. II. As a religious institution. 1. In its formation; 2. In its design; 3. In its connection with the altar; 4. In its responsibilities; 5. In its duties; 6. In the typical use made of it.

17. Here begins a new section (ii. 17—iii. 6), in which the prophet passes to a new subject. "The abuses in connection with Divine worship and the social evils which he has already rebuked culminate in avowed unbelief (with your words), as to the justice of Almighty God and His moral government of the world. Though the righteous Judge be strong and patient, yet is He 'wearied,' His longsuffering worn out, by blasphemous charges of favoring and delighted in the wicked, or by the profane challenge to shew Himself, if He be indeed 'the God of judgment.'"—Camb. Bib. evil is good, comp. Is. v. 19, 20. "God answers the murmurs of the godless sceptics by an announcement of judgment to come."

Wearied God (vs. 17).—I. This may be done in many ways. 1. By our carelessness; 2. Opposition; 3. Unteachableness; 4. Unbelief; 5. Want of zeal; 6. Inconsistency.—Bonar.

CHAPTER THE THIRD.

^a Is. xl. 2; Mat. xi. 10; Mk. i. 2; Lu. vii. 27.

^b "A herb the fullers used to take spots out of clothes."

—S. Jerome.

How wonderfully colored is the Bible! What a mystery of light and shade, mercy and judgment, goodness and severity! We have found this all the way through the rec-

1—3. (1) messenger, Jno. Baptist.^a This and the following verses are the reply to the sceptical question, Where is the God of judgment? The delay was occasioned not by indifference on His part—but on theirs."—Marcus Dods. the Lord, or Messiah. "Malachi gives to Christ the name wh. belongs to God only. seek, .. delight in, prob. spoken in irony. (2) abide, stand the testing wh. His coming must prove to be. fuller's soap, Je. ii. 22.^b "For He is like the fire of the smelter and the acid of the fullers. He takes his seat to smelt and to purge; and He will purge the sons of Levi, and wash them out like gold or silver, and they shall be to Jehovah bringers of an offering in righteousness."—G. A. Smith. (3) purge, "the orig. notion of the root is cleansing or purifying by filtering or straining, but it also admits the notion of melting by fire."

Sit as a Refiner.—There were a few ladies in Dublin who met together to read the Scriptures and converse upon them. When reading the third chapter of Malachi, one of the ladies gave it as her opinion that the fuller's soap and the refiner of silver were only the same image, intended to convey the same view of the sanctifying influences of the grace of Christ. "No," said another, "they are not just the same image: there is something remarkable in the expression in the third verse, 'He shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver.' They all said that possibly it might be so. This lady was to call upon a silversmith, and promised to report to them what he said on the subject. She went, without telling him the object of her errand, and begged to know the process of refining silver, which he fully described to her. "But do you sit, Sir," said she, "while you are refining?" "O yes, Madam, I must sit with my eyes steadily fixed on the furnace, since if the silver remain too long it is sure to be injured." "And how do you know when it is sufficiently refined, Sir?" "Whenever I see my own image reflected in it, I know the process is completed." She at once saw the beauty and the comfort too of the expression, "He shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver." Christ sees it needful to put His children into the furnace, but He is seated by the side of it. His eye is steadily intent on the work of purifying, and His wisdom and love are engaged to do all in the best manner for them. Their trials do not come at random; the very hairs of their head are all numbered.

The Great Refiner.—

'Tis sweet to feel that He who tries
The silver, takes His seat
Beside the fire that purifies,
Lest too intense a heat—
Raised to consume the base alloy,
The precious metal, too, destroy.

'Tis blessedness to know that He
The piece He has begun,
Will not forsake till He can see
To prove the work well done
An image by its brightness known,
The perfect likeness of His own.

But, ah! how much of earthly mold,
Dark relics of the mine,
Lost from the ore, must He behold
How long must He refine,
Ere in the silver He can trace
The first faint semblance of His face.

Thou great Refiner sit Thou by Thy promise to fulfill;
Moved by Thy hand, beneath Thine eye,
And melted at Thy will;
O may Thy work forever shine,
Reflecting beauty pure as Thine.

4—7. (4) pleasant, acceptable, Je. vi. 20. former, R. V., "ancient."
(5) witness, bringing to light all iniquity in practical living and relationship, so that it may be judged and punished. sorcerers, 2 Chr. xxxiii. 6. false swearers, Zec. viii. 17. (6) change not, R. V., "For I, the Lord, change not: therefore ye, sons of Jacob, are not consumed. The unchangeableness of Jehovah is appealed to, as the ground of His dealings with Israel. He changes not in His promises and purposes of grace (Rom. xi. 29); therefore, in spite of their rebellions and provocations, the sons of Jacob are still preserved. It is the same argument that is expanded in Psalm lxxxix. 28—37."—Camb. Bib. (7) return, Zec. i. 3. "I am ready to be reconciled to you upon your repentance."

Messiah's Relation to Society Sins.—It is important to see that God both considers and deals with society sins as well as individual sins. Not sufficiently is it pressed on attention, that he deals with the evils which are characteristic of aggregates of men—with sins of classes and of na-ord, and now we find it on the last page of the revelation. God is the same God, and he changes, not. All the change has been in form, in outward relation, in merely trivial circumstance; there has been no change in God; the standard of righteousness has never been lowered; hell has always been hot and bottomless. Make of the testimony what we will, there it is; many men wrote the Book—many men who never saw one another, and who never read what the other had written, and yet when all the parts of the Book are brought together they are one. The unity of the Bible is one of the strongest arguments in expression and defence of its inspiration. — Joseph Parker.

Am. ix. 9.

"One of the deaf and dumb pupils in the institution of Paris, being desired to express his idea of the eternity of the Deity, replied, 'It is duration, without beginning or end; existence, without bound or dimension; present, without past or future. His eternity is youth, without infancy or old age; life, without birth or death; to-day, without yesterday or to-morrow.'" a Ne. xlii. 10—12.

"So long as we stand in need of a benefit, there is nothing dearer to us; nor anything cheaper when we have received it. And yet a man may as well refuse to deliver up a sum of money that's left him in trust, without a suit, as not to return a good office without asking; and when we have no value any further for the benefit, we do commonly care as little for the author. People follow their interest; one man is grateful for his convenience, and another man is ungrateful for the same reason." — L'Estrange.

"The being of grace must go before the increase of it; for there is no growth without life, no building without a foundation. Put a dry stick into the ground, and dress and water it as much as you will, it will continue the same till it rot; but set a living plant by the side of it, and though much less at first, yet it soon begins to shoot, and in time becomes a wide-spreading tree."

—Lavington.

tions. It is in the necessary judgment of classes and nations as such that the innocent are wont to suffer with the guilty; and then the interest of the class must be seen to override the interests of the single individual. Society sins are much the same in every age. They are classed in this verse. They run riot when the religious restraint is weakened. 1. Religious deceptions. 2. Immoralities specially bearing on family life. 3. Untrustfulness in everyday relations. "False swearers." 4. Sweating the workman, and forcing down the wage of the laborer. 5. Taking advantage of the distressed to secure selfish advantage; the "widow, fatherless, and stranger." How these sins corrupt society to-day may be unfolded according to the skill of the preacher. The prophets teach that whenever God manifests Himself, He puts forth His power against society sins, and Malachi declares this to be one of the most marked characteristics of Messiah.—Pul. Com.

8, 9. (8) rob God, or defraud Him, of His just rights, tithes, "by the Law of Moses (1) 'the tenth of all produce, as well as of flocks and cattle, belongs to Jehovah and must be offered to Him' (Lev. xxvii. 30, 32); and (2) this tenth is 'assigned to the Levites as the reward of their services' (Num. xviii. 21, 24). Nehemiah in his day had to deal once and again with the evil here rebuked. Notwithstanding the 'sure covenant' into which they had entered (Neh. ix. 38 with x. 32—39), he had occasion, on his return to Jerusalem after an absence of a few years, to reform them again in this very particular (xiii. 10—14)."—Camb. Bib. (9) cursed, with scarcity in your fields, bec. you have withheld the Lord's dues. "In trying to defraud God we only defraud ourselves."

God's Rights (vs. 8).—I. How can a man rob God? 1. By not loving Him; 2. By not obeying Him; 3. By not using our influence for Him; 4. By not giving our all to Him. II. The awful nature of the sin. 1. Audacious; 2. Reckless; 3. Desperate; 4. Ungrateful.—W. Whythe.

Robbing God—The Benefactor and the Robber.—One Sunday a gentleman was going to church. On his way he saw a number of boys playing on the common. He wanted very much to show them how wrong it was for them to be so doing; but he knew that if he began to reprove them they would not listen to him. So he walked leisurely up to them, and sat down on the grass. Presently, in a pleasant, familiar tone, he said, "Boys, I want to tell you a story." Directly they all gathered unsuspectingly around him, and he began as follows: "There was once a good man who was noted for his kindness and liberality. At the time of which I speak he was on a journey. As he was pursuing his way along a lonely road, he met a man who represented himself as having suffered a great loss, in consequence of which he was in deep distress. With his usual kindness the good man instantly drew out his purse, and after examining it, he said, 'I have only seven pounds with me, but I think that with one pound I can get to the end of my journey, and you shall have the rest.' With this he handed the man six pounds. Was not that generous? Would not you have thought that the beggar must have gone off, feeling very grateful and contented? Certainly, we should have expected this. But he did no such thing. He was not a beggar at all, but a robber; and seeing that the good man had still one pound in his purse, he knocked him down with a club, and stole his last pound from him." The boys were very indignant on hearing this. They all cried out against the shameful conduct of the robber. One of them went so far as to say he didn't think anybody could be found quite so wicked as that. "Now, stop," said the gentleman; "let me tell you, boys, this is just what you are doing. God has given you freely six days out of seven for your own use. He has kept only one for Himself, to be kept holy, and spent in worshiping Him; and yet you are so mean as to rob Him even of that!" The boys hung down their heads. They had not a word to say, but broke up their play and went off.

10—12. (10) all the tithes, R. V., "the whole tithe," wh. you have so sinfully withheld. storehouse, comp. Neh. xiii. 5. meat, or provision for My priests, etc. (11) devourer, the locust. cast her fruit, as not being nourished enough to mature it. (12) delightful land, Da. xi. 16; Zech. vii. 14.

The Luxury of Doing Good.—The language of Malachi iii. 10 is often used in prayer by those who are not aware that it is rather a challence than a promise—"Prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts." We naturally ask whether God does "open the windows of heaven and pour down blessing" upon the faithful givers of tithes. Instances are not wanting among ourselves to supply the answer. No workers in our day have enjoyed larger blessing than George Müller and Charles Spurgeon, both of whom have, from the beginning of their work, put the sacred rule into practice with believing and humble hearts. Years ago Mr. Spurgeon said: "I knew a lad in Christ once who adopted the principle of giving a tenth to God. When he won a money prize for an essay on a religious subject, he felt that he could not give less than one-fifth of it. He has never since been able to deny himself the pleasure of having a fifth to give. God has wonderfully blessed that lad, and increased his means and his enjoyment of that luxury of luxuries—the luxury of doing good."

13—15. (13) stout, Job xxi. 14. what have we, etc., R. V., "wherein have we spoken against thee?" (14) vain, there is no real advantage to be gained from it; mournfully, R. V. margin, "in mournful apparel." (15) proud, Pr. xxi. 24; Is. xlii. 11; Ps. cxix. 21, 51, 69, 78. set up, etc., R. V., "built up; yea, they tempt God and are delivered."

Stout Words Against God.—I was talking with a young business man, and he said essentially: "That man around the corner there, he is in the same sort of business as myself; he is prospering far more than I am, but he is doing it by all sorts of mean shifts and dishonest practices; why does he prosper so, while I, who keep my hands clean from such things, do not get on so well and swiftly? Isn't it better, after all, just to throw conscience and right-doing to the winds, and seize the main chance, anyhow?" You see this young business man was almost, if not quite, saying these "stout words" against God which the prophet charges some of the men of his time with saying. Never let the seeming prosperity of those saying and doing evil tempt you to words or ways against God and His righteousness.—Wayland Hoyt.

16—18. (16) feared, sincerely. book of remembrance, the figure of a Book of record or remembrance, as kept or directed to be kept by Almighty God, is of early as well as of very general occurrence in Holy Scripture. Moreover there was a 'Recorder' in the court of the Hebrew kings. See Exod. xvii. 14, xxxii. 32; Psalm lxix. 28; Dan. vii. 10; Luke x. 20; Revelation xx. 12.—Camb. Bib. thought upon, or highly esteemed. (17) in that day, etc., R. V., "in the day that I do make, even a peculiar treasure." (18) discern, see clearly that God makes and keeps distinctions.

Precious Jewels.—Describe regalia of England. Speak of jewels. Show one or two; as rings, brooches, etc. The text introduces to us the crown jewels of the King of kings. Some Roman ladies were once talking about and showing their jewels. One went out to fetch hers, and presently returned, leading her children, and saying, "Here are my jewels." The great King places His children before us, and says, "These are My jewels." What do God's children as jewels remind us of? 1. Like jewels, they are rare. "Little flock;" many common stones and pebbles, few pearls and diamonds. 2. Like jewels, they are beautiful, brilliant, ornamental; shine, "lights in the world." 3. Like jewels, they are found in strange and unlikely places. Pearl diving. Mine. 4. Like jewels, they are obtained only with much risk and trouble. 5. Like jewels, they have to be cut and polished, to bring out their beauty and value. "Furnace of affliction." Interior of jeweler's shop. Wheels, files, etc. God superintends the process. "Refiner of silver." When the Kohi-noor was recut, the Duke of Wellington superintended the process. 6. Like jewels, they are very valuable; hence they cost a great deal. "Bought with a price." "Elect, precious." Wars have been occasioned by desire to possess jewels of great value. 7. Like some jewels, some Christians have a great historical interest (name some famous gems, as the Pitt diamond, etc.). Thus Luther, Knox, Calvin, Wesley, etc. 8. Like jewels, they are carefully preserved. Casket. Safe. "Kept by the power of God," etc. Regalia of England in Tower of London. 9. Like jewels, they are sometimes collected and exhibited. Grand occasions when jewels are worn. Queen's drawing room. Court festivals. So Christians a "A rebuke of persons who were impatient under temporal trials, and murmured against God, bec. they did not at once reap the fruit of their service in temporal prosperity."

—Spk. Com.

"Holiness in the heart will be holiness in the life too; not some good actions, but a good conversation; a uniform even tract of life, the whole revolution of it regular."

—Leighton.

b Tit. ii. 14; 1 Pe. ii. 9.

"Incredible as it may appear to ignorance, on whose admiring eyes it flashes rays of light, science proves that the diamond is formed of the very same matter as common, dull, black coal. It boasts no native light; and dark in the darkness as the mud or rock where it lies imbedded, it shines, if with a beautiful, yet with a borrowed splendor. How meet an emblem of the priceless jewels that adorn the Saviour's crown!"

—Guthrie.

"Be such a man, live such a life, that if every man were such as you, and every life a life like yours, this earth would be a paradise." —Phillips Brooks.

in meetings of the Church here, and in the great gathering of the Church triumphant. May we all be found in that day as gems in the Redeemer's crown.—Hive.

"They shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in the day that I do make, even a peculiar treasure" (vs. 17). Those described in the previous verses are the Lord's "peculiar treasure;" He cherishes them as one guards jewels; and a day is coming when this shall be evidently seen to be the fact. Better than jewels, God loves, treats, cares for such as His sons. In God's day of disclosure nothing shall be plainer than that there is a vast and vital distinction between those who serve God, and those who do not.—Wayland Hoyt.

CHAPTER THE FOURTH.

^a Comp. Mat. iii. 12.

^b Is. lx. 1, 2.

^c "So called to signify that his light consists in clearing up men's understandings, and chasing away the darkness of their minds; whose rays and kindly warmth will heal all the diseases of the soul."

—Lowth.

"If we say we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." But although we have sin still abiding in us, and, like the bias in a bowl, warping us to the world, yet that vital seminal principle of the grace of God in Christ always keeps its ground, its life and tendency towards heaven, and wears out, wastes, and gradually subdues the contrary tendency of sin and corruption."

—Sir M. Hale.

1—3. (1) R. V., "For behold, the day cometh, it burneth as a furnace." ^a burn, see Joel ii. 31; Ho. vii. 4. ^b neither . . . branch, Eze. xvii. 8, 9; Am. ii. 9. (2) sun,^b etc., Lu. i. 78. ^c healing in his wings,^c comp. "the wings of the morning," Ps. cxxxix. 9. In both cases the rising of the sun is compared, not to the use of the wings in flight, but to lifting them up, or spreading them out. In the Psalm the suddenness and rapidity with which this is done, when the sun "flares up from behind the mountain wall of Moab," is the point of comparison (comp. "the morning spread upon the mountains," Joel ii. 2; and the swift traveling of the light across the landscape in our own country, when the sun emerges from a cloud on a windy day). Here the healing virtue of the outstretched wings is in view. "A pleasant," and a wholesome, "thing it is for the eyes to behold the sun." Eccles. xi. 7.—Camb. Bib. ^d grow up, R. V., "gambol," as stall-fed animals leap about, when loosed from the stall. (3) concluding section, vss. 3—6. "With his last word the prophet significantly calls upon the people to remember the Law. This is their one hope before the coming of the great and terrible day of the Lord. But, in order that the Law may have full effect, Prophecy will be sent to bring it home to the hearts of the people—Prophecy in the person of her founder and most drastic representative."—G. A. Smith. ^e tread down, as oxen tread the wheat on the threshing-floors. I shall do this, R. V., "that I do make," comp. iii. 17. ^f ashes, to which the stubble (vs. 1) has been reduced.

Christ the Light of the World (vs. 2).—I. Christ is the source of light; 2. Of heat; 3. The center of the spiritual world; 4. The center of attraction.—Whythe.—Dies Iræ (vss. 1—6).—Here we have—I. A great warning, vs. 1. II. The consolation of the faithful, vs. 2. III. The mighty victory, vs. 3. IV. The unchangeable standard of holiness, vs. 4. V. The world's last sermon.—Bonar.

The Sun of Righteousness.—There is a manifest Messianic reference here. The personal Messiah shall come to bring in a reign of righteousness. The winged disk is a frequent and most ancient Oriental symbol. You have often seen pictures of it. When the "sun flares up from behind the mountain wall of Moab," there is a spreading forth of his light like wings. This light is healing. It cures and scatters the glooms and distortions of the night. Such shall be the coming of the Messiah. Those who have waited for, trusted in, served Him, shall be blessed beneath His spreading wings of light; those who have done evil and served themselves shall be scattered, disgraced, condemned, as the spreading wings of light of the rising sun annihilate the fleeing night's glooms and shadows.—Wayland Hoyt.—"To you that fear my name shall the Sun of Righteousness arise with healing in His wings." It is true He speaks more especially of His incarnation, or visible appearance in the world; but, by this manner of speaking, He intimates withal that this Sun of Righteousness is always shining upon His faithful people, more or less, in all ages, from the beginning to the end of the world. For in that it is said, "He shall arise," it is plainly supposed that He was the Sun of Righteousness before, and gave light unto the world, though not so clearly as when He was actually risen. As we see and enjoy the light of the sun long before he riseth, from the first dawning of the day, though it grows clearer and clearer all along, as he comes nearer and nearer to his rising; so the Sun of Righteousness began to enlighten the world, as soon as it was darkened by sin; the day then began to break, and it grew lighter and lighter in every age. Adam himself saw something of this light, Abraham more; "Abraham rejoiced to see My day," saith this glorious Sun: "He saw it and was glad" (John vii. 56). David and the Prophets after him saw it more clearly, especially this, the last of the Prophets: he saw this Sun in a manner rising so that he could tell the people that it would suddenly get above the horizon. "The Lord whom you seek;" saith he, "shall suddenly come to His temple." Mal. iv. 2.—R. T. S.—Beholding the Sun.—I have read that near the North Pole, the night lasting for months and months, when the people expect the day is about to dawn, some messengers go up on the highest point to watch; and when they see the first streak of day they put on their brightest possible apparel, and embrace each other and cry, "Behold the sun!" and the cry goes through all the land, "Behold the sun!" Some of you have been trudging on in the darkness of sin. It has been a long and wearisome night for your soul; but now I cry, "Behold the Sun of Righteousness rising with healing in His wings!"—Talmage.

4-6. (4) law, Ex. xx. 3. with the, R. V., "even." (5) Elijah, i. e. one in the spirit and power of Elijah.^a great . . day, the manifestation of Messiah, regarded on its testing, judging, condemning side. (6) turn, by the persuasions of his preaching. "He shall produce a general reformation in the minds and manners of all sorts of persons." the heart of the fathers, the "fathers" here are the patriarchs, whom the prophet regards as estranged from their degenerate "children," or descendants, and ceasing to acknowledge them on account of their unworthy character and conduct. (Comp. Isaiah lxiii. 16; Matthew iii. 9.) curse, this has fallen upon the land of Canaan bec. the Messiah, so graciously sent, was rejected and crucified. "The passage which seems to hrow most light on the phraseology of vs. 6 is Isa. xxix. 22-24, comp. Luke i. 17."—Dods.

The Reappearance of Elijah.—Elijah was the Prophet for whose return in later years his countrymen have looked with most eager hope. . . . It was a fixed belief of the Jews that he had appeared again and again, as an Arabian merchant, to wise and good rabbis at their prayers or on journeys. A seat is still placed for him to superintend the circumcision of the Jewish children. Passover after passover, the Jews of our own day place the paschal cup on the table, and set the door wide open, believing that that is the moment when Elijah will reappear. When goods are found and no owner comes, when difficulties arise and no solution appears, the answer is, "Put them by till Elijah comes."—Stanley's Jewish Church.

Malachi, the Prophet of a Violated Fatherhood.—

If I'm a Father, where's the honor due From loving children? Why do ye profane
My name with hollow service? Why in vain Burn fire upon Mine altar, and, in lieu Of perfect gifts, with refuse think to sue
For favor? Weariness ye ill contain;
Ye rob both God and man; your one refrain,
"Wherein?" to all your empty life the clew.

Behold! the Lord shall suddenly appear
To purge His temple, a refiner's fire,
To purify the silver and the gold.
Then they that serve the Lord, His name do fear, Shall be My jewels and My heart's desire,
Of lustre rare, of beauty manifold.

—Christian Endeavor World.

^a Mat. xi. 14;
Mk. ix. 11-13;
Lu. i. 17.

"We cannot understand how utterly, how ineffably sublime these predictions are until we get into a certain spiritual mood, until we feel the wickedness of wickedness, and see all evil in some degree as God sees it. God has a great fire, and he is going to bring it that it may burn up all the lies of hypocrisy, all the insincerity and selfishness of the world, cleansing it. — heaven's great fire: a glorious prophecy! If we could see things as they really are from his point of view, we should know that the day had already come. All wickedness is being burned down. The wicked man has a terrible time of it today. Do not believe him when he laughs; his life is a lie; his last stroke of merriment is his last forgery. He cannot be happy — or God cannot; I must leave it between them." — Joseph Parker. "Both prophesied in a time of great unbelief and apostasy from the law; both sought to bring back the people to the piety of their fathers; both prophesied before great and terrible judgments. The historical circumstances in which they lived were remarkably parallel. Ahab appears in Herod, Jezebel in Herodias. The words of Mark vi. 20, where he speaks of Herod fearing John, may apply without any alteration to Ahab." — Lange.

INDEX I.

VOL. III.

[First Index of subjects, illustrations etc. in the main body of the page, according to the heads which appear at the beginning of the paragraph.]

	PAGE
Able to save.....	356
Absence of misery a mercy.....	106
Affliction, base of.....	101
inevitable.....	215
refining power of.....	304
uses of.....	131
Age, the golden.....	778
"Ah! how,".....	88
Albatross.....	231
Alchemy, divine.....	87
"All's well".....	34
Almond tree in blossom.....	377
Ambition.....	506
unhappiness of.....	625
Amos, the prophet of social justice....	778
Anathoth.....	376
"And then".....	45
Angels.....	677, 696, 862, 872
in the household.....	695
ministry of.....	340, 364, 701, 702, 864
Anger.....	794
divine.....	130
Anklets.....	99
Answered, why some prayers are not.....	803
Antelope, the.....	60
Antiochus.....	695
and Nebuchadnezzar.....	680
Anxiety versus trust.....	184
Apostasy, reward of.....	704
Appearance of our Lord.....	325
Apple-tree.....	59
Armies of God.....	436
Arm of flesh, the.....	230
Armor.....	347
Arrow, figurative use of.....	570
Arrows, divination by.....	602
Ascalon.....	843
Ashes, feeding on.....	290
Assyrian invasion.....	259
Astrology.....	302, 666
Avarice.....	104
Awakening, a day of.....	232
Babylon.....	147, 531, 532
and prophecy.....	527
cities of.....	536
conquest of.....	684
destruction of.....	525, 526, 527
fate of.....	524
Babylonia.....	154
Babylon, spoiling of.....	529
palace at.....	523
Babylon's effacement.....	151

	PAGE
Backsliders, suffering of.....	396
Balm of Gilead.....	401, 507
of life.....	400
Banias, the castle of.....	864
Bankrupt's entertainment.....	241
Banner, lifting up the.....	147
Battle, rage of.....	100
Beautiful, the.....	16
Beauty, charm of true.....	65
of earth and heaven.....	371
spiritual.....	72
through, service.....	56
Bees.....	117
Beginnings, small.....	670
Belief, necessity of correct.....	475
restoration of.....	262
Believer, the.....	250
Believer's weakness.....	248
Believing is trusting.....	253
without understanding.....	261
Benevolence impotent before law....	687
Besieger besieged, the.....	822
Best and worst.....	723
Bethlehem.....	807
Better land, the way to the.....	248
Bible, half of a.....	484
Bible, infidels and the.....	653
supposed loss of the.....	653
the.....	481, 648, 655
to be learned by the heart.....	648
use of a.....	652
wonders of.....	644
Birds, singing of.....	61
Bird, the speckled.....	411
Bitter and the sweet, the.....	263
at heart.....	388
Bitterness turned to blessing.....	332
Blessings changed to curses.....	391
Blessing, showers of.....	729
Blessings, unclaimed.....	748
Blessing, times of.....	287
Blindness, spiritual.....	346
Blue.....	606
Book of consolation.....	319
of life.....	691
Books and reading.....	484
influence of.....	482
Bows.....	150
Brand-feast, the.....	339
Bravery in reproving sin.....	747
Breaking covenant.....	409
Bribe, refusing a.....	241

	PAGE		PAGE
Bridegroom and bride.....	55	Christ unveiled	691
the heavenly	66	Christianity and the future.....	119
Broken	438	benevolence of.....	351
Broken bowl, the	21	glory of	812
Buildeth by unrighteousness	438	Christian in the world.....	201
Building materials	128	seamen	706
Burden, the.....	817	security	206
Burial, places of.....	518	Christians, work of	152
the sinner's	439	Christian, treasure of the	265
Business	616	warfare	704
Butter and honey	117	work, capacity for.....	238
Buying heaven	344	workers of the past.....	36
Cake not turned.....	724	Church, danger of	470
Calamity, insensibility to.....	185	Gbd's battle-axe	531
Calmness under excitement.....	231	power, the.....	445
Camel-feast, Arab	609	strength and mission of.....	159
Captive, mission of a.....	668	triumphant, the.....	349
Care, God's loving.....	282	Citron	59
heavenly Father's.....	298	City, the holy.....	659
Careless hearers	628	Clement and Conradin.....	441
Carey's sermon	331	Citizen saint, a.....	242
Carmel	776	Civilization, a ruined.....	571
Carrying children in the east.....	368	unable to renew heathen-
Cathedrals, old.....	644	dom	247
Chaff and corn.....	734	Clay and potter	248
Chaldæa, cities of.....	533	Clergy, duty of.....	445
the spoiling of.....	528	Classes, the relation of.....	96
treasures of.....	524	Clothes taken in pledge.....	760
Chaldæans, the	829	Clouds of doves	349
Change of moral character, a.....	746	the shadow of a.....	198
Character	75	Comfort, divine	423
elements of a noble.....	87	Comforts, worldly	423 influence of heredity on.....	594	Commandments, origin of.....	281
national	612	Communion with Christ, joy of.....	145 of the church.....	248	Companions, responsibility for	223
root of	50	sinful	412
variety in religions.....	472	Comparative value	301
Charity, conscientious.....	833	Compassion	519
Chastening	390	and its reward.....	874
Chastisement, effect of national.....	764	Compromise	133
Chebar, the river.....	562	Comrades, our	167
Child, influence of.....	141	Confessing Christ	639
lost	86	Confession, Hindoo's	228
Children	333	an idolater's	289
responsibility of care of.....	714	Confidence, Christian	422
suffer for sins of their parents.....	55	influence of	222
Chittim	191	in strong leadership	702
Choice of a residence.....	494	three epochs of	422
Christ, agony of.....	884	Conquered, the misery of the.....	553
a man of sorrows.....	326	Conqueror conquered, the.....	695 covering the sinner.....	353	Conquest as the result of conflict.....	73
hidden away in the church.....	312	Conquests, Alexander's.....	694
peace is revealed in.....	473	Conscience	97, 109, 681, 682
power of world.....	140	a hardened	195
Christ's kingdom	671, 693	an evil	232
personality, inspiration of.....	298	God and a guilty.....	682
presence	674	Constancy, heroic	453
Christ stooping to save.....	329	the eternal	332
sympathy of	57	Contemplation	855
intercession of	319	Content	272
humiliation of	329	Continency, royal	716
the leadership of.....	335	Contract	469
the preacher's theme.....	310	Contrast in the death.....	711
true ministry of.....	352	Jeremiah and the duke, a.....	549

	PAGE
Contrasted lots	363
Contrition, necessity of	418, 679
Conversion of gentiles	295
a country-man's	867
Courage	453 and gentleness, true	183
before kings	378
Christian	318
in lowly places	747
maternal	311
Covenants, broken	593
Creation, the	455
Creator, foot-prints of the	240
the great	268
Crime, a most cruel	758
Crown, a lost	873
Cruelty indiscriminate	757
Cruelty oriental	666
Cry from the depths, the	792
Curiosity an idle	29
Curses	896
Custom at Herrnhuth	182
Customs of modern Arabs	36
Cyrus	273, 291
"Dairyman's Daughter" in Turkey	43
Dan	387
Damascus	164, 165, 520
Danger, insensibility to moral	192
Daniel Dancer, the miser	23
Darkness, the	47
Dawn	141
Daybreak, effects of	749
Day of Jehovah, the	148
Days, after many	238
Dead, cuttings for	516
our	48
spiritually	68
Death	403
allegory of	476
certainty of	95
conquered	734
dread of	261
early	418
effects of	775
life triumphs over	199
old and new Testament ideas of	261
preparation for	96
scene	205
the Christian's	339
Deceiving the heart	460
Decision, a wise	762
Defeat of God's enemies	641
Degeneracy	245
"Delayed blessings office"	499
Deliverance	126
Demands, refusing unwelcome	501
Desecration, punishment for	663
Desolation	203, 246
and misrule	193
soul's	246
Despair	399
king's	682
Destiny	709
Destroying mountain destroyed	531

	PAGE
Destroyers, spirit of	523
Destruction, Christianity's work of	155
swiftness of	450
Devastation	418
Devotement and consecration	653
Devotion, the place of	263
Dew, grace of God as	169
Dibon	514
Discernment	139
Discipline, harsh	144
Discontent cured	501
Discoveries, recent	502
Disobedience, result of	408
Distress, temporal	217
Divination by rods	719
Divine adornings	353
choices, the	274
discernment	778
exultation on the new creation	364 government, conception of	131
pity, magnitude of	88
restoration	847
right	31
surnaming, the	292
Divinity, a true test of	277
Doing God's work unworthily	300
Doom, a common	476
Doseh	321
Doubt, divine unreasonableness of	311
philosophical	251
Doubts	682
Dragons	521
Dream, Coleridge's	667
king's	670
Dreams, divulgements of	671
lessons in	667
use of	676
Dress, influence of	178
Drink, degrading effects of	833
Drinking	194
habits in the east	104
Drunkard's conversion	11
thralldom	413
Drunkenness	108, 211
Dry lands	416
Duty toward the sick and dying	260
Dying like a Christian	29
Earnestness of a convinced sinner	811
Earthly joy	125
power vain	502
Earth prepared for man	296
Ease is peril	512
Eastern dreamers	880
Edom	623
execration of	785
Edomites, the	782
Edom on the skirts of Palestine	356
Edom's condemnation	632
security	781
Edom, wisdom of	782
Effeminacy	531

	PAGE		PAGE
Egypt	619, 621	Fasts, national	874
desire to go to	499	Father subdued, the	207
floods in	168	Favorites	40
geographical notes on	172	Favor of God, sin conceals	110
historical notes on	172	Fear	115, 245
Egyptian alliance	383	groundless	115
splendors	620	Fearlessness	453
Egypt, judgment of	506	Fear of death	342
Egypt's desolation	620	of God	50, 180
Elamites, restoration of	521	of God, true	138
Element, the one	818	of hell	230
Elijah, the re-appearance of	903	not	282
Emergency, God's help in	273	unavailing	252
Empires, cause of the decline of	507	Feast, Jehovah's	198
Empire, the fourth	693	Feasts, the	655
Envy	685	Fidelity, recompense for	665
insatiable	18	Fifteen years added to a life	260
Equivocation	491	Fig tree peeled, the	740
Escapes, providential	179	Fig tree	739
Eternal foundation, the	739	Fire signals	392
life	127	Fish-ponds	174
Eternity, light of	709	the great	791
preparation for	105	Flatteries and persecutions	706 working for	709	Flattery, evils of	685
Everlasting life	710	Flora, the celestial	807
Evil, abiding influence of	855	Foe, the only	594 doors, the seed of	156	Following Christ	675
effect of	424	principle	97
example, power of	38	Folly, wickedness of	30
forces, the divine control of	333	Forgiveness	736, 813
foreseeing the	500	loving	717
habits, influence of	338	Formalism	343, 599
overthrow of	156	Fountain, the sealed	67
problem of	496	Foxes, little	62
shall not prevail	420	Franklin, Dr.	440
Excellence, possibilities of	113	Frederic I at Heidelberg	21
Expedition, the last	707	Freedom	126
Eye, power of	72	French regime, the old	803
Eyes and no eyes	13	Friends, sin makes no true	153
painting the	389	three	404
putting out the	492	Fruit required	101
Ezekiel, justice of	592	Fuel	569
Ezekiel's commission	567	Furnace, the fiery	673
dirge	596	Fury, wine-cup of	449
gospel	631	Future	601, 696, 715
individualism	594	the better	633
preaching	600	Gains, results of dishonest	768
preparation	568	Gardens	75, 90
Face medicine	31	Garden, a well-watered	344
Faces Zionward	522	Garments, filthy	867
Face, the averted	361	Gaza, ruins at	509
Facetiousness	34	Gedaliah's death	495
Fact, a double-edged	122	Generosity toward enemies	552
Failure	704	Girdle	413
of worldly things to satisfy	678	Giving, proportionate	656
Faithfulness, the value of	448	Glory, apex of	660
Faith in God's promises	456	millennial	142
Falling away of Christian professors	314	short-lived	318
Famine, horrors of	543	sudden departure of	267
Famine	740	Glorifying God	308
Far away	242	God	765
Farmer, an upright	202	a personal	721
Fasting, true	417	a return to	716
Fasting	741	activity of	836

	PAGE
God agency of.....	687
God's agents are never beyond His re- straining	258
God all in all.....	257
awfulness of.....	240
call of.....	111, 367
care of.....	167
danger leads to.....	196
finding fault with.....	124
forgetfulness of.....	716
gifts of.....	174
goodness of.....	197, 199
greatness of.....	284, 843
God's guidance	422
God, the house of.....	58, 851
human views of.....	175
infinite knowledge of.....	176
in nature	852
in His works.....	185
in whom we trust.....	254
is good.....	35
kingdom of.....	357
love of	271, 357, 369
Majesty and Infinitude of.....	271 need of strength from.....	767
notions of.....	437
offerings to.....	370
of nature.....	818
omnipresence of.....	277
opposition to.....	155
our rest.....	408
over all.....	305
over-ruling nations	137
refreshing physical nature.....	795 rejoicing	472
repented	794
revealing Himself.....	366
rooted in	139
safety in	753
seeking the true.....	834
seeks men	362
severe aspect of.....	281
smile of	887
superintending human history.....	782
the burden-bearer	262
the first great cause.....	171
the only judge.....	753
thou art my God.....	166
true and false conceptions of.....	258 unknown influence of.....	292
voice of	270
watch-care of.....	820
waiting for	226
ways of	306
work for	308
wrath of.....	321
yearning for	556
God's care for His own.....	320, 489, 865
cause, grief for.....	692
compassion for the poor and con- trite	366
counsels, immutability of.....	157 faithfulness inspires hope.....	556
glory	370

	PAGE
God's good will	471
grace	718
honor vindicated by His word.....	252
influence, withdrawal	393
judgment is discriminating.....	505 judgment upon the wicked.....	517
law, discontent at restraints of.....	109
love greater than a mother's.....	311
merciful pardon	335
mercy, continuance of.....	485
miracles	675
name	228
omniscience	470
pity and warning	88
pleasure	299
power	267, 471
power of destruction.....	535
promises	702
promise unchangeable	509
providence	397
relation to his people.....	330 supervision of his people.....	358
supreme control	455
voice to the heedless.....	485
watchful care	845
willingness to bestow good.....	291
withdrawal	416
word a thorn.....	391
word in the home.....	348
word indestructible	483
work	499, 835
work, waiting for.....	313
workmanship	285
Going to heaven.....	386
Gold	708
Golden age	868
Good out of evil.....	362
triumph of	497
Gospel, ministers of the.....	432
of the poor.....	351
origin and glory of the.....	91
preached simply	220
tenderness of the.....	226
the power of God unto salva- salvation	370
truth, harmony of.....	222
Gourd, the	795
Grammar to literature, from.....	279
Granaries	496, 741
Grapes in the wilderness.....	728
Gratitude, proportionate.....	422
Graven upon the palms.....	312
Graves disturbed	398
Great men of humble origin.....	773
Greatness, the contemplation of past.....	154
Greeley, Horace	293
Grief, inconsolable	886
unequalled	547
Guilt cannot be hidden.....	603
corporate	603
Habakkuk	831
Habit, power of.....	416
Haggai, the prophet of reconstruction.....	851
Hands dropping myrrh.....	69

	PAGE		PAGE
Harmony with God.....	102	Husbandry	215
Harvest	125	Hypocrite, the.....	731
Hearers	812	Hypocrisy	116, 132
tastes in	875	and sincerity	451
Hearing the word.....	799	atrocious of	132
Heart, a new	579	easy, but dangerous.....	604
cure for a hard.....	447	present age suitable to.....	500 learning	219	Ideal, the lost.....	307
sickness	321	Idleness	852
the perceiving	307	Idol, an unfortunate.....	94
Heathen, gods of ths.....	406	Idolatry	279, 380, 769
Heathenism	289	folly of	288, 382, 405
doomed	641	modern	289
helplessness of	667	Idol-makers, Egyptian	269
in Africa	808	Idols, long reign of.....	94
Heathen, pitying the.....	112	overthrow of.....	735, 736
"Heavenly foot society".....	74	stones used as.....	340
Heaven, signs of.....	405	Idol-worship debasing.....	406
Heedlessness	84	Idumæa	246
Heed, take	227	a testimony to the truth of
Heine	297	Scripture	245
Helplessness of Israel's leaders.....	387	Images, broken	522
Help, too late	37	graven	730
Hemicycle, the	284	Image, the marred.....	24
Heredity	595	Infidelity, modern	254
force of	156	Ignorance	105, 218
Heretic	477	of God's goodness.....	360
Hezekiah's strength and weakness.....	264	of the future.....	457
Hidden things	304	Illusions	542
Hiding place, our.....	234	Illustration, pictorial	446
Hill and his gardener.....	474	Immanuel	139
Historical types	465	Impenitence	446
History, God's hand in.....	217	Impressions, indelible	546
recalling personal	774	Indian youth, an.....	133
the absolute	317	Individual, death of an.....	158
Holiness, beauty of.....	784	Influences, evil	764 influence of.....	89	Ingratitude	83, 725, 893
satisfaction of	92	Injustice and anger	555
Holy Scriptures, the.....	123	God's hatred of.....	130
Spirit, doctrine of.....	237	Inscription on a tombstone.....	351
endless supply of the.....	748	the fiery	681
Home, recollection of.....	438	the Moabite	164
training, value of.....	728	Insincerity, a drift	303
Honesty, Lincoln's	448	Intemperance	104
Hope in misery.....	149	Interpreter wanted, an.....	402
Hopelessness	825	Invitation of a king.....	599
Horses	735	Irreligion tends to ruin.....	504
Hosea, the prophecies of.....	713	Irreverence	86
Hospitality	496	Isaiah's interview with Ahaz.....	114
House of God, reverence for the.....	642	Israel, condition of.....	713 oriental	188	Jargon	219
tops	184	Janissaries	663
Human freedom	306	Jehovah incomparable	269
Humanity, bane of.....	467	resources of	530
Human nature, dignity of.....	149	strong assurances of.....	157
works	634	Jeremiah	376, 407, 436, 534, 539
Humility	350, 669	Jeremiah's choice	494
importance of.....	549	Jerusalem	341, 473
in God's presence.....	93	burning the city of.....	493
need of	771	discoveries	475
reasons for	413	security of	879
Hunger an impulse to labor.....	124	siege of	551
Husband, excellencies of.....	332	Jesus, 'perfection	70
meaning of a.....	331	Jew, a Leipsic	303

	PAGE
Jewels, precious	901
the nobleman's	22
Jews and Tiberias	125
Joseph and Daniel	668
Joy	290
at finding salvation	331
Judgment	193
and chastisements	207
certainty of	497
fear of	628
in the gate	768
of God	33
preparation for the	889
Judgments, national	763
Justice and mercy	577
retributive	720
Key of the House of David, the	187
Kindness, a soldier overcomes by	874
thy loving	33
Kingdom of God	196
seeking first the	197
shall be the Lord's, the	785
Kings as judges	877
King, the coming	64
neglected	20
Knowledge	105, 719
Labor, an encouragement to	308
Lack, a great	64
Lady Huntingdon	384
Land of Canaan, the	634
silent	163
Law, God's inexorable	553
uniformity of	468
Laziness	42
"Lean hard"	202
Lebanon	220
cedars of	882
smell of	735
Liars, covenanting with	214
Liberality	89
Liberal sowing	238
Liberty	477, 478
a moral growth	497
Christian	478
true	751
Life	14, 24
a fine art	365
and death	32
a river	488
a spring-time	210
battle-field of	29
crumbles away	263
impatient of	729
is the breath of God	637
look, the	297
possibilities of	379
reviewed	263
true	832
vanity of human	732
Light, at evening time	680, 888
beyond	547
Lights in the world	309
Light, the gospel	310
keeper, the praying	280

	PAGE
Like birds of passage	399
Lily in the east	71
the Huleh	66
Lincoln and slavery	751
Links, three	326
Lion hunt	181
Little faults	89
Live souls	281
Living waters	657
Locks, eastern	69
Locusts	739, 743
Lodge in the wilderness	401
Longing for a Redeemer	300
Lord as an enemy, the	545
day of the	887
Lord's day, the	337
Lots	790
Love	142, 588
allurement of	717
and pity, God's	745
everlasting	464
in sorrow	543
of the Father, the	278
strength of	63
strong as death	76
Lowliness	506
Loyalty	243
Lucifer	155
Luther's will	519
Luxury of doing good	900
Lying, detection of	456
Majority, the true	703
Malachi, prophet of a violated father- hood	903
spirituality of	897
times of	895
Magic of the inner life	646
Magnet, spiritual	90
Man cannot comprehend God	294
dignity of	428
fallen	429
influence of one	605
the matchless	873
perversion of his faculties	430
use of nature to	170
Man's arraignment, idle	316
helplessness	302
life	44
life a plan of God	148
plans	186
trust in his weapons	185
Manifestations of God, prayer for	360
Mankind, natural state of	724
Martyn, Henry	419
Martyrs	674
Martyr not alone	674
Martyrdom, Polycarp's	675
Master and scholar	897
Matter I or they, what	181
Matthew Hale in disguise	768
Meekness, not mean timidity	221
Melancholia	10

	PAGE		PAGE
Memory	853	Name, a great.....	119
a warning voice.....	503	the new	664
flowers of.....	886	Nazarites	760
Memorizing, value of.....	482	Nebuchadnezzar, a divine instrument..	622
Men, unscrupulous	132	and Babylon	683
who saved cities.....	38	Nebuchadnezzar's God	672
Men's sins recorded in God's book....	363	kingdom	670
Mercy	136	insanity	678
and judgment	120	Neglect	363
a condition of receiving.....	809	Neighbor, my	783
divine and human.....	627	Nero, victims of tyranny of.....	98
effect of	461	New, all things.....	8
God's	135, 745	Newton and Jay.....	324
greatness of	698	Nineveh	794, 796, 818, 821, 844
infinitude of	161	desolation of	822, 825
Message and messenger.....	861	"Not patched, but whole".....	591
God's	115	Oaths, futility of.....	477
Messiah's humiliation and exaltation..	309	Obduracy	203
Messiah, reign of.....	227	Obedience	377, 481
title of	127	rewards of	498
Mighty to save.....	127	to parents	481
Millet	569	Obstacles in the path of sin.....	114
Minister, a faithful.....	773	Oil	731
faithless	417	Old age	47, 48, 365
the unfaithful	441	men and children.....	876
Miracles of providence.....	229	Open-air customs in the east.....	68
Misery and happiness.....	160	O pity me.....	177
Missionary king, a.....	313	Opportunities neglected.....	102
spirit, a	112	Opportunity lost	103, 400
Moab	511, 512	Opposition, utility of.....	252
cities of	511, 514, 516	Oppression	104, 760
Mockery	613	and its downfall	152
Moloch sacrifice	588	Moslem	696
Monarchies, the four great.....	690	Order	15
Monitions	762	Oriental garments	325
Monuments, proud	154	stoves	378
Moral discipline, results of.....	136	Ornaments	99
evil	293	Ovens	488
obstinacy	303	Palace, an eastern.....	77
Morality, ancient	143	Palissy and Henry III.....	674
Mornings	343	Panic, the	121
Mortar, untempered	583	Papyrus	174
Mosque built by fraud.....	352	Parables	455, 802
Mother of sorrows, our.....	811	Pardon, abundant	813
Mountains	765	conditional	384
of Israel	77	Paths of preparation	267
Mourning at the grave.....	403	Patriotic purchase	469
salutariness of	422	Peace	237
Murderers in ambush.....	409	future	287, 697
Music at night.....	229	promise of	92
Myrrh, mountain of.....	62	through the Gospel	204
Mysteries of God.....	30	People, a prosperous.....	766
Nahum	817	Perfection	212
Nails	188	Perfumes	57, 64
Napoleon's conquests and end.....	708	Peril, comparative	454
Nardoo plant	334	Persecution	672, 750, 758
National distress	160	Persecutions, flatteries and.....	706
Nature, a mirror.....	60	Persecution a most arrogant crime....	759
God in	270, 277	Persecutions, Huguenot	433
Hebrew order of.....	8	Nero's	673
mystery of	295	Perseverance	722
re-entrance of.....	150	Pestilence	765
sympathy of mind with.....	153	Petition, New Year's.....	425 voice of	276	Petra	520, 894

	PAGE
Pharaoh-Hophra	622
Photographs on the wall	50
Physician and his patient	84
Piety, cheerful	17
inward	744
youthful	664, 676
Pitt lying in solitude	548
Pity, advantage of	758
casting off	758
radiance of	759
Plea of faith and pity	363
the sinner's	92
Pliny's letter to Trajan	673
Plough, the Syrian	751
Poison and antidote	400
in the cup	724
Poor, sparing the	537
Population, danger of foreign	825
Portion, the believer's	550
Possession, uncertainty of	183
Potsherds	225
Power of sin	107
of strong drink, the	480
Prayer	35, 256, 473, 742
answers to	255, 256
blessings of unanswered	586
delayed answer to	550
divine help sought by	204
effect of	772
faith in	697
fervency in	459
fishers'	698
for one's own country	458
for the church	742
God answers	555, 699
heard in heaven	792
importance of	498
in emergencies	698
ineffectual	163
intercessory	253, 361, 396
in trouble	552
of friends	668
omnipotence of	698
opens wider horizons	699
opposed to sin	791
persistent, fearless	686
protection of	686
swift answers to	366
test, the	456
Prayers, valueless	486
Preacher	610
a poor but good	630
office of the	445
or seer	83
true	352
Preachers, acquainted with human na- ture	571 and preaching	804
soul-converting	443
Preaching	49, 576
fervency in	431
fruit and flowers	338
of Christ	279
Premonition of the end	709

	PAGE
Preparing roads	266
Preservation, a remarkable	224
Prevailing joy	247
Pride	162, 691, 771
a corrective of	93
and its fall	138, 679
assumptions of	301
conceits of	624
fettered	202
Princes compared to lions	624
cruelty of oriental	689
Principle, Jewish adherence to	664
Prisons	489, 490
Prisoner, pity for the	538
Prisoners, treatment of	487
Prisoner, trials of a	493
Profanity	235
cure of	442
Progress, religious	221
Promises, affliction endears the	495
Promising and performing	21
Promotors of missions	112
Prophecies, attributed to God	426
Prophecy	443
interpretation of	180
must be fulfilled	113, 179, 449
ratification of	163
Prophets, characteristics of	533
false	582
Prophet forbidden to marry	421
Prophets, hallucination of patriotic	456
Prophet, mission of a true	491
Prophets rewarded, the false	554
Prophetic utterance	881
Prosperity and reverses	677
basis of	437
dangers of	514, 688
temporal	740
Providence, a special	305
divine	216
in history	136
Punishment, God's instrument for	148
object of divine	207
returning on sinner's head	763
Purging of the earth by the destruc- tion of the wicked	369
Purpose, a nullified	503
Pyrrhus and the philosopher	515
Quicksand, sinking in the	103
Rabshakeh	252
Readiness to do God's will	178
Reaping	729
Receiving blessings, hindrance to	364
Recessional	429
Reconciler of men, the	143
Rechabites	479
Redeemer's kingdom	128
Redemption, yearning for	885
Reeds, the paper	173
Reed, sweet-smelling	394
Refiner, the great	899
Reformers, dangers besetting	742
Reform, external	384
insincere	654

	PAGE		PAGE
Reign, the ideal	233	Roman empire, the rise and dominion of.	671
Relief, promised	161	scourging, a	315
Religion, a common	638	Root and fruit	258
adequate	214	"Rope, they've forgotten the"	869
a thing for every day	687	Rose of Sharon	58, 72
by proxy	651	Ruin, reason for	97
insincerity in	299	Rulers	629
spiritual	579	Sabbath-keeping, an Arctic explorer and	345
unity in	177	and Sabbath-breaking	337
value of	876	honoring the	775
worldly	617	religious observance of the	427
Religious homage	685	the, Christian	598
Remnant, a	135	types and uses of the	427
redemption of the	166	Sacred song, power of	280
Repentance	585, 744	Sacrifice, dividing victims for	478
calls to	129, 448	Sacrifices	397
delaying	448	human, in Burmah	346
nature of	397	Sacrilege	396
necessary to regain lost		Saints, ministering to	493
blessings	746	Salvation	328, 426
Repentant, the	596	from God	733
Reproof, personal	678	human means unavailing for	225
Reproving kings	437	loss a means of	683
Request, a dying	852	wells of	145
Resolution	664	Samaria	210, 763, 800
Responsibility, God given	187	Sanctified trouble	710
Resemblance between Bible and snow		Saviour for prince and peasant, one	314
and rain	336	Savonarola	419
Rest	201, 212	Scarlet cloth	87
Resting-place, a	523	Scepticism, modern	251
Rest on earth, no	802	Sceptres	597
Restoration, man's	385	Scholar, the simplest learner a true	480
of Israel, the	368, 462	Scoffer non-plussed	554
Restored church, the blessedness of the.	368	Scoffers, sermon to	219
restorer of mankind	462	Scorners	214
Resurrection	205	Scourge, the tempter a	606
Retirement, the duty of	205	Sea, dangers of	190
Retribution of God	492	Seal on the heart	76
Retribution	107, 228, 236, 783, 688	Sea, the great	689
Retrospect	463	Security, false	217
Return, the wife's	718	Seeing God	649
to shore	121	Seeking a man	389
Revelation, need of	147	Self	707
Revival of prosperity	474	destruction	623
Revivals	743	indulgence, no satisfaction in	832
Rich and poor	390	interrogation	102
anxieties of the	22	Selfishness, national	613
Riches, uncertainty of	134	Self-sufficiency	507, 517, 831
Rich, the poor	23	Sennacherib's Bismarck	250
Right and wrong, confounding	107	Sensuality, disappointment of	11
Righteous like a palm	74	Sermons	299
Righteousness, Christ's	233	Serpent charmers	41
true	117	Serpents	399
Right-doing, the safety of	439	in eastern houses	769
Righteous, glory of the	195	Service, preparation	112
Righteousness, judgment teaching	203	Shadow of a rock	234
Ring, the signet	857	Shame	385
Robbing God	900	moral beauty of	90
Rock and the pit, the	317	Sharp dealing	810
dwellings	519	Shaving	118
Rod, passing under the	600	Sheep before shearers	328
Roll, the flying	870	Shelter, divine	101
Roof, walking on the	679	in Christ	76
		Shepherd, an oriental	268

	PAGE
Shepherds, evil	384
Shield, anointing the	180
Shiloh	120
Shopman, an American	710
Shoulder, with one	846
Shun delays	407
Shutting the gate through which the king has entered	651
Siloam, village of	120
Silver, reprobate	395
Sin	106
a hindrance	391
a long course of	381
ancestral	410
and death	225
and grace	87
a serpent	629
banished or no heaven	386
besetting	801
bitterness of	727
bondage of	323
brought to remembrance	776
changes us	595
consequences of	194, 388
divine knowledge of	759
excuse for	129
finding us out	342
folly of	772
God's hatred of	86
growth of	726
indelible records of	424
its own punishment	381
Sinning against light	284
Sinners, madness of	608
Sin of presuming	264
of the scant measure	809
pardon of	813
past righteousness will not excuse present	627 punishment of	609
retribution for	708
Sins a cloud, our	290
Sin, skillfulness in	810
universal	346
within	409
Sitting on the ground	322
Sky, a cloudless	45
Slander	402, 430
Slanderers, the treatment of	551
Slave-mother crossing the Ohio	120
Slavery	750
Small things	869
"Smite thy hands together"	601
Society, differences in	98
Sodom, restoration of	590
Solar system, the end of the	365
Soldier, a thoughtless	46
Soldiers, praying	486
Soldier, the dying	103
Solomon, pools of	11
Sometime	170
Sonata, Tartini's devil's	676
Song of songs	55
Son of man, the	691

	PAGE
Sorceries, historical note on	301
Sorrow	184
comfort in	545
discipline of	544
results of	84
Sorrows, false remedy for	544
Sorrow, silence of	398
Soul, a word saving a	224
despair of	160
Sowing	42
Speech, eastern	181
sweetness of	74
unprofitable	20
Spirit, offices of the Holy	854
self-seeking	706
Staff, the false	153
State, the ideal	311
Station in life	757
St. Catherine of Sienna	70
Stone of stumbling	122
Strangers	573
Streets in Jerusalem	389
Strength from communion with God	274
renewed	272
Stubble, burning the	302
Success due to work	685
intoxication of	257
Suffering	325
God, the preacher's theme, a	327
patience in	538
perfect through	548
preferred to injustice	550
uses of	544
Suggestions, moral and religious	165
Sunday, no work on	427
Sun of righteousness, the	902
Supernatural assistance	357
Superstition, Chinese	790, 791
Supplication, Jeremiah's	430
Surety, our	297
Sword and arrow	308
Swearer reproved, the	224
Symbol of the blood, the	356
Sympathy, Christ's	327
the power of	551
worthless	542
Talent without principle	9
Tarshish	190
Tattooing	288
Teaching, power of Christ's	140
Teachings from Jonah	796
Teman and Paran	834
Temple, spiritual	645
Temptation	28, 498
two forms of	99
Testimony, conscious and unconscious	836
for God	434
Thanksgiving	25, 435
Thebes, the No of prophecy	823
Theocracy	733
Thing, one to all	37
Things, divine uses for mean	490
little	212
that are eternal	244

	PAGE		PAGE
Thistle	450	Unsatisfying food	334
Thorns and briars	236	Uprightness, national	505
cut up	240	Valley	750
Thoroughness	395	of Jehoshaphat	752
Thought of God	348	Vanity universal	19
Thoughts, importance of a man's	346	Vast and the minute, the	110
Threatenings, cause of	402	Vengeance of the Lord	819
Threshing-floors	275	Venus, worship of	594
Thwarting God	294	Vermillion	607
Time for all things	15	Vessel, purpose of the shattered	432
fragments of	17	Victoria, mercy of	177
redeeming the	826	Vine and the fig-tree, the	805
Timid hesitancy	44	Vineyard, cottage in a	85
Tirzah	72	Vision, fulfillment of the ancient	805
To-day	46	Isaiah's inaugural	110
"Tom of ten thousand"	440	prophetic	200
Tortures	460	Visions	771, 700
Transformation	31	Voice from the unseen	448
Transitoriness	723	of God	700
Travail of soul, no satisfaction without	330	Voices of the future	473
Treachery, victims of	239	Waiting	567
Treasures, earth's, unsatisfying	12	Wall, ancient	546
Treatment of sorrow and pleasure	546	Walls, bread	535
Trees	677	kingdom of God has its bread	534
figurative use of	336	Wandering tribes of Syria	412
of life	657	Warning despised	23
use of	586	War prayer	394
Trials	461	Warriors, burial of	626
the use of	548	War, weapons of	91
Tribes, arrangement of	658	Watchfulness	206, 844
Triumph over enemies	152	Watchmen	323
premature	633	Water for the flock	276
Trouble exposes delusions	581	scarcity of	218
Troubles revive us	513	Waters that fail	420
Trumpet, the Gospel	209	Way, a safe	249
Trust	223, 318	Waymarks	466
calmness of	283	Way of good and of evil, the	590
example of	333	Weakness, woe of	476
faithfully fulfilled	77	We are linked together, how	491
Trusting a traitor	495	Weariness, physical	286
Trust in God	283	Weeping willow, the	160
in perplexity	470	Well of consolation, a	473
Trusting the promises	334	Wesley and Bradford	27
Truth	347	What one sin will do	528
preaching the whole	452	Wheels	564
Two mothers and the babe, the	141	Where is your God?	811
Tyranny not essential to kingly power	683	Whirlwind, reaping the	726
Tyre	188, 191, 614, 615, 878	Whirlwinds	271
and the sea	190	Whitefield	235, 447
commerce of	192	and lantern boy	42
destruction of	613	as a preacher	213
history of	613	Wicked, a terror	433
lessons from old	616	heart, origin of a	359
ruins of	614	Wickedness, secret	575
ships of	191	Wicked, prosperity of the	410
Tyre's trade, wealth of	189	Wilderness	379
Ugolino and his children	539	Windows in the east	61
Unbelief	116, 340, 580	Wine-press, the	102
Uncomfortableness in church	770	Wisdom and sadness	14
Unfaithfulness, Gomer's	714	and wealth	27
Union between bridegroom and bride	67	God's superior	230
Union, Christian	19	sought early	549
Union, power in	703	spirit of	215
United States seal, the	144	true	682

	PAGE
Wisdom under differing circumstances.	239
Without God	587
Writing materials	119, 481
Woman's besetting sins.....	236
Woman, influence of.....	764
lot of.....	715
Women	30
oriental	393
work of	65
Wonder	812
Word, appropriating God's.....	420
Words	41
against God.....	901
deceptive influence of.....	107
to the faithful.....	367
value of	66
Worker and his tools.....	134
Work of men's hands.....	255
Worldliness	301
Worldly glitter	57
greatness, vanity of.....	9
pleasure unsatisfying	7
World of light, gone into.....	351

	PAGE
Worm, a single.....	39
at the core.....	12
Worship, sincerity in.....	65
Wrong-doing and its punishment.....	789 result of	705
Wyclif's Bible	444
Xerxes and Artabanus.....	18
Yoke of Christ.....	466
the	466
Youth	665
and age	19
remembering	589
Zeal for God.....	518
in preaching	793
of the Lord.....	127
Zechariah, the prophet of restored Jeru- salem	890
Zedekiah	468
Zephaniah, the prophet of the day of the Lord	842
Zidon	619
Zion	146
a desolation	454
ploughed	805

INDEX II.

VOL. III.

[Index for Marginal References of Quotations, Notes, Etc. The small figure indicates the number of paragraph.]

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Adventure	135 ³	Cemeteries of Cairo.....	25 ⁵
Adversity	177 ²	Character	187 ² , 194 ²
All in one	403 ²	test of	208 ²
Altar	646 ⁴	Charity	362 ²
Altars	385 ²	Chastisement	160 ² , 465 ²
Ambition	155 ³	Child's idea of God.....	133 ²
Ancients, wisdom of	218 ²	Children	141 ²
Anger	795 ⁴	singing	142 ²
Answer of Anaxagoras	895 ²	Chinese justice	877 ²
Apostasy	775 ¹	Christ	475 ²
Apples of Syria	60 ²	church of	32 ²
Arab tent	55 ³	death of	140 ²
Areopagites	772 ⁴	knowledge of	149 ²
Ashdod	758 ¹	Christian	294 ²
Ashes	290 ²	citizen	154 ²
Aspiration	9 ²	standard	146 ²
Assaults on faith	250 ⁴	Christianity	473 ²
Assyria's vaunting	134 ¹	a cathedral	55 ²
Atonement	328 ¹	Church	275 ²
Atheist	444 ²	conspicuous	90 ²
Augustine's prayer for rest.....	843 ²	the ideal	317 ²
Avarice	150 ²	Cinnamon	286 ²
Baal, altars to	409 ¹	Circassians religious ceremonies	808 ²
Babylon.....150 ² , 151 ² , 156 ² , 267 ¹ , 522 ¹ ,	527 ⁴	Cisterns	380 ²
capture of	684 ²	Cloths, linen and cotton.....	174 ²
walls of	535 ¹	Comfort	396 ²
worship of	297 ²	Company, bad	731 ⁴
Babylonians	302 ¹	Compassion	874 ²
Backslider	730 ²	Compliments, oriental	33 ²
Banner	149 ²	Conscience	97 ² , 575 ¹ , 688 ²
Beauty	242 ² , 645 ²	Contentment	49 ²
Bible	444 ² , 484 ² , 647 ² , 648 ² , 868 ⁴ ,	Conversion	462 ²
Byron's	654 ²	in youth	861 ²
Cromwell's	633 ²	of Earl of Rochester	327 ²
nabob and	653 ²	time of	141 ²
practical	247 ²	Cords, lengthening	331 ²
reading the	651 ²	Couches, oriental	260 ²
study of the	592 ²	Courage	378 ² , 581 ¹
Boldness	436 ²	Covenant, Greek	478 ²
Books	482 ²	Covetousness	439 ²
Book of nature	656 ²	Cowardice	471 ¹ , 686 ²
Boy, joining church	268 ²	Cretans, wealth of.....	23 ²
Brand from the burning	866 ²	Croesus	518 ²
Burden, a light	144 ²	Cruelty, Assyrian	492 ²
Cæsar	632 ⁴	Custom, Ancient	242 ²
Call of God	112 ²	Arab	30 ² , 516 ²
Capacity, development of.....	147 ²	funeral	476 ²
Captives	178 ⁴	military	109 ²
Captivity, effect of	143 ²	Roman	513 ¹
Catching fish	763 ²	Cyrus	181 ¹ , 273 ²
Cattle of Palestine	641 ⁴	army of	156 ²

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Damascus	164 ²	Glory	164 ² , 267 ²
David, tradition of	467 ²	Goat	694 ²
Dead Sea	657 ²	God, a fountain	170 ¹
Death	192 ² , 398 ² , 403 ² , 503 ²	all for	301 ¹
bitterness of	454 ²	Christ's love of	143 ²
Demetrius	389 ²	glory of	111 ²
Desert	379 ²	knows	359 ²
Dial	261 ¹	omniscience of	240 ²
Diocletian	314 ²	or nature	167 ²
Disappointment	102 ²	people of	317 ²
Discipline	187 ²	shining for	222 ²
Disquiet	275 ²	God's anger	138 ²
Divination, Chaldean	602 ²	care	34 ²
Dog, the	367 ¹	command	464 ¹
Doves	70 ²	grace	236 ²
Dreams	218 ²	help	120 ²
Drunkenness	108 ¹ , 211 ²	kingdom	310 ²
Duty	123 ²	people	330 ²
Eagle	290 ²	presence	283 ² , 301 ⁴
Earnestness	580 ²	punctuation	293 ¹
Ecclesiastes, the theme of	7 ¹	Gold	19 ² , 188 ² , 718 ² , 777 ²
Edom	782 ² , 758 ² , 894 ¹	Golden morrow	142 ¹
Egypt	172 ² , 178 ² , 703 ²	Gospel	145 ²
Elamites	521 ²	Gourd	795 ²
Enquirers answered	234 ¹	Grace	232 ² , 282 ²
Enthusiasm	45 ¹ , 232 ²	Grapes	101 ¹
Envoy, Roman	706 ²	treading out	163 ²
Envy	759 ²	Gratitude	380 ¹
Eternity	16 ² , 899 ²	Gravitation	59 ²
Ethan	11 ²	Greenland, church going in	851 ¹
Euphrates, the	120 ²	Growth	729 ²
Exile	207 ²	Habits	12 ²
Eye, Master's	629 ⁴	Hair, cutting off	421 ²
Eyes	58 ²	Hand-mill	448 ²
Face, beauty of	31 ²	Hand, the	157 ²
Faith	201 ¹ , 255 ⁴ , 256 ⁴ , 366 ² , 783 ²	Happiness	33 ² , 318 ¹ , 520 ¹ , 523 ² , 526 ¹ , 611 ²
sound in	499 ²	secret of	166 ²
Faithfulness, God's	116 ²	Head-dress of Samaria	98 ²
Falsehood	299 ¹ & ²	Hear Christ	382 ¹
Fame	322 ²	Heathen mother	536 ²
Fasts	343 ¹	Henna	57 ² , 67 ²
Father, Heavenly	180 ²	Herbert's church	431 ²
Faults, one's	395 ¹	Heroes of our race	29 ¹
Fear	195 ² , 253 ²	Highways	429 ²
Fig tree	803 ²	Holiness	216 ²
Figs, gathering of	210 ²	Holy Ghost	237 ²
Fire	232 ² , 865 ²	Hopes	45 ¹
Fishing	831 ¹	Hospitality	343 ¹
Flies in the East	39 ²	House, an Eastern	344 ²
Flower, wild	58 ²	Humility	361 ² , 366 ² , 367 ²
Foxes	62 ²	Hypocrisy	382 ² , 477 ² , 498 ² , 811 ²
Friendship	274 ²	Idolatry	279 ²
Fulfillment of prophecy	878 ²	Idols	297 ²
Garden	75 ²	Ignorance,	10 ² , 96 ² , 105 ² , 298 ² , 390 ² , 407 ² , 627 ²
Garments, tearing of	252 ²	wise	382 ²
Garrick and Johnson	12 ²	Imagination, God-stayed	14 ²
Gazelles	60 ²	Infancy	166 ²
Gentiles become Jews	151 ²	Ink	482 ²
Gentleness	240 ²	Insincerity	91 ²
Giants, valley of	165 ¹	Invasion, Assyrian	258 ²
Girdle, the	140 ²	Isaiah, an iconoclast	83 ²
Giving	21 ² , 42 ⁴ , 161 ¹ , 370 ²	Israel	309 ²
up	447 ²	a tree	207 ²
		James II	203 ²

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Jerusalem, siege of.....	367 ^a	Money	836 ^a
Jesus, grace of	230 ^o	Mortality	15 ^a name of	318 ^o	Mother's example	714 ^a
Jews	297 ^a , 316 ^o	Mourners	794 ^a
Jonah	794 ^a	Myrrh	69 ^a
Joy	376 ^o	Myrtles	362 ^a
at deliverance	146 ^o	Mystery	295 ^a
Judas tree	211 ^a	Mythology	158 ^a Judgment	216 ^a , 803 ^a , 847 ^a , 889 ^a	Nail, fastened as a	187 ^a and mercy	170 ^a	Nail-marks	423 ^a
Judson's answer	313 ^a	Names	309 ^a
Justice	131 ^a	Napoleon	424 ^a
Kingdom of God, the.....	50 ^o	Nature	296 ^a
Kings of Assyria	257 ^a	Nature-worship	575 ^a
Kite, the	604 ^o	Nebuchadnezzar, cylinder of.....	534 ^a Knowledge	38 ^a , 46 ^a , 49 ^a	Neglect	149 ^a and wisdom	707 ^a	of Gospel	334 ^a of God	406 ^a	New Jerusalem	296 ^a
Kohl	608 ^a	New Year	172 ^a
Lamb, supper of the.....	125 ^a	Night	159 ^a , 182 ^a , 203 ^a , 365 ^a , 872 ^a
Law	152 ^a , 368 ^a , 419 ^a	Nile	173 ^a , 506 ^a
Liberty	152 ^o	Nominal church members	772 ^a child of discipline.....	352 ^a	North Pole	155 ^a Lie, a	435 ^a	Nose-rings	99 ^a Life	263 ^a , 264 ^a	Nuts	72 ^a a journey	894 ^a	Obedience, prompt	35 ^a a quarry	190 ^a	Occasions, great	304 ^a and death	43 ^a , 95 ^a , 166 ^a	"O, Day of rest!"	337 ^a
Life-book, the	101 ^a	Oil	731 ^a
Lightning and light.....	319 ^o	Old age	19 ^a
Lilith	246 ^a	Olive	836 ^a
Lincoln	481 ^a	Omnipresence	776 ^a
Lions in sheep-fold.....	231 ^a	Opportunities.....	103 ^a , 109 ^a , 114 ^a , 393 ^a , 401 ^a
Little things	212 ^a	Orphans and widows	87 ^a Living in God's sight	135 ^a	Ostriches	553 ^a long	153 ^a	Ottocar	500 ^a
Locusts	739 ^a , 745 ^a , 771 ^a , 825 ^a	Oven, Oriental	724 ^a
Lodge	401 ^a	Palestine, climate of	722 ^a
Longevity	897 ^a	Palm	74 ^a
Lord's highway	249 ^a	Pardon	813 ^a
Losses	174 ^a	Paricide	591 ^a
Love	59 ^a , 63 ^a , 65 ^a , 67 ^a , 69 ^a , 72 ^a , 73 ^a , 76 ^a	Passion	129 ^a of freedom	126 ^a	Patience	117 ^a , 498 ^a of Jews for their land.....	459 ^a	Patriotism	137 ^a
Lowliness	413 ^a , 522 ^a	Paucity of males	100 ^a
Mail	506 ^a	Paul	320 ^a
Mandragora	75 ^a	Peace	201 ^a , 341 ^a , 461 ^a
Man, good	176 ^a	as a river.....	307 ^a help of	222 ^a	legacy of	290 ^a hemmed in	9 ^a	Pearl of great price.....	128 ^a Man's extremity	239 ^o	Peasants' huts	42 ^a work	37 ^a	Penitence	193 ^a
Medes	147 ^a , 529 ^a	Perfection	158 ^a and Persians	181 ^a	Perseverance	350 ^a Medicine	507 ^a	Persian ladies	57 ^a
Mercy	136 ^a , 335 ^a	Petra	246 ^a , 519 ^a
Messiah, reign of	141 ^a	Philip of Macedon	752 ^a
Migdar serpent	402 ^a	Piety of parents	716 ^a
Ministers, God's	388 ^a	Pigeons	62 ^a
Mirage	249 ^a	Plate, contribution	142 ^a
Mirth	11 ^a	Play	876 ^a
Miseries	159 ^a	Pleasure, worldly	11 ^a
Misrepresentation	107 ^a	Pomegranate	67 ^a
Mockery	214 ^a	Poor boys	757 ^a

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Portugal, king of.....	189 ^o	Servants	208 ^s
Possibilities	46 ^o	Shadow, your.....	289 ^s
Power, redeeming	397 ^a	Sheep	56 ^z
Prayer... 164 ⁱ , 260 ^s , 361 ^s , 436 ⁱ , 552 ⁱ , 555 ^s , 846 ^s		Sheol	105 ^s limit of	419 ^o	Shepherds	261 ^o
uses of	256 ^s	Shield, ancient	180 ^o
worth of	21 ^z	Shiloh	396 ^z
Preaching	441 ^o	Sign-posts	377 ^z
Prescription for the "Blues".....	336 ^o	Silence	252 ^s
Present, the.....	17 ^o	Siloam	120 ^z
Pride..... 162 ^s , 217 ^z , 517 ^z , 817 ^a , 818 ^z , 825 ^z		Simoom	387 ^a
Prince of peace.....	126 ^a	Sin	323 ^z
Princess Elizabeth	803 ^s	origin of.....	388 ^z
Prophecies	699 ^s	Sincerity	382 ^o
Prophets, the Hebrew.....	178 ^z	Sinners and praying.....	87 ^o
Proverbs..... 66 ⁱ , 103 ⁱ , 165 ^o		Sirocco	748 ^a
Providence	115 ^a , 765 ^z	Slander	430 ^z
Purifying process.....	89 ^s	Slaves	12 ^z
Purpose in life.....	887 ^o	Sleep	68 ^s
Queen Mary.....	424 ⁱ	Socks	73 ^s
Questions	71 ^a	Solitude, happiness in.....	243 ⁱ
Raleigh and Elizabeth.....	468 ^s	Sorrow	184 ^a , 321 ⁱ
Rank	92 ^o	Soul, balm of.....	401 ^o
Reason	97 ^a	kingdom of.....	191 ^z
Rechabites	479 ^z	winning	422 ^a , 622 ^z
Regulus	747 ^a	Speech, figures of.....	148 ^o
Religion	180 ^o	Spider's web.....	132 ^z effects of	753 ⁱ	Spirit, filled with.....	358 ^z of show.....	94 ^o	Spitting in the face.....	315 ^z
Religions, world's.....	271 ^o	Spread of sin.....	130 ^z
Remnant	113 ^z	Spring	61 ^a , 220 ^o
Renunciation	777 ^z	Standard, Chaldean.....	451 ⁱ
Repentance	207 ⁱ	Stocks	433 ^a ladder of.....	693 ^s	Stoves, Oriental.....	483 ^s
Responsibility	366 ^a	Strength	512 ^s , 514 ^z
Restoration, national.....	637 ^z	Success	171 ⁱ
Resurrection	154 ^o	Suddenness of penalty.....	224 ^a
Retribution	245 ^z	Sufferings	193 ^s
Revelation	146 ^a	Sunday	598 ^a
Riches	22 ^a , 23 ^s	Sunshine	92 ^a , 349 ^o
worldly	14 ⁱ	Suppliant	350 ^o
Righteous, reward of.....	122 ^s	Supply for thirst.....	305 ^z
Rings	71 ⁱ	Surrender	254 ⁱ
Roman medals.....	99 ^o	Susa	694 ^z
Rowland Hill and the sculptor.....	170 ^z	Swaddling band.....	587 ^o
Ruin	265 ⁱ	Swearing	386 ⁱ
Sabbath, a sign.....	427 ⁱ	Swimming	200 ⁱ
Sacrifices..... 65 ^s , 330 ^z , 409 ^s		Swine	370 ⁱ
Salt	650 ^a	Sycamore	773 ^o
Salvation	233 ^s	Symbol of dragon.....	206 ^s
Samaria	210 ⁱ , 762 ^s	Syrian ploughshare.....	91 ^s
Sardanapalus, tomb of.....	186 ^z	Tablets	119 ^z
Satisfaction in this world, seeking.....	466 ^z	Tabor	508 ^z
Scepticism	251 ⁱ , 252 ^a	Testaments, the.....	158 ^o
Scotch martyr.....	325 ^z	Text, hardest.....	400 ^o
Scouts	387 ^o	Thanksgiving, ground of.....	124 ^a
Scriptures	303 ^o	Thorns	411 ^a
Scripture, history.....	113 ^a	Thoughtlessness	21 ⁱ
neglect of	96 ⁱ	Thrall of liquor.....	105 ^z
Sea	269 ^z , 342 ^z	Threshing-floor.....	531 ^o
Secret of life.....	50 ^a	Throne of God, the.....	110 ^o
Self	114 ^a	Time, loom of.....	168 ^o
Selfishness, example of.....	351 ^o	Tirzah	71 ^o
Serpent charmers.....	400 ⁱ	Tongue	15 ^o

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Torches	393 ¹	Weakness	893 ²
Training of children	369 ¹	Wealth, way to	264 ²
Trust	312 ¹	worldly	24 ¹
in God	201 ²	Weighing metals	334 ²
Truth, 144 ² , 157 ¹ , 235 ² , 228 ² , 232 ¹ , 458 ²		Wheat, Heshbon	162 ²
.....467 ² , 471 ¹ , 765 ²		Wicked, joy of the	420 ²
seed of divine	150 ²	Willard, Frances E.	203 ²
Turtle-doves	61 ¹	Windows	60 ²
Tyre	188 ² , 190 ² , 613 ² , 615 ²	Wine, lees of	198 ²
Union, power of	19 ²	Wisdom and folly	175 ²
Unselfishness	167 ²	Wolsey	769 ²
Unthankfulness	379 ²	Word of God	145 ² , 296 ² , 510 ² , 799 ²
Unworthy Christians	284 ²	Work	124 ²
Veil	69 ²	and prayer	123 ²
Vigilance	499 ²	Workman, king's	485 ²
Viper	142 ²	World, a prison	495 ²
Vine-dresses, the	363 ²	Worldly-minded, the	15 ² , 20 ²
Vineyards	77 ²	Worlds, reality of both	323 ²
Vows	505 ¹	Worship in groves	882 ²
Vulgate	328 ²	true	94 ²
Wages of sin	88 ²	Wrong	705 ²
Wailing women	768 ¹	Youth	677 ¹
Waldus	693 ²	fountain of	676 ²
Walls, Oriental	583 ¹	Zeal	432 ²
Wants	157 ² , 233 ²	religious	85 ²
War	511 ¹	Zerubbabel	856 ²
Warrior, a Christian	137 ²	Zinzendorf	674 ²
Watchfulness	324 ¹ , 626 ²	Zoroaster	293 ²
Water	276 ²

